DISTEMPER (2), a kind of painting, in which the colours are tempered, or mixed with thin watery glue. (F., — L.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. — O. F. destemperer, later destremper, which Cotgrave explains by 'to soake, steepe, moisten, water, season, or lay in water; to soften or allay, by laying in water; to make fluid, liquid, or thin.' The word is the same as the above.

DISTEND, to stretch asunder, swell. (L.) In Milton, P. L. i. 572; xl. 880. — Lat. distendere, pp. distensus, to stretch asunder. — Lat. dis-, apart; and tendere, to stretch. — ✓ TAN, to stretch. See Tend. Der. distens-ible, distens-ive, distens-ion, from pp. distensus.

DISTICH, a couple of verses, a couplet. (L., — Gk.) Spelt distichon in Holland's Suetonius, p. 224 (R.); distick in the Spectator, no. 43, and in Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674; distich in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. — Lat. distichus, distichon. — Gk. δίστιχον, a couplet; neut. of δίστιχος, having two rows. — Gk. dis-, double; and στίχος, a row, rank, allied to στίχομαι, to march in rank, and στέλλειν, to go, cognate with A. S. stigan, to ascend, whence E. stirrup and stile. — ✓ STIGH, to go, march. Curtius, i. 240.

DISTIL, to fall in drops, flow slowly. (F., — L.) M. E. distillen; 'That it malice non distilleth;' Gower, C. A. i. 3. — O. F. distiller, 'to distill'; Cot. — Lat. distillare, pp. distillatus, the same as destillare, to drop or trickle down. — Lat. de-, down; and stillare, to drop. — Lat. stilla, a drop. See Still, sb. and vb. Der. distillat-ion, distillat-ory, from Lat. pp. destillatus; also distill-er, distill-er-y.

DISTINCT, distinguished. (F., — L.) 'In other man ben distinct the spices of glotonie;' Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Gula. — O. F. distinct; Cot. — Lat. distinctus, pp. of distinguere, to distinguish. See below. Der. distinct-ive, distinct-ion.

DISTINGUISH, to set apart, mark off. (F., — L.) In Shak. Macb. iii. 1. 96. [The reading in Chaucer's Boethius, p. 47, l. 1223, is distingwed, not distinguished.] — O. F. distinguer, to distinguish; the ending -ish seems to have been added by analogy, and cannot be accounted for in the usual way. — Lat. distinguere, to distinguish, mark with a prick; pp. distinctus. — Lat. dis-, for dis-, apart; and *stingere (not in use), to prick, cognate with Gk. στίχειν, to prick, and E. sting. — ✓ STIG, to prick. See Sting, Stigma. Der. distinguish-able; also distinct, q. v.

DISTORT, to twist aside, pervert. (L.) First used as a pp. Spenser, F. Q. v. 12. 36. — Lat. distortus, distorted, pp. of distorquere. — Lat. dis-, apart; and torquere, to twist. See Torsion. Der. distort-ion.

DISTRACT, to harass, confuse. (L.) [M. E. destrat, distracted. 'Thou shal ben so destrat by aspre things;' Chaucer, Boethius, bk. iii. pr. 8. This is a F. form.] But we find also distract as a pp. 'Distracte were þei stithly'—they were greatly distracted; Allit. Destruction of Troy, 3219. As vb. in Shak. Oth. i. 3. 327; see Lover's Complaint, 231. — Lat. distrahere, pp. of trahere, to pull asunder, pull different ways. — Lat. dis-, apart; and trahere, to draw, cognate with E. draw, q. v. See Trace. Der. distra-ct-ed-ly, distraction.

DISTRRAIN, to restrain, seize goods for debt. (F., — L.) The pp. destrained, i. e. restrained, is in Chaucer, Boethius, bk. ii. pr. 6, l. 1441. — O. F. destraindre, 'to straine, press, wring, vex extremely; also, to straiten, restrain, or abridge of liberty'; Cot. — Lat. distringere, to pull asunder. — Lat. dis-, for dis-, apart; and stringere, to touch, hurt, compress, strain. See Strain, verb. Der. distrain-or; distraint, from O. F. destrainte, restraint, fem. form of pp. destraint (Cotgrave); and see Distress, District.

DISTRESS, great pain, calamity. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. distresse, Rob. of Glouc. pp. 143, 442. — O. F. distresse, 'distress'; Cot.; older spellings destreche, destrece; Burguy. Destrece is a verbal sb. from a verb *destreecer (not found), corresponding to a Low Lat. *districiare, to afflict (not found), formed regularly from districus, severe, pp. of distringere, to pull asunder, in late Lat. to punish. See destrée in Brachet; Littré wrongly gives the prefix as Lat. de. See Distraint. Der. distress, vb., M. E. distresen, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 880; distress-ful, distress-ful-ly.

DISTRIBUTE, to allot, deal out. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 39. — Lat. distributus, pp. of distribuere, to distribute. — Lat. dis-, apart; and tribuere, to give, impart. See Tribute. Der. distribut-able, distribut-er, distribut-ion, distribut-ive.

DISTRICT, a region. (F., — L.) 'District is that territory or circuit, wherein any one has power to distrain; as a manor is the lord's district;' Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. — O. F. district, 'a district, . . . the territory within which a lord . . . may judge . . . the inhabitants'; Cot. — Low Lat. districus, a district within which a lord may distrain (distringere potest); Ducange. — Lat. districus, pp. of distringere. — See Distraint.

DISTRUST, want of trust. (Hybrid; L. and E.) Udal has distrust both as sb. and vb.; On St. Matthew, capp. 5 and 17. Coined from Lat. dis-, apart; and E. Trust, q. v. Der. distrust-ful, distrust-ful-ly, distrust-ful-ness.

DISTURB, to disquiet, interrupt. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. disturben, distourben; spelt disturben, Ancrer Riwle, p. 162; distourben, Rob. of Glouc. p. 436. — O. F. destourber, 'to disturb'; Cot. — Lat. disturbare, to drive asunder, disturb. — Lat. dis-, apart; and turbare, to disturb, trouble. — Lat. turba, a tumult, a crowd. See Turbid. Der. disturb-ance, used by Chaucer, Compl. of Mars, l.

107; disturb-er. ¶ Borrowed from French, the spelling being afterwards conformed to the Latin.

DISUNITE, to disjoin, sever. (L.) In Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 109. — Lat. disunitus, pp. of disunire, to disjoin. — Lat. dis-, apart, here used negatively; and unire, to unite. See UNITE, UNIT. From the same source, disunion.

DISUSE, to give up the use of. (L. and F.) ‘Disuse, to forbear the use of;’ Kersey’s Dict. ed. 1715; ‘Disusage or Disuse, a disusing;’ id. M. E. disusen (with v for u). ‘Dysusin or mysse vsyn;’ Prompt. Parv. p. 123. Coined from Lat. dis-, apart; and USE, q. v. Der. disuse, sb.; disuse-age.

DITCH, a dike, trench dug. (E.) M. E. diche, P. Plowman, C. xiv. 236, where one MS. has dike. Diche is merely a corruption of dike, due to weakened pronunciation; cf. pitch with pike. See Dike. Der. ditch, verb, M. E. dichen, Chaucer, C. T. 1890; ditcher, M. E. diker, P. Plowman, C. i. 224.

DITHYRAMB, a kind of ancient hymn. (L., — Gk.) ‘Dithyramb, a kind of hymn or song in honour of Bacchus, who was surnamed Dithyrambus; and the poets who composed such hymns were called Dithyrambicks;’ Blount’s Gloss. ed. 1674. — Lat. dithyrambus. — Gk. δithyrambos, a hymn in honour of Bacchus; also, a name of Bacchus. Origin unknown.

DITTANY, the name of a plant. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Cotgrave, who translates O. F. dictame by ‘the herb dittany, dittander, garden ginger.’ Cf. ‘Dytane, herbe;’ Prompt. Parv. p. 123. — O. F. dictame. — Lat. dictamnus; Pliny. — Gk. dictamnus, dittany; a herb so called because it grew abundantly on Mount Dicté (Δίκη) in Crete.

DITTO, the same as before. (Ital., — L.) ‘Ditto, the aforesaid or the same;’ Kersey’s Dict. ed. 1715. — Ital. ditto, that which has been said, a word, saying. — Lat. dictum, a saying; neut. of dictus, pp. of dicere, to say. See DICTION. ¶ It may be observed that the pp. of Ital. dire, to say, takes the form ditto, not ditto.

DITTY, a sort of song. (F., — L.) M. E. ditte, ditee; Chaucer, Boethius, bk. iv. pr. 8. l. 3850; later ditte, Spenser, Colin Clout, 385; shortened to ditt, id. F. Q. ii. 6. 13. — O. F. ditte, dite, a kind of poem; Burguy. — Lat. dictatum, a thing dictated for writing, neut. of dictatus, pp. of dictare, to dictate. See DICTATE. ¶ It is wrong to refer this word to A. S. dittan, though this leads to the same root, as dittan is merely borrowed from dictare. See DIGHT.

DIURETIC, tending to excite passage of urine. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5. ‘Diureticales, diurectic quality;’ Bailey; vol. ii. ed. 1731. — O. F. diuretique; see Cotgrave. — Lat. diureticus. — Gk. διουρητικός, promoting urine. — Gk. διουρέω, to pass urine. — Gk. δι-, for δι-, through; and οὔρον, urine. See URINE.

DIURNAL, daily. (L.) In Lidgate, Complaint of the Black Knight [commonly ascribed to Chaucer], l. 590. — Lat. diurnalis, daily. — Lat. dies, a day. A doublet of JOURNAL, q. v.

DIVAN, a council-chamber, sofa. (Pers.) In Milton, P. L. x. 457. — Pers. and Arab. diván, ‘a tribunal, a steward; a collection of odes arranged in alphabetical order of rhymes; the Diván i Háfiz is the most celebrated;’ Palmer’s Pers. Dict., col. 282. In Richardson, p. 704, the Pers. form is given as diwán, the Arab. as daywán, explained as ‘a royal court, the tribunal of justice or revenue, a council of state, a senate or divan,’ &c.

DIVARICATE, to fork, diverge. (L.) ‘With two fingers divaricated,’ i. e. spread apart; Marvell, Works, ii. 114 (R.) Sir T. Browne has divarication, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 11, § 4. — Lat. divaricare, to spread apart. — Lat. di-, for dis-, apart; and varicare, to spread apart, straddle. — Lat. varicus, straddling; formed with suffix -us from uari- (= uaro-) crude form of varus, bent apart, straddling. β. Origin doubtful; ‘Corssen, i. 2. 412, starts from a root kar [to be bent], which became kvar, and from this kur. From kvar he gets to the Lat. varus, for curvus;’ Curtius, i. 193. Der. divarication.

DIVE, to plunge into water. (E.) M. E. diuen, duwen (with u for v); spelt dyuen, P. Plowman, B. xii. 163; duwen, Ancren Riwle, p. 282, l. 10. — A. S. dyfan, to dive, Grein, i. 214; der. from dyfan, id. 213. + Icel. dyfa, to dive, to dip. Closely related to E. DIP, q. v. Der. div-er, div-ing-bell, div-dapper, i. e. dive-dapper. [†]

DIVERGE, to part asunder, tend to spread apart. (L.) ‘Divergent or Diverging Rays, in optics, are those rays which, going from a point of a visible object, are dispersed, and continually depart one from another;’ Kersey’s Dict. ed. 1715. — Lat. di-, for dis-, apart; and vergere, to incline, verge, tend. See VERGE. Der. diverg-ent, diverg-ence.

DIVERSE, DIVERS, different, various. (F., — L.) M. E. diuers, diuerse (with u for v). Spelt diuers in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 35. ‘Divers men diuers thinges seiden;’ Chaucer, C. T. 4630. Spelt divers in the Bible, Mk. viii. 3, &c. — O. F. divers, m. diverse, f. ‘divers, differing, unlike, sundry, repugnant;’

Cot. — Lat. diversus, various; properly pp. of diuertere, to turn asunder, separate, divert. See DIVERT. Der. diverse-ly, divers-ity, from M. E. and F. diversite, Chaucer, Troil. v. 1805; divers-ify, from F. diversifier, ‘to vary, diversify’ (Cot.), from Low Lat. diversificare, which from Lat. diversi- (for diversus), and -ficare (from facere), to make; diversificat-ion, from Low Lat. pp. diversificatus.

DIVERT, to turn aside, amuse. (F., — L.) ‘List nat onys asyde to dyuerte;’ Lidgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii. l. 1130 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 30). — O. F. divertir, ‘to divert, avert, alter, draw;’ Cot. — Lat. diuertere, pp. diversus, to turn asunder, part, divert. — Lat. di-, for dis-, apart; and uertere, to turn. See VERSE. Der. divers-ion, ‘a turning aside, or driving another way, a recreation, or pastime;’ Kersey, ed. 1715. And see above; also DIVORCE.

DIVEST, to strip, deprive of. (L.) ‘Divest, to strip off, or un-clothe a person, to deprive or take away dignity, office;’ &c.; Bailey’s Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. — Low Lat. diuестire, a late equivalent of Lat. deuestire, to undress. — Lat. di-, for dis-, apart; and uestire, to clothe. — Lat. vestis, clothing. See VEST.

DIVIDE, to part asunder. (L.) M. E. diuiden, dyuyden (with u for v), Wyclif, Exod. xiv. 16; Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, pp. 2, 5. ‘Thilk thing that symply is on thing with-outen ony diuision, the errour and folie of mankynd departeth and diuideth it;’ Chaucer, Boethius, b. iii. pr. 9. l. 2287. — Lat. diuidere, pp. diuisus, to divide. — Lat. di-, for dis-, apart; and *uidere, a lost verb, prob. ‘to know,’ from the same root as uidere, to see. — √ WID, to see. See WIT. Der. divid-er, divid-end; also (from pp. diuisus) divis-ible, divis-ibl-y, divis-ibil-i-ty, divis-ive, divis-or, divis-ion, divis-ion-al.

DIVINE, godly, sacred. (F., — L.) A great diuine that cleped was Calcas;’ Chaucer, Troil. i. 66. ‘Thus was the halie ful of deuining,’ i. e. divining, guessing; id. C. T. 2523. — O. F. divin, formerly also devin (Burguy), signifying (1) divine, (2) a diviner, augur, theologian; whence deviner, to divine, predict, guess. — Lat. diuinus, divine; from the same source as diuus, godly, and deus, God. — √ DIW, to shine. See DEITY. Der. divine-ly, divin-i-ty (M. E. diuiné, Gower, C. A. iii. 88); also divine, verb, divin-er, divin-at-ion.

DIVISION; see DIVIDE.

DIVORCE, a dissolution of marriage. (F., — L.) ‘The same law yeueth libel of departicion because of deuorse;’ Testament of Loue, b. iii; in Chaucer’s Works, ed. 1561, fol. 308, col. 1. The pl. deuorses is in P. Plowman, B. ii. 175. — O. F. divorce, ‘a divorce;’ Cot. — Lat. diuortium, a separation, divorce. — Lat. diuortere, another form of diuertere, to turn asunder, separate. See DIVERT. Der. divorce, verb, divorc-er, divorce-ment.

DIVULGE, to publish, reveal. (F., — L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 2. 43. — F. divulguer, ‘to divulge, publish;’ Cot. — Lat. diuulgare, to make common, publish abroad. — Lat. di-, for dis-, apart; and vulgare, to make common. — Lat. vulgus, the common people; cognate with E. folk. See Folk and Vulgar.

DIVULSION, a rending asunder. (L.) ‘Divulsion, or separation of elements;’ Holland’s Plutarch, p. 667; also in Blount’s Glossographia and Kersey. — Lat. diuulsionem, acc. of diuulsio, a plucking asunder. — Lat. diuulsus, pp. of diuellere, to pluck asunder. — Lat. di- for dis-, apart; and vellere, to pluck. See CONVULSE.

DIZEN, to deck out. (E.) Used by Beaum. and Fletcher, in Monsieur Thomas, iii. 6. 3, and The Pilgrim, iv. 3. Palsgrave has: ‘I dysyn a distaffe, I put the flax upon it to spin.’ Thus to dizen was, originally, to furnish a distaff with flax; hence, generally, to clothe, deck out, &c. β. Possibly connected with Swed. dial. dösa, to stack (hay); Eng. dial. dess, to pile in layers, used at Whitby; Icel. dys, Dan. dyss, a small cairn or pile of stones. Thus the orig. sense was ‘to heap on,’ to cover with a bunch. For further remarks, see DISTAFF. Der. be-dizen, q. v.

DIZZY, giddy, confused. (E.) M. E. dys, Pricke of Conscience, 771; disie, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 117; superl. disigest, Ancren Riwle, p. 182. — A. S. dysig, foolish, silly; Grein, i. 24; cf. dysigian, to be foolish; id. β. Compounded of a base dis, and suffix -ig; where dis is another form of duas, whence A. S. dwæd, answering to Lat. hebes, dull; Ælfrie’s Gloss., ed. Sommer, p. 74, col. 2. — √ DHWAS, to crumble, perish; whence Skt. dhwams, to crumble, perish, pp. dhwasta, fallen, lost; Fick, i. 121. See DOZE. + O. Du. dnyzigh, dizzy. Oudemans; cf. Du. duizelen, to grow dizzy; dwans, foolish. + O. Fries. disia, to be dizzy; dusinge, dizziness. + Dan. dösig, drowsy; döse, to doze; dös, drowsiness. + O. H. G. tüsic, dull. Der. dizzi-ly, dizzi-ness.

DO (1), pt. t. DID, pp. DONE, to perform. (E.) M. E. don, pt. t. dude, dide, pp. don, doon, idon, ydon; see Stratmann’s O. E. Dict. p. 129. — A. S. dón, pt. t. dyde, pp. gedón; Grein, i. 199–202. + Du. doen, pt. t. deed, pp. gedaan. + O. Sax. don, duón, duan, dóm, pt. t. dede, pp. giduan. + O. Fries. dua, pt. t. dede, pp. gedan, geden. + Meeso-Goth. suffix -dedjau, as seen in the past tenses of weak verbs; thus lagi-dedjau = I lay-did = I laid, from lagjan, to lay. + O. H. G.

toin, toan, tuan, M. H. G. tuon, duon, G. thun. + Gk. τίθημι, I set, put, place. + Skt. dā, to place, put. — ✓ DHA, to place, set. ¶ The pt. t. did, A. S. dy-de, is formed by reduplication. Der. do-ings; a-do, q. v.; don, i. e. do on; doff, i. e. do off; dup, i. e. do up. From the same root, doom, q. v., deem, q. v.; also deed, q. v.

DO (2), to be worth, be fit, avail. (E.) In the phrase 'that will do' (i. e. suit), the verb is totally distinct from the above. It is the prov. E. dow, to avail, be worth, suit; M. E. dūzen, Strattmann, p. 136. 'What doves me be dedayn, oþer dispit make,' i. e. what does it avail me to shew disdain or dislike; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii. 50. — A. S. dugan, to be worth; see Doughty. ¶ Perhaps the phrase 'how do you do' is a translation of O. F. 'comment le faites vous?' see Wedgwood.

DOCILE, teachable, easily managed. (F., — L.) 'Be brief in what thou wouldst command, that so The docile mind might soon thy precepts know;' Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace, Ars Poet. 335, 336, where the Lat. text has 'animi dociles.' — F. docile, 'docible, teachable;' Cot. — Lat. docilis, teachable. — Lat. docere, to teach. — ✓ DAK, to teach; a causal extension of ✓ DA, to know, seen in Gk. διδάσκω, taught, Zend dā, to know; Curtius, i. 284. Der. docil-i-ty. From the same root, didactic, q. v., disciple, q. v.; also doctor, doctrine, document, q. v.

DOCK (1), to cut short, curtail. (Celtic?) 'His top was docked lyk a preest bifom;' Chaucer, C. T. 592 (or 590). A. Perhaps of Celtic origin; cf. W. tocio, to clip, to dock; whence tocyn, a short piece, a ticket. See Docket. B. Or perhaps Scand. Mätzner cites O. Icel. dockr, a tail, from Haldorsson; cf. 'dokkyn, or smytyn away the tayle;' Prompt. Parv. [†]

DOCK (2), a kind of plant. (Celtic?) M. E. dokke; Chaucer, Troil. iv. 461. — A. S. docce, a dock; very common in Cockayne's ed. of A. S. Leechdoms; see Glossary in vol. iii. [Probably not E., but borrowed from Celtic.] — Gael. doga, a burdock; Irish meacan-dogha, the great common burdock, where meacan means a tap-rooted plant, as carrot, parsnip, &c. Cf. Gk. δαῦκος, δαῦκον, a kind of parsnip or carrot. Der. bur-dock.

DOCK (3), a basin for ships. (Du., — Low Lat., — Gk.?) In North's Plutarch, p. 536 (R.) Cotgrave explains F. haute as 'a dock, to mend or build ships in.' — O. Du. dokke, a harbour; Kilian, Oudemans; cf. Dan. dokke, Swed. docka, G. docke, a dock. — Low Lat. doga, a ditch, canal; in which sense it appears to be used by Gregory of Tours; see doga in Diez; the same word as Low Lat. doga, a vessel or cup. — Gk. δοχή, a receptacle. — Gk. δέχομαι, I receive, Ionic form δέχομαι; perhaps from ✓ ΔΕΚ, to receive; Curtius, i. 164. Der. dock, verb; dock-yard. ¶ The history of the word is not quite clear; see Diez.

DOCKET, a label, list, ticket, abstract. (Celtic?) 'The docket doth but signify the king's pleasure for such a bill to be drawn;' State Trials, Abp. Laud, an. 1640 (R.) 'Mentioned in a docket;' Clarendon, Civil War, v. ii. p. 426. Formed, with dimin. suffix -et, from the verb dock, to clip, curtail, hence to make a brief abstract; cf. 'doret, or dockyd;' Prompt. Parv. See Dock (1). Der. docket, verb.

DOCTOR, a teacher, a physician. (L.) 'A doctour of phisik;' Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 413 (or 411); spelt doctor, P. Plowman, C. xii. 96. — Lat. doctor, a teacher. — Lat. docuus, pp. of docere, to teach. See Docile. Der. doctor-ate; and see doctrine.

DOCUMENT, a paper adduced to prove a thing. (F., — L.) 'Thus louers with their moral documents;' The Craft of Lovers, st. 1; in Chaucer's works, ed. 1561, fol. 341. — F. document, 'a document;' Cot. — Lat. documentum, a proof. — Lat. docere, to teach, with suffix -mentum; see Docile. Der. document-al, document-ar-y.

DODECAGON, a plane figure, having 12 equal sides and angles. (Gk.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Coined from Gk. δώδεκα, twelve; and γωνία, an angle. β. The Gk. δώδεκα is from δω, i. e. duo, two; and δέκα, ten. See Decagon.

DODGE, to go hither and thither, evade, quibble. (E.?) 'Let there be some dodging casuist with more craft than sincerity;' Milton, Tenure of Kings and Magistrates (R.) Of uncertain origin. α. The base seems to be that which appears in the Lowland Scotch dad, to jog, North Eng. dad, to shake; whence the frequentative forms seen in North Eng. daddle, to walk unsteadily, dodder, to shake, tremble, totter, as also in dadge, or dodge, to walk in a slow clumsy manner; see Halliwell, and Brockett. β. The orig. sense appears to be 'to move unsteadily,' or 'to shift from place to place.' Cf. the following passage. 'Mé pinch þæt þú mé dwelige and dyderie [Cott. MS. dydris] swá mon cild dēþ; lætst mé hider and þider on swá þine wudu þæt ic ne mæg út áreðian;' i. e. methinks that thou deceivest and misleadest me as one does a child, and leadest me hither and thither in so thick a wood that I cannot divine the way out; Ælfred's Boethius, cap. 35, sect. 5 (b. iii. pr. 12). This A. S. dyder-ian or dydr-ian is related to the prov. Eng. dcdder, and means lit. 'to make to go unsteadily,' the suffix -ian having, as usual, a causal force. γ. Similarly, dodge may answer to a M. E. dod-ien, to make to jog; the final -ge is perhaps due to the softening of a causal ending. As to the root, cf. Skt. dhu, to shake. Der. dodge-er. [†]

DODO, a kind of large bird, now extinct. (Port.) In Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 403, is a drawing of a dodo; at p. 402 he speaks of 'the dodo, a bird the Dutch call walgh-vogel or dod-erseen,' which was then found in the Mauritius. In his fourth edition, 1677, he adds: 'a Portuguese name it is, and has reference to her sim-plices.' — Port. doudo, silly, foolish. Perhaps allied to Dote, q. v. ¶ Similarly the booby was named, also by the Portuguese. See the long article on the dodo in the Engl. Cyclopædia. Walgh-vogel in Dutch means 'nauseous bird;' it seems that the sailors killed them so easily that they were surfeited of them. [†]

DOE, the female of the buck. (E.) M. E. doo; Wyclif, Prov. vi. 5. — A. S. dā, translating Lat. dama in a copy of Ælfric's Glossary cited by Lye. + Dan. daa, a deer; daa-hiort, lit. doe-hart, a buck; daa-hind, lit. doe-hind, a doe. + Swed. dofhjort, a buck; dofkind, a doe. β. Root unknown; hardly borrowed from (still less cognate with) the Lat. dama, W. danas, a deer.

DOFF, to take off clothes or a hat. (E.) 'And doffing his bright arms;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 9. 36. 'Dof bluiþ þis bere-skin' = doff quickly this bear-skin; William of Paleme, 2343. A contraction of do off, i. e. put off, just as don is of do on, and dup of do up. The expression is a very old one. 'Þá he him of dyde isern-byrnan' = then he did off his iron breast-plate; Beowulf, ed. Grein, 671.

DOG, a domestic quadruped. (E. or O. Low G.) M. E. dogge (2 syllables); Ancren Riwele, p. 290. Not found in A. S., but an Old Low German word. + Du. dog, a mastiff. + Swed. dogg, a mastiff. + Dan. dogge, a bull-dog. Root unknown. Der. dog, verb, to track (Shak.); dogg-ish, dogg-ish-ly, dogg-ish-ness; also dogg-ed, i. e. sullen (Shak. K. John, iv. i. 129), dogg-ed-ly, dogg-ed-ness. Also dog-brier, -cart, -day, -fish, -rose, -star, dog's-ear. [†]

DOG-CHEAP, very cheap. (Scand.) Found also in Swed. dial. dog = very. Rietz gives the examples dog snål, extremely greedy; dog lat, extremely idle. Cf. Swed. dugtigt, strongly, much. — Swed. duga, to be fit (= A. S. dugan); see Do (2). So too Platt-Deutsch döger, very much; from the vb. dögen, to avail; Bremen Wörterb. i. 221.

DOGE, a duke of Venice. (Ital., — L.) In Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674; and Kersey, ed. 1715. — Ital. doge, dogio, a doge, captain, general; a provincial form of duce, more commonly written duca. — Lat. ducem, acc. of dux, a leader. See Duke. [†]

DOGGEREL, wretched poetry. (Unknown.) Orig. an adj., and spelt dogerel. 'This may wel be rime dogerel, quod he;' Chaucer, C. T. 13853. 'Amid my dogrell rime;' Gascoigne, Counsel to Withpoll, l. 12. Origin unknown.

DOGMA, a definite tenet. (Gk.) 'This dogma of the world's eternity;' Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 251 (R.) Rich. also quotes the pl. dogmata from Glanvill, Pre-existence of Souls, c. 12. — Gk. δόγμα, that which seems good, an opinion; pl. δόγματα. — Gk. δοκέω, pref. pass. δέδορμαι, I am valued at, I am of opinion. Cognate with Lat. decei, it behoves, decus, ornament, and Skt. daças, fame; Curtius, i. 165. — ✓ DAK, to bestow; see Decorum. Der. dogmat-ic, dogmat-ic-al, dogmat-ic-al-ly, dogmat-ise, dogmat-is-er, dogmat-ism, dogmat-ist; all from the stem δόμαρ.

DOILY, a small napkin. (Dutch.) Also used as the name of a woollen stuff. 'We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine; a fool, and a doily stuff, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety;' Congreve, Way of the World. 'The stores are very low, sir, some doiley petticoats and manteaus we have, and half a dozen pair of laced shoes;' Dryden, Kind Keeper, iv. 1. It will be observed that doil-y or doil-ey is here an adjective; the sb. is properly doil, the same as prov. Eng. (Norfolk) dwile, a coarse napkin or small towel; a term also applied, according to Forby, to the small napkin which we now call a doily. — Du. dwaaal, a towel; the same word with E. Towel, q. v. ¶ The suggestion in Johnson's Dictionary, 'so called, I suppose, from the name of the first maker,' is a guess which rests on some authority; see Errata. [‡]

DOIT, a small Dutch coin. (Du.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 33. — Du. duit, a doit. Remoter origin unknown; but perhaps allied to Dot, q. v.

DOLE, a small portion. (E.) M. E. dole, dale. Spelt dole, Ancren Riwele, pp. 10, 412; dale, Layamon, 19646, where the later text has dole. — A. S. dāl, ge-dāl, Grein, i. 390; a variant of A. S. dæl, a portion. Thus dole is a doublet of deal, q. v. ¶ The difference between deal and dole appears to be dialectal; cf. Lowland Sc. bane-mair, with E. bone-more.

DOLEFUL, sad, miserable. (Hybrid; F. and E.) A hybrid word, made by suffixing the A.S. -ful to M.E. doel, deol, duel, dol, del, of French origin. 'A doelful ping'; Layamon, 6901, later text. The sb. appears in Lowland Scotch as dool; spelt deol in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1048; dol in O. Eng. Hom. i. 285, l. 4.—O. F. doel, duel, dol, dul, deol, mod. F. deuil, grief, mourning; verbal sb. of O. F. doloire, to grieve; cf. Lat. cordolium, grief at heart.—Lat. dolere, to grieve; perhaps related to dolare, to hew, from ✓ DAR, to tear. See Tear, vb. Der. doleful-ly, doleful-ness. See con-dole, and dolour.

DOLL, a child's puppet. (Du.) In Johnson's Dict. Originally, 'a plaything'.—O. Du. dol, a whipping-top (Oudemans); cf. Du. dollen, to sport, be frolicsome. From the same root as Du. dol (= E. dull), mad; see Dull. Cf. prov. E. doil, strange nonsense; dold, stupid; dale, mad; dalties, a child's game. But see Errata. [✱] DOLLAR, a silver coin. (Du.,—G.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2. 62.—Du. daalder, a dollar. Adapted and borrowed from G. thaler, a dollar. β. The G. thaler is an abbreviation of Joachimsthaler, a coin so called because first coined from silver obtained from mines in Joachimsthal (i. e. Joachim's dale) in Bohemia about A.D. 1518; they were sometimes called Schlickenthaler, because coined by the counts of Schlick. The G. thal is cognate with E. dale. Thus dollar = dale-er. See Dale.

DOLOUR, grief, sorrow. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iii. 1. 240. M. E. dolour, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 212.—O. F. doleur, 'grief, sorrow'; Cot.—Lat. dolorem, acc. of dolor, grief.—Lat. dolere, to grieve; see Doleful. Der. dolor-ous, used by Cotgrave to translate O. F. doloureux, from Lat. adj. dolorosus.

DOLPHIN, a kind of fish. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 23. M. E. dolphyne, Allit. Morte Arthure, 2053. [M. E. delfyn, King Alisaunder, 6576, is immediately from Lat. delphinus.]—O. F. daulphin, older spelling of dauphin; Cot.—Lat. delphinus.—Gk. δελφιν, stem of δελφίς, a dolphin; supposed to mean 'belly-fish'; cf. Gk. δελφίς, womb. See Curtius, i. 81.

DOLT, a dull or stupid fellow. (E.) In Shak. Oth. v. 2. 163. M. E. dult, blunt; 'dulte neiles', blunt nails, i. e. instruments of the Passion; O. Eng. Hom. i. 203; and see Ancrer Riwle, p. 292, where for dulte another reading is dulle. The word is a mere extension, with suffixed -t, of M. E. dul, dull. Cf. Prov. E. dold, stupid, confused (Halliwell), shewing that the suffixed -t = -d = -ed; and dolt or dult stands for dulled, i. e. blunted. Der. dolt-ish, dolt-ish-ness.

DOMAIN, territory, estate. (F.,—L.) 'A domaine and inheritance'; Holland's Pliny, b. xiii. c. 3.—O. F. domaine, 'a domaine' (sic), Cot.; O. F. domaine, (less correctly) demaine, a domain; Burguy.—Lat. dominium, lordship.—Lat. dominus, a lord; see Dominate. Doublet, demesne, q. v.

DOME, a hemi-spherical roof. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) 'Dome, a town-house, guild-hall, state-house, meeting-house in a city, from that of Florence, which is so called. Also, a flat round loover, or open roof to a steeple, banqueting-house, &c. somewhat resembling the bell of a great watch'; Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674.—O. F. dome, 'a town-house, guild-hall, &c. (as above); also dosme, 'a flat-round loover, &c. (as above); Cot. [The spelling dosme is false.]—Low Lat. doma, a house; cf. 'in angulo domatis', Prov. xxi. 9 (Vulgate).—Gk. δῶμα, a house; allied to Gk. δῶμος, a building.—✓ DAM, to build. See below. (For this solution, see Scheler.)

DOMESTIC, belonging to a house. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Rich. III. ii. 4. 60.—F. domestique, 'domesticall, housall, of our household'; Cot.—Lat. domesticus, belonging to a household; on the form of which see Curtius, i. 290.—Lat. domus, a house.—✓ DAM, to build; whence also E. timber, q. v. Der. domestic-al-ly, domestic-ate, domestic-ation; and see domicile, dome.

DOMICILE, a little house, abode. (F.,—L.) 'One of the cells, or domicils of the understanding'; Bacon, on Learning, by G. Wats, ii. 12 (R.).—O. F. domicile, 'an house, mansion'; Cot.—Lat. domicilium, a habitation; on which see Curtius, i. 290.—Lat. domi (= domo), crude form of domus, a house; and -cilium, supposed to be connected with Lat. celare, to hide; see Dome and Conceal. Der. domicili-ary, domicili-ate, from Lat. domicili-um.

DOMINATE, to rule over. (L.) Shak. has dominator, L. L. L. i. 1. 222; Titus, ii. 3. 31. [The sb. domination, M. E. dominacion, is in early use; see Chaucer, C. T. 12494; from O. F. domination.]—Lat. dominatus, pp. of dominari, to be lord.—Lat. dominus, lord; connected with Lat. domare, to tame, and E. tame; see Tame. Der. domination (F. domination), dominat-ive, domin-ant (F. dominant, pres. pt. of dominer, to govern); and see domineer, dominical, dominion, domino, don.

DOMINEER, to play the master. (Du.,—F.,—L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 226.—O. Du. domineren, to feast luxuriously; Oudemans.—O. F. dominer, 'to govern, rule, command, master, domineer, to have sovereignty'; Cot.—Lat. dominari, to be lord; see Dominate. ¶ The E. word preserves the orig. F. sense; it is only the suffix -er that is really Dutch. See Cashier, verb.

DOMINICAL, belonging to our Lord. (F.,—L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 44.—O. F. dominical; Cot.—Low Lat. dominicalis, dominical.—Lat. dominicus, belonging to a lord.—Lat. dominus, a lord; see Dominate.

DOMINION, lordship. (Low L.) 'To have lordship or dominion'; Lidgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii; The Answer of King Ethioeles.—Low Lat. acc. dominionem, from nom. dominio.—Lat. dominium, lordship.—Lat. dominus, a lord; see Dominate.

DOMINO, a masquerade-garment. (Span.,—L.) 'Domino, a kind of hood worn by the canons of a cathedral church; also a mourning-vail for women'; Kersey, ed. 1715.—Span. domino, a masquerade-dress. Orig. a dress worn by a master.—Span. domine, a master, a teacher of Latin grammar.—Lat. dominus, a master; see Dominate. Der. dominoes, the name of a game.

DON (1), to put on clothes. (E.) 'Don his clothes'; Hamlet, iv. 5. 2. A contraction of do on, i. e. put on. 'Brutus hehte his beornes don on hure burnan' = Brutus bade his men do on their breast-plates; Layamon, 1700, 1701. See Do, Dup.

DON (2), sir; a Spanish title. (Span.,—L.) In Shak. Two Gent. i. 3. 39.—Span. don, lit. master, a Spanish title.—Lat. dominus, a master; see Dominate. ¶ The fem. is donna; also duenna, q. v. The word itself is ultimately the same as the M. E. dan, as in 'dan John', or 'dan Thomas' or 'dan Albon', used by Chaucer, C. T. 13935. This form is from the O. F. dans = Lat. dominus.

DONATION, a gift. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 85.—F. donation, 'a donation, a present'; Cot.—Lat. acc. donationem, from nom. donatio.—Lat. donatus, pp. of donare, to give.—Lat. donum, a gift; cognate with Gk. δῶπον, a present, Skt. dāna, a gift.—✓ DA, to give; cf. Skt. dā, to give. Der. From the same source are donative, don-or, don-ee. From the same root are anecdote, antidote, con-done, dose, dower; also date (1), dative.

DONKEY, a familiar name for an ass. (E.) Common in mod. E., but very rare in E. literature; not in Todd's Johnson, nor in Richardson. α. The word is a double diminutive, formed with the suffixes -k and -y (-ey), the full form of the double suffix appearing in the Lowland Scotch lass-ickie, a little-little lass; this double suffix is particularly common in the Banffshire dialect, which has beastikie from beast, horsikie from horse, &c., as explained in The Dialect of Banffshire, by the Rev. Walter Gregor, p. 5. β. The stem is dun, a familiar name for a horse, as used in the common phrase 'dun is in the mire'; as to which see Chaucer, C. T. Mancip. Prol. l. 5; Shak. Romeo, i. 4. 41. The name dun was given to a horse or ass in allusion to its colour; see Dun. ¶ Similarly was formed dunnoch, M. E. donek, a hedge-sparrow, with a single suffix -ock. [†]

DOOM, a judgment, decision. (E.) M. E. dom; Havelok, 2487; and common.—A. S. dóm; Grein, i. 196. + Swed. and Dan. dom. + Icel. dóm. + Goth. doms. + O. H. G. tuom, judgment. + Gk. θέμις, law.—✓ DHA, to place; cf. Skt. dhá, to place, set. Der. deem, verb; q. v.; dooms-day, q. v. Observe that the suffix -dom (A. S. -dóm) is the same word as doom.

DOOMSDAY-BOOK, a survey of England made by William I. (E.) 'Doomsday-book, so called because, upon any difference, the parties received their doom from it. . . In Latin, dies iudicarius'; Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. The reason of the name is rather obscure, but the etymology is obvious, viz. from A. S. dómes dag, the day of judgment or decision; cf. M. E. domesday, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 194.

DOOR, an entrance-gate. (E.) M. E. dore; Havelok, 1788.—A. S. duru; Grein, i. 212. + Du. deur. + Dan. dör. + Swed. dörr. + Icel. dyrr. + Goth. daur. + O. H. G. tor, G. thor, thür. + Lat. pl. fores. + Gk. θύρα. + Skt. dvāra, dvār, a door, gate. Root uncertain; see Curtius, i. 320. Der. door-nail (M. E. dorenail, Will. of Palerne, 628); door-pin (M. E. dorepin, durepin, Gen. and Exodus, 1078); door-ward (M. E. doreward, dureward, Layamon, ii. 317).

DORMANT, sleeping. (F.,—L.) 'A table-dormant'; Chaucer, C. T. 355.—F. dormant, pres. pt. of dormir, to sleep.—Lat. dormire, to sleep; see Dormitory. Der. dormant-y.

DORMER-WINDOW, an attic-window. (F. and E.) A dormer was a sleeping-room. 'Or to any shop, cellar, . . chamber, dormer'; Chapman, All Fools, Act iv. sc. 1. Formed from O. F. dormir, to sleep; cf. O. F. dormir, 'a nap, sleep, a sleeping'; Cot. See Dormant, Dormitory.

DORMITORY, a sleeping-chamber. (L.) 'The dormitorium-door'; Holinshed, Desc. of Ireland, c. 3.—Lat. dormitorium, a sleeping-chamber; neut. of dormitorium, adj. of or belonging to sleeping.—Lat. dormitor, a sleeper.—Lat. dormitare, to sleep; frequent. of dormire, to sleep; cognate with Gk. δωπάειν, to sleep, Skt. drá, to sleep.—✓ DAR, or DRA, to sleep; see Curtius, i. 288; Fick, i. 618.

DORMOUSE, a kind of mouse. (Scand. and E.) 'Lay still

lyke a dormouse, nothyng doyn[g]e; Hall, Hen. VI, an. 7 (R.). M. E. dormous. 'Hic sores, a dormous;' Wright's Vocab. i. 220, col. 1; and in Prompt. Parv. Lit. 'dozing-mouse.' The prefix is from a prov. E. dor, to sleep, appearing in dorror, a sleeper, lazy person (Halliwell), and prob. closely related to E. doze, q. v. β. Apparently of Scand. origin. Cf. Icel. dár, benumbed, very sleepy, as in dár gleymskusvefn, a benumbing sleep of forgetfulness; dúrr, a nap, slumber; dúra, to take a nap; dús, a lull, a dead calm. See Doze.

DORSAL, belonging to the back. (F., -L.) The term 'dorsal fin' is used by Pennant, who died A. D. 1798. -F. dorsal, of or belonging to the back; Cot. -Low Lat. dorsalis, belonging to the back. -Lat. dorsum, the back; related to Gk. δερμα, a mountain-ridge, δερφ, δερφ, a neck, mountain-ridge; Curtius, i. 291; and see Fick, i. 616.

DOSE, a portion of medicine. (F., -Gk.) 'Without repeated doses;' Dryden's tr. of Virgil, Dedication. And used by Cotgrave. -O. F. dose, 'a dose, the quantity of potion or medicine,' &c.; Cot. -Gk. δόσις, a giving, a portion given or prescribed. -Gk. base δο-, appearing in δίδωμι, I give. -✓DA, to give; cf. Skt. dá, to give. Der. dose, verb. See Donation.

DOT, a small mark, speck. (Du.) Not in early use, and uncommon in old authors. It occurs in Johnson's Dict., and the phrase 'dotted lines' occurs in Burke's Letters (Todd). Cotgrave has: 'Caillon, a dot, clot, or congealed lump.' The only other early trace I can find of it is in Palsgrave, qu. by Halliwell, who uses dot in the sense of 'a small lump, or pat.' Cf. prov. Eng. 'a tiny little dot,' i. e. a small child. -Du. dot, 'a little bundle of spoiled wool, thread, silk, or such like, which is good for nothing;' Sewel. β. The remoter origin is obscure; cf. Swed. dial. dott, a little heap, clump; E. Friesic dotte, dot, a clump (Koolman); Fries. dodd, a clump (Outzen). ¶ It is possible that in the phrase 'not worth a dotkin,' cited in Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674, the reference is to this Du. dot, instead of to Du. duit, a doit, as is usually supposed; or the two words may have been confused. [†]

DOTAGE, childishness, foolishness. (E., with F. suffix.) M. E. dotage, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 1425. From the verb dote, with F. suffix -age, answering to Lat. suffix -aticum. See Dote.

DOTARD, a foolish fellow. (E., with F. suffix.) In Chaucer, C. T. 5913. From the verb dote, with F. suffix -ard, of O. H. G. origin. See Dote.

DOTE, to be foolish. (E.) In early use. M. E. dotien, doten; Layamon, l. 3294; P. Plowman, A. i. 129; B. i. 138. An Old Low G. word. Cf. O. Du. doten, to dote, mope, Oudemans; Du. duuten, to take a nap, to mope; dui, a nap, sleep, dotage. + Icel. dotta, to nod with sleep. + M. H. G. túzen, to keep still, mope. ¶ The F. radoter, O. F. re-doter, is of O. Low G. origin, with Lat. prefix re-. Der. dot-age, q. v.; dot-ard, q. v.; dot-er-él, a silly bird, Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 25 (R.); and Prompt. Parv.

DOUBLE, two-fold. (F., -L.) M. E. double, Ancren Riwle, p. 70. -O. F. double, later double. -Lat. duplus, double, lit. twice-full. -Lat. du-, for duo, two; and -plus, related to Lat. plenus, full, from the root PAR, to fill; see Two and Full. Der. double, verb; double-ness; also doublet, q. v., doublet, q. v.

DOUBLET, a thick garment. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 1. 102. M. E. dobbelet, 'a garment, bigera;' Prompt. Parv.; see Way's note. -O. F. doublet, 'a doublet, a jewel, or stone of two peeces joyined or glued together;' Cot. [Here doublet is probably used in a lapidary's sense, but the word is the same; cf. O. F. doublet, lining for a garment.] -F. double, double; with dim. suffix -et; see Double.

DOUBLOON, a Spanish coin. (F., -Span., -L.) A Spanish word, given in Johnson's Dict. as doublon, which is the French form. -Span. doblon, so called because it is the double of a pistole. -Span. doblo, double; with augmentative suffix -on (= Ital. -one). -Lat. duplus; see Double.

DOUBT, to be uncertain. (F., -L.) M. E. douten, commonly in the sense 'to fear'; Havelok, l. 708. -O. F. douter, later doubter, as in Cotgrave, whence b was inserted into the E. word also. -Lat. dubitare, to doubt, be of two minds; closely connected with dubius, doubtful; see Dubious. Der. doubt, sb.; doubt-er, doubt-ful, doubt-ful-ly, doubt-ful-ness, doubt-less, doubt-less-ly.

DOUCEUR, a small present. (F., -L.) A French word, used by Burke (Todd). -F. douceur, lit. sweetness. -Lat. dulcor, acc. of dulcor, sweetness. -Lat. dulcis, sweet; perhaps cognate with Gk. γλυκίς, sweet. See Curtius, i. 446.

DOUCHE, a shower-bath. (F., -Ital., -L.) Modern, and a French word. -F. douche, a douche, a shower-bath, introduced from Ital. in the 16th cent. (Brachet). -Ital. doccia, a conduit, canal, water-pipe, spout. -Ital. dociare, to pour; formed as if from a Low Lat. *ductiare, a derivative of ductus, a leading, in late Lat. a duct, canal; see Duct.

DOUGH, kneaded flour. (E.) M. E. dah, dagh, do3, dogh, dow; spelt do3, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 205; see dar in Stratmann, p. 119. -A. S. dah, gen. dages, dough; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 342, l. 18. + Du. deeg. + Dan. deig. + Swed. deg. + Icel. deig. + Goth. daigs, a kneaded lump. + G. teig. β. The sense is 'a kneaded lump'; the root appears in Goth. deigan, digan, to knead, to form out of a plastic material, Rom. ix. 20; cognate with Lat. ingere, to form, shape, mould; also with Gk. θηγγάνειν, to handle; also with Skt. dih, to smear. -✓DHIGH, to touch, feel, knead; whence also E. dike, q. v., figure, &c. See Curtius, i. 223. Der. dough-y. And see Figure, Fiction. [†]

DOUGHTY, able, strong, valiant. (E.) M. E. duhti, dohti, doutti; Layamon, 14791; P. Plowman, B. v. 102. -A. S. dyhtig, valiant; Grein, i. 213. -A. S. dugan, to be strong, to avail. + Du. deugen, to be worth. + Dan. due, to avail; whence dygtig, able, capable. + Swed. duga, to avail; whence dugtig, able, fit. + Icel. duga, to avail; whence dygðugr, doughty. + Goth. dugan, to avail, suit. + O. H. G. tugan, G. taugen, to be worth; whence G. tüchtig, able. β. All these are probably connected, as Fick suggests (i. 120), with Skt. duh (for dhugh), to milk, also to enjoy, to draw something out of something; from ✓DHUGH, to yield profit, to milk; whence also E. daughter, q. v. ¶ The A. S. dugan is prov. E. dow, to be worth, and E. do in the phrase 'that will do;' see Do (2).

DOUSE, to plunge into water, immerse. (Scand.) 'I have washed my feet in mire or ink, dous'd my carnal affections in all the vileness of the world;' Hammond, Works, iv. 515 (R.). 'He was very often used . . . to be doussed [perfundebatur] in water luke-warme;' Holland, Suetonius, p. 75 (R.). 'To swing i' th' air, or douce in water;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. l. 502. -Swed. dunsa, to plump down, fall clumsily; cf. Dan. dundse, to thump, where the d is excrement; see dunsa in Rietz. -Swed. dial. dums, the noise of a falling body; Rietz. -Swed. dial. duna, to make a din; see Din. ¶ The loss of n before s and th is an E. peculiarity, as in goose, tooth. The word may have been confused, lately, with douche, q. v. It appears to differ from douse, q. v.

DOUT, to extinguish. (E.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 2. 11. Dout! is for do out, i. e. put out. Cf. doff, don, dup, for do off, do on, do up.

DOVE, the name of a bird. (E.) M. E. doue, douus, doune (where u=v); P. Plowman, B. xv. 393. -A. S. *dúfa, only found in the compound dúfe-doppa, used to translate Lat. pelicanus (Bosworth); the usual A. S. word was cufra. + O. Sax. dúva (Heliand). + Goth. dubo. + O. H. G. tuba, G. taube. β. The sense is 'diver,' the form dúfa being from the verb dúfan, to dive, with the suffix -a denoting the agent, as usual; for a similar formation, see Columbine. And see Dive. Der. dove-cot; also dove-tail, q. v.

DOVETAIL, to fasten boards together. (E.) 'Dovetaild is a term among joiners,' &c.; Blount's Gloss. From dove and tail; from the shape of the fitted ends of the board.

DOWAGER, a widow with a jointure. (F., -L.) In Shak. Mids. N. D. i. 1. 5, 157. A coined word, made by suffixing r (for -er) to dowage. 'To make her dowage [endowment] of so rich a jointure;' Merry Devil of Edmonton (R.). β. Again dowage is a coined word, as if from a F. dou-age, from the F. douer, to endow. -Lat. dotare, to endow. See Dower. [†]

DOWER, an endowment. (F., -L.) M. E. dower, Chaucer, C. T. 8683. -O. F. doaire, later douaire. -Low Lat. dotarium. -Lat. dotare, to endow. -Lat. dot-, stem of dos (gen. dotis), a gift, dowry + Gk. dós, a gift. -✓DA, to give; cf. Skt. dá, to give. Der. dower-ed, dower-less; dowry (for dower-y); and see dowager. [†]

DOWN (1), soft plumage. (Scand.) In Gower, C. A. ii. 103. -Icel. dúnn, down. + Swed. dun. + Dan. dunn. + Du. dons. Cf. Icel. daunn, a smell, fume. β. The words down, fume, and dust are all from the same root; down was so called from its likeness to dust, when blown about. See Dust, Fume. Der. down-y; eider-down.

DOWN (2), a hill. (C.) M. E. dun, doun; Layamon, 27256; Ormulum, 14568. -A. S. dún, a hill; Grein, i. 213. -Irish dún, a fortified hill, fort, town; Gael. dun, a hill, mount, fort; W. din, a hill-fort. β. Cognate with A. S. tún, a fort, enclosure, town; the A. S. t answering to Celtic d by Grimm's law. See Town. Der. a-down, q. v.; also down (3), q. v.

DOWN (3), adv. and prep. in a descending direction. (A. S., from C.) The prep. down is a mere corruption, by loss of the initial, of M. E. a-down, which again is for A. S. of-dúne, i. e. off or from the hill. The loss of the prefix is of early date; dun (for a-dune) occurs in Layamon, 6864, in the phrase 'he dun læt' = he lay down. It will be observed that this form dun was originally an adverb, not a preposition. See Down (2), and Adown. Der. down-east, down-fall, down-hearted, down-hill, down-right, down-ward, down-wards. Dun-ward (downward) occurs in Layamon, 13106.

DOWSE (1), to strike in the face. (Scand.) 'Dowse, a blow on the chaps;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Dowse, to give a blow on the face, to strike;' Bailey, qu. by Todd. M. E. duschen, to strike; 'such a dasande drede dusched to his heart' = such a dazing dread struck to his heart; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 1538. — Of Scand. origin; cf. Norwegian dusa, to break, cast down from, Ger. dial. dusen, tusen, to strike, run against, cited by Rietz s. v. dust; also O. Du. doesen, to beat heavily, strike (Kilian); E. Fries. dössen, to strike (Koolman). β. The derived forms Swed. dust, Dan. dyst, a conflict, combat, shock, set-to, correspond to the E. derivative doust or dust, a stroke, blow, used by Beaum. and Fletcher (Todd); whence the verb dust, to beat (Nares, ed. Halliwell and Wright). γ. Perhaps allied to dash, q. v.; and prob. distinct from douse, to plunge, q. v.

DOWSE (2), to plunge into water; see Douse.

DOWSE (3), to extinguish. (E.) A cant term; 'douse the glim,' i. e. extinguish the light. Yet good English. — A. S. dwæscan, to extinguish; Grein. — ✓ DHWAS, to perish; see Doze, Dizzy. ¶ The change of dwa- to du- (= dow-) is seen in dull, q. v.

DOXOLOGY, an utterance of praise to God. (L., — Gk.) 'Doxology, a song of praise,' &c.; Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. — Low Lat. doxologia. — Gk. δοξολογία, an ascription of praise. — Gk. δοξολόγος, giving praise. — Gk. δοξο-, for δόξα, glory; and -λόγος, speaking, from λέγειν, to speak. Δόξα meant originally 'a notion,' from δοκῆναι, to think, expect; see Dogma.

DOXY, a disreputable sweetheart. (O. Low G. or Scand.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 3. 2. See Duck (3).

DOZE, to sleep lightly, slumber. (Scand.) 'Doz'd with his fumes, and heavy with his load, They found him snoring in his dark abode;' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Ecl. vi. 14. Here doz'd means 'stupefied,' 'rendered drowsy.' — Icel. dúsa, to doze. + Swed. dial. dúsa, to doze, slumber; Rietz. + Dan. döse, to doze, mope. — ✓ DHWAS, to crumble, perish; whence A. S. dwas, stupid, stupefied; Du. dwaas, foolish. Cf. Dan. dös, drowsiness; Icel. dúrr, a nap, dúra, to take a nap. Connected with dizzy; and probably also with daze, and even with dull and duell. Cf. Skt. dhvri, to cause to fall; dhvams, dhvas, to crumble, perish, fall. See Dizzy, Dormouse.

DOZEN, twelve. (F., — L.) M. E. dosain; K. Alisaunder, l. 657. — O. F. dosaine, dozaine; mod. F. dozaine, a dozen. — O. F. doze, mod. F. doize, twelve; with suffix -ain (= Lat. -anus or -enus). — Lat. duodecim, twelve. — Lat. duo, two, cognate with E. two; and decem, ten, cognate with E. ten. See Two and Ten.

DRAB (1), a low, sluttish woman. (C.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 1. 31. Of Celtic origin; Gael. and Irish drab, preserved in Irish drabog, a slut, slattern, Gael. drabag, a slattern; Gael. draback, dirty, slovenly, drabaire, a dirty, slovenly man; where the endings -og, -ag are dimin. suffixes, -ach is an adj. suffix, and -aire denotes the agent. β. All from Irish drab, a spot, a stain, which is nearly related to Gael. and Irish drabh, draff, the grains of malt, whence also the Gael. drabhag, dregs, lees, a little filthy slattern. The peculiar use of the word is Celtic; the corresponding E. word is Draff, q. v. Der. drab, verb; Hamlet, ii. 1. 26.

DRAB (2), of a dull brown colour. (F.) 'Drab, adj. (with clothers), belonging to a gradation of plain colours betwixt a white and a dark brown;' Ash's Dict. ed. 1775. He also gives: 'Drab, s. (in commerce) a strong kind of cloth, cloth double milled.' It would appear that drab was applied to the colour of undyed cloth. — F. drap, cloth. — Low Lat. acc. drappum, from nom. drappus, in Charlemagne's Capitularies (Brachet). ¶ Brachet says 'of unknown origin.' Cotgrave, however, gives to draper the sense 'to full cloth'; and it seems possible to refer the Low Lat. drappus to the O. Low G. root drap, seen in Icel. drepa, to beat, smite (= G. treffen). See Drub. We must be careful, however, not to overlook the Low Lat. trapus, Span. trapo, cloth, another form of the word. See Drape, Trappings.

DRAFF, dregs, refuse, hogwash. (E.) M. E. draf, Chaucer, C. T. 17346; and earlier, in Layamon, 29256. Not found in A. S., but may be considered an E. word. + Du. dras, will, hog's wash. + Icel. dras, draff, husks. + Swed. dras, grains. + Dan. drav, dregs, lees. + Gael. drabh, draff, the grains of malt; cf. drauip, lees, dregs; Irish drabh, grains, refuse; cf. drauid, lees. + G. träber, pl. grains, husks. Allied to Drab (1), q. v. ¶ The supposed A. S. drabbe, dregs, is wholly unauthorised, and due to Somner.

DRAFT, the act of drawing, a draught. (E.) A corruption of draught, by the usual change of gh to f, as in laugh (pron. laaf). See Draught. Der. draft, verb, draftsman.

DRAAG, to pull forcibly. (Scand.) M. E. dragen, Prompt. Parv. A secondary weak verb, due to draw. — Swed. dragga, to search with a grapnel. — Swed. dragg, a grapnel; cf. Dan. drag, a pull, tug, draught, haul. — Swed. draga, to draw. + Icel. draga, to draw, pull, carry. + Dan. drage, to draw, pull, drag. + Goth. dragan, to draw. + O. H. G. tragan, G. tragen, to bear, carry. β. Cf. Gk. δολιχός, long; Skt. dirgha, long, drāgh, dhṛāgh, to lengthen, to exert oneself. — ✓ DHARGH, an extension of ✓ DHAR, to bear, to carry; cf.

Skt. dhri, to bear, to carry. See Curtius, i. 235. ¶ Fick, i. 634, distinguishes between the roots dhargh, to make fast, and dhargh, to carry, and between Goth. dragan and Icel. draga; this seems doubtful. Curtius remarks that 'the Lat. trahere must be rejected [as cognate] on account of its t.' Der. drag, sb., drag-net; also dragg-le, q. v.; and see Draw. [†]

DRAGGLE, to make or become dirty by drawing along the ground. (E.) 'His dragging tail hung in the dirt;' Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 449. The frequentative of drag, by addition of the usual suffix -le; cf. straggle from stray. See Drag. Doublet, drawl.

DRAGOMAN, an interpreter. (Span., — Gk., — Arab.) Spelt drugerman, Pope, Sat. viii. 83. [Found very early, spelt drogman, in King Alisaunder, l. 3401; from F. dragman.] — Span. dragoman; cf. Ital. dragomanno, an interpreter. A word of Eastern origin, introduced from Constantinople by the Crusaders, who had borrowed it from the mediæval Gk. δραγόμενος, an interpreter (Brachet). — Arab. tarjuman, an interpreter, translator, dragoman; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 131; Rich. Dict. p. 388. Cf. Chaldee targum, a version, interpretation.

DRAGOON, a kind of light horseman. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'A captain of dragoons;' Spectator, no. 261. — F. dragon, a dragoon, horse-soldier; the same word with F. dragon, a dragon, though the reason for the name has not been clearly made out. — Lat. acc. draconem, from nom. draco, a dragon. See Dragon. Der. dragonnade, a French word. ¶ In connection with dragon, observe the curious passage in Barbour's Bruce, ii. 203, viz. 'And bad him men of armys ta, . . . And byrn, and slay, and raisis dragoun;' on which my note is, 'i. e. lit. to raise the dragon. . . I would suggest that it means to raise the devil's standard. Ducange gives: "Draco (1) vexillum in quo draconis effigies efficta; (2) effigies draconis, quæ cum vexillis in ecclesiasticis processionibus deferri solet, qua vel diabolus ipse, vel heresis designantur, de quibus triumphat ecclesia." We are all familiar with St. George and the dragon, wherein the dragon represents evil. Perhaps the verb to dragon has hence drawn somewhat of its sinister meaning.' Add to this that M. E. dragon was common in the sense of 'standard;' cf. 'Edmond ydyzt hys standard . . . and hys dragon vp yset;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 303; cf. pp. 216, 545; Rich. Coeur de Lion, 2967; and see Littré. [†]

DRAIN, to draw off gradually. (E.) In Shak. Macb. i. 3. 18. — A. S. drehnigean, drehnian, drenian; in the phr. 'ge drehnigead [var. read. drehniad, dreniad] bone gnat aweg,' i. e. ye drain away the gnat; Matt. xxiii. 24. β. Here dreh = drah = drag; and the counterpart of the word occurs in Icel. dragna, to draw along. γ. Formed, with suffix -n (cf. Goth. verbs in -nan) from the base drag; see Drag. B. Or formed from the sb. drag, from the same root, as when we speak of 'brewers' drains;' see Dregs. ¶ It is a mistake to connect the word with dry, which has a different vowel; or with G. thräne, a tear, of which the O. Sax. form is trahni, and the Du. form traan. Der. drain, sb.; drain-age, drain-er.

DRAKE, the male of the duck. (E.) 'As doth the white doke after hir drake;' Chaucer, C. T. 3576; cf. Havelok, 1241. A contraction of ened-rake or end-rake, a masc. form from A. S. ened, a duck (Bosworth). The A. S. ened became M. E. end or ende, badly spelt hende in Havelok, 1241; hence endrake, and the corrupted drake, by the loss of the first two letters. + Icel. önd (= andu), a duck; whence the O. Icel. andriki, a drake (Haldorsson); cf. Icel. andarsteppi, a drake, in which the original a reappears. + Swed. and, a wild duck; anddrake, a male wild duck. + Dan. and, a duck; andrik, a drake. + G. ente (O. H. G. anat, ante), a duck; enterich, a drake. β. Cf. also Du. end, a duck; Lat. anas (crude form anati-), a duck; Gk. νήσσα (= ανητια), a duck; on which see Curtius, i. 394. γ. The suffix appears again in the G. gänse-rieh, a gander; täube-rieh, a cock-pigeon; and in some proper names, as Frede-rieh, G. Fried-rieh, Mæso-Goth. Frihta-reiks. It appears as a separate word in Goth. reiks, chief, mighty, ruling, having authority, whence reiki, authority, rule; cf. E. bishop-rie; see further under Regal. Thus the sense is 'lord of the duck,' or 'duck-king.' [†]

DRAM, DRACHM, a small weight, small quantity. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Shak. Timon, v. 1. 154; Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 6. 'Drame, wyghte [weight], drama, dragma;' Prompt. Parv. — O. F. drame, dragma, drachme, 'a dram; the eighth part of an ounce, or three scruples; also, a handful of;' Cot. — Lat. drachma, borrowed from Gk. δραχμή, a handful, a drachma, used both as a weight and a coin; cf. δράγμα, as much as one can grasp. — Gk. δράσσομαι, I grasp; from ✓ ΔΡΑΚ, discussed by Curtius, ii. 98.

DRAMA, a representation of actions. (L., — Gk.) Puttenham speaks of 'entludes or poems drammaticke;' Arte of Poesie, lib. i. cap. 17 (heading). Cf. the phrase 'dramatis personæ' commonly prefixed to old plays.—Lat. drama.—Gk. δρᾶμα (stem δραμα-), a deed, act, drama.—Gk. δρᾶν, I do, perform. + Lithuanian darai, to make, do.—✓DAR, to do; Curtius, i. 294; Fick, i. 619. Der. (from stem dramat-), dramatic, dramat-ic-al, dramat-ic-al-ly, dramat-ise, dramat-ist; and see drastic.

DRAPE, to cover with cloth. (F.) Formerly, to manufacture cloth; 'that the clothier might drape according as he might afford;' Bacon, Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 74.—F. draper, to make cloth; Cot.—F. drap, cloth; see Drab (2). Der. draper, occurring in P. Plowman, B. v. 255; drap-er-y.

DRASTIC, actively purgative, effective. (Gk.) 'Drastica, drastic remedies, i. e. such as operate speedily and effectually;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715.—Gk. δραστικός, drastic, effective.—Gk. δρᾶν, I effect; see Drama.

DRAUGHT, also DRAFT, a drawing. (E.) 'A draught of win;' Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 396 (or 398); spelt draht, Layamon, 29259. Not found in A. S., but evidently derived from A. S. dragan, to draw, drag; see Draw, Drag. The suffix -t appears also in flight from fly, drift from drive, &c. + Du. dragt, a load, burden; from dragen, to carry. + Dan. dragt, a load. + Icel. dráttir, a pulling, a draught (of fishes); from Icel. draga, to draw. Der. draught-house, draughts-man or draughts-man; also draughts, a game in which alternate draughts, i. e. 'moves,' are made; Chaucer uses draughtes, in the sense of 'moves' at the game of chess, in The Boke of the Duchesse, l. 655; cf. Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, 1779, 1812.

DRAW, to pull along. (E.) A primary strong verb. M. E. drawen, earlier form drāzen; see Layamon, 10530.—A. S. dragan, Grein, i. 202. + O. Sax. dragan, to carry. + Swed. draga, &c. See Drag. Der. draw-back, draw-bridge, draw-er, draw-ers, draw-ing, draw-ing-room (short for withdrawing-room), draw-well; also with-draw, q. v.; drawl, q. v.; draught, q. v.; and dray, q. v.

DRAWL, to speak very slowly. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 1. 145. An extension of draw, with the suffix -l, giving a frequentative force. Thus drawl is a doublet of draggle, q. v. Cf. Du. dralen, to loiter, linger, delay; similarly formed from dragen, to carry, endure; Icel. dralla (= drag-la), to loiter.

DRAWY, a low cart for heavy goods. (E.) The word draw-load occurs in State Trials, an. 1643 (R.); draw-men in The Spectator, no. 307. The form draw agrees with A. S. dragan, which occurs in A. S. drage-net, a draw-net, or dredge-net. + Swed. drög, a sledge, dray. It means 'that which is drawn along;' see Dredge (1), Drag. [†]

DREAD, to fear, be afraid. (E.) M. E. dreden, P. Plowman, B. xx. 153.—A. S. drédan, only found in the compounds on-drédan, adrédan, ofdrédan; of which the first is common. + O. Sax. drádan, only in the compound andrádan or anddrádan, to be afraid. + O. H. G. trátan, only in the comp. intrátan, M. H. G. entrátan, to be afraid. Root unknown. Der. dread, sb.; dread-ful, dread-ful-ly, dread-ful-ness, dread-less, dread-less-ly, dread-less-ness.

DREAM (1), a vision. (E.) M. E. dream, dreem, drem; Havelok, 1284. It also has the sense of 'sound,' or 'music;' as in 'mid te dredful dreame of þe engene bemen' = with the dreadful sound of the angels' trumpets, Ancrén Riwe, p. 214.—A. S. dréam, (1) a sweet sound, music, harmony; (2) joy, glee. The sense of 'vision' is not found in the earliest English, but the identity of the M. E. dream with the A. S. dréam is undeniable, as Grein rightly says; the O. Saxon usage proves that the sense of 'vision' arose from that of 'happiness;' we still talk of 'a dream of bliss.' + O. Sax. dróm, joy; also, a dream. + O. Fries. drám, a dream. + Du. droom. + Icel. draumr. + Dan. and Swed. dröm. + G. traum. β. The original sense is clearly 'a joyful or tumultuous noise,' and the word is from the same root as drum and drone. See Drum, Drone. Der. dream, verb, q. v.; dream-less, dream-y. ¶ Not connected with Lat. dormire, but with Gk. δρᾶν, a noise, δρόπος, a tumult.

DREAM (2), to see a vision. (E.) The form shows that the verb is derived from the sb., not vice versa.—A. S. dréman, drýman, to rejoice (Bosworth); from the sb. dréam, joy; see further under Dream (1). So too G. träumen, to dream, from sb. traum.

DREARY, DREAR, gloomy, cheerless. (E.) Drear is a modern poetical form, used by Parnell and Cowper. It is quite unauthorised, and a false form. M. E. dreori, dreri, druri; spelt dreery, dryry, Chaucer, C. T. 8390.—A. S. dréorig, sad, mournful; originally 'bloody,' or 'gory,' as in Beowulf, ed. Grein, 1417, 2789. Formed, with suffix -ig, from A. S. dréor, gore, blood; Grein, i. 205. And again, A. S. dréor is from the verb dréosan, to fall, drip, whence also dross, q. v. + Icel. dreyrigr, gory; from dreyri, dröri, gore. + G. traurig, sad, orig. gory, from O. H. G. trúr, gore. See Dross. Der. dreari-ness, dreari-ly.

DREDGE (1), a drag-net. (F.,—Du.) Also spelt drudge. 'Drudger, one that fishes for oysters;' Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. &

'Dredgers, fishers for oysters;' Kersey, ed. 1715.—O. F. drege, 'a kind of fish-net, forbidden to be used except for oysters;' Cot.—Du. drag-net, a drag-net.—Du. dragen, to bear, carry; sometimes to draw, drag; thus Sewel gives the phrase alle de zeylen draagen, all the sails are drawing, or are filled with wind. + A. S. dragan, to draw, drag. See Drag. ¶ There is an A. S. drage-net, a draw-net, found in glosses (Lye); but the particular form dræge is, apparently, French. It comes to much the same thing.

DREDGE (2), to sprinkle flour on meat, &c. (F.,—Prov.,—Ital.,—Gk.) 'Burnt figs drag'd [dredged] with meal and powdered sugar;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, Act ii. sc. 3. 'Dredge you a dish of plovers;' id. Bloody Brother, Act ii. sc. 2. 'To dredge is to sprinkle as in sowing dreg, or mixed corn; thus Holland says that 'choler is a miscellane seed, as it were, and a dredge, made of all the passions of the mind;' Plutarch, p. 108. 'Dredge or Dreg, oats and barley mingled together;' Kersey, ed. 1715.—O. F. dragee, dragée aux chevaux, 'provender of divers sorts of pulse mingled together; also the course grain called bolymong, French-wheat, Block-wheat, or Buck-wheat;' Cot. Cotgrave also gives the older sense of dragée as 'a kind of digestive (sic) powder, usually prescribed unto weak stomachs after meat;' this is the mod. F. dragée, a sugar-plum. β. Introduced, through Prov. dragea, from Ital. treggea, a sugar-plum (Brachet). Diez quotes from Papias: 'collibia sunt apud Hebræos, quæ nos vocamus tragemata vel vilia munuscula, ut cicer frimum,' &c.—Gk. τράχημα, dried fruits, pl. of τράχημα, something nice to eat.—Gk. τράγω (2nd aor. ἐ-τράγον), to gnaw; also to eat dried fruits; allied to τρώω, I injure, τρώω, I rub.—✓TAR, to rub; see Curtius, i. 275, who discusses the variations of the root in form and sense.

DREGS, lees, sediment. (Scand.) A pl. form, from sing. dreg. 'Fra fen, ful of dreg' = out of a fen full of mire; Northern Met. version of Ps. xxxix. 3. 'Dregges and drif;' P. Plowman, B. xix. 397.—Icel. drægg, pl. dræggjar, dregs, lees. + Swed. drägg, dregs, lees. β. The theoretical European form is dragia (Fick), and the derivation is, apparently, from Icel. draga, to draw; cf. Icel. draga saman, to collect, draga út, to extract; see Draw, Drag. ¶ Not allied to G. dreck, dirt, for that is the Icel. þrekkir; nor yet to Gk. τρίψ, dregs. Der. dregg-y, dregg-i-ness.

DRENCH, to fill with drink or liquid. (E.) The causal of 'drink;' the old sense is 'to make to drink.' M. E. drenchen, Havelok, 583.—A. S. drēncan, to drench, Grein, i. 202; causal of A. S. drincan, to drink. + Du. drénken, to water a horse. + Icel. drækja, to drown, swamp. + Swed. dränka, to drown, to steep. + G. tränken, to water, to soak. See Drink. Der. drench, sb.

DRESS, to make ready, deck. (F.,—L.) M. E. dressen; King Alisaunder, 1332.—O. F. dresser, dresser, to erect, set up, arrange, dress.—Low Lat. *driciare, not found; but formed from Low Lat. dricitus, a contracted form of Lat. directus, direct, straight, hence just, right, upright. See Direct. Der. dress, sb.; dress-ing, dress-ing-case, dress-y; also dress-er, a table on which meat is dressed.

DRIBBLE, to let fall in small drops. (Scand.) The reading dribbling in Shak. Meas. for Meas. i. 3. 2, may be an error for dribbling. Dribble is the frequentative of drib, which is a variant of drip. 'Like drunkardis that dribbis,' i. e. drip, slaver; Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 641. See Drip. Der. dribbl-er; also dribbl-et, formed with dimin. suffix -et. Kersey has 'dribblet (old word), a small portion, a little sum of money owing.' ¶ Not the same word as drivel.

DRIFT, that which is driven. (E.) 'The dragoon drew him awaie [departed] with drift of his wings,' i. e. driving, violent movement; Alisaunder, frag. A., ed. Skeat, 998. Formed, with suffix -t, from M. E. drifen, to drive; cf. draught from draw, flight from fly, weight from weigh, &c. + Du. drift, a drove, flock, course, current, ardour. + Icel. dríft, drípt, a snow-drift. + Swed. drift, impulse, instinct. + G. trift, a drove, herd, pasturage. See Drive. Der. drift, verb; drift-less, drift-wood. [†]

DRILL (1), to pierce, to train soldiers. (Du.) Cotgrave explains F. trappan as 'a stone-cutter's drill, wherewith he bores little holes in marble.' Ben Jonson hints at the Dutch origin of the word in the sense of 'to train soldiers.' 'He that but saw thy curious captain's drill Would think no more of Flushing or the Brill;' Underwoods, lxii, l. 29.—O. Du. drillen, 'tremere, motitare, vacillare, ultro citroque cursitare, gyrosque agere, gyrare, rotare, volvere, tornare, terebrare,' Kilian; mod. Du. drillen, to drill, bore, to turn round, shake, brandish, to drill, form to arms, to run hither and thither, to go through the manual exercise. Sewel's Dutch Dict. gives drillen, to drill, shake, brandish; met den piek drillen, to shake a pike; to exercise in the managem^t of arms. β. The orig. sense is 'to bore,' or 'to turn round and round,' whence (1) to turn men about or drill them, (2) to turn a pike about, or brandish it. It is the same word as thrill, which is the true E. form; it is characteristic of Dutch to turn orig. Low G. th into d; as in drie = E. three.—

✓TAR, to rub, to bore; on which Curtius remarks that 'it is certain, at all events, that from the meaning "rub" springs that of a "twisting movement," most clearly to be seen in the Teutonic words; i. 275. See Thrill, Trite. Der. drill, sb.

DRILL (2), to sow corn in rows. (E.) We find an old word drill used in the sense of rill. 'So does a thirsty land drink up all the dew of heaven that wets its face, and the greater shower makes no torrent, nor digs so much as a little furrow, that the drills of the water might pass into rivers, or refresh their neighbour's weariness;' Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 6 (R.) We also find the verb drill, to trickle. 'And water'd with cool rivulets, that drill'd Along the borders;' Sandys, Ecclesiastes, c. ii. β. This verb cannot be separated from trill, used in precisely the same sense; as in 'Few drops . . . adowne it trild,' i. e. trickled; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 78. In Chaucer, C. T. 13604 (Group B, 1864), Tyrwhitt prints trilled where the Ellesmere MS. has trykled; and it is clear that trill is a mere corruption of trickle. We may conclude that drill is likewise corrupted from trickle, and means 'to let corn run out of a receptacle,' the said receptacle being moved along so as to sow the corn in rows. γ. At the same time, it is highly probable that the particular application to corn was due to confusion with W. rhillio, to put in a row, to drill, from the sb. rhill, a row, a trench, a shortened form of rhigol, a groove, trench; and rhigol is a dimin. form (with suffix -ol) from rhig, a notch, groove. See Trickle, Rill.

DRILLING, a coarse cloth, used for trousers. (G., -L.) A corruption of G. drillich, ticking, huckaback. And the G. word is a corruption from Lat. trilix, stem of trilix, having or consisting of three threads. - Lat. tri-, from tres, three; and licium, a thrum, a thread.

DRINK, to suck in, swallow. (E.) M. E. drinken; Chaucer, C. T. 135. - A. S. drincan (common). + Du. drinken. + Icel. dricka (for drenka = drinka). + Swed. dricka. + Dan. drikke. + Goth. drigkan (for drinkan). + G. trinken. Der. drink-able, drink-er, drink-offering; and see drunken, drunkard, drench, drown. ¶ Drink appears to be a nasalised form from a root drak or drag, which is possibly allied to drag, to draw, from the notion of drawing in.

DRIP, to fall in drops. (Scand.) 'Dryppe or drope, gutta, stilla, cadula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 132. 'Dryppyn or droppyn, stillo, gutto;' id. 'Dryppyng or droppynge, stillacio;' id. Drip is a secondary weak verb, due to the sb. drop, and is of Scand. origin. - Dan. dryppe, to drip; from dryp, a drop; cf. Icel. dreyppa, to let drop, from draup, pt. of the strong verb drjúpa, to drip. The Dan. drop answers to Icel. dropi, a drop, with the usual change from o to y when an i follows. - Icel. drop-id, pp. of the strong verb drjúpa, to drip. + A. S. dreópan, strong vb., pp. dropen; see á-dreópan in Grein. + Du. druipe, to drip. + O. Sax. dríopan, to drip; pt. dróp. + O. H. G. triufan, G. triefen, to drip, trickle; pt. t. troff. β. The form of the European root is DRUP; Fick, iii. 155. See Drop.

DRIVE, to urge on, push forward. (E.) M. E. driuen (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 7122. - A. S. drifan, Grein, i. 206. + Du. drijven. + Icel. drifa. + Swed. drifva. + Dan. drive. + Goth. dreiban. + O. H. G. tripan, M. H. G. triben, G. treiben. β. Root unknown; the form of the base is DRIB; Fick, iii. 154. Der. drive, sb.; driver; also drif-t, q. v.; drove, q. v.

DRIVEL, to slaver, speak foolishly. (E.; from C. root.) M. E. drauelen (with u = v), later driuelen, to slaver. 'Drynken and dryuelen;' P. Plowman, B. x. 41. 'Thei don but dryuele peron;' id. x. 11; where the earlier A-text has drauele. Drauelen stands for drabbelen, a frequentative form from *draben, to dirty, formed from Irish drab, a spot, stain; see Drab (1). Cf. Platt-deutsch drabbeln, to slaver; Bremen Wörterbuch. ¶ It is easy to see that the change of form, from drael to drivel, was due to an assimilation of the word with dribble, a word of similar sense but different origin. Der. drivell-ing, drivell-er. [†]

DRIZZLE, to rain slightly. (E.) 'These tears, that drizzle from mine eyes;' Marlowe, Edw. II, Act ii. sc. 4. l. 18. The old spelling is drissel or drisel. 'Through sletie drisling day;' Drant's Horace, b. ii. Sat. 2. Drise-l means 'to fall often,' and is the frequentative of M. E. dreosen, to fall, from A. S. dreósan, to fall; see Dross. [†]

DROLL, strange, odd, causing mirth. (F., -Du., -Scand.) Shak. has drollery, Temp. iii. 3. 21; 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 156. The phr. 'to play the droll' is in Howell's Letters, b. i. s. 1. let. 18. - F. drôle, 'a boon companion, merry gird, pleasant wag;' Cot. Also cf. droler, 'to play the wag;' id.; drolerie, 'waggery, good roguery;' id. [The early use of drollery shews that we took the word from the French.] - Du. drollig, 'burlesk, odd;' Sewel. [The sb. drol, a droll fellow, is not noticed by Sewel.] Of Scand. origin. - Dan. trolld, Swed. troll, Icel. troll, a hobgoblin; a famous word in Scandinavian story, which makes continual mention of the odd pranks played by them. 'The heathen creed knew of no devil but the troll; in modern Danish, trolld includes any ghosts, goblins, imps, and puny spirits, whereas the Old Icel. troll conveys the notion of huge creatures, giants, Titans, mostly in an evil, but also in a good sense;' Cleasby and Vigfusson. Origin of the Icel. word unknown. Der. droll-ish, droll-ery. [†]

DROMEDARY, a kind of camel. (F., -L., -Gk.) In early use. M. E. dromedarie, King Alisaunder, 3407. - O. F. dromedaire, 'a dromedary;' Cot. - Low Lat. dromedarius, better spelt dromadarius; Ducange. - Lat. dromad-, stem of dromas, a dromedary; with suffix -arius. - Gk. δρομαδ-, stem of δρομαί, fast running, speedy. - Gk. δρομαί, to run; used as infin. aor. of τρέχειν, to run, but from a different root. + Skt. drām, to run; akin to drá, to run, and drū, to run. - ✓ DRA, DRAM, to run.

DRONE (1), to make a deep murmuring sound. (E.) M. E. dronen, drounen; 'he drouned as a dragon, dredefull of noyes;' Alisaunder, frag. A., ed. Skeat, l. 985. Not found in A. S., but an E. word. + Du. dreunen, to make a trembling noise; dreun, a trembling noise (Sewel). + Icel. drynja, to roar; drynr, a roaring; drunur, a thundering. + Swed. dröna, to low, bellow, drone. + Dan. dröne, to peal, rumble; drön, a rumbling noise. + Goth. drunjus, a sound, voice; Rom. x. 18. + Gk. δρῆνος, a dirge; cf. δρῆμαι, I cry aloud. + Skt. dhram, to sound; cf. dhvam, to sound. - ✓ DHRAN, to make a continuous sound, an extension of ✓ DHAR, to bear, maintain, endure; cf. Skt. dhri, to bear, maintain, endure. See below.

DRONE (2), a non-working bee. (E.) M. E. dran, drane; pl. dranes, Piers Plowman's Crede, l. 726. - A. S. drón; - A. S. Chron. an. 1127. + Dan. drone. + Swed. drönare, lit. one who makes a droning noise, from dröna, to drone. + Icel. dróni. + M. H. G. treno, a drone; cited by Fick and Curtius. + Gk. δρῶνας, a Laconian drone-bee (Hesychius). See Curtius, i. 319, 320. From the droning sound made by the insect; see Drone (1). Der. dron-ish.

DROOP, to sink, faint, fall. (Scand.) M. E. drupen, droupen; Chaucer, C. T. 107. The pres. part. drupand is in The Cursor Mundi, l. 4457. - Icel. drúpa, to droop; different from drjúpa, to drip or drop. In mod. Icel., drúpa and drjúpa are confounded. Doubtless they are from the same root. See Drop, and Drip.

DROP, sb. a small particle of liquid; verb, to let fall small particles of liquid. (E.) M. E. drope, a drop; dropien, droppen, to let drop. The sb. is in Chaucer, C. T. 131; the verb in C. T. 16048 (or 12508, ed. Wright). - A. S. drōpa, a drop; Grein, i. 207; droppian, to drop, Psalter, ed. Thorpe, xlv. 10; cf. also dreópan, to drop, drip, Grein, i. 205. + Du. drop, a drop. + Icel. dropi, a drop; dreyppa, to drop. + Swed. droppe, a drop. + Dan. draabe, sb. a drop; vb. to drop. + O. H. G. troffo, G. troffen, a drop. β. Thus the vb. is formed from the sb.; and the latter is from the pp. of A. S. dreópan. see Drip. And see droop. γ. Cf. Skt. drapsa, a drop; from ✓ DRA, to run.

DROPSY, an unnatural collection of serous fluid in the body. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt dropsie in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, bk. iii. c. 21. Short for ydropsie, a spelling found in Wyclif, Luke, xiv. 2. - O. F. hydropsie, 'the dropsie;' Cot. - Lat. hydropsis, spelt hydropsia in late Lat. (Webster). - Late Gk. *ὕδρωσις, from Gk. ὕδωρ, dropsy; a word formed from Gk. ὕδωρ, water, without any compound with ψ (Liddell and Scott). The Gk. ὕδωρ is cognate with E. water, q. v. Der. drops-ic-al.

DROSKY, a kind of carriage. (Russian.) Mere Russian. - Russ. drojki, a low four-wheeled carriage. [The j sounded as in French.] Not mentioned in the Russ. Dict. of 1844; but given by Reiff. ¶ The Russ. drojate means 'to tremble;' I do not know if there is any relation.

DROSS, dregs, scum. (E.) Properly 'what falls to the bottom;' not scum that floats on the top. M. E. dros, Ancren Riwle, p. 285. - A. S. dros, in a copy of Ælfric's Gloss. cited by Lye; cf. A. S. drosn, answering to Lat. fax, Ps. xxxix. 2, ed. Spelman. - A. S. dreósan, to fall, Grein, i. 206. + Goth. driusan, to fall. The European root is DRUS, to fall; Fick, iii. 155. Cf. Du. droesem, dregs; G. drusen, lees, dregs; G. druse, ore decayed by the weather; Dan. drysse, to fall in drops; from the same root. Der. dross-y, dross-i-ness.

DROUGHT, dryness. (E.) M. E. drogte, droughte; Chaucer, C. T. l. 2. But the proper spelling of drought should be droughth, and the M. E. droughte stands for an earlier droukthe; thus in P. Plowman, B. vi. 290, we have drought, but in the earlier text (A. vii. 275) we find droukthe. In the Ormulum, l. 8626, it is spelt druhhpe. - A. S. drugaðe, drugode, dryness; in two copies of Ælfric's Glossary (Lye). - A. S. drugian, to dry; dryge, dry; Grein, i. 207. So also Du. droogte, drought, from droogen, to dry, droog, dry. See Dry.

¶ The true form drouth or droughth occurs as late as in Spenser's Daphnaida, l. 333; and in Bacon's Nat. Hist. § 669; and perhaps is still found in prov. English. The same change from final th to final t has occurred in height, spelt highth in Milton's Paradise Lost. Der. drought-y, drought-i-ness. [†]

DROVE, a number of driven cattle, a herd. (E.) M. E. drof, droue (with u = v); 'wiþ [h]is droue of bestis;' Will. of Palerne, 181. — A. S. dráf; A. S. Chron. an. 1016. — A. S. drifan, to drive. See Drive. Der. drow-er.

DROWN, to be killed by being drenched in water; to kill by drenching in water. (E.) Orig. an intransitive or passive verb, as particularly denoted by the suffixed -n; cf. the Mæso-Goth. verbs in -nan, which are of a like character. 'Shall we give o'er and drown?' Tempest, i. 1. 42. 'Alle . . . drowned [perished] perinne;' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 372. M. E. druncien, later druncen, drunknen, and finally drounen; the spelling druncen is in the Ormulum, 15398; drunknen is in Wyclif, Isa. lxiii. 6. — A. S. druncian, Northumb. druncia, to be drowned, to sink; 'ongann druncia' = began to sink; Matt. xiv. 30 (Lindisfarne MS.). Formed, with suffix -ian, from druncen, lit. drunken, pp. of drincan, to drink. β. Similarly, we find Swed. drunkna, to be drowned, from drucken, drunken, pp. of dricka, to drink; and Dan. drukke, to be drowned, from drucken, drunken, old pp. of drikke, to drink. See Drunk. ¶ It may be added that this will appear more plainly from the Lindisfarne MS., Luke, xii. 42; where the Lat. inebriari is translated by 'druncenga vel pætte se druncenig,' i. e. to drown or that he may be drunken.

DROWSE, DROWZE, to be sluggish. (E.) Formerly drouse; Milton, P. L. xi. 131; viii. 289; whence drousie, id. II Penseroso, 83. Not found (as yet) in the Mid. Eng. period. — A. S. drúsan, drúsan, to be sluggish; 'lagu drúside' = the lake lay sluggish; Beowulf, ed. Grein, 1630. Cf. dréosan, to mourn; Grein, i. 206, which is ultimately the same as A. S. dreósan, to fall; id. β. So, too, O. H. G. trúren, to cast down the eyes, to mourn (mod. G. trauern), is related to O. H. G. trúrig, mournful, orig. dripping with blood, and to the E. dreary. See Dreary, Dross. Der. drowz-y, drowz-i-ness. [†]

DUB, to beat. (E.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 1042. He also has the sb. drubs, id. pt. iii. c. 3. l. 209. Cf. prov. E. (Kent) drab, to drub, beat; Halliwell. Corrupted from M. E. drepen, to hit, slay, kill; Havelok, 1865, 2227. — A. S. drepan, to hit, slay; Grein, i. 203; drepe, drype, a blow; id. 203, 209. + Icel. drepa, to kill, slay. + Swed. drabba, to hit; dräpa, to kill, slay. + Dan. drabe, to kill. + G. treffen, to hit. All from the European root DRAP, to strike; Fick, iii. 153. Der. drub, sb.; drubb-ing.

DRUDGE, to perform menial work. (C.) Shak. has the sb. drudge, Merch. of Ven. iii. 2. 103. M. E. druggen; Chaucer has 'to drugge and drawe'; C. T. 1416 (or 1418). From a Celtic source; preserved in Irish drugaire, a drudger, drudge, slave; and Irish drugaireachd, drudgery, slavery. ¶ It is connected (in Chaucer) with draue merely by alliteration; it is not to be referred to A. S. dragan, to drag; nor yet to A. S. dreogan, to endure, which is the Lowland Scotch drée. Der. drudge, sb.; drug-er-y.

DRUG, a medical ingredient. (F.) M. E. drogge, drugge; the pl. drogges, drugges is in Chaucer, Six-text, A. 426; where the Harl. MS. has dragges, Prol. l. 428. [But dragges and drugges cannot be the same word; the former is from O. F. dragée, discussed s. v. Dredge (2), q. v.; the latter is O. F. drogue.] — O. F. (and mod. F.) drogue, a drug; cf. Ital., Span., and Port. droga, a drug. β. Remoter origin uncertain; Diez derives it from Du. droog, dry; which seems right, because the pl. droogen, lit. dried vegetables and roots, was used in the special sense of 'drugs.' 'Droogen, gedroogde kryden en wortels, drugs;' Sewel's Du. Dict. See Dry. Der. drugg-ist; also drugg-et, q. v.

DRUGGET, a coarse woollen cloth. (F.) 'And, coarsely clad in Norwich drugget, came;' Dryden, Mac Flecknoe, l. 33. — O. F. droguet, 'a kind of stuff that's half silk, half wool'; Cot. Cf. Span. droguete, Ital. droghetta, a drugget; the latter is given in Meadows, in the Eng.-Ital. section. A dimin., with suffix -et, from F. drogue, (1) a drug; (2) trash, rubbish, stuff; see Hamilton and Legros, French Dict. See Drug.

DRUID, a priest of the ancient Britons. (C.) 'The British Druids;' Howell, Foreign Travel, ed. 1642, sect. 10. — Lat. pl. Druides; Caesar, De Bello Gallico, vi. 13. Of Celtic origin. — Irish draoi, druidh, an augur, magician; Gael. draoi, draoidh, druidh, a magician, sorcerer. + W. derwydd, a druid. Origin undetermined; the attempt to connect it with Irish and Gael. darach, darag, W. derw, dár, an oak, is by no means convincing. ¶ The A. S. drý, a magician, is from British.

DRUM, a cylindrical musical instrument. (E f) 'The drummes cry dub-a-dub;' Gascoigne, Flowers; ed. Hazlitt, vol. i. p. 83, l. 26. Perhaps not found earlier. [Chaucer uses the term naker, a kettle-drum; Kn. Ta. 1563.] It may be an English word, and of imitative origin; allied to Drone, q. v. Cf. Dan. drum, a booming sound; drumme, to boom; Icel. þruma, to rattle, thunder; cf. E. to thrum. + Du. trom, trommel, a drum; trommelen, to drum. + Dan. tromme, a drum. + G. trommel, a drum. Der. drum, verb (unless this be taken as the original); drum-head, drum-major, drum-stick. See also Thrum, Trumpet.

DRUNKARD, one addicted to drinking. (E.; with F. suffix.) In the A. V., Joel, i. 5; and in the Bible of 1551. Formed from the base drunk- of the pp. drunken, with the F. suffix -ard, of O. H. G. origin, used with an intensive force. This suffix is of the same origin with E. hard; Brachet, Etym. French Dict. introd. § 196. Cf. the phrase 'a hard drinker.' ¶ The M. E. word is dronkelew. DRUNKEN, DRUNK, inebriated. (E.) M. E. dronken, drunken; Chaucer, C. T. 1264. — A. S. druncen, pp. of drincan, to drink, but often used as an adj., Grein, i. 207; see Drink. Der. drunken-ness.

DRUPE, a fleshy fruit containing a stone. (F., — L., — Gk.) A botanical term. Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — F. drupe, a drupe, stone-fruit. — Lat. drupa, an over-ripe, wrinkled olive (Pliny). — Gk. δρῦπτα, an over-ripe olive; a contraction from, or allied to, Gk. δρῦναι, ripened on the tree; a word which is frequently varied to δρῦναι, i. e. falling from the tree. — Gk. δρῦς, a tree; and either (1) πέτραι, to cook, ripen, allied to E. cook, q. v.; or (2) πίπτειν, to fall, for which see feather. The Gk. δρῦς is cognate with Tree, q. v. Der. drup-ac-e-ous, with suffix = Lat. -aceus.

DRY, free from moisture. (E.) M. E. druze, O. Eng. Hom. i. 87, l. 12; drye, dryze, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 385 and 412; drye, Chaucer, C. T. 8775. — A. S. dryge, drige, Grein, i. 207. + Du. droog, dry. + G. trocken, dry. ¶ Cf. Goth. ga-thaursan, to become dry, to wither away, which is connected with E. thirst; similarly the word dry may be ultimately connected with drink; but it hardly seems possible to link dry with thirst directly. See Thirst. Der. dry, verb; dry-ly, dry-ness; dry-goods, dry-nurse, dry-rot, dry-salter; see also drought, dry.

DRYAD, a nymph of the woods. (L., — Gk.) Milton has Dryad, P. L. ix. 387; and the pl. Dryades, Comus, 964. — Lat. Dryad-, stem of Dryas, a Dryad. — Gk. δρῦα, stem of δρῦς, a nymph of the woods. — Gk. δρῦς, a tree; cognate with E. tree, q. v.

DUAL, consisting of two. (L.) 'This dualité . . . is found in every creature;' Test. of Love, b. ii. s. 14; ed. 1561, fol. cvi, back. — Lat. dualis, dual. — Lat. duo, two. See Two. Der. dual-ism, dual-ity.

DUB, to confer knighthood by a stroke on the shoulder. (E.) M. E. dubben, Havelok, 2042. — A. S. dubban; 'dubbede his sunu . . . to ridere,' dubbed his son knight; A. S. Chron. an. 1086. + O. Swed. dubba, to strike (Ihre). + E. Friesic dubben, to beat, slap (Koolman). ¶ A disputed word; it is sometimes said to be from O. F. dober, to beat (Cotgrave); but then, conversely, the F. adoubier is derived from A. S. dubban or from Icel. dubba, to strike; and yet again, the Icel. dubba is considered as a foreign word. It may be a mere variant of dab, formerly most often used in the sense 'to strike.' See Dab.

DUBIOUS, doubtful. (L.) In Milton, P. L. i. 104; and in Hall, Edw. IV, an. 9. — Lat. dubius, doubtful, moving in two directions; formed from Lat. duo, two. See Two. Der. dubious-ly, dubious-ness.

DUCAL, belonging to a duke. F. ducal, Cot.; see Duke. DUCAT, a coin. (F., — Ital.) 'As fine as duket in Venice;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 258. — O. F. ducat, 'the coyné termed a duket, worth vis. viii d'; Cot. — Ital. ducat, a ducat; a duchy. — Low Lat. ducatus, a duchy. β. So called because, when first coined in the duchy of Apulia (about A. D. 1140), they bore the legend 'sit tibi, Christe, datus, quem tu regis, iste ducatus.' See Duchy.

DUCHESS, the wife of a duke. (F.) Chaucer wrote The Book of the Duchesse. — O. F. ducesse, later duchesse, fem. of duc, a duke; with suffix -esse = Lat. -issa = Gk. -ισσα. See Duke.

DUCHY, a dukedom. (F.) M. E. duché; P. Plowman, C. iv. 245. — F. duché. — Low Lat. ducatus; formed with suffix -atus from duc-, stem of dux, a leader. See Duke.

DUCK (1), a bird. (E.) M. E. doke, duke; P. Plowman, B. v. 75; xvii. 62. The word duk-e means 'diver'; the final -e = A. S. -a, suffix denoting the agent, as in hunt-a, a hunter. From M. E. duken, to dive. + Dan. duk-and, a diver (bird); from duk = dukke, to dive, and and (= G. ente), a duck. + Swed. dyk-fågel, a diver (bird). See Duck (2). Der. duck-ling, with double dimin. suffix -l and -ing; cf. gos-ling.

DUCK (2), to dive, bob the head down. (E.) M. E. duken, douken; the pres. pt. doukand, diving, occurs in Alexander, frag. C., ed. Stevenson, 4091. Not found earlier. + Du. duiken, to stoop, dive. + Dan. dukke, to duck, plunge. + Swed. dyka, to dive. + G. tauchen, to dive. Der. duck (1).

DUCK (3), a pet, darling. (O. Low G. or Scand.) 'O dainty duck!' Mids. N. D. v. 286. — E. Friesic dok, dokke, a doll. + Dan. dukke, a doll, puppet. + Swed. docha, a doll, a baby. + O. H. G. tochá, M. H. G. tocke, a doll, a term of endearment to a girl. Of uncertain origin. ¶ Probably introduced from the Netherlands; cf. note to P. Plowman, C. vii. 367. This would at once account for the form doxy; for the base dok would, in Dutch, inevitably receive the very common double dimin. suffix -et-je, giving dok-et-je, which would be pronounced as doxy by an English mouth. The word occurs in E. Friesic as dokke, a doll, dokje, a small bundle (Koolman).

DUCK (4), light canvas. (Du.) Not in early use; a nautical word. — Du. doek, linen cloth, towel, canvas. + Dan. dug, cloth. + Swed. duk. + Icel. dúkr, cloth, table-cloth, towel. + G. tuch, cloth; O. H. G. tuoh, M. H. G. tuoch. Cf. Skt. dhruja, a flag, banner.

DUCT, a conduit-pipe. (L.) Still spelt ductus in 1715. 'Ductus, a leading, guiding; a conduit-pipe;' Kersey's Dict. — Lat. ductus, a leading. — Lat. ductus, pp. of ducere, to lead. See Duke; and Douche.

DUCTILE, malleable. (F., — L.) 'Soft dispositions, which ductile be;' Donne, To the Countess of Huntingdon. — F. ductile, 'easie to be hammered;' Cot. — Lat. ductilis, easily led. — Lat. ductus, pp. of ducere, to lead. See Duke. Der. ductil-i-ty.

DUDGEON (1), resentment. (C.) 'When civil dudgeon first grew high;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 1. — W. dychan, a jeer; dygen, malice, resentment; cf. dygas, hatred; dueg, melancholy, spleen. And cf. Corn. dichan, duwhan, grief, sorrow, lamentation. [+]

DUDGEON (2), the haft of a dagger. (Unknown.) 'And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood;' Macb. ii. 1. 46. See Clark and Wright, notes to Macbeth; Furness, notes to ditto. The evidence goes to shew that some daggers were called dudgeon-hafted, which Gifford explains by saying that 'the wood was gouged out in crooked channels, like what is now, and perhaps was then, called snail-creeping;' note on Jonson's Works, v. 221. The root of the box-tree was also called dudgeon, apparently because it was curiously marked; 'the root [of box] . . . is dudgin and full of work;' Holland's Pliny, b. xvi. c. 16; where the context shews the sense to be 'crisped damask-wise' or 'full of waving.' β. Since the sense clearly has reference to the markings on the handle of the dagger, we may confidently reject the proposal to connect dudgeon with G. degen, a sword, or with the E. dagger. [+]

DUE, owed as a debt. (F., — L.) M. E. dewe. 'A maner dewe dette' = a kind of debt due; P. Plowman, C. iv. 307. — O. F. deu, masc. deue, fem., 'due;' Cot.; pp. from devoir (spelt devoir in Cot.), to owe. — Lat. debere, to owe. See Debt. Der. du-ly (M. E. duelich, duly, Gower, C. A. iii. 245, 354); also du-ty, q. v.

DUEL, a combat between two. (Ital., — L.) Formerly duello, Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 337. — Ital. duello, whence also F. duel. — Lat. duellum, lit. a combat between two. — Lat. duo, two. See Two. ¶ The Lat. bellum = duellum; see Belligerent. Der. duell-er, duell-ist, duell-ing.

DUENNA, an old lady acting as guardian. (Span., — L.) It occurs in Julia's letter (in Slawkenbergius's Tale), in Sterne's Tristram Shandy. — Span. dueña, a married lady, duenna. — Lat. domina, a lady. ¶ Thus duenna is the same as donna, q. v.; or dame, q. v.

DUET, a piece of music for two. (Ital.) A musical term. — Ital. duetto; in Meadows, Eng.-Ital. part. — Ital. due, two. — Lat. duo, two. See Two. For the suffix, cf. quart-ette, quint-ette.

DUFFEL, a kind of coarse woollen cloth. (Du.) 'And let it be of duffil gray;' Wordsworth, Alice Fell. — Du. duffel, duffel. So named from Duffel, a town not far from Antwerp.

DUG, a teat. (Scand.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 3. 26. The exact original is not forthcoming, but it is clearly allied to Swed. dägga, Dan. dægge, to suckle, fondle. β. Perhaps due to the ✓DHUGH, to milk; cf. Skt. duh (= dhugh), to milk; whence also daughter, q. v.

DUGONG, a swimming mammal, sea-cow. (Malay.) Malay dúyong, a sea-cow; Marsden's Malay Dict. p. 138.

DUKE, a leader. (F., — L.) M. E. duc, duk; Layamon, l. 86. — O. F. duc. — Lat. ducem, accus. of dux, a leader (crude form duct). — Lat. ducere, to lead; cognate with E. tug, q. v. — ✓DUK, to pull, draw; Fick, i. 624. Der. duke-dom; and see duc-al, duch-ess, duch-y, duc-at, doge. From the same source we have ad-duce, con-duce, de-duce, in-duce, &c.; also duct, con-duct, de-duct, in-duct, &c.

DULCET, sweet. (F., — L.) In Shak. Mids. N. D. ii. 1. 151; and used by Cotgrave to translate O. F. doucet, of which an older spelling must have been dolcet, or dulcet; cf. O. Ital. dolcetto, somewhat sweet (Florio). Formed, with dimin. suffix -et (with force of E. -ish), from O. F. dulce, dolce, fem. of dols, sweet; see dols in Burguy. — Lat. dulcis, sweet. See Douceur; and see below.

DULCIMER, a musical instrument. (Span., — L.) In the Bible, A. V. Dan. iii. 5; and in Baret's Alvearie. [In the index to Cotgrave, the O. F. is given as doulciné; Roquefort has doulcemer, but without any hint of date. Whether the word came through the French or not, it must in either case be a corruption of the Span. form.] — Span. dulcemele, a dulcimer; so called from its sweet sound. — Lat. dulce melos, a sweet song; dulce is neut. of dulcis (see above); and melos = Gk. μέλος, for which see Melody.

[Also as a verb; 'it dulleth me;' id. 16561. In the Ancien Riwle we have 'dulle neiles,' i. e. blunt nails, as a various reading of 'dulte neiles;' see Dolt. Dul stands for an older dol, and that for dualt.] — A. S. dol, foolish, stupid; Grein, i. 194; cf. A. S. ge-dwelan, to err, ge-dweola, ge-dwild, error, folly; id. 394, 395. + Du. dol, mad; cf. dwalen, to err. + Goth. duals, foolish; whence dualitha, folly, dwalmon, to be foolish or mad. + G. toll, mad; cf. O. H. G. tualm, stupefaction. [Cf. Gk. θολερός, turbid, disturbed by passion.] — ✓DHWAR, to fell; cf. Skt. dhvri, to bend, to fell; see Benfey, p. 452; Fick, i. 121. See also Dizzy. Der. dull, verb; dul-ly, dul-ness, dull-sighted, dull-witted; also dull-ard (with suffix as in drunk-ard, q. v.); also dol-t, q. v. [+]

DUMB, silent, unable to speak. (E.) M. E. domb, dumb; Chaucer, C. T. 776 (A. 774). — A. S. dumb, mute; Grein, i. 212. + Du. dom, dull, stupid. + Icel. dumbr, dumb. + Swed. dumb. + Dan. dum, stupid. + Goth. dumbs, dumb. + O. H. G. tump, G. dumm, mute, stupid. β. The form dumb is a nasalised form of dub, which appears in Goth. daubs, deaf. See further under Deaf. Der. dumb-ly, dumb-ness; dumb-bell, dumb-show; also dumm-y (= dumb-y). [+]

DUMP, an ill-shapen piece. (E.?) 'Dump, a clumsy medal of metal cast in moist sand: East;' Halliwell. Cf. the phr. 'I don't care a dump,' i. e. a piece, bit. Cf. 'Dubby, dumpy, short and thick: West;' Halliwell. The dimin. of dump is dump-ling, q. v. β. We also find dump, to beat, strike with the feet; to dump about, to move with short steps; Jamieson. Also cf. Du. dompneus, a great nose. Perhaps connected with Icel. dumpa, to thump; Swed. dial. dumpa, to make a noise, dance awkwardly; dompa, to fall down plump, to thump. Der. dump-y. [+]

DUMPLING, a kind of pudding. (E.?) 'A Norfolk dumpling;' Massinger, A New Way to Pay, A. iii. sc. 2. A dumpling is properly a small solid ball of pudding; a dimin. of dump, with double dimin. suffix -ling (= -l + -ing). See Dump.

DUMPS, melancholy, sadness. (Scand.) 'As one in doleful dumps;' Chevy Chase, later version, l. 198. The sing. is dump, somewhat rare. 'He's in a deep dump now;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Humorous Lieut. A. iv. sc. 6. The most closely allied word is Swed. dial. dumpin, melancholy (Rietz); which is formed as a pp. from Swed. dial. dimba, to steam, reek; cf. Dan. dump, dull, low. β. Further allied to G. dumpf, damp, Du. dompig, damp, hazy, misty, Du. dampen, to quench, extinguish, and to E. damp. Cf. the phr. 'to damp one's spirits.' See Damp. Der. dump-ish, dump-ish-ly, dump-ish-ness. [+]

DUN (1), of a dull brown colour. (C.) 'Dunne of hewe;' Rom. of Rose, 1213. — A. S. dunn, dark; whence dunnian, to be darkened; Alfred's Boeth. lib. i. met. 5. — Irish and Gael. donn, brown. + W. dun, dun, dusky, swarthy. ¶ Hence, I suppose, the river-name Don. Perhaps further related also to G. dunkel, Du. donker, dark, dim. [+]

DUN (2), to urge for payment. (Scand.) 'I shall be dunning thee every day;' Lord Bacon, Apophthegms, no. 288. Cf. M. E. dunning, a loud noise, Prompt. Parv. p. 135. — Icel. duna, to thunder, make a hollow noise; dynja, to rattle, make a din; koma einum dyn fyrir dyrr, to make a din before one's door, take one by surprise. + Swed. däna, to make a noise, to ring. β. These words are cognate with A. S. dýnnan, to make a din; and dun is thus a doublet of din. See Din. Der. dun, sb.

DUNCE, a stupid person. (Geographical.) A proper name; originally in the phrase 'a Duns man.' 'A Duns man;' Tyndall, Works, p. 88; 'a great Duns man, so great a preacher;' Barnes, Works, p. 232; cf. p. 272. The word was introduced by the Thomists, or disciples of Thomas Aquinas, in ridicule of the Scotists, or disciples of John Duns Scotus, schoolman, died A. D. 1308. The Scotch claim him as a native of Dunse, in Berwickshire; others derive his name from Dunston, not far from Alnwick, Northumberland. Either way, Duns is the name of a place, and the word is English. ¶ Not to be confused with John Scotus Erigena, died A. D. 875.

DUNE, a low sand-hill. (C.) M. E. dune, A. S. dūn; an older form of dun, a hill, and a doublet of it. See Down (2).

DUNG, excrement. (E.) M. E. dung, dong; Chaucer, C. T. 15024. — A. S. dung (dat. dunge), Luke, xiii. 8 (Hatton MS.); the older MSS. have meose. + O. Fries. dung. + Swed. dynga, muck. + Dan. dyng, a heap, hoard, mass; cf. dyng, to heap, to amass. + G. dung, dünger. β. Remoter origin unknown; perhaps related to Ding, to cast, throw down, q. v. Der. dung, vb., dung-cart, dung-heap, dung-hill; also ding-y, q. v.

DUNGEON, a keep-tower, prison. (F., — L.) The same word as donjon, a keep-tower of a castle. 'Which of the castle was the chief dongeon;' Chaucer, C. T. 1059; cf. P. Plowman, B. prol. 15. — O. F. donjon, the keep-tower or chief tower of a castle; Prov. domphon (Brachet). — Low Lat. domnionem, acc. of dominio, a donjon-tower; cf. Low Lat. dujio, dungo, the same. Contracted from Low Lat.

dominionem, acc. of dominio, the same as dominium, a principal possession, domain, dominion; so called because the chief tower. See further under Dominion, Domain.

DUODECIMO, a name applied to a book in sheets of 12 leaves. (L.) 'Duodecimo; a book is said to be in duodecimo, or in twelves, when it consists of 12 leaves in a sheet;' Kersey, ed. 1715. — Lat. duodecimo, abl. case of duodecimus, twelfth. — Lat. duodecim, twelve. — Lat. duo, two; and decem, ten. See Two and Ten. From same source, duodecim-al; duodecennial (see decennial); and see below.

DUODENUM, the first of the small intestines. (L.) 'Duodenum, the first of the thin guts, about 12 fingers-breadth long;' Kersey, ed. 1715. A late Lat. anatomical word, formed from Lat. duodeni, twelve apiece, a distributive form of duodecim, twelve. So named from its length. See above.

DUP, to undo a door. (E.) In Hamlet, iv. 5. 53. Lit. to do up, i. e. lift up the latch; and contracted from do up. See Don, Doff.

DUPÉ, a person easily deceived. (F.) A late word. In Pope, Dunciad, iv. 502. — F. dupé, a dupe. Origin uncertain. Webster and Littré say that it is the same as the O. F. name for a hoopoe, because the bird is easily caught. Cotgrave has: 'Dupe, f. a whoop, or hooper; a bird that hath on her head a green crest, or tuft of feathers, and loves ordure so well, that she nestles in it.' This word dupe is probably (like hoopoe) onomatopoeic, and imitative of the bird's cry. ¶ Cf. Bret. kouperik, (1) a hoopoe, (2) a dupe. We have similar ideas in gull, goose, and booby. Der. dupe, verb.

DUPLICATE, double, two-fold. (L.) 'Though the number were duplicate;' Hall, Hen. VII. an. 5. — Lat. duplicatus, pp. of duplicare, to double. — Lat. duplic-, stem of duplex, twofold. — Lat. du- = duo, two; and plicare, to fold. See Complex.

DUPLICITY, falsehood. (F., — L.) Lit. doubleness. 'No false duplicity;' Craft of Louers, st. 22; in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 341, back. — O. F. duplicite (not recorded, but a correct form). — Lat. acc. duplicitem, from nom. duplicitas, doubleness. — Lat. duplici-, crude form of duplex, twofold. See above.

DURANCE, captivity. (F., — L.) Fabyan has durance in the sense of 'endurance,' vol. i. c. 105. The sense 'imprisonment,' common in Shak. (Meas. iii. 1. 67, &c.), comes from that of long suffering or long endurance of hardship. Cotgrave explains durer by 'to dure, last, continue, endure, abide, remaine, persist; also to susteine, brook, suffer.' An O. F. durance does not appear; the suffix -ance is added by analogy with words like defiance, from O. F. desfiance. See Dure, Duress.

DURATION, length of time. (L.) A coined word; in Kersey, ed. 1715. — Lat. duratus, pp. of durare, to last. See Dure.

DURBAR, a hall of audience. (Pers.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 103. A Hindustani word, but borrowed from Persian. — Pers. dar-bâr, a prince's court, levee; Palmer's Dict. col. 255. Lit. 'door of admittance.' — Pers. dar, a door (= E. door), and bâr, admittance; id. col. 63. ¶ The word bâr alone is also sometimes used in the sense of court, congress, or tribunal; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 230.

DURE, to last, endure. (F., — L.) Once in common use, now nearly obsolete. M. E. duren, King Alisaunder, 3276. — O. F. (and mod. F.) durer, 'to dure, last;' Cot. — Lat. durare, to last. — Lat. durus, hard, lasting. + Irish dur, dull, hard, stupid, obstinate, firm, strong; Gael. dúr, the same. + W. dir, certain, sure, of force. Cf. Gk. duravus, force. Der. dur-ing (orig. pres. pt. of dure), dur-able, dur-able-y, dur-able-ness, dur-abil-i-ty; and see duration, duress, duress; and cf. dynamic.

DUSK, dull, dark, dim. (E.) 'Duskede his yē two;' Chaucer, C. T. 2808. M. E. dose, dark, dim; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 259, l. 16. Also deose; 'This word is deose' = this is a dark saying; Ancr. Riwe, p. 148. Not found in A. S., yet deosc is, strictly, an older form than A. S. deore, whence the mod. E. dark; see Dark. Cf. Swed. dial. duska, to drizzle; dusk, a slight shower; duskug, misty (Rietz). Der. dusk, sb., dusk-y, dusk-i-ness, dusk-i-ly.

DUST, fine powder. (E.) M. E. dust, Ancr. Riwe, p. 122. — A. S. dust, Grein, i. 212. + Du. duist, meal-dust. + Icel. dust, dust. + Dan. dyst, fine flour, meal. Closely allied words are also Swed. and Dan. dunst, steam, vapour, Goth. dauns, odour, O. H. G. tunst, G. dunst, vapour, fine dust, Lat. fumus, Skt. dhūma, smoke, Skt. dhūti, dust; shewing that dust and fume are co-radicate. — DHU, to shake, blow; cf. Skt. dhū, to shake, remove, blow, shake off. See Fume. Der. dust-er, dust-y, dust-i-ness.

DUTCH, belonging to Holland. (G.) Applied in old authors to the Germans rather than to the Dutch, who were called Hollanders; see Trench, Select Glossary. However, Shak. has it in the usual sense; All's Well, iv. i. 78. — G. Deutsch, lit. belonging to the people; M. H. G. diut-isk. Here the suffix -isk = E. -ish, and the base diut is cognate with Goth. thiuda, A. S. þeód, a people, nation. From the same base, written tiut, was formed the Latinised word Teutones, whence E. Teutonic. — ✓ TU, to be strong; cf. Skt. tu, to be strong; see Curtius, i. 278; Benfey, p. 366.

DUTY, obligatory service. (F., — L.) Chaucer has duetes in the sense of 'due debt;' C. T. 6934; cf. Gower, C. A. iii. 124, 177. The word appears to be a mere coinage, there being no corresponding form in French; formed by analogy with words in -ty from the O. F. deu, due. See Due. ¶ The F. word for duty is devoir (Span. deber, Ital. dovere), i. e. the infin. mood used as a sb.; hence M. E. devoir, deuer (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 2600. Der. dute-ous, -ly, -ness; duti-ful, -ly, -ness. [†]

DWALE, deadly nightshade. (E.) So called because it causes stupefaction or dulness. M. E. dwale, P. Plowman C. xxiii. 379; on which see my note. — A. S. dwala, an error; hence, stupefaction; cf. Dan. dwale, a trance, torpor, stupor, dwale-drik, a soporific, dwale-drink. See further under Dull, and see Dwell.

DWARF, a small deformed man. (E.) The final f is a substitution for a final guttural sound, written g or gh; in Will. of Palerne, l. 362, we have the form dwergh. The pl. dwerghes in Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 205. — A. S. dweorg, dwegr, dweorh, a dwarf; all authorised by Lye. + Du. dwergr. + Icel. dvergr. + Swed. and Dan. dverg. + M. H. G. tuere (also querch), G. zwerg. Cf. Skt. (Vedic) dhvaras, a (female) evil spirit or fairy, cited by Fick (i. 121) from Roth. — ✓ DHWAR, to rush, fell, bend; Skt. dhvri; whence also dull, dwelle, dwale. ¶ The evidence tends to shew that the original sense of dwarf is not 'bent,' but 'one who rushes forth,' or 'furious;' cf. Zend. dvar, to rush forward, said of evil spirits; cf. Gk. thúpos, raging, θύωνειν, to spring, rage, Lat. furere, to rage; see Curtius, i. 317, 318. The A. S. dwellan, to hinder, is also suggestive. Der. dwarf-ish, dwarf-ish-ness.

DWELL, to delay, linger, abide. (E.) M. E. dwellen, to delay, linger; Chaucer, C. T. 2356; to which are allied M. E. dwelen, to be torpid, and dwelien, to err; see Stratmann. — A. S. dwellan (only used in the active sense), to retard, cause to delay, also, to seduce, lead astray, Grein, i. 213, 394; to which are allied gedwelan, to err, gedwelan, to lead astray. The peculiar modern use is Scandinavian. [The orig. sense is to mislead, cause to err, whence the intransitive sense of to err, to wander aimlessly, linger, dwell.] — A. S. dwal, only found in the contracted form dol, dull, stupid, torpid; but certified by the derivative duala, error, in the Northumb. version of S. Matt. xxiv. 24, and by the Goth. dwals, foolish. See Dull. + Du. dwalen, to err; cf. dwaaltuin (lit. dwale-town), a labyrinth, dwaallicht (dwale-light), a will-of-the-wisp. + Icel. dvelja, to dwell, delay, tarry, abide; orig. to hinder; cf. dwöl, a short stay. + Swed. dväljas, to dwell, lit. to delay oneself. + Dan. dwale, to linger; cf. dwale, a trance. + O. H. G. twaljan, M. H. G. twellen, to hinder, delay. See Dwale. — ✓ DHWAR, to fell, bend, mislead; cf. Skt. dhvri, to fell, bend. Der. dwell-er, dwell-ing.

DWINDLE, to waste away. (E.) In Shak. Macb. i. 3. 23. The suffix -le is a somewhat late addition, and has rather a diminutive than the usual frequentative force. The d is excrement, as common after n; cf. sound from M. E. soun. M. E. dwinen; Rom. of the Rose, 360; Gower, C. A. ii. 117. — A. S. dwīnan, to dwindle, languish; Bosworth. + Icel. dwina, dwina, dwena; Swed. twina, to dwindle, pine away. Remoter origin unknown. Cf. Skt. dhvams, to fall to pieces, perish.

DYE, to colour. (E.) M. E. deyen, dyen; Chaucer, C. T. 11037. Chaucer also has deyer, dyer, a dyer, C. T. prol. 364. The sb. deh, dye, colour, hue, occurs in O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 193, l. 20. — A. S. deagian, to dye; deág, deáh, dye, colour; all authorised forms (Lye). Remoter origin unknown. Der. dye, sb.; dy-er, dye-ing, dye-stuffs. [†]

DYKE, a ditch, bank; see Dike.

DYNAMIC, relating to force. (Gk.) 'Dynamics, the science of mechanical powers;' Todd. — Gk. δυναμικός, powerful. — Gk. δύναμις, power. — Gk. δύναμις, I am strong. Cf. Lat. durus, hard, lasting; see Dure. Der. dynamic-s, dynamic-al-y, dynamic-meter (i. e. measurer of force, from metre, q. v.); and see below.

DYNASTY, lordship, dominion. (Gk.) Applied to the continued lordship of a race of rulers. 'The account of the dynasties;' Raleigh, Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 2. s. 2 (R.). — Gk. δυναστεία, lordship. — Gk. δυναστής, a lord; cf. δυνατός, strong, able. — Gk. δύναμις, I am strong; see above.

DYSENTERY, a disease of the entrails. (L., — Gk.) 'The dysentery or bloody flux;' Holland's Pliny, b. xxviii. c. 9. — Lat. dysenteria (Pliny). — Gk. δυσεντερία, a bowel-complaint. — Gk. δυσ-, prefix, with a bad sense (like E. mis-), and έντερον, pl. έντερα, the bowels. — Gk. έντός (= Lat. intus), within. — Gk. έν (= Lat. in), in. ¶ The prefix δυσ- is cognate with Skt. du-, dur-, Irish do-, Goth.

tus-, tuz-, Icel. tor-, O. H. G. zur-, G. zer-; and is preserved in E. in A. S. tl-, whence to-brake = brake in pieces, Judges, ix. 53, commonly misprinted to brake.

EACH, every one. (E.) M. E. eche, ech; Chaucer, C. T. 793; older form elch, Layamon, 9921. -A. S. alc, each, Grein, i. 56; also written elc, yle; cf. Lowland Sc. ilk. 1. Written as alc by Grein, and considered by him and Koch to stand for eal + lic, i. e. all-like. 2. Also written by some editors as alc, and considered as standing for á + lic or á + ge + lic, i. e. aye-like or ever-like. The latter is more likely. + Du. elk, each. + O. H. G. egalih; M. H. G. ieglich, G. jeglich. See AYE. ¶ Not to be confused with A. S. æg-hwile, every, which = á + ge + hwy + lic; March, A. S. Gram. art. 136.

EAGER, sharp, keen, desirous. (F., -L.) M. E. egre, Chaucer, C. T. 9075; Rob. of Glouc. p. 80. -O. F. eigre, aigre, keen. -Lat. acer, acc. of acer, keen. -✓ AK, to pierce, sharpen. See ACRID. Der. eagerly, eager-ness; also vin-egar, q. v.

EAGLE, a large bird. (F., -L.) M. E. egle, Chaucer, C. T. 10437. -O. F. aigle, 'an eagle'; Cot. -Lat. aquila, an eagle; so called from its dark brown colour, aquila being the fem. of aquilus, dark-coloured, brown; cf. Lith. aklas, blind. -✓ AK, to be dark, Fick, i. 474; whence also Lat. aquilo, the cloudy or stormy wind. Der. eagle-et.

EAGRE, a tidal wave or 'bore' in a river. (E.) 'But like an eagle rode in triumph o'er the tide;' Dryden, Threnod. August. 135. A. S. égar, édgor-, in comp. égar-stream, édgor-stream, ocean-stream; Grein, i. 233, 255. + Icel. agir, ocean.

EAR (1), the organ of hearing. (E.) M. E. ere, Chaucer, C. T. 6218. -A. S. éare, Grein, i. 255. + Du. oor. + Icel. eyra. + Swed. öra. + Dan. øre. + G. ohr; M. H. G. öre; O. H. G. óra. + Goth. auso. + Lat. auris. + Gk. oús. + Russ. ucho. -✓ AW, to be pleased with, pay attention to; cf. Skt. av, to be pleased, take care (Vedic); Gk. áw, I hear, perceive; Lat. audire, to hear. See Curtius, i. 482; Fick, i. 501. Der. ear-ed, ear-ache, ear-ring, ear-shot, &c.; also earwig, q. v. And from the same root, auricular, q. v.; auscultation, q. v.

EAR (2), a spike, or head, of corn. (E.) M. E. er; the dat. ere occurs in King Alisaunder, 797; see ear in Stratmann. -A. S. ear, pl. ears of corn; Northumb. ehar, an ear, pl. ehera; Matt. xii. 1. + Du. aar. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. ær (= aks). + Goth. ahs. + O. H. G. ahir; M. H. G. ehar; G. ähre. β. The syllable ah- in Goth. ahs is identical with the same in Goth. ah-ana, chaff, and cognate with ac- in Lat. acus, a needle. -✓ AK, to pierce. See AWN, AGLET.

EAR (3), to plough. (E.) In Deut. xxi. 4; 1 Sam. viii. 12; Is. xxx. 24. M. E. erien, P. Plowman, B. vi. 4, 5; also eren, Chaucer, C. T. 888. -A. S. erian, erigan, to plough, Grein, i. 219. + Icel. erja. + M. H. G. eren, ern. + Goth. arjan. + Irish araim, I plough. + Lat. arare. + Gk. árhoi, I plough. -✓ AR, to plough. ¶ In its application to ploughing the ✓ AR (always retaining too its vowel a) is proper to all the European languages, as distinguished from the Oriental; Curtius, i. 426; q. v. Der. ear-ing.

EARL, the Eng. equivalent of count. (E.) M. E. erl, Chaucer, C. T. 6739. -A. S. eorl, a warrior, hero; Grein, i. 260. + Icel. jarl, older form earl, a warrior, hero; also, as a title. + O. Sax. erl, a man. β. Perhaps related to Gk. ἀρχή, male; Fick, iii. 26. γ. Or contracted from A. S. ealdor, an elder; Max Müller, Lectures, 8th ed. ii. 280. Der. earl-dom, from M. E. eorldom, Layamon, 11560; where the suffix is the A. S. dōm (= E. doom).

EARLY, in good time. (E.) M. E. erly, adv. Chaucer, C. T. 33; earlich, adj. Ancren Riwe, p. 258. -A. S. derlice, adv.; not much used, as the simple form er was used instead. The Northumb. adv. arlice occurs in Mark, xvi. 2. -A. S. er, adv. sooner (Grein, i. 69), and lic, like; so that early = ere-like. See ERÉ. Der. earli-ness. ¶ It appears that the word was originally in use only as an adverb.

EARN, to gain by labour. (E.) M. E. eruien, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 7. l. 28. -A. S. earnian, Grein, i. 249. + O. H. G. and M. H. G. arnén, arnón, G. ernuten, to reap; derived from O. H. G. and M. H. G. arin, aren, arn (G. ernute), harvest. 1. The ending -ian of the A. S. verb shews that it is a secondary verb, derived from a sb. 2. This sb. is preserved in O. H. G. erin and in Goth. asans, harvest, whence also Goth. asneis (= A. S. esne), a hireling, labourer, lit. harvest-man. Cf. Russ. oséne, harvest, autumn. 3. As the form of the root is AS, it has nothing to do with A. S. erian, to plough. Der. earn-ings.

EARNEST (1), eagerness, seriousness. (E.) Chiefly in the phrase 'in earnest.' Now frequently used as an adj., but the M. E. erdest is a sb.; see Chaucer, C. T. 1127, 1128, 3186. -A. S. eornest, sb., earnestness; Grein, i. 261; also eorneste, adj. and adv. id. 262. + Du. ernst, earnestness, zeal. + O. H. G. ernust, M. H. G. ernest, G. ernst, sb., seriousness. -From a base ARN-, seen in Icel. ern, brisk, vigorous; and this from ✓ AR, to raise, excite; cf. Gk. ἐρρύμναι, to excite. See Curtius, i. 432; Fick, i. 493, iii. 21. Der. earnest, adj., earnest-ly, earnest-ness.

EARNEST (2), a pledge, security. (C.) See 2 Cor. i. 22; v. 5; Eph. i. 14. [The t is excrement, as commonly after s; cf. whils-t, amongs-t from M. E. whiles, amonges.] M. E. ernes, ernes; Wyclif, 2 Cor. i. 22; v. 5; Eph. i. 14. [Cf. Prov. Eng. arles-penny, an earnest-penny, where arles = arnes = ernes; Ray.] -W. ernes, an earnest, pledge; also ern, a pledge, erno, to give a pledge. + Gael. earlas, an earnest, earnest-penny; whence Prov. E. arles. ¶ Origin unknown; the resemblance to Gk. ἀρραβών, earnest-money, may be accidental, since this word is modified from Hebrew. If the connection be real, then W. ernes, Gael. earlas, and (the alleged) Gael. arra = Lat. arrha (O. F. arrhes, Cot.), a pledge, are all various modifications of the Eastern word, viz. Heb. ʿarabôn, a pledge, Gen. xxxviii. 17. This word was introduced by the Phoenicians into both Greece and Italy.

EARTH, soil, dry land. (E.) M. E. eorþe, erþe, erthe; Layamon, 27817; P. Plowman, B. vii. 2. -A. S. eorðe, Grein, i. 258. + Du. aarde. + Icel. jörð. + Dan. and Swed. jord. + Goth. airtha. + G. erde. β. Allied to Gk. ἐρα, the earth. 'Whether ἐρα, earth (cp. Goth. airtha) is connected with ἀράω, I plough, is doubtful;' Curtius, i. 426. See EAR (3), though the connection is not clearly made out. See Max Müller, Lectures, 8th ed. i. 294. Der. earth, verb, earth-born, earth-en (M. E. erthen, eorthen, Ancren Riwe, p. 388), earth-ling, earth-ly, earth-li-ness, earth-y; also earth-quake, earth-work, &c.

EARWIG, the name of an insect. (E.) So called because supposed to creep into the ear. -A. S. eor-wiega; used to translate 'blatta' in Ælfric's Gloss. ed. Sommer, p. 60. The A. S. wieg commonly means 'a horse'; Grein, ii. 689 (cf. Icel. vigg, a horse); from uegan, to carry, cognate with Lat. uehere; see VEHICLE. ¶ There is no authority for giving wiega the sense of 'insect,' beyond its occurrence in this compound. See EAR (1). [†]

EASE, quietness, rest. (F.) M. E. ese, eise; Rob. of Glouc. p. 42; Ancren Riwe, p. 108. -O. F. aise, ease; the same word as Ital. agio, Port. azot. Origin unknown; perhaps Celtic; cf. Gael. adhais, leisure, ease; see Diez. Der. ease, verb, ease-y, ease-i-ly, ease-i-ness; also ease-ment, in Udal, on S. James, c. 5; also dis-ease, q. v.; ad-gio. [†]

EASEL, a support for pictures while being painted. (Du.) 'Easel, a wooden frame, upon which a painter sets his cloth;' Kersey, ed. 1715. -Du. ezel, lit. a little ass, an ass. 'Easel, die Ezel der Schilders,' i. e. the painter's easel; Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict. 1754. + G. esel, an ass, easel. These are diminutives, with suffix -el, from the stem as-, an ass; see ASS. ¶ The word is far more likely to have been borrowed from Holland than Germany.

EAST, the quarter of sun-rise. (E.) M. E. est, Chaucer, C. T. 4913. -A. S. éast, adv. in the east, Grein, i. 255; common in compounds, as in Eást-Sexa = East Saxons, men of Essex; A. S. Chron. A. D. 449; cf. éastan, from the east, éasterne, eastern, éástre-ward, eastward. + Du. oost, sb. + Icel. austr. + Dan. öst. + Swed. östan. + M. H. G. östen, G. osten, the east; G. ost, east. + Lat. aurora (= aus-osa), east, dawn. + Gk. ἥως, ἥολ. ἥως, Att. ἥω, dawn. + Skt. ushas, dawn. -✓ US, to shine, burn; whence Lat. urere, Skt. ush, to burn. ¶ 1. The root US is from an older WAS; cf. Skt. was, to shine. 2. The A. S. éastan stands for aus-tana, where -tana is a suffix, and aus- is the base. See Fick, i. 512; iii. 7, 8. Der. east-er-ly, east-er-n, east-ward; also Es-sex (= East-Saxon); also sterling (= east-er-ling), q. v.; also East-er, q. v.

EASTER, a Christian festival. (E.) M. E. ester; whence ester-dei, Easter day, Ancren Riwe, p. 412. -A. S. éastor (only in comp.), Grein, i. 256; pl. éastro, éástron, the Easter festival; Matt. xxvi. 2; Mark, xiv. 1. -A. S. Éastre, Eóstre, the name of a goddess whose festivities were in April, whence April was called Eáster-mónað, Easter-month; Bede, De Temporum Ratione. β. The name Eástre is to be referred to the same root as east, viz. to ✓ US, to shine; with reference to the increasing light and warmth of the spring-season. See EAST.

EAT, to devour. (E.) M. E. eten, Chaucer, C. T. 4349. -A. S. etan, Grein, i. 228. + Du. eten. + Icel. eta. + Swed. äta. + Dan. æde. + Goth. itan. + O. H. G. ezzan, ezan; M. H. G. ezzen; G. essen. + Ir. and Gael. ith; W. ysu. + Lat. eders. + Gk. ἐθειν. + Skt. ad-

EAVES, the clipt edge of a thatched roof. (E.) A sing. sb.; the pl. should be eaveses. M. E. euse (u=v); pl. euseses, which occurs in P. Plowman, B. xvii. 227.—A. S. efese, a clipt edge of thatch, eaves, in the Lambeth Psalter, Ps. ci. 8 (Lye); whence the verb efesian, to clip, shave, shear, in Levit. xix. 27. + Icel. ups, eaves. + Swed. dial. uffs, eaves (Rietz). + Goth. ubizwa, a porch; John, x. 23. + O. H. G. opasa, M. H. G. obse, a porch, hall; also, eaves. [The sense 'porch' is due to the projection of the eaves, forming a cover.]

β. The derivation is from the Germanic preposition UF, appearing in Goth. uf, under, beneath; O. H. G. opa, oba, M. H. G. obe, G. oben, above (cf. G. ob-dach, a shelter); cf. Lat. sub, under, super, over. See Over.

¶ The orig. sense was 'cover,' or 'shelter.' Der. eaves-dropp-er, one who stands under the drippings from the eaves, hence, a secret listener; Rich. III. v. 3. 221; Blackstone, Comment. b. iv. c. 13 (R.). Cf. Swed. dial. uffsa-drup, droppings from the eaves (Rietz); Icel. upsar-dropi. [†]

EBB, the reflux of the tide. (E.) M. E. ebbe, Chaucer, C. T. 10573.—A. S. ebba, ebb; Ælfred's Boethius, lib. ii. met. 8. Cf. A. S. ebban, to ebb; A. S. Chron. an. 897. + Du. eb, ebbe, sb.; ebben, vb. + Dan. ebbe, sb. and vb. + Swed. ebb, sb.; ebba, vb. ¶ From the same root as even, q. v. Der. ebb-tide.

EBONY, a hard wood. (F.,—L.,—Gk.,—Heb.) In Shak. L. L. iv. 3. 247. Spelt ebene in Holland's Pliny, b. xii. c. 4. [The adj. ebon is in Milton, L'All. 8; spelt heben, Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 37.]—O. F. ebene, 'the black wood, called heben or ibonie'; Cot. Lat. hebenus, hebenum, ebenus, ebenum.—Gk. έβενος; also ιβένη.—Heb. hobnim, pl. ebony wood; Ezek. xxvii. 15. So called from its hard nature; from Heb. eben, a stone. Der. ebon, adj. [†]

EBRIETY, drunkenness. (F.,—L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6, part 7; bk. v. c. 23, part 16.—F. ebriété, 'drunkenness'; Cot.—Lat. acc. ebrietatem, from nom. ebrietas.—Lat. ebrius, drunken, of obscure origin. Der. from same source, in-ebriate.

EBULLITION, a boiling. (F.,—L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 7, § 5.—O. F. ebullition, 'an ebullition, boiling'; Cot.—Lat. ebullitionem, acc. of ebullitio; a coined word, from ebullitus, pp. of ebullire, to bubble up.—Lat. e, out; and bullire, to bubble, boil. See Boil. Der. From same verb, ebulli-ent, Young, Nt. Thoughts, viii. l. 98 from end.

ECCENTRIC, departing from the centre, odd. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Holland's Pliny, b. ii. c. 15; Milton, P. L. iii. 575.—O. F. eccentrique, 'out of the center; fol. eccentricus, an unruly or irregular cocomb'; Cot.—Late Lat. eccentricus, coined from Low Lat. eccentros, eccentric.—Gk. έκκεντρος, out of the centre.—Gk. έκ, out; and κέντρον, centre. See Centre. Der. eccentric, sb., eccentric-al, eccentric-al-ly, eccentric-i-ty.

ECCLESIASTIC, belonging to the church. (L.,—Gk.) Chaucer has ecclesiast, sb., C. T. 1710, 15335. Selden, on Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 1, and 8, has both ecclesiastic and ecclesiastical (R.).—Low Lat. ecclesiasticus.—Gk. εκκλησιαστικός, belonging to the εκκλησία, i. e. assembly, church.—Gk. έκκλητος, summoned.—Gk. έκκαλέω, I call forth, summon.—Gk. έκ, out; and καλέω, I call. See Claim. Der. ecclesiast-ic-al.

ECHO, a repeated sound. (L.,—Gk.) M. E. ecco, Chaucer, C. T. 9065.—Lat. echo.—Gk. ήχo, a sound, echo; cf. ήχος, ήχη, a ringing in the ears, noise. Allied to Skt. vāg, vās, to cry, howl; Lat. uox, a voice. See Voice. Der. echo, verb; also cat-ech-ise, q. v.

ECLAIRCISSEMENT, a clearing up. (F.,—L.) Modern. —F. éclaircissement, a clearing up.—F. éclaircir, to clear up.—F. é, O. F. es.—Lat. ex; and clair, clear, from Lat. clarus. See Clear.

ECLAT, a striking effect, applause. (F.,—O. H. G.) Modern. —F. éclat, splendour; lit. a bursting out.—F. éclater, to burst forth; O. F. esclater, to shine; s'esclater, to burst; Cot.—O. H. G. schleizan (given by Littré); allied to the O. H. G. schlīzan, slīzan, to slit, split, burst; whence G. schleissen, cognate with E. slit. See Slit. [†]

ECCLECTIC, lit. choosing out. (Gk.) 'Horace, who is . . . sometimes a Stoic, sometimes an Eclectic'; Dryden, Discourse on Satire; Poet. Works, ed. 1851, p. 374.—Gk. εκλεκτικός, selecting; an Eclectic.—Gk. εκλέγειν, to select.—Gk. έκ, out; and λέγειν, to choose. Der. eclectic-al-ly, eclectic-ism; see Eclogue.

ECLIPSE, a darkening of sun or moon. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. eclipse, often written clips; P. Plowman, C. xxi. 140, and footnote.—O. F. eclipse, 'an eclipse'; Cot.—Lat. eclipsis.—Gk. έκλειψις, a failure, esp. of light of sun.—Gk. εκλείπειν, to leave out, quit, suffer eclipse.—Gk. έκ, out; and λείπειν, to leave. F. element; Cot. — Lat. elementum, a first principle. Perhaps formed, like alimentum, from alere, to nourish. See Aliment. Der. element-al, element-ary.

ELEPHANT, the largest quadruped. (F., — L., — Gk., — Heb.) M. E. olifaunt, King Alisaunder, 5293; later elephant. [The A. S. form olifand was used to mean 'a camel;' Mark, i. 6.] — O. F. olifant (Roquefort); also elephant; Cot. — Lat. elephantem, acc. of elephas. — Gk. ἐλέφαντα, acc. of ἐλέphas. — Heb. eleph, aleph, an ox; see Alphabet. Der. elephant-ine. [†]

ELEVATE, to raise up. (L.) In Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Helth, b. ii (R.). — Lat. elevatus, pp. of elevare, to lift up. — Lat. e, out, up; and levare; to make light, lift. — Lat. levis, light. See Levity. Der. elevation, elevat-or.

ELEVEN, ten and one. (E.) M. E. enleuen (with u = v), Layamon, 23364. — A. S. endlufon, Gen. xxxii. 22; where the d is excrement, and en = án, one; also the -on is a dat. pl. suffix; hence the base is án-luf or án-lif. + Du. elf. + Icel. ellifu, later ellefu. + Dan. elleve. + Swed. elfva. + Goth. ainlif. + O. H. G. einlif, G. elf, elf. B. The Teutonic form best appears in the Goth. ain-lif. 1. Here ain = A. S. án = one. 2. The suffix -lif is plainly parallel to the suffix -lika in Lithuanian vėnolika, eleven, Fick, ii. 292. And it is probable that lika signifies 'remaining' or 'left over.' Cf. Icel. lífa, to remain; and see the Errata. Der. eleven-ih. [†]

alf, Grein, i. 56. + Icel. álfr. + Dan. alf. + Swed. alf. + O. H. G. alp, G. elf. Cf. Skt. ribhu, the name of a certain kind of deity (Curtius, i. 364), derived from √ RABH, to be vehement, whence also E. labour. Der. elfin, adj. (= elf-en), Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 71; elfin, sb. (= elf-en, dimin. of elf), only in late use; elf-ish, M. E. elvish, Chaucer, C. T. 16219; elf-look. ¶ Probably elfin, sb. is merely a peculiar use of elfin, adj.; and this again stands for elf-en, with adj. suffix -en, as in gold-en. [†]

ELICIT, to draw out, coax out. (L.) Orig. a pp. 'Elicite, drawn out or allured;' Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. — Lat. elicitus, pp. of elicer, to draw out. — Lat. e, out; and lacere, to entice. See Lace.

ELIDE, to strike out. (L.) 'The strength of their arguments is elided;' Hooker, Eccl. Polity, b. iv. s. 4. — Lat. elidere, to strike out. — Lat. e, out; and lacere, to dash, hurt. See Lesion. Der. elision, q. v., from pp. elidus.

ELIGIBLE, fit to be chosen. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. eligible, 'eligible, to be elected;' Cot. — Low Lat. eligibilis; formed with suffix -ibilis from eligere, to choose. See Elect. Der. eligibly, eligibility; also eligibili-ty, formed from eligibilis.

ELIMINATE, to get rid of. (L.) 'Eliminate, to put out or cast forth of doors; to publish abroad;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. eliminatus, pp. of eliminare, lit. to put forth from the threshold. — Lat. e, forth; and limin-, stem of limen, a threshold, allied to limes, a boundary; see Limit. Der. elimination.

ELISION, a striking out. (L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 124. — Lat. elisionem, acc. of elidio, a striking out. — Lat. elidus, pp. of elidere, to strike out. See Elide.

ELIXIR, the philosopher's stone. (Arab.) In Chaucer, C. T. 16331. — Arab. el ikshr, the philosopher's stone; where el is the definite article; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 44. [†]

ELK, a kind of large deer. (Scand.) 'Th' unwieldy elk;' Drayton, Noah's Flood. — Icel. elgr; Swed. elg, an elk. + O. H. G. elaho, M. H. G. elch. + Russ. olene, a stag (cf. Du. eland, an elk). + Lat. alces. + Gk. ἄλκη. + Skt. rishya, a kind of antelope, written rigya in the Veda. See Curtius, i. 162. ¶ The A. S. elch is unauthorised; the A. S. form is rather eolh (Grein). The mod. E. form is Scandinavian.

ELL, a measure of length. (E.) M. E. elle, elne; Prompt. Parv. p. 138. — A. S. eln, a cubit; see Matt. vi. 27, Lu. xii. 25 (Grein, i. 225); eln-gemet, the measure of an ell (ibid.). + Du. elle, an ell; somewhat more than 3-4ths of a yard (Sewel). + Icel. alin, the arm from the elbow to the tip of the middle-finger; an ell. + Swed. aln, an ell. + Dan. alen, an ell. + Goth. aleina, a cubit. + O. H. G. elina, M. H. G. elne, G. elle, an ell. + Lat. ulna, the elbow; also, a cubit. + Gk. ἄλνη, the elbow. β. Ell = el- in el-bow; see Elbow.

ELLIPSE, an oval figure. (L., — Gk.) 'Ellipsis, a defect; also, a certain crooked line coming of the byas-cutting of the cone or cylinder;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. ellipsis, a want, defect; also, an ellipse. + Gk. ἐλλείψις, a leaving behind, defect, an ellipse of a word; also the figure called an ellipse, so called because its plane forms with the base of the cone a less angle than that of the parabola (Liddell). — Gk. ἐλλείπειν, to leave in, leave behind. — Gk. ἐλ- = έν, in; and λείπειν, to leave. See Eclipse. Der. elliptic-al, from Gk. ἐλλειπτικός, adj. formed from ἐλλείψις.

ELM, a kind of tree. (E.) M. E. elm, Chaucer, C. T. 2924. — A. S. elm; Gloss. to Cockayne's Saxon Leechdoms. + Du. olm. + Icel. elmr. + Dan. alm, elm. + Swed. alm. + G. ulme (formerly elme, ilme, but modified by Lat. ulmus). + Lat. ulmus. β. All from the European base AL, to grow, to nourish; from its abundant growth.

ELOCUTION, clear utterance. (L.) In Ben Jonson, Underwoods, xxxi. 46. — Lat. elocutionem, from nom. elocutio. — Lat. elocutus, pp. of elocui, to speak out. See Eloquence, and Loquacious. Der. elocution-ary, elocution-ist.

ELONGATE, to lengthen. (Low Lat.) Formerly 'to remove;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13, § 14. — Low Lat. elongatus, pp. of elongare, to remove; a verb coined from Lat. e, out, off, and longus, long. See Long. Der. elongat-ion.

ELOPE, to run away. (Du.) Spelt ellope, Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 9. Corrupted from Du. onloopen, to evade, escape, run away, by substituting the familiar prefix e- (= Lat. e, out) for the unfamiliar Du. prefix on-. 1. The Du. prefix ont- = G. prefix ent- = A. S. and-; see Answer. 2. The verb loopen, to run, is cognate with E. leap; see Leap. Der. elope-ment.

ELOQUENT, gifted with good utterance. (F., — L.) M. E. eloquent, Chaucer, C. T. 10990. — O. F. eloquent; Cot. — Lat. eloquent-, stem of pres. pt. of elocui, to speak out. — Lat. e, out; and loqui, to speak. See Elocution. Der. eloquent-ly, eloquence.

ELSE, otherwise. (E.) M. E. elles, always an adverb; Chaucer, C. T. 13867. — A. S. elles, otherwise, Matt. vi. 1; an adverbial form, orig. gen. sing. from an adj. el (base ali), signifying 'other;' cf. A. S. eleland, a foreign land, Grein, i. 223. + O. Swed. älfes, otherwise (Ihre); whence mod. Swed. eljest, with excrement t. + Goth. aljis, alis, adj. other, another; gen. aljis. + M. H. G. alles, elles, eljes, otherwise, an adverb of genitive form. Cf. Lat. alias, from alius, other. See Alien. Der. else-where.

ELUCIDATE, to make clear. (Low Lat.) 'Elucidate, to make bright, to manifest; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Low Lat. elucidatus, pp. of elucidare; compounded from Lat. e, out, very, and lucidus, bright. See Lucid. Der. elucidat-ion, elucidat-or, elucidat-ive.

ELUDE, to avoid sily. (L.) In Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 5 (R.) — Lat. eludere, pp. elusus, to mock, deceive. — Lat. e, out; and ludere, to play. See Ludicrous. Der. elus-ive, elus-ive-ly, elus-ion, elus-or-y; from pp. elusus.

ELYSIUM, a heaven. (L., — Gk.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 7. 38. — Lat. elysium. — Gk. Ἠλύσιον, short for Ἠλύσιον πεδίον, the Elysian field; Homer, Od. 4. 563. Der. Elysian.

EMACIATE, to make thin. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vii. c. 13, § 6. — Lat. emaciatus, pp. of emaciare, to make thin. — Lat. e, out, very; and macer, base of macer-es, leanness; cf. macer, lean. See Meagre. Der. emaciat-ion.

EMANATE, to flow from. (L.) 'In all bodily emanations;' Bp. Hall, Contemplations, b. iv. cont. 7. § 19. — Lat. emanatus, pp. of emanare, to flow out. — Lat. e, out; and manare, to flow. Manare = madnare, from the base mad in Lat. madidus, wet, madere, to be moist. — ✓ MAD, to well, flow; cf. Skt. mad, to be wet, to get drunk. Der. emanat-ion, emanat-ive.

EMANCIPATE, to set free. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. emancipatus, pp. of emancipare, to set free. — Lat. e, out; and mancipare, to transfer property. — Lat. mancip, stem of manceps, one who acquires property; lit. one who takes it in hand. — Lat. man, base of manus, the hand; and capere, to take. See Manual and Capable. Der. emancipat-or, emancipat-ion.

EMASCULATE, to deprive of virility. (L.) 'Which have emasculated [become emasculate] or turned women;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17, § 2. — Lat. emascultus, pp. of emasculare, to castrate. — Lat. e, out of, away; and masculus, male. See Male. Der. emasculat-ion.

EMBALM, to anoint with balm. (F.) In Shak. Timon, iv. 3. 30. Spelt imbalm in Cotgrave. M. E. baumen (without the prefix), whence baumyt, bawlmyt, embalmed, in Barbour's Bruce, xx. 286. — O. F. embaumer, 'to imbalm;' Cot. — O. F. em = en = Lat. in; and baume, balm. See Balm.

EMBANK, to cast up a mound. (Hybrid; F. and E.) Spelt imbank in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Coined from F. em (Lat. im = in), and E. bank. See Bank. Der. embank-ment.

EMBARGO, a stoppage of ships. (Span.) 'By laying an embargo upon all shipping in time of war;' Blackstone, Comment. b. i. c. 7. — Span. embargo, an embargo, seizure, arrest; cf. Span. embargare, to lay on an embargo, arrest. — Span. em (— Lat. im = in); and barra, a bar. Hence embargo = a putting of a bar in the way. See Bar, Barricade, Embarrass. Der. embargo, verb.

EMBARK, to put or go on board ship. (F.) In Hamlet, i. 3. 1. — O. F. embarquer, 'to embark;' Cot. — F. em = Lat. im = in; and F. barque, a bark. See Bark. Der. embark-at-ion.

EMBARRASS, to perplex. (F.) 'I saw my friend a little embarrassed;' Spectator, no. 109. — F. embarrasser, 'to intricate, pester, intangle, perplex;' Cot. [Cf. Span. embarrasar, to embarrass.] — F. em (— Lat. im = in); and a stem barras, formed from barre, a bar. See Bar, Embargo. Der. embarrass-ment. ¶ 1. The form barras is fairly accounted for by the Prov. barras, a bar (Raynoudard); it is a sing. noun, but probably was formed from barras, pl. of Prov. barra, a bar. 2. Similarly the Span. barras, properly the pl. of barra, a bar, is used in the sense of 'prison.' The word was evidently formed in the South of France.

EMBASSY, the function of an ambassador. (Low Lat.) 1. Shak. has embassy, L. L. i. 1. 135; also embassage, Much Ado, i. 1. 282; and embassade (— O. F. embassade, Cotgrave), 3 Hen. VI, iv. 3. 32. 2. Latimer has ambassages, Sermon on the Ploughers, l. 180 (in Skeat's Specimens). Chaucer has embassadrye, Six-text, B. 233. 3. Embassy is a French modification of Low Lat. ambascia, a message, made on the model of O. F. embassade from Low Lat. ambasciata. See further under Ambassador.

EMBATTLE (1), to furnish with battlements. (F.) M. E. embattelen, embattelen; Chaucer, C. T. 14866. — O. F. em or en (— Lat. im = in), prefix; and O. F. bastiller, to embattle. See Battlement. ¶ 1. The simple verb battailen or battalen occurs early; the pp. battailor or batalit, i. e. embattled, occurs in Barbour's Bruce, ii. 221, iv. 134; and the sb. battalyng, an embattlement, in the same, iv. 136. 2. Obviously, these words were accommodated to the spelling of M. E. battale (better bataille), a battle; and from the first a confusion with battle has been common. 3. Cf. Low Lat. imbattallare, to fortify, which Migne rightly equates to an O. F. embastiller.

EMBATTLE (2), to range in order of battle. (F.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 2. 14. A coined word, from F. prefix em (— Lat. im = in); and E. battle, of F. origin. ¶ Probably due to a misapprehension of Embattle (1).

EMBAY, to enclose in a bay. (F.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 1. 18. A coined word; from F. em (— Lat. im = in); and E. bay, of F. origin. See Bay (3).

EMBELLISH, to adorn. (F., — L.) M. E. embellissen, Chaucer, Good Women, 1735. — O. F. embelliss, stem of pres. pt. &c. of O. F. embellir, 'to embellish, beautify;' Cot. — O. F. em (— Lat. im = in); and bel, fair, beautiful. — Lat. bellus, well-mannered, fine, handsome. See Beauty. ¶ For the suffix -ish, see Abash. Der. embellish-ment.

EMBER-DAYS, fast-days at four seasons of the year. (E.) A corruption of M. E. ymber. 'The Wednesdai Gospel in ymber weke in Septembre monethe;' Wyclif's Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 203; cf. pp. 205, 207. 'Umbridawes' (another MS. ymbri wikes), i. e. ember-days (or ember-weeks); Ancien Riwle, p. 70. — A. S. ymbren, ymbryne. 1. 'On þære pentecostenes wucan to þam ymbrens' = in Pentecost week according to the ymber, i. e. in due course; rubric to Luke, viii. 40. 'On ælcum ymbren-fæstene,' = at every ember-fast; Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 608. 2. The full form of the word is ymb-ryne or ymbe-ryne, and the orig. sense 'a running round,' 'circuit,' or 'course;' compounded of A. S. ymbe, around, cognate with G. um, Lat. ambi; and ryne, a running, from rinnan, to run. See Ambi, prefix, and Run. ¶ This is the only right explanation; for numerous examples and references, see ymbren in Lye's A. S. Dictionary. Ihe rightly distinguishes between O. Swed. ymbredagar, borrowed from A. S. and obsolete, and the Swed. tampredagar, corrupted (like G. quaterber) from Lat. quatuor tempora, the four seasons.

EMBERS, ashes. (E.) The b is excrement. The M. E. form is emmeres or emeres, equivalent to Lowland Scotch ammeris or ameris, used by G. Douglas to translate Lat. favillam in Æneid, vi. 227. [Probably an E. word, though rare; else, it is Scandinavian.] — A. S. emyrian, embers (Benson); an unauthorised word, but apparently of correct form. + Icel. eimyrja, embers. + Dan. emmer, embers. + M. H. G. eimurja, embers; Bavarian aimern, emmern, pl., Schmeller, i. 76. ¶ Possibly connected with Icel. eimr, eimi, steam, vapour; but this is by no means certain. [†]

EMBEZZLE, to steal sily, filch. (F., — L.) Formerly embesyll or embesell. 'I concele, I embesyll a thyngne, I kepe a thyngne secret; I embesell, I hyde, je cele; I embesyll a thyngne, or put it out of the way, je substra; He that embesylleth a thyng intendeth to steale it if he can convoie it clenly;' Palsgrave's F. Dict. Spelt embesile in The Lament of Mary Magdalen, st. 39; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1621, fol. 319. The orig. sense was to enfeeble, weaken; hence to diminish; see Imbecile. Der. embezzle-ment. [†]

EMBLAZON, to adorn with heraldic designs. (F.) Shak. has emblaze, 2 Hen. VI, iv. 10. 76. Spenser has emblazon, F. Q. iv. 10. 55. Formed from blazon, q. v., with F. prefix em = Lat. im = in. Cf. O. F. blasonner, 'to blaze arms;' Cot. Der. emblazon-ment, emblazon-ry.

EMBLEM, a device. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 44. — O. F. emblem, 'an emblem;' Cot. — Lat. emblemata, a kind of ornament. — Gk. ἐμβλημα, a kind of moveable ornament, a thing put on. — Gk. ἐμβάλλειν, to put in, lay on. — Gk. ἐμ = en, in; and βάλλειν, to cast, throw, put. See Belemnite. Der. emblematic, from Gk. stem ἐμβληματ-; emblematic-al.

EMBODY, to invest with a body. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 22. Formed from E. body with F. prefix em = Lat. im = in. Der. embodi-ment.

EMBOLDEN, to make bold. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Shak. Timon, iii. 5. 3. Formed from E. bold with F. prefix em = Lat. im = in; and with E. suffix -en.

EMBOLISM, an insertion of days, &c. to make a period regular. (F., — Gk.) 'Embolism, the adding a day or more to a year;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — O. F. embolisme, 'an addition, as of a day or more, unto a year;' Cot. — Gk. ἐμβολισμός, an intercalation. — Gk. ἐμ = en, in; and βάλλειν, to cast. See Emblem. Der. embolism-al.

EMBOSOM, to shelter closely. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 25. From F. prefix em = en = Lat. in; and E. bosom, q. v.

EMBOSS (1), to adorn with bosses or raised work. (F.) Chaucer has embossed; Good Women, 1198. Cf. King Lear, ii. 4. 227. — O. F. embosser, 'to swell or arise in bunches;' Cot. — F. em = Lat. im = in; and O. F. bosse, a boss. See Boss.

EMBOSS (2), to enclose or shelter in a wood. (F.) In Shak. All's Well, iii. 6. 107. — O. F. embosquer, to shroud in a wood; Cot. — F. em = Lat. im = in; and O. F. bosc or bosque, only used in the dimin. form bosquet, a little wood (Burguy). See Ambush.

EMBOUCHURE, a mouth, of a river, &c. (F., — L.) Mere French; not in Johnson. — F. embouchure, a mouth, opening. — F. emboucher, to put to the mouth. — F. em = Lat. im = in; and F. bouche, the mouth, from Lat. bucca. See Debouch.

EMBOWEL, to enclose deeply. (F.) 'Deepe emboweled in the earth;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 15. [Often wrongly put for disembowel; Shak. Rich. III. v. 2. 10.] From F. em = Lat. im = in; and bowl, of F. origin, q. v. Der. embowelment.

EMBOWER, to place in a bower. (Hybrid; F. and E.) Spenser has embowering, i. e. sheltering themselves; tr. of Virgil's Gnat, 225. Coined from F. em = Lat. im = in; and E. bower.

EMBRACE, to take in the arms. (F.) In early use. M. E. embracen, to brace on to the arm (said of a shield), King Alisaunder, 6651; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 8288. — O. F. embracer, to embrace, seize (Burguy). — O. F. em, for en = Lat. in; and bras, an arm, from Lat. brachium. See Brace. Der. embrace, sb.

EMBRASURE, an aperture with slant sides. (F.) 'Embrasure, an enlargement made on the inside of a gate, door, &c. to give more light; a gap or loophole, &c.;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. — F. embrasure, orig. 'the skuing, splaying, or chamfretting of a door or window;' Cotgrave. — O. F. embraser (cf. mod. F. ébraser) 'to skue, or chamfret off the jambes of a door or window;' Cot. 1. The prefix is F. em = en = Lat. in. 2. The rest is O. F. braser, 'to skue, or chamfret;' Cot.; of unknown origin.

EMBROCCATION, a fomenting. (F., — Low Lat., — Gk.) Spelt embrocation in Holland's Pliny, b. xx. c. 14, § 1. — O. F. embrocation, 'an embrocation, fomenting;' Cot. — Low Lat. embrocatus, pp. of embrocare, to pour into a vessel, &c.; cf. Ital. embrocace, to foment. — Gk. ἐμβροχή, a fomentation. — Gk. ἐμβρέχειν, to soak in, to foment. — Gk. ἐμ = en, in; and βρέχειν, to wet, allied to E. rain; Curtius, i. 234. See Rain.

EMBROIDER, to ornament with needlework. (F.) M. E. embrouden, embroyden, Chaucer, C. T. 89. [This M. E. form produced a later form embroid; the -er is a needless addition, due to the sb. embroid-ery.] Cotgrave gives 'to imbroyder' as a translation of O. F. broder. — O. F. prefix em = en = Lat. in; and O. F. broder, to embroider, or broider. See Broider. Der. embroider-er, embroider-y (rightly embroid-ery, from M. E. embroid; spelt embrouderie, Gower, C. A. ii. 41); Merry Wives, v. 5. 75. [+]

EMBROIL, to entangle in a broil. (F.) See Milton, P. L. ii. 908, 966. — O. F. embrouiller, 'to pester, intangle, incumber, intricate, confound;' Cot. — O. F. em = en = Lat. in; and O. F. brouiller, 'to jumble, &c.;' See Broil (2). Der. embroilment.

EMBRYO, the rudiment of an organised being. (F., — Gk.) Formerly also embryon. 'Though yet an embryon;' Massinger, The Picture, Act ii. sc. 2. — O. F. embryon; Cot. — Gk. ἐμβρυον, the embryo, foetus. — Gk. ἐμ = en, in, within; and βρύω, neut. of βρύω, pres. pt. of βρύω, to be full of a thing, swell with it. ¶ Perhaps related to E. brew, q. v.

EMENDATION, correction. (Lat.) In Bp. Taylor, Great Exemplar, p. 3, disc. 18 (R.); Spectator, no. 328 (orig. issue). — Lat. emendatus, pp. of emendare, to amend, lit. to free from fault. — Lat. e, out of, hence, free from; and mendum, a fault. See Amend. Der. emendat-or, emendat-or-y; from pp. emendatus.

EMERALD, a green precious stone. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. emeraude, emerade; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 1005; King Alisaunder, 7030. — O. F. esmerauide, 'an emerald;' Cot. — Lat. smaragdus, an emerald. — Gk. σμάραγδος, a kind of emerald. Of unknown origin; cf. Skt. marakata, marakta, an emerald.

EMERGE, to issue, rise from the sea, appear. (Lat.) In Bacon; Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 13. Milton has emergent, P. ENFRANCHISE, to render free. (F.) In L. L. L. iii. 121. Formed (like enamour, encourage) by prefixing F. en (= Lat. in) to the sb. franchise. See Franchise. Cf. O. F. franchir, 'to free, deliver;' Cot. Der. enfranchise-ment, K. John, iv. 2. 52.

ENGAGE, to bind by a pledge. (F., — L.) In Othello, iii. 3. 462. — O. F. engager, 'to pawn, impledge, ingage;' Cot. — F. en (= Lat. in); and F. gage, a pledge. See Gage. Der. engage-ment, J. Cæs. ii. 1. 307; engag-ing, engag-ing-ly.

ENGENDER, to breed. (F., — L.) M. E. engendren; Chaucer, C. T. 6047, 7591. — O. F. engendrér, 'to ingender;' Cot. [The d is excrement.] — Lat. ingenerare, to produce, generate. — Lat. in; and generare, to breed; formed from gener-, stem of genus. See Genus; and see Gender.

ENGINE, a skilful contrivance. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. engin, a contrivance, Floriz, ed. Lumby, 755; often shortened to gin, ginne, id. 131. — O. F. engin, 'an engine, tool;' Cot. — Lat. ingenium, genius; also, an invention. See Ingenious. Der. engin-er, formerly (and properly) engin-er, Hamlet, iii. 4. 206; engineer-ing.

ENGRAIN, to dye of a fast colour. (F., — L.) M. E. engreyneyn, to dye in grain, i. e. of a fast colour; P. Plowman, B. ii. 15. Coined from F. en = Lat. in; and O. F. graine, 'the seed of herbs, &c., also grain, wherewith cloth is died in grain; scarlet die, scarlet in graine;' Cot. — Lat. granum, grain. See Grain.

ENGRAVE, to cut with a graver. (Hybrid; F. and E.) Spenser has the pp. engraven, F. Q. iv. 7. 46; so also Shak. Lucr. 203. A hybrid word; coined from F. prefix en (= Lat. in), and E. grave. See Grave. Der. engrav-er, engrav-ing. ¶ 1. The retention of the strong pp. engraven shews that the main part of the word is English. 2. But the E. compound was obviously suggested by the O. F. engraver, 'to engrave;' (Cot.) der. from F. en, and G. graben, to dig, engrave, cut, carve. 3. In Dutch, graven means only 'to dig;' graveren, to engrave, is plainly borrowed from the French, as shewn by the suffix -eren.

ENGROSS, to occupy wholly. (F., — L.) The legal sense 'to write in large letters' is the oldest one. 'Engrossed was vp [read it] as it is well knowe, And enrolled, onely for witnesse In your registers;' Lidgegate, Siege of Thebes, pt. ii., Knightly answer of Tideus, l. 56. Cf. Rich. III. iii. 6. 2. Formed from the phrase en gros, i. e. in large; cf. O. F. grossoyer, 'to ingross, to write fair, or in great and fair letters;' Cot. See Gross. Der. engross-ment, 2 Hen. IV. iv. 5. 80.

ENGULF, to swallow up in a gulf. (F.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 2. 32. — O. F. engolfer, 'to engulf;' Cot. — O. F. en = Lat. in; and golfe, a gulf. See Gulf.

ENHANCE, to advance, raise, augment. (F., — L.) M. E. enhansen, P. Plowman, C. xii. 58. [Of O. F. origin; but the word is only found in Provençal.] — O. Prov. enansar, to further, advance; 'si vostra valors m'enansa' = if your worth enhances me; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Prov. 147, 5. — O. Prov. enans, before, rather; formed from Lat. in ante, just as the Prov. avans is from Lat. ab ante. See Advance. Der. enhance-ment. ¶ The insertion of h is probably due to a confusion with O. F. enhacer, enhacier, to exalt (Burguy), a derivative of halt or haut, high. Curiously enough, the h in this word also is a mere insertion, there being no h in the Lat. altus, high. Similarly, we find in old authors abominable for abominabilis, habound for abund, &c. Observe: 'Enhance, exaltare;' Levins, 22. 21. [†]

ENIGMA, a riddle. (L., — Gk.) In Shak. I. L. L. iii. 72. — Lat. ænigma (stem ænigmat-). — Gk. αἰνίγμα (stem αἰνίγματ-), a dark saying, riddle. — Gk. αἰνισσομαι, I speak in riddles. — Gk. αἶνος, a tale, story. Der. enigmat-ic, enigmat-ic-al, enigmat-ic-al-ly, enigmat-ise.

ENJOIN, to order, bid. (F., — L.) M. E. enjoien (with i=j), P. Plowman, C. viii. 72. — O. F. enjoindre, 'to injoin, ordaine;' Cot. — Lat. inungere, to injoin. See Injunction, and Join.

ENJOY, to joy in. (F., — L.) M. E. enjoien (with i=j), Wyclif, Colos. iii. 15. Formed from F. en = Lat. in; and joie, joy. See Joy. Der. enjoy-ment. [†]

ENKINDLE, to kindle. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Shak. K. John, iv. 2. 163. Formed from F. en = Lat. in; and Kindle, q. v.

ENLARGE, to make large. (F., — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 5. 55. [The reference to Rom. Rose (R.) seems to be wrong.] Formed from F. en = Lat. in; and Large, q. v. Der. enlarge-ment, Shak. L. L. L. iii. 5. [†]

ENLIGHTEN, to give light to. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Shak. Sonnets, 152. From F. en = Lat. in; and E. Lighten, q. v. Imitated from A. S. inlihtan; Grein, ii. 142. Der. enlighten-ment.

ENLIST, to enroll. (F.) Modern. In Johnson's Dict., only under the word List. From F. en = Lat. in; and F. liste. See List. Der. enlist-ment.

ENLIVEN, to put life into. (Hybrid; F. and E.) 'Lo! of themselves th' enlivened chessmen move;' Cowley, Pind. Odes, Destiny, l. 3. From F. en = Lat. in; and E. Life. See Life, Live.

ENMITY, hostility. (F., — L.) M. E. enmité; Prompt. Parv. p. 140. — O. F. enamistiet (Burguy); later inimitié (Cot.). The E. form answers to a form enimitié, intermediate between these. — O. F. en = Lat. in, negative prefix; and amitié, later amitié, amity. See Amity. [†] ENNOBLE, to make noble. (F., — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 4. — O. F. ennoblir, 'to ennoble;' Cot. — F. en = Lat. in; and F. noble. See Noble.

ENNUI, annoyance. (F., — L.) Modern. — F. ennui; formerly enui, also anoi (Burguy). See Annoy.

ENORMOUS, great beyond measure. (F., — L.) In King Lear, ii. 2. 176; Milton, P. L. i. 511. Very rarely enorm (R.), which is a more correct form, the -ous being added unnecessarily. — O. F. enorme, 'huge, . . . enormous;' Cot. — Lat. enormis, out of rule, huge. — Lat. e; and norma, a rule. See Normal. Der. enormous-ly; from the same source, enorm-i-ty, O. F. enormité, 'an enormity;' Cot.

ENOUGH, sufficient. (E.) M. E. inoh, inou, inow, enogh; pl. inohe, inowe; see inoh in Stratmann, p. 227. The pl. ynough (ynough in Tyrrwhitt) is in Chaucer, C. T. 10784. — A. S. genôh, genôg, adj.; pl. genôge, Grein, i. 438; from the impers. vb. geneah, it suffices, id. 435. + Goth. ganôhs, sufficient; from the impers. verb ganak, it suffices, in which ga- is a mere prefix. Cf. Icel. gnôgr, Dan. nok, Swed. nog, Du. genoeg, G. genug, enough. — ✓ NAK, to attain, reach to; whence also Skt. nap, to attain, reach, Lat. nascisci, to acquire, Gk. ἀνερπαι, I carried. See Curtius, i. 383.

ENQUIRE, to search into, ask. (F., — L.) [Properly enquere, but altered to enquire to make it look more like Latin; and often further altered to inquire, to make it look still more so.] M. E. enqueren; Rob. of Glouc. pp. 373, 508; in Chaucer, enquere (riming with lere), C. T. 5049. — O. F. enquerre (Burguy), later enquerir (Cot.). — Lat. inquirere, to seek after, search into. — Lat. in; and querere, to seek. See Inquisition, Inquire. Der. enquir-y, Meas. for Meas. v. 5 (1st folio ed.; altered to inquiry in the Globe Edition); enquest, now altered to inquest, but spelt enqueste in P.

Plowman, C. xiv. 85, and derived from O. F. enqueste, 'an inquest;' Cot. See INQUEST.

ENRAGE, to put in a rage. (F., -L.) In Macbeth, iii. 4. 118. -O. F. enrager, 'to rage, rave, storme;' whence enragé, 'enraged;' Cot. [Whence it appears that the verb was originally intransitive, and meant 'to get in a rage;'] -F. en = Lat. in; and rage. See RAGE.

ENRICH, to make rich. (F., -L.) 'Us hath enriched so openly;' Chaucer's Dream (not composed by Chaucer), l. 1062. -O. F. enrichir, 'to enrich;' Cot. -F. en = Lat. in; and F. riche, rich. See RICH. Der. enrichment.

ENROL, to insert in a roll. (F., -L.) 'Which is enrolled;' Lidgate, Siege of Thebes; see quotation under ENGROSS. -O. F. enroller, 'to enroll, register;' Cot. -F. en = Lat. in; and O. F. rolle, a roll. See ROLL. Der. enrolment, Holland's Livy, p. 1221 (R.).

ENSAMPLE, an example. (F., -L.) In the Bible, 1 Cor. x. 11. M. E. ensample, Rob. of Glouc. p. 35. -O. F. ensample, a corrupt form of O. F. esemple, exemple, or exsample; see EXAMPLE. This form is given in Roquefort, who quotes from an O. F. version of the Bible, 'que ele soit ensample de vertu,' Lat. 'exemplum virtutis;' Ruth, iv. 11.

ENSHRINE, to put in a shrine. (Hybrid; F. and L.) In Spenser, Hymn on Beauty, l. 188. From F. en = L. in; and SHRINE, q. v.

ENSIGN, a flag. (F., -L.) In Shak. Rich. II, iv. 94. -O. F. ensigne (Roquefort), commonly spelt enseigne, as in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'a signe, . . . also an ensigne, standard.' -Low Lat. insigna, a standard; answering to Lat. insigne, a standard; neut. of insignis, remarkable; see INSIGNIA. Der. ensigncy, ensignship.

ENSLAVE, to make a slave of. (Hybrid.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 75. -F. en = Lat. in; and SLAVE, q. v. Der. enslave-ment.

ENSNARE, to catch in a snare. (Hybrid.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 1. 170. -F. en = Lat. in; and SNARE, q. v.

ENSUE, to follow after. (F., -L.) 'Wherefore, of the sayde unequal mixture, nedes must ensue corruption;' Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Helth, b. ii. (R.) -O. F. ensuir, to follow after; see ensueure in Roquefort, and seure in Burguy. -Lat. insequi, to follow upon; from in, upon, and sequi, to follow. See SUE. [+] ENSURE, to make sure. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 12077. Compounded from F. en (= Lat. in), and O. F. sêur, sure. See ASSURE, and SURE. ¶ Generally spelt insure, which is a confusion of languages; whence insur-ance.

ENTABLATURE, part of a building surmounting the columns. (F., -L.) Spelt intablature in Cotgrave. -O. F. entablature, 'an intablature;' Cot.; an equivalent term to entablement, the mod. F. form. The O. F. entablement meant, more commonly, 'a pedestal' or 'base' of a column rather than the entablature above. Both sbs. are formed from Low Lat. intabulare, to construct an intabulum or basis. -Lat. in, upon; and Low Lat. tabulare, due to Lat. tabulatum, board-work, a flooring. -Lat. tabula, a board, plank. See TABLE. ¶ Since entablature simply meant something laid flat or boardwise upon something else in the course of building, it could be applied to the part either below or above the columns.

ENTAIL, to bestow as a heritage. (F., -L.) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI, i. 1. 194, 235; as sb., All's Well, iv. 3. 313. [The legal sense is peculiar; it was originally 'to abridge, limit;' lit. 'to cut into.' 'To entayle land, addicere, adoptare hæredes;' Levins. 2. The M. E. entailen signifies 'to cut or carve,' in an ornamental way; see Rom. of the Rose, 140; P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, ll. 167, 200.] -O. F. entailier, 'to intaille, grave, carve, cut in;' Cot. -F. en = Lat. in; and tailier, to cut. See TALLY. Der. entailment.

ENTANGLE, to ensnare, complicate. (Hybrid.) In Spenser, Muirpotmos, 387; also in Levins. -F. en = Lat. in; and TANGLE, q. v. Der. entangle-ment, Spectator, No. 352.

ENTER, to go into. (F., -L.) M. E. entren, Rob. of Glouc. p. 47; King Alisaunder, 5782. -O. F. entrer, 'to enter;' Cot. -Lat. intrare, to enter, go into. -Lat. in; and ✓ TAR, to overstep, go beyond; cf. Skt. tri, to cross, pass over; Lat. trans, across. See CURTUS, i. 274; and see TERM. Der. entr-ance, Mach. i. 5. 40; entr-y, M. E. entree, Chaucer, C. T. 1985, from O. F. entree, orig. the fem. of the pp. of F. entrer.

ENTERPRISE, an undertaking. (F., -L.) In Sir John Cheke, Hurt of Sedition (R.) Skelton even has it as a verb; 'Chaucer, that nobly enterprisyd;' Garland of Laurell, l. 388. -O. F. entreprise (Burguy), more commonly entreprinse, 'an enterprise;' Cot. -O. F. entrepris, pp. of entreprendre, to undertake. -Low Lat. interprehendere, to undertake. -Lat. inter, among; and prehendere, short for prehendere, to take in hand, which is from Lat. præ, before, and (obsolete) hendere, to get, cognate with Gk. χαρβαίνω, and E. get. See GET. Der. enterprising.

ENTERTAIN, to admit, receive. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ♂

i. 10. 32. -O. F. entretenir, 'to intertaine;' Cot. -Low Lat. intertere, to entertain. -Lat. inter, among; and tenere, to hold. See TENABLE. Der. entertain-er, entertain-ing; entertain-ment, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 37.

ENTHRAL, to enslave. (Hybrid.) In Mids. Nt. Dream, i. 1. 136. From F. en = Lat. in; and E. Thrall, q. v. Der. enthrall-ment, Milton, P. L. xii. 171.

ENTHRONE, to set on a throne. (F.) Shak. Mer. Ven. iv. 1. 194. -O. F. enthroner, 'to inthronise;' Cot. From F. en, in; and throne, 'a throne;' id. β. Imitated from Low Lat. inthronisare, to enthrone, which is from Gk. ἐνθρονίζω, to set on a throne; from Gk. ἐν, and θρόνος, a throne. See THRONE. Der. enthronement.

ENTHUSIASM, inspiration, zeal. (Gk.) In Holland's Plutarch, pp. 932, 1092 (R.) [Cf. O. F. enthusiasme; Cot.] -Gk. ἐνθουσιασμός, inspiration. -Gk. ἐνθουσιάζω, I am inspired. -Gk. ἐνθους, contracted form of ἐνθεος, full of the god, inspired. -Gk. ἐν, within; and θεός, god. See THEISM. Der. enthusiast (Gk. ἐνθουσιαστής); enthusiast-ic, Dryden, Abs. and Achit. 530; enthusiast-ic-al, enthusiast-ic-al-ly.

ENTICE, to tempt, allure. (F.) M. E. enticen, entisen; Rob. of Glouc., p. 235; P. Plowman, C. viii. 91. -O. F. enticer, enticher, to excite, entice (Burguy). Origin unknown. Der. entice-ment, Chaucer, Pers. Tale, Group I, l. 967. ¶ We cannot well connect enticer with O. F. atiser (mod. F. attiser), to stir the fire; and the suggestion of deriving -ticher from G. stechen, to stick, pierce, is out of the question. Rather from M. H. G. zicken, to push, zechen, to drive, tease; cf. Du. tikken, to pat, touch slightly (Sewel), and E. tick-le; see TOUCH. [+] ENTIRE, whole, complete. (F., -L.) M. E. entire; the adv. entireliche, entirely, is in P. Plowman, C. xi. 188. -O. F. entier, 'intire;' Cot.; cf. Prov. entier, Ital. intero. -Lat. integrum, acc. of integer, whole. See INTEGER. Der. entire-ly, entire-ness; also entire-ty, spelt entierty by Bacon (R.), from O. F. entiereté (Cot.), from Lat. acc. integritatem; whence entirety and integrity are doublets.

ENTITLE, to give a title to. (F., -L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 822. From F. en = Lat. in; and titre. See TITLE.

ENTITY, existence, real substance. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A coined word, with suffix -ty, from Lat. enti, crude form of ens, being, pres. pt. of esse, to be. -✓ AS, to be. See SOOTH.

ENTOMB, to put in a tomb. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 46. -O. F. entomber, 'to intombe;' Cot. -Low Lat. intumulare, to entomb; from Lat. tumulus. See TOMB. Der. entomb-ment.

ENTOMOLOGY, the science treating of insects. (Gk.) Modern; not in Johnson. -Gk. ἐντομο-, crude form of ἐντομος, an insect; properly neut. of ἐντομος, cut into; so called from their being nearly cut in two; see INSECT. The ending -logy is from Gk. λόγειν, to discourse. -Gk. ἐν, in; and τομή, base of τομός, cutting, from τέμνειν, to cut. See TOME. Der. entomolog-ist, entomolog-ic-al.

ENTRAILS, the inward parts of an animal. (F., -L.) The sing. entrail is rare; but answers to M. E. entraile, King Alisaunder, l. 3628. -O. F. entrailles, pl. 'the intrals, intestines;' Cot. -Low Lat. intralia, also spelt (more correctly) intranea, entrails. [For the change from n to l, cf. Boulogne, Bologna, from Lat. Bononia.] β. Intranea is contracted from Lat. interanea, entrails, neut. pl. of interaneus, inward, an adj. formed from inter, within. See INTERNAL.

ENTRANCE (1), ingress; see ENTER.

ENTRANCE (2), to put into a trance. (F., -L.) In Shak. Per. iii. 2. 94. From F. en = Lat. in; and E. trance = F. transe. See TRANCE. Der. entrance-ment.

ENTRAP, to ensnare. (F.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 4. -O. F. entrapier, 'to pester; . . . also, to intrap;' Cot. -F. en = Lat. in; and O. F. trape, a trap. See TRAP.

ENTREAT, to treat; to beg. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 7. The pp. entreated occurs in the Lament of Mary Magdalen, st. 17. [The Chaucer passage, qu. in R., is doubtful.] -O. F. entraiter, to treat of; Burguy. -F. en = Lat. in; and O. F. traiter, to treat, from Lat. tractare. See TREAT. Der. entreat-y, K. John, v. 2. 125; entreat-ment, Hamlet, i. 3. 122.

ENTRENCH, to cut into, fortify with a trench. (F.) 'Entrenched deepe with knife;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 20; 'In stronge entrenchments;' id. ii. 11. 6. A coined word; from F. en = Lat. in; and E. trench, of F. origin. See TRENCH.

ENTRUST, to trust with. (Hybrid.) By analogy with enlist, enrol, enrapture, entrance, enthrone, we should have entrust. But intrust seems to have been more usual, and is the form in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715; see INTRUST.

ENTWINE, ENTWIST, to twine or twist with. (Hybrid.) Milton has entwined, P. L. iv. 174; Shak. has entwist, Mids. Nt. Dr. iv. 1. 48. Both are formed alike; from F. en (= Lat. in), and the E. words twine and twist. See TWINE, TWIST.

ENUMERATE, to number. (L.) Enumerative occurs in Bp.

Taylor, Holy Dying, c. 5. s. 3, 10.—Lat. enumeratus, pp. of enumerare, to reckon up.—Lat. e, out, fully; and numerare, to number. See Number. Der. enumerat-ion, enumerat-ive.

ENUNCIATE, to utter. (L.) Enunciatus occurs in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 24.—Lat. enunciatus, pp. of enunciare, better enuntiare, to utter.—Lat. e, out, fully; and nuntiare, to announce, from nuntius, a messenger. See Announce. Der. enunciat-ion, enunciat-ive, enunciat-or-y.

ENVELOP, to wrap in, enfold. (F.) Spelt envelop in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 34. M. E. envelopen, Chaucer, C. T. 12876.—O. F. envelopper, later envelope, to wrap round, enfold.—F. en=Lat. in; and a base volup-, of uncertain origin, but probably Old Low German. β. This base is, in fact, perfectly represented by the M. E. wlappen, to wrap up, which occurs at least twelve times in Wyclif's Bible, and is another form of wrappen, to wrap. See Wyclif, Numb. iv. 5, 7; Matt. xxvii. 59; Luke, ii. 7, 12; John, xx. 7, &c. See Wrap. Der. envelope, envelope-ment.

¶ The M. E. wlappen, by the loss of initial w, gave the more familiar form lap; 'lapped in proof,' Macbeth, i. 2. 54; see Lap. The word appears also in Italian; cf. Ital. involuppare, to wrap. The insertion of e or i before l was merely due to the difficulty of pronouncing vl (= wl). See Develop. [†]

ENVENOM, to put poison into. (F.,—L.) M. E. enuenimen (with u=v); whence enuenimmed, King Alisaunder, 5436; enuenimning, Chaucer, C. T. 9934.—O. F. envenimer, 'to invenome'; Cot.—O. F. en=Lat. in; and venim, or venin, poison, from Lat. uenenum. See Venom.

ENVIRON, to surround. (F.) Spelt envyroune in Wyclif, 1 Tim. v. 13; pt. t. envyrouned, Matt. iv. 23; cf. Gower, C. A. iii. 97.—O. F. environner, 'to environ, encompass'; Cot.—O. F. (and F.) environ, round about.—O. F. en=Lat. in; and vire, to turn, veer. See Veer. Der. environ-ment; also environs, from F. environ.

ENVOY, a messenger. (F.,—L.) 1. An improper use of the word; it meant 'a message;' and the F. for 'messenger' was envoyé. 2. The envoy of a ballad is the 'sending' of it forth, and the word is then correctly used; the last stanza of Chaucer's Ballad to K. Richard is headed L'envoye.—O. F. envoy, 'a message, a sending; also the envoy or conclusion of a ballet [ballad] or sonnet'; Cot. Also 'envoyé, a special messenger'; id.—O. F. envoyer, to send; formerly envieier, and envueier; see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, 52, 17.—O. F. ent (10th cent.), int (A. D. 872), forms derived from Lat. inde, thence, away; and O. F. voyer, older veier, from Lat. viare, to travel, which from Lat. via, a way. See Voyage. ¶ Or from Lat. invia (Littre); but this means 'to enter upon.' Der. envoyship.

ENVY, emulation, malicious grudging. (F.,—L.) In early use. M. E. envie (with u=v), envye, envy; Rob. of Glouc. pp. 122, 237.—O. F. envie, 'envy'; Cot.—Lat. invidia, envy. See Invidious. Der. envy, verb, Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 4; envi-ous, M. E. envis, Floriz, ed. Lumby, l. 356; envi-ous-ly, envi-able.

ENWRAP, to wrap in. (Hybrid.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 3. 27; earlier, in Wyclif, 1 Kings, xv. 6; 4 Kings, ii. 8. Coined from F. en=Lat. in; and E. Wrap, q. v. Doublet, envelop (?).

See Bishop. Der. episcopal-i-an; from the same source, episcopate (Lat. episcopatus); episcopac-y.

EPISODE, a story introduced into another. (Gk.) In the Spectator, no. 267.—Gk. ἐπεισόδιος, a coming in besides; ἐπεισόδιος, episodic, adventitious.—Gk. ἐπὶ, besides; and εἰσόδος, an entrance, εἰσόδος, coming in, which from εἰς, into, and ὁδός, a way. For ὁδός, see Curtius, i. 298. Der. episodi-al (from ἐπεισώδης); episod-ic, episod-ic-al, episodic-al-ly.

EPISTLE, a letter. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In early use. The pl. epistlis is in Wyclif, 2 Cor. x. 10.—O. F. epistle, the early form whence epistre (Cotgrave) was formed by the change of l to r (as in chapter from Lat. capitulum); in mod. F. spelt épître.—Lat. epistola.—Gk. ἐπιστολή, a message, letter.—Gk. ἐπιστέλλειν, to send to; from ἐπὶ, to, and στέλλειν, to send, equip. See Stolo. Der. epistol-ic, epistol-ar-y; from Lat. epistol-a.

EPIGRAPH, an inscription on a tomb. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Shak. Much Ado, iv. 1. 209; M. E. epitaph, Gower, C. A. iii. 326.—F. építaph; Cot.—Lat. epitaphium.—Gk. ἐπιτάφιος λόγος, a funeral oration; where ἐπιτάφιος signifies 'over a tomb', funeral.—Gk. ἐπὶ, upon, over; and τάφος, a tomb. See Cenotaph.

EPITHALAMIUM, a marriage-song. (L.,—Gk.) See the Epithalamion by Spenser.—Lat. epithalamium.—Gk. ἐπιθαλάμιον, a bridal song; neut. of ἐπιθαλάμιος, belong to a nuptial.—Gk. ἐπὶ, upon; and θάλαμος, a bed-room, bride-chamber.

EPITHET, an adjective expressing a quality. (L.,—Gk.) In Shak. Oth. i. 1. 14.—Lat. epitheton.—Gk. ἐπίθετον, an epithet; neut. of ἐπίθετος, added, annexed.—Gk. ἐπὶ, besides; and the base θε- of τίθημι, to place, set.—✓ DHA, to place; see Do. Der. epithet-ic.

EPITOME, an abridgment. (L.,—Gk.) In Shak. Cor. v. 3. 68.—Lat. epitome.—Gk. ἐπιτομή, a surface-incision; also, an abridgment.—Gk. ἐπὶ; and the base ταμ- of τέμνειν, to cut. See Tome. Der. epitom-ise, epitom-ist.

EPOCH, a fixed date. (L.,—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Low Lat. epocha; Ducange.—Gk. ἐποχή, a stop, check, hindrance, pause, epoch.—Gk. ἐτέχειν, to hold in, check.—Gk. ἐπ-=ἐπὶ, upon; and ἐχεῖν, to have, hold; cognate with Skt. sah, to bear, undergo, endure. — ✓SAGH, to hold, check; Curtius, i. 238; Fick, i. 791.

EPODE, a kind of lyric poem. (F., —L., —Gk.) In Ben Jonson, The Forest, x., last line. — O. F. epode; Cot. — Lat. epodos, epodon. — Gk. ἐπὸδος, something sung after, an epode. — Gk. ἐπ' = ἐπὶ, upon, on; and ἀείδων, ἀείδω, to sing. See Ode.

EQUAL, on a par with, even, just. (L.) Chaucer has both equal and inequal in his Treatise on the Astrolabe; equally is in the C. T. 7819. [We find also M. E. egal, from O. F. egal.] — Lat. equalis, equal; formed with suffix -alis from æquus, equal, just. β. Allied to Skt. eka (= aika), one; which is formed from the pronominal bases a and ka, the former having a demonstrative and the latter an interrogative force (Benfey). Der. equal-ly, equal-ise, equal-isation. — equal-ly, King Lear, i. 1. 5; and see equation, and equity.

EQUANIMITY, evenness of mind. (L.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 1020. Formed as if from French. — Lat. æquanimitatem, acc. of æquanimitas, evenness of mind. — Lat. æquanimis, kind, mild; hence, calm. — Lat. æqu-, for æquus, equal; and animus, mind. See Equal and Animate.

EQUATION, a statement of equality. (L.) M. E. equacion, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. 71. — Lat. æquationem, acc. of æquatio, an equalising. — Lat. æquatus, pp. of æquare, to equalise. — Lat. æquus, equal. See Equal. Der. equal-or (Low Lat. æquator, from æquare) Milton, P. L. iii. 617; equa-ble (Lat. æquabilis, from æquare); equa-ble-ly; equa-bil-i-ty, spelt equabilite in Sir T. Elyot, Governour, b. iii. c. 20. Also ad-æquate.

EQUERRY, an officer who has charge of horses. (F., —Low Lat., —O. H. G.) Properly, it meant 'a stable,' and equerry really stands for equerry-man. It occurs in The Tatler, No. 19 (Todd). — F. écurie, formerly escurie, a stable; spelt escuyrie in Cotgrave. — Low Lat. scuria, a stable; Ducange. — O. H. G. skiura, scūra, M. H. G. schüre, a shed (mod. G. schauer); lit. a cover, shelter. — ✓SKU, to cover; see Sky. ¶ The spelling equerry is due to an attempt to connect it with Lat. æquus, a horse. There is, however, a real ultimate connection with esquire, q. v.

EQUESTRIAN, relating to horsemen. (L.) 'A certain equestrian order;' Spectator, no. 104. Formed, with suffix -an, from Lat. equestri, crude form of equester, belonging to horsemen. — Lat. equus, a horseman. — Lat. æquus, a horse. See Equine.

EQUI-, prefix, equally. (L.) Lat. æqui-, from æquus, equal; see Equal. Hence equi-angular, equi-distant, equi-lateral, equi-multiple, all in Kersey, ed. 1715. And see Equilibrium, Equinox, Equipollent, Equivalent, Equivocal.

EQUILIBRIUM, even balancing. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. — Lat. æquilibrium, a level position (in balancing). — Lat. æquilibris, level, balancing equally. — Lat. æqui-, for æquus, equal; and librare, to balance, from libra, a balance. See Equal and Librate.

EQUINE, relating to horses. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — Lat. equinus, relating to horses. — Lat. æquus, a horse. + Gk. ἵππος (dialectally ἰκκος), a horse. + Skt. agva, 'a runner,' a horse. — ✓AK, to pierce, also to go swiftly; cf. Skt. ap, to pervade, attain; Fick, i. 4. 5.

EQUINOX, the time of equal day and night. (F., —L.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 129. Chaucer has the adj. equinoctial, C. T. 14862. — F. équinoxe, spelt equinoce in Cotgrave. — Lat. æquinoctium, the equinox, time of equal day and night. — Lat. æqui-, for æquus, equal; and nocti-, crude form of nox, night. See Equal and Night. Der. equinocti-al, from Lat. æquinocti-um. ¶ Note that the suffix -nox is not the Lat. nom. nox, but comes from noctium.

EQUIP, to fit out, furnish. (F., —Scand.) In Cotgrave; and used by Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Ceyx, l. 67. [The sb. equipage is earlier, in Spenser, Sheph. Kal., Oct. 114; whence equipage as a verb, F. Q. ii. 9. 17.] — O. F. equiper, 'to equip, arm;' also spelt esquiper; Cot. — Icel. skipa, to arrange, set in order; closely related to Icel. skapa, to shape, form, mould. See Shape. Der. equip-age (O. F. equipage); equip-ment. ¶ We need not lay stress on the statement in Brachet, that equip meant 'to rig a ship.' Ship and equip are from the same root; and Icel. skipa sufficiently explains the word.

EQUIPOLLENT, equally powerful. (F., —L.) 'Thou wilt kinges be equipollent;' Lidgate, Ballad of Good Counsel, st. 3; in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 337. — O. F. equipollent; Cot. — Lat. æquipollent-, stem of æquipollens, of equal value. — Lat. æqui-, for æquus, equal; and pollens, pres. part. of pollere, to be strong, a verb of uncertain origin.

EQUITY, justice. (F., —L.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 241; M. E. equité, Gower, C. A. i. 271. — O. F. equité, 'equity;' Cot. — Lat. æquitatem, acc. of æquitas, equity; from æquus, equal. See Equal. Der. equit-able, O. F. equitable (Cot.); equit-abi-ly, equit-able-ness.

EQUIVALENT, of equal worth. (F., —L.) In Shak. Per. v. 1. 92. — O. F. equivalent, 'equivalent;' Cot. — Lat. æquivalent-, stem of pres. part. of æquivalere, to be equivalent. — Lat. æqui-, for æquus, equal; and uallere, to be worth. See Equal and Value. Der. equivalent-ly, equivalence.

EQUIVOCAL, of doubtful sense. (L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 3. 217. Formed, with suffix -al, from Lat. æquivocus, of doubtful sense. — Lat. æqui-, for æquus, equal (i. e. alternative); and voc-, base of vox, voice, sense. See Equi- and Voice. Der. equivocal-ly, equivocal-ness; hence also equivoc-ate (used by Cotgrave to translate O. F. equivocuer), equivoc-ation.

ERA, an epoch, fixed date. (L.) Spelt era in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. era, an era; derived from a particular use of ara, in the sense of 'counters,' or 'items of an account,' which is properly the pl. of as, brass, money (White and Riddle). See Ore.

ERADICATE, to root up. (L.) Sir T. Browne has eradication, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6. s. 1. — Lat. eradicatus, pp. of eradicare, to root up. — Lat. e, out; and radic-, stem of radix, a root. See Radical. Der. eradication.

ERASE, to scrape out, efface. (L.) Eras'd is in Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3. l. 214. — Lat. erasus, pp. of eradere, to scratch out. — Lat. e, out; and radere, to scrape. See Rase. Der. eras-er, eras-ion, eras-ement, eras-ure.

ERE, before, sooner than. (E.) M. E. er, Chaucer, C. T. 1042. — A. S. ær, soon, before; prep., conj., and adv.; Grein, i. 69. [Hence A. S. ær-lic, mod. E. early.] + Du. eer, adv. sooner. + Icel. dr, adv., soon, early. + O. H. G. ër, G. eker, sooner. + Goth. air, adv. early, soon. ¶ The oldest form is the Goth. air, and the word was orig. not a comparative, but a positive form, meaning 'soon;' whence ear-ly = soon-like, er-st = soon-est. Fick (iii. 30) connects it with the root I, to go.

ERECT, upright. (L.) M. E. erect, Chaucer, C. T. 4429. — Lat. erectus, set up, upright; pp. of erigere, to set up. — Lat. e, out, up; and regere, to rule, set. See Regal. Der. erect, vb., erect-ion.

ERMINE, an animal of the weasel tribe. (F., —O. H. G.) M. E. ermynne, Rob. of Glouc., p. 191; ermin, Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 1st Ser. p. 181, l. 361. — O. F. ermine (F. hermine), 'the hate-spot ermine;' Cot. [Cf. Span. armino, Ital. ermellino, ermine; Low Lat. armelinus, ermine-fur.] — O. H. G. harmîn, M. H. G. hermîn, ermine-fur; cf. mod. G. ermelin. β. The forms hermîn, hermelin, are extended from O. H. G. harmo, M. H. G. harme, an ermine, corresponding to Lithuanian szarmû, szarmonys, a weasel (Diez); cf. A. S. hearna, Wright's Vocab. i. 22, col. 2, l. 13. ¶ The derivation, suggested by Ducange, that ermine is for mus Armenius, Armenian mouse, an equivalent term to mus Ponticus, a Pontic mouse — an ermine, is adopted by Littré. [†]

ERODE, to eat away. (F., —L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist. s. 983. — O. F. eroder, 'to gnaw off, eat into;' Cot. — Lat. erodere, pp. erosus, to gnaw off; from e, off, and rodere. See Rodent. Der. eros-ion, eros-ive; from Lat. erosus.

EROTIC, amorous. (Gk.) 'This eroticall love;' Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, p. 442 (R.). — Gk. ἐρωτικός, relating to love. — Gk. ἔρως, crude form of ἔρως, love; on which see Curtius, i. 150.

ERR, to stray. (F., —L.) M. E. erren, Chaucer, Troilus, b. iv. l. 302. — O. F. errer, 'to erre;' Cot. — Lat. errare, to wander; which stands for an older form ers-are. + Goth. airz-jan, to make to err; a causal form. + O. H. G. irran (for irrjan), to make to err; O. H. G. irreôn, irrôn, M. H. G. and G. irren, to wander, go astray; O. H. G. irri, G. irre, astray. — ✓AR, to go, attain; cf. Skt. ri, to go, attain; whence, 'by means of a determinative, and as we may conjecture, a desiderative s, [the base] ers- was formed, with the fundamental meaning 'to go, to endeavour to arrive at, hence to err, Lat. errare, Goth. airz-jan, mod. G. irren;' Curtius, ii. 179. Cf. Skt. riak, to go. Der. err-or, q. v.; errant, q. v.; erratum, q. v.

ERRAND, a message. (E.) M. E. errende, errende, sometimes arrende (always with one r); Layamon, 10057. — A. S. ærrende, a message, business; Grein, i. 70. + Icel. eyrendi, örendi. + Swed. ärrende; Dan. ærrende. + O. H. G. aranti, arandi, a message. β. The form is like that of a pres. participle; cf. tid-ings. The orig. sense was perhaps 'going;' from ✓AR, to go, move; cf. Skt. ri, to go, move. Fick (iii. 21, 30) separates this word from Goth. airus, Icel. árr, a messenger, and connects it with A. S. æarr, Icel. ærr, swift, ready, Skt. arant, a horse. γ. The form of the root is plainly AR; but the sense remains uncertain. See Max Müller, Lect. i. 295, who takes it to be from ar, to plough, on the assumption that the sense of 'work' or 'business' was older than that of 'message.'

ERRANT, wandering. (F., —L.) 'Of errant knights;' Spenser, F. Q. v. 6. 6. — O. F. errant, 'errant, wandering;' Cot. Pres. pt. of O. F. errer, to wander. — Low Lat. iterare, to travel. — Lat. iter, a journey. See Eyre. [†]

ERRATUM, an error in writing or printing. (L.) Most common in the pl. errata; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. erratum, pl. errata, an error; neut. of erratus, pp. of errare. See Err. Der. erratic, from pp. erratus; whence erratic-al, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6, § 7; erratic-al-ly.

ERRONEOUS, faulty. (L.) 'Erronious doctrine;' Life of Dr. Barnes, ed. 1572, fol. Aaa. iijj. — Lat. erroneus, wandering about. — Lat. errare. See Err. Der. erroneously, erroneousness.

ERROR, a fault, mistake. (F., — L.) M.E. error, Gower, C. A. i. 21, iii. 159. — O.F. error, errur (Burguy). — Lat. errorem, acc. of error, a mistake, wandering. — Lat. errare. See Err. ¶ The spelling error was altered to error to be more like the Latin.

ERST, soonest, first. (E.) M.E. erst, Chaucer, C. T. 778. — A.S. erst, adv. soonest, adj. first, Grein, i. 71; the superl. form of A.S. der, soon. See Ere.

ERUBESCENT, blushing. (L.) Rare; in Johnson's Dict. — Lat. erubescens, stem of pres. pt. of erubescere, to grow red. — Lat. e, out, very much; and rubescere, to grow red, inceptive form of rubere, to be red. See Ruby. Der. erubescence, from F. erubescence (Cotgrave); from Lat. erubescencia, a blushing.

ERUCTATE, to belch out, reject wind. (L.) 'Ætna in times past hath eructated such huge gobbets of fire;' Howell's Letters, b. i. s. 1, let. 27. — Lat. eructatus, pp. of eructare, to belch out; from e, out, and ructare, to belch. Ructare is the frequentative of *rugere, seen in erugere (Festus), allied to rugire, to bellow, and to Gk. ἐρύγειν, to spit out, ἐρύγων, I bellowed; from base RUG, to bellow. — ✓ RU, to bray, yell; see Rumour. See Curtius, i. 222; Fick, i. 744. Der. eructat-ion.

ERUDITE, learned. (L.) 'A most erudite prince;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 645 b. — Lat. eruditus, pp. of erudire, to free from rudeness, to cultivate, teach. — Lat. e, out, from; and rudis, rude. See Rude. Der. erudite-ly, erudit-ion.

ERUPTION, a bursting out. (L.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. r. 69. — Lat. acc. eruptionem, from nom. eruptio, a breaking out. — Lat. e, out, and ruptio, a breaking, from ruptus, broken. See Rupture. Der. erupt-ive.

ERYSIPELAS, a redness on the skin. (L., — Gk.) Spelt erysipely (from O.F. erysipèle) in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. erysipelas. — Gk. ἐρύσιπελας (stem ἐρύσιπελατ-), a redness on the skin. — Gk. ἐρύσι-, equivalent to ἐρυθρός, red; and πέλλα, skin. See Red and Pell. Der. erysipelat-ous (from the stem).

ESCALADE, a scaling of walls. (F., — Span., — L.) The Span. form scalado (which occurs in Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 165) was displaced later by the F. escalade. — O.F. escalade, 'a scalado, a scaling;' Cot. — Span. escalado, properly escalada, an escalade; these are the masc. and fem. forms of the pp. of the verb escalar, to scale, climb. — Span. escala, a ladder. — Lat. scala, a ladder. See Scale (2).

ESCAPE, to flee away, evade. (F., — L.) M.E. escapen, Chaucer, C. T. 14650. — O.F. escaper, eschaper (F. échapper), to escape; cf. Low Lat. escapium, flight. — Lat. ex capā, out of one's cape or cloak; to escape is to ex-cape oneself, to slip out of one's cape, and get away. See Cape. ¶ In Italian, we not only have scappare, to escape, but also incappare, to 'in-cape,' to fall into a snare, to invest with a cape or cope; also incappucciare, to wrap up in a hood, to mask.

Der. escape-ment; escap-ade, from O.F. escapade, orig. an escape, from Ital. scappata, an escape, fem. of pp. of scappare, to escape. Hence, later, the sense of 'escape from restraint.'

ESCARPMENT, a smooth and steep decline. (F.) A military term; the verb is generally scarpe rather than escarp; see Scarp.

ESCHEAT, a forfeiture of property to the lord of the fee. (F., — L.) M.E. eschete, escheyte; 'Ilese menyne escheytes' = I (the king) lose many eschetes; P. Plowman, C. v. 169. — O.F. eschet, that which falls to one, rent; a pp. form from the verb escheoir, to fall to one's share (F. échoir). — Low Lat. excadere, to fall upon, meet (any one), used A.D. 1229 (Ducange); from Lat. ex, out, and cadere, to fall. See Chance. Der. eschate, verb; and see Cheat.

ESCHIEW, to shun, avoid. (F., — O.H.G.) M.E. eschewen, eschewen; P. Plowman, C. ix. 51. — O.F. eschever, 'to shun, eschew, avoid, bend from;' Cot. and Roquefort. — O.H.G. sciuhan, M.H.G. schuhen, to frighten; also, intr. to fear, shy at. — O.H.G. and M.H.G. schiech, schich, mod. G. schew, shy; cognate with E. shy. Thus eschew and shy (verb) are doublets. See Shy. [†]

ESCORT, a guide, guard. (F., — Ital., — L.) 'Escort, a convoy;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. — O.F. escorte, 'a guide, convoy;' Cot. — Ital. scorta, an escort, guide, convoy; fem. of pp. of scorgere, to see, perceive, guide. Formed as if from Lat. excorrigere, a compound of ex and corrigere, to set right, correct; see Correct. Der. escort, verb. ¶ Similarly Ital. accorgere, to find out, answers to a Lat. ad-corrigere; see Diez.

ESCULENT, eatable. (L.) 'Or any esculent, as the learned talk;' Massinger, New Way to Pay, Act iv. sc. 2. — Lat. esculentus,

ESCUTCHEON, a painted shield. (F., — L.) Spelt scutcheon in Bacon, Essay 29 (ed. Wright, p. 129); scuchin, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 4. 16. — O.F. escusson, 'a scutcheon,' Cot.; answering to a Low Lat. form scutionem, from a nom. scutio. The form scutio does not appear, but depends upon Lat. scutum, a shield, just as F. escusson does upon O.F. escu, a shield. See Esquire. Cf. Ital. scudone, a great shield, from scudo, a shield; but note that the F. suffix -on has a dimin. force, while the Ital. -one is augmentative. [†]

ESOPHAGUS, the food-passage, gullet. (L., — Gk.) Also œsophagus. 'Oesophagus, the gullet;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Oesophagus is a Latinised form of Gk. οισοφάγος, the gullet. — Gk. οισο- = οισα, I shall carry, used as a future from a base oi-, to carry, which is allied to Skt. vi, to go, to drive; and φαγ-, base of φαγεῖν, to eat. Hence œsophagus = food-conveyer.

ESOTERIC, inner, secret. (Gk.) 'Exoteric and esoteric;' Warburton, Divine Legation, b. ii. note Bb (R.). — Gk. ἐσωτερικός, inner; a term expanded from Gk. ἐσώτερος, inner, a comparative form from ἔσω, within, an adv. from ἐσ- = eis, into, prep. ¶ A term used of those disciples of Pythagoras, Aristotle, &c. who were scientifically taught, as opposed to those who had more popular views, the exoteric. See Exoteric.

ESPALIER, lattice-work for training trees. (F., — Ital., — L., — Gk.) In Pope, Sat. ii. 147. 'Espaliers, trees planted in a curious order against a frame;' Kersey, ed. 1715. — O.F. espallier, 'an hedge-row of sundry fruit-trees set close together;' Cot. — Ital. spalliera, the back of a chair; an espalier (from its forming a back or support). — Ital. spalla, a shoulder, top, back. — Lat. spatula, a blade; in late Lat. a shoulder. See Epaulet.

ESPECIAL, special, particular. (F., — L.) M.E. especial, Chaucer, C. T., Group B, l. 2356 (Six-text). — O.F. especial. — Lat. specialis, belonging to a particular kind. — Lat. species, a kind. See Species. Der. especial-ly. ¶ Often shortened to special, as in Chaucer, C. T. 1018.

ESPLANADE, a level space. (F., — Ital., — L.) 'Esplanade, properly the glacis or slope of the counterscarp; but it is now chiefly taken for the void space between the glacis of a citadel and the first houses of a town;' Kersey, ed. 1715. — O.F. esplanade, 'a planing, levelling, evening of ways;' Cot. Formed from O.F. esplaner, to level, in imitation of Ital. spianata, an esplanade, lit. a levelled way, from Ital. spianare, to level. — Lat. explanare, to flatten out, explain. See Explain. ¶ Derived in Brachet from the corresponding Ital. splanata (sic); but the Ital. form is rather spianata.

ESPOUSE, to give or take as spouse. (F., — L.) In Shak. Hen. V, ii. r. 81. — O.F. espouser, 'to espouse, wed;' Cot. — O.F. espouse, 'a spouse, wife;' id. See Spouse. Der. espous-er; espousal, M.E. espousaille, Gower, C. A. ii. 322, from O.F. espousailles, answering to Lat. sponsalia, neut. pl., a betrothal, which from sponsalis, adj. formed from sponsa, a betrothed one.

ESPY, to spy, catch sight of. (F., — O.H.G.) M.E. espyen, espien, Chaucer, C. T. 4744; often written aspian, as in P. Plowman, A. ii. 201. [It occurs as early as in Layamon; vol. ii. p. 204.] — O.F. espier, to spy. — O.H.G. spehôn, M.H.G. spehen (mod. G. spähen), to watch, observe closely. + Lat. specere, to look. + Gk. σκέπτομαι, I look, regard, spy. + Skt. paç, spag, to spy; used to form some tenses of driç, to see. — ✓ SPAK, to see. Fick, i. 251. See Species, Spy. Der. espion-age, F. espionnage, from O.F. espion, a spy (Cotgrave); which from Ital. spione, a spy, and from the same O.H.G. verb. Also espi-al, Gower, C. A. iii. 56.

ESQUIRE, a shield-bearer, gentleman. (F., — L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, i. 4. Often shortened to squire, M.E. sqwyer, Chaucer, C. T. prol. 79. — O.F. escuyer, 'an esquire, or squire;' Cot. (Older form escuter, esquier, Burguy; mod. F. écuyer). — Low Lat. scutarius, prop. a shield-bearer. — Lat. scutum (whence O.F. escut, escu, mod. F. écu), a shield. — ✓ SKU, to cover, protect; see Sky.

ESSAY, an attempt. (F., — L., — Gk.) See Bacon's Essays. [Commonly spelt essay in Mid. English; Barbour has assay, an assault, Bruce, ix. 604, an effort, ii. 371, and as a verb, ix. 353. See Assay.] — O.F. essai, a trial. — Lat. exagium, weighing, a trial of weight. — Gk. ἐξάγων [not ἐξάγων], a weighing (White and Riddle, Lat. Dict.). — Gk. ἐξάγειν, to lead out, export merchandise. — Gk. ἐξ, out; and άγειν, to lead. See Agent. For the sense, see Exact, Examine. Der. essay, verb, spelt assay in Shakespeare, and even later; essay-ist, Ben Jonson, Discoveries, Ingeniorum Discrimina, not. 6. [†]

ESSENCE, a being, quality. (F., — L.) In Shak. Oth. iv. i. 16. — F. essence, 'an essence;' Cot. — Lat. essentia, a being; formed from essent-, base of a pres. participial form from esse, to be. — ✓ AS, to be; cf. Skt. as, to be. See Is. Der. essent-i-al, essent-i-al-ly; from the crude form essenti-.

ESTABLISH, to make firm or sure. (F.,—L.) M. E. establißen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4 (l. 311).—O. F. establiß, base of some parts of the verb establi, to establish.—Lat. stabilire, to make firm.—Lat. stabilis, firm. See Stable, adj. Der. establishment, Spenser, F. Q. v. 11. 35. ¶ Sometimes stablish; A. V., James, v. 8.

ESTATE, state, condition, rank. (F.,—L.) In early use. M. E. estat, Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 13, l. 13; Chaucer, C. T. 928.—O. F. estat (F. état).—Lat. status. See State. ¶ State is a later spelling.

ESTEEM, to value. (F.,—L.) 'Nothing esteemed of;' Spenser, p. 3, col. 2. (Globe ed.)—O. F. estimer, 'to esteem;' Cot.—Lat. astimare, older form astumare, to value. This stands for ais-tumare, to be put beside Sabine aisos, prayer, from ✓ IS, to seek, seek after, wish; cf. Skt. ish, to desire. See Ask, which is from the same root. See below.

ESTIMATE, valuation, worth. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 3. 56.—Lat. sb. astimatus, estimation; from astimatus, pp. of astimare, to value. See Esteem. Der. estimate, verb, in Daniel, Civil Wars, b. iv (R.); also estimation, from O. F. estimation, 'an estimation' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. estimationem; also estimable, Merch. of Ven. i. 3. 167, from O. F. estimable, from Lat. astimabilis, worthy of esteem; whence estimably.

ESTRANGE, to alienate, make strange. (F.,—L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 213.—O. F. estranger, 'to estrange, alienate;' Cot.—O. F. estrangle, 'strange;' id. See Strange. Der. estrangement. ¶ The adj. strange was in much earlier use.

ESTUARY, the mouth of a tidal river. (L.) 'From hence we double the Boulness, and come to an estuarie;' Holinshed, Descr. of Britain, c. 14 (R).—Lat. æstuarium, a creek.—Lat. æstuar, to surge, foam as the tide.—Lat. æstus, heat, surge, tide; from base aid, to burn, with suffix -tu-.—✓ IDH, to burn, glow; whence also Skt. indh, to kindle, Gk. αἶθευ, to glow. See Ether.

ETCH, to engrave by help of acids. (Du.,—G.) 'Etching, a kind of graving upon copper with Aqua-fortis;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Du. eisen, to etch (a borrowed word from German).—G. ätzen, to feed, bait, corrode, etch; this is a causal form, orig. signifying 'to make to eat'—M. H. G. æzen, causal of M. H. G. ezzen, to eat, now spelt essen, which is cognate with E. eat. See Eat. ¶ The E. word may have been borrowed directly from the German, but that it passed through Holland on its way hither is far more likely. Der. etching.

ETERNAL, everlasting. (F.,—L.) M. E. eternal, Chaucer, C. T. 15502; also written eternel.—O. F. eternel.—Lat. æternalis, formed with suffix -alis from æternus, everlasting, contracted form of æuiternus. Again, æui-ternus is formed, with suffix -ternus, indicating quality, from æui, put for æuo, crude form of æuum, age. See Age. Der. eternal-ly; from same source, eterni-ty—M. E. eternite, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 6, l. 4986, from F. eternité, which from Lat. acc. æternitatem; also etern-ise, from O. F. eterniser, 'to eternize;' Cotgrave. ¶ The Middle English also had eterne, Chaucer, C. T. 1992; = Lat. æternus.

ETHER, the clear upper air. (L.,—Gk.) In Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph. b. i. l. 86. [Milton has ethereal, ethereous, P. L. i. 45, vi. 473.]—Lat. æther.—Gk. αἰθήρ, upper air; cf. Gk. αἶθα, clear sky.—Gk. αἶθευ, to burn, glow.—✓ IDH, to burn; cf. Skt. indh, to kindle. Der. ether-eal, ether-eous, ether-e-al-ly, ether-e-al-ise. And see estuary.

ETHIC, relating to custom. (L.,—Gk.) Commonly used as ethics, sb. pl. 'I will never set politics against ethics;' Bacon (in Todd's Johnson).—Lat. ethicus, moral, ethic.—Gk. ἠθικός, ethic, moral.—Gk. ἥθος, custom, moral nature; cf. ἔθος, manner, custom. β. Cognate with Goth. sidus, custom, manner. + G. sitte, custom. + Skt. svadhā, self-will, strength. And cf. Lat. suetus, accustomed. γ. The Skt. form is easily resolved into sva, one's own self (= Lat. se = Gk. ἐ), and dhā, to set, place (= Gk. θε); so that Skt. svadhā (= Gk. ἐ-θεα) is 'a placing of one's self,' hence, self-assertion, self-will, habit. See Curtius, i. 311. Der. ethic-al, ethic-al-ly, ethic-ise.

ETHNIC, relating to a nation. (L.,—Gk.) In Ben Jonson's Discoveries; Veritas proprium hominis. Also in Levins.—Lat. ethnicus.—Gk. ἔθνικός, national.—Gk. ἔθνος, a nation; of uncertain origin. Der. ethnic-al; ethno-logy, ethno-graphy (modern words).

ETIQUETTE, ceremony. (F.,—G.) Modern; and mere French. = F. étiquette, a label, ticket; explained by Cotgrave as 'a token, billet, or ticket, delivered for the benefit or advantage of him that receives it;' i. e. a form of introduction.—O. F. etiquet, 'a little note, . . . esp. such as is stuck up on the gate of a court,' &c.; Cot.—G. sticken, to stick, put, set, fix. See Stick, verb. Doublet, ticket.

ETYMON, the true source of a word. (L.,—Gk.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 242; and earlier, in Holinshed's Chron. of Scotland (R).—Lat. etymon.—Gk. ἔτυμον, an etymon; neut. of ἔτυμος, true, real, an extended form from ἔρεός, true, real; cognate with A. S. sōð, true. See Sooth. Der. etymo-logy, spell etimologie in The Remedie of Love, st. 60, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 323, back (derived from F. etymologie, in Cotgrave, Lat. etymologia, Gk. ἐτυμολογία); etymo-log-ise, spelt etimologise, id. st. 62; etymo-log-ist; also etymo-logi-c-al, etymo-logi-c-al-ly.

EU-, prefix, well. (Gk.) From Gk. εὖ, well; properly neut. of εἶς, good, put for an older form ἐσ-ος, real, literally 'living' or 'being;' from ✓ AS, to be. ¶ From the same root are essence and sooth; see Curtius, i. 469.

EUCCHARIST, the Lord's supper. (L.,—Gk.) Shortened from eucharistia, explained as 'thanks-giving' in Tyndale's Works, p. 467, col. 2. Cotgrave has: 'Eucharistie, the Eucharist.'—Lat. eucharistia.—Gk. εὐχαριστία, a giving of thanks, the Eucharist.—Gk. εὖ, well; and χαρίζομαι, I shew favour, from χάρις, favour, closely related to χαρά, joy, and χαίρειν, to rejoice.—✓ GHAR, to desire; whence also E. yearn. See Eu- and Yearn. Der. eucharist-ic, eucharist-ic-al.

EULOGY, praise. (L.,—Gk.) In Spenser, Tears of the Muses. l. 372. Shortened from late Lat. eulogium, which was itself used at a later date, in the Tatler, no. 138. [Cf. O. F. euloge.]—Gk. εὐλογία, in classical Gk. εὐλογία, praise, lit. good speaking.—Gk. εὖ, well; and λέγειν, to speak. See Eu- and Logic. Der. eulog-ise, eulog-ist, eulog-ist-ic-al, eulog-ist-ic-al-ly.

EUNUCH, one who is castrated. (L.,—Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. iii. 201.—Lat. eunūchus (Terence).—Gk. εὐνούχος, a eunuch, a chamberlain; one who had charge of the sleeping apartments.—Gk. εὐνή, a couch, bed; and ἐχειν, to have in charge, hold, keep.

EUPHEMISM, a softened expression. (Gk.) 'Euphemismus, a figure in rhetoric, whereby a foul harsh word is chang'd into another that may give no offence;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. But spelt euphemism in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Gk. εὐφημισμός, a later word for εὐφημία, the use of words of good omen.—Gk. εὖ, well; and φημί, I speak, from ✓ BHA, to speak. See Eu- and Fame. Der. euphem-ist-ic.

EUPHONY, a pleasing sound. (Gk.) Euphony in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Euphonia, a graceful sound;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—Gk. εὐφωνία, euphony.—Gk. εὐφώνος, sweet-voiced.—Gk. εὖ, well; and φωνή, voice, from ✓ BHA, to speak. See Eu- and Fame. Der. euphon-ic, euphon-ic-al, euphoni-ous, euphoni-ous-ly.

EUPHRASY, the plant eye-bright. (Gk.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 414. [Cf. F. euphrase, eye-bright; Cot.] The eye-bright was called Euphrasia, and was supposed to be beneficial to the eyes.—Gk. εὐφρασία, delight.—Gk. εὐφραίνειν, to delight, cheer.—Gk. εὖ, well; and φρεν-, base of φρήν, the mind, orig. the midriff, heart.

EUPHUISM, affectation in speaking. (Gk.) So named from a book called Euphues, by John Lyly, first printed in 1579.—Gk. εὐφρησ, well-grown, goodly, excellent.—Gk. εὖ, well; and φή, growth, from φύομαι, I grow, from ✓ BHU, to be. See Eu- and Be. Der. euphu-ist, euphu-ist-ic.

EUROCLYDON, a tempestuous wind. (Gk.) In Acts, xxvii. 14.—Gk. εὐροκλύδων, apparently 'a storm from the East,' but there are various readings. As it stands, the word is from εὐρος, the S. E. wind (Lat. Eurus), and κλύδων, surge, from κλύειν, to surge, dash as waves. ¶ Another reading is εὐρακίλων—Lat. Euro-Aquilo in the Vulgate.

EUTHANASIA, easy death. (Gk.) 'Euthanasia, a happy death;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Gk. εὐθανασία, an easy death; cf. εὐθάναντος, dying well.—Gk. εὖ, well; and θανεῖν, to die, on which see Curtius, ii. 163.

EVACUATE, to discharge. (L.) In Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 7.—Lat. evacuatus, pp. of evacuare, to discharge, empty out.—Lat. e, out; and vacuus, empty. See Vacate. Der. evacuati-ion, evacuati-or.

EVADE, to shun, escape from. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 1. 13.—F. evader, 'to evade;' Cot.—Lat. evadere, pp. evasus, to escape, get away from.—Lat. e, off; and vadere, to go. See Wade. Der. evas-ion, q. v., from pp. evasus; also evas-ive, evas-ive-ly, evas-ive-ness.

EVANESCENT, fading away. (L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731.—Lat. evanescent, stem of pres. pt. of evanescere, to vanish away.—Lat. e, away; and vanescere, to vanish. See Vanish. Der. evanescence.

EVANGELIST, a writer of a gospel. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In early use. Spelt ewangeliste, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 209.—O. F. ewangeliste, 'an evangelist;' Cot.—Lat. ewangelista.—Gk. εὐαγγελιστής.—Gk. εὐαγγέλιον, a reward for good tidings; also, good tidings, gospel.—Gk. εὖ, well; and ἀγγελία, tidings, from ἄγγελος, a messenger. See Eu- and Angel. Der. (from Gk. εὐαγγέλιον) evangel-ic, evangel-ic-al, evangel-ic-al-ly, evangel-ic-ism, evangel-ise, evangel-is-at-ion.

EVAPORATE, to fly off in vapour. (L.) The sb. evaporation is in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 22. The verb is in Cotgrave.

to translate F. evaporer.—Lat. evaporatus, pp. of evaporare, to disperse in vapour.—Lat. e, away; and vapor, vapour. See Vapour. Der. evaporat-ion, evapora-ble.

EVASION, an excuse. (L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 693 c.—Lat. evasionem, acc. of evasio (Judith, xii. 20), an escape.—Lat. easus, pp. of evadere; see Evide.

EVE, EVEN, the latter part of the day. (E.) Eve is short for even, by loss of final n; evening is from the same source, but is discussed below separately. M. E. eve, even, both in Chaucer, C. T. 4993, 9890; the form even occurs even earlier, Owl and Nightingale, l. 41; the full form appears as efen, Ormulum, 1105; efen, Layamon, 26696.—A. S. æfen, efēn, Grein, i. 64. + O. Sax. āvand; O. Fries. āvend. + Icel. aptan, aptan. + Swed. afton; Dan. aften. + O. H. G. ābant, M. H. G. ābent, G. abend. β. Origin doubtful; yet these forms point to an early Germanic AFAN (Scand. aftan), clearly an extension from Goth. af, off (cf. O. H. G. abe, G. ab, E. of, off, Skt. apa). The Goth. afar, after, and E. after, are comparative forms from the same base. Thus even and after are related in form, and probably in meaning; even probably meant 'decline' or 'end'; cf. Skt. aparā, posterior, aparā sandhyā, evening twilight. The allusion is thus to the latter end of the day. See After. ¶ Not connected with even, adj. Der. even-song, Chaucer, C. T. 832; even-tide, Ancren Riwle, p. 404. = A. S. æfen-tīd, Grein; also even-ing, q. v.

EVEN, equal, level. (E.) M. E. euen, euene; P. Plowman, C. xxxiii. 270.—A. S. efēn, efn, sometimes contracted to em, Grein, i. 218. + Du. even. + Icel. jafn. + Dan. jæv. + Swed. jämna. + Goth. ibns. + O. H. G. epan; G. eben. β. The form of the base is EBNA; Fick, iii. 37. Root unknown; perhaps related to E. ebb. Der. even, adv., even-handed, &c., even-ly, even-ness.

EVENING, eve, the latter end of the day. (E.) M. E. euening, euensyng, Rob. of Glouc. p. 312.—A. S. æfnung, Gen. viii. 11; put for æfen-ung, and formed with suffix -ung (=mod. E. -ing) from æfen, eve. See Eve.

EVENT, circumstance, result. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 245.—Lat. eventus, or eventum, an event.—Lat. eventus, pp. of evenire, to happen.—Lat. e, out; and venire, to come. See Come. Der. event-ful; also event-u-al, event-u-al-ly (from eventu-s).

EVER, continually. (E.) M. E. ewer, ewere (where u=v), Chaucer, C. T. 834; æfre, Ormulum, 206.—A. S. æfre, Grein, i. 64. The ending -re answers to the common A. S. ending of the dat. fem. sing. of adjectives, and has an adverbial force. The base æf- is clearly related to A. S. āwa, ever, Goth. aiw, ever; which are based upon the sb. which appears as Goth. aiws, Lat. ævum, Gk. alāw, life. See Age, Aye. Der. ever-green, ever-lasting (Wyclif, Rom. vi. 22, 23), ever-lasting-ly, ever-lasting-ness; ever-more (Rob. of Glouc. p. 47); also ever-y, q. v.; ever-y-where, q. v.; n-ever, q. v.

EVERY, each one. (E.) Lit. 'ever-each.' M. E. eweri (with u=v) short for ewerich, Chaucer, C. T. 1853; other forms are ewere-ile, Havelok, 1330; ewere-il, id. 218; ewer-ule, Layamon, 2378; ewer-alc, ewer-ech, id. 4599.—A. S. æfre, ever; and alc, each (Scotch ilk). See Ever and Each.

EVERYWHERE, in every place. (E.) Spelt ewerihwar, Ancren Riwle, p. 200; ewer ihwar, Legend of St. Katharine, 681. Compounded of ewer (A. S. æfre), and M. E. ikwar (A. S. gehwar, everywhere, Grein, i. 415). β. Thus the word is not compounded of every and where, but of ever and ywhere, where ywhere=A. S. gehwar, a word formed by prefixing A. S. ge to hwar, where. Similarly we find aywhere=everywhere (lit. aye-where) in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 228.

¶ Of course it has long been regarded as every-where, though its real force is ever-where.

EVICT, to evince, to dispossess. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. 'That this deliverance might be the better evicted,' i.e. evinced; Bp. Hall, Contemplations, b. iv. c. xix. sect. 25.—Lat. evictus, pp. of evincere. See Evince. Der. evict-ion.

EVIDENT, manifest. (F.,—L.) Chaucer has evidently (with u=v), Treat. on the Astrolabe, pt. ii. sect. 23, rubric; and evidences, pl. sb., id. prol. l. 2.—O. F. evident, 'evident'; Cot.—Lat. evidens, stem of evidens, visible, pres. pt. of evidere, to see clearly.—Lat. e, out, clearly; and videre, to see; see Vision. Der. evident-ly, evidence (O. F. evidencia).

EVIL, wicked, bad. (E.) M. E. euel (with u=v), evil; also iel, Havelok, 114; ifel, Ormulum, 1742; vuel (for uvel), Ancren Riwle, p. 52.—A. S. yfel, Grein, ii. 768; whence also yfel, sb. an evil. + Du. euvel. + O. H. G. upil, M. H. G. ubel, G. übel. + Goth. ubils. Root unknown. ¶ Related to Gk. ὕβρις, insult (from ὕμῃρ?). Der. evil, sb.; evil-ly; evil-doer, &c. Doublet, ill, which is Scandinavian; see Ill.

EVINCE, to prove beyond doubt. (L.) In Dryden, Hind and Panther, ii. 190, 233.—Lat. evincere, to overcome.—Lat. e, fully; and vincere, to conquer. See Victor. ¶ Older word, evict, q. v.

EVISCERATE, to disembowel. (L.) In Burton, Anat. of Melanch. p. 125 (R.).—Lat. evisceratus, pp. of eviscerare, to disembowel.—Lat. e, out; and viscera, bowels; see Viscera. Der. eviscerat-ion.

EVOKE, to call out. (L.) It occurs in Cockeram's Dict (1st ed. 1623), according to Todd, but was not in common use till much later. [The sb. evocation is in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, pref. sect. 1; also in Cotgrave, to translate O. F. evocation.]—Lat. evocare, to call forth.—Lat. e, out; and vocare, to call, from voc-, base of vox, voice. See Voice. Der. evocat-ion, from O. F. evocation.

EVOLVE, to disclose, develop. (L.) In Hale's Origin of Mankind (ed. 1677?), pp. 33, 63 (R.).—Lat. evoluerē, to unroll.—Lat. e, out; and voluerē, to roll. See Voluble. Der. evolution, in Hale (as above), p. 259; evolution-ary, evolution-ist.

EWEE, a female sheep. (E.) M. E. ewe; see Wyclif, Gen. xxi. 28.—A. S. eowu, Gen. xxxii. 14. + Du. oot. + Icel. ær. + O. H. G. aui, M. H. G. onwe. + *Goth. aui, a sheep, in comp. awethi, a flock of sheep, awistr, a sheepfold; John, x. 16. + Lithuanian avis, a sheep. + Russ. outsa, a sheep. + Lat. ouis. + Gk. ōis. + Skt. avi, a sheep, ewe. β. 'The Skt. avis, as an adjective, means "devoted, attached;" and is prob. derived from the ✓ AV (AW), to please, satisfy; according to this, the sheep was called "pet," or "favourite," from its gentleness;' Curtius, i. 488. See Audience.

EWER, a water-jug. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 350. M. E. ewer, Rob. Manning's Hist. of England, ed. Furnivall, l. 11425 (Stratmann).—*O. F. ewier, *ewaire or *ewiere, not found, but see O. F. ewe=water (also spelt aigue), in Bartsch, Chrestomathie Franç. col. 35, l. 7; another form of the word was aiguere, which Cotgrave explains by 'an ewer, or laver.'—Lat. aquaria, fem. of aquarius, used as equivalent to aquarium (neut. of aquarius) a vessel for water; formed with suffix -arius from aqu-a, water. See Aquatic. [†]

EX-, prefix, signifying 'out' or 'thoroughly.' (L.) Lat. ex, out; cognate with Gk. ἐξ or ἐκ, out, and Russ. iz', out; see Curtius, i. 479. It becomes ef- before f, as in ef-fuse. It is shortened to e- before b, d, g, l, m, n, r, v; as in e-bullient, e-dit, e-gress, e-late, e-manate, e-normous, e-rose, e-vade. The Gk. form appears in eccentric, ecclesiastic, eclectic, ec-logue, ec-lipse, ec-stasy. It takes the form es- in O. F. and Spanish; cf. es-cape, es-cheat, es-cort, es-planade. In some words it becomes s-, as in Italian; see s-cald, s-camper.

EXACERBATE, to embitter. (L.) The sb. exacerbation is in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 61 (R.).—Lat. exacerbatus, pp. of exacerbare, to irritate; from ex, out, thoroughly, and acerbus, bitter. See Acerbity. Der. exacerbat-ion.

EXACT (1), precise, measured. (L.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 19.—Lat. exactus, pp. of exigere, to drive out, also to weigh out, measure.—Lat. ex, out; and agere, to drive. See Agent. Der. exact-ly, exact-ness; and see below.

EXACT (2), to demand, require. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 99.—O. F. exacter, 'to exact, extort'; Cot.—Low Lat. exactare, intensive of Lat. exigere (pp. exactus), to exact, lit. to drive out; see above. Der. exact-ion, from O. F. exaction, 'exaction'; Cot.

EXAGGERATE, to heap up, magnify. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate O. F. exaggerer.—Lat. exaggeratus, pp. of exaggerare, to heap up, amplify.—Lat. ex; and aggarare, to heap, from agger, a heap.—Lat. aggerere, to bring together; from ag- (for ad before g) and gerere, to carry. See Jest. Der. exaggerat-ion (O. F. exag-geration, Cot.); exaggerat-ive, exaggerat-or-y.

EXALT, to raise on high. (F.,—L.) In Shak. K. Lear, v. 3. 67; and perhaps earlier. [The sb. exaltation is in Chaucer, C. T. 6284, and exaltat (pp.), id. 6286.]—O. F. exalter, 'to exalt'; Cot.—Lat. exaltare, to exalt.—Lat. ex; and altus, high. See Altitude. Der. exalt-at-ion (O. F. exaltation, Cot.); exalt-ed, exalt-ed-ness.

EXAMINE, to test, try. (F.,—L.) M. E. examine, Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus (Group B, 2311); Gower, C. A. ii. 11.—O. F. examiner; Cot.—Lat. examinare, to weigh carefully.—Lat. examen (stem examin-) the tongue of a balance, put for exag-men; cf. exigere, to weigh out.—Lat. ex; and agere, to drive. See Agent and Exact (1). Der. examin-er; examin-at-ion (O. F. examination, Cot.).

EXAMPLE, a pattern, specimen. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 191. [Earlier form ensample, q. v.]—O. F. exemple (Burguy), later exemple (Cot.).—Lat. exemplum, a sample, pattern, specimen.—Lat. eximere, to take out; hence, to select a specimen.—Lat. ex; and emere, to take, to buy, with which cf. Russ. imiēte, to have. From the base AM, to take; Fick, i. 493. Der. see exemplar, exemplify, exempt. Doublets, ensample, sample.

EXASPERATE, to provoke. (L.) In Shak. K. Lear, v. 1. 60. Properly a pp., as in Macb. iii. 6. 38.—Lat. exasperatus, pp. of exasperare, to roughen, provoke.—Lat. ex; and asper, rough. See Asperity. Der. exasperat-ion, from O. F. exasperation, Cot.

EXCAVATION, a hollowing out. (F., -L.) 'Thesb. excavation is in Cotgrave, to translate O.F. excavation; the verb is later. - O.F. excavation. - Lat. excavationem, acc. of excavatio, a hollowing out. - Lat. excavatus, pp. of excavare, to hollow out. - Lat. ex, out; and cauare, to make hollow, from caus, hollow. See Cave. Der. excavate, suggested by the sb.; whence excavat-or.

EXCEED, to go beyond, excel. (F., -L.) M.E. exceden; 'That he mesure naught excede;' Gower, C. A. iii. 157. - O.F. exceder, 'to exceed'; Cot. - Lat. excedere, pp. excessus, to go out; from ex, out, and cedere, to go. See Cede. Der. exceed-ing (Othello, iii. 3. 258), exceed-ing-ly (id. 372); and see excess.

EXCEL, to surpass. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 12. 35. [The sb. excellence and adj. excellent are older; see Chaucer, C. T. 11941, 11944.] - O.F. exceller, 'to excel'; Cot. - Lat. excellere, to raise; also, to surpass. - Lat. ex; and *cellere, to impel, whence antecellere, percellere, &c. See Celerity. Der. excell-ent (O.F. pres. pt. excellens); excell-ence (O.F. excellence, from Lat. excellencia); excellency.

EXCEPT, to take out, exclude. (F., -L.) See the phrase 'excepte cryst one' = except Christ alone, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 215. [The sb. exception is in Lidgate, Complaint of the Black Knight, st. 23.] - O.F. excepter, 'to except'; Cot. - Lat. exceptare, intensive of excipere, to take out. - Lat. ex, out; and capere, to take. See Capable. Der. except, prep.; except-ing; except-ion (O.F. exception, Cot.); except-ion-al, except-ion-able, except-ive, except-or.

EXCERPT, a selected passage. (L.) Modern; not in Johnson. But the verb to excerpt was in use. 'Excerpt, to pick out or choose;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. excerptum, an extract, neut. of excerptus, pp. of excerpere, to select. - Lat. ex, out; and carpere, to pluck, cull. See Harvest.

EXCESS, a going beyond, intemperance. (F., -L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 73; Gower, C. A. ii. 276. - O.F. exceze, 'superfluity, excess'; Cot. - Lat. excessus, a going out, deviation; from the pp. of excedere; see Exceed. Der. excess-ive, M.E. excessif, Gower, C. A. iii. 177. - O.F. excessif, 'excessive'; Cot.; excess-ive-ly, excess-ive-ness.

EXCHANGE, to give or take in change. (F., -L.) M.E. eschauge, sb.; 'The Lumbard made non eschauge;' Gower, C. A. i. 10. The verb seems to be later; it occurs in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 6. 6. The prefix es- was changed to ex- to make the word more like Latin. - O.F. eschange, sb.; eschanger, vb., to exchange; Cot. - O.F. es- (= Lat. ex-), and changer, to change. See Change. Der. exchange-er, exchange-able.

EXCHEQUER, a court; formerly a court of revenue. (F.) M.E. eschekere, a court of revenue, treasury; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 280. Spelt chequer, P. Plowman, B. prol. 93. - O.F. eschiquier, a chess-board; hence the checkered cloth on which accounts were calculated by means of counters; see Blount's Law Dict. and Camden's Britannia. [See also eschiquier in Cotgrave.] - O.F. eschec, check (at chess); eschess, chess. See Check, Checker, Chess.

¶ The Low Lat. form is scaccarium, meaning (1) a chess-board, (2) exchequer; from Low Lat. scacci, chess.

EXCISE (1), a duty or tax. (Du., -F., -L.) 'The townes of the Lowe-Countryes doe cutt upon themselves an excise of all thinges,' &c.; Spenser, State of Ireland, Globe ed. p. 669. 'Excise, from the Belg. accise, tribute; so called, perhaps, because it is assessed according to the verdict of the assise, or a number of men deputed to that office by the king;' Gazophylacium Anglicanum, 1689. 'This tribute is paid in Spain, . . and in Portugal, where it is called sisa. I suppose it is the same with the excise in England and the Low Countries;' Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 2. R. 9 (R.) β. A misspelling of O. Du. aksis or aksys, spelt aksys in Sewel's Du. Dict., where it is explained to mean 'excise.' Cf. G. accise, excise. The more correct spelling accise occurs in Howell's Familiar Letters. 'Twere cheap living here [in Amsterdam], were it not for the monstrous accises which are imposed upon all sorts of commodities;' vol. i. let. vii., dated May 1, 1619. Again, the Du. aksis (like G. accise) is a corruption of O.F. assis, 'assessments, impositions,' Cot.; cf. Port. and Span. sis, excise, tax. - O.F. assise, an assize, sessions (at which things were assessed). See Assess, Assize. ¶ The mod. F. accise, excise, given in Hamilton, and used by Montesquieu (Littre), was merely borrowed back from the Teutonic form at a later period; there is no such word in Cotgrave. Der. excise-man. [†]

EXCISE (2), to cut out. (L.) Very rare; spelt excize in a quotation (in R.) from Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses. [The sb. excision occurs in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 22.] - Lat. excisus, pp. of excidere, to cut out. - Lat. ex, out; and cadere, to cut; see Concise. Der. excis-ion, from O.F. excision; Cot.

EXCITE, to stir up, rouse. (F., -L.) M.E. exciten, Chaucer, C. T. 16212. - O.F. exciter, 'to excite'; Cot. - Lat. excitare, to call out; frequentative of excire. - Lat. ex, out; and ciere, to summon; see Cite. Der. excit-er, excit-ing, excit-ing-ly, excit-able, excit-a-bil-

-ity; excit-at-ion (O.F. excitation, 'excitation'; Cot.); excit-at-ive (O.F. excitativ; Cot.); excite-ment (Hamlet, iv. 4. 58).

EXCLAIM, to cry out. (F., -L.) Both verb and sb. in Shak. All's Well, i. 3. 123; Rich. II, i. 2. 2. - O.F. exclamer, 'to exclaim'; Cot. - Lat. exclamare; from ex, out, and clamare, to cry aloud. See Claim. Der. exclam-at-ion (O.F. exclamation, 'an exclamation'; Cot.); exclam-at-or-y.

EXCLUDE, to shut out. (L.) In Henryson, Test. of Creseide, st. 19; and in Wyclif, Numb. xii. 14. - Lat. excludere, pp. exclusus, to shut out. - Lat. ex, out; and claudere, to shut; see Clause. Der. exclus-ion, exclus-ive, exclus-ive-ly, exclus-ive-ness; from pp. exclusus.

EXCOGITATE, to think out. (L.) In Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 23. - Lat. excogitatus, pp. of excogitare, to think out. - Lat. ex, out; and cogitare, to think; see Cogitate. Der. excogit-at-ion; in the same chap. of The Governour.

EXCOMMUNICATE, to put out of Christian communion. (L.) Properly a pp., as in Shak. K. John, iii. 1. 173, 223. - Lat. excommunicatus, pp. of excommunicare, to put out of a community. - Lat. ex, out; and communicare; see Communicate. Der. excommuni-cation; Much Ado, iii. 5. 69.

EXCORIATE, to take the skin from. (L.) The pl. sb. excoriations is in Holland's Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 3. The verb is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. excoriatus, pp. of excoriare, to strip off skin. - Lat. ex, off; and corium, skin, hide, cognate with Gk. χόριον, skin. See Cuirass. Der. excoriat-ion.

EXCREMENT, animal discharge, dung. (L.) In Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 11. See Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 35; Shak. L. L. L. v. 1. 109. - Lat. excrementum, refuse, ordure. - Lat. excre-tum, supine of excernere, to sift out, separate; with suffix -mentum. See Excretion. Der. excrement-al, excrement-it-ious. [†]

EXTRA, beyond what is necessary. (L.) The use as an adj. is modern.—Lat. extra, beyond; put for extera=extera parte=on the outside; where extera is the abl. fem. of exter; see EXTERIOR. Also used as a prefix, as in extra-dition, extra-ordinary, extra-vagant, &c.

EXTRACT, to draw out. (L.) In Shak. Meas. iii. 2. 50. Properly a pp., as in 'the very issue extract [=extracted] from that good;' Holland's Plutarch, p. 839; cf. p. 1045.—Lat. extractus, pp. of extrahere, to draw out.—Lat. ex; and trahere, to draw; see TRACE. Der. extract, sb., extract-ion (O.F. extraction, Cot.); extract-ive, extract-or, extract-ible.

EXTRADITION, a surrender of fugitives. (L.) Modern; not in Todd. Coined from Lat. ex; and TRADITION, q. v.

EXTRAMUNDANE, out of the world. (L.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—Lat. extramundanus, coined from extra, beyond, and mundanus, worldly. See EXTRA and MUNDANE.

EXTRANEOUS, external, unessential. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 7, part 9.—Lat. extraneus, external; by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, egregious, &c. An extension from Lat. extra, beyond. See EXTRA. Der. extraneous-ly.

EXTRAORDINARY, beyond ordinary. (L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, iii. 3. 75.—Lat. extraordinarius, rare.—Lat. extra, beyond; and ordinarius, ordinary. See ORDINARY. Der. extraordinary-ly, 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 235.

EXTRAVAGANT, excessive, profuse. (F.,—L.) See Shak. Hamlet, i. 1. 154.—O.F. extravagant, 'extravagant;' Cot.—Low Lat. extravagant-, stem of extravagans; formed from extra and vagans, pres. pt. of vagari, to wander. See VAGUE. Der. extravagant-ly; extravagance (O.F. extravagance, 'an extravagancy;' Cot.); extravaganc-y, Tw. Nt. ii. 1. 12; extravaganza (Ital. extravaganza).

EXTRAVASATE, (L.) 'Extravasate, in surgery, to go out of its proper vessels, as the blood and humours sometimes do;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Coined from Lat. extra, beyond; and uas, a vessel; with suffix -ate. See VASE. Der. extravasat-ion.

EXTREME, last, greatest. (F.,—L.) Spenser has extremest; F. Q. ii. 10. 31.—O.F. extreme, 'extreme;' Cot.—Lat. extremus, superl. of exterus, outward; see EXTERIOR. Der. extrem-i-ty, M. E. extremite, Gower, C. A. ii. 85, 390; from O.F. extremid, which from Lat. acc. extremitem.

EXTRICATE, to disentangle. (L.) 'Which should be extricated;' Bp. Taylor, Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. s. 11.—Lat. extricatus, pp. of extricare, to disentangle.—Lat. ex; and trica, trifles, impediments; see INTRICATE. Der. extricat-ion, extrica-ble.

EXTRINSIC, external. (F.,—L.) A false spelling for extrinsec, by analogy with words ending in -ic. 'Astronomy exhibiteth the extrinseque parts of celestial bodies;' Bacon, On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 4 (R.).—O.F. extrinseque, 'extrinsecall, outward;' Cot.—Lat. extrinsecus, from without.—Lat. extrin=extrin, adverbial form from exter, outward (see EXTERIOR); and secus, prep. by, beside, but used as adv. with the sense of 'side;' thus extrin-secus=on the outside. Secus is from the same root as Lat. sec-undum, according to; see SECOND. Der. extrinsic-al (formerly extrinsecal, Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 2, rule 3, and in Cotgrave, as above); extrinsic-al-ly; and see INTRINSIC.

EXTRUDE, to push out. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Lat. extrudere, pp. extrusus, to thrust forth.—Lat. ex; and trudere, to thrust; from the same root as THREAT, q. v. Der. extrus-ion, from pp. extrusus.

EXUBERANT, rich, superabundant. (F.,—L.) In Cotgrave; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715; Thomson, Spring, 75.—O.F. exuberant, 'exuberant;' Cot.—Lat. exuberant-, stem of pres. pt. of exuberare, to be luxuriant.—Lat. ex; and uberare, to be fruitful.—Lat. uber, fertile; from uber, an udder, fertility, cognate with E. udder; see UDDER. Der. exuberance, exuberanc-y; from O.F. exuberance, 'exuberancy;' Cot.

EXUDE, to distil as sweat. (L.) In Johnson's Dict. The older form is exudate, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 4. § 5; the sb. exudation is in the same author, Cyrus' Garden, c. 3. § 52.—Lat.

exudare, better spelt exsudare, lit. to sweat out.—Lat. ex; and sudare, to sweat.—✓ SWID, to sweat; Fick, i. 843; see SWEAT. Der. exud-at-ion.

EXULT, to leap for joy, be glad. (L.) Shak. has exult, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 8; exultation, Wint. Ta. v. 3. 131.—Lat. exultare, better spelt exultare, to leap up, exult, intensive form of exsilere (pp. exsulatus), to spring out.—Lat. ex; and salere, to leap; see SALIENT. Der. exult-ing-ly, exult-ant, exult-at-ion.

EXUVIÆ, cast skins of animals. (L.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—Lat. exuvia, things laid aside or put off.—Lat. exuere, to put off, strip; on which word see Curtius, ii. 276, note; Fick, i. 502.

EYE, the organ of sight. (E.) M. E. eye, eize, eighe; pl. eyen, eizen, eighen, as well as eyes, eizes; P. Plowman, A. v. 90, B. v. 109, 134. [Chaucer uses the form yē, pl. yēn, though the scribes commonly write it eye, eyen, against the rime. The old sound of ey perhaps was that of ei in eight; the final e was a separate syllable.]—A. S. ēage, pl. ēagan, Grein, i. 254. + Du. oog. + Icel. auga. + Dan. øie. + Swed. öga. + Goth. auga. + G. auge (O. H. G. auga). + Russ. oko. + Lat. oc-ul-us, dimin. of an older ocus. + O. Gk. ὄκος, ὄκκος; cf. Gk. ὄσσωμα (=ὄσ-yoμα), I see. + Skt. aksha, eye; cf. iksh, to see.—✓ AK, to see; prob. orig. identical with ✓ AK, to pierce, be sharp. See Curtius, ii. 62; Fick, i. 4. Der. eye, verb, Temp. v. 238; eyeball, K. John, iii. 4. 30; eye-bright, used to translate F. euphrase in Cotgrave; eye-brow, M. E. eye-browe, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 239, l. 8, from Icel. auga-brún, an eyebrow (see BROW); eye-lash; eye-less; eye-lid, spelt eye-lid in O. Eng. Homilies, i. 265, l. 5; eye-salve, spelt eye-sallfe in Ormulum, l. 1852; eye-service, A. V. Eph. vi. 6; eye-sight, spelt eiesihde, Ancrén Riwe, p. 58; eye-sore, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 103; eye-tooth; eye-witness, A. V. Luke, i. 2. Also dais-y, q. v., wind-ow, q. v.

EYELET-HOLE, a hole like a small eye. (F. and E.) A corruption of O. F. oeillet. 'Oeillet, a little eye; also, an oillet-hole;' Cot. Dimin. of O. F. oeil, from Lat. oculus, the eye; see EYE.

EYOT, a little island. (Scand.) Also spelt ait. 'Eyet, an islet;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Ait or eyght, a little island in a river;' id. From M. E. ei, an island, Stratmann, p. 147; with the dimin. suffix -et, which is properly of F. origin.—Icel. ey, an island. See ISLAND. ¶ 1. The true A. S. form is igod, also written igeod; 'to ánum igeode be is Paðmas geciged'—to an eyot that is called Patmos; Ælfric's Hom. ed. Thorpe, i. 58. The shorter A. S. form is ig, still preserved in Shepp-y. 2. Some explain the suffix -ot as being the Scand. post-positive neuter article et; but this is open to the fatal objection that Icel. ey, Swed. and Dan. ø, is a feminine noun.

EYRE, a journey, circuit. (F.,—L.) M. E. eire. 'The eire of justice wende aboute in the londe;' Rob. of Glouc., p. 517. 'Justices in eyre=judicarii itinerantes;' Blount's Nomolexicon.—O. F. eire, journey, way; as in 'le eire des feluns perir'—the way of the ungodly shall perish, Ps. i. 7 (in Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 41, l. 35); spelt erre in Cotgrave, and erre, aire, in Burguy.—Lat. iter, a journey; see ITINERANT.

EYRY, a nest; see AERY.

F.

FABLE, a story, fiction. (F.,—L.) M. E. fable, Chaucer, C. T. 17342.—F. fable.—Lat. fabula, a narrative.—Lat. fari, to speak. + Gk. φῆμι, I say. + Skt. bhāsh, to speak; bhan (Vedic), to resound.—✓ BHA, to speak; whence also E. ban, q. v. Der. fable, verb; also (from L. fabula) fabul-ous, Hen. VIII, i. 1. 36; fabul-ous-ly, fabul-ise, fabul-ist.

FABRIC, a structure. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 151.—F. fabrique; Cot.—Lat. fabrica, a workshop, art, fabric.—Lat. fabri=fabro, stem of faber, a workman.—Lat. fa, to set, place, make (appearing in fa-cere, to make); with suffix -br=-ber, for older -bar, denoting the agent; see Schleicher, Compend. p. 432.—✓ DHA, to set, put, place. See Curtius, i. 315. Fick explains facere similarly; ii. 114. See FACT. Der. fabric-ate, q. v. DOUBLET, forge, sb. q. v.

FABRICATE, to invent. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. fabriquer.—Lat. fabricatus, pp. of fabricari, to construct.—Lat. fabrica; see FABRIC. Der. fabricat-ion, from F. fabrication, 'a fabrication;' Cot.

FABULOUS; see FABLE.

FACADE, the face of a building. (F.,—Ital.,—L.) 'Facade, the outside or fore-front of a great building;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715.—F. facade, 'the forefront of a house;' Cot.—Ital. faccia, the front of a building.—Ital. faccia, the face.—Lat. faciem, acc. of facies, the face; see FACE.

FACE, the front, countenance. (F.,—L.) M. E. face, Chaucer, prol. 460; faas, K. Alisaunder, 5661. — F. face. — Lat. faciem, acc. of facies, the face. — ✓BHA, to shine; whence also Gk. φαίειν, to shew; Curtius, i. 369. Der. faas, verb, Machb. i. 2. 50; fac-et, Bacon, Ess. 55, Of Honour, from F. dimin. facette; fac-ade, q.v.; fac-ing; faci-al, from Lat. faci-as; also sur-face; and see below.

FACETIOUS, witty. (F., —L.) In Cotgrave. — F. facetieux, 'facetious'; Cot. — O.F. facetie, 'witty mirth'; id. — Lat. facetia, wit; commoner in the pl. facetiae, which is also used in English. — Lat. facetus, elegant, courteous; orig. of fair appearance; connected with Lat. facies. See FACE. Der. facetious-ly, -ness.

FACILE, easy to do, yielding. (F., —L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 3. 23. — F. facile. — Lat. facilis, easily done, lit. do-able. — Lat. fac-ere, to do; with suffix -ilis. See FACT. Der. faci-il-ty, Oth. ii. 3. 84, from F. facilité, Lat. facilitatem, acc. of facilitas; faci-it-ate, imitated (but with suffix -ate) from F. facilitat, 'to facilitate, make easy'; Cot. And see FACULTY.

FAC-SIMILE, an exact copy. (L.) Short for factum simile. 'Copied per factum simile'; see quotation in Todd's Johnson. — Lat. factum, neut. of factus, made; and simile, neut. of similis, like. See FACT and SIMILE.

FACT, a deed, reality. (L.) Formerly used like mod. E. deed; Shak. Macb. iii. 6. 10; cf. 'fact of arms,' Milton, P. L. ii. 124. — Lat. factum, a thing done; neut. of factus, pp. of facere, to do. Extended from base fa-, to put, place. — ✓DHA, to put, do; whence also E. do; cf. Skt. dhā, to put. See Curtius, i. 315. Der. fact-or, Cymb. i. 6. 188, from Lat. factor, an agent; fact-or-ship, fact-or-age, fact-or-y, fact-or-i-al; also fact-ion, q.v.; also fact-i-i-ous, q.v., feasible, q.v., feature, q.v. Doublet, feat, q.v. ¶ From the same root we have not only fac-ile, fac-ulty, fac-totum, fac-ion, feat-ure, but a host of other words, e.g. af-fair, af-fect, arti-fice, com-fit, con-fect, counter-feit, de-feat, de-fect, diffic-ult, ef-fect, for-feit, in-fect, manu-fact-ure, of-fice, per-fect, pro-ficient, re-fect-ion, sacri-fice, suf-fice, sur-fice, &c.

FACTION, a party, sect. (F., —L.) In Shak. Haml. v. 2. 249. — F. faction, 'a faction or sect'; Cot. — Lat. factionem, acc. of factio, a doing, dealing, taking sides, factio. — Lat. factus, pp. of facere, to do; see FACT. Der. facti-ous, Rich. III. i. 3. 128; facti-ous-ly, facti-ous-ness.

FACTITIOUS, artificial. (L.) 'Artificial and factitious gemms'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err. b. ii. c. 1, § 6. — Lat. factitius, artificial; by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, egregious. — Lat. factus, pp. of facere, to make; see FACT. Der. factitious-ly.

FACTOTUM, a general agent. (L.) 'Factotum here, sir'; Ben Jonson, New Inn, ii. 2. — Lat. facere totum, to do all; see FACT and TOTAL.

FACULTY, facility to act. (F., —L.) M. E. faculté, Chaucer, C. T. 244. — F. faculté; Cot. — Lat. facultatem, acc. of facultas, capability to do, contracted form of facilitas; see FACILE. Doublet, facility.

FADE, to wither. (F., —L.) Gower has faded, C. A. ii. 109. Cf. 'That weren pale and fade-hewed'; id. i. 111. Also written vade, Shak. Pass. Pilgrim, 131, 132. — F. fade, adj. 'unsavoury, tasteless; weak, faint, witless'; Cot. — Lat. fatuus, foolish, insipid, tasteless. See FATUOUS. Cf. Prov. fada, fem. of fatz, foolish; Bartsch, Chrest. Prov. 27. 13; 360. 6. And see Scheler's Dict. Der. fade-less. ¶ Not from Lat. uapidus, vapid, tasteless.

FADGE, to turn out, succeed. (E.) 'How will this fadge?' Tw. Nt. ii. 2. 34. — M. E. fegen, feyzen, to fit, suit; 'mannes bodi3 feyed is of fowre kinne shafte' = man's body is compacted of four sorts of things; Ormulum, 11501. — A. S. fegan, gefegan, to compact, fit; Grein, i. 285, 398. — ✓PAK, to fasten, bind. See PACT. [x]

FÆCES, dregs. (L.) 'I sent you of his fæces there calcined'; Ben Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1. — Lat. faeces, dregs, pl. of faex (stem faci-); of unknown origin. Der. fec-ul-ent, in Kersey's Dict., from Lat. faeculentus, which from faecula, a dimin. form of faex.

FAG, to drudge. (E.?) 'Fag, to fail, grow weary, faint'; also, 'to beat, to bang'; Ash's Dict. 1775. 'To fag, defecare'; Levins, 10. 21, ed. 1570. Of uncertain origin; but prob. a corruption of flag, to droop; see Todd. See FLAG (1). ¶ A similar loss of l occurs in flags, turves for burning (Norfolk), called vags (= fags) in Devon; see FLAG (4).

FAG-END, a remnant. (E.?) 'Fag, the fringe at the end of a piece of cloth, the fringe at the end of a rope'; Ash's Dict. ed. 1775. 'Fagg (a sea-term), the fringed end of a rope'; id. 'The fag-end of the world'; Massinger, Virgin Martyr, Act ii. sc. 3. Origin unknown. Perhaps for fag-end = loose end; see FLAG (1), and FAG. [t]

FAGGOT, FAGOT, a bundle of sticks. (F., —L.?) In Shak. Tit. And. iii. 1. 69; 1 Hen. VI. v. 4. 56. — F. fagot, 'a fagot, a bundle of sticks'; Cot. Cf. Ital. fagotto, fangotto, a bundle of sticks. β. Perhaps from Lat. fac-, stem of fax, a torch; cf. faecula, a little torch, whence G. fackel; see Diez. From ✓BHA, to shine; whence also Gk. φαίειν, to bring to light, φανά, a torch. γ. Diez further compares Gk. φάειλος, but this is Lat. fascis. It is a difficulty, that F. fagot means rather a bundle than a torch. I feel inclined to connect Ital. fangotto with Icel. fanga, an armful, as in skíðar-fang, viðar-fang, an armful of fuel; fanga-knapp, a bundle of hay, an armful; from Icel. fá, to fetch, get, grasp; see FANG. ¶ The W. fagot is probably borrowed from E. Der. faggot, verb.

FAIL, to fall short, be baffled. (F., —L.) In early use. M. E. faillen, Layamon, 2938 (later text). — F. failir, 'to fail'; Cot. — Lat. fallere, to beguile, elude; pass. falli, to err, be baffled. + Gk. σφάλαιον, to cause to fall, make to totter, trip; σφάλμα, a slip. + Skt. sphal, spul, to tremble. + A. S. feallan, to fall. + O. H. G. fallan, to fall. — ✓SPAL, to fall. See FALL. Der. fail, sb., Wint. Tale, ii. 3. 170; fail-ing; fail-ure (an ill-coined and late word), used by Burke, On the Sublime, pt. iv. § 24 (R.); and see fallible, fallacy, false, fault, fauzet.

FAIN, glad, eager. (E.) M. E. fayn, Chaucer, C. T. 2709; common. — A. S. fægen, glad; Grein, i. 269. + O. Sax. fagan, glad. + Icel. feginn, glad. From Teut. base fag- or fah-, to fit, to suit. — ✓PAK, to fasten, bind. See FAIR, FANG, FADGE. ¶ The sense seems to have been orig. 'fixed'; hence 'suited', 'satisfied', 'content.' The A. S. suffix -en (like Icel. -inn) indicates a pp. of a strong verb. Der. fawn, verb; q.v.

FAINT, weak, feeble. (F., —L.) In early use. M. E. feint, feynt; King Alisaunder, 612; Gower, C. A. ii. 5. — O. F. feint, pp. of feindre, to feign; so that the orig. sense is 'feigned'; see Bartsch, Chrest. Française, p. 515, l. 3. See FEIGN. ¶ Cf. M. E. feintise, signifying (1) faintness, (2) cowardice; Glos. to Will. of Palerne; P. Plowman, B. v. 5. ¶ Faint is wholly unconnected with Lat. uanus. Der. faint-ly, Shak. Oth. iv. i. 113; faint-ness, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 428; faint-hearted, 3 Hen. VI. i. 1. 183; faint, verb, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 2. 35.

FAIR (1), pleasing, beautiful. (E.) M. E. fair, fayr, Chaucer, prol. 575; fazer, Ormulum, 6392. — A. S. fæger, Grein, i. 269. + Icel. fagr. + Dan. feir. + Swed. fager. + Goth. fagrs, fit; used to tr. Gk. εὐθερον in Lu. xiv. 35. + O. H. G. fagar. + Gk. πῆγος, firm, strong. — ✓PAK, to bind, fasten; whence also E. PACT, q.v. And see FADGE, FAIN, FANG. Der. fair-ly, fair-ness.

FAIR (2), a festival, holiday, market. (F., —L.) M. E. feire, feyre; Chaucer, C. T. 5803. — O. F. feire; F. foire. — Lat. feria, a holiday; in late Lat. a fair; commoner in the pl. feriae. Feria is for fes-ia, feast-days; from the same root as FEAST and FESTAL.

FAIRY, a supernatural being. (F., —L.) M. E. faerie, fairyre, fairy, 'enchantment'; P. Plowman, B. prol. 6; Chaucer, C. T. 6441, 6454. [The modern use of the word is improper; the right word for the elf being fay. The mistake was made long ago; and fully established before Shakespeare's time.] — O. F. faerie, enchantment. — O. F. fas (F. fee), a fairy; see FAY. Der. fairy, adj.

FAITH, belief. (F., —L.) The final -th answers to -d in O. F. feid, the change to th being made to render it analogous in form with truth, ruth, wealth, health, and other similar sbs. β. M. E. feip, feith, feyth; as well as fey. The earliest example of the spelling feyth is perhaps in Havelok, l. 2853; fey occurs in the same poem, ll. 255, 1666. — O. F. fei, feid; also foi, foit. — Lat. fidem, acc. of fides, faith. + Gk. πίστις, faith; πείθειν, to persuade; πίπτω, I trust. — ✓BHIDH, to unite; weakened from ✓BHADH, fuller form ✓BHANDH, to bind. See BIND. See Curtius, i. 325. Der. faith-ful, faith-ful-ly, faith-ful-ness; faith-less, faith-less-ly, faith-less-ness. From the same root are fid-el-ity, af-fi-ance, con-fide, de-fy, dis-fid-ent, per-fid-y. [t]

FALCHION, a bent sword. (Ital., —Low Lat.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 618. [M. E. fauchon, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 169; directly from F. fauchon, 'a falchion'; Cot.] — Ital. falcione, a scimitar. — Low Lat. falcionem, acc. of falcio, a sickle-shaped sword. — Lat. falci, crude form of fale, a sickle. + Gk. φάληξ, the rib of a ship; φολκός, bow-legged; ἐμφαλκός, I clasp round; Curtius, i. 207. ¶ The word may have been really taken from the F. fauchon, and afterwards altered to falchion by the influence of the Ital. or Low Lat. form. Der. from Lat. fals are also falc-on, de-falc-ate.

FALCON, a bird of prey. (F., —L.) M. E. faukon, King Alisaunder, 567; faucou, Chaucer, C. T. 10725. — O. F. falcon, 'a falcon'; Cot. — Late Lat. falconem, acc. of falco, a falcon; so called from the hooked shape of the claws. 'Falcones dicuntur, quorum digiti pollices in pedibus intro sunt curuati'; Festus, p. 88; q. in White and Riddle. That is, falco is derived from falc-, stem of fals, a sickle; see above. Der. falcon-er; falcon-ry, from O. F. faulconnerie, 'a falconry'; Cot.

FALDSTOOL, a folding-stool. (Low Lat., —O. H. G.) Now applied to a low desk at which the litany is said; but formerly to a folding-stool or portable seat. 'Faldstool, a stool placed at the S. side of the altar, at which the kings of England kneel at their coronation'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. He also has: 'Faldistory, the episcopal seat within the chancel.' [Not E., but borrowed from Low Lat.]—Low Lat. faldistolium, also faldistorium (corruptly), a faldstool.—O. H. G. faldan (G. fallen), to fold; and stual, stool (G. stuhl), a chair, seat, throne. See Fold and Stool. ¶ Had the word been native, it would have been fold-stool. See Fauteuil.

FALL, to drop down. (E.) M. E. fallen, Chaucer, C. T. 2664.—O. Northumbrian fallan, Lu. x. 18; the A. S. form being feallan. + Du. vallen. + Icel. falla. + Dan. falde (with excrement d). + Swed. falla. + G. fallen. + Lat. fallere, to deceive; falli, to err. + Gk. σφάλλειν, to cause to fall, trip up; σφάλμα, a slip. + Skt. sp̥hal, sp̥hul, to tremble.—✓ SPAL, older form SPAR, to fall. See Fick, i. 253. 'The aspirate in Greek and Skt., the spirant in Lat. are developed from a p; hence spal is to be assumed as the primitive form, so that thus the f in German, after the loss of the s, is explained;' Curtius, i. 466. Der. fall, sb.; and see fell, fail.

FALLACY, a deceptive appearance, error in argument. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Errors, ii. 2. 188. A manipulated word, due to the addition of -y to M. E. fallace or fallas, in order to bring it near to the Lat. form. M. E. fallace, fallas; once common; see P. Plowman, C. xii. 22, and the note; also Gower, C. A. ii. 85.—F. fallace, 'a fallacy'; Cot.—Lat. fallacia, deceit.—Lat. fallaci-, crude form of fallax, deceptive.—Lat. fallere, to deceive; see Fail. Der. fallaci-ous, Milton, P. L. ii. 568; fallaci-ous-ly, fallaci-ous-ness; see below.

FALLIBLE, liable to error. (L.) In Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 170. Low Lat. fallibilis.—Lat. fallere, to deceive, falli, to err; see Fail. Der. fallibil-ly; fallibili-ty.

FALLOW, pale yellow; unsown. (E.) Sometimes applied to a reddish colour. The meaning 'unsown' is a mere E. development, and refers to the reddish colour of ploughed land. In Layamon, l. 27468, we have 'ueldes falewe wuorden' = the fields became red-with blood; in the description of a battle.—A. S. fealu, fealo, yellowish; Grein, i. 286. + Du. vaal, fallow, faded. + Icel. fölr, pale. + O. H. G. valo, M. H. G. val, G. fahl, fallow, faded; also G. falb, id. + Lat. palidus, pale. + Gk. πολιός, gray. + Skt. palita, gray. β. The G. falb as compared with fal (fahl), shews that fall-ow is an extension of fal = pal in pale. See Pale. Der. fallow, sb. and verb; fallow-deer.

FALSE, untrue, deceptive. (F.,—L.) M. E. fals, Chaucer, C. T. 1580; earlier, in O. Eng. Homilies, 1st Ser. p. 185, l. 16.—O. F. faus (F. faux).—Lat. falsus, false; pp. of fallere, to deceive; see Fail. Der. false-ly, false-ness, false-hood (spelt falshe in Chaucer, C. T. 16519); fals-i-ty, 1 Hen. IV. i. 2. 235; fals-i-ty, fals-i-ty, fals-i-ty; also falsetto, from Ital. falsetto, treble; also faucet, q. v.

FALTER, to totter, stammer. (F.,—L.) M. E. falteren, faltren. 'Thy limmes faltren ay' = thy limbs ever tremble with weakness; Chaucer, C. T. 5192. 'And nawþer faltered ne fel' = and he neither gave way nor fell; Gawayne and the Grene Knight, 430. Formed from a base falt-, with frequentative suffix -er.—O. F. *falter, to fail, be deficient, not recorded. Yet it occurs in Port. and Span. faltar, to be deficient, Ital. faltare, to be deficient; and is well represented in F. by the verbal sb. faute, a fault, answering to Port., Span., and Ital. faute, want, lack, defect, fault; so that to falter is merely 'to be at fault.' See Fault. ¶ Observe that O. F. falter would only give a M. E. form falt-en; the -er in M. E. falt-en is an E. addition, to give the word a frequentative force; cf. the -le in stumble, and the -er in stammer, stutter. The old sense of 'to stumble,' to 'miss one's footing,' occurs late; 'his legges bath foltred' = the horse's legs have given way; Sir T. Elyot, The Gouernour, b. i. c. 17 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 197, l. 78).

FAME, report, renown. (F.,—L.) In early use; King Alisaun-der, 6385.—F. fame.—Lat. fama, report.—Lat. fari, to speak. + Gk. φημί, I say. + Skt. bhāsh, to speak. + A. S. bannan, to proclaim.—✓ BHAN, BHA, to resound, speak. See Ban. Der. fam-ed; fam-ous, Gower, C. A. ii. 366; fam-ous-ly.

FAMILY, a household. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 1. 84. [Modified from F. so as to bring it nearer the Latin.]—F. famille, 'a family, household'; Cot.—Lat. familia, a household.—Lat. famulus, a servant; Oscan faamel, a servant (White); supposed to be from Oscan faama, a house; Curtius, i. 315. Cf. Skt. dhāman, an abode, house; from dhā, to place, set.—✓ DHA, to place. Der. famili-ar (from Lat. familiaris), also found in M. E. in the form familier, familier (from O. F. familier), Chaucer, C. T. prol. 215; famili-ar-i-ty, famili-ar-ise.

FAMINE, severe hunger. (F.,—L.) M. E. famine, famyn; Chaucer, C. T. 12385.—F. famine.—Low Lat. *famina, unrecorded, but evidently a barbarous derivative from Lat. fames, hunger. β. The connection is probably with Skt. hāni, privation, want, from hā, to leave, abandon, and with Gk. χῆρος, bereft, empty; from ✓ GHA, to gape, yawn. See Curtius, i. 247. Der. fam-ish, Merch. of Ven. ii. 2. 113; formed with suffix -ish by analogy with langu-ish, demol-ish, and the like, from the base fam in O. F. a-fam-er, later affamer, to famish. This base fam- is from Lat. fam-es, hunger (F. faim).

FAN, an instrument for blowing. (L.) Used by Chaucer to describe a quintain; C. T. 16991.—A. S. fann; Matt. iii. 12. Not a native word, but borrowed from Latin (possibly through F. van).—Lat. uannus, a fan; put for uat-nus, just as penna = pet-na; cf. Skt. vāta, wind, vātya, a gale, from vā, to blow.—✓ WA, to blow. See Wind. Der. fan, verb; fann-er, fan-light, fan-palm.

FANATIC, religiously insane. (F.,—L.) 'Fanatick Egypt;' Milton, P. L. i. 480.—F. fanatique, 'mad, frantick'; Cot.—Lat. fanaticus, (1) belonging to a temple, (2) inspired by a divinity, filled with enthusiasm.—Lat. fanum, a temple; see Fane. Der. fanatic-al, fanatic-al-ly, fanatic-ism. ¶ On this word see a passage in Fuller, Mixt Contemplations on these Times, § 50 (Trench).

FANCY, imagination, whim. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 122; v. 59. A corruption of the fuller form fantasy, Merry Wives, v. 5. 55. M. E. fantasie, Chaucer, C. T. 6098; P. Plowman, A. prol. 36.—O. F. fantasia, 'the fancy, or fantasie'; Cot.—Low Lat. fantasia, or phantasia.—Gk. φαντασία, a making visible, imagination.—Gk. φανράσκειν, to make visible; extended from φαίνειν, to bring to light, shine; cf. φῶς, light, φαέ, he appeared. + Skt. bhā, to shine.—✓ BHA, to shine. Der. fancy, verb; fanci-ful. Doublet, fantasy (obsolete); whence fantastic (Gk. φανταστικός), fantastic-al, fantastic-al-ly. From same root, epi-phany, q. v.

FANE, a temple. (L.) In Shak. Cor. i. 10. 20.—Lat. fanum, a temple; supposed to be derived from fari, to speak, in the sense 'to dedicate.' See Fame. Der. fan-at-ic, q. v.

FANFARE, a flourish of trumpets. (F.,—Span.,—Arab.) In Todd's Johnson.—F. fanfare, 'a sounding of trumpets'; Cot.—Span. fanfarria, bluster, loud vaunting.—Arab. farfār, loquacious; a word of onomatopoeic origin; Rich. Dict., p. 1083. Der. fanfar-on-ade, from F. fanfaronade, which from Span. fanfarronada, bluster, boasting; from Span. fanfarron, blustering, fanfarrear, to hector, bluster, boast.

FANG, a tusk, claw, talon. (E.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 353. The M. E. feng is only used in the sense of 'a thing caught, prey;' see Stratmann. So also A. S. fang = a taking; A. S. Chron. an. 1016. However the sb. is derived from the verb.—A. S. *fangan, to seize, only in use in the contracted form fón, of which the pt. t. is feng, and the pp. gefangan or gefangen. + Du. vangen, to catch. + Icel. fá, to get, seize, pp. fenginn; fang, a catch of fish, &c. + Dan. faae, to get. + Swed. få, to get, catch; fång, a catch. + Goth. fahan, to catch. + G. fahen, fangen, to catch; fang, a catch, also, a fang, talon. β. All from a base fah, fag; which from ✓ PAK, to bind. See Fadge.

FANTASY, FANTASTIC; see Fancy.

FAR, remote. (E.) M. E. fer, Chaucer, C. T. 496; feor, Layamon, 543.—A. S. feor; Grein, i. 289. + Du. ver. + Icel. fiarri. + Swed. fierran, adv. afar. + Dan. fiern, adj. and adv. + O. H. G. ver, adj., verro, adv.; G. fern. + Goth. fairra, adv. β. All related to Gk. πέρα, beyond; Skt. paras, beyond; para, far, distant.—✓ PAR, to pass through, travel; see Fare. Der. far-th-er, far-th-est; see Farther.

FARCE, a kind of comedy. (F.,—L.) The orig. sense is 'stuffing'; hence, a jest inserted into comedies. 'These counterfeiting plaiers of farces and mummeries;' Golden Book, c. 14 (R.). Hence Ben Jonson speaks of 'other men's jests, . . . to farce their scenes withal'; Induction to Cynthia's Revels.—F. farce, 'a fond and dissolute play; . . . any stuffing in meats'; Cot.—F. farcer, to stuff.—Lat. farciare, to stuff. + Gk. φάρσκειν, to shut in. + Lith. bruuku, to press hard.—✓ BHARK, BRAKH, to cram; Curtius, i. 376. See Force (2). Der. far-ci-al; and see frequent.

FARDEL, a pack, bundle; obsolete. (F.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 1. 76. M. E. fardel, Rom. of the Rose, 5686.—O. F. fardel, the true old form of fardeau, 'a fardle, burthen, truss, pack'; Cot. Cf. Low Lat. fardellus, a burden, pack, bundle. Fard-el is a dimin. of F. farde, a burden, still in use in the sense of 'bale of coffee;' cf. Span. and Port. fardel, fardo, a pack, bundle. β. Origin uncertain; but prob. of Arabic origin, as suggested by Diez, though I am unable to trace the Arab. original to which he refers. ¶ O. F. fardel (though not in Burguy) is a true word, and occurs in Littre, and in a quotation in Raynouard, who also gives the Prov. form as fardel. Devic (Supp. to Littre) cites Arab. fardak, a package. [†]

FARE, to travel, speed. (E.) M. E. faren, Chaucer, C. T. 10802.—A. S. faran, Grein, i. 264. + Du. varen. + Icel. and Swed. fara. + Dan. fare. + O. H. G. faran, G. fahren. + Goth. faran, to go; farjan, to convey. + Gk. πορεύω, I convey; πορεύομαι, I travel, go; πέρω, a way through; πέρω, I pass through. + Lat. ex-per-ior, I pass through, experience. + Skt. pri, to bring over.—✓ PAR, to cross, pass over or through. Der. fare-well = may you speed well, M. E. fare wel, Chaucer, C. T. 2762; and see far, fer-ry. From the same root are ex-per-ience, ex-per-iment, port, verb (q. v.), per-il.

FARINA, ground corn. (L.) The adj. farinaceous is in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 15. § 2. The sb. is modern and scientific.—Lat. farina, meal.—Lat. far, a kind of grain, spelt; cognate with E. Barley, q. v. Der. farinaceus (Lat. farinaceus).

FARM, ground let for cultivation. (L.) M. E. ferme, Chaucer, C. T. 253.—A. S. feorm, a feast, entertainment; Luke, xiv. 12, 16; also food, hospitality, property, use; see Grein, i. 293. Spelt farma in the Northumbrian version of Luke, xiv. 16. And spelt ferme in O. F.—Low Lat. firma, a feast, a farm, a tribute; also, a lasting oath. Lat. firmus, firm, durable. See Firm. [*] For the curious use of the word, see firma in Ducange. Der. farm, verb; farm-er, farm-ing.

FARRAGO, a confused mass. (L.) 'That collection, or farrago of prophecies;' Howell's Letters, b. iii. let. 22.—Lat. farrago, mixed fodder for cattle, a medley.—Lat. far, spelt. See Farina.

FARRIER, a shoer of horses. (F.,—L.) Lit. 'a worker in iron.' Spelt ferrier in Holland's Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 11; ferrouer in Fabian's Chron., an. 1497–8. Cotgrave has: 'mareschal ferrant, a farrier.' Coined (with reference to Low Lat. ferrarius) from O. F. ferrier, to shoe a horse.—F. fer, iron.—Lat. ferrum, iron. See Ferreous. Der. farrier-y. [†]

FARROW, to produce a litter of pigs. (E.) 'That thair sow ferryit was thar'—that their sow had farrowed, lit. was farrowed; Barbour's Bruce, xvii. 701. Cf. Dan. fare, to farrow. Formed, as a verb, from M. E. farh, which means (not a litter, but) a single pig. The word is scarce, but the pl. farem occurs in King Alisaunder, 2441.—A. S. feorh, a pig; the pl. feorhas occurs in Ælf. Gloss., ed. Somner, Nomina Ferarum, explained by 'suilli, vel porcelli, vel nefrendes.' + Du. varken (dimin.), a pig. + O. H. G. farah, M. H. G. varch, a pig; whence G. dimin. ferk-el, a pig. + Lat. porcus, a pig. See Pork. [†]

FARTHER, FARTHEST, more far, most far. (E.) In Shak. Ant. and Cleop. ii. 1. 31; iii. 2, 26. These forms are due to a mistake, and to confusion with further, furthest; see Further. Not found at all early; the M. E. forms are fer, ferre, ferrier, and ferrest. 'Than walkede I ferrier;' P. Plowman's Crede, 207; 'The ferrest in his parish;' Chaucer, C. T. 496. The th crept into the word in course of time.

FARTHING, the fourth part of a penny. (E.) M. E. ferthing, ferthyng; P. Plowman, B. iv. 54.—A. S. feorðing, ferþyng, Matt. v. 26 (Royal and Hatton MSS.); older form feorðling (Camb. MS.).—A. S. feorð, fourth; with dimin. suffix -ing or -ling (= -ling). See Four.

FARTHINGALE, FARDINGALE, a hooped petticoat. (F.,—Span.,—L.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 7. 51; a corrupt form.—O. F. verdugalle, 'a vardingall;' Cot. Also vertugalle, 'a vardingale;' vertugadin, 'a little vardingale;' id.—Span. verdugado, a fardingale; so called from its hoops, the literal sense being 'provided with hoops.'—Span. verdugo, a young shoot of a tree, a rod.—Span. verde, green.—Lat. viridis, green. See Verdant. [†] The derivation from 'virtue-guard' is a very clumsy invention or else a joke. The word was well understood; hence the term 'his verdugo-ship' in Ben Jonson, The Alchemist, iii. 2.

FASCINATE, to enchant. (L.) 'Fascination is ever by the eye;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 944. 'To fascinate or bewitch;' id. Essay 9, Of Envy.—Lat. fascinatus, pp. of fascinare, to enchant. [†] Curtius doubts the connection with Gk. bagvalveuv, to bewitch, enchant; yet the resemblance is remarkable. Der. fascination.

FASCINE, a bundle of rods. (F.,—L.) A new term in 1711; see Spectator, no. 165. 'Fascinæ, faggots or bavinis;' Kersey, ed. 1715.—O. F. fascine, fassine, 'a faggot;' Cot.—Lat. fascina, a bundle of sticks.—Lat. fasci-s, a bundle. + Gk. φάκελος. Root uncertain; cf. Skt. pag, spag, to bind. Der. From the same source, fascēs, pl. of Lat. fascis; fasci-c-ul-ate.

FASHION, the make or cut of a thing. (F.,—L.) M. E. fashion, Rom. of the Rose, 551; fassoun, Dunbar, Thistle and Rose, st. 12.—O. F. faceon, fazon, fachon, form, shape.—Lat. factionem, acc. of factio. See Faction. Der. fashion, verb, fashion-able, fashion-ably.

FAST (1), firm, fixed. (E.) M. E. fast, Ormulum, 1602; as adv. faste, Chaucer, C. T. 721.—A. S. fast, Grein, i. 271. + Du. vast. + Dan. and Swed. fast. + Icel. fast. + O. H. G. vast; G. fest. Cf. Gk. ἐμ-πεδ-ος, fast, steadfast. The Lat. op-pid-um, a fastness, fort, town, has the same root. Connected with Fetter and Foot, q. v. See Curtius, i. 303, 304. Der. fast, verb (below); fast-en, q. v.; fast-ness, q. v. [†] The phrase 'fast asleep' is Scandinavian; Icel. sofa fast, to be fast asleep; see Fast (3).

FAST (2), to abstain from food. (E.) M. E. fasten, Wyclif, Matt. vi. 16.—A. S. fastan, Matt. vi. 16. + Du. vasten. + Dan. faste. + Swed. and Icel. fasta. + Goth. fastan. + G. fasten. β. A very early derivative from Teutonic fast, firm, in the sense to make firm, observe, be strict. See Fast (1). Der. fast, sb., fast-er, fast-ing, fast-day.

FAST (3), quick, speedy. (Scand.) Merely a peculiar use of fast, firm. Chaucer has faste = quickly; C. T. 16150. The peculiar usage is Scandinavian. Cf. Icel. drekka fast, to drink hard; sofa fast, to be fast asleep; sygja fast, to follow fast; fastir i verkum, hard at work; leita fast eftir, to urge, press hard after. The development is through the senses 'close,' 'urgent.' See Fast (1).

FASTEN, to secure. (E.) M. E. fastnen, festnen; Chaucer has festne, prol. 195.—A. S. fastnian, to make firm or fast; Grein, i. 273.—A. S. fast, fast, firm. See Fast (1). Der. fasten-ing. [†] Observe that fasten stands for fastn- in A. S. fastn-ian, so that the -en is truly formative, not a sign of the infin. mood.

FASTIDIOUS, over-nice. (L.) Orig. in the sense of 'causing disgust,' or 'loathsome;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 9 (R.); see Trench (Select Glossary).—Lat. fastidiosus, disdainful, disgusting.—Lat. fastidium, loathing; put for fastu-tidium.—Lat. fastus, arrogance; and tadium, disgust. See Dare and Tedious. [†] Bréal conjectures (Zeitschrift, xx. 79), I think rightly, that Lat. fastus (for fastus) and fastidium (for fasti-tidium) belong to this root; viz. DHARSH, to dare; Curtius, i. 318. Der. fastidious-ly, ness.

FASTNESS, a stronghold. (E.) M. E. fastnes, Metrical Psalter, xvii. 2. (Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris, p. 25.) The same as M. E. fastnesse, certainty, strength; Wyclif, Gen. xli. 32 (early version).—A. S. fastnes, fastnis, the firmament; Gen. i. 6.—A. S. fast, firm; with suffix -nes or -nis. See Fast (1). [†] Not from A. S. fastennes, a non-existent word, probably invented by Somner.

FAT (1), stout, gross. (E.) M. E. fat, Chaucer, prol. 200, 290.—A. S. fat, Grein, i. 273. + Du. vet. + Dan. fed. + Swed. fet. + Icel. feitr. β. Perhaps related to Gk. πιον, μαρς, fat; Skt. pivan, pivara, fat.—√PI, to swell; Curtius, i. 342. Der. fat, sb., fat-y, fat-i-ness; fat-ness, Rom. of the Rose, 2686; fat-en, where the -en is a late addition, by analogy with fasten, &c., the true verb being to fat, as in Luke, xv. 23; Chaucer, C. T. 7462; fat-en-er, fat-en-ing; fat-ling (= fat-l-ing), Matt. xxii. 4.

FAT (2), a vat. (North E.) Joel, ii. 24, iii. 13. See Vat.
FATE, destiny. (F.,—L.; or L.) M. E. fate, Chaucer, Troil. v. 1564.—O. F. fat, fate; not common (Roquefort).—Lat. fatum, what is spoken, fate.—Lat. fatus, pp. of fari, to speak. See Fame. [†] Perhaps fate was simply made from the common O. F. fatal (whence M. E. fatal, Chaucer, C. T. 4681) in order to render Lat. fatum. Der. fat-al, fatal-i-ty, fatal-ism, fat-ed; also fay, q. v.; fairy, q. v.

FATHER, a male parent. (E.) M. E. fader, Chaucer, C. T. 8098. [The spelling fader is almost universal in M. E.; father occurs in the Bible of 1551.]—A. S. fæder, Matt. vi. 9. + Du. vader. + Dan. and Swed. fader. + Icel. faðir. + Goth. fadar. + G. vater. + Lat. pater. + Gk. πατήρ. + Pers. pidar. + Skt. pitri.—√PA, to protect, nourish; with suffix -tar of the agent; Schleicher, Comp. § 225. [†] The change from M. E. fader, moder, to modern father, mother, is remarkable, and perhaps due to the influence of the th in brother (A. S. brōðor) or to Icel. faðir. Der. father, verb; father-hood, father-less, father-ly; also father-land, imitated from the Dutch (Trench, Eng. Past and Present). [†]

FATHOM, a measure of 6 feet. (E.) Properly, the breadth reached to by the extended arms. M. E. fathom, Chaucer, C. T. 2918; veðme, Layamon, 27686.—A. S. fæðm, the space reached by the extended arms, a grasp, embrace; Grein, i. 268. + Du. vadem, a fathom. + Icel. faðmr, a fathom. + Dan. favn, an embrace, fathom. + Swed. famn, embrace, bosom, arms. + G. faßen (O. H. G. fadum), a fathom, a thread. Cf. Lat. patere, to lie open, extend; patulus, spreading.—√PAT, to extend; Fick, i. 135. See Patent. Der. fathom, vb. (A. S. fæðman, Grein); fathom-able, fathom-less. [†]

FATIGUE, weariness. (F.,—L.) 'Fatigue, weariness;' Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. 'Fatigate, to weary;' id. (obsolete).—O. F. fatigue, 'weariness;' Cot.—O. F. fatiguer, to weary; id.—Lat. fatigare, to weary (whence fatigate, in Shak. Cor. ii. 2. 121). Connected with O. Lat. ad fatim, sufficiently. Root uncertain. Der. fatigue, verb. [†] In French, the sb. is from the verb; in E., the reverse.

FAUCES, the upper part of the throat. (L.) Lat. pl. fauces; of uncertain origin. Cf. Skt. bhūka, a hole, head of a fountain.

FAUCET, a spigot, vent. (F.,—L.) In Wyclif, Job, xxxii. 19.—O. F. (and F.) fauisset, 'a faucet;' Cot.; also spelt falsuet, id.—O. F. falsuer, to falsify, to forge; whence 'falsuer en escu, to pierce or strike through a shield, to make a breach in it;' id.—Lat. falsare, to falsify.—Lat. falsus, false. See False.

FAULT, a failing, defect. (F.,—L.) M. E. faute; 'for faute of blood,' Chaucer, C. T. 10757, used as = 'for lakke of blood;' id. 10744.—O. F. faute, a fault. The l is due to the insertion of l in the O. F. faute in the 16th century; thus Cotgrave has: 'Faulx, a fault.' Cf. Span., Port., and Ital. falta, a defect, want.—O. F. *falter, not found, but answering to Span. and Port. faltar, Ital. fallare, to lack; a frequentative form of Lat. fallere, to beguile; falli, to err. See Falter, Fail. Der. fault-y, fault-i-ly, fault-i-ness; fault-less, fault-less-ly, fault-less-ness. Also falter, q. v.

FAUN, a rural (Roman) deity. (L.) M.E. faun, Chaucer, C.T. 2930. — Lat. Faunus. — Lat. favere, to be propitious; pp. faustus. See FAVOUR. Der. faun-a.

FAUTEUIL, an arm-chair. (F., — G.) Mod. F. fauteuil; O.F. fauldetuil (Cot.). — Low Lat. faldistolum. See Faldstool.

FAVOUR, kindness, grace. (F., — L.) M.E. favour (with u = v), King Alisaunder, 2844. — O.F. favetur, 'favour'; Cot. — Lat. favorem, acc. of favor, favour. — Lat. favere, to befriend. Root uncertain. Der. favore, verb; favoured-able, P. Plowman, B. iii. 153; favoured-able-ness, also favoured-ite, Shak. Much Ado, iii. 1. 9, orig. feminine, from O.F. favorit, fem. of favorit or favori, favoured (Cot.); favoured-ism. On the phr. curry favour, see CURRY.

FAWN (1), to cringe to, rejoice servilely over. (Scand.) M.E. faunen, fauhen, faunen; P. Plowman, B. xv. 295; C. xviii. 31. — Icel. fagna, to rejoice, be fain; fagna einum, to welcome one, receive with good cheer. + A.S. fagnian, to rejoice, Grein, i. 270; a verb formed from adj. fagen, glad. See Fain. Der. fawn-er, fawn-ing. ¶ The form must be taken to be Scandinavian; the A.S. fagnian produced M.E. faunen, but not faunen.

FAWN (2), a young deer. (F., — L.) M.E. fawn, Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 429. — O.F. fan, faon, 'a fawn'; Cot.; earlier fœn; Burguy. — Low Lat. faunus (not found), an extension of Lat. faustus by means of the dimin. suffix -onus (Diez). See Fetus. [†]

FAY, a fairy. (F., — L.) See the 'Song by two faies' in Ben Jonson's Oberon. — F. fée, a fairy, elf; cf. Port. fada, Ital. fata, a fay. — Low Lat. fata, a fairy, 'in an inscription of Diocletian's time' (Brachet); lit. 'a fate, goddess of destiny'. — Lat. fatum, fate. See Fate. Der. fai-ry, q. v.

FEALTY, true service. (F., — L.) M.E. feauté, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 3; feuté, King Alisaunder, 2911. [The spelling fealty is later in E., though a better form; see feaulté in Cotgrave.] — O.F. seute, sealte, sealteit, fidelity. — Lat. fidelitatem, acc. of fideltas. See Fidelity, of which fealty is a doublet. [†]

FEAR, terror. (E.) M.E. ferre, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 162; better spelt fer. — A.S. fær, a sudden peril, danger, panic, fear; Grein, i. 277. + Icel. fár, bale, harm, mischief. + O.H.G. fára, vár, treason, danger, fright; whence G. gefahr, danger. [Cf. Goth. ferja, a spy, lit. a passer-by, from Goth. faran, to travel; also Lat. periculum, danger, experior, I go through, experience; also Gk. ῥέφα, an attempt, from ῥέφω, I go through.] — √ PAR, to pass through, travel; whence E. fare, verb. See Fare and Peril. ¶ Originally used of the perils and experiences of a way-faring. Der. fear, verb, often used actively = to frighten, terrify, as in Shak., Tam. Shrew, i. 2. 211; fear-ful, fear-fully, fear-ful-ness; fear-less, fear-less-ly, fear-less-ness.

FEASIBLE, easy to be done. (F., — L.) 'Tis feasible'; Massinger, Emp. of the East, i. 2. 76. [Better spelt feasable.] — O.F. (and F.) faissable, 'feasible, doable'; Cot. — F. fais-ant, pres. pt. of faire, to do. — Lat. facere, to do. See Fact. Der. feasibl-y, feasible-ness, feasibil-ity.

FEAST, a festival, holiday. (F., — L.) M.E. feste; Ancren Riwle, p. 22. — O.F. feste (F. fête). — Lat. festus, lit. 'festivals'; pl. of festum. — Lat. festus, joyful; orig. 'bright'. — √ BHAS, extension of √ BHA, to shine; cf. Skt. bhā, to shine, bhāsh, to speak (clearly). Der. feast, verb; see feast, fête.

FEAT, a deed well done. (F., — L.) M.E. feet, feite, faite; P. Plowman, B. i. 184. — O.F. (and F.) fait. — Lat. factum, a deed. See Fact, of which feat is a doublet; and see feature.

FEATHER, a plume. (E.) M.E. feither, Chaucer, C.T. 2146. — A.S. feðer, Grein, i. 278. + Du. veder. + Dan. fiæder. + Swed. fjäder. + Icel. fjodr. + G. feder. + Lat. penna (= pet-na). + Gk. πτερόν (= pet-pon). + Skt. patra, a feather. — √ PAT, to fly, fall. See Pen. Der. feather, verb; feather-y.

FEATURE, make, fashion, shape, face. (F., — L.) M.E. seture, Chaucer, C.T. 17070. — O.F. faiture, fashion. — Lat. factura, formation, work. — Lat. facturus, fut. part. of facere, to make. See Fact, Feat. Der. feature-ed, feature-less.

FEBRILE, relating to fever. (F., — L.) Used by Harvey (Todd's Johnson). — F. febrile. — Lat. *febrilis (not in White's Dict.), relating to fever. — Lat. febris, a fever. β. Root uncertain; but cf. A.S. bifian, G. beben, to tremble; Gk. φόβος, fear; Skt. bhī, to fear. Der. febrifuge (F. fébrifuge, Lat. febrifugia); from Lat. fugare, to put to flight.

FEBRUARY, the second month. (L.) Englished from Lat. Februarius, the month of expiation; named from februa, neut. pl., a Roman festival of expiation celebrated on the 15th of this month. — Lat. febrinus, cleansing; whence also februare, to expiate.

FECULENT, relating to feces; see Fæces.

FECUNDITY, fertility. (F., — L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. O.F. fecundité (Cot.), with o altered to u to bring it nearer Latin. — Lat. fecunditatem, acc. of fecunditas, fruitfulness. — Lat. fecundus, fruitful; from the same source as Fetus, q. v.

FEDERAL, belonging to a covenant. (F., — L.) In Kersey's

Dict., ed. 1715. [Wyclif has federed = bound by covenant, Prov. xvii. 9.] — F. fédéral. Formed as if from Lat. *federalis, from feder-, stem of foedus, a treaty, covenant; akin to Lat. fidēs, faith. — √ BHIDH, weakened form of √ BHADH, to bind; see Fidelity. Der. feder-ate, from Lat. foederatus, pp. of foederare, to bind by treaty; federat-ive; also con-federate.

FEE, a grant of land, property, payment. (E.) M.E. fee, as in 'land and fee'; Chaucer, C.T. 6212; also spelt fe, Havelok, 386; feoh, feo, Layamon, 4429. The usual sense is 'property'; orig. 'property in cattle'. — A.S. feoh, fé, cattle, property; Grein. + Du. vee, cattle. + Icel. fé, cattle, property, money. + Dan. and Swed. få or få. + Goth. faihu, cattle, property. + G. vieh; O.H.G. fihu. + Lat. pecus, cattle, property. + Skt. pagu, cattle. — √ PAK, to bind, fasten; from the tying up of cattle at pasture. See Pact, and Pecuniary. Der. fee, verb; fee-simple, Chaucer, C.T. 321.

FEEBLE, weak. (F., — L.) M.E. feble, Ancren Riwle, p. 54; Havelok, 323. — O.F. foible, weak, standing for floible (Burguy); cf. Ital. fiavole, feeble, where i is put for l, as usual in Italian. — Lat. febilis, mournful, tearful, doleful. — Lat. fle-re, to weep; akin to fluere, to flow; see Fluid. Der. feebly, feeble-ness. Doublet, foible.

FEED, to take food. (E.) M.E. fedden; Chaucer, C.T. 146. — A.S. fēdan; Grein, i. 284. [Put for foðan, by vowel-change from o to e = æ.] — A.S. fōd, food. See Food. Der. feed-er.

FEEL, to perceive by the touch. (E.) M.E. fele, Chaucer, C.T. 2807. — A.S. fēlan, Grein, i. 285. + Du. voelen. + G. fühlen; O.H.G. fōljan, fuolan. β. Perhaps related to palpable, and Lat. palpare, to feel. Der. feel-er, feel-ing.

FEIGN, to pretend. (F., — L.) M.E. feynen, feinen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 336. [The g is a later insertion.] — F. feindre, to feign; pres. pt. feign-ant. — Lat. ingere, to feign. See Figure. Der. feigned-ly, feign-ed-ness; also feint (in Kersey, ed. 1715), from F. feinte, fem. of feint, pp. of feindre; and see faint, fiction.

FELDSPAR, a kind of mineral. (G.) Modern. Corrupted from G. feldspath, lit. 'field-spar'. — G. feld, a field, cognate with E. field; and spath, spar; see Field and Spar.

FELICITY, happiness. (F., — L.) M.E. felicitie, Chaucer, C.T. 7985. — O.F. felicitie. — Lat. felicitatem, acc. of felicitas, happiness. — Lat. felici-, crude form of felix, happy, fruitful; from the same root as fe-cundity and fe-tus. See Fetus. Der. felicit-ous, felicit-ous-ly; also felicit-ate, a coined word first used as a pp., as in King Lear, i. 1. 76; felicit-at-ion.

FELINE, pertaining to the cat. (L.) In Johnson's Dict. — Lat. felinus, feline. — Lat. feles, felis, a cat; lit. 'the fruitful', from the root of fetus. See Fetus.

FELL (1), to cause to fall, cut down. (E.) M.E. fellen; 'it wolde felle an oke'; Chaucer, C.T. 1704. — A.S. fellan, Grein, i. 281; formed, as a causal, by vowel-change, from fallan, orig. form of A.S. feallan, to fall. + Du. vellen, causal of vallen. + Dan. felde, caus. of falde. + Swed. fälla, caus. of falla. + Icel. fella, caus. of falla. + G. fällen, caus. of fallen. See Fall. Der. fell-er.

FELL (2), a skin. (E.) M.E. fel, Wyclif, Job, ii. 4 (early version). — A.S. fel, fell, Grein, i. 278. + Du. vel. + Icel. fell (App. to Dict. p. 773). + Goth. filin, skin in the comp. thrutisfil, leprosy. + M.H.G. vel. + Lat. pellis. + Gk. πέλας. From the base PA, to cover; supposed to be connected with √ PAR, to fill. Der. fell-monger, a dealer in skins. Doublet, pell. [†]

FELL (3), cruel, fierce. (E.) M.E. fel, Chaucer, C.T. 7584. — A.S. fel, fierce, dire; in comp. wælfel, fierce for slaughter, Grein, ii. 65; eafelo, very dire, hurtful, id. i. 243. + O. Du. fel, wrathful, cruel, bad, base; see numerous examples in Oudemans. β. Found also in O.F. fel, cruel, furious, perverse (Burguy); a word no doubt borrowed from the O. Du. fel. γ. Possibly connected with felon, but this is not clear; see Felon. Der. fel-ly, fell-ness. [†]

FELL (4), a hill. (Scand.) M.E. fel, Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, 723. — Icel. ffall, fell, a mountain. + Dan. field. + Swed. ffäll. β. Probably orig. applied to an open flat down; and the same word as E. field; thus the mountain opposite Helvellyn is called Fairfield = sheep-fell (from Icel. far, a sheep). See Field.

FELLOE, rim of a wheel; see Felly.

FELLOW, a partner, associate. (Scand.) M.E. felawe, Chaucer, C.T. 397; felaze, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 996. — Icel. félagi, a partner in a 'félag', = Icel. félag, companionship, association, lit. 'a laying together of property'; or a 'fee-law'. — Icel. fé, property = E. fee; and lag, a laying together, a law. See Fee, and Law. Der. fellow-ship, spelt feolawschipe in the Ancren Riwle, p. 160.

FELLY, FELLOE, part of the rim of a wheel. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, ii. 2. 517. M.E. felwe, Prompt. Parv. p. 154. — A.S. felga, fem. sb., a felly. 'Forþám þe ælces spácan bið ðer enden fæst on þære næfe, ðer on ðære felge' = because the one end of each spoke is fixed in the nave, the other in the felly; Boethius, c. 39, sect. 7 (lib. iv. pr. 6). + Du. velg. + Dan. felge. + G. felge. β. So named from the pieces of the rim being put together; from A.S. feolan, fiolan, to stick, Grein, i. 289; cf. affeolan, to cleave to, id. i. 61; cognate with O.H.G. felahan, to put together, Goth. filhan, to hide, and Icel. fela, to hide, preserve.

FELON, a wicked person. (F.,—Low Lat.) M.E. felun, Floriz, ed. Lumby, 247, 329; felunie (=felony), id. 331.—O.F. felon, a traitor, wicked man.—Low Lat. fellonem, felonem, acc. of fello, felo, a traitor, rebel. β. Of disputed origin; but clearly (as I think) Celtic. Cf. Gael. feallan, a felon, traitor, Breton falloni, treachery; from the verb found as Irish and Gael. feall, to betray, deceive, fail, Breton fallaat, to impair, render base; whence also Bret. fall, Irish feal, evil, W. and Corn. ffel, wily. The Irish feall is clearly cognate with Lat. fallere. See Fall. Der. felon-y, felon-i-ous, felon-i-ous-ly, felon-i-ous-ness. [†]

FELT, cloth made by matting wool together. (E.) M.E. felt, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 1689. [Not found in A.S.] + Du. vilt. + G. filz. + Gk. πίλος, felt. Cf. Lat. pileus, pileus, a felt hat. Root uncertain. Der. felt, vb., felt-er, felt-ing. Also filter, q.v. [†]

FELUCCA, a kind of small ship. (Ital.,—Arab.) In use in the Mediterranean Sea.—Ital. feluca; cf. Span. faluca.—Arab. fulk, a ship; Rich. Dict. p. 1099. [†]

FEMALE, of the weaker sex. (F.,—L.) An accommodated spelling, to make it look more like male. M.E. femele, Gower, C. A. ii. 45; P. Plowman, B. xi. 331.—O.F. femelle, 'female'; Cot.—Lat. femella, a young woman; dimin. of femina, a woman. See Feminine.

FEMININE, womanly. (F.,—L.) In Shak. L. L. iv. 2. 83.—O.F. feminin, 'feminine'; Cot.—Lat. femininus.—Lat. femina, a woman. β. Either from the base fe-; see Fetus; or from the √DHA, to suck; see Curtius, i. 313, 379. Der. (from Lat. femina), female, q.v.; also ef-femin-ate.

FEMORAL, belonging to the thigh. (L.) In Johnson's Dict.—Low Lat. femoralis; formed from femor-, base of femur, the thigh. Root uncertain.

FEN, a morass, bog. (E.) M.E. fen, King Alisaunder, 3965.—A.S. fen, Grein, i. 281. + Du. veen. + Icel. fen. + Goth. fani, mud. + O.H.G. fenni. Cf. Gk. νήλος, mud; Lat. palus, a marsh. Der. fenny.

FENCE, a guard, hedge. (F.,—L.) Merely an abbreviation for defence. 'Without weapon or fence' = defence; Udall, on Luke, c. 10. Cf. 'The place . . . was barried and fensyd for the same entent'; Fabyan's Chron. an. 1408. See Defence, and Fend. Der. fence, sb., in the sense of 'parrying with the sword'; spelt fenss, Barbour's Bruce, xx. 384; hence fence, verb, (1) to enclose, (2) to practise fencing; fenc-ing, fenc-ible. [†]

FEND, to defend, ward off. (F.,—L.) M.E. fenden; the pt. t. fended occurs in P. Plowman, B. xix. 46, C. xxii. 46, where some MSS. read defended. Fend is a mere abbreviation of defend, q.v. Der. fend-er, (1) a metal guard for fire; (2) a buffer to deaden a blow.

FENNEL, a kind of fragrant plant. (L.) M.E. fenel, older form fenkil; P. Plowman, A. v. 156 (and footnote).—A.S. finol, finul, finugle, finule; Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 326.—Lat. feniculum, feniculum, fennel. Formed, with dimin. suffixes -cu- and -lu-, from Lat. feno=fenu-, crude form of fenum, hay. Root uncertain. Der. hence also fenugreek (Minshew)=Lat. fenum Græcum.

FEOFF, to invest with a fief. (F.) M.E. feffen, feoffen; Chaucer, C. T. 9572; P. Plowman, B. ii. 78, 146; Rob. of Glouc. p. 368.—O.F. feoffer (Roquefort), more commonly fieffer (Burguy), to invest with a fief.—O.F. fief, a fief; see Fief. Der. feoffee, from O.F. pp. feoffe, one invested with a fief.

FERMENT, yeast, leaven, commotion. (L.) 'The nation is in too high a ferment'; Dryden, pref. to Hind and Panther, l. 1.—Lat. fermentum, leaven; put for ferui-mentum. (See Barm).—Lat. feruere, to boil, be agitated; see Fervent. Der. ferment, vb., Pope, Windsor Forest, l. 93; ferment-at-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 16285; ferment-able, ferment-at-ive.

FERN, a plant with feathery fronds. (E.) M.E. ferne, Chaucer, C. T. 10568, 10569.—A.S. fearn, Gloss. to Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms. + Du. varen. + G. farnkraut=feather-plant. + Skt. parna, a wing, feather, leaf, tree; applied to various plants. β. Fick (i. 252) suggests the root SPAR, to struggle; apparently with reference to the fluttering of a bird's wings. Der. fern-y.

FEROCITY, fierceness. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; ferocious is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—F. ferocité, 'fierceness'; Cot.—Lat. ferocitatem, acc. of ferocitas, fierceness.—Lat. feroci-, crude form of ferox, fierce.—Lat. ferus, wild. See Fierce. Der. feroci-ous, an ill-coined word, suggested by the O.F. feroce, cruel; ferocious-ly, ferocious-ness.

FERREOUS, made of iron. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 3. § 4.—Lat. ferreus (by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, egregious).—Lat. ferrum, iron; put for an older form fersum.—√BHARS, to be stiff (Fick, i. 159); Skt. hrish (orig. bhrish), to bristle; and see Bristle. Der. (from Lat. ferrum), ferri-fer-ous, where -fer- is from √BHAR, to bear; also farrier, q.v.

FERRET (1), an animal of the weasel tribe. (F.,—Low Lat.) See Shak. Jul. Cæsar, i. 2. 186.—O.F. furet, 'a ferret'; Cot.—Low Lat. furetus, furectus, a ferret; cf. Low Lat. furo (gen. furonis), a ferret. β. Said to be from Lat. fur, a thief (Diez); but rather from Bret. fúr, wise; cf. W. ffur, wise, wily, ffured, a wily one, a ferret. Der. ferret, verb; = O.F. fureter, 'to ferret, search, hunt'; Cot. [†]

FERRET (2), a kind of silk tape. (Ital.,—L.) 'When parchmenters [parchment-sellers?] put in no ferret-silke;' Gascoigne, Steel Glass, 1095. [Also called floret-silk, which is the French form; from O.F. fleuret, 'floret silk'; Cot.] Corrupted from Ital. fioretto, 'a flower or little flower; also course [coarse] ferret silke; also flower-work upon lace or embroidery'; Florio.—Ital. fiore, a flower; with dimin. suffix -etto.—Lat. florem, acc. of flos, a flower. See Flower. ¶ Apparently named from some flowering-work upon it. The O.F. fleuret is, similarly, the dimin. of F. fleur, a flower. The Ital. change of i to e accounts for the E. form.

FERRULE, a metal ring at the end of a stick. (F.,—L.) An accommodated spelling, due to confusion with Lat. ferrum, iron. Formerly verril. 'Verril, Verril, a little brass or iron ring at the small end of a cane;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. And so spelt in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave.—O.F. virole, 'an iron ring put about the end of a staff,' &c.; Cot.—Low Lat. virola, a ring to bind anything; = Lat. uiriola, a little bracelet.—Lat. uiria, a bracelet, armband.—Lat. uere, to twist, bind round; cf. Lat. uitta, a band, fillet. + WI, to plait, twist, bind; weakened form of √WA, to weave; Fick, i. 203. See Withy. [†]

FERRY, to transport, carry across a river. (E.) Orig. used merely in the sense 'to carry'. M.E. ferien, to convey; the pt. t. ferede is in Layamon, l. 237.—A.S. ferian, to carry; as in 'he was fered on heofon' = he was carried to heaven; Luke, xxiv. 31. Causal of A.S. faran, to fare, go. + Icel. ferja, to carry, ferry; causal of fara. + Goth. farjan, to travel by ship, sail; an extension of faran. See Fare. Der. ferry, sb., (Icel. ferja, sb.) ferry-boat, ferry-man. [†]

FERTILE, fruitful. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 338.—O.F. fertile, 'fertile'; Cot.—Lat. fertilis, fruitful.—Lat. ferre, to bear; cognate with E. bear. Der. fertili-ty, fertilise.

FERULE, a rod (or bat) for punishing children. (L.) Formerly spelt ferula; misprinted ferular in the old ed. of Milton's Areopagitica; see ed. by Hales, p. 30, l. 19, and note.—Lat. ferula, a rod, whip.—Lat. ferire, to strike. + Icel. berja, to strike. Perhaps from √BHAR, to strike (Fick).

FERVENT, heated, ardent, zealous. (F.,—L.) M.E. feruient (with u=v). Chaucer has feruiently, Troilus, iv. 1384.—O.F. feruent, 'fervent, hot'; Cot.—Lat. feruent-, stem of pres. pt. of feruere, to boil.—Lat. base fru- (found in defru-tum, must be boiled down), cognate with E. brev. See Brew. Der. fervent-ly, fervency; also ferv-id, Milton, P. L. v. 301, from Lat. feruidus, which from feruere; ferv-id-ly, ferv-id-ness; ferv-our, Wyclif, Deut. xxix. 20, from O.F. feruor, ferueur=Lat. feruorem, acc. of feruor, heat; also fer-ment, q.v., ef-ferv-esce, q.v.

FESTAL, belonging to a feast. (L.) A late word. In Johnson's Dict. Apparently a mere coinage, by adding -al to stem of Lat. festum, a feast. Generally derived from O.F. festal, only given by Roquefort; but the word is much too late for such a borrowing. See Feast. ¶ Or possibly a mere shortening of festival, q.v.

FESTER, to rangle. (E.?) M.E. festeren. 'So festered aren his woundes' = so festered are his wounds; P. Plowman, C. xx. 83. Etym. doubtful. In Lye's A.S. Dict. we find: 'Festrud, fostered, nutritus; festrud beon, nutriti; Scint. 81.' The reference does not seem to be right; but it is quite possible that festered is nothing but a peculiar form and use of fostered. The spelling féster for fúster in A.S. is not uncommon. See Foster. [†]

FESTIVAL, a feast-day. (F.,—Low L.) Properly an adj. 'With drapets festival'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 9. 27.—O.F. festival, festive; also, as sb. a festival; Roquefort.—Low Lat. festivus; formed, with suffix -alis, from Lat. festivus; see below.

FESTIVE, festal. (L.) Modern; see Todd's Johnson.—Lat. festivus, festive.—Lat. festum. See Feast. Der. festive-ly, festivity.

FESTOON, an ornament, garland. (F.,—L.) 'The festoons, friezes, and the astragals'; Dryden, Art of Poetry, 56.—F. feston, a garland, festoon; cf. Ital. festone, Span. feston.—Low Lat. fastonem acc. of festu, a garland. β. Usually derived from festum, a holiday, but a connection with Low Lat. festis=O.F. fest, faist, faiste=F.

fatte, a top, ridge (from the base of the Lat. fastigium), is almost as likely. Der. festoon, verb.

FETCH, to bring. (E.) M.E. fecchen, pt. t. fette, pp. fet; Chaucer, C. T. 7646, 821. — A.S. feſian, gefeſian, to fetch, Grein, i. 283, 398; pp. fetod. — A.S. ſæt, a pace, step, journey; Grein, i. 273. Cf. Icel. feta, to find one's way; Icel. ſet, a step, pace. Connected with Foot, q. v. — ✓ PAD, to seize, go; see Fick, i. 135, iii. 171. ¶ Cf. also Dan. falte, ſatte, to catch, take; G. fassen, to seize; from the same Teutonic base FAT; see Fit (i). The notions of 'seizing' and 'advancing' seem to be mixed up in this root. The orig. notion seems to be 'to go to find,' or 'go for.' Der. fetch, used by Shak. to mean 'a stratagem'; Hamlet, ii. 1. 38.

FÊTE, a festival. (F., — L.) Modern. — F. fête = O. F. feste, a feast. See Feast.

FETICH, FETISH, an object of superstitious worship. (F., — Port., — L.) Modern; not in Johnson. — F. fétiche. — Port. feitico, sorcery; also a name given by the Portuguese to the roughly made idols of W. Africa. — Port. feitico, artificial. — Lat. factitius. See Factitious. Der. fetich-ism.

FETID, stinking. (F., — L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 481. — O. F. fétide, 'stinking'; Cot. — Lat. fetidus, fetidus, stinking. — Lat. fœtere, to stink; cf. suffire (= sub-fire), to fumigate; fumus, smoke. From the same root as Fume, q. v. Der. fetid-ness.

FETLOCK, the part of the leg (in a horse) where the tuft of hair grows behind the pastern-joint. (Scand.) Orig. the tuft itself. 'Fetlock, or fetterlock, the hair that grows behind on a horse's feet'; Kersey. The pl. is spelt ſetlakkes in Rich. Coer de Lion, 5816; and ſetlokes in Arthur and Merlin, 5902. Of Scand. origin; the difficulty is to determine the precise sense of the former syllable; the latter is the same as our 'lock' of hair, viz. Icel. lokkr, A. S. loc. β. In connection with ſet we find Icel. ſet, a pace, step, ſeti, a pacer, stepper (used of horses), feta, to step, as if the fetlock were the lock displayed in stepping; cf. Swed. ſfåt, Dan. ſied, a foot-print, footstep, track. But there is also Icel. ſeti, a strand in the thread of a warp, Dan. ſed, a skein; as if there were an allusion to the tangled end of a skein, as suggested by Mr. Wedgwood. Again, there is also Icel. ſit, the webbed foot of waterbirds, the web or skin of the feet of animals, the edge or hem of a sock. γ. But all these words seem to be ultimately related, and to be further connected with both foot and fetter, the root being PAD, to seize, go; see Fetter, Fetch, Foot.

FETTER, a shackle. (E.) Orig. a shackle for the foot. M. E. feter, Chaucer, C. T. 1281. — A. S. fetor, feter, Grein, i. 283. + Du. veler, lace; orig. a fetter. + Icel. ſföturr. + Swed. ſfättrar, pl. fetters. + G. ſeſſel. + Lat. pedica; also com-pes (gen. com-ped-is), a fetter. + Gk. τῆδη, a fetter. + Skt. pádúkā, a shoe. All from the base PAD, a foot. See Foot.

FETUS, offspring, the young in the womb. (L.) Modern; in Johnson's Dict. — Lat. ſetus, a bringing forth, offspring. — Lat. ſetus, fruitful, that has brought forth. — Lat. *ſeuere, an obsolete verb, to generate, produce; related to fu in ſui, I was, and in ſu-turus, future. + Gk. φύειν, to beget; φύεσθαι, to grow; whence φύρεθ, grown. + Skt. bhú, to become, be. + A. S. beon, to be. — ✓ BHU, to exist. See Be. Der. (from the same root) ſe-cundity, q. v.; ſe-line, q. v.; ſe-licity, q. v.; also ef-fete, ſaum (2).

FEUD (1), revenge, hatred. (E.) In Shak. Troil. iv. 5. 132. Modified in spelling, by confusion with the word below. M. E. ſede (a Northern form), Wallace, i. 354. — A. S. fehð, enmity, hatred (very common); Grein, i. 275. — A. S. feh, hostile; whence mod. E. Foe, q. v. + G. fehde, hatred. + Goth. ſſjathwa, hatred. Curtius compares (but wrongly?) the Gk. πικρός, bitter, Lithuanian pykti, to be angry; Curtius, i. 201. [†]

FEUD (2), a fief; FEUDAL, pertaining to a fief. (Low L., — Scand.?) In Blackstone's Commentaries, b. ii. c. 4; and see Fee in Blount's Law Dict. — Low Lat. ſeudum, a fief; very common, but perhaps shortened from the adj., and due to a mistake, viz. the regarding of the -al in the Icel. words as being equivalent to the Lat. adj. suffix -alis. — Low Lat. ſeudalis, 'a vassal,' wrongly made into an adjective, with the sense of 'feudal.' — Icel. ſe-ðal (?), an ðal held as a ſe or fief from the king; not a true Icel. compound, but both parts are significant. — Icel. ſe, a fee or fief; and ðal, patrimony, property held in allodial tenure. See further under Fief, and Allodial. Der. ſeudal (really the parent of ſeud); ſeudal-ism, ſeud-al-or-y. [*]

FEVER, a kind of disease. (F., — L.) M. E. fever (with u for y), P. Plowman, C. iv. 96; ſefre, Ancræn Riwe, p. 112. — O. F. fevre, later ſievre (F. ſievre). — Lat. ſebris, acc. of ſebris, a fever, lit. 'a trembling.' — ✓ BHABH, an extension of ✓ BHA, to tremble; cf. Gk. φάβοις, fear; A. S. biſſan, G. beben, to tremble; Skt. bhi, to fear. Fick, i. 690. Der. ſeuer-ous, ſeuer-ish, ſeuer-ish-ly, ſeuer-ish-ness; also ſeuer-ſew, a plant, corrupted from A. S. ſefer-fuge, borrowed from Lat. ſebris-fuga = fever-dispelling, from Lat. fugare, to put to flight; see Wright's Vocab. i. 30, col. 2. [†]

FEW, of small number. (E.) M. E. fewe, Chaucer, C. T. 641. — A. S. ſeð, both sing. and pl.; ſeðwe, pl. only. + Icel. ſfir. + Dan. ſaa. + Swed. ſå. + Goth. ſaws. + Lat. paucus. + Gk. παῖρος, small. Root uncertain.

FEY, doomed to die. (E.) 'Till ſey men died awa', man; Burns, Battle of Sheriffmuir, l. 19. — A. S. ſeðe, doomed to die. + Icel. ſeigr, destined to die. + Du. veeg, about to die. + O. H. G. ſeigi, doomed to die; whence G. ſeig, a coward. [†] FIAT, a decree. (L.) In Young's Night Thoughts, vi. 465. — Lat. ſiat, let it be done. — Lat. ſio, I become; = ſa-i-o, used as pass. of ſa-cere, to make; from base ſa. See Fact.

FIB, a fable. (F., — L.) In Pope, Ep. to Lady Shirley, l. 24. A weakened and abbreviated form of fable. Cf. Prov. E. fible-fable, nonsense; Halliwell. See Fable. Der. fib, vb.

FIBRE, a thread, threadlike substance. (F., — L.) Spelt ſiber in Cotgrave. — F. ſibre; pl. ſibres, 'the fibers, threads, or strings of muscles'; Cot. — L. ſibra, a fibre. Root uncertain. Der. ſibr-ous, ſibrine; also ſringe, q. v.

FICKLE, deceitful, inconstant. (E.) M. E. ſikel, P. Plowman, C. iii. 25. — A. S. ſicol, found in a gloss (Bosworth); formed with a common adj. suffix -ol. — A. S. ſic, geſic, fraud, Grein, i. 400; cf. A. S. ſicen, deceit; allied to Icel. ſeikn, an evil, a portent, O. Sax. ſeikn, deceit. β. Perhaps the root of the word appears in Fidget, q. v. Der. fickle-ness.

FIDDLE, a stringed instrument, violin. (L.?) M. E. ſithel, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 457; ſidel, Chaucer, C. T. 298. — A. S. ſðele, only in the deriv. ſðelere, a fiddler, in a copy of Ælfric's Glossary (Bosworth); cf. Icel. ſðila, a fiddle, ſðilari, a fiddler; Dan. ſiddel; Du. vedel; G. ſiedel (O. H. G. ſidula). β. Of uncertain origin, but probably the same word as Low Lat. vidula, viñula, a viol, fiddle; a word presumably of Lat. origin. See Viol.

FIDELITY, faithfulness. (F., — L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, iv. 2. 160. — F. ſidelité, 'fidelity'; Cot. — Lat. ſidelitatem, acc. of ſidelitas. — Lat. ſidelis, faithful. — Lat. ſides, faith. See Faith.

FIDGET, to be restless, move uneasily. (Scand.) In Boswell's Life of Johnson (Todd's Johnson). A dimin. form of ſidge. 'Fidge about, to be continually moving up and down'; Kersey, ed. 1715. Fidge is a weakened form of the North E. ſick or ſike. 'Fike, ſyke, ſeik, to be in a restless state'; Jamieson. M. E. ſiken, Prompt. Parv. p. 160; whence the secondary form ſiſken, id. 162; see my note to P. Plowman, C. x. 153. 'The Sarezynes fledde, away gunne ſyke' = the Saracins fled, and away did hasten; used in contempt; Rich. Coer de Lion, 4749. — Icel. ſika, to climb up nimbly, as a spider. + Swed. ſika, ſikas, to hunt after; and see ſika in Rietz. + Norw. ſika, to take trouble; ſika etter, to pursue, hasten after; Aasen. ¶ Perhaps ſick-le is from this base ſik. Der. ſidget, sb., ſidget-y, ſidget-iness.

FIDUCIAL, showing trust. (L.) Rare; see Rich. Dict. 'Fiduciary, a feoffee in trust'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Both words are from Lat. ſiducia, trust. — Lat. ſidere, to trust. See Faith.

FIE, an interjection of disgust. (Scand.) M. E. ſy, Chaucer, C. T. 4500; 'ſy for shame'; id. 14897; Will. of Palerne, 481. — Icel. ſſj, ſei; Dan. ſy, also ſy ſkam dig, fie for shame; Swed. ſy, also ſy ſkam, fie for shame. Hence perhaps O. F. ſi, ſy, ſye; Cot. We find similar forms in the G. ſſui, Lat. phui, phy, Skt. phut, natural expressions of disgust, due to the sound of blowing away.

FIEF, land held of a superior. (F., — Low L. — Scand.?) In Dryden, On Mrs. Killigrew, l. 98. The M. E. vb. ſeffen, to enfeoff, is common; see Chaucer, C. T. 9572; P. Plowman, B. ii. 78, 146. — O. F. ſieff, spelt ſied in the 11th century (Brachet). — Low Lat. ſeudum, property held in fee. See Feud. ¶ Feudum is generally derived from O. H. G. ſihu, the same word as our ſee; see Fee. Thus Littré cites O. H. G. ſihu, ſeho, possessions, goods, cattle, without explaining the final d. Burguy looks on ſeu-dum as having an intercalated d. Possibly the final f in ſie-f and the d in ſeu-dum are alike due to the ð in Icel. ðal; see Feud. This Icel. word certainly exists in the word allodial; and this throws some light upon ſeud and ſief. The Scandinavian influence upon F. (and even upon O. H. G.) has been somewhat overlooked. Thus ſief is not merely 'ſee,' but 'paternal fee.' See Allodial. [*]

FIELD, an open space of land. (E.) M. E. ſeld, Chaucer, C. T. 888. — A. S. ſeld; Grein. + Du. veld. + Dan. felt. + Swed. ſält. + G. feld. Cf. Russ. polé, a field. Root uncertain; but we may consider E. ſell, a hill, as being a mere variety of the same word; see Fell (4). Der. ſield-day, ſield-maſhal, &c.

FIELDFARE, a kind of bird. (E.) M. E. ſeldefare, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 861; ſeldfare, Will. of Palerne, 183. — A. S. ſeala-for, turdus Wright's Vocab. i. 63, l. 27. There is also an A. S. ſeala-for, turdus pilaris (in a gloss); Bosworth. — A.S. feld, a field; and faran, to fare, travel over. The A.S. fealo-for is, similarly, from fealo, fealu, reddish, yellowish, also fallow-land; and faran, to fare, travel. The sense is, in the latter case, 'fallow-wanderer,' i.e. traverser of the fallow-fields. See Field, Fallow, and Fare. ¶ The two names, accordingly, express much the same thing.

FIEND, an enemy. (E.) M.E. fiend, Chaucer, C. T. 7256; earlier feond, Layamon, l. 237. — A.S. feond, fiend, an enemy, hater; properly the pres. pt. of feón, contr. form of feogan, to hate; Grein, i. 294, 295. + Du. vijand, an enemy. + Dan. and Swed. fiende. + Icel. fiandi, pres. pt. of fiá, to hate. + Goth. fijands, pres. pt. of fijan, to hate. + G. feind. — ✓ PI, to hate; Fick, i. 145; whence also foe, q. v. ¶ Similarly, friend is a pres. pt. from Teut. base fri, to love; see Friend. Der. fiend-ish, fiend-ish-ness.

FIERCE, violent, angry. (F., — L.) M.E. fers, Chaucer, C. T. 1598; Rob. of Glouc. p. 188. — O.F. fers, fiers, oldest nom. form of O.F. fer, fier, fierce; Roquefort gives fers, Burguy fer, fier. — Lat. ferus, wild, savage; cf. fera, a wild beast. + Gk. thp, a wild animal; perhaps cognate with Deer, q. v. Der. fer-oc-i-ous, q. v.

FIFE, a shrill pipe. (F., — O.H.G.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 352. — F. fiſre, a fife; Cot. — O.H.G. pfifa, fifa; G. pfife, a pipe. — O.H.G. pfifen, to blow, puff, blow a fife; cf. G. pfiff, a whistle, hissing. Allied to Pipe, q. v. Cf. Lat. pipare, pipiare, to chirp.

FIG, the name of a fruit. (F., — L.) The pl. figes occurs in the Ancien Riwle, p. 150, where also the fig-tree is called figer. [The A.S. fic (Matt. vii. 16) is a somewhat different form, being taken directly from Lat. ficus.] — F. figue, due to the Provençal form figa, a fig; cf. Span. figo. — Lat. ficum, acc. of ficus, a fig. Der. fig-wort.

FIGHT, to contend in war. (E.) M.E. fikten, fehten, Layamon, ll. 1359, 1580. — A.S. feohthan, Grein, i. 289; whence the sb. feohthe, a fight. + Du. vechten. + Dan. feigte. + Swed. fakta. + O.H.G. fehian; G. fechten. β. Possibly connected with Lat. pectere, to comb, to card, hence, to beat. Der. fight, sb., fight-er, fight-ing.

FILAMENT, a slender thread. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. filamen. — O.F. filamens, 'filaments,' Cot. [The i was added by analogy with other words in -ment.] Formed as if from Lat. filamentum (with suffix -mentum) from Low Lat. filare, to wind thread. — Lat. filum, a thread; see File (1).

FILBERT, the fruit of the hazel. (F., — O.H.G.) Formerly spelt philbert or philberd. 'The Philbert that loves the vale,' Peacham's Emblems, ed. 1612 (R.). Gower has: 'That Phillis in the same throwe Was shape into a nutte-tree . . . And, after Phillis, philberd This tre was cleped in the yerd;' C. A. ii. 30. [This is an allusion to the story of Phyllis and Demophon in Ovid, and of course does not account for the word, as it takes no notice of the last syllable.] β. Philberd is clearly put for 'philberd nut,' and the word is a proper name. We have no sufficient evidence to shew from whom the nut was named. A common story is that it was so named after Philibert, king of France, but there was no such king. Cotgrave has: 'Philibert, a proper name for a man; and particularly the name of a certain Burgundian [Burgundian] saint; whereof chaine de S. Philibert, a kind of counterfeit chain.' Perhaps the nut too was named after St. Philibert, whose name also passed into a proverb in another connection. St. Philibert's day is Aug. 22 (Old Style), just the nutting season. The name is Frankish. — O.H.G. fil-beri, i.e. very bright; from fil (G. viel), much, very; and bert = berht, bright, cognate with E. bright. See Hist. of Christian Names, by Miss Yonge, ii. 231; where, however, fil- is equated to wille (will) by a mistake. ¶ Similarly, a filbert is called in German Lambertsnuß = Lambert's nut; St. Lambert's day is Sept. 17. [†]

FILCH, to steal, pilfer. (Scand.) Rob. of Brunne has filchid = stolen; tr. of Langtoft, p. 282. Filch stands for fil-k, (cf. smir-k, smile, stal-k from steal), where k is a formative addition. Fil- represents M.E. felen, to hide; not very uncommon, and still in use provincially; see Feal in Halliwell. 'For to felen me for ferde' = to hide myself for fear; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3237. — Icel. fela, to hide, conceal, bury. + Goth. filhan, to hide, bury. + O.H.G. felahan, to put together; whence G. be-fehlen, to order. Der. filch-er.

FILE (2), a steel rasp. (E.) M.E. file, Chaucer, C. T. 2510. — A.S. feol, a file (in a gloss); Bosworth, Leo. + Du. vijl. + Dan. fil. + Swed. fil. + O.H.G. fhala, figala; G. feile. + Russ. pila, a file. Cf. Skt. piṣ, to adorn, form, of which 'the real meaning seems to be "to work with a sharp tool;"' Curtius, i. 202. Cf. Fick, i. 675. Der. file, verb; fil-ings. [†]

FILIAL, relating to a child. (L.) 'All filial reuerence;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 63 f. Formed as if from Low Lat. filialis; cf. Low Lat. filialiter, in a mode resembling that of a son. — Lat. filius, son; filia, daughter; orig. an infant; cf. Lat. felare, to suck. — ✓ DHA, to suck; cf. Skt. dha, to suck. Der. filial-ly, fil-i-ation, of-fil-ate.

FILIBUSTER, a pirate, freebooter. (Span., — E.) Modern; mere Spanish. — Span. filibuster, a buccaneer, pirate; so called from the vessel in which they sailed. — Span. fibote, fibote, a fast-sailing vessel. — E. flyboat; cf. 'What news o' th' Flyboat?' Beaum. and Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, iv. 3. 20. 'Flyboat, a swift and light vessel built for sailing;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Hence also the Du. vlieboot, explained as 'fly-boat' in Sewel's Du. Dict., ed. 1754. ¶ But see Addenda. [✱]

FILIGREE, fine ornamental work. (Span.) A corruption of filigran or filigrane, the older form. 'A curious filigrane handkerchief . . . out of Spain;' Dr. Browne's Travels, ed. 1685 (Todd). 'Several filigran curiosities;' Tatler, no. 245. — Span. filigrana, filigree-work, fine wrought work. — Span. fila, a file, row of things, filar, to spin; and grano, the grain or principal fibre of the material; so called because the chief texture of the material was wrought in silver wire. See File (1) and Grain.

FILL, to make full. (E.) M.E. fillen, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 763; older form fullen, Ancien Riwle, p. 40. — A.S. fillan, fullian, Grein, i. 356, 360; from A.S. ful, full. + Du. vullen. + Icel. fylla. + Dan. fyld. + Swed. fylla. + Goth. fulljan. + G. füllen. See Full. Der. fill, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 2561; fill-er.

FILLET, a little band. (F., — L.) M.E. fillet, Chaucer, C. T. 3243. — O.F. filet, dimin. of fil, a thread. — Lat. filum, a thread. See File (1). Der. fillet, verb.

FILIBEG, PHILIBEG, a kilt. (Gaelic.) Used by Dr. Johnson, in his Tour to the Western Islands (Todd). — Gael. feileadh-beag, the kilt in its modern shape; Macleod. — Gael. fileadh, a fold, plait, from the verb fill, to fold; and beag, little, small; so that the sense is 'little fold.'

FILLIP, to strike with the finger-nail, when jerked from under the thumb. (E.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 255. Another form of Flip. Halliwell has: 'Flip, a slight sudden blow; also, to fillip, to jerk;' Somerset. Lillie (Mother Bombie, ed. 1632, sig. Dd. ii) seems to use the word flip in the sense to fillip. 'Fillip is an easier form of flip, which arose from flip, by the shifting of l. Der. fillip, sb. See Flippant.

FILLY, a female foal. (Scand.) Shak. has filly foal, Mids. N. Dr. ii. 1. 46. Merely the dimin. form of foal, formed by suffixing -y and modifying the vowel. — Icel. fylija, a filly; from foli, a foal. + Dan. föl, neut. a foal; from fole, masc. a foal. + Swed. föl, neut. a foal; fåle, masc. + G. füllen, a colt; from O.H.G. volu, a foal. See Foal.

FILM, a thin skin. (E.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 4. 63. M.E. film, fylme, Prompt. Parv. p. 160. — A.S. film; only found in the dimin. film-en, membrane, prepuce; Gen. xvii. 11. + O. Fries. film; only in the dimin. filmene, skin. β. Formed by adding the suffix -m (Aryan -ma) to the base fil, a skin, seen in Goth. fileins, leathern, and in E. fell, a skin. See Fell (2). Cf. W. pilen, skin. Der. film-y, film-i-ness.

FILTER, to strain liquors; a strainer. (F., — Low L., — O. Low G.) The sb. is in Cotgrave. 'Filter, or Filtrate, to strain through a bag, felt, brown paper, &c.;' also 'Filtrum or Feltrum, a strainer; . . . a felt-hat;' Kersey, ed. 1715. — O.F. filtrer, 'to strain through a felt;' Cot. Cf. O.F. feutre, 'a felt, also a filter, a peece of felt . . . to straine things through,' id.; where feutre is a corruption of an older form feltré. — Low Lat. filtrum, feltrum, felt. — O. Low Ger. fil (= E. felt), preserved in Du. vilt, felt; cf. G. filz. See Felt. Der. fil-tr-ate, fil-tr-ation.

FILTH, foul matter. (E.) M.E. filth, felth, fulthe; Prompt. Parv. p. 180; Ancien Riwle, p. 128. — A.S. fylð (properly fyldu) Matt. xiii. 27, where the Hatton MS. has felihe. Formed, by vowel-change of u to y, and by adding the suffix -ðu (Aryan -ta) to the adj. fil, foul. + O.H.G. fhilida, filth; from fil, vül, foul. See Foul. Der. filth-y, filth-i-ness.

FIN, a wing-like organ of a fish. (E.) M.E. finne; the pl. pp. finned = furnished with fins, occurs in Rom. of Alexander, fragment

B, ed. Skeat, i. 298.—A.S. fin, Levit. xi. 9. + Du. vin. + Swed. finn-, in finnfisk, a finned fish; fena, a fin. + Dan. finne. + Lat. *pinn*a, a fin, in the comp. pinniger, having fins; Ovid, Metam. xiii. 963. ¶ The usual connection asserted between Lat. *pinn*a and penna is not certain; if it were, we should have to connect fin with feather. Der. finn-y.

FINAL, pertaining to the end. (F., -L.) M.E. final, Gower, C. A. iii. 348.—O.F. final, 'final'; Cot.—Lat. finalis—Lat. finis, the end. See FINISH. Der. final-ly, final-i-ty; also -fin-ale, from Ital. finale, final, hence, an ending.

FINANCE, revenue. (F., -L.) M.E. fynance, used by Lord Berners in the sense of 'ransom'; tr. of Froissart, i. 202, 312 (R.) 'All the finances or revenues'; Bacon, The Office of Alienations (R.)—O.F. finance, pl. finances, 'wealth, substance, revenue, . . . all extraordinary levies'; Cot.—Low Lat. financia, a payment.—Low Lat. finare, to pay a fine or tax.—Low Lat. finis, a settled payment, a final arrangement; Lat. finis, the end. See Fine (2), and FINISH. Der. financ-i-al, financ-i-al-ly, financ-i-er.

FINCH, the name of several birds. (E.) M.E. finch, Chaucer, C. T. 654.—A.S. *fin*c; Wright's Vocab. i. 62. + Du. vink. + Dan. finke. + Swed. *fin*k. + G. *fin*k. + O.H.G. fincho. + W. pine, a chaffinch; also smart, gay, fine. Cf. also Gk. στίνος, στίνης, *στίν*α, a finch; prov. E. spink, a finch; and perhaps E. spangle, q. v.

FIND, to meet with, light upon. (E.) M.E. finden, Chaucer, Prolog. 738.—A.S. findan; Grein. + Du. vinden. + Dan. finde. + Swed. and Icel. finna (= finda). + Goth. finthan. + O.H.G. findan; G. finden. + Lat. petere, to seek after, fly towards. + Gk. πέρειν (= πέρειν-τω), to fall. + Skt. pat, to fall, fly.—✓ PAT, to fall, fly. Der. find-er; from same root, im-pet-us, q. v., pen, q. v., asym-pt-ote, q. v., feather, q. v.; pet-it-ion, q. v., ap-pet-ite, q. v.

FINE (1), exquisite, complete, thin. (F., -L.) M.E. fin; P. Plowman, B. ii. 9.—O.F. fin, 'witty, . . . perfect, exact, pure'; Cot.—Lat. finitus, well rounded (said of a sentence). 'This word, while still Latin, displaced its accent from finitus to finitus; it then dropped the two final short syllables'; Brachet. Cf. Low Lat. finus, fine, pure, used of money. Thus fine is a doublet of finite; see FINITE. Der. fine-ly, fine-ness; fin-er-y, used by Burke (R.); fin-esse (F. finesse); fin-ic-al, a coined word, in Shak. K. Lear, ii. 2. 19; fin-ic-al-ly; also re-fine. [†] ¶ The Du. fin, G. fein, &c. are not Teutonic words, but borrowed from the Romance languages (Diz.).

FINE (2), a tax, forced payment. (Law L.) M.E. fine, sb., Sir T. More, Works, p. 62 b; vb., Fabian's Chron. an. 1440-1 (at the end).—Law Lat. finis, a fine; see Fine in Blount's Law Dict., and finis in Ducange. The lit. sense is 'a final payment' or composition, to settle a matter; from Lat. finis, an end. See FINISH. Der. fine, verb; fin-able; fin-ance, q. v.

FINGER, part of the hand. (E.) M.E. finger, P. Plowman, C. iii. 12.—A.S. finger, Grein. + Du. vinger. + Icel. fingr. + Dan. and Swed. finger. + Goth. figgrs (= fingrs). + G. finger. Probably derived from the same root as fang; see Fang. Der. finger, verb; finger-post.

FINIAL, an ornament on a pinnacle. (L.) In Holland's tr. of Suetonius, p. 162; and tr. of Pliny, bk. xxxv. c. 12. A coined word, suggested by Low Lat. finiales lapides, terminal stones; finiabilis, terminal.—Lat. finire, to finish; see FINISH.

FINICAL, spruce, foppish; see Fine (1).

FINISH, to end, terminate. (F., -L.) M.E. finischen; the pp. finischid occurs in Will. of Palerne, l. 5398.—O.F. finiss-, base of finiss-ant, pres. pt. of finir, to finish.—Lat. finire, to end.—Lat. finis, end, bound.

β. Lat. finis=fid-nis, a parting, boundary, edge, end; from FID, base of findere, to cleave. See Fissure. Der. finish, sb., finish-er; also fin-ite, q. v., fin-ial, q. v., fin-al, q. v., af-fin-ity, con-fine, de-fine, in-fin-ite.

FINITE, limited. (L.) In Dryden, Hind and Panther, i. 105.—Lat. finitus, pp. of finire, to end; see FINISH. Der. finite-ly, finite-ness; in-finite. Doublet, fine (1).

FIR, the name of a tree. (E.) M.E. fir, Chaucer, C. T. 2923.—A.S. furh, in the comp. furh-wudu, fir-wood, which occurs in a glossary; see Cockayne's Leechdoms, vol. iii. + Icel. fura. + Dan. fyr. + Swed. furu. + G. föhre. + W. fyr. + Lat. quercus, an oak; see Max Müller, Lect. on Lang. vol. ii. ¶ The orig. meaning was prob. 'hard', or 'firm'; cf. Skt. karkara, hard; karkapa, hard, firm. For letter-changes, see Five. [†]

FIRE, the heat and light of flame. (E.) M.E. fyr, Chaucer, C. T. 1248; also fur, P. Plowman, C. iv. 125.—A.S. fyr, Grein, i. 364. + Du. wuur. + Icel. fjri. + Dan. and Swed. fyr. + G. feuer. + Gk. πῦρ. β. The root seems to be ✓ PU, to purify; cf. Skt. pávana (= pú-ana), purifying, pure, also fire. See Pure. Der. fire, vb., fier-y (= fir-y), fir-ing; also numerous compounds, as fire-arms, -brand, -damp, -fly, -lock, -man, -place, -plug, -proof, -ship, &c.

1551; John, ii. 6. The history of the word is not well known, but it clearly goes with kilderkin, a measure of two firkins, which is an O. Du. word. It is made up of the Du. vier, four; and the suffix -kin as in kilderkin, which is the O. Du. dimin. suffix -ken, formerly common, but now superseded by -je or -je; see Sewel's Du. Grammar (in his Dict.), p. 37. Cf. O. Du. vierdeval, a peck (Sewel); and see Farthing and Kilderkin. [†]

FIRM, steadfast, fixed. (F., -L.) M.E. ferme, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 238.—O.F. ferme—Lat. firmus. Cf. Skt. dharman, right, law, justice; dhara, preserving.—✓ DHAR, to hold, maintain; whence Skt. dhti, to maintain, carry; Lowland Scotch dree, to endure, undergo. Der. firm, sb.; firm-ly, firm-ness; firm-a-ment, q. v.; also af-firm, con-firm, in-firm; also farm, q. v.

FIRMAMENT, the celestial sphere. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E. firmament, King Alisaunder, 714.—O.F. firmament; Cot.—Lat. firmamentum, (1) a support, (2) the expanse of the sky; Genesis, i. 6.—Lat. firmus, firm, with suffix -mentum. See Firm.

FIRMAN, a mandate. (Persian.) In Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 221.—Pers. farmán, a mandate, order; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 452. + Skt. pramāna, a measure, scale, authority, decision; from pra=Pers. far=Gk. πρό, before; and má, to measure, with suffix -ana.—✓ MA, to measure; see Mete.

FIRST, foremost, chief. (E.) M.E. first, firste, Chaucer, C. T. 4715.—A.S. fyrst, Grein, i. 364. + Du. voorst. + Icel. fyrstr. + Dan. and Swed. förste, adj.; först, adv. + O.H.G. furisto, first; G. First, a prince, a chief. β. The superl. of fore, by adding -st (= -est), with vowel-change. See Fore, Former.

FIRTH, the same as Frith, q. v.

FISCAL, pertaining to the revenue. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—O.F. fiscal, 'fiscall'; Cot.—O.F. fisque, 'the public purse'; id.—Lat. fiscus, a basket of rushes, also, a purse. Prob. allied to fascis, a bundle; see Fascine. Der. con-fisc-ate, q. v.

FISH, an animal that lives in water, and breathes through gills. (E.) M.E. fish, fisch; Chaucer, C. T. 10587.—A.S. fisc; Grein. + Du. visch. + Icel. fiskr. + Dan. and Swed. fisk. + G. fisch. + Lat. piscis. + W. pysg. + Bret. pesk. + Irish and Gael. iasg (by loss of initial p, as in Irish athair=Lat. pater). Root unknown. Der. fish, verb; fish-er, fish-er-y, fish-er-man, fish-ing, fish-y, fish-i-ness, fish-monger (see monger).

FISSURE, a cleft. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—O.F. fissure, 'a cleft'; Cot.—Lat. fissura, a cleft.—Lat. fissus, pp. of findere (base FID), to cleave. + Skt. bhid, to break, pierce, disjoin.—✓ BHID, to cleave; whence also E. Bite, q. v. Der. (from same root), fiss-ile, easily cleft.

FIST, the clenched hand. (E.) M.E. fst; also fest, Chaucer, C. T. 12736; just, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 166.—A.S. fyst; Grein, i. 365. + Du. vuist. + G. faust; O.H.G. fuust. + Russ. piaste, the fist. + Lat. pugnus. + Gk. πυγῆ, the fist; πύγ, with the fist. Cf. Gk. πυκνός, close, compact; the form of the base appears to be PUK. Curtius, i. 356. See Pugnacious, Pugilist.

FISTULA, a deep, narrow abscess. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and Minshew, ed. 1627.—Lat. fistula, a pipe; from its pipe-like shape. Cf. Gk. φύξω, to blow. Der. fistul-ar, fistul-ous.

FIT (1), to suit; as adj., apt, suitable. (Scand.) M.E. fiten, to arrange, set (men) in array; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1989, 2455. The adj. is M.E. fit, fyt. 'Fyt, or mete [meet]'; Prompt. Parv. p. 163.—Icel. fija, to knit together; Norse dial. fija, to draw a lace together in a noose, knit (Aasen); Swed. dial. fitja, to bind together (Rietz). + Goth. fetjan, to adorn, deck; fetjan sik, to adorn oneself. Cf. also Icel. fat, a vat, also clothing. The Teutonic base is FAT, to go, seize; see Fetch. Der. fit, verb; fit-ing, Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 43; fit-ly, fit-ness; fit-er. ¶ The common prov. E. fettle, to arrange, is from the same root; see Levins. And see below.

FIT (2), a part of a poem; a sudden attack of illness. (E.) The orig. sense is 'a step'; then 'a part of a poem'; then 'a bout of fighting, struggle'; lastly, 'a sudden attack of pain'. M.E. fit, a part of a poem, burst of song, P. Plowman, A. i. 139; and see Chaucer, C. T. 4228.—A.S. fit, a song; also, a struggle; Grein, i. 300. + Icel. fet, a pace, step, foot (in poetry), part of a poem. + Skt. pada, a step, trace, a verse of a poem; connected with pad, pád, a foot. See Fetch, and Foot. Also allied to Fit (1). Der. fit-ful, Macbeth, iii. 2. 23; fit-ful-ly, fit-ful-ness.

FITCHET, FITCHEW, a polecat. (F., -O. Du.) Spelt fitchew, King Lear, iv. 6. 124; Troil. v. 1. 67; and earlier, in P. Ploughman. Crede, l. 295. Fitchew is a corruption of O.F. fissau, expl. by Cot. as 'a fitch or fulmart', i.e. polecat.—O. Du. fisse, a polecat; Kilian. So called from the smell.—O. Low G. adj. *fis, preserved in mod. Du. vies, nasty, loathsome, and Icel. fisi-sveppr, a name of a fungus.—O. Low G. verbal root, fis-, preserved in Icel. fisa, Dan. fise, with the same sense as Lat. pedere. See Fizz. [†]

FITZ, son. (Norm. F., -L.) The spelling with t is unnecessary, but due to an attempt to preserve the old sound of Norm. F. z, which was pronounced as ts. The usual old spelling is fiz; see Vie de S. Auban, ed. Atkinson (Glossary); the spellings filtz, fiz, and fiz all occur in P. Plowman, B. vii. 162 (and footnote). - Lat. filius, a son; whence, by contraction, filz or fiz. See FIAL.

FIVE, the half of ten. (E.) M. E. fff, Layamon, 1425. At a later period, the pl. form fiue (with u=v, and with final e) is more common; cf. Rob. of Glouc. p. 6. - A. S. fif, sometimes fife, five; Grein, i. 300. [Here f stands for in or im, and the true form is finf; or (by the influence of f) fimf.] + Du. viif. + Dan. and Swed. fem. + Icel. fimm. + Goth. fimf. + O. H. G. fimf, finf; G. fünf. + W. pump. + Lat. quinque. + Gk. πέντε, πέντε. + Skt. pañchan. All from an Aryan form PANKAN, KANKAN, or KWANKAN. Der. fives, five-fold; fifteen=M. E. fiftene=A. S. fiftyne, see TEN; fif-th=M. E. fifte=A. S. fifta; fif-ty=A. S. fiftig.

FIX, to bind, fasten. (F., -L.) Originally a pp. as in Chaucer, C. T. 16247. [We also find a M. E. verb fichen, to fix, pierce; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, ll. 2098, 4239; formed directly from O. F. ficher=Low Lat. *figicare (not found), a secondary form from Lat. figere.] - O. F. fixe, 'fixed, settled'; Cot. - Lat. fixus, pp. of figere, to fix. Cf. Gk. σφίγγω, to bind, compress; Curtius, i. 229. Der. fix-ed, fix-ed-ly, fix-ed-ness; fix-a-tion, Gower, C. A. ii. 86; fix-i-ty; fix-ture, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 67; fix-ure, Troil. i. 3. 101.

FIZZ, to make a hissing sound. (Scand.) We also find fizzle, a frequentative form, in Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, v. 3. 2. Cf. M. E. fis, a blowing, in Wright's Vocab. i. 209; allied to fist (vulgar E. foist), Prompt. Parv. p. 163. - Icel. fisa, Dan. fise, with the same sense as Lat. pedere. An imitative word. See FITCHOW, FOIST.

FLABBY, soft and yielding, hanging loose. (E.? perhaps Scand.) Not in early use. 'Flabbiness, limberness, softness and moistness'; Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. A variant of flappy, i. e. inclined to flap about. Cf. O. Du. flabbe, a contemptuous name for the tongue, Oudemans; Swed. dial. fläbb, the hanging underlip of animals, fläbb, an animal's snout, Rietz; Dan. flab, the chops. ¶ Besides flabby and flappy, we have also the old word flaggy. Thus Cotgrave explains F. flaccide by 'weak, flaggie, limber, hanging loose.' See FLAP and FLAG (1).

FLACCID, soft and weak. (F., -L.) 'Flaccid, withered, feeble, weak, flaggy'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - O. F. flaccide, 'weak, flaggie'; Cot. - Lat. flaccidus, flaccid. - Lat. flaccus, flabby, loose-hanging. β. Perhaps related to Skt. bhrāṣṭa, to fall, bhrāṣṭa, a falling, declining, dropping. Der. flaccid-ness, flaccid-i-ty.

FLAG (1), to droop, grow weary. (E.) 'Slow and flagging wings'; 2 Hen. VI, iv. i. 5. Weakened from the form flack. 'Flack, to hang loosely'; Halliwell. It is the same word as M. E. flakken, to move to and fro, to palpitate, as in Gower, C. A. iii. 315; 'her herte [began] to flacke and bete.' [Hence the frequentative verb flacker, 'to flutter, quiver'; Halliwell. Also the adj. flacky, 'hanging loosely'; id.] From the E. base flak, to waver; appearing in A. S. flacor, flying, roving (Grein). + Icel. flakka, to rove about; flaka, to flap, be loose (said of garments); cf. Swed. flacksa, to flutter; Icel. flögga, to flutter, flap. + O. Du. flakkeren, to flicker, waver. + G. flackern, to flutter. See FLABBY, FLAP, Flicker. Der. flaggy, flaggy-i-ness.

FLAG (2), an ensign. (Scand.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 207. - Dan. flag; Swed. flagg, a flag. + Du. vlag. + G. flagge. β. Derived from the verb which appears in Swed. dial. flage, to flutter in the wind, said of clothes (Rietz), and in Icel. flögga, to flutter. Thus it is a derivative from FLAG (1); see above.

FLAG (3), a water-plant, reed. (Scand.) Wyclif has flaggy, made of flags or reeds; Exod. ii. 3. The same word as flag (2); and named for its waving in the wind; see FLAG (1).

FLAG (4), FLAGSTONE, a paving-stone. (Scand.) Properly 'a thin slice' of stone; applied formerly also to a slice of turf. 'Flags, the surface of the earth, which they pare off to burn'; Norfolk; Ray's Gloss. of Southern Words, ed. 1691. - Icel. flaga, a flag or slab of stone; flag, the spot where a turf has been cut out. - Icel. flak, appearing in flakna, to flake off, to split; flagna, to flake off. Flag is a doublet of Flake, q. v.

FLAGELLATE, to scourge. (L.) Flagellation is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. flagellatus, pp. of flagellare, to scourge. - Lat. flagellum, a scourge; dimin. of flagrum, a scourge. - ✓ BLAGH, to strike; whence also E. afflict and E. blow. See Afflict, and Blow. Der. flagellat-ion; flagell-ant, from Lat. flagellans, base of pres. pt. of flagellare; also flail, q. v.; and perhaps flog.

FLAGEOLET, a sort of flute. (F., -L.) Spelt flagellate in Hudibras, c. ii. pt. ii. l. 610. - O. F. flageolet, 'a pipe, whistle, flute'; Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -et) of O. F. flageol, with the same sense; id. - Low Lat. flautiolus, not found, but a dimin. from Low Lat. flauta, a flute. Thus flageolet is a double dimin. from Flute, q. v.

FLAGITIOUS, very wicked. (L.) 'Many flagitious acts; Hall's Chron. Rich. III, an 3. - Lat. flagitiosus, shameful. - Lat. flagitium, a disgraceful act. - Lat. flagitare, to act with violence, implore earnestly. - Lat. base flag, to burn; cf. flagrare, to burn. See Flagrant. Der. flagitious-ly, -ness.

FLAGON, a drinking vessel. (F., -L.) In Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 187 (R.). - O. F. flacon, older form flascun, a great leathern bottle; Cot. - Low Lat. flascunem, acc. of flasco, a large flask; augmentative of flascus, flasca, a flask. See Flask.

FLAGRANT, glaring, said of a fault. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. - O. F. flagrant, 'flagrant, burning'; Cot. - Lat. flagrans, acc. of pres. pt. of flagrare, to burn. - Lat. base flag, to burn. + Gk. φλέγω, to burn. + Skt. bhrāj, to shine brightly. - ✓ BHARG, BHARK, to shine; whence also E. bright. See Bright. Der. flagrant-ly, flagrant-y; see con-flagrat-ion.

FLAIL, an instrument for threshing corn. (F., -L.) In P. Plowman, B. vi. 187. - O. F. flai (F. fléau), a flail, scourge. - Lat. flagellum, a scourge. See Flagellate. ¶ The Du. vlegel, G. fegel, are merely borrowed from Lat. flagellum.

FLAKE, a strip, thin slice or piece. (Scand.) 'As flakes fallen in grete snowes'; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 102. Of Scand. origin; the Norwegian dialects have preserved the word as flak, a slice, a piece torn off, an ice-floe (Aasen); cf. Icel. flak, the flapper or fin of a fish, flagna, to flake off, split; Swed. flaga, a flaw, crack, breach, flake; flagna, to peel off. The lit. sense is 'a piece stripped off'; from the verb which appears in E. flay. See Flay, Flaw, Floe, and Flag (4). Der. flak-y, flak-i-ness. [†]

FLAMBEAU, a torch. (F., -L.) In Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 135. - F. flambeau, 'a linke, or torch of wax'; Cot. This answers to an O. F. *flambel, a dimin. of O. F. flambe, a flame. See Flame.

FLAME, a blaze, warmth. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 15983. O. F. flame, flamma; whence a secondary form flambe, flamble. - Lat. flamma, a flame; with dimin. flammula=O. F. flamble. Lat. flamma=flag-ma, from the base flag, to burn; see Flagrant. Der. flame, verb, flam-ing; flambeau, q. v.; flamingo, q. v.

FLAMEN, a priest of ancient Rome. (L.) In Mandeville's Travels, p. 142; spelt flamyn. - Lat. flāmen, a priest. ¶ Perhaps for flag-men=he who burns the sacrifice; see Flagrant.

FLAMINGO, a bright red bird. (Span., -L.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665; p. 403. - Span. flamenco, a flamingo; so called from the colour. - Span. flama, a flame. - Lat. flamma; see Flame. [*]

FLANGE, a projecting rim. (F., -L.) A modern form, connected with prov. E. flange, to project out; Halliwell. Again, flange is a corruption of prov. E. flanch, a projection; id. And again, flanch is a weakened form of flank. Cf. O. F. flanchers, 'a flanker, side pecee'; Cot. See Flank.

FLANK, the side. (F., -L.) M. E. flank, King Alisaunder, 3745. - O. F. (and F.) flanc, side; lit. the 'weak part' of the body. [So G. weich=softness; also, the flank, side.] - Lat. flaccus, soft, weak; with inserted n as in jongleur from joculatorum, concombre from cucumerem (Diez). See Flaccid. Der. flank, verb; flange, q. v.

FLANNEL, a woollen substance. (Welsh.) 'The Welsh flannel'; Merry Wives, v. 5. 172. Prov. E. flannen, a more correct form. - W. gwlanen, flannel; from gwlan, wool. The W. gwlan is cognate with E. wool; Rhys, Lect. on W. Philology, p. 10. See Wool.

FLAP, to strike or beat with the wings, &c. (E.) M. E. flappen, P. Plowman, B. vi. 187. Also flap, sb., a blow, stroke, id. B. xiii. 67. Not found in A. S. + Du. flappen, to flap; flap, a stroke, blow, box on the ear. β. A variant of flack, to beat, M. E. flakken, to palpitate; see Flag (1). Cf. Lat. flaga, a stroke, blow; see Plague. Der. flap, sb.; flapp-er.

FLARE, to burn brightly, blaze, glare. (Scand.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 6. 62. Not in early use in E. (unless flayre=flame in Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 772); of Scand. origin. Cf. Norweg. flara, to blaze, flame, adorn with tinsel; flar, tinsel, show; Aasen. Here (as in blare, q. v.) the r stands for an older s; and the older form appears in Swed. dial. flasa, to burn furiously, to blaze; whence Swed. dial. flora upp, to 'flare up'; blaze up suddenly; also flossa up, to blaze up, flash or flush up (Rietz). See Flash, Flush. [†] FLASH, to blaze suddenly. (Scand.) In Shak. Timon, ii. 1. 32; used of suddenly breaking out, K. Lear, i. 3. 4. Of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. dial. flasa, to burn violently, blaze. And cf. Icel. flasa, to rush; flas, a headlong rushing. Allied to Flare, and Flush. Der. flash, sb.; flash-y, flash-i-ly, flash-i-ness. ¶ We find 'Heo vlaskeð water peron'=she dashes or casts water on it; Ancren Riwe, p. 314; but this is not the same word; cf. Swed. flaska, to flutter.

FLASK, a kind of bottle. (Low L.?) In Shak. Romeo, iii. 3. 132. — A. S. flasc, whence by metathesis, the form flacs, written flax. This change of sc to cs or z is common in A. S.; as in ascian = acian = axian; mod. E. to ask and prov. E. to az. 'Twā fatu, on folcisc flaxan gehātene' = two vessels, vulgarly called flasks; Gregory's Dialogues, i. 9 (Bosworth). We find also Icel. flaska (an old word); Dan. flaske; Swed. flaska; G. flasche; O. H. G. flasca. β. But it is uncertain whether the word is really Teutonic; it seems to be rather from Low Lat. flasca, a flask, of uncertain origin; possibly from the Gk. base πλα-, seen in ἐκπλαίνειν, to spout forth. We also find W. flaſg, Gael. flaſg. Der. flagon, q. v.

FLAT, level, smooth. (Scand.) M. E. flat; 'sche fel . . flat to the ground'; Will. of Palerne, 4414. — Icel. flatr, flat. + Swed. flat. + Dan. flad. ¶ The connection with Gk. πλατός, broad, has not been made out; Curtius, i. 346; it is more likely connected with Du. vlak, G. flach, flat, Gk. πλάξ, a flat surface, for which see PLAIN. Der. flat, sb.; flat-ly, flat-ness; flat-en (coined by analogy with length-en, &c.); flat-ish, flat-wise.

FLATTER, to coax, soothe. (F., — Scand.) M. E. flateren (with one t); P. Plowman, B. xx. 109. — O. F. flater (later flatter), 'to flatter, sooth, smooth; . . also to claw, stroke, clap gently'; Cot. β. Here, as in many cases (e. g. mate from A. S. maca) the t stands for an older k, and the base is flak-. This base occurs in O. Swed. fleakra, to flatter (Ihre); Swed. dial. fleka, to caress (Rietz). Cf. G. flehen, to beseech; O. H. G. flehen. γ. The base is probably the Teutonic FLAK, to beat; hence to pat, stroke. This base answers to ✓ PLAG, or PLAK, to beat; whence Lat. plaga, a stroke. See Fick, i. 681; and see Flag (1) and Plague. ¶ Diez derives O. F. flater, from Icel. flatr, flat; with the notion 'to smoothe'; but this appears to me unsatisfactory, and is rejected by Brachet. [†]

FLATULENT, full of wind, windy. (F., — L.) In Minshew; also in Holland's Plutarch, p. 577 (R.). — F. flatulent, 'flatulent, windy'; Cot. — Low Lat. flatulentus; not in Ducange, but regularly formed from the base flatu-, by analogy with temulentus, drunken. — Lat. flatus, a blowing, a breath. — Lat. flatus, pp. of flare, to blow; cognate with E. blow. See Blow (1). Der. flatulent-ly, flatulence, flatulency.

FLAUNT, to display ostentatiously. (Scand.) Shak. has flaunts, s. pl. fine clothes, Winter's Ta. iv. 4. 23. 'Yield me thy flauting [showy] hood'; Turburville, To his Friend that refused him, st. 10. 'With . . fethers flauti-a-flauti', i. e. showily displayed; Gascoigne, Steel Glass, 1163. It seems to have been especially used with reference to the fluttering of feathers to attract notice. β. Probably Scandinavian; Rietz gives Swed. dial. flanka, to be unsteady, wander, hang and wave about, ramble; whence the adj. and adv. flankt, loosely, flutteringly (which = Gascoigne's flauti-a-flauti). Flanka is a nasalised form of Swed. dial. flakka, to waver, which answers to M. E. flakken, to palpitate; see Flag (1). ¶ From the same source come Dan. flink, smart, brisk, active; Bavarian flandern, to flutter, flaut, Schmeller, i. 792; Du. flikkeren, flonkeren, to sparkle.

FLAVOUR, the taste, scent. (Low L., — L.) Milton, Sams. Agon, 544, says of wine 'the flavor or the smell, Or taste that cheers the hearts of Gods or men,' &c. He here distinguishes flavour from both smell and taste; and possibly intended it to mean hue. β. At any rate, the word is plainly the Low Lat. flavor, golden coin, taken to mean 'yellow hue' or 'bright hue'. — Lat. flavus, yellow, gold-coloured; of uncertain origin. B. It is certain that the Lowland Scotch fleure, fleware, used by Gawain Douglas to mean a 'stench' (as shewn by Wedgwood), could not have produced the form flavour; but it is quite possible that the sense of flavour was modified by the O. F. flairer, to exhale an odour (now used in the sense of to scent, to smell), with which Douglas's word is connected. This O. F. flairer = Lat. fragrare, by the usual change of r to l (Diez); see Fragrant. Der. flavour-less. [†]

FLAW, a crack, break. (Scand.) M. E. flawe, used in the sense of 'flake'; 'flawes of fyre' = flakes of fire; Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2556. — Swed. flaga, a flaw, crack, breach; also, a flake; see Flake, and Flag (4). ¶ The A. S. form was flōh (Bosworth); but the form flaw is Scand. Der. flaw-less.

FLAX, the name of a plant. (E.) M. E. flax, Chaucer, C. T. 678. — A. S. flæx; Ælfric's Gloss., ed. Somner, Vestium Nomina, l. 10. + Du. vlas. + G. flachs; O. H. G. vlachs, flachs. β. Cf. Goth. flahta, a plaiting of the hair; it is probable that flax is from the same root; see Curtius, i. 203. If so, the root is PLAK, to weave; whence also Gk. πλέκειν, to weave, plait. Der. flax-en, where -en is an A. S. adj. suffix.

FLAY, to strip off skin, slice off. (E.) Formerly spelt flea; see Rich. and Halliwell. M. E. flean, pt. t. flow, pp. flain; Havelok, 2502. — A. S. flæin (in a gloss); Bosworth. + Icel. flá, pt. t. fló, pp. fléinn; see Fick, iii. 193. Der. flag (4), flake, flaw, floc; which see.

FLEA, a small insect. (E.) M. E. flee, pl. fleew; Chaucer, C. T.

16966. — A. S. flēd (the form usually given in Dict.); spelt flō, as a gloss to pulex, in Somner's ed. of Ælf. Gloss., Nomina Insectorum. + Du. vloo. + Icel. fló. + G. flöh. + Russ. blocha. — ✓ PLU, to fly (or jump); cf. Skt. plu, to swim, fly, jump. See Fly. ¶ The Lat. pulex (stem pulec-) seems to be the same word; this Fick ingeniously explains as being a changed form from pluec-; see Fick, iii. 193. On the other hand, cf. Skt. pulaka, 'an insect of any class affecting animals whether externally or internally'; Benfey. [†]

FLEAM, a kind of lancet. (F., — Low L., — Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — F. flamme, 'a fleam'; Hamilton and Legros. [Cotgrave gives only the dimin. flamette, 'a kind of lancet.'] — Low Lat. fleuotomum, phlebotomum, a lancet. — Gk. φλεβοτόμῳ, a lancet. — Gk. φλεβο-, crude form of φλέψ, a vein; and τομή for τομή, base of τέμνειν, to cut. See Phlebotomy. ¶ This pardonable abbreviation of too long a word is countenanced by Du. vlīm, G. fliete, and M. H. G. fliedeme (cited in Mahn's Webster), all various corruptions of the same surgical word. The second syllable was soon lost; after which the change from fleuotomum to F. flamme is not much greater than in E. plane from Lat. planatium.

FLECK, a spot. (Scand.) M. E. flek; whence the verb flekken, to spot; Chaucer, C. T. 16033. — Icel. flekkr, a spot; flekka, to stain, spot. + Swed. fläck, a spot; fläcka, to spot. + Du. vlek, sb.; vleken, vb. + G. fleck, sb.; flecken, vb., to spot, stain, put on a patch. β. From the Teutonic base FLAK, to strike; from the ✓ PLAG, to strike; see Fick, iii. 193. The connection is admirably shewn by the prov. E. flick, a slight blow, also to give a jerk (Halliwell); flecks are spots such as would be caused by jerking a dirty brush.

FLECTION, a bending; see Flexible.

FLEDGE, to furnish with feathers. (Scand.) Shak. has fledged, Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 32. This pp. fledged is a substitution for an older adj. fledge, meaning 'ready to fly'. M. E. flegge, 'ready to fly' (Stratmann); spelt fligge in the Prompt. Parv. p. 167 (and note). — Icel. fleygr, able to fly. — Icel. fleygja, to make to fly; causal of fljúga, to fly. See Fly. Der. fledge-ling.

FLEE, to escape, run away. (Scand.) Not the same word as fly. The M. E. verb only appears in the pt. t. fledde, and pp. fled; Chaucer, C. T. 2932; Havelok, 1431. — Icel. flýja, fléja, to flee; pt. t. flýði, pp. flýðr. + Swed. fly, to flee, shun. + Dan. flye, pt. t. flygte, to flee. Cf. Du. vlieden, to flee. β. Flee is a weak verb, corresponding to the strong verb fly, much as set corresponds to sit, except that flee is not used as a causal verb. See Fly. [†]

FLEECE, a sheep's coat of wool. (E.) Here -ce stands for s, as usual. M. E. flees, Prompt. Parv. p. 166; Wyclif. Gen. xxx. 35. — A. S. flȳs, Ps. lxxi. 6 (ed. Spelman). + Du. vlies. + G. fließ, vliess. Perhaps related to Flesh, q. v. [†]

FLEER, to mock, to grin. (Scand.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 109; Jul. Cæs. i. 3. 117. M. E. flerien, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1088, 2778. Of Scand. origin; cf. Norweg. flira, to titter, giggle, laugh at nothing; Aasen. Also Norweg. flisa, to titter, which is an older form, id.; Swed. flissa, to titter. β. Another variation of this verb is Swed. flina, to titter; Swed. dial. flina, to make a wry face (Rietz); see Frown. [†]

FLEET (1), a number of ships. (E.) M. E. flete, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1189; fleete, Layamon, 2155. — A. S. flēot, a ship, Grein, i. 304; fliet, a ship (in a gloss), Lye. [It seems afterwards to have been used collectively.] — A. S. flēotian, to 'fleet', a variant of to float. β. The more usual A. S. form is flota, a ship, Grein, i. 305 (= M. E. floate, Havelok, 738); which is cognate with Icel. floti, (1) a ship, (2) a fleet; Dan. flaade, a fleet; Swed. flotta, a fleet; Du. vloot, G. flotte. See Fleet (4).

FLEET (2), a creek, bay. (E.) In the place-names North-fleet, Fleet Street, &c. Fleet Street was so named from the Fleet ditch; and fleet was a name given to any shallow creek, or stream or channel of water; see Halliwell. — M. E. fleet, Prompt. Parv. p. 166. — A. S. flēot, a bay of the sea, as in sæs flēot = bay of the sea; Ælfred's tr. of Bede, i. 34. Afterwards applied to any channel or stream, esp. if shallow. The orig. sense was 'a place where vessels float'; and the deriv. is from the old verb flēot, to float; see Fleet (4). Cf. Icel. fljót, a stream; Du. vliet, a rill, a brook.

FLEET (3), swift. (E.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 261. It does not seem to appear in M. E., but the A. S. form is flēotig (= fleet-y), Grein, i. 304. It is a derivative from the old verb to fleet, and = fleeting; see Fleet (4). Cf. Icel. fljótr, fleet, swift; from the verb fljóta, below. Der. fleet-ly, fleet-ness.

FLEET (4), to move swiftly. (E.) 'As seasons fleet'; 2 Hen. VI, ii. 4. 4. M. E. fleten, to swim, orig. to float; Chaucer, C. T. 1060; Havelok, 522. — A. S. flēotian, to float, to swim; Grein, i. 304. + Icel. fljóta, to float, swim; see further under Float. Der. fleet-ing, fleet-ly; also fleet (3), fleet-ly, fleet-ness; also fleet (1), and fleet (2). ¶ Not the same word as flit, though allied to it; see Flit.

FLESH, the soft covering of the bones of animals. (E.) M. E.

flesch, fleisch; Chaucer, C. T. 147. — A. S. flæsc, Grein, i. 302. + Du. vleesch. + Icel. flesh, in the special sense of 'pork,' or 'bacon.' + Dan. flesh, pork, bacon. + Swed. fläsk, pork, bacon. + G. fleisch. Der. flesh, verb, K. John, v. i. 71; flesh-ed; flesh-less, flesh-ly, flesh-y, flesh-i-ly, flesh-i-ness. ¶ Perhaps related to flake and flitch.

FLEUR-DE-LIS, flower of the lily. (F., — L.) M. E. floure-de-liee, Minot's Poems (Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 131, l. 25). — O. F. fleur de lis; whence also E. flower-de-luce, Winter's Ta. iv. 4. 127. Here lis = Lat. lilium, a corrupt form of lilium, a lily. See Flower and Lily. ¶ The Du. lisch, a water-flag, iris, appears to be corrupted (like E. luce) from the F. lis, in which the final s was once sounded.

FLEXIBLE, easily bent. (F., — L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 50. — F. flexible, 'flexible'; Cot. — Lat. flexibilis, easily bent. — Lat. flexus, pp. of flectere, to bend. β. Flectere appears to be for felo-tere, from the same source as Lat. falx, a sickle; see Falchion. Der. flexible-ness, flexibl-y, flexibil-i-ty; from Lat. flexus are also flex-ion (wrongly flect-ion), flex-or, flex-ile, flex-ure; from the same source, circum-flex, de-flect, in-flex-ion (wrongly in-flect-ion), re-flect.

FLICKER, to flutter, waver. (E.) M. E. flicker, to flutter; Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1221. — A. S. flicerian, Deut. xxxii. 11. β. Here flicerian is a frequentative form from the base flic, an attenuated form of the base FLAK, to beat; the sense is 'to beat slightly and often.' γ. This is made clear by the occurrence of the stronger form flaker in the M. E. flakeren, Ancren Riwe, p. 222; of which the later form flacker occurs in Coverdale's Bible, Ezek. x. 19: 'And the cherubins flackered with their wings.' See Flag (1). ¶ The Icel. flokra, to flutter = E. flacker; Du. flikkeren, to sparkle = E. flicker.

FLIGHT, the act of flying. (E.) M. E. flight, Chaucer, C. T. 190, 990. — A. S. flyht, Grein, i. 306; formed, with suffix -t (= Aryan -ta), from A. S. flyge, flight; from A. S. feoƿan, to fly. Afterwards used as the verbal sb. of to flee also. β. Corresponding in use to flight (from fly) we have Icel. flug (= A. S. flyge), G. flug, Swed. flygt; corresponding to flight (from flee), we have Swed. flykt, G. flucht. The use of Dan. flugt, Du. vlucht, is less marked. Der. flight-y, flight-i-ness. See Fly, Flee.

FLIMSY, weak, slight. (W.?) 'Flimsy, limber, slight;' Kersey, ed. 1715. In Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 94. Perhaps Welsh; cf. W. llymsi, sluggish, spiritless, flimsy (Spurrell). β. According to Webster, the word is limsy or limpsy in the colloquial dialect of the United States of America. This seems to connect it with Limp, adj. q. v. Der. flimsi-ness. ¶ For fl = W. ll, see Flummery.

FLINCH, to shrink back. (F., — L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 190. A nasalised form of M. E. fleechen, to flinch, waver. Thus we find: 'For hadde the clergie harde holden togidere, And noht fleeched aboute nother hider ne thidere,' i. e. had they all kept together, and not wavered; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 344. In Legends of the Holy Road, ed. Morris, p. 137, l. 179, fleececheth occurs in the exact sense of 'flinches'; see also Aynb. of Inwyrt, p. 253. — O. F. flechir, 'to bend, bow, plie; to go awry, or on one side'; Cot. — Lat. flectere, to bend; see Flexible. ¶ It is probable that the form of the word was influenced by that of blench, used in the same sense.

FLING, to throw, dart, scatter about. (Scand.) The pt. t. flong = flung, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 17255. — Swed. flänga, to use violent action, to romp; flänga med hästarna, to ride horses too hard; fläng, sb., violent exercise, i fläng, at full speed (cf. E. to take one's fling); Swed. dial. flänga, to strip bark from trees, to hack, strike (Rietz); O. Swed. flenga, to strike, beat with rods (Ihre). + Dan. flenge, to slash; i fleng, indiscriminately. β. The orig. sense is to strike (Ihre); hence fling is a nasalised form of flick, an attenuated form of flack, from the Teutonic base FLAK, to beat. See Flicker, and Flag (1). Cf. Lat. plangere, to beat. Der. fling, sb.

FLINT, a hard stone. (E.) M. E. flint, Havelok, 2667. — A. S. flint, a rock; Numb. xx. 10. + Dan. flint. + Swed. flinta. + Gk. πλινθος, a brick; Curtius, i. 46; Fick, i. 682. Der. flint-y, flint-i-ness.

FLIPPANT, pert, saucy. (Scand.) 'A most flippant tongue she had;' Chapman, All Fools, Act v. sc. 1, prose speech by Gostanzo. The suffix -ant (as shewn s. v. Arrant) is due to the Northern E. pres. pt. in -and; hence flippant = slippand, i. e. prattling, babbling. — Icel. flæipa, to babble, prattle; Swed. dial. flæpa, to talk nonsense (Rietz); from the base FLIP, which appears in Swed. dial. flip, the lip; an attenuated form of Flap, q. v. Cf. Swed. dial. fläbb, a flap (Rietz). Der. flippant-ness, flippant-y.

FLIRT, to trifle in wooing. (E.) In old authors 'to mock,' or 'scom,' and often spelt flurt; see The Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, i. 2. 18 (and the note). An older form fird appears in Lowland Sc. fird, to flirt, firdie, giddy, firdoch, a flirt, fird, a thin piece of dress. — A. S. fleard, a foolish thing, a piece of folly, Law of the Northumbrian Priests, § 54 (in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 299); & whence the verb fleardian, to trifle (Bosworth, Lye). Der. flirt, sb. (as now used); flirt-at-ion. ¶ No connection with O. F. fleurète, to skip as a bee from flower to flower (Cotgrave). [†]

FLIT, to remove from place to place. (Scand.) M. E. flitten; P. Plowman, B. xi. 62; also flutten, Layamon, 30503. — Swed. flytta, to flit, remove; Dan. flytte. Cf. Icel. flyta, to hasten; flytja, to carry, cause to flit; flytjask (reflexive), to flit, remove. Closely allied to fleet, verb; see Fleet (4), Flutter. Der. flitt-ing, Ps. lvi. 8 (P.-Bk. version).

FLITCH, a side of bacon. (E.) M. E. flische, P. Plowman, B. ix. 169. — A. S. flisce, to translate Lat. succidia; Bosworth. The pl. fliscu occurs in Diplom. Angl., ed. Thorpe, p. 158; spelt flieca, id. p. 460. + Icel. flikki, a flitch; flík, a flap, tatter. β. The Swed. flík is a lappet, a lobe; Dan. flík is a patch; these are attenuated forms of flak, the original of Flake, q. v. Thus a flitch or flisk is 'a thin slice;' or, generally, 'a slice.'

FLOAT, to swim on a liquid surface. (E.) M. E. floten or flotten; very rare, the proper form being fletem (A. S. fleotan); see Fleet (4). 'A whal . . . by that bot flotte' = a whale floated by the boat; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 248. β. This form of the verb is really a causal rather than the orig. form, and due to the sb. float = A. S. flota, a ship (Grein); allied words to which are Icel. floti, a float, raft, whence flotna, to float to the top; Swed. flotta, a fleet, a raft, flotta, to cause to float; Du. vlot, a raft, whence vlotten, to cause to float, to float; G. floss, a raft, whence flossen, to float; see also Fleet (1). γ. Corresponding to A. S. fleotan, to 'fleet,' we have Icel. fljóta, to float, to flow; Dan. flyde, to flow; Swed. flyta, to flow, float; G. fließen (O. H. G. fliozan), to flow. δ. The Teut. base is FLUT, an extended form of FLU, to flow. See Flow.

Der. float, sb. (though this is rather the orig. of the verb); float-er, float-age, float-ing, float-at-ion; also floatsam, q. v. ¶ Observe that the F. flotter, to float, is from Lat. fluctuare; see Fluctuate. The E. float and F. flotter were completely confused at last, though at first distinct; see Flotilla. [†]

FLOCK (1), a company of birds or sheep. (E.) M. E. flok; 'a flock of briddis' = birds; King Alisaunder, 566. — A. S. floc, Gen. xxxii. 8. + Icel. flokkr. + Dan. flok. + Swed. flock. Der. flock, verb. ¶ Perhaps a variant of Folk, q. v.

FLOCK (2), a lock of wool. (F., — L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 7. — O. F. floc, floc de laine, 'a lock or flock of wool'; Cot. — Lat. flocus, a lock of wool. Cf. Lithuan. plaukas, hair (Schleicher). Prob. from √ PLU, to flow, swim, float about. Der. flock-y; and (from Lat. flocus), flock-ose, flock-ul-ent; also flock-bed, &c. ¶ Not to be confused with flake, with which it is unconnected.

FLOE, a flake of ice. (Dan.) Modern; common in accounts of Arctic Voyages. — Dan. flage, in the comp. is-flage, an ice-floe. + Swed. flaga, a flake; the same word as E. Flake, q. v.

FLOG, to beat, whip. (L.?) A late word. It occurs in Cowper's Tirocinium (R.) and in Swift (Todd); also in Coles' Dict. ed. 1684. Perhaps a schoolboy's abbreviation from the Lat. flagellare, to whip, once a familiar word. See Flagellate. Cf. W. lacio, to slap. [†]

FLOOD, a great flow of water. (E.) M. E. flod, P. Plowman, B. vi. 326. — A. S. flód, Grein, i. 305. + Du. vloed. + Icel. flód. + Swed. and Dan. flod. + Goth. flodus, a river. + G. fluth. Cf. Skt. pluta, bathed, wet; pp. of plu, to swim, cognate with E. flow. Cf. Curtius, i. 347. From the notion of overflowing; see Flow. Der. flood, verb; flood-ing, flood-gate.

FLOOR, a flat surface, platform. (E.) M. E. flor, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 133. — A. S. flór, Grein, i. 306. + Du. vloer. + G. flur. + W. llaur. + Bret. leur. + Irish and Gael. lar (= plar). Der. floor-ing.

FLORAL, pertaining to flowers. (L.) Late. In Johnson's Dict. — Lat. floralis, belonging to Flora. — Lat. Flora, goddess of flowers; mentioned in Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 2. — Lat. flor, stem of flos, a flower; cf. flor-ere, to flourish. See Flower. Der. flor-escence (from Lat. florescere, to blossom), flor-et, flori-culture, flori-fer-ous, flori-form, flori-ist; also flori-id, q. v., florin, q. v.

FLORID, abounding in flowers, red. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 278. [Directly from Latin; the O. F. floride merely means 'lively.'] — Lat. floridus, abounding with flowers. — Lat. flori-, crude form of flos, a flower. See Flower. Der. florid-ly, florid-ness.

FLORIN, a coin of Florence. (F., — Ital., — L.) M. E. florin, Chaucer, C. T. 12704. Florins were coined by Edw. III in 1337, and named after the coins of Florence, which were much esteemed. O. F. florin, 'a florin'; Cot. — Ital. florino (= florino), a florin; so named because it bore a lily. — Ital. fiore, a flower; with a probable allusion to Lat. Florentia (Florence), derived from the same source, viz. Lat. flor-em, a flower, flor-ere, to flourish. See Flower.

FLOSCULE, a floret of an aggregate flower. (L.) Botanical and scientific. — Lat. flosculus, a little flower; dimin. of flos. See Flower.

FLOSS, a downy substance, untwisted silken filaments. (Ital., = Fl.) What is now called floss-silk was formerly called sleave-silk; see Nares. The term floss-silk is modern. Cot. gives 'soye flosche, sleeve silk;' but the word flosche is not now used, and the E. word is probably directly from the Italian original, whence O. F. flosche was also borrowed. — Ital. floscio, flaccid, soft, weak; whence floscia seta, 'raveling or sleeve silk;' Florio. [The Venetian form, according to Wedgwood, is flossio, which exactly agrees with the E. floss.] — Lat. fluxus, fluid, loose, lax. See FLUX.

FLOTILLA, a little fleet. (Span., = L.) Merely Spanish; Bailey gives only the form flota. — Span. flotilla, a little fleet; dimin. of flota, a fleet, cognate with O. F. flote, a fleet of ships, but also a crowd of people, a group (O. F. flote de gens); see Burguy. This O. F. flote, a fem. form, is closely connected with F. flot, masc., a wave, and therefore derived, as to form, from Lat. fluctus, a wave; see FLUCTUATE.

β. At the same time, the sense of F. flotte (later form of O. F. flote) and of the Span. flota has clearly been influenced by Du. vloot, a fleet, allied to (or borrowed from) Icel. floti, (1) a raft, (2) a fleet; see FLEET (1). ¶ See Burguy and Diez.

FLOTSAM, goods lost in shipwreck, and left floating on the waves. (Law F., = Scand.) In Blackstone's Comment. b. i. c. 8; spelt flotson in Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691. Cotgrave has: 'a flo, floating; choses a flo, flotsens or flotsams.' This is an Old Law F. term, barbarously compounded, like the allied JETSAM, q. v. β. The origin can hardly be other than Scandinavian; the former syllable is to be referred to the Icel. prefix flot- (as in flot-fundinn = found afloat), connected with floti, a float, raft, flotna, to come afloat; see FLOAT. The latter syllable is most likely the Icel. suffix -samr (= E. -some), as in gaman-samr = E. game-some. The radical sense of -samr is 'together' or 'like'; hence flotsam = floating together or float-like, i. e. in a floating manner. See SAME.

FLOUNCE (1), to plunge about. (Swed.) 'After his horse had flounced and flounded with his heels;' Holland, tr. of Ammianus, p. 77 (R.). — Swed. dial. flunsa, to dip, plunge, to fall into water with a plunge (Rietz); O. Swed. flunsa, to plunge, particularly used of the dipping of a piece of bread into gravy (Ihre). See FLOUNDER (1).

FLOUNCE (2), a plaited border on a dress. (F., = L. ?) 'To change a flounce;' Pope, Rape of the Lock, ii. 100. 'Farthingales and flounces;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, iii. 2. 3. Made, by change of r to l, from M. E. frounce, a plait, wrinkle; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 318; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 2, l. 147. We also have frounced = frizzled and curled, in Milton, Il Pens. 123; cf. Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 14. — O. F. froncer, fronser, 'to gather, plait, fold, wrinkle; fronser le front, to frown or knit the brows;' Cot. β. Perhaps from Low Lat. *frontiare, to wrinkle the forehead; not found, but regularly formed from fronti, crude form of frons, the forehead. See FRONT, and FROUNCE. [†]

FLOUNDER (1), to flounce about. (O. Low G.) See quotation under FLOUNCE (1); also in Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman's Prize, ii. 6. 30. A nasalised form of Du. flodderen, to dangle, flap, splash through the mire; as suggested by Wedgwood. Cf. Swed. fladdra, to flutter. Formed from a base FLAD, with much the same sense as FLAK, to flutter; see FLAG (1).

FLOUNDER (2), the name of a fish. (Swed.) Flounder-like occurs in Massinger, Renegado, Act iii. sc. 1 (Mustapha's 5th speech). Flounder is in Beaumont and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, ii. 3; and in John Dennis, Secrets of Angling (ab. A.D. 1613), in Arber's Eng. Garner, p. 171. — Swed. flundra, a flounder. + Dan. flynder. + Icel. flydra. Prob. named from flapping about, and formed similarly to FLOUNDER (1). Cf. Swed. dial. flunnka, to float about, swim (Rietz, p. 151 b).

FLOUR, the finer part of meal. (F., = L.) 'Fyne flowre of whete;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 11; also spelt flower, with which it is identical. — F. fleur de farine, 'flower, or the finest meal;' Cot. See FLOWER.

FLOURISH, to blossom, thrive. (F., = L.) M. E. florisschen; Prompt. Parv. p. 167; Wyclif, Ps. lxxxix. 6. — O. F. fleuriss-, base of pres. pt. of fleurir, to flourish. — Lat. florescere, inceptive of florere, to flower, bloom. — Lat. flor-, base of flos, a flower. See FLOWER. Der. flourish, sb., flourish-ing.

FLOUT, to mock. (Du., = F., = L.) A peculiar use of flute, used as a verb; borrowed from O. Dutch; see Minshew. In Shak. Temp. iii. 2. 130. — O. Du. fluyten, to play the flute, also to jeer, to impose upon; now spelt fluiten (Oudemans). — O. Du. fluyt (Du. fluit), a flute. — O. F. flaute; see FLUTE. Der. flout, sb.

FLOW, to stream, glide. (E.) M. E. flowen (not very common), Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1758. — A. S. flōwan, Grein, i. 306. + Du. vloeiēn. + Icel. flóa, to boil milk, to flood. + O. H. G. flawen, M. H. G. flaēn, flouwen, to rinse, wash. + Lat. pluit, it rains; pluvia, rain. + Russ. pluite, to sail, float. + Gk. πλέω, πλώειν, to swim, float; πλύνω, to wash. + Skt. plu, to swim, navigate. — ✓ PLU, to swim; †

FLOWER, a bloom, blossom. (F., = L.) M. E. flour, Chaucer, C. T. 4; Havelok, 2917. — O. F. flour, flor (F. fleur). — Lat. florem, acc. of flos, a flower; cf. florere, to bloom, cognate with E. blow, to bloom. See BLOW (2). Der. flower-y, flower-et; also flor-al, flor-in, flos-cule, flourish, q. v. Doublet, flour, q. v.

FLUCTUATE, to waver. (L.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 668. — Lat. fluctuatus, pp. of fluctuare, to float about. — Lat. fluctus, a wave. — Lat. fluctus, old pp. of fluere, to flow; see FLUENT. Der. fluctu-at-ion; and see FLUTILLA.

FLUE (1), an air-passage, chimney-pipe. (F., = L.) Phaer (tr. of Virgil, x. 209) translates concha, the sea-shell trumpet of the Tritons, by 'wrinkly wreathed flue' (R.). It is a mere corruption of flute. — O. F. fleute, a flute, a pipe; 'le fleute d'un alambic, the beak or nose of a limbeck' = the flue or pipe of a retort; Cot. See FLUTE. ¶ Cf. the various uses of pipe.

FLUE (2), light floating down. (F., = L. ?) In Johnson's Dict., explained as 'soft down or fur.' Also called fluff; cf. also: 'Flukes, refuse, sediment, down, inferior wool;' and again: 'Fluke, waste cotton, a lock of hair;' Halliwell. Origin uncertain; I suspect these all to be various forms of fluck. — O. F. fluc de laine, a lock or flock of wool. — Lat. fluccus. See FLOCK (2). ¶ We also find Dan. fnug, flue; W. lluch, dust. [†]

FLUENT, flowing, eloquent. (L.) Used in the sense of 'copious' in Shak. Hen. V. iii. 7. 36. — Lat. fluentem, acc. of pres. pt. of fluere, to flow. Cf. Gk. φλέω, to swell, overflow, ἀναφλέω, to spout up; see Curtius, i. 375. Der. fluent-ly, fluenc-y; from same source, flu-id, q. v., flu-or, q. v., flux, q. v., fluctuate, q. v.; also af-flu-ence, con-flux, de-flux-ion, ef-flux, in-flux, re-flux, &c.

FLUID, liquid. (F., = L.) In Milton, P. L. vi. 349; Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 68 (R.). — O. F. fluide; Cot. — Lat. fluidus, flowing, liquid. — Lat. fluere, to flow; see FLUENT. Der. fluid-i-ty, fluid-ness.

FLUKE (1), a flounder, kind of fish. (E.) M. E. fluke, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1088. — A. S. flóc, gloss to Lat. platissa, a plaice; Ælfric's Colloquy. + Icel. flóki, a kind of halibut; Lat. solea. Cf. Swed. dial. flunnka, to swim (Rietz).

FLUKE (2), part of an anchor. (Low G. ?) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Also spelt flook. 'Low G. flunk, flunka, a wing, the palm of an anchor; from flegen, to fly, cognate with E. fly;' Webster. (I only find flunk, a wing; Bremen Wörterb. i. 429). Cf. Icel. akkeris-fléinn, Dan. ankerflig, Swed. ankarflig, the fluke of an anchor.

FLUMMERY, a light kind of food. (W.) 'Flummery, a wholesome jelly made of oatmeal;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — W. llymrw, llymrwad, flummery, sour oatmeal boiled and jellied. (So named from its sourness). — W. llymrig, crude, raw, harsh; llymsu, of a sharp quality. — W. llymu, to sharpen, whet; llym, sharp, severe.

FLUNKY, a footman. (F., = L.) Modern. Its origin is clearly due to F. flanquer, to flank; it seems to be put for flanker. 'Flanquer, to flank, run along by the side of; to support, defend, or fence; to be at ones elbow for a help at need;' Cot. See FLANK.

FLUOR, FLUOR-SPAR, a mineral. (L.) Named from its fusibility. The Lat. fluor (lit. a flowing) was formerly in use as a term in alchemy and chemistry. 'Fluor, a flux, course, or stream;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — Lat. fluere, to flow; see FLUENT.

FLURRY, agitation, hurry. (Scand. ?) 'The boat was over-set by a sudden flurry [gust of wind] from the North;' Swift, Voyage to Lilliput. And see Rich. Dict. Prob. of Scand. origin; cf. Norweg. dial. flurrit, rough, shaggy, disordered (Aasen); Swed. dial. flur, face, head, disordered hair, whim, caprice; flurig, disordered, dissolute, overloaded. ¶ Swift's use of the word may be incorrect; the proper word for a gust of wind is flaw.

FLUSH (1), to flow swiftly. (F., = L.) 'The swift recourse of flushing blood;' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 6. 29. G. Douglas uses flusch to signify 'a run of water;' Jamieson. — F. flux, 'a flowing, running, streaming, or rushing out; a current or tide of water; also a flux; also a flush at cards;' Cot. — Lat. fluxus, a flowing; from the pp. of fluere, to flow; see FLUENT. Der. flush (at cards); also flush, adj. in the phr. 'flush of money,' with which cf. 'cela est encore en flux,' that is as yet in action, or upon the increase; Cot. Doublet, flux. See FLUSH (3). [†]

FLUSH (2), to blush, to redder. (Scand.) [Not, I think, the same word as the above, though easily confused with it.] Shak. has flushing = redness; Hamlet, i. 2. 155. M. E. flushen, to redder, as in 'flush for anger;' Rich. the Redeless, ed. Skeat, ii. 166. — Swed. dial. flossa, to burn furiously, to blaze (Rietz); Norw. dial. flosa, passion, vehemence, eagerness; Aasen. Closely allied to FLARE, q. v. Der. flush, sb., flush-ing.

FLUSH (3), level, even. (Unknown.) In some senses, esp. in this one, the word flush is not fully accounted for. Perhaps from FLUSH (1); since flooded lands look level. [†]

FLUSTER, to heat with drinking, confuse. (Scand.) See Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 60.—Icel. flaustra, to be flustered; flaustr, sb. fluster, hurry; of obscure origin; cf. Icel. flasa, to rush. Der. fluster, sb.

FLUTE, a musical pipe. (F.,—L.) M. E. flouten, flouten, to play the flute; Chaucer, C. T. 91. The sb. flute is in North's Plutarch, p. 763 (R.).—O. F. flaute (Burguy); flute (Cot.), a flute; flauter, to play the flute.—Low Lat. *flutares (not found), to blow a flute (cf. Low Lat. flauta, a flute); formed from Lat. flatus, a blowing.—Lat. flare, to blow, cognate with E. blow; see Blow (1). Der. flageolet, q. v.; and see flue (1), and flout. [†]

FLUTTER, to flap the wings. (E.) M. E. floteren, to fluctuate, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, l. 2817; Wyclif, Isa. xxix. 9.—A. S. flotorian, to float about (fluctibus ferri); Gloss. to Prudentius, 687; Leo.—A. S. flot, the sea; flota, a ship; flotan, to 'fleet', to float. β. Thus the orig. sense was to fluctuate, hover on the waves; and the form of the word is due to Float. The word was afterwards applied to other vibratory motions, esp. to the flapping of wings; cf. Low G. fluttern, flutter, flit about, Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 431, which is closely allied to flit; cf. prov. E. flitter-mouse, a bat. See Flit, which is likewise a derivative of Float. γ. But the sense has clearly been further influenced by Icel. flökra, flögta, to flutter about, and other words connected with Flicker and Flag (1), q. v.

FLUX, a flowing, a disease. (F.,—L.) M. E. flux, P. Plowman, C. vii. 161; xxii. 46.—O. F. flux, 'a flowing, flux'; Cot.—Lat. fluxus, a flowing; orig. a pp. of fluere, to flow; see Fluent. Der. flux-ible, flux-at-ion, flux-ion; and see floss.

FLY, to float or move in air. (E.) M. E. flegen, fleyen, fleen; pt. t. he flew, Chaucer, C. T. 15423.—A. S. fléogan, pt. t. fleah; Grein, i. 303. + Du. vliegen. + Icel. flýga. + Dan. flyve. + Swed. flyga. + G. fliegen.

β. The base is FLUG, an extension of FLU, which answers to ✓ PLU, to swim; see Flow. Cf. Lat. pluma, a feather, wing; see Plume. Der. fly, sb.—A. S. fléoge (Grein); fly-boat, whence flibuster, q. v.; fly-blown, fly-catcher, fly-fish-ing, fly-leaf, fly-wheel, fly-ing-fish, fly-er; also flight=A. S. flyht, Grein, i. 306; flight-y, flight-il-y, flight-iness. [†]

FOAL, the young of a mare. (E.) M. E. fole, P. Plowman, B. xi. 335.—A. S. folā, Matt. xxi. 2. + Du. veulen. + Icel. foli. + Swed. fåle. + Goth. fula. + G. föhlen. + Lat. pullus, the young of an animal. + Gk. πῆλος, a foal. β. The form of the root is PU, prob. meaning 'to beget'; cf. Skt. putra, a son, pota, the young of an animal; Curtius, i. 357. Der. filly, q. v.

FOAM, froth, spume. (E.) M. E. fome, Chaucer, C. T. 16032.—A. S. fām, Grein, i. 267. + Prov. G. *fau*m; in Flügel's Ger. Dict. + Lat. spuma, foam; shewing that the E. word has lost an initial s. And cf. Skt. phena, foam. β. The verb from which the sb. is derived appears in Lat. spuere, E. Spew, q. v. Der. foam, verb. [†]

FOB, a pocket for a watch. (O. Low G.) In Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1, l. 107. An O. Low G. word, not preserved otherwise than in the cognate prov. H. G. (Prussian) fuppe, a pocket, which is cited in the Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 437.

FOCUS, a point where rays of light meet. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715.—Lat. focus, a hearth; hence technically used as a centre of fire. Cf. Gk. φῶς, light. From a base BHAK, extended from ✓ BHA, to shine. Der. fo-cal.

FODDER, food for cattle. (E.) M. E. fodder, Chaucer, C. T. 3866.—A. S. fōdor, fōddor, fōddur, Grein, i. 334; an extended form from fōda, food. + Du. voeder. + Icel. fōdr. + Dan. and Swed. foder. + G. futter. See Food. Der. fodder, verb.

FOE, an enemy. (E.) M. E. fo, foo; Chaucer, C. T. 63.—A. S. fūh, fūg, fū; Grein, i. 266.—A. S. feogan, to hate; related to Goth. fijan, to hate.—✓ PL, to hate; Fick, i. 145. See Fiend, Feud (1). Der. foe-man.

FETUS; see Fetus.

FOG, a thick mist. (Dan.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 90. Orig. a sea term.—Dan. fog, in the comp. snæfog, a snow-storm, blinding fall of snow; from Dan. fyge, to drift. + Icel. fok, spray, things drifted by the wind, a snow-drift; fjūk, a snow-storm; from Icel. fjúka, strong verb, to be tossed by the wind, to drift. Der. foge-y, fogg-i-ness, fog-bank.

FOIBLE, a weak point in character. (F.,—L.) See Rich. Dict.—F. foible, feeble; see Feeble.

FOIL (1), to disappoint, defeat. (F.,—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 11. 33, foyle=to cover with dirt, to trample under foot. So foyled=trampled under foot; King Alisaunder, 2712. Corrupted from O. F. fouler, just as defile is from defouler; see Defile.—O. F. fouler, 'to tread, stamp, or trample on, . . . to hurt, press, oppress, foyle, overcharge extremely'; Cot.—Low Lat. fullare, folare, to full cloth; see Fuller. Der. foil, sb., a blunt sword, so called because blunted or 'foiled'; see Much Ado, v. 2. 13; Oth. i. 3. 270; also foil, a defeat; 1 Hen. VI. v. 3. 23.

FOIL (2), a set-off, in the setting of a gem. (F.,—L.) In Hamlet,

v. 2. 266.—O. F. fuille, 'a leaf; . . . also the foyle of precious stones'; Cot.—Lat. folia, pl. of folium, a leaf; see Foliage. [†]

FOIN, to thrust or lunge with a sword. (F.,—L.) Obsolete. In Chaucer, C. T. 1654; and in Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 3. 24. Lit. 'to thrust with an eel-spear'.—O. F. fouine, an eel-spear, 'a kind of instrument in ships like an eel-spear, to strike fish with'; Cot.—Lat. fuscina, a three-pronged spear, trident (Littré).

FOISON, plenty, abundance. (F.,—L.) Obsolete; but in Shak. Temp. ii. 1. 163; Chaucer, C. T. 4924.—O. F. foison, 'abundance'; Cot.—Lat. fusio, acc. of fusio, a pouring out, hence, profusion.—Lat. fusus, pp. of fundere, to pour; see Fuse.

FOIST, to intrude surreptitiously, to hoax. (O. Du.) In Shak. Sonnet 123, l. 6. The sb. foist is a trick: 'Put not your foists upon me; I shall scent them'; Ben Jonson, The Fox, Act iii (last speech but 21). 'To foist, feist, fizzle, are all originally to break wind in a noiseful manner, and thus to foist is to introduce something, the obnoxious effects of which are only learned by disagreeable experience'; Wedgwood.—O. Du. vyستن, 'to fizzle', Sewel; closely connected with O. Du. veest, 'a fizzle'; id. A shorter form occurs in Dan. fis, sb., fise, verb; the latter of which is E. Fizz, q. v.

FOLD, to double together, wrap up. (E.) M. E. folden; P. Plowman, B. xvii. 145, 176.—A. S. fealdan, Grein, i. 286. + Dan. fold. + Swed. fälla. + Icel. falda. + Goth. falthan. + G. falten.

β. The base is FALTH, closely allied to Goth. flahto, a plaiting (1 Tim. ii. 9), of which the base is FLAHT=Lat. plectere, to weave, plait.—✓ PLAK, to weave; whence Gk. πλέκω, to plait; Curtius, i. 202; Fick, i. 681. See Plait. Der. fold, sb., M. E. fold, a plait; -fold, in composition (cf. -plex in complex, duplex, from the same root).

FOLIAGE, a cluster of leaves. (F.,—L.) 'Foliage, branching work in painting or tapestry; also leafiness'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A F. word, but modified by the form foliation, borrowed directly from Latin, and in earlier use, viz. in Sir T. Browne, Cyrus Garden, c. 3. § 11.—O. F. feuilleage, 'branched work, in painting or tapestry'; Cot.—O. F. fuille, a leaf.—Lat. folia, pl. of folium, a leaf. + Gk. φύλλον, a leaf. See Curtius, i. 380. Der. foliag-ed; also (from Lat. folium) foli-ate, foli-at-ed, foli-at-ion, foli-fer-ous; also folio, from the phr. in folio, where folio is the ablative case.

FOLK, a crowd of people. (E.) M. E. folk; Chaucer, C. T. 2830.—A. S. folc; Grein. + Icel. fólk. + Dan. and Swed. folk. + Du. volk. + G. volk. + Lithuan. pūlkas, a crowd. + Russ. pólk, an army. Cf. Lat. plebs, people. β. Particularly used orig. of a crowd of people, so that flock is probably the same word; both may be related to Full. Der. folk-lore.

FOLLICLE, a gland, seed-vessel. (F.,—L.) 'Follicle, a little bag, purse, or bladder'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—O. F. follicule, 'a little bag, pouch, husk'; Cot.—Lat. folliculus, dimin. of foliis, a bag; prob. connected with E. bag; see Curtius, ii. 102. See Bag.

FOLLOW, to go after. (E.) M. E. folwen, folowen, Chaucer, C. T. 3260; P. Plowman, B. vi. 2. [The w is due to the A. S. g.]—A. S. fylgan, fyrgan, fyrgan; Grein, i. 360. + Du. volgen. + Icel. fylgja. + Dan. følge. + Swed. följa. + G. folgen; O. H. G. folken. β. The A. S. fylgan is perhaps a derivative from A. S. folc, a folk, orig. a crowd of people; thus to 'follow' is to 'accompany in a troop.' Similarly we may compare Icel. fylgja with Icel. fólk; and so of the rest. See Folk. Der. follow-ing, follow-er.

FOLLY, foolishness. (F.,—L.) M. E. folye (with one l); Layamon, later text, 3024.—O. F. folie, folly.—O. F. fol, a fool; see Fool.

FOMENT, to bathe with warm water, heat, encourage. (F.,—L.) 'Which bruit [rumour] was cunningly fomented'; Bacon, Life of Hen. VII. ed. Lumby, p. 22, l. 28.—O. F. fomentier, 'to foment'; Cot.—Lat. fomentare.—Lat. fomentum, contr. from foimentum, a warm application, lotion.—Lat. fouere, to warm; of unknown origin. Der. foment-er, foment-at-ion.

FOND, foolish. (Scand.) M. E. fond, but more commonly fonnaed, Wyclif, Exod. xviii. 18. Fonnaed is the pp. of the verb fonnaen, to act foolishly; thus thou fonnaist=thou art foolish; Coventry Myst. p. 36. Fonnaen is formed from the sb. fon, a fool; of which the fuller form fonna is in Chaucer, C. T. 4807.—Swed. fåne, a fool; fåmig, foolish. + Icel. fáni, a standard; 'metaphorically, a buoyant, highminded person is now called fáni, whence fánaligr, buoyant, fánaskapr, buoyancy in mind or temper'; Cl. and Vigf. + Goth. fana, a bit of cloth. + G. fahne, a standard. + Lat. pannus, a bit of cloth. Thus fond=flag-like. See Pane. Der. fond-ly, fond-ness; also fond-le, frequentative verb, to caress, used by Swift and Gay; also fond-ling (with dimin. suffix -ling=-l+-ing), Shak. Venus and Adonis, 223.

FONT (1), a basin of water for baptism. (L.) In very early use. A. S. fant, Ælfric's Hom. i. 422.—Lat. fontem, acc. of fons, a fount; see Font.

FONT (2), FOUNT, an assortment of types. (F.,—L.) 'Font, a cast or complete set of printing-letters'; Kersey, ed. 1715.—O. F. fonte, 'a casting of metals'; Cot.—O. F. fondre, to cast. See Found (2).

FOOD, provisions, what one eats. (E.) M. E. fode, P. Plowman, B. vi. 271. — A. S. fōda, Ælf. Hom. ii. 396. Cf. Icel. fæði, fæða, food; Dan. føde; Swed. föda. In English, the verb fédan, to feed, is derived from the sb. fōda, food; not vice versa. β. The sb. is an extension from ✓ PA, to guard, to nourish; cf. Skt. pā, to guard, Lat. pascere, to feed. See Pasture, Pastor. Der. feed, q. v.; fodder, q. v.

FOOL, a silly person, jester. (F., — L.) M. E. fol; Layamon (later text), 1442. — O. F. fol (F. fol), a fool. — Lat. foliis, a pair of bellows, wind-bag; pl. folles, puffed cheeks; whence the term was easily transferred to a jester. Related to flare, to blow. See Flatulent. Der. fool-ish, fool-er-y; fool-hardy = M. E. folherdi, Ancren Riwe, p. 62 (see hardy); fool-hardi-ness; fools-cap, paper so called from the water-mark of a fool's cap and bells used by old paper-makers; also folly, q. v.

FOOT, the extremity of an animal below the ankle. (E.) M. E. foot, foot; pl. fet, feet; Chaucer, C. T. 474, 475. — A. S. fōt, pl. fēt (= fōt); Grein. + Du. voet. + Icel. fótr. + Dan. fod. + Swed. foot. + Goth. fotus. + G. fuss. + Lat. pes; gen. ped-is. + Gk. πούς; gen. ποδ-ός. + Skt. pād, pād. All from ✓ PAD, to go; cf. Skt. pād, to fall, to go to. Der. foot, verb; foot-ball, -boy, -bridge, -fall, -guard, -hold, -man, -mark, -pad, -passenger, -rot, -rule, -soldier, -sore, -stalk, -stall, -step; also foot-ing, foot-less; also fetter, q. v. From the same source, ped-al, ped-estal, ped-estrian, ped-icle, bi-ped, quadru-ped, exped-ite, im-pede, centi-pede, &c.

FOP, a coxcomb, dandy. (Du.) Shak. has fops, K. Lear, i. 2. 14; fopped (or fobbed) = befooled, Oth. iv. 2. 197; foppish, K. Lear, i. 4. 182; foppery, id. i. 2. 128. — Du. foppen, to cheat, mock, prate; fopper, a wag; fopperij, cheating (= E. foppery). Der. fopp-ish, foppish-ness, fopp-er-y, fop-ling. [†]

FOR (1), in the place of. (E.) The use of for as a conj. is due to such phrases as A. S. for-þám-þe, for-þý = on account of; the orig. use is prepositional. — A. S. for, for; also, before that; the same word as A. S. fore, before that, for. + Du. voor, for, before, from. + Icel. fyrir, before, for. + Dan. for, for; för, adv. before. + Swed. för, before, for. + G. vor, before; für, for. + Goth. faura, before, for. + Lat. pro, before; not the same as (but related to) pra- + Gk. πρό; related to παρά. + Skt. pra, before, away. ¶ The orig. sense is 'beyond,' then 'before,' lastly 'in place of;' from the same root as far, fore, and fars. See Far, Fare, Fore; and see below. Der. for-as-much, for-ever.

FOR (2), only in composition. (E.) For-, as a prefix to verbs, has usually an intensive force, or preserves the sense of from, to which it is nearly related. The forms are: A. S. for-, Icel. for- (sometimes fyrir-), Dan. for-, Swed. för-, Du. and G. ver-, Goth. fra- (rarely fair-), Skt. pará-. The Skt. pará is an old instrumental sing. of para, far; see Far, From; and see above. β. The derived verbs are for-bear, for-bid, for-fend, for-go (spelt forego), for-get, for-give, for-jorn, for-sake, for-swear. ¶ It is distinct from fore-; see Fore.

FOR (3), only in composition. (F., — L.) In forelose (misspelt foreclose) and forfeit, the prefix is French. See those words.

FORAGE, fodder, chiefly as obtained by pillage. (F., — Low Lat., — Scand.) M. E. forage, Chaucer, C. T. 9296. — O. F. fouage, forage, pillage. — O. F. forrer, to forage. — O. F. forre, fuerre (F. feurre), fodder, straw. — Low Lat. foradrum, a Latinised form of O. Dan. foder, the same as E. fodder; see Fodder. Der. forage, verb; forag-er; also foray, sometimes spelt furray, a Lowland Scotch form of forage, occurring in Barbour's Bruce both as sb. and verb; see bk. ii. l. 281, xv. 511.

FORAMINATED, having small perforations. (L.) Modern and scientific. — Lat. foramin-, stem of foramen, a hole bored. — Lat. forare, cognate with E. bore, q. v.

FORAY, FORRAY, a raid for foraging; see Forage.

FORBEAR, to hold away from, abstain from. (E.) M. E. forberen, Chaucer, C. T. 887. — A. S. forberan, Grein, i. 316. — A. S. for-, prefix; and beran, to bear. See For (2) and Bear. Der. forbear-ing; forbear-ance, a hybrid word, with F. suffix, K. Lear, i. 2. 182.

FORBID, to bid away from, prohibit. (E.) M. E. forbeden, Chaucer, C. T. 12577. — A. S. forbeðan; Grein, i. 316. — A. S. for-, prefix; and beðan, to bid, command. See For (2) and Bid. Cf. Du. verbieden; Icel. forboda, fyrirbjóða; Dan. forbyde; Swed. förbjuda; G. verbieten. Der. forbid-en, pp.; forbidd-ing.

FORCE (1), strength, power. (F., — L.) M. E. force, fors, Chaucer, C. T. 7094; Will. of Paleme, 1217. — O. F. force. — Low Lat. fortia, strength. — Lat. fortis, strong; older form fortis. 'It comes probably from the expanded root dhar-gh, which occurs in the Skt. dark, to make firm (mid. be firm), in the Zend darez, of like meaning, and in derezra, firm, and in the Church Slavonic druzati, hold, rule; Curtius, i. 319. Thus it is related to firm, from the ✓ DHAR, to hold; see Firm. Der. force, verb; force-ful, force-fully, force-ible, force-ibly, force-ible-ness, force-less, force-ing, force-pump. Also fort, fort-i-tude, fort-ress, &c.

FORCE (2), to stuff fowls, &c. (F., — L.) A corruption of farce. 'Farced, crammed, stuffed with a farce;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. 'Farce, in cookery, a compound made of several meats and herbs;' id. M. E. farsen. 'His tipet was ay farsed ful of knyuis;' Chaucer, C. T. 233. — F. farcer, to stuff; see Farce. Der. force-meat, a corruption of farce-meat or farced-meat.

FORCE (3), FOSS, a waterfall. (Scand.) A Northern word, as in Stock Gill Force, &c. — Dan. foss; Icel. foss, formerly fors, a waterfall; see fors in Icel. Dict. Cf. Swed. frusa, to gush.

FORCEPS, pincers. (L.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. — Lat. forceps, gen. forcipis, pincers, tongs; so called because used for holding hot iron, &c. (Paulus Diaconus). — Lat. formus, hot; and stem cip-, from capere, to take, cognate with E. Have. Der. forcip-at-ed, forceps-like.

FORD, a passage, esp. through a river. (E.) M. E. ford, more usually forth; see P. Plowman, B. v. 576, and footnote. — A. S. ford; Grein, i. 317. + G. furt, furth. β. Extended from A. S. faran, to fare, go; see Fare. Der. ford, vb.; ford-able.

FORE, in front, coming first. (E.) The adj. use, as in fore feet, is uncommon; but we find fore fet = fore feet, in Will. of Paleme, 3284. The word is properly a prep. or adv., and in the former case is only another form of for. — A. S. fore, for, before, prep.; fore, foran, adv. See For (1). Der. for-mer, q. v.; fore-most, q. v.; and used as a prefix in numerous compounds, for which see below. Also in for-ward (= fore-ward), q. v. ¶ The old comparative of fore is fur-ther, q. v.

FORE-ARM (1), the fore part of the arm. (E.) A comparatively modern expression; I find no good example of it. Merely made up from fore and arm. See Arm (1).

FORE-ARM (2), to arm beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, vi. 1233. Compounded of fore and the verb to arm; see Arms.

FORE-BODE, to bode beforehand. (E.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, iii. 470. Compounded of fore and bode; see Bode. Cf. Icel. fyrirboda; Swed. förebdda. Der. fore-bod-er, fore-bod-ing, fore-bode-ment.

FORECAST, to contrive beforehand. (E. and Scand.) See Chaucer, C. T. 15223. Compounded of fore and cast; see Cast. Der. forecast, sb., forecast-er.

FORECASTLE, the fore part of a ship. (Hybrid; E. and L.) 'Forecastle of a ship, that part where the foremast stands;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Also in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A short deck placed in front of a ship, above the upper deck, is so called, because it used in former times to be much elevated, for the accommodation of archers and crossbowmen. From fore and castle; see Castle. ¶ Commonly corrupted to foe'sle or foxele.

FORECLOSE, to preclude, exclude. (F., — L.) 'Foreclosed, barred, shut out, or excluded for ever;' Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691; with a reference to 33 Hen. VIII. c. 39. It should rather be spelt forclosed. — O. F. forclos, pp. of forclore, to exclude (Roquefort). — O. F. for-, from Lat. foris, outside; and clorre = Lat. claudere, to shut. See Forfeit and Close. Der. forclos-ure.

FOREDATE, to date beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Merely a compound of fore and date. Todd gives an example from Milton, Reason of Church Government, b. ii. See Date.

FOREFATHER, an ancestor. (E.) The pl. forfadres is in P. Plowman, C. viii. 134, where two MSS. have forme faderes, the fuller form. The M. E. forme is the superlative of fore; see Former. Cf. Du. voorvader; G. vorvater; Icel. forfaðir.

FOREFEND, to avert; see Forfend.

FORE-FINGER, the first of the four fingers. (E.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 2. 24. It is not improbable that the orig. expression was forme finger (= first finger) rather than fore-finger. See Forefather.

FOREFOOT, a front foot of a quadruped. (E.) From fore and foot; see reference under Fore.

FOREFRONT, the front part. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In the Bible (A. V.), 2 Sam. xi. 15. And in Hall's Chron., Rich. III (description of preparations for the battle of Bosworth); see Eastwood and Wright, Bible Word-book. See Fore and Front.

FOREGO (1), to relinquish; see Forgo.

FOREGO (2), to go before. (E.) Chiefly in the pres. part. foregoing and the pp. foregone = gone before, previous; Othello, iii. 3. 428. Cf. A. S. foregangan, to go before; Grein, i. 321. Der. forego-er; see P. Plowman, B. ii. 187.

FOREHAND, preference, advantage. (E.) Used in several senses, and both as adj. and sb.; see Shak. Hen. V. iv. 1. 297; Troil. i. 3. 143; Much Ado, iv. 1. 51; 2 Hen. IV. iii. 2. 52. A difficult word; but the etymology is clearly from fore and hand.

Der. forehead-ed, in the phr. 'a pretty forehanded fellow;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Scomful Lady, ii. 3 (last speech but 6).

FOREIGN, out of doors, strange. (F., -L.) The insertion of the g is unmeaning. M. E. foreine, foreyne, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 2, l. 851. - O. F. forain, 'forraine, strange, alien;' Cot. - Low Lat. foraneus, applied to a canon who is not in residence, or to a travelling pedlar. - Lat. foras, out of doors; adv. with an acc. pl. form, from Lat. pl. fores, doors, related to Lat. forum, a market-place, and cognate with E. door. See Door. Der. foreign-er, Shak. K. John, iv. 2. 172.

FOREJUDGE, to judge beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Levins. [The pp. foriuged, cited from Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1400 (R.), has the prefix for-, not fore-.] Spenser has forejudgement; Muirpotmos, l. 320. From fore and judge. Der. forejudgement.

FOREKNOW, to know beforehand. (E.) Shak. has foreknowing, Hamlet, i. 1. 134; also foreknowledge, Tw. Night, i. 5. 151. Chaucer has forknowyng; tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 6, l. 5187. From fore and know. Der. foreknow-ledge.

FORELAND, a headland, cape. (E.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 514. From fore and land. Cf. Dan. forland; Du. voorland; G. vorland; Icel. forlandi, the land between the sea and hills.

FORELOCK, the lock of hair on the forehead. (E.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 302; P. R. iii. 173; Spenser, son. 70. From fore and lock.

FOREMAN, a chief man, an overseer. (E.) The expression 'foreman of the petty jury' occurs in The Spectator, No. 122. From fore and man. Cf. Du. voorman, G. vorman, the leader of a file of men; Icel. fyrirmadr, formadr.

FORMOST, most in front. (E.) A double superlative, due to the fact that the old form was misunderstood. a. From the base fore was formed the A. S. superlative adj. forma, in the sense of first; a word in common use; see Grein, i. 329. Hence the M. E. forme, also meaning 'first;' see Stratmann. β. A double superlative formest was hence formed, usually modified to fyrmost; as in 'þat fyrmoste bebð' = the first commandment; Matt. xxii. 38. This became the M. E. formest, both adj. and adv.; as in Will. of Palerne, 939. See examples in Stratmann. γ. Lastly, this was corrupted to formost, by misdividing the word as for-most instead of form-est. Spenser has formost, F. Q. v. 7. 35. See Former. ¶ The Mæso-Gothic also has frumists, a double superlative; the single superlative being fruma, cognate with Skt. parama, Lat. primus. Thus formost is a mere doublet of prime; see Prime.

FORENOON, the part of the day before noon. (Hybrid; E. and L.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 78. From fore and noon; see Noon.

FORENSIC, legal, belonging to law-courts. (L.) 'Forensalis, pertaining to the common-place used in pleading or in the judgment-hall;' Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. Forensic- and forens-al are coined words, formed (with suffixes -ic and -al) from Lat. forens-is, of or belonging to the forum or market-place or place of public meeting. - Lat. forum, a market-place, orig. a vestibule; connected with Lat. fores, doors. See Foreign.

FOREORDAIN, to ordain beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.) See 1 Pet. i. 20 (A. V.). From fore and ordain.

FOREPART, front part. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Acts, xxvii. 41; and in Levins. From fore and part.

FORERANK, front rank. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Shak. Hen. V. v. 2. 97. From fore and rank.

FORERUN, to run before. (E.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 3. 380. From fore and run. Cf. Goth. faurinnan, G. vorrennen. Der. foreruns-er, Heb. vi. 20 (A. V.); cf. Icel. fyrir-rennari, forrennari.

FORESEE, to see beforehand. (E.) In Shak. Troil. v. 3. 64. - A. S. foreséon; Grein, i. 322. - A. S. fore, before; and seón, to see. + Du. vozien. + Swed. förese. + G. vorsehen. See See. Der. fore-sight, q. v.

FORESHIP, the front part of a ship. (E.) In Acts, xxvii. 30 (A. V.). From fore and ship. + Du. voorschip. ¶ Perhaps actually borrowed from the Dutch.

FORESHORTEN, to shorten parts that stand forward in a picture. (E.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. From fore and shorten. Der. foreshorten-ing.

FORESHOW, FORESHAW, to shew beforehand. (E.) In Shak. Cymb. v. 5. 473. From fore and shew.

FORESIGHT, prescience. (E.) M. E. foresiht, forsyghte; Prompt. Parv. p. 171. From fore and sight. See Foresee.

FOREST, a wood, a wooded tract of land. (F., -L.) M. E. forest, King Alisaunder, 3581. - O. F. forest, 'a Forrest;' Cot. - Low Lat. foresta, a wood; forestis, an open space of ground over which rights of the chase were reserved. Medieval writers oppose the forestis or open wood to the walled-in wood or parcus (park). 'Forestis est ubi sunt feræ non incluse; parcus, locus ubi sunt feræ incluse;' document quoted in Brachet, q. v. - Lat. foris, out of doors, abroad; whence forestis, lying open. - Lat. fores, doors; see Foreign. Der. forest-er, contracted to forster, Chaucer, C. T. 117; and to foster, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 1. 17.

FORESTALL, to anticipate in a transaction. (E.) M. E. forestallen, forstallen; P. Plowman, B. iv. 56, where we find: 'forstalleth my feires' = anticipates my sales in the fair. Thus to forestall, orig. used as a marketing term, was to buy up goods before they had been displayed at a stall in the market; see Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 172. The object was, to sell again in the market at a higher price; see Kersey's Dict. From fore and stall. See Stall. ¶ The A. S. steddian means 'to come to pass,' said of a prediction, like our modern phrase 'to take place.' I find no A. S. foresteadian, as is pretended; but see Addenda. [†]

FORETASTE, to taste beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 929. From fore and taste. Der. foretaste, sb.

FORETELL, to prophesy. (E.) M. E. foretellen; P. Plowman, A. xi. 165. From fore and tell. Der. foretell-er.

FORETHOUGHT, a thinking beforehand, care. (E.) In Johnson's Dict. Shak. has the verb to forethink; Cymb. iii. 4. 171. From fore and thought.

FORETOKEN, a token beforehand. (E.) M. E. foretoken; see Gower, C. A. i. 137, where a foretoken is misprinted afore token; spelt fortaken, Ormulum, 16157. - A. S. fortacen; Grein, i. 322. + Du. voorteeken, a presage. + G. vorzeichen. From fore and token; see Token. Der. foretoken, verb.

FORETOOTH, a front tooth. (E.) M. E. foretoþ, pl. foreteþ; in Le Bon Florence, 1609, in Ritson's Metrical Romances, and in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 386. From fore and tooth.

FORETOP, the hair on the fore part of the head. (E.) M. E. fortop, Treatises on Popular Science, ed. Wright, p. 137, l. 230. The simple form top or toppe is in P. Plowman, B. iii. 139. See Top. Der. fortop-mast.

FOREWARN, to warn beforehand. (E.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 215. From fore and warn; see Warn.

FORFEIT, a thing forfeited or lost by misdeed. (F., -L.) Properly a pp. as in 'So that your life be not forfete;' Gower, C. A. i. 194. Hence M. E. verb forfeten, P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 25; and the M. E. sb. forfeture, forfeiture, Gower, C. A. ii. 153. - O. F. forfait, a crime punishable by fine, a fine; also pp. of forfaire, orig. forfaire, to trespass, transgress. - Low Lat. forisfactum, a trespass, a fine; also pp. of forisfacere, to transgress, do amiss, lit. 'to act beyond.' - Lat. foris facere, lit. to do or act abroad or beyond. - Lat. foris, out of doors; and facere, to do. See Foreign; and see Fact. Der. forfeit, vb., forfeit-ure, forfeit-able; and cf. counter-feit.

FORFEND, FOREFEND, to avert, forbid. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 541. M. E. forfenden, Wyclif, Job, xxiv. 31. An extraordinary compound, due to E. for- (as in for-bid), and fend, a familiar abbreviation of defend, just as fence (still in use) is a familiar abbreviation of defence. See For- (2) and Fence. ¶ The spelling foresend is bad.

FORGE, a smith's workshop. (F., -L.) In Gower, C. A. i. 78; hence M. E. forgen, to forge, Chaucer, C. T. 11951. - O. F. forge, a forge; whence forgier, to forge. - Lat. fabrica, a workshop, also a fabric; whence, by usual letter-changes, we have fabr'ca, faurca, faurga, forga, and finally forge; see Brachet. Cf. Span. forja, a forge, forjar, to forge. Thus forge is a doublet of fabric. Der. forge, vb., forg-er, forg-er-y. See further under Fabric. [†]

FORGET, to lose remembrance of, neglect. (E.) M. E. forgeten, forleten; Chaucer, C. T. 1916. - A. S. forgitan; Grein, i. 324. - A. S. for-, prefix; and gitan, to get. See For- (2) and Get. Cf. Du. vergeten; Dan. forgiette; Swed. förgäta; G. vergessen. Der. forget-ful (which has supplanted A. S. forgitol); forget-ful-ly, forget-ful-ness, forget-me-not.

FORGIVE, to give away, remit. (E.) M. E. forgiuen (with u = v), forziuen, forzeuen; Chaucer, C. T. 8402. - A. S. forgifan; Grein, i. 323. - A. S. for-, prefix; and gifan, to give. See For- (2) and Give. Cf. Du. vergeven; Icel. fyrirgefa; Swed. förgifva, to give away, forgive; G. vergeben; Goth. fragiban, to give, grant; Dan. tilgive, to forgive, pardon (with prefix til in place of for). Der. forgiv-ing, forgive-ness.

FORGO, FOREGO, to give up. (E.) The spelling forego is as absurd as it is general; it is due to confusion with foregone, in the sense of 'gone before,' from a verb forego of which the infinitive is not in use. M. E. forgon, Chaucer, C. T. 8047. - A. S. forgán, to pass over; 'he forgæð þæs huses duru' = he will pass over the door of the house; Exod. xii. 23. - A. S. for-, prefix; and gán, to go. See For- (2) and Go.

FORK, a pronged instrument. (L.) M. E. forke; the pl. forkis is in King Alisaunder, 1191. Chaucer has 'a forked berd' = beard, C. T. 272. — A. S. fore; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 430. — Lat. furca, a fork; of uncertain origin. Der. fork, vb., fork-ed, fork-ed-ness; fork-y, fork-i-ness; also car-fax, q. v. ¶ The Du. work, Icel. forkr, F. fourche, are all from Lat. furca.

FORLORN, quite lost, desolate, wretched. (E.) M. E. forlorn, used by Chaucer in an active sense = quite lost; C. T. 11861. It is the pp. of M. E. forloren, to lose entirely. — A. S. forloren, pp. of forleosan, to destroy, lose utterly; Grein, i. 328. — A. S. for-, prefix; and loren, pp. of leosan, to lose, whence M. E. lorn, Chaucer, C. T. 3536. Cf. Dan. forloren, lost, used as an adj.; Swed. förlorat, pp. of förlora, to lose wholly; Du. verloren, pp. of verliezen, to lose; G. verloren, pp. of verlieren, to lose; Goth. fraliusan, to loose. See FOR- (2) and LOSE. Der. forlorn hope, in North's Plutarch, p. 309 (R), or p. 372, ed. 1631, a vanguard; a military phrase borrowed from Du. de verloren hoop van een leger = the forlorn hope of an army. Cotgrave has: 'Perdu, lost, forlorn, past hope of recovery. Enfans perdus, perdis, or the forlorn hope of a camp, are commonly gentlemen of companies.' 'Forlorn hope, a body of soldiers selected for some service of uncommon danger, the hope of whose safety is a forlorn one;' Chambers (wrongly); see HOPE (2).

FORM, figure, appearance, shape. (F., — L.) M. E. forme, King Alisaunder, 388; whence formen, formen, to form, id. 5687. — O. F. forme. — Lat. forma, shape. — ✓ DHAR, to hold, maintain; cf. Skt. dhrī, to bear, maintain, support; dharmā, virtue, right, law, duty, character, resemblance. Der. form, vb.; form-al, Sir T. More, Works, p. 125 f; form-al-ly, form-al-ism, form-al-ist, form-al-ity; form-ation, form-at-ive, from Lat. formatus, pp. of formare, to form; form-er, sb.; form-ul-a, from Lat. formula, dimin. of forma; form-ul-ar-y. Also con-form, de-form, in-form, re-form, trans-form, uni-form. &c. (But not per-form). ¶ Form, a bench, is the same word. See F. forme in Cotgrave.

FORMER, more in front, past. (E.) Not in very early use. In Shak. Jul. Cæs. v. 1. 80. Spenser has formerly, F. Q. ii. 12. 67. a. The word is really of false formation, and due to the mistake of supposing the M. E. formest (now foremost) to be a single superlative instead of a double one; see this explained under FOREMOST. β. Just as M. E. form-est was formed from A. S. forma by adding -est to the base form-, so form-er was made by adding -er to the same base; hence form-er is a comparative made from the old superlative forma, which is cognate with the Lat. primus. γ. We may therefore resolve for-m-er into for- (= fore), -m-, superlative suffix, and -er, comparative suffix. Der. former-ly.

FORMIC, pertaining to ants. (L.) Modern; chiefly used of 'formic acid.' — Lat. formica, an ant. Prob. related to Gk. μύρμηκ, an ant, and to the latter syllable of E. pis-mire; see Curtius, i. 421. Der. chloro-form.

FORMIDABLE, causing fear. (F., — L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 649. — F. formidable, 'fearfull'; Cot. — Lat. formidabilis, terrible. — Lat. formidare, to dread; Lat. formido, fear; of uncertain origin. Der. formidabl-y, formidable-ness. [†]

FORNICATE, to commit lewdness. (L.) The E. verb fornicate is of late use, appearing in the Works of Bp. Hall (R). It was certainly developed from the sb. fornication and fornicator, both in early use. Chaucer has fornicatious, C. T. 6886; and fornicatour is in P. Plowman, C. iii. 191 (footnote). These are, respectively, O. F. fornication and fornicateur; Cot. — Lat. fornicatus, pp. of fornicari. — Lat. fornic-, base of fornix, (1) a vault, an arch, (2) a brothel. Perhaps so named from the firmness of an arch, from ✓ DHAR, to hold, maintain, whence also firm and form. Der. fornicat-ion, fornicat-or, explained above.

FORSAKE, to give up, neglect. (E.) M. E. forsaken, Chaucer, C. T. 1247. — A. S. forsacan, Ælfred's tr. of Orosius, i. 12. sect. 3. The orig. sense seems to be 'to contend strongly against,' to 'oppose.' — A. S. for-, intensive prefix; and sacan, to contend, Exod. ii. 13. β. This verb sacan is a strong verb, cognate with Goth. sakan, to strive, dispute; and is represented in E. by the derived sb. sake. Cf. Dan. forsage, to forsake; Swed. förstaka; Du. verzagen, to deny, revoke, forsake; G. versagen, to deny, renounce. See FOR- (2) and SAKE.

FORSOOTH, in truth, verily. (E.) M. E. for sothe = for the truth, verily; P. Plowman, B. iv. 2. — A. S. for, for; and sōðe, dat. of sōð, truth. See SOOTH.

FORSWEAR, to deny on oath, esp. falsely. (E.) M. E. forsworen, Prompt. Parv. p. 173; earlier forswerien, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 13. l. 11. — A. S. forswerian; Grein, i. 332. — A. S. for-, prefix; and swerian, to swear. See FOR- (2) and SWEAR.

FORT, a stronghold. (F., — L.) In Hamlet, i. 4. 28. — O. F. fort,

'a fort, hold'; Cot. A peculiar use of O. F. fort, strong. — Lat. fortis, strong. See FORCE. Der. fort-al-ice, q. v.; fort-i-fy, q. v.; fort-i-tude, q. v.; fort-r-ess, q. v. From Lat. fortis we have also Ital. forte, loud (in music), with its superl. fortissimo.

FORTALICE, a small outwork of a fort. (F., — L.) Rare; see Jamieson's Scottish Dict. — O. F. fortelesee, a fortress. Cf. Span. fortaleza. — Low Lat. fortalitia, fortalitium. See FORTRESS.

FORTIFY, to make strong. (F., — L.) In Shak. K. John, iii. 4. 10. — O. F. fortifier, 'to fortify, strengthen'; Cot. — Low Lat. fortificare. — Lat. forti-, crude form of fortis, strong; and fic-, from facere, to make. See FORT, FORCE. Der. fortifi-er; fortific-at-ion, from Low Lat. pp. fortificatus.

FORTITUDE, strength. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 154. Borrowed from Lat. fortitudo, strength; see 'spiritus fortitudinis' in P. Plowman, B. xix. 284. — Lat. fortis, strong. See FORT, FORCE.

FORTH, forward, in advance. (E.) M. E. forth, Chaucer, C. T. 858. — A. S. forð, adv. (common); extended from fore, before. + Du. voort, forward; from voor, before. + G. fort, M. H. G. vort; from vor, before. See FORE. Der. forth-coming, Shak. Tam. Shrew, v. i. 96. Also forth-with, in a poem of the 15th century called Chaucer's Dream, l. 1109; a strange formation, and prob. corrupted from M. E. forthwithall, Gower, C. A. iii. 262; see WITHAL.

FORTNIGHT, a period of two weeks. (E.) M. E. fourtenight, (trisyllable), Chaucer, C. T. 931. Written fourten niȝt, Rob. of Glouc. p. 533, l. 17. From M. E. fourten = fourteen; and niȝt, old pl. = nights. The A. S. form would be feowertyne niht. β. Similarly, we have sennight = seven night; the phr. seofon niht (= a week) occurs in Caedmon, ed. Grein, l. 1349. It was usual to reckon by nights and winters, not by days and years; see Tacitus, Germania, c. xi. Der. fortnight-ly. [†]

FORTRESS, a small fort. (F., — L.) M. E. fortresse, King Alisaunder, 2668. — O. F. forteresce, a variant of fortelesee, a small fort (Burguy). — Low Lat. fortalitia, a small fort. — Low Lat. fortis, a fort. — Lat. fortis, strong; see FORT, FORTALICE.

FORTUITOUS, depending on chance. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The M. E. fortuit, borrowed from O. F. fortuit, occurs in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. i. l. 4355, in the Camb. MS.; see the footnote.] Englished, by change of -us to -ous (as in arduous, strenuous, &c.) from Lat. fortuitus, casual. — Lat. fortu-, related to forti-, crude form of fors, chance; see FORTUNE. Der. fortuitous-ly, fortuitous-ness.

FORTUNE, chance, hap. (F., — L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 1254. — F. fortune. — Lat. fortuna. — Lat. fortu-, allied to forti-, crude form of fors, chance, orig. 'that which is produced'; allied to Lat. ferre, and to E. bear. — ✓ BHAR, to bear; see BEAR. See Curtius, i. 373. Der. fortun-ate, M. E. fortunat, Chaucer, C. T. 14782, from Lat. pp. fortunatus; fortun-ate-ly, fortun-ate-ness; fortune-less, fortune-hunter, fortune-teller; from the same source, fortu-it-ous, q. v.

FORTY, four times ten. (E.) M. E. fourty, Chaucer, C. T. 16820. — A. S. feowertig; Grein, i. 296. — A. S. feower, four; and -tig, a suffix formed from the base TEHAN, ten; see FOUR and TEN. + Du. veertig. + Icel. fjörutíu. + Dan. fjyretve. + Swed. fyratio. + G. viertig. + Goth. fidwortigjus. Der. forti-eth, from A. S. feowertigoða.

FORWARD, adj. towards the front. (E.) M. E. forward, adj. and adv.; but rare, as the form forthward was preferred. Forward, adv. occurs in Chaucer, C. T. Six-text, Group B, 263, in the Camb. MS., where the other 5 MSS. have forthward. — A. S. foreward, adj.; Grein, i. 322. — A. S. fore, before; and -ward, suffix; see TOWARD. Der. forwards, M. E. forwarde, Maundeville, p. 61, where -es is an adv. suffix, orig. the sign of the gen. case (cf. Du. voorwaarts, G. vorwärts); forward, verb, Shak. i Hen. IV, i. 1. 33; forward-ly; forward-ness, Cymb. iv. 2. 342.

FOSSE, a ditch. (F., — L.) In Holland, tr. of Suetonius, p. 185 (R); Pope, Homer's Iliad, xv. 410. — O. F. fosse, 'any pit or hole'; Cot. — Lat. fossa, a ditch. — Lat. fossa, fem. of fossus, pp. of fodere, to dig. Allied to Gk. βόβρος, a ditch, but (perhaps) not to βαβύς, deep. See Curtius, ii. 75. Der. fossil, q. v.

FOSSIL, petrified remains of an animal, obtained by digging. (F., — L.) Formerly used in a more general sense; see Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — O. F. fossile, 'that may be digged'; Cot. — Lat. fossilis, dug up. — Lat. fossus, pp. of fodere, to dig; see above. Der. fossil-ise, fossiliferous.

FOSTER (1), to nourish. (E.) M. E. fostren, Chaucer, C. T. 8098. — A. S. fóstrian, in a gloss; Leo. — A. S. fóstor, fóstur, nourishment; Leo, p. 23; Grein, i. 335; standing for fóð-stor (cf. Du. voedster, a nurse). — A. S. fóða, food; see FOOD, FODDER. + Icel. fóstr, nursing; fóstra, to nurse, foster. + Dan. foster, offspring; fostre, opfostre, to rear, bring up. + Swed. foster, embryo; fostra, to foster. Der. foster-er; also (from A. S. fóstor) foster-brother, foster-child, foster-parent; and cf. fester.

FOSTER (2), a forester; see Forest.

FOUL, dirty, unclean. (E.) M. E. foul, P. Plowman, C. xix. 54. — A. S. fúl, Grein, i. 358. + Du. vuil. + Icel. full. + Dan. fuul. + Swed. ful. + Goth. fuls. + G. faul. — ✓ PU, to stink; see Putrid. Der. foul-ly, foul-ness, foul-mouth-ed; also foul, vb.; de-file, q. v.

FOUMART, a polecat. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Lowland Sc. fourmart; Jamieson. M. E. folmart, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 534; also fulmart, fulmard, as in Stratmann, s. v. ful = foul. A hybrid compound. — M. E. ful = A. S. fúl, foul, stinking; and O. F. marie, martre, a marten. Thus it means 'foul marten'; see Foul and Marten. ¶ Sometimes derived from F. fouine, the beech-marten, but the O. F. form was foine or faine, so that the slight resemblance thus vanishes.

FOUND (1), to lay the foundation of. (F., — L.) M. E. founden, Wyclif, Heb. i. 10; P. Plowman, B. i. 64. — O. F. fonder, to found. — Lat. fundare. — Lat. fundus, foundation, base, bottom; cognate with E. bottom; see Bottom. Der. found-er, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 109; found-r-ess; found-at-ion.

FOUND (2), to cast metals. (F., — L.) The verb is rare. In Holland, tr. of Pliny, we find 'famous for metall-founding,' b. xxxv. c. 2; 'the excellent founders and imageurs of old time,' id. c. 8 (of Dædalus); 'the art of founderie or casting mettals for images;' id. c. 7. — O. F. fondre, 'to melt, or cast, as metals;' Cot. — Lat. fundere, to pour, cast metals; see Fuse. Der. found-er, found-r-y (= found-er-y), found-ing, font (2) or fount.

FOUNDER, to go to the bottom. (F., — L.) M. E. foundren, said of a horse falling; 'and foundred as he leep;' Chaucer, C. T. 2689. — O. F. fondrer, only recorded in the comp. afondrer (obsolete) and effondrer, to fall in (still in use), as well as in the sb. fondrière, a place to founder in, a slough, bog; see fond in Burguy, and fondrière in Brachet. The sense seems to have been 'to sink in,' and the deriv. is from F. fond, the bottom of anything. — Lat. fundus, the bottom; see Found (1). ¶ The form of the O. F. verb should rather have been fonder; the r is intercalated, as in chanvre = chanve, hemp, from Lat. cannabis. We have instances in E. part-ridge, t-r-essure, cart-r-idge, &c.

FOUNDLING, a deserted child. (E.) M. E. fundeling, Will. of Palerne, 481; fundling, King Horn, 226. — M. E. fund, base of finden, pp. of finden, to find; and -ling = -ling, double dimin. suffix. + Du. vondeling; similarly formed.

FOUNT (1), a spring, fountain. (F., — L.) In Shak. iv. 3. 102; and probably earlier. — O. F. funt, font, a fountain. — Lat. fontem, acc. of font, a spring; cf. Gk. φέωντα, acc. of φέων, pres. pt. of φέω, to pour. — ✓ GHU, to pour; see Found (2), and Fuse. Der. fountain, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 60, from O. F. fontaine (F. fontaine), which from Low Lat. fontana; fountain-head; and see font (1). [†]

FOUR, twice two. (E.) M. E. fewur, fower, seur, four, Layamon, 25, 194, 1902, 2092, 25395. Chaucer adds a final e, and treats it as a pl. adj. 'With fouré white bolés in the trays;' C. T. 2141. — A. S. feowur, Grein, i. 296. + O. Fries. fiower, fiawer, fior. + Icel. fiórir. + Dan. fire. + Swed. fyra. + Du. vier. + Goth. fidwor. + O. H. G. fior. + G. vier. + W. pedwar. + Gael. ceithir. + Lat. quatuor. + Gk. τέτταρες, τέσσαρες; dial. μιυρες. + Russ. chetvero. + Skt. chatvar, chatur. From an orig. form KWATWAR. Der. four-fold, four-foot-ed, four-square; also four-th (A. S. feorþa); four-teen (A. S. feowertene); four-teen-th; also for-ty, q. v.

FOWL, a kind of bird. (E.) In M. E. it signifies 'bird,' generally. M. E. fowl, Chaucer, C. T. 190; earlier, fuzel, fuwel, Layamon, 2832. — A. S. fugol; Grein, i. 355. + Du. voegel. + Icel. fugl, fogl. + Dan. fugl. + Swed. fågel. + Goth. fugls. + O. H. G. fugal; G. voegel. All from a Teut. base FUGLA, of unknown origin. ¶ There is not any evidence to connect it with the Teut. base FLUG, to fly, by imagined loss of l. Der. fowl-er = M. E. foulers, Wyclif, Prov. vi. 5; fowl-ing-piece.

FOX, a cunning animal. (E.) M. E. fox, also (Southern M. E.) vox; P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 44; Owl and Nightingale, 812, 819. — A. S. fox; Grein, i. 334. + Du. vos. + Icel. fox, also fóa. + Goth. fauho. + O. H. G. foha; M. H. G. vohe; also M. H. G. vuhs, G. fuchs. β. Hence we obtain Teut. base FUHAN (whence Icel. fóa, Goth. fauho, O. H. G. foha), which was afterwards extended to FUHSI (whence M. H. G. vuhs, G. fuchs, E. fox). Similarly, we have LUHAN, a lynx (whence Swed. lo), extended to LUHSI (whence G. luchs); see Pick, iii. 187. Root unknown. Der. fox-hound, fox-y; also fox-glove, a flower = A. S. foxes glofa, Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 327 (cf. Norwegian revhandske = foxglove, from rev, a fox, Chambers; also prov. E. fox-fingers, a fox-glove). And see vix-en.

FRACAS, an uproar. (F., — Ital., — L.) Not in Johnson; borrowed from mod. F. fracas, a crash, din. — F. fracasser, to shatter; borrowed from Ital. in 16th cent. (Brachet). — Ital. fracassare, to break in pieces; whence fracasso, a crash. — Ital. fra-, prefix, from fra, prep. amongst, within, amidst; and casare, to break. Imitated (or translated) from Lat. interrumpere, to break in amongst, destroy (Diez). The vb. casare is from Lat. quassare, to shatter, intensive of quater, to shake. See Quash.

FRACTION, a portion, fragment. (F., — L.) M. E. fraction, fraccion; Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, prol. i. 51. — O. F. (and F.) fraction, 'a fraction, fracture;' Cot. — Lat. acc. fractionem, from nom. fractio, a breaking. — Lat. fractus, pp. of frangere, to break (base frag-), cognate with E. break; see Break. Der. fraction-al; also (from pp. fractus) fract-ure; also (from base frag-), frag-ile, q. v., frag-ment, q. v.; and (from frangere) frang-ible, q. v.

FRACTIOUS, peevish. (E.) Not found in early literature; it is given in Todd's Johnson, without a quotation. A prov. E. word, from the North. E. fratch, to squabble, quarrel, chide with another; see Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary. Cf. M. E. fracchen, to creak as a cart; 'Frachyn, as newe cartys;' Prompt. Parv. p. 175. ¶ This seems better than to connect it with North. E. frack, forward, bold, impudent. It is certainly unconnected with Lat. frangere.

FRACTURE, a breakage. (F., — L.) In Minshew; and G. Herbert's Poems, Repentance, last line. — O. F. fracture, 'a fracture, breach;' Cot. — Lat. fractura, a break; orig. fem. of fracturus, fut. part. of frangere, to break; see Fraction. Der. fracture, vb.

FRAGILE, frail. (F., — L.) In Shak. Timon, v. i. 204. — F. fragile, 'frail;' Cot. — Lat. fragilis, easily broken; from the base frag-, to break; see Fraction. Der. fragil-i-ty. Doublet, frail, q. v.

FRAGMENT, a piece broken off. (F., — L.) In Shak. Much Ado, i. 1. 288. — F. fragment, 'a fragment;' Cot. — Lat. fragmentum, a piece; formed with suffix -mentum from the base frag-, to break; see Fraction. Der. fragment-ary, fragment-al.

FRAGRANT, sweet-smelling. (F., — L.) 'The fragrant odor;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1366 c. — F. fragrant, 'fragrant;' Cot. — Lat. fragrans, acc. of fragrans, pres. pt. of fragrare, to emit an odour; cf. fragrum, a strawberry, named from its smell. Root uncertain. Der. fragrant-ly, fragrance.

FRAIL, easily broken. (F., — L.) M. E. freel, frele, Wyclif, Rom. viii. 3. Chaucer has freelite, frailty; C. T. 12012. — O. F. fraille, 'frail, brittle;' Cot. — Lat. fragilis; see Fragile. Der. frail-ty, frail-ness.

FRAME, to form, construct. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 8. 5. M. E. fremen, Havelok, 441. — A. S. fremman, to promote, effect, do; Grein, i. 339. Lit. 'to further.' — A. S. fram, from, strong, excellent; lit. 'surpassing,' or 'forward.' — A. S. fram, prep. from, away; see From. + Icel. fremja, to further; from framr, adj. forward; which from fram, adv. forward; and closely related to frá, from. β. The A. S. adj. fram, excellent, is cognate with Icel. framr, Du. vroom, G. fromm, and closely related to Goth. fruma, first, Skt. parama, most excellent, Lat. primus, first. See Former, Foremost, Fore, Prime. Der. frame, sb. = M. E. frame, a fabric (Prompt. Parv.), also profit, Ormulum, 961; cf. Icel. frami, advancement; also fram-er, fram-ing, frame-work.

FRAMPOLD, quarrelsome. (C.) Obsolete. In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 94. Spelt frampald, frampard, and explained as 'fretful, peevish, cross, forward' in Ray, Gloss. of South-Country Words. — W. ffromfol, passionate; from ffromi, to fume, fret; ffrom, testy. Cf. Gael. frionas, fretfulness; freeine, fury, rage. [†]

FRANC, a French coin, worth about rod. (F.) M. E. frank, Chaucer, C. T. 13117. — O. F. (and F.) franc; see Cotgrave. Named from its being French; see Frank.

FRANCHISE, freedom. (F.) M. E. franchise, freedom; Chaucer, C. T. 9861, 11828. Hence the verb franchisen, franchisen, to render free, endow with the privileges of a free man; P. Plowman, C. iv. 114. — O. F. franchise, privileged liberty. — O. F. franchiss-, stem of parts of the verb franchir, to frank, render free. — O. F. franc, free; see Frank.

FRANGIBLE, brittle. (L.) Rare. In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Late Lat. frangibilis, a coined word, from Lat. frangere, to break. See Fraction. Der. frangibil-i-ty.

FRANK, free. (F., — Low Lat., — O. H. G.) In Spenser, Shepherd's Kal. Nov. 203. — O. F. franc, free. — Low Lat. francus, free. — O. H. G. franko, a Frank, free man. The Franks were a Germanic people; the origin of their name is obscure. Der. frank, vb., frank-ly, frank-ness; frank-incense, q. v.; franchise, q. v., frank-lin, q. v.

FRANKINCENSE, an odorous resin. (F.) In Holland's tr. of Pliny, b. xii. c. 14. — O. F. franc encens, pure incense. See franc in Cotgrave, who gives the example: 'Terre franche, mould, pure soyle, soyle of it selfe; a soyle without sand, gravell, or stones.' See Frank and Incense. [†]

FRANKLIN, a freeholder. (F.) M. E. frankelein, Chaucer, C. T. 333; shortened to franken, P. Plowman, C. vi. 64. — O. F. frankeleyn = francheleyn; see quotation in Tyrwhitt's note to Chaucer,

C. T. 333.—Low Lat. franchilanus; Ducange.—Low Lat. franchire, to render free.—Low Lat. franchius, francus, free; see Frank.
 β. The suffix is from O.H.G. -linc=G. and E. -ling, as in G. fremdling, a stranger, and E. darling; see Darling.

FRANTIC, full of rage or madness. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. frenetik, contr. form frenetik. Chaucer has frenetik, Troilus, v. 206; frenetik is in P. Plowman, C. xii. 6.—O. F. frenatique (better frenetique), 'frantic'; Cot.—Lat. phreneticus, phreniticus, mad.—Gk. φρενητικός, rightly φρενιτικός, mad, suffering from φρενίτις, or inflammation of the brain.—Gk. φρεν, base of φρήν, the heart, mind, senses. See Frensy.

FRATERNAL, brotherly. (F.,—L.) In Milton, P. L. xii. 26; Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave. Altered to the Lat. spelling.—O. F. fraternel, 'fraternal'; Cot.—Low Lat. fraternalis, substituted for Lat. fraternus, brotherly.—Lat. frater, cognate with E. brother; see Brother. Der. fraternal-ly; from the same source, fraternity, q. v.; fratricide, q. v.

FRATERNITY, brotherhood. (F.,—L.) M. E. fraternité, Chaucer, C. T. 366.—O. F. fraternité.—Lat. fraternitatem, acc. of fraternitas.—Lat. fraternus, brotherly.—Lat. frater, a brother; see above. Der. fratern-ise=O. F. fraterniser, 'to fraternize'; Cot.; fratern-is-er, fratern-is-at-ion (from fraternus).

FRATRICIDE (1), a murderer of a brother. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. This is the true sense; see below.—O. F. fratricide, 'a murderer of his own brother'; Cot.—Lat. fratricida, a fratricide.—Lat. fratri, crude form of frater, a brother; and -cida, a slayer, from cadere (pt. t. ce-cidi), to slay. See Fraternal and Cæsura.

FRATRICIDE (2), murder of a brother. (L.) 'Fratricide, brother-slaughterer'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Lat. fratricidium, a brother's murder.—Lat. fratri; and -cidium, a slaying; see above.

FRAUD, deceit. (F.,—L.) M. E. fraude; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 340.—O. F. fraude, 'fraud, guile'; Cot.—Lat. fraudem, acc. of fraus (old form frus), guile. Cf. Skt. dhūrta, fraudulent, knavish.—✓DHVAR, DHRU, to bend; cf. Skt. dhrvi, to bend; whence also E. dull, dwell, q. v. Der. fraud-ful, fraud-ful-ly, fraud-less; fraud-u-lent, from O. F. fraudent, 'fraudent'; Cot.—Lat. fraudentulus; fraud-u-lent-ly, fraud-u-lence.

FRAUGHT, to lade a ship. (Scand.) 'If after this command thou fraught the court'; Cymb. i. i. 126; 'The fraughting souls within her'; Temp. i. 2. 13. M. E. frachten, fragten, only used in the pp. fraught, Will. of Palerne, 2732, Chaucer, C. T. Group B, l. 171 (see my note on the line). β. At a later period, fraught though used most often as a pp., was also accepted as an infim. mood, as shewn by the quotations above. The form freight was also used; see Freight. Neither form is quite close to the original; fraght would have done better. Cf. Mätzner, Eng. Gram. i. 344.—Swed. frakta, to freight, freight; Dan. fragte; from Swed. frakt, Dan. fragt, a cargo. + Du. bevrachten, to freight; from vracht, a cargo. + G. frachten, to freight, load, carry goods; from fracht, a cargo, load, carriage of goods. B. The change of vowel from au to ei was due to the influence of O. F. (and F.) fret, which Cotgrave explains as 'the freight, or freight of a ship; also the hire that's paid for a ship, or for the freight thereof.' [We actually find fret for fraught in old edd. of Chaucer, pr. in 1532 and 1561.] This F. fret is from O. H. G. frehi, of which the proper meaning is 'service'; whence the senses of 'use, hire' would easily result; and, in fact, it is thought to be the same word as G. fracht, though the sense has changed. Of unknown origin. ¶ The connection with prov. G. ferchen, fergen, to despatch, cannot be clearly made out.

FRAY (1), an affray. (F.,—L.) 'There began a great fraye between some of the gromes and pages'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. i. c. 16 (R). Short for affray (also effray), of which an older sense was 'terror.' See this proved by comparing fray, terror, in Barbour's Bruce, xv. 255, with effray, id. xi. 250; and again compare effrayt, id. xiii. 173, with mod. E. afraid. Thus fray is a doublet of M. E. affray, terror; see Affray. And see below. [+]

FRAY (2), to terrify. (F.,—L.) In the Bible, Deut. xxviii. 26, Jer. vii. 33, Zech. i. 21. Short for affray, to terrify, whence the mod. E. afraid. See above; and see Affray. [+]

FRAY (3), to wear away by rubbing. (F.,—L.) Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, i. 2. 13, has frayings, in the sense of peel rubbed off a stag's horn. 'A deer was said to fray her head, when she rubbed it against a tree to renew it'; Halliwell.—O. F. frayer, 'to grate upon, rub'; Cot. An older form was froier; also frier (Burguy).—Lat. fricare, to rub. See Friction. ¶ Wholly unconnected with the words above, with which Richardson confuses it.

FREAK (1), a whim, caprice. (E.) 'The fickle freaks . . . Of fortune false'; Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 50. This use as a sb., though now common, is unknown in M. E. in the same sense. Yet the word can hardly be other than the once common adj. frek or frik, in the sense of 'vigorous.' 'Fryke, or craske, or yn grete helthe, crasus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 179. Thus the lit. sense is 'a vigorous or quick thing,' hence 'a sudden movement.' 'Freh, quick, eager, hasty'; Halliwell. And see frece in Strattmann.—A. S. free, bold, rash; whence frécen, danger; Grein, i. 338, 340. + Icel. frekr, voracious, greedy. + Swed. fräck, impudent, audacious. + Dan. fræk, audacious. + G. frech, saucy; O. H. G. freh, greedy. Cf. Goth. faihufrisks, lit. fee-greedy, avaricious. Der. freak-ish, Pope, Wife of Bath, 91.

FREAK (2), to streak, variegate. (E.) 'The pansy freak'd with jet'; Milton, Lycidas, 144. Freak, as sb., is the word of which freckle is the diminutive; see Freckle.

FRECKLE, a small spot. (Scand.) Spelt freckell in Sir T. More, Works, p. 7. From a base freh, whence freh-el and freh-en are diminutives. The latter is used by Chaucer, who has the pl. freknes, fraknes, C. T. 2171.—Icel. freknur, pl. freckles; Swed. fräknar, pl. fräknar, freckles; Dan. fregne, pl. fregner, freckles. Cf. Gael. breac, spotted, speckled; Gk. νεκρός, sprinkled with dark spots; Skt. priṇi, variegated; see Curtius, i. 340, 341. Perhaps related to fleck, q. v. Der. freckle, vb., freckl-ed, freckl-y.

FREE, at liberty. (E.) M. E. fre, Chaucer, C. T. 5631.—A. S. fréo; Grein, i. 344. + Du. vrij. + Icel. frí. + Swed. and Dan. fri. + Goth. freis (base frija).—β. The orig. sense is having free choice, acting at pleasure, rejoicing, and the word is closely connected with Skt. priya, beloved, dear, agreeable.—✓PRI, to love, rejoice. See Friend. Der. free, vb., free-ly, free-ness; free-dom=A. S. fréo-dóm; free-booter (see Booty); free-hold, free-hold-er; free-man=A. S. fréoman; free-mason, free-mason-ry; free-stone (a stone that can be freely cut); free-think-er, free-will.

FREEZE, to harden with cold, to be very cold. (E.) M. E. freezen, fresen; P. Plowman, C. xiii. 192.—A. S. fréosan, Grein, i. 347. + Icel. frjósa. + Swed. frysa. + Dan. fryse. + Du. vriezen. + G. frieren. O. H. G. freosan. + Lat. prurire, to itch, orig. to burn; cf. pruna, hoar-frost, pruna, a burning coal. + Skt. plush, to burn.—✓PRUS, to burn; whence the Teutonic base FRUS, appearing in Goth. frius, frost, as well as in the words above. Der. fros-t, q. v., frore, q. v.

FREIGHT, a cargo. (F.,—O. H. G.) A later form of fraught, and better spelt fret, being borrowed from the O. F. fret. Freighted occurs in North's Plutarch; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 16, l. 3. See further under Fraught. Der. freight, vb., freight-age.

FRENZY, madness, fury. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. frenesye [not frenesye as in Tyrwhitt], Chaucer, Troil. i. 728; P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 85.—O. F. frenaisie [better frenesie], 'frenzie'; Cot.—Lat. phrenesis.—Late Gk. φρένησις, equivalent to Gk. φρενίτις, inflammation of the brain.—Gk. φρεν, base of φρήν, the midriff, heart, senses; of uncertain origin. Der. frantic, q. v.

FREQUENT, occurring often, familiar. (F.,—L.) 'How frequent and familiar a thyng'; Sir T. Elyot, Governour, b. iii. c. 7 (R). 'Frequently in his mouthe'; id. b. i. c. 23 (R).—O. F. frequent, omitted by Cotgrave, but given in Sherwood's Index.—Lat. frequentem, acc. of frequens, crowded, crammed, frequent; pres. part. of a lost verb frequere, to cram, closely allied to farcire, to cram, and from the same root. See Fare. Der. frequent-ly, frequent-ness, frequent-y; also frequent, vb.=O. F. frequenter, 'to frequent'; Cot.=Lat. frequentare; frequent-at-ion, frequent-at-ive.

FRESCO, a painting executed on plaster while fresh. (Ital.,—O. H. G.) See Fresco in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—Ital. fresco, cool, fresh.—O. H. G. friscg, frisc (G. frisch), fresh. See Fresh. See Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 298 (8th ed.).

FRESH, new, recent, vigorous. (E.) M. E. fresh, fresh. 'Ful fresh and newe'; Chaucer, C. T. 367. Also spelt fersch, fersh, by the shifting of the r so common in English; cf. bride, bird, brimstone. Spelt fersse (= fershe), Rob. of Glouc. p. 397; also versc (= fersc), O. Eng. Homilies, i. 175, l. 248.—A. S. fersc; 'ne fersc ne mersc'=neither fresh water nor marsh; Ancient Laws, ed. Thorpe, i. 184, l. 8. + Icel. ferskr, fresh; friskr, frisky, brisk, vigorous. + Swed. frisk. + Dan. fersk, frisk. + Du. versch. + G. frisch; M. H. G. vrisk, vrisk; O. H. G. frisk.

B. The base of A. S. fersc (for far-isc) is FAR, to travel; the same vowel-change appears in E. ferry, from the same ✓PAR; see Fare. Thus the orig. sense would be 'moving,' esp. used of water. Der. fresh-ly, fresh-ness, fresh-en, fresh-man; also fresh-et, a small stream of flowing water, Milton, P. R. ii. 345. See Frisk, Fresco.

FRET (1), to eat away. (E.) M. E. fretten, a strong verb; Chaucer, C. T. 2070.—A. S. fretan, pt. t. fræt, Grein, i. 340. Contracted from for-etan, as is clearly shewn by the Gothic form; from for-, intensive prefix, and etan, to eat. + Swed. fräta, to corrode = för-äta, to eat entirely. + Du. vreten=ver-eten. + G. fressen=ver-essen. + Goth. fraitan; from fra-, intensive prefix, and itan, to eat. See For (2) and Eat. Der. fret-ful, Shak. 2 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 403; fret-ful-ly, fret-ful-ness, fretting. ¶ The strong pp. occurs in Levit. xiii. 55 in the form fret; contr. from the M. E. strong pp. fretten, frete; see Chaucer, C. T. 4895.

FRET (2), to ornament, variegate. (E.) M. E. fretien; 'Alle hi fyue fynghres were fretted with rynges'=all her five fingers were adorned with rings; P. Plowman, A. ii. 11.—A. S. frætwan, frætwan, to adorn; Grein, i. 338. Cf. A. S. frætwu, frætwu, ornament; id. 337. + O. Sax. fratahon, to adorn; fratahi, ornament. It seems to have been particularly used of carved work. Of unknown origin. Der. fret-work (unless it belong to the word below).

FRET (3), a kind of grating. (F.,=L.) A term in heraldry, meaning 'a bearing composed of bars crossed and interlaced.' See explanation in Minshew, ed. 1627. Kersey, ed. 1715, has: 'in heraldry, a bearing wherein several lines run crossing one another.'—O. F. frete, 'a verrill [ferrule], the iron band or hoop that keeps a wooden tool from riving;' Cot. α. The mod. F. fretter means 'to hoop,' or 'to put a ferrule on a tool.' Cotgrave also gives 'fretté, fretty, a term of blazon' [heraldry]. According to Diez, frettes, pl., means an iron grating. Roquefort gives: 'freter, to cross, interlace.' All these words seem to be related; and may be resolved into a verb fretter, freter, to hoop, bar, interlace, and a sb. frette, frete, a hoop, bar. β. We may, I suppose, connect these with O. F. ferret, 'a tag of a point,' and the verb ferret, to shoe, hoop with iron; making the sb. frette=ferrette, a dimin. of ferret. In the same way, fretter would mean 'to provide with a small hoop or ferrule,' while freter means, generally, 'to bind with iron;' Cot. γ. Cf. Span. fretes, 'frets, narrow bands of a shield, a term in heraldry' (Meadows); from a sing. frete. Also Ital. ferriata, 'a grate of iron for any window, a portcullis;' Florio. Also ferretta, 'little irons, as tags for points;' id.—Low Lat. ferrata, an iron grating.—Low Lat. ferrare, to bind with iron.—Lat. ferrum, iron. Ferrum=ferum; from the same root as E. bristle; see BRISTLE. Fick, i. 698. Der. fret-work, fretted, fretty. ¶ It is sometimes difficult to separate this word from the preceding, owing to the use of fret in architecture to signify 'an ornament consisting of small fillets intersecting each other at right angles;' Webster. Littré accounts for our word differently.

FRET (4), a stop on a musical instrument, (F.,=L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 150. A fret was a stop such as is seen on a guitar, to regulate the fingering; formed by thin pieces of metal or wires running like bars across the neck of the instrument; see Levins. I take it to be a particular use of O. F. frete, a ferrule; and therefore the same word as the above.

FRIABLE, easily crumbled. (F.,=L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 23. § 5.—O. F. friable, 'bruizable, easy to be broken;' Cot.—Lat. friabilis, easily crumbled.—Lat. friare, to rub, crumble. Cf. Skt. ghrish, to grind; Curtius, i. 251. Der. friable-ness, friabil-ity.

FRIAR, a member of a religious order. (F.,=L.) M. E. frere, Chaucer, C. T. 208; Rob. of Glouc. p. 530.—O. F. frere, freire.—Lat. fratrem, acc. of frater, cognate with E. brother; see BROTHER. Der. frinary.

FRIBBLE, to trifle. (F.?) 'Than those who with the stars do fribble,' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 36; and see Spectator, no. 288. Of unknown origin. ¶ 'To be explained from Central Fr. friboler, to flutter, flit to and fro without fixed purpose like a butterfly; barivoler, to flutter in the wind; Jaubert.' Wedgwood. It is more likely to stand for frippe, from O. F. fripper; see FRIPPERY.

FRICASSEE, a dish made of fowls. (F.,=L.?) 'A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce;' Todd's Johnson. 'Soups, and olios, fricassées, and ragouts;' Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 7; id.—F. fricassée, a fricassee; fem. pp. of fricasser, to fricassée, also, to squander money. Of unknown origin (Brachet). ¶ The orig. sense seems to have been to 'mince,' rather than to 'fry' (see fricassée in Cot.); I should refer it to Lat. fricare, to rub, not to frigere, to fry; and I suppose it to have been prepared from pounded meat; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 12472. We once had fricasy in the sense of rubbing; as in 'fricasyes or rubbings;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 32. [†]

FRICTION, rubbing, attrition. (F.,=L.) 'Hard and vehement friction;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxviii. c. 4.—F. friction, 'a friction, or friction;' Cot.—Lat. frictionem, acc. of frictio, a rubbing.—Lat. frictus, contr. pp. of fricare, to rub; an extended form of fricare, to crumble. Cf. Skt. ghrish, to grind; Curtius, i. 251. Der. friction-wheel; cf. friable.

FRIDAY, the sixth day of the week. (E.) M. E. Friday, Chaucer, C. T. 1536.—A. S. frige-dæg, rubric at S. Mark, xi. 11.—A. S. frige, gen. case of frigu, love, also the goddess of love (the word frigu being feminine); and dæg, a day; see Grein, i. 349.—✓PRI, to love; see FRIEND. Cf. Icel. frídagur, Friday, O. H. G. Frīdag, Frīdagat; words not quite exactly equivalent in form, but from the same root.

FRIEND, an intimate acquaintance. (E.) M. E. friend, freond; Ormulum, 443, 1609, 17960.—A. S. frēond; Grein, i. 346. Orig. pres. pt. of frēon, freogan, to love; so that the sense is 'loving;' id. 345. + Du. vriend, a friend; cf. vrijen, to court, woo. + Icel. frændi, a kinsman; from frjá, to love. + Dan. frænde, Swed. fründe, a kinsman. + Goth. frjonds, a friend; pres. pt. of frjōn, to love. + G. freund, a friend; O. H. G. frumt.—✓PRI, to love; cf. Skt. prī, to love. Der. friend-ly (A. S. adv. frēondlice), friend-li-ness, friend-less (A. S. frēondlēss), friend-less-ness, friend-ship (A. S. frēondscipe).

FRIEZE (1), a coarse woollen cloth. (F.,=Du.) 'Woven after the manner of deep, frieze rugges;' Holland's tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 48.—F. frise, frize, 'frise;' Cot. He also gives drap de frise as an equivalent expression; lit. cloth of Friesland.—Du. Vriesland, Friesland; Vries, a Frieslander. ¶ The M. E. Frise, meaning 'Friesland,' occurs in the Romaunt of the Rose, 1093. Similarly, the term 'cheval de Frise' means 'horse of Friesland,' because there first used in defensive warfare. But the etymology of the word is much disputed. [†]

FRIEZE (2), part of the entablature of a column. (F.) In Shak. Macb. i. 6. 6.—O. F. frize, 'the cloth called frise; also in architecture the broad and flat band, or member, that's next below the cornice [cornice], or between it and the architrave; called also by our workmen the frize;' Cot. Cf. F. frise, fraise, a ruff (Cot.), Span. friso, a frieze, Ital. fregio, 'a fringe, lace, border, ornament; also, a wreath, crowne, or chaplet;' Florio. β. Brachet derives F. frise (O. F. frize) from the Ital. fregio; but see Diez. The source of the word is much disputed; perhaps there is a reference to the 'curling' nature of the ornamentation (?); see FRIZ.

FRIGATE, a large ship. (F.,=Ital.) In Cotgrave.—O. F. frigate, 'a frigate, a swift pinnace;' Cot.—Ital. fregata, 'a frigate, a spiall ship;' Florio. ¶ Of uncertain origin; Diez supposes it to stand for fargata, a supposed contracted form of fabricata, i. e. constructed, from Lat. fabricatus, pp. of fabricare, to build; see FABRIC. Cf. Span. fragata, a frigate, with Span. fraguar (=Lat. fabricare), to forge; see FORGE. We know that F. bâtiment, a building, also means a ship. Der. frigate-oon (Ital. fregatone), frigate-bird.

FRIGHT, terror. (E.) M. E. fryht; Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 984. It stands for fryht, by the shifting of r so common in English, as in bride, bird, brimstone, &c.—A. S. fyrhto, fyrhtu, fright; Grein, i. 362. Cf. fyrht, timid; dfyrhtan, to terrify. + O. Sax. forokht, forokht, forht, fright. + Dan. frygt, fright; frygte, to fear. + Swed. fruktan, fright; frukta, to fear. + Goth. faurhtei, fright; faurhtjan, to fear; faurhts, fearful. + G. furcht, O. H. G. forhta, forokhta, forokhta, fright; G. fürchten, to fear. ¶ The root is not known. I should suppose the Goth. faurhts to be possibly due to the prefix faur- and the Goth. base agan, seen in ogan, to fear; see AWE. The O. H. G. for-akta points in the same direction. Der. fright, verb (later form fright-en); Shak. uses the form fright only; fright-ful, Rich. III, iv. 4. 169; fright-ful-ly, fright-ful-ness. ¶ The change from fyrhtu to M. E. fryht may have been due to Scand. influence; observe the Swed. and Dan. forms.

FRIGID, cold, chilly. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Frigidity is in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. i. § 4.—Lat. frigidus, cold.—Lat. frigere, to be cold.—Lat. frigus, sb. cold. + Gk. ψυχος, cold; ψύχω, to freeze; see Curtius, i. 438. Der. frigid-ly, frigid-ness, frigid-ity; and see FRILL.

FRILL, a ruffle on a shirt. (F.,=L.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. It orig. was a term in hawking; 'Frill, to quake as with cold;' the hawk frills; id. And see frill in Halliwell. It seems to have been used of the ruffling of a hawk's feathers, due to its feeling chilly; and thence to have been transferred to the frill or ruffle of a shirt.—O. F. friller, 'to shiver, chatter, or dicker for cold;' Cot.—O. F. frilleux, 'chill, cold of nature;' id.—Low Lat. *frigidulosus, a word coined from Lat. frigidulus, chilly, which is formed, as a dimin., from Lat. frigidus, cold. See above. Der. frill, to furnish with a frill.

FRINGE, a border of loose threads. (F.,=L.) In Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 228.—O. F. *fringe, supposed older form of F. frange (see Brachet, and frange in Burguy). Cot. has: 'Frangie, fringe.' The Wallachian form (according to Diez) is frimbie, which stands for fimbria, by a transposition of r, for greater ease of pronunciation; cf. F. brebis from Lat. uervicem.—Lat. fimbria, fringe; chiefly in the pl. fimbriae, curled ends of threads, fibres. Fimbria is a strengthened form of fibra, a fibre, filament. See FIBRE. Der. fringe, verb, fringed, Tempest, i. 2. 408; fring-y. [†]

FRIPPERY, worn out clothes, trifles. (F.) 'Some frippery to hide nakedness;' Ford, Fancies Chaste and Noble, A. i. sc. 1 (R.) Shak. has it in the sense of an old-clothes' shop; Temp. iv. 225.—O. F. friperie, 'a friperie, broker's shop, street of brokers, or of frippers;' Cot.—O. F. fripiet, 'a friper, or broker; a mender or trimmer up of old garments, and a seller of them so mended;' id.—O. F. fripper, 'to rub up and downe, to weare unto rags;' id. Of unknown origin.

FRISK, to skip about. (F.,=Scand.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. i. 2. 67. A verb formed from the adj. frisk, which occurs in Cotgrave.—O. F. frisque, 'friske, lively, jolly, blithe, brisk, fine, spruce, gay;' Cot.—Icel. friskr, frisky, brisk, vigorous; Swed. frisk, fresh, but also lively; Dan. frisk, well, hale, hearty. All cognate with E. Fresh, q. v. Der. frisk-y, equivalent to the old adj. frisk; frisk-i-ly, frisk-i-ness, frisk-et, a printer's term for a light frame often in motion.

FRITH, FIRTH, an estuary. (Scand.) M. E. firth, Barbour's Bruce, xvi. 542, 547. — Icel. fjörðr, pl. fjörðir, a firth, bay; Dan. fjord; Swed. fjärd. Allied to Lat. portus, a haven, Gk. πορτός, a ferry. — ✓ PAR, to cross, pass through; whence Skt. par, to carry over, and E. fare, to travel. See Fare. ¶ The orig. sense was 'ferry'; cf. 'ford'. Not connected with Lat. fretum.

FRITTER, a kind of pancake. (F., — L.) Spelt frytours in Prompt. Parv. Cotgrave has: 'Friteau, a fritter.' But the E. word rather answers to O. F. friture, a frying, a dish of fried fish; and, because esp. used of thin slices ready to be fried, it came to mean a fragment, shred; as in 'one that makes fritters of English'; Merry Wives, v. 5. 151. Both friteau and friture are related to O. F. frit, fried. — Lat. frictus, fried, pp. of frigere, to fry. See Fry. Der. fritter, vb., to reduce to slices, waste.

FRIVOLOUS, trifling. (L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, v. 1. 28. Cotgrave translates F. frivole by 'frivolous, vain.' — Lat. frivolus, silly, trifling; by direct change of Lat. -us to E. -ous, as in abstemious, arduous, &c. The orig. sense of frivolus seems to have been 'rubbed away'; also applied to refuse, broken sherds, &c. 'Frivola sunt proprie uasa fictilia quassa'; Festus. — Lat. friare, fricare, to rub; see Friction. Der. frivolous-ly, frivolous-ness; also frivol-i-ly, from F. frivolite.

FRIZ, FRIZZ, to curl, render rough. (F., — Du.?) Rarely used except in the frequentative form frizzle. 'Mæcenas, if I meete with thee without my frizled top'; Drant, tr. of Horace, Epist. i. 1. 94 (Lat. text). — O. F. frizer, 'to frizzle, crisper, curl'; Cot. β. The orig. sense perhaps was to roughen the nap of a cloth, to make it look like frieze. This is rendered probable by Span. frisar, to frizzle, to raise the nap on frieze; from Span. frisa, frieze. — O. F. frize, 'the cloth called frise'; Cot. See Frieze (1). Der. friz-iz-le. [†]

FRO, adv. from. (Scand.) M. E. fra, fro, also used as a prep. Ormulum, 1265, 4820; Havelok, 318. — Icel. frá, from; also adv. as in the phrase tíð ok frá = 'to and fro', whence our phrase 'to and fro' is copied. + Dan. fra. + A. S. from; see From. ¶ Fro is the doublet of from; but from a Scand. source.

FROCK, a monk's cowl, loose gown. (F., — Low L.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 4. 164. M. E. frok, of which the dat. frokke occurs in P. Plowman, B. v. 81. — O. F. froc; whence 'froc de moine, a monk's cowl or hood'; Cot. — Low Lat. frocus, a monk's frock; also spelt flocus, by the common change of l to r; see flocus in Ducange. Prob. so called because woollen (Diefz). See Flock (2). ¶ Otherwise in Brachet; viz. from O. H. G. hroch (G. rock), a coat.

FROG (1), a small amphibious animal. (E.) M. E. frogge, Rob. of Glouc. p. 69; pl. froggen, O. E. Homilies, i. 51, l. 30. — A. S. froga, pl. frogan, Ps. civ. 28. We also find the forms froega (pl. froegan), and frox (pl. froxas); Ps. lxxvii. 50. Of these, frox = frocs = frosc, cognate with Icel. froskr (also fraukr), Du. vorsch, G. frosch. Cf. also Swed. and Dan. frø. β. The M. E. forms are various; we find froke, frosche, frosch, froske, and frogge, all in Prompt. Parv. p. 180. ¶ Root uncertain; perhaps it meant 'jumper'; from ✓ PRU, to spring up; see Frolic.

FROG (2), a substance in a horse's foot. (E.?) α. The frog of a horse's foot is shaped like a fork, and I suspect it to be a corruption of fork, q. v. β. On the other hand, it was certainly understood as being named after a frog (though it is hard to see why), because it was also called a frush, which is a variant of frosk, a M. E. form of frog; see Frog (1). 'Frush or frog, the tender part of a horse's hoof, next the heel'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.

FROLIC, adj., sportive, gay, merry. (Du.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 394. Gascoigne speaks of a 'fröliche fauour' = a merry look; Fruits of Warre, st. 40. It seems to have been one of the rather numerous words imported from Dutch in the reign of Elizabeth. — Du. vrolijk, frolic, merry, gay. + G. fröhlich, merry. β. Formed by help of the suffix -lijk (= E. like, -ly) from the base vro, orig. an adj. with the sense of 'merry', found in O. Sax. frák, O. H. G. fro, O. Fries. fro, and preserved in mod. G. froh, joyous, glad. γ. The orig. sense is 'springing, jumping for joy.' — ✓ PRU, to spring up; cf. Skt. pru, to go. Fick, iii. 190. Der. frolie, verb, frolie, sb.; frolie-some, frolie-some-ness.

FROM, prep., away, forth. (E.) M. E. from; common. — A. S. from, fram. + Icel. fram, forward; distinguished in use from frá, from. + Swed. fram, forth; cf. från, from. + Dan. fram, forth; cf. fra, from. + O. H. G. fram, adv. forth; prep. forth from. + Goth. fram, prep. from; framis, adv. further, from a positive fram, forth, forward. — Teutonic FAR, to go on = ✓ PAR, to cross, go through. See Fare. Doublet, fro. Der. fro-ward, q. v.

FROND, a leafy branch. (L.) Not in Johnson. Modern and scientific. — Lat. frond-, base of frons, a leafy branch; of uncertain origin. Der. frond-esc-ence, frondi-fer-ous (from crude form frondi-, and fer-re, to bear).

FRONT, the forehead. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. front; used in the sense of 'forehead,' King Alisaunder, 6550. — O. F. front, 'the forehead, brow'; Cot. — Lat. frontem, acc. of frons, the forehead. The base is supposed to be bhru-vant, 'having a brow,' from BHRU, Skt. bhrū, an eye-brow. See Brow. Der. front, verb, 2 Hen. IV, iv. 1. 25; front-age, front-less; front-al, q. v., front-ier, q. v., front-let, q. v., fronti-spice, q. v. Also front-ed (rare), Milton, P. L. ii. 532. Also af-front, con-front, ef-front-ery. Also frounce, flounce.

FRONTAL, a band worn on the forehead. (F., — L.) 'Which being applied in the manner of a frontall to the forehead'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xx. c. 21. — O. F. frontal, 'a frontlet, or forehead-band'; Cot. — Lat. frontale, an ornament for a horse's forehead. — Lat. front-, base of frons, the front. See Front.

FRONTIER, a part of a country bordering on another. (F., — L.) In Shak. Hamlet, iv. 4. 16. — O. F. frontiere, 'the frontier, marches, or border of a country'; Cot. — Low Lat. fronteria, frontaria, a frontier, border-land; formed with suffix -aria, fem. of -arius, from front-, base of frons. See Front.

FRONTISPIECE, a picture at the beginning of a book, front of a house. (F., — L.) A perverse spelling of frontispice, by ignorant confusion with piece; see Trench, Eng. Past and Present. In Minshew, ed. 1627; and Milton, P. L. iii. 506. — O. F. frontispice, 'the frontispiece, or fore-front of a house'; Cot. — Low Lat. frontispicium, a beginning, the front of a church; lit. 'front view.' — Lat. fronti-, crude form of frons, the front; and spicere, a form of specere, to view, behold, see. See Front, and Special or Spy.

FRONTLET, a small band on the forehead. (F., — L.) In Shak. K. Lear, i. 4. 208. See Exod. xiii. 16, Deut. vi. 8 (A. V.). Put for frontlet-et, a dimin. of frontal, with suffix -et. 'A frontlet, also the part of a hedstall of a bridle, that commeth over the forehead; frontale;' Baret's Alvearie. See Frontal.

FRORE, frozen. (E.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 595. Short for frozen, the old pp. of the verb 'to freeze.' See An O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 151. — A. S. froren, gefroren, pp. of fresan, to freeze; Lye. + Du. gevroren, pp. of vriesen, to freeze. + G. gefroren, pp. of frieren. See Freeze.

FROST, the act or state of freezing. (E.) M. E. frost; also forst, by the common shifting of r; Wyclif, Ps. lxxvii. 47. — A. S. forst (the usual form), Grein, i. 331. — A. S. fresan, to freeze. + Du. vorst. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. frost. + G. frost. Cf. Goth. frius, frost, cold; which shews that the t is a formative suffix, as might have been expected. See Freeze. Der. frost, verb, frost-y, frost-i-ly, frost-i-ness, frost-bite, frost-bitt-en, frost-bound, frost-in, frost-nail, frost-work.

FROTH, foam upon liquids. (Scand.) M. E. frothe, Prompt. Parv. p. 180. Chaucer has the verb frothen, C. T. 1660. — Icel. froða, fräuð. + Dan. fraade. + Swed. fradga. β. The form of the root is PRU, meaning, perhaps, 'to swim, float'; see Flow. Der. froth-y, froth-i-ly, froth-i-ness.

FROUNCE, to wrinkle, curl, plait. (F., — L.) The older form of Flounce, q. v. Der. frounce, sb.

FROWARD, perverse. (E.) M. E. froward, but commonly fraward; Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 87; Ormulum, 4672. This fraward is a Northern form of from-ward, due to substitution of the Scand. Eng. fro for the A. S. from; see Fro. — A. S. fromward, only in the sense of 'about to depart' in Grein, i. 351; but we have retained the orig. sense of from-ward, i. e. averse, perverse. See From and Towards. Der. froward-ly, froward-ness, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 6. 20.

FROWN, to look sternly. (F., — Scand.) M. E. frounen; Chaucer, C. T. 8232. — O. F. *frogner, *frongner, only preserved in re-frogner, 'to frown, lower, look sternly, sullenly'; Cot. In mod. F., se refragner, to frown. Cf. Ital. infrigno, wrinkled, frowning; Ital. dialectal (Lombardic) frignare, to whimper, to make a wry face. β. Of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. dial. fryna, to make a wry face (Rietz), Norweg. fröyna, the same (Aasen); also Swed. flina, to titter, giggle, Swed. dial. flina, to make a wry face (Rietz); also Norweg. flisa, flira, whence E. fleur. See Fleur. Der. froum, sb.

FRUCTIFY, to make fruitful. (F., — L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2. 30. In A Balade of Our Lady, st. 6; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 329. — F. fructifier, 'to fructify'; Cot. — Lat. fructificare, to make fruitful. — Lat. fructi-, for fructu-, crude form of fructus, fruit; and -ficare, suffix due to facere, to make. See Fruit and Fact. Der. fructificat-ion, from Lat. pp. fructificatus.

FRUGAL, thrifty. (F., — L.) In Shak. Much Ado, iv. 1. 130. — F. frugal, 'frugally'; Cot. — Lat. frugalis, economical, lit. of or belonging to fruits. — Lat. frug-, base of frux, fruits of the earth; of which the dat. frugi was used to signify useful, temperate, frugal. — Lat. base FRUG, to enjoy, cognate with E. brook, to put up with. See Brook (1); and see Fruit. Der. frugal-ly, frugal-ity; also frugi- fer-ous, i. e. fruit-bearing, frugi-vor-ous, fruit-eating, from Lat. frugi-, crude form of frux, combined with fer-re, to bear, vor-are, to eat.

FRUIT, produce of the earth. (F., -L.) M. E. fruit, frut; spelt frut in the Ancien Riwle, p. 150. - O. F. fruit (Burguy). - Lat. fructum, acc. of fructus, fruit. - Lat. fructus, pp. of frui (for frug-ai), to enjoy. - Lat. base FRUG, to enjoy, cognate with E. brook, to endure. - ✓ BHRUG, to enjoy; see Brook (1). Der. fruit-age; fruit-er-er (put for fruit-er, with suffix -er unnecessarily repeated), 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 36; fruit-ful, Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 3; fruit-ful-ly, fruit-ful-ness, fruit-less, fruit-less-ly, fruit-less-ness; also fruition, q. v., fructify, q. v., fructiferous, fructivorous.

FRUITION, enjoyment. (F., -L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. VI, v. 5. 9. - O. F. fruition, 'fruition, enjoying'; Cot. Coined as if from a Lat. frutio. - Lat. fruitus, another form of fructus, pp. of frui, to enjoy. See Fruit. [†]

FRUMENTY, FURMENTY, FURMETY, food made of wheat boiled in milk. (F., -L.) Spelt firmentie in Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 1077; see Specimens of English, ed. Skeat, p. 322. Holland speaks of 'frumenty or spike come'; tr. of Pliny, b. xviii. c. 23. - O. F. froumenté, 'furmentic, wheat boiled'; Cot. Formed by suffix -é (= Lat. -atus), equivalent to E. -ed, as if it meant 'wheat-ed', i. e. made with wheat. - O. F. froument, 'wheat'; id. - Lat. frumentum, corn; formed (with suffix -mentum) from the base frū = FRUG; see Fruit, Frugal.

FRUSTRATE, to render vain. (L.) Formerly used as an adj., as in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 10; and in Shak. Temp. iii. 3. 10. - Lat. frustratus, pp. of frustrare, to disappoint, render vain. - Lat. frustra, in vain; properly fem. abl. of obsolete adj. frustrus, put for frud-trus, originally meaning 'deceitful'. - Lat. base FRUD, an extension of FRU, whence also E. fraud. See Fraud. Der. frustrat-ion.

FRUSTUM, a piece of a cone or cylinder. (L.) Mathematical; mere Latin. - Lat. frustum, a piece cut off, or broken off. + Gk. θραυστός, broken, brittle; θραύσμα, a fragment; from θραύειν, to break in pieces; Curtius, i. 275.

FRY (1), to dress food over a fire. (F., -L.) M. E. frien; Chaucer, C. T. 6069; P. Plowman, C. ix. 334. - O. F. frirre, to fry; Cot. - Lat. frigere, to roast. + Gk. φρύγειν, to parch. + Skt. bhrāji, to boil, fry. - ✓ BHARG, to roast, parch; prob. akin to ✓ BHARK, to shine. Curtius, i. 231. Der. fry, sb.

FRY (2), the spawn of fishes. (Scand.) In Shak. All's Well, iv. 3. 20. M. E. fri, fry; 'to the and to thi fri mi blissing graunt i' = to thee and to thy seed I grant my blessing; Towneley Mysteries, p. 24. - Icel. fra, frjó, spawn, fry; Dan. and Swed. frö. + Goth. frāiv, seed. ¶ Not allied to F. frai, fry, spawn; see Addenda. [†]

FUCHSIA, the name of a flower. (G.) A coined name, made by adding the Lat. suffix -ia to the surname of the German botanist Leonard Fuchs, about A. D. 1542. Haydn, Dict. of Dates.

FUDGE, an interjection of contempt. (F., -Low G.) In Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield. - Prov. F. fuche, feuche, an interjection of contempt; cited by Wedgwood from Hécart. - Low G. futsch! begun cited by Wedgwood from Danneil; see also Sanders, Ger. Dict. i. 525. Of onomatopoeic origin; cf. pish.

FUEL, materials for burning. (F., -L.) Also spelt fewel, fewell; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 36. Also fuaille, fewell; Barbour's Bruce, iv. 170. Here, as in Richard Coeur de Lion, 1471, it seems to mean 'supplies'. - O. F. *fouaille, not recorded, but rendered certain by the occurrence of O. F. fouailler, a wood-yard (Rougefort), and the Low Lat. foallia, fuel; cf. O. F. fuellies, brushwood (Rougefort). - Low Lat. focale, fuel, or the right of cutting fuel. - Lat. focus, a hearth, fire-place. See Focus. [†]

FUGITIVE, fleeing away, transitory. (F., -L.) Properly an adj., Shak. Antony, iii. 1. 7; also as a sb., id. iv. g. 22. - O. F. fugitif, 'fugitive'; Cot. - Lat. fugitivus, fugitive. - Lat. fugitum, supine of fugere, to flee; cognate with E. bow, to bend. + Gk. φύγειν, to flee. + Skt. bhuj, to bend, turn aside. - ✓ BHUGH, to bow, to bend. Der. fugitive-ly, fugitive-ness. From the same source, fug-acious, fug-ac-ity; fugue, q. v.; also centri-fug-al, re-fuge, subter-fuge. [†]

FUGLEMAN, the leader of a file. (G.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. According to Webster, also written flugelman. Borrowed from G. flügelmann, the leader of a wing or file. - G. flügel, a wing, dimin. of flug, a wing, from fliegen, to fly; and mann, man. See Fly.

FUGUE, a musical composition. (F., -Ital., -L.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 563. - O. F. (and F.) fugue, 'a chase or report of music, like two or more parts in one'; Cot. - Ital. fuga, a flight, a fugue. - Lat. fuga, flight. See Fugitive. Der. fugue-ist.

FULCRUM, a point of support. (L.) Fulcrum*, a stay or prop; Kersey, ed. 1715. - Lat. fulcrum, a support. - Lat. fulcire, to prop. The base ful-c is an extension of ful, which is prob. related to Skt. dhru, to stand firm; cf. Skt. dhruva, firm, stable.

FULFIL, to complete. (E.) M. E. fulfillen; P. Plowman, B. vi.

36. - A. S. fulfyllan, which, according to Bosworth, occurs in Ælfric's Grammar. Compounded of ful, full; and fyllan, to fill. See Full and Fill. Der. fulfill-er, fulfillment.

FULGENT, shining, bright. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and Milton, P. L. x. 449. - Lat. fulgens, stem of pres. pt. of fulgere, to shine. + Gk. φλέγειν, to burn, shine. + Skt. bhrāji, to shine. - ✓ BHARK, to shine; whence also E. bright. See Bright. Der. fulgent-ly, fulgenc-y; also ef-fulg-ence, re-fulg-ent.

FULIGINOUS, sooty. (L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 18 (R.) Either from O. F. fuligineux (Cot.); or, more likely, immediately from Lat. fuliginosus, sooty. - Lat. fuligin-, base of fuligo, soot. From the same base as fu-mus, smoke; cf. Skt. dhūi, dust. See Fume.

FULL (1), filled up, complete. (E.) M. E. ful; P. Plowman, B. prol. 17. - A. S. ful; Grein, i. 355. + Du. vol. + Icel. fullr. + Dan. fuld (for full). + Swed. full. + Goth. fulls. + G. voll. + Skt. pūrna, full. + Gk. πλήρης. + Lat. plenus. - ✓ PAR, to fill; cf. Skt. pār, pri, to fill. Der. full, adv., full-y, ful-ness; full-blown, full-faced, full-hearted, full-orbed; ful-fil (= full fill), ful-fil-ment; also fill, by vowel-change, q. v. Also ful-some, q. v. And see Plenary.

FULL (2), to whiten cloth, bleach. (L.) Only used now in this sense in the sb. full-er, a bleacher; this is M. E. fuller, Wyclif, Mark, ix. 3. - A. S. fullere, a cloth-bleacher; Mark, ix. 3. - A. S. fullian, to whiten, purify, baptise; Mark, iii. 11. - Low Lat. fullare (1) to cleanse clothes, (2) to full cloth. - Lat. fulla, a fuller, one who cleanses clothes. Of uncertain origin; but prob. from the sense of bleaching. Cf. Lat. infula, a white fillet, Gk. φάλος, white; see Fick, ii. 170. ¶ This word is to be carefully distinguished from the word below, which has a different history, though drawn from the very same source.

FULL (3), to full cloth, to felt. (F., -L.) To full cloth is to felt the wool together; this is done by severe beating and pounding. The word occurs in Cotgrave. - O. F. fuller, 'to full, or thicken cloth in a mill'; Cot. Also spelt fuller, 'to trample on, press'; id. - Low Lat. fullare (1) to cleanse clothes, (2) to full cloth. - Lat. fullo, a fuller. See above. ¶ This word is to be distinguished from the word above, as having a different history.

Yet the source is the same; see my note on full in Notes to P. Plowman, B. xv. 445. The orig. sense of Lat. fullo was probably a cleanser or bleacher; then, as clothes were often washed by being trampled on or beaten, the sense of 'stamping' arose; and the verb to full is now only used in this sense of stamping, pounding, or felting wool together. Der. full-ing-mill, mentioned by Strype, Annals, Edw. VI, an. 1553.

FULMINATE, to thunder, hurl lightning. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Sir T. Browne has fulminating, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5. § 19. [Spenser has the short form fulmine, F. Q. iii. 2. 5; from O. F. fulminer, 'to thunder, lighten'; Cot.] - Lat. fulminatus, pp. of fulminare, to thunder, lighten. - Lat. fulmin-, (= fulg-min), stem of fulmen, lightning, a thunder-bolt. - Lat. base fulg-, to shine; seen in fulg-ere, to shine. See Fulgent, Flame. Der. fulmin-at-ion.

FULSOME, cloying, satiating, superabundant. (E.) M. E. fulsome, abundant, Genesis and Exodus, 748, 2153; cf. Will. of Palerne, 4325. Chaucer has the sb. fulsomnes, C. T. 10719. Made up from M. E. ful = A. S. ful, full; and the suffix -some = A. S. -sum (mod. E. -some). See Full. Der. ful-some-ness. ¶ Not from foul.

FULVOUS, FULVID, tawny. (L.) Rare. Fulvid is in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed, respectively, from Lat. fulvus, tawny, and fulvidus, somewhat tawny; both prob. related to Lat. flavus, reddish yellow; of uncertain origin.

FUMBLE, to grope about. (Du.) In old authors 'to bungle.' 'False fumbling hereticks'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 279; Shak. Antony, iv. 4. 14. The b is excrement, and fumble stands for fummle. - Du. fommelen, 'to fumble, grapple'; Sewel. + Swed. famla, to grope. + Dan. famle. + Icel. fálma, to grope about. B. The Icel. form is the oldest, and is derived from the sb. which appears in A. S. as folm, the palm of the hand (Grein, i. 311), cognate with Lat. palmā. See Palm (of the hand). ¶ Hence Du. fommelen = folm-el-en, and the verb is a frequentative, with suffix -el, and the orig. sense is 'to keep moving the palm of the hand.' Der. fumbler. [†]

FUME, a smoke, vapour. (F., -L.) Sir T. Elyot speaks of 'fumes in the stomake'; The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 17. - O. F. fum, smoke (Burguy). - Lat. fumus, smoke. + Skt. dhūma, smoke. - ✓ DHU, to blow, fan a flame, shake; cf. Skt. dhū, to shake, blow. From the same root is E. Dust, q. v. Der. fume, verb (see Minshew); fumi-ferous; fumi-g-ate, q. v., fumi-atory, q. v.

FUMIGATE, to expose to fumes. (L.) 'You must be bath'd and fumigated first'; Ben Jonson, The Alchemist, A. i. - Lat. fumigatus, pp. of fumigare, to fumigate. - Lat. fum-, base of fumus, smoke; and -ig-, put for ag-, base of agere, to drive; thus the sense is 'to drive smoke about.' See Fume. Der. fumigat-ion, from O. F. fumigation, 'fumigation, smooking'; Cot.

FUMITORY, a plant; earth-smoke. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hen. V, v. 2. 45; a corruption of the older form fumiter, K. Lear, iv. 4. 3; M. E. fumeter, Chaucer, C. T. 14969. — O. F. fume-terre, 'the herb fumitory'; Cot. This is an abbreviation for fume de terre, smoke of the earth, earth-smoke; named from its smell. — Lat. fumus de terra = fumus terre. — Lat. fumus, smoke; and terra, earth. See Fume and Terrace.

FUN, merriment, sport. (C.; or perhaps Scand.) Not found early. 'Rare compound of oddity, frolic, and fun; Goldsmith, Retaliation. Probably imported from Ireland, and of Celtic origin; cf. Irish fonn, delight, pleasure, desire, longing, a tune, song; Gael. fonn, pleasure, longing, temper or frame of mind. ¶ It can scarcely be the same as the prov. E. verb 'to fun, to cheat, to deceive; Somersetshire;' Halliwell. This is M. E. fonnen, to be foolish, dote; or, as act. vb., to deceive, befool; whence pp. fonned = mod. E. fond. See Fond; where the word is traced further back.

Der. funn-y, funn-i-ly. [†]

FUNAMBULIST, one who walks on a rope. (Span., — L.) Formerly funambulo, a rope-dancer; see Gloss. to Bacon, Adv. of Learning, ed. Wright; so that the word really is Spanish; though -ist has been put for -o. — Span. funambulo, a walker on a rope. — Lat. fun-, stem of funis, a rope; and *ambulus, a walker, a coined sb. from ambulare, to walk; see Amble. β. Perhaps funis = fud-nis, from the root BHADH, to bind; but it is doubtful; Curtius, i. 325.

FUNCTION, performance, duty, office. (F., — L.) Common in Shak.; see Meas. i. 2. 14; ii. 2. 39; &c. — O. F. function, 'a function'; Cot. — Lat. functionem, acc. of functio, performance. — Lat. functus, pp. of fungi, to perform; orig. to enjoy, have the use of; from a base fug-. + Skt. bhuj, to enjoy, have the use of. — BHUG, to enjoy; akin to + BHRUG, to enjoy, whence E. fruit and E. brook, verb. See Brook (1). Der. function-al, function-ary.

FUND, a store, supply, deposit. (F., — L.) 'Fund, land or soil; also, a foundation or bottom;' Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. And see Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, an. 1698 (R.) [It should rather have been fond, but it has been accommodated to the Lat. form.] — O. F. fond, 'a bottom, floor, ground; . . . a merchant's stock;' Cot. — Lat. fundus, bottom, depth; cognate with E. bottom. See Bottom, and see Found (1). And see below. [†]

FUNDAMENT, foundation, base. (F., — L.) M. E. fundement, fundement; Chaucer, C. T. 7685; Wyclif, Luke, vi. 48. [Really F., and properly fundement, but altered to the Lat. spelling.] — O. F. fondement, foundation. — Lat. fundamentum, foundation. Formed, with suffix -mentum, from funda-re, to found. See Found (1). Der. fundament-al, All's Well, iii. 1. 2.

FUNERAL, relating to a burial. (Low L.) Properly an adj., as in 'To don the office of funeral service;' Chaucer, C. T. 2914. [An ecclesiastical word; and taken directly from Low Lat.] — Low Lat. funeralis, belonging to a burial. — Lat. funer-, base of funus, a burial; with suffix -alis. β. Perhaps so called with reference to the burning of bodies, and connected with Lat. fumus; see Fume. Der. funeral, sb.; funer-o-al, Pope, Dunciad, iii. 152, coined from Lat. funer-us, funeral, with suffix -al.

FUNGUS, a spongy plant. (L., — Gk.) 'Mushrooms, which be named fungi;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xxii. c. 23. — Lat. fungus, a fungus; put for sfungus. — Gk. σφύγγος, Attic form of σπόγγος, a sponge. Thus fungus is a doublet of sponge. See Sponge. Der. fung-ous, fung-o-id.

FUNICLE, a small cord, fibre. (L.) In Johnson's Dict. — Lat. funi-culus, double dimin. of funis, a rope. See Funambulist. Der. funicul-ar.

FUNNEL, an instrument for pouring in liquids into vessels; an air-tube. (W.?) In Ben Jonson, Discoveries, sect. headed Præcipiendi modi. And in Levins' Dict., ed. 1570. Perhaps borrowed from W. ffynel, an air-hole, vent, allied to W. ffyned, respiration, breathing; fun, breath. We find also Breton foinil, a funnel for pouring in liquids. [*] ¶ The etymology is uncertain; the Lat. word for the same thing is infundibulum, but it is a long way from this form to E. funnel. Infundibulum is derived from Lat. in, in; and fundere, to pour.

FUR, short hair of animals. (F., — O. Low G.) The orig. sense is 'protection.' M. E. forre; whence forred (or furred) hodes = furred hoods; P. Plowman, B. vi. 271. Spelt for in King Alisaunder, 3295. — O. F. forre, fuerre, a sheath, case; cf. Span. forro, lining of clothes; Ital. fodero, lining, fur, scabbard. β. From an O. Low G. source, preserved in Goth. fodr, a scabbard, sheath (John, xviii. 11); and in Icel. fódr, lining. The cognate High German word is futter. γ. Both G. futter and Icel. fódr also have the sense of fodder, and are cognate with E. fodder; so that fur and fodder are doublets. The connecting sense is seen in the ✓ PA, to cherish, protect, feed; Skt. pá, to guard, preserve. Der. fur, verb, furr-ed, furr-y, furr-i-er (Goldsmith, Animated Nature, b. iv. c. 3), furr-i-er-y. [†]

FURBELOW, a flounce. (Dialectal F.) In the Spectator, no. 15. — F. farbala, a flounce; which, according to Diez (who follows Hécart), is a Hainault word; the usual form is F., Span., Ital., and Port. falbala, a word traced back to the 17th century (Brachet). Origin unknown.

FURBISH, to trim. (F., — O. H. G.) In Shak. Rich. II, i. 3. 76; Macb. i. 2. 32. — O. F. fourbiss, stem of pres. pt. of fourbir, 'to furbish, polish;' Cot. — O. H. G. furbjan, M. H. G. vürben, to purify, clean, rub bright. β. Prob. from the Teut. base FU, to purify = ✓ PU, to purify. See Purge, Pure. [†]

FURCATE, forked. (L.) The sb. furcation occurs in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 9. § 4. — Lat. furcatus, forked. — Lat. furca, a fork. See Fork. Der. furcat-ion.

FURFURACEOUS, scurfy. (L.) Scarce. Merely Lat. furfuraceus, like bran. — Lat. furfur, bran; a reduplicated form, of uncertain origin.

FURIOUS, full of fury. (F., — L.) 'Was in thyself fekel and furious;' Henryson, Compt. of Creseide, l. 136. — O. F. furieux, 'furious;' Cot. (older form furieux). — O. F. furie; see Fury. Der. furious-ly, furious-ness.

FURL, to roll up a sail. (F., — Arab.) A contracted form of an older furdle. 'Nor to urge the thwart enclosure and furling of flowers;' Sir T. Browne, Cyrus' Garden, c. iii. § 15; spelt fardling in Wilkin's edition. 'The colours furdled [furl'd] up, the drum is mute;' John Taylor's Works, ed. 1630; cited in Nares, ed. Halliwell. 'Farthel, to furl;' Kersey, ed. 1715. β. Furdle and farthel are corruptions of fardle, to pack up (see Nares); from the sb. fardel, a package, burden. See further under Fardel.

FURLONG, one-eighth of a mile. (E.) M. E. furlong, four-long; P. Plowman, B. v. 5; Chaucer, C. T. 11484. — A. S. furlang, Luke, xxiv. 13. The lit. sense is 'furrow-long,' or the length of a furrow. It thus came to mean the length of a field, and to be used as a measure of length. Cf. 'And wolde nat neyhele him by nyne londes lengthe' = and would not approach him by the length of nine lands (i. e. fields); P. Plowman, B. xx. 58. — A. S. furh, a furrow; and lang, long. See Furrow and Long.

FURLOUGH, leave of absence. (Du., — Scand.) 'Capt. Irwin goes by the next packet-boat to Holland, he has got a furlow from his father for a year;' Chesterfield's Misc. Works, vol. iv. let. 42. Spelt furlough in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The gh was probably once sounded as f. [More likely to be Dutch than Danish; we borrowed some military terms from Holland at one time; see Gascoigne's Fruits of Warre.] — Du. verlof, leave, furlough; cf. Dan. forlov, leave, furlough; Swed. förlöf; G. verlaub. β. But the Du. word seems to have been borrowed from Scandinavian; moreover, the Dan. has not only forlov, but orlov, and the latter appears to be the older form. γ. These forms differ in the prefix; Du. ver- = Dan. for- = E. for-; see For. But Dan. orlov is the Icel. orlof, where the prefix or- = Goth. us, out. δ. The syllable lof is the Icel. lof, signifying (1) praise, (2) leave; cognate with G. lob (= -laub), praise. The Teutonic base is LUB (= ✓ LUBH), which appears again in Lat. lubet, it pleases. From the same base is E. lief, dear. See Lief.

FURMENTY, FURMETY; see Frumenty.

FURNACE, oven. (F., — L.) M. E. forneis; Chau. C. T. 14169. — O. F. fornaise, later fournaise, 'a furnace;' Cot. — Lat. fornacem, acc. of fornax, an oven. — Lat. fornus, furnus, an oven; with suffix -ac-; allied to Lat. fornus, warm; as also to Russ. goriele, to burn, glow, and Skt. gharma, glow, warmth; see Curtius, ii. 99. See Glow. ¶ I doubt the connection with E. warm.

FURNISH, to fit up, equip. (F., — O. H. G.) Common in Shak.; see Merch. of Ven. ii. 4. 9. — O. F. fourniss, stem of pres. part. of fournir, 'to furnish;' Cot. Formerly spelt fornir, furnir (Burguy); which are corruptions of fornir, furnir. The form fornir occurs in Prov., and is also spelt fromir, which is the older spelling. — O. H. G. frumjan, to perform, provide, procure, furnish. — O. H. G. fruma (M. H. G. vrum, vrume), utility, profit, gain; cf. mod. G. fromm, good. From the same root as E. former; see Former. Der. furnish-ing, furnish-ure; also furni-ture (Spenser, F. Q. v. 3. 4), from F. fourniture, 'furniture;' Cot. [†]

FURROW, a slight trench, wrinkle. (E.) M. E. forwe, P. Plowman, B. vi. 106; older form forwe, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. met. 5. l. 4959. — A. S. furh, a furrow; Ælfric's Gloss, l. 17. The dat. pl. furum is in Ælfric, tr. of Boethius, v. 3; lib. i. met. 6. + Icel. for, a drain. + O. H. G. furh, M. H. G. vurh, G. furche, a furrow. Cf. Lat. porca, a ridge between two furrows. Root uncertain. Der. furrow, verb. ¶ The change from final -h to -gh, -ue, and -ow is quite regular; so with borrow, sorrow. [†]

FURTHER, comparative of fore. (E.) M. E. furðer, Ancrén Riwele, p. 228; forþer, ferþer; Chaucer, C. T. 36, 4119. — A. S. furður, furðor, further; Grein, i. 358. — A. S. for-e, adv. before; with comp. suffix -ðor, -ður, answering to Goth. -ihar in an-ihar, other. + Du. verder, vorders, adv. further, besides; from vor, with suffix -der (= -dar). + O. H. G. furdur, furdor, furdor; from O. H. G. fur-i, before, with suffix -dar. ¶ Generally said to be a comparative from forth; but this explanation breaks down in Dutch and German. And cf. Gk. ὑπό-ρεψ, a comparative form from ὑπό. The suffix is Goth. -thar = Gk. -rep = Skt. -tara, just as in After, q.v. Der. further, verb, from A. S. fyrðran, gefyrðran, Grein (cf. Du. vorderen, G. fördern); further-ance, a hybrid compound, with F. suffix, spelt further-ance in Tyndal's Works, p. 49, col. 1; further-more, Chaucer, C. T. 9316; further-most; further-er, Gower, C. A. iii. 111; further-est, spelt forhest in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 6, l. 3918. The superl. furtherest is, in fact, a mistaken form, on the false assumption that fur-ther is to be divided as further-er. The true superl. form of fore is fir-st; see First. Far is a different word.

FURTIVE, thief-like, stealthy. (F., -L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. O. F. furtif, m. furtive, f. 'filching, theevish'; Cot. - Lat. furtivus, stolen, secret. - Lat. furtum, theft. - Lat. furari, to steal. - Lat. fur, a thief. + Gk. φύπ, a thief; connected with φύπειν, to bear, carry off. - √ BHAR, to bear. See Bear. Der. furtive-ly.

FURY, rage, passion. (F., -L.) M. E. furie, Chaucer, C. T. 11262. - O. F. furie, 'fury'; Cot. - Lat. furia, madness. - Lat. furere, to rage; cf. Skt. bhūranya, to be active. - √ BHUR, to move about quickly. Der. furi-ous, q. v., furi-ous-ly, furi-ous-ness.

FURZE, the whin or gorse. (E.) M. E. firse, also frie, Wyclif, Isaiah, lv. 13, Mic. vii. 4. - A. S. fyr, Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, lib. iii. met. 1; c. xxiii. + Gael. preas, a briar, bush, shrub. ¶ As the E. f answers to Celtic p, I have little hesitation in linking the above words. It follows that furze and briar are doublets; see Briar. [*] FUSCOUS, brown, dingy. (L.) 'Sad and fuscous colours'; Burke, On the Sublime, s. 16. - Lat. fuscus, dark, dusky; by change of -us into -ous, as in arduous, strenuous. β. Most likely fuscus stands for fur-seus, and is allied to furus, brown, and to E. brown. See Brown. See Curtius, i. 378.

FUSE (1), to melt by heat. (L.) In Johnson; but the verb is quite modern, and really due to the far older words (in E.), viz. fus-ible (Chaucer, C. T. 16325), fus-il, i. e. capable of being melted (Milton, P. L. xi. 573), fus-ion (Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 11); all founded upon Lat. fundus. - Lat. fundus, pp. of fundere, to pour, melt; from the base FUD. + Gk. χέειν, for χέfew (base χv), to pour. + Goth. giutan, to pour (base GUT). All from √ GHU, to pour; of which the extended form GHUD (= Goth. GUT) appears in Latin. Der. fus-ible, from O. F. fusible, 'fusible' (Cot.), from Late Lat. *fusibilis, not recorded in Ducange; fus-i-bili-ty; fus-ion, from F. form of Lat. fundionem, acc. of fundio, a melting; fus-il (Milton, as above), from Lat. fundilis, molten, fluid. ¶ From the same root are found (2), con-found, con-fuse, dis-fuse, ef-fusion, in-fuse, pro-fusion, re-fund, suf-fuse, trans-fuse; fu-ile; also chyme, chyle, gush, gut.

FUSE (2), a tube with combustible materials for discharging shells, &c. (F., -L.) Also spelt fusee, and even fusel. Fuse is short for fusee, and fusee is a corruption of fusel, or (more correctly) fusil, which is the oldest form of the word. In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715, we find: 'Fuse, Fusee, or Fusel, a pipe filled with wild fire, and put into the touch-hole of a bomb.' Also: 'Fusee or Fusil, a kind of short musket.' See further under Fusil (1).

FUSEE (1), a fuse or match. (F., -L.) A corruption of Fusil (1), q. v. See the quotation under Fuse (2).

FUSEE (2), a spindle in a watch. (F., -L.) 'Fusee or Fuzy of a watch, that part about which the chain or string is wound'; Kersey, ed. 1715. - O. F. fusee, 'a spool-ful or spindle-ful of thread, yarn, &c.'; Cot. - Low Lat. fusata, a spindle-ful of thread; orig. fem. pp. of Low Lat. fusare, to take a spindle. - Lat. fundus, a spindle. β. Prob. allied to Lat. funda, Gk. σφενδύνη, a sling; and, further, to Skt. spandana, a quivering, throbbing (whence the sense of jerking), and to Skt. spand, to throb. - √ SPAD, to tremble, vibrate, swing. See Curtius, i. 306; Fick, i. 831. ¶ Observe the change in meaning, which has reverted from the 'spindle-ful' to the spindle itself. Der. fusil (2), q. v.

FUSIL (1), a light musket. (F., -L.) The name has been transferred from the steel or fire-lock to the gun itself. In Kersey's Dict.; see Fuse (2). - O. F. fusil, 'a fire-steel for a tinder-box'; Cot.; the same word as Ital. foctile, a steel for striking fire. - Low Lat. foctile, a steel for kindling fire. - Lat. focus, a hearth. See Focus. Der. fusil-ier, fusil-er.

FUSIL (2), a spindle, in heraldry. (L.) Explained in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. *fundillus, not found, but formed as a dimin. from fundus, a spindle; spelt fundillus in Ducange. See Fusee (2).

FUSIL (3), easily molten. (L.) See Fuse (1).

FUSS, haste, flurry. (E.) The sb. corresponding to M. E. fus, anxious, willing, ready, eager. 'And fus to follshenn heore wille' = and ready to follow their wish; Ormulum, 9065. - A. S. fús [for funs], prompt, quick; Cædmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 10, l. 10. + Icel. fúss, eager for, willing. + O. H. G. funs, ready, willing. β. Hence the true form is funs; and this again is for fund-s, from A. S. fundian, to strive after, Grein, i. 357. And again, fundian is a derivative of

A. S. findan, to find. Fick, iii. 173. ¶ Thus fuss is really 'anxiety to find.' See Find. Der. fuss-y, fuss-i-ness. [†]

FUST (1), to become mouldy or rusty. (F., -L.) 'To fust in us unused'; Hamlet, iv. 4. 39. 'I mowld or fust as corne or bread does, je moisis'; Palsgrave. Made from the form fusted, which is a lit. translation of O. F. fusté, 'fusty, tasting of the cask, smelling of the vessel'; Cot. - O. F. fuste, 'a cask'; Cot.; the same word as O. F. fust, 'any staffe, stake, stocke, stump, trunk, or log; . . . also fustiness' id. [The cask was so named from its resemblance to the trunk of a tree.] - Lat. fustem, acc. of fustis, a thick knobbed stick, cudgel; connected with Lat. *fundere, to strike, used in the compounds defendere, offendere; cf. infensus, infestus. - √ DHAN, to strike; whence also Gk. θεύειν, to strike. ¶ From the same root we have de-fend, of-fend, in-fest; also dint, dent. Der. fus-ty, fust-i-ness; and see below.

FUST (2), the shaft of a column. (F., -L.) 'Fust, the shaft, or body of a pillar'; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - O. F. fust, a stump, trunk; Cot. - Lat. fustem; as in the case of the word above. Der. fustig-ate, q. v.

FUSTIAN, a kind of coarse cloth. (F., -Ital., -Low L., -Egypt.) In early use. M. E. fustane. 'The mes-hakele of medeme fustane' = the mass-cloth [made] of common fustian; O. E. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 162. Also fustian, Chaucer, C. T. 75. - O. F. fustaine; Roquefort, Cot. - Ital. fustagno. - Low Lat. fustaneum, fustanium. - Arab. fustát, another name of Cairo, in Egypt; whence the stuff first came. The Arab. fustát also means 'a tent made of goat's hair.' See Rich. Arab. Dict. p. 1090. ¶ Introduced into French in the middle ages, through Genoese commerce, from Ital. fustagno (Brachet).

FUSTIGATE, to cudgel. (L.) 'Fustigating him for his faults'; Fuller's Worthies, Westmorland (R.). 'Six fustigations'; Fox, Martyrs, p. 609 (R.). - Late Lat. fustigare, to cudgel (White and Riddle). - Lat. fust, base of fustis, a cudgel; and -ig-, weakened form from agere, to drive. See Fust (2). Der. fustigat-ion.

FUSTY, mouldy. In Shak. Cor. i. 9. 7. See Fust (1).

FUTILE, trifling, vain. (F., -L.) Orig. signifying 'pouring forth,' esp. pouring forth vain talk, talkative. 'As for talkers and futile persons, they are commonly vain'; Bacon, Essay VI. - O. F. futile, 'light, vain'; Cot. - Lat. futiles, that which easily pours forth; also, vain, empty, futile. The u is long, because futiles stands for fud-tilis, formed with suffix -tilis from the base fud-; cf. fudi, pt. t. of fundere, to pour. The base fud- is an extension of the base fu-, to pour. - √ GHU, to pour; see Fuse. Der. futile-ly, futil-i-ty.

FUTTOCKS, certain timbers in a ship. (E.) 'Futtocks, the compassing timbers in a ship, that make the breadth of it'; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Origin uncertain; it is thought to be a corruption of foot-hooks. The first syllable is, no doubt, the prov. E. fut, a foot. ¶ Called foot-stocks in Florio's Ital. Dict., s. v. stamine. If hence corrupted, the corruption is considerable.

FUTURE, about to be. (F., -L.) M. E. future; Chaucer, C. T. 16343. - O. F. futur, m. future, f. 'future'; Cot. - Lat. futurus, about to be; future part. from base fu-, to be; cf. fu-i, I was. - √ BHU, to be. See Be. Der. futur-i-ty, Shak. Oth. iii. 4. 117; future-ly, Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1, 174 (Leopold Shakspeare).

FUZZ-BALL, a spongy fungus. (E.) Spelt fusseballe in Minshew, ed. 1627. A fuzz-ball is a light, spongy ball resembling (at first sight) a mushroom. Cf. prov. E. fuzzy, light and spongy; fozy, spongy (Halliwell). Of English origin. Cf. Du. voos, spongy. Perhaps also allied to Icel. faushr, a rotten dry log. ¶ Also called puckfiste, as in Cotgrave (s. v. vesse de loup); but this is from foist.

G.

GABARDINE, GABERDINE, a coarse frock for men. (Span., -C.) In Shak. Merch. i. 3. 113. - Span. gabardina, a coarse frock. Cf. Ital. gavardina (Florio); and O. F. galvardine, 'a gaberdine'; Cot. An extended form from Span. gaban, a great coat with hood and close sleeves; cf. Ital. gabano, 'a shepherds cloake' (Florio), Ital. gabanello, 'a gaberdine, or shepherds cloake' (id.); O. F. gaban, 'a cloake of felt for rainy weather, a gaberdine'; Cot. Connected with Span. cabaza, a large cloak with hood and sleeves, and Span. cabaña, a cabin, hut; and of Celtic origin. See Cabin, and Cape (1).

GABBLE, to chatter, prattle. (Scand.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 356. Formed, as a frequentative, with suffix -le, from M. E. gabben, to talk idly, once in common use; see Chaucer, C. T. 15072; P. Plowman, B. iii. 179. The M. E. gabben is esp. used in the sense 'to lie,' or 'to delude.' Of Scand. origin; the A. S. gabban, due to Sommer, being unauthorised. - Icel. gabba, to mock; gabb, mocking, mockery. Cf. Swed. gabb, mockery. β. Of imitative origin; and probably allied to Irish cab, gob, the mouth; cf. Irish cabach, Gael. gobach, garrulous. See Gape, Gobble; and compare Babble.

 ¶ Otherwise in Fick, iii. 101. Der. gabli-er, gabbli-ng.
Doublet, jabber.

GABION, a bottomless basket filled with earth, as a defence against the fire of an enemy. (F., -Ital., -L.) 'Gabions, great baskets 5 or 6 foot high, which being filled with earth, are placed upon batteries;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Also found in Minshew. -O. F. gabion, 'a gabion'; Cot. -Ital. gabbione, a gabion, large cage; augmentative form of gabbia, a cage. The Ital. gabbia also means 'the cage or top of the mast of a ship whereunto the shrouds are fastened' (Florio); the Span. gavia is used in the same sense. The Ital. gabbia, in the latter sense, is also spelt gaggia, which is the same word with F. cage and E. cage. β. All from Lat. cauea, a hollow place, cage, den, coop. -Lat. cauus, hollow. See Cage, Cave, and Gaol. ¶ Thus gabion is the augmentative of cage.

Der. gabionn-ade (F. gabionnade, Cot.; from Ital. gabionata, an entrenchment formed of gabions).

GABLE, a peak of a house-top. (F., -M. H. G., -C.) M. E. gable, Chaucer, C. T. 3573; P. Plowman, B. iii. 49. -O. F. gable, a rare word cited by Strattmann; cf. Low Lat. gabulum, a gable, front of a building; Ducange. -M. H. G. gabel, gabel (G. gabel), a fork; cf. M. H. G. gebel, gibel (G. giebel), a gable; O. H. G. kapala, kabala, a fork; gipil, gibil, a gable; + Icel. gaff, a gable. + Dan. gavl, a gable. + Swed. gafvel, a gable; gaffel, a fork. + Mæso-Goth. gibla, a gable, pinnacle; Luke, iv. 9. + Du. gevel, a gable. β. The Teutonic form is GABALA (Fick, iii. 100); apparently a dimin. form from a base GAB; but the whole word appears to be borrowed from Celtic. -Irish gabhal, a fork, gable; Gael. gobhal, W. gaff, a fork. See Gaff. Der. gable-end; and see Gaff.

GABY, a simpleton. (Scand.) A dialectal word; see Halliwell. -Icel. gapi, a rash, reckless man; cf. gapamudr (lit. gape-mouthed), a gaping, heedless fellow. -Icel. gapa, to gape; cf. Dan. gape, to gape. See Gape.

GAD (1), a wedge of steel, goad. (Scand.) 'A gad of steel;' Titus Andron. iv. 1. 103. Also 'upon the gad,' i. e. upon the goad, suddenly; K. Lear, i. 2. 26. 'Gadde of Steele, quarreau dacier;' Palsgrave. M. E. gad, a goad or whip; 'bondemen with her gadde' = husbandmen with their goads or whips; Havelok, 1016. -Icel. gaddr (for gadr), a goad, spike, sting, cognate with E. goad, yard. See Goad, Yard. Der. gad-fly, i. e. sting-fly; and see Gad (2).

GAD (2), to ramble idly. (Scand.) 'Where have you been gadding?' Romeo, iv. 2. 16. 'Gadde abrode, vagari;' Levins, 7. 47. The orig. sense was to drive, or drive about. -Icel. gadda, to goad. -Icel. gaddr, a goad. See above. ¶ I see no connection with M. E. gadeling, an associate, for which see Gather. [+]

GAFF, a light fishing-spear; also, a sort of boom. (F., -C.) The gaff of a ship takes its name from the fork-shaped end which rests against the mast. 'Gaff, an iron hook to pull great fishes into a ship; also, an artificial spur for a cock;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. -O. F. gaffe, 'an iron hook wherewith sea-men pull great fishes into their ships;' Cot. Cf. Span. and Port. gafa, a hook, gaff. β. Of Celtic origin. -Irish gaf, gafa, a hook; with which cf. Irish gabhal, a fork, gabla, a spear, lance; Welsh caff, a grasp, grapple, a sort of dunghill; gafael, a hold, grasp, gaff, a fork. See further under Gable.

β. The root appears in Gael. and Irish gabh, to take, receive, Welsh cafael, to hold, get, grasp; cf. Lat. capere, to take, which is cognate with E. have. -✓ KAP, to take, grasp. Der. gavelock, a spear (W. gaflach), now obsolete; jau-e-lin, q. v. [+]

GAFFER, an old man, grandfather. (Hybrid; F. and E.) 'And gaffer madman;' Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain, iii. 5. Similarly, gammer is a familiar name for an old woman, as in the old play of 'Gammer Gurton's Needle.' The words are corruptions of gramfer and grammer, which are the West of England forms of grandfather and grandmother; see Halliwell. ¶ Compare gomman and gommer, which are similar corruptions of good man and good mother; also given in Halliwell. See Grandfather and Grandmother. For loss of r, see Gooseberry.

GAG, to stop the mouth forcibly, to silence. (C. ?) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 94; v. 384. M. E. gaggen, to suffocate; Prompt. Parv. -W. cegio, to mouth, to choke; ceg, the mouth, throat, an opening. Possibly related to Irish gaggach, stammering; but this is not clear. Der. gag, sb.

GAGE (1), a pledge. (F., -L.) M. E. gage, King Alisaunder, 904. -F. gage, 'a gage, pawne, pledge;' Cot. A verbal sb. -F. gager, 'to gage, engage;' id. -Low Lat. wadiare, for wadiare, to pledge. -Low Lat. uadium, a pledge. -Lat. uadi-, crude form of uas, gen. uadis, a pledge; cognate with A. S. wed, a pledge. See Wed, Wager, Wage. Der. gage, vb.; en-gage, dis-en-gage.

GAGE (2), to gauge; see Gauge.

GAILETY, mirth. (F., -G.) 'Those gayities how doth she slight;' Habington, Castara, pt. iii (R.); the 1st ed. (in 3 parts) appeared in 1640. -O. F. gayeté, 'mirth, glee;' Cot. -O. F. gay, 'merry;' id. See Gay.

GAIN (1), profit, advantage. (Scand.) M. E. gain, gein; spelt gain, Chaucer, C. T. 536, ed. Tyrwhitt (but the reading is bad, not agreeing with the best MSS.); gein, St. Marherete, ed. Cockayne, p. 18, l. 3; gajhen, Ormulum, 13923. -Icel. gagn, gain, advantage, use. + Swed. gagn, benefit, profit. + Dan. gavn, gain.

β. Not found in German; but the root-verb ga-geigan, to gain, occurs in Mæso-Gothic, Mk. viii. 36, Lu. ix. 25, 1 Cor. ix. 19; suggesting a base GAG, not found elsewhere.

γ. Hence was formed the (obsolete) M. E. verb gainen, to profit, be of use, avail, gen. used impersonally; see Chaucer, C. T. 1178, &c. This answers to Icel. and Swed. gagna, to help, avail, Dan. gavne, to benefit. See further below. Der. gain-ful, gain-ful-ly, gain-ful-ness, gain-less, gain-less-ness.

GAIN (2), to acquire, get, win. (Scand.) Really a derivative of the sb. above, and independent of the F. gagner, with which it was easily confused, owing to the striking similarity in form and sense. [Thus Cotgrave gives 'gaigner, to gain.'] Not in early use. 'Yea, though he gaine and cram his purse with cronnes;' Gascoigne, Fruits of Warre, st. 69. That Gascoigne took the verb from the sb. is evident; for he has just above, in st. 66: 'To get a gaine by any trade or kinde.' See Gain (1). β. Still, the F. word probably influenced the use of the pre-existing E. one; and superseded the old use of the M. E. gainen, to profit. ¶ The etymology of F. gagner, O. F. gaigner (Cotgrave), gaagnier, gaaignier (Burguy) = Ital. guadagnare, is from the O. H. G. *weidanan, not found, but equivalent to O. H. G. weiden, to pasture, which was the orig. sense, and is still preserved in the F. sb. gagnage, pasturage, pasture-land. -O. H. G. weida (G. weide), pasturage, pasture-ground; cf. M. H. G. weiden; to pasture, hunt. + Icel. veidr, hunting, fishing, the chase; veida, to catch, to hunt. + A. S. wādū, a wandering, journey, a hunt; Grein, ii. 636. Cf. Lat. uenari (= uenerari), to hunt. Perhaps from ✓ WI, to go, drive; cf. Skt. vā, to go, approach, sometimes used as a substitute for aj, to drive. See Fick, iii. 302; i. 430.

GAINLY, suitable, gracious. (Scand.) Obsolete, except in ungainly, now meaning awkward. In Allitt. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 83; B. 728. Formed, with suffix -ly, from Icel. gegn, ready, serviceable, kind, good. See Ungainly.

GAINSAY, to speak against. (E.) In the A. V. Luke, xxi. 15. M. E. geinseien, a rare word. 'That thei not gein-seie my sonde' = that they may not gainsay my message; Cursor Mundi, 5769 (Trinity MS.). The Cotton MS. reads: 'þat þai noght sai agains mi sand.' β. The latter part of the word is E. say, q. v. The prefix is the A. S. gegn, against, as occurring in the sb. gegnwilde, a speech against anything; better known in the comp. ongegn, ongean, signifying again or against. See Again. Der. gainsay-er, A. V. Titus, i. 9; gainsay-ing, A. V. Acts, x. 29.

GAIRISH, GARISH, gaudy; see Garish.

GAIT, manner of walking. (Scand.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 102. A particular use of M. E. gate, a way. 'And goth him forth, and in his gate' = and goes forth, and in his way; Gower, C. A. iii. 196. -Icel. gata, a way, path, road; Swed. gata, a street; Dan. gade, a street. + Goth. gatuwa, a street. + G. gasse, a street. See Gate. ¶ It is clear that the word was thus used, because popularly connected with the verb to go; at the same time, the word is not really derived from that verb, but from the verb to get.

GAITER, a covering for the ankle. (F., -M. H. G.) Modern. Not in Johnson's Dict. -F. guêtre, a gaiter; formerly spelt gwestre. 'Gwestres, startups, brach shoes, or gamashes for country folkles;' Cot. Marked by Brachet as 'of unknown origin.' β. However, the form of the word shews it to be of Teutonic origin; and prob. from the same source as M. H. G. wester, a child's chrisom-cloth (G. westerhemd) and the Goth. wasti, clothing; from ✓ WAS, to clothe; see Vesture, Vest.

GALA, pomp, festivity. (F., -Ital.) Perhaps only in the phrase 'a gala-day.' Modern; not in Johnson. -F. gala, borrowed from Ital. gala, ornament, finery, festive attire. Cf. Ital. di gala, merrily; closely connected with Ital. galante, gay, lively. See Gallant. Der. gala-day; = F. jour de gala, Span. and Port. día de gala.

GALAXY, the 'milky way' in the sky; a splendid assemblage. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'See yonder, lo, the galaxie which that men clepe the milky way;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 428. -O. F. galaxie, 'the milky way;' Cot. -Lat. galaxiam, acc. of galaxias. -Gk. γαλαξίας, the milky way. -Gk. γαλακτ-, for γαλακτ-, stem of γάλα, milk. Certainly allied to Lat. lact-, stem of lac, milk; root uncertain.

GALE, a strong wind. (Scand. ?) In Shak. Temp. v. 314. To be explained from Dan. gal, mad, furious; the Norweg. galen is particularly used of storm and wind, as ein galen storm, eit galat veer, a furious storm (Aasen). We say, 'it blows a gale.' Cf. Icel. gola, a breeze, fjall-gola, a breeze from the fells. β. The Icel. galinn, furious, is from gala, to sing, enchant; there may be an allusion to witches. Cf. galdrahríð, a storm raised by spells (Wedgwood).

See Gallant. ¶ Hardly from Irish gal, vapour.

GALEATED, helmeted. (L.) Botanical.—Lat. galeatus, helmeted.—Lat. galea, a helmet.

GALL (1), bile, bitterness. (E.) M. E. galle; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 155.—O. Northumb. galla, A. S. gealla; Matt. xxvii. 34. + Du. gal. + Icel. gall. + Swed. galla. + Dan. galde (with excrement d). + G. galle. + Lat. fel. + Gk. χολή. β. From the same root as Gk. χλωρός, greenish, Lat. helvus, yellowish, and E. yellow and green; so that gall was named from its yellowish colour; Curtius, i. 250. See Green, Gold, and Yellow. Der. gall-bladder.

GALL (2), to rub a sore place, to vex. (F.,—L.) 'Let the galled jade wince'; Hamlet, iii. 2. 253. M. E. gallen. 'The horse . . . was . . . galled upon the back'; Gower, C. A. ii. 46.—O. F. galler, 'to gall, fret, itch, rub'; Cot.—O. F. galle, 'a galling, fretting, itching of the skin'; id.—mod. F. gale, a scab on fruit, properly a hardness of skin, and thence a cutaneous disorder which makes the skin hard.—Lat. callus, hard thick skin; 'found in sense of the itch in medieval Latin'; Brachet. See Callous. Der. gall, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 6522.

GALL (3), GALL-NUT, a vegetable excrescence produced by insects. (F.,—L.) In Shak.: 'Though ink be made of gall'; Cymb. i. 1. 101.—O. F. galle, 'the fruit called a gall'; Cot.—Lat. galla, an oak-apple, gall nut.

GALLANT, gay, splendid, brave, courteous. (F.,—M. H. G.) 'Good and gallant ship'; Shak. Temp. v. 237. 'Like young lusty galantes'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 105 (R).—O. F. gallant; Cotgrave gives 'gallant homme, a gallant, goodly fellow'; properly spelt galant (with one l), as in mod. F. β. Galant is the pres. part. of O. F. galer, to rejoice; Cotgrave has: 'galler le bon temps, to make merry, to pass the time pleasantly'.—O. F. gale, show, mirth, festivity; the same word as Ital., Span., and Port. gala, ornament, festive attire. γ. Of Teutonic origin; from a base GAL, which appears in Goth. gailjan, to make to rejoice, 2 Cor. ii. 2; A. S. gál, Du. geil, lascivious, luxurious; O. Sax. gél, mirthful; Icel. gáll, a fit of gaiety; M. H. G. geil, mirthful, mirth; M. H. G. geilen, to make merry. It is a little difficult to tell the exact source of the F. word; it is gen. referred to the M. H. G. δ. The Icel. galinn, enchanted, mad, voluptuous, is pp. of gala, to crow, sing; and leads us to the Teutonic base GAL, to sing, as in the E. nightingale, q.v. See Gale. Der. gallant, sb., whence also gallant, vb.; gallant-ly, gallant-ness; also gallant-ry (Spectator, no. 4) from O. F. gallanterie, 'gallant-ness', Cot. Also see gala, gall-on, gall-ery. [†] GALLEON, a large galley. (Span.) Cotgrave explains O. F. gallion as 'a gallion, an armada, a great ship of warre'; but the word is Spanish.—Span. galeon, a galleon, Spanish armed ship of burden; formed, with augmentative suffix -on, from Low Lat. galea, a galley. See Galley.

GALLERY, a balcony, long covered passage. (F.,—Ital.) 'The long galleries'; Surrey, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, b. ii. l. 691.—O. F. gallerie, galerie, 'a gallerie, or long room to walke in; also mirth, glee, good sport'; Cot.—Ital. galleria, a gallery (Brachet).—Low Lat. galeria, a long portico, gallery; Ducange. β. Uncertain; perhaps from Low Lat. galare, to rejoice, amuse oneself; the orig. sense of Low Lat. galeria being, probably, a place of amusement, according to Cotgrave's definition. See Gallant, and Gala.

GALLEY, a long, low-built ship. (F.) In early use. M. E. galie; King Horn, ed. Lumby, 185.—O. F. galie (Burguy); gallée (Cotgrave).—Low Lat. galea, a galley. Of unknown origin; see Diez. Der. galley-slave; see galle-on, galli-as, galli-ot.

GALLIARD, a lively dance. (Span.—C.?) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 127, 137.—Span. gallarda [in which ll is pronounced as ly], a kind of lively Spanish dance.—Span. gallardo, pleasant, gay, lively. β. Of uncertain origin; Diez rejects a connection with gala and gallant (Span. galante) on account of the double l and the F. form gaillard. The O. F. gaillard meant 'valiant' or 'bold'; perhaps of Celtic origin. Cf. Bret. galloud, power, galloudek, strong; Corn. galludoc, able; Irish and Gael. galach, valiant, brave; W. gallad, able, gall, energy. Cf. Lith. gali, I am able.

GALLIAS, a sort of galley. (F.,—It.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 380.—O. F. galeace, 'a galleass'; Cot.—Ital. galeazza, a heavy, low-built galley.—Ital. and Low Lat. galea, a galley. See Galley. ¶ On the termination -ace, see Outlass.

GALLIGASKINS, large hose or trousers. (F.,—Ital.) α. Cotgrave has: 'Garguesques, a fashion of strait Venitians without cod-peeces.' Also: 'Greguesques, slops, gregs, gallogascoins, Venitians.' Also: 'Gregues, wide slops, gregs, gallogascoins, Venitians, great Gascon or Spanish hose.' Also: 'Gregarques, the same as Gregeois, Grecian, Greekish.' β. Here it is clear that Garguesques is a corruption of Greguesques; that Gregarques originally meant Greekish; and that Gregues (whence obs. E. gregs) is a mere contraction of Greguesques. γ. And further, Greguesques is borrowed from Ital. Grechesco, Greekish, a form given by Florio; which is derived (with suffix -esco=E. -ish) from Ital. Greco, Greek. δ. Finally, it seems probable that gallogascoins is nothing but a derivative of Ital. Grechesco, a name given (as shewn by the evidence) to a particular kind of hose or breeches originally worn at Venice. The corruption seems to have been due to a mistaken notion on the part of some of the wearers of galligaskins, that they came, not from Venice, but from Gascony. ¶ This suggestion is due to Wedgwood; it would seem that galligaskins=garisgascans=garguesquans; where the suffix -an is the same as in Greci-an, &c.

GALLINACEOUS, pertaining to a certain order of birds. (L.) Modern. Englished from Lat. gallinaceus, belonging to poultry. Formed, with suffix -ac, from Lat. gallina, a hen.—Lat. gallus, a cock. Root uncertain; possibly from ✓ GAR, to cry aloud; Curtius, i. 218.

GALLIOT, a small galley. (F.) M. E. galiote, Minot's Poems, Expedition of Edw. III to Brabant, l. 81 (Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 129).—O. F. galiote, 'a galliot'; Cot.—Low Lat. galeota, a small galley; dimin. of Low Lat. galea, a galley. Cf. Ital. galeotta, a galliot. See Galley.

GALLIPOT, a small glazed earthen pot. (Du.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Nice Valour, iii. 1. 43. A corruption of O. Du. gleypot. 'Gleywerck, glazed work; een gleypot, a gallipot'; Sewel's Du. Dict. Similarly earthen tiles were called galley-tiles. Wedgwood quotes from Stow: 'About the year 1570, I. Andries and I. Janson, potters, came from Antwerp and settled in Norwich, where they followed their trade, making galley-tiles and apothecaries vessels' [gallipots]. β. Again, Du. gley (O. Du. gleye, shining potter's clay, Hexham) appears to be N. Friesic glây, shining (Outzen), cognate with G. glatt, polished, smooth, and with E. glad. See Glad and Pot.

GALLON, a measure holding 4 quarts. (F.) M. E. galon, galun, galoun; P. Plowman, B. v. 224, 343; Chaucer, C. T. 16973. Spelt galun in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1123.—O. F. gallon, jallon, jalon, a gallon; Roquefort:—Low Lat. galona (also galo), an English measure for liquids; Ducange. β. The suffix -on is augmentative; and a shorter form appears in mod. F. jale, a bowl, which evidently stands for an older form gale, just as jalon is for galon. Thus the sense is 'a large bowl'. γ. Of unknown origin; the Lat. gaulus (itself from Gk. γαῦλος, a milk-pail, a bucket) has been suggested; but the diphthong is against it. See also Gill (3).

GALLOON, a kind of lace or narrow ribbon. (F.,—Span.) The compound galloon-laces occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, v. 4. 46. Cotgrave has: 'Galon, galloon-lace.'—F. galon, as in Cotgrave (like E. balloon from F. ballon).—Span. galon, galloon, lace; or any kind of finery for festive occasions.—Span. gala, parade, finery, court-dress; the suffix -on being augmentative, as in balloon. See Gala. ¶ We find also Ital. gallone, galloon; but it does not seem to be an old word, being omitted in Florio's Dict.

GALLOP, to ride very fast. (F.,—O. Flemish.) M. E. galopen (with one l); King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 461. 'Styll he galoped forth right'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 140. We also find the form walopen, in the Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, 4827 (and note on p. 259); and the pres. pt. walopande, Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 2827.—O. F. galoper, to gallop; of which an older form must have been waloper, as shewn by the derivative walopin in Roquefort, spelt galopin in mod. F. Of Flemish origin.—O. Flemish walop, a gallop. Delfortrie, in his Analogie des Langues Flamande, Allemande, et Anglaise, p. 379, cites the line: 'Ende loopen enen hogen walop'—and run at a fast gallop, from the Roman van Walewein, l. 1517.

β. Mr. Wedgwood is certainly right in saying that the original signification of wallop is the boiling of a pot; it is retained in the familiar E. potwalloper, a pot-boiler, for which see Webster's Dict. 'The name is taken from the sound made by a horse galloping compared to the *wallop*ing or boiling of a pot'; Wedgwood. γ. The explanation of the suffix is not quite clear, but perhaps it may be the Flem. and Du. op, E. up. δ. However, the word is a mere extension from the O. Low G. wallen, to boil, amply vouched for by the A. S. weallan, O. Friesic walla, O. Sax. wallan, to boil; cf. Du. wellen, E. well, to spout up, spring up (as water). From the Teut. base WAL, to turn; and the Aryan ✓ WAR, to wind, turn; whence also Lat. wol-vere, to roll, Skt. virā, a turn; E. wal-k (q.v.); and esp. note Skt. valg, to gallop, to go by leaps, to bounce, to move in different ways, to fluctuate; and Skt. val, to move to and fro. ¶ The existence of Skt. valg, to gallop, suggests that the final -op may be a mere corruption of a final guttural added to the base, just as in E. wal-k. The usual derivation of gallop from Goth. gahlaupjan, to leap (=E. leap), is clearly wrong. Der. gallop-ade.

GALLOW, to terrify. (E.) In Shak. King Lear, iii. 2. 44. Prov. E. (Somerset.) gally.—A. S. galwian, in the comp. agalwian, to astonish; 'þa wearð ic ágælwed' = then was I astonished; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxiv. § 5; lib. iii. pr. 10.

GALLOWAY, a nag, pony. (Scotland.) So called from Galloway in Scotland; the word occurs in Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 3. See the quotation in Richardson establishing the etymology.

GALLOW-GLASS, a heavy-armed foot-soldier. (Irish.) In Macbeth, i. 2. 13. — Irish galloglach, a servant, a heavy-armed soldier. — Irish giolla, a man-servant, lacquey; and gleac-aim, I wrestle, struggle. (Mahn.) See Gillie.

GALLOWES, an instrument for hanging criminals. (E.) M. E. galwes, Chaucer, C. T. 6240. — A. S. gaiga, gealga, a cross, gibbet, gallows; Grein, i. 492. Hence was formed M. E. galwe, by the usual change from -ga to -we (and later still to -ow); and it became usual to employ the word in the plural galwes, so that the mod. E. gallows is also, strictly speaking, a plural form. + Icel. gálgi, the gallows, a gibbet. + Dan. and Swed. galge, a gibbet. + Du. galg. + Goth. galga, a cross. + G. galgen. Root unknown.

GALOCHE, a kind of shoe or slipper. (F., — Low L., — Gk.) M. E. galoche, Chaucer, C. T. 10869; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 14. — F. galoches, 'a wooden shooe or patten, made all of a piece, without any latchet or tie of leather, and worn by the poor clowne in winter'; Cot. — Low Lat. calopedia, a clog, wooden shoe; see the letter-changes explained in Brachet. — Gk. καλοπόδιον, dimin. of καλόπους, καλάπους, a shoe-maker's last. — Gk. καλο-, stem of καλον, wood; and πούς (gen. ποδός), a foot. β. The orig. sense of καλον is fuel, wood for burning; from Gk. καίω, to burn. The Gk. πούς is cognate with E. foot.

GALVANISM, a kind of electricity. (Ital.) Named from Galvani, of Bologna in Italy, inventor of the galvanic battery in A.D. 1791. Der. Hence also galvani-c, galvani-se.

GAMBADO, a kind of legging. (Span. = L.) 'Gambadoes, much worn in the west, whereby, while one rides on horseback, his leggs are in a coach, clean and warme'; Fuller's Worthies, Cornwall (R.). — Span. (or Ital.) gamba, the leg; see Gambol, of which it is nearly a doublet. ¶ The form of the suffix is rather Span. than Italian.

GAMBLE, to play for money. (E.) Comparatively a modern word. It occurs in Cowper, Tirocinium, 246. Formed, by suffix -le (which has a frequentative force), from the verb to game, the b being merely excrement; so that gamble = gamm-le. This form, gamm-le or game-le, has taken the place of the M. E. gamenien or gamenen, to play at games, to gamble, which occurs in King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 5461. — A. S. gamenian, to play at a game, in the Liber Scintillarum (unprinted); Bosworth. — A. S. gamen, a game. See Game. Der. gambler.

GAMBOGE, a gum-resin, of a bright yellow colour. (Asiatic.) In Johnson's Dict. 'Brought from India by the Dutch, about A.D. 1600'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The word is a corruption of Cambodia, the name of the district where it is found. Cambodia is in the Anamese territory, not far from the gulf of Siam.

GAMBOL, a frisk, caper. (F., — Ital., — L.) In Shak. Hamlet, v. 1. 209. Older spellings are gambold, Phaer, tr. of Virgil, Æn. vi. (l. 643 of Lat. text); gambaud, or gambaud, Skelton, Ware the Hawk, 65; gambauld, Udal, Flowers of Lat. Speaking, fol. 72 (R.). — O. F. gambade, 'a gamboll'; Cot. — Ital. gambata, a kick (Brachet). — Ital. gamba, the leg; the same word as F. gambe, O. F. gambe. β. Referred in Brachet to late Lat. gamba, a hoof, or perhaps a joint of the leg (Vegetius), which is no doubt the same word; but the true Lat. form of the base is rather camp- (as suggested in Diez), corresponding to Gk. καμπή, a bending; with reference to the flexure of the leg. Cf. Gael. cam, crooked; W. cam, crooked, also a step, stride, pace. — ✓ KAMP, to move to and fro, to bend; cf. Skt. kamp, to move to and fro. See Fick, i. 519; Curtius, ii. 70. ¶ The spelling with l seems to have been due to the confusion of the F. suffix -ade with F. suffix -alde, the latter of which stands for an older -alde. Hence gambade was first corrupted to gambalde (Skelton); then written gambauld (Udal) or gambold (Phaer); and lastly gambol (Shakespeare), with loss of final d. Der. gambol, vb., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 168. ¶ Brachet translates gamba in Vegetius by 'thigh,' and quotes the passage; it rather means 'a joint,' either of the thigh or of the pastern of a horse.

GAME, sport, amusement. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 240. M. E. game, Chaucer, C. T. 1808; older form gamen, spelt gamyn and gamyn in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, iii. 465, ix. 466, &c. — A. S. gamen, gomen, a game, sport; Grein, i. 366. + O. Sax. gaman. + Icel. gaman. + Dan. gammen, mirth, merriment. + O. Swed. gaman, joy (Ihre). + O. H. G. gaman, M. H. G. gamen, joy. Root unknown. Der. game, vb., gam-ing; game-some, M. E. gamsom (= gamen-sum), Will. of Palerne, 4193; game-ster (Merry Wives, iii. 1. 37), where the suffix -ster, orig. feminine, has a sinister sense, Koch, Engl. Grammar, iii. 47; also game-cock, game-keeper. Doublet, gammon (2).

GAMMON (1), the thigh of a hog, pickled and dried. (F., — L.) 'A gammon of bacon'; 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 26. — O. F. gambon, the old form of F. jambon, corresponding to O. F. gambe for jambe. Cotgrave explains jambon by 'a gammon'; and Florio explains Ital. gambone by 'a hanch [haunch], a gamon, a thigh.' Formed, with suffix -on, from O. F. gambe, a leg. See Gambol. [†]

GAMMON (2), nonsense, orig. a jest. (E.) A slang word; but really the M. E. gamen preserved; see Backgammon and Game.

GAMUT, the musical scale. (Hybrid; F., — Gk., and L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 1. 67, 71. A compound word, made up from O. F. game or gamme, and ut. 1. Gower has gamme in the sense of 'a musical scale'; C. A. iii. 90. — O. F. game, gamme, 'gamut, in music'; Cot. — Gk. γάμμα, the name of the third letter of the alphabet. — Heb. gimel, the third letter of the alphabet, so named from its supposed resemblance to a camel, called in Hebrew gāmāl (Farrar, Chapters on Language, 136). Brachet says: 'Guy of Arezzo [born about A.D. 990] used to end the series of seven notes of the musical scale by this mark, γ [gamma]. He named the notes a, b, c, d, e, f, g, and the last of the series has given its name to the whole scale.' 2. The word ut is Latin, and is the old name for the first note in singing, now called do. The same Guy of Arezzo is said to have named the notes after certain syllables of a monkish hymn to S. John, in a stanza written in sapphic metre. The lines are: 'Ut queant laxis resonare fibris Mira gestorum famuli tuorum Solue polluti labiis reatum Sancte Iohannes'; the last term si being made from the initials of the final words. [†]

GANDER, the male of the goose. (E.) M. E. gandre, Mandeville's Travels, p. 216. — A. S. gandra; Ælfric's Gram. De Tertia Declinatione, sect. xviii; where it translates Lat. anser. Also spelt ganra, Wright's Vocab. i. 77, col. 1. + G. ganser-ich, with an additional suffix. β. The d is excrement, as in thunder, and as usual after n; gandra stands for the older gan-ra.

γ. And the suffix -ra is the Aryan -ra, as in the Goth. ak-ra = Lat. ag-ro = Gk. ἀγ-ρό (the crude forms corresponding to E. acre); Schleicher, Compend. pp. 404, 405. See further under Goose; and see Gannet.

GANG (1), a crew of persons. (Scand.) The word gang occurs in M. E. in the sense of 'a going,' or 'a course.' The peculiar use of gang in the sense of 'a crew' is late, and is rather Scand. than E. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Gang, a company, a crew'; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. He adds that 'in sea-affairs, gangs are the several companies of mariners belonging to a ship'; so that the term arose amongst our sailors. — Icel. gangr, a going; also, collectively, a gang, as músa-gangr, a gang of mice, hjáfgangr, a gang of thieves. + Swed. gång, a going, a time. + Dan. gang, walk, gait. + Du. gang, course, pace, gait, tack, way, alley, passage. + Goth. gaggs (= gangs), a way, street.

β. The M. E. gang, a course, way, is from A. S. gang, a journey (Bosworth); which is from A. S. gangan, to go; Grein, i. 367, 368. So also Icel. gangr, is from Icel. ganga. See Go. Der. gang-way, from M. E. gang, a way, with the word way unnecessarily added, after the sense of the word became obscured; gang-board, a Dutch term, from Du. gangboord, a gangway. [†]

GANGLION, a tumour on a tendon. (L., — Gk.) Medical. In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. — Lat. ganglion (Vegetius). — Gk. γάγγλιον, a tumour near a tendon. Perhaps allied to Gk. γογγύλοι, round. Der. ganglion-ic.

GANGRENE, a mortification of the flesh, in its first stage. (F., — L., — Gk.) Shak. has the pp. gangrened, Cor. iii. 1. 307. The sb. is in Cotgrave. — O. F. gangrene, 'a gangreen, the rotting or mortifying of a member'; Cot. — Lat. gangræna. — Gk. γάγγραινα, an eating sore. A reduplicated form. — Gk. γρᾶνεν, γρᾶνεν, to gnaw. — ✓ GAR, to devour; cf. Skt. grī, to devour; gras, to devour. Der. gangrene, vb.; gangren-ous.

GANNET, a sea-fowl, Solan goose. (E.) M. E. gante (contracted from ganet); Prompt. Parv. p. 186; see Way's note. — A. S. ganot; 'ofer ganotes bæð' = over the sea-fowl's bath, i. e. over the sea; A. S. Chron. an. 975. + Du. gant, a gander. + O. H. G. ganazo, M. H. G. ganze, a gander. β. Formed with dimin. suffix -et (= -at, -et), from the base gan-; for which see Gander, Goose.

GANTLET (1), a spelling of Gauntlet, q. v.

GANTLET (2), also GANTLOPE, a military punishment. (Swed.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. Formerly written gantlope, but corrupted to gantlet or gantlet by confusion with gantlet, a glove. 'To run the gantlope, an usual punishment among soldiers'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Again, the n is inserted, being no part of the orig. word, which should be gallope. — Swed. gallopp, lit. 'a running down a lane,' because the offender has to run between two files of soldiers, who strike him as he passes. — Swed. gata, a street, lane (see Gate); and lopp, a course, career, running, from löpa, to run, cognate with E. Leap. ¶ Prob. due to the wars of Gustavus Adolphus (died 1632).

GAOL, JAIL, a cage, prison. (F., — L.) Spelt gayole in Fabian's Chron. an. 1293; gayhol in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed.

Morris, p. 153, l. 219. The peculiar spelling gaol is due to the O. F. gaole (Burguy), and has been preserved in Law French. Chaucer has gailer, C. T. 1476; whence jailer and jail.—O. F. gaiole, gaole, mod. F. gêôle, a gaol, prison, cage for birds. 'In the 13th cent. people spoke of the geôle d'un oiseau as well as of the geôle d'un prisonnier;' Brachet. [But it must be remembered that the 13th cent. spelling was not geôle, but gaiole.]—Low Lat. gabola, a cage, in a charter of A. D. 1229, cited by Brachet. A dimin. of Low Lat. gabia, a cage; Ducange. β. The Low Lat. gabia is a corruption of Lat. cauea, a cage, coop, lit. a hollow place, cavity.—Lat. cauus, hollow. See Cage, Cave, and Gabion. Der. gaol-er or jail-er.

GAPE, to yawn, open the mouth for wonder. M. E. gafen, P. Plowman, B. x. 41.—A. S. geápan, to gape (Bosworth, Lye); perhaps better spelt geápan, as it seems to be a derivative of A. S. geáp, wide, which see in Grein, l. 496. + Du. gafen, to gape, yawn. + Icel. gapa. + Swed. gapa. + Dan. gabs. + G. gaffen. Cf. Skt. jabh, jambh, to gape, yawn. Der. gap-er; and gaby, q. v. Also gap, sb., M. E. gappe (dat.) in Chaucer, C. T. 1639; a word which is rather Scand. than E.; cf. Icel. and Swed. gap, a gap, breach, abyss, Dan. gab, mouth, throat, gap, chasm. See Gabble.

GAR (1), GARFISH, a kind of pike. (E.) A fish with a long slender body and pointed head. Prob. named from A. S. gár, a spear, from its shape; see Garlic. Cp. Icel. geirsil, a kind of herring, Icel. geirr, a spear; and observe the names pike and ged.

GAR (2), to cause. (Scand.) Common in Lowland Scotch; and see P. Plowman, B. i. 121; v. 130; vi. 303.—Icel. göra; Dan. gjöre; Swed. göra, to cause, make, do. A causal verb, lit. 'to make ready.'—Icel. görr, ready; cognate with E. yare. See Yare and Gear. See Fick, iii. 102. [†]

GARB (1), dress, manner, fashion. (F.,—O. H. G.) Used by Shak. to mean 'form, manner, mode of doing a thing' (Schmidt); Hamlet, ii. 2. 390; K. Lear, ii. 2. 103.—O. F. garbe, 'a garbe, comeliness, handsomeness, gracefulness, good fashion'; Cot. Cf. Ital. garbo, 'grace, handsomeness, garbe'; Florio.—O. H. G. garawit, preparation, getting ready, dress, gear; M. H. G. gerwe, garwe.—O. H. G. garawen, M. H. G. gerwen, to get ready.—O. H. G. garo, M. H. G. gar, gare, ready; cognate with E. yare. See Gear.

GARB (2), a sheaf. (F.,—O. H. G.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. An heraldic term.—F. garbe, a sheaf.—O. H. G. garba, a sheaf.

GARBAGE, offal, refuse. (F.?) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 5. 57. 'The garbage, alius, intestina;' Levins, ii. 13. Florio translates the Ital. tara by 'the tare, waste, or garbish of any ware or merchandise;' and doubtless, the orig. sense was merely 'refuse.' We may, therefore, readily suppose it to have been a coined word from the base garb- of the verb garble; the sense being 'garble-age.' See Garble. Cf. F. grabeau, refuse of drugs (Littre).

GARBLE, to select for a purpose, to mutilate or corrupt an account. (F.,—Span.,—Arab.) The old sense was 'to pick out,' or 'sort,' so as to get the best of a collection of things. The statute 1 Rich. III, c. 11, was made 'for the remedie of the excessive price and badnesse of bowstaues, which partly is growen because the merchants will not suffer any garbeling or sorting of them to be made.' There was an officer called the Garbler of spices, whose business was to visit the shops, examine the spices, and garble, or make clean the same; mentioned an. 21 Jacob. c. 1. See Blount's Nomolexicon, where it is further explained that 'garbling of spice, drugs, &c. (1 Jacob. cap. 19) is nothing but to purifie it from the dross and dirt that is mixed with it.'—O. F. *garbeler, not recorded, but a mere variant of the O. F. grabeller, 'to garbell spices, also to examine precisely, sift nearly;' Cot. The same word as Span. garbillar, to sift, garble; Ital. garbellare, 'to garbell wares' (Florio); and Low Lat. garbellare, to sift, a word which occurs A. D. 1269 (Ducange).—Span. garbillo, a coarse sieve, sifter.—Pers. gharbil, a sieve; Arab. ghirbál, a large sieve. The word seems to be Arab. rather than Pers.; cf. Arab. gharbalat, sifting, searching; Rich. Dict. 1046. ¶ We can hardly identify Span. garbillo with Span. cribillo, a small sieve, which is a corruption of Lat. cribellum, a small sieve; cf. Lat. cribellare, to sift. Cribellum is a dimin. of cribrum, a sieve.—Lat. base cri-, a variant of ere-, as seen in cre-tum, supine of cernere, to separate; see Discreet, Discern.—✓ SKAR. to separate; Fick, i. 811. Der. garbl-er.

GARBOIL, a disturbance, commotion. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Antony, i. 3. 61; ii. 2. 67.—O. F. garbouil, 'a garboile, hurliburly, great stirre;' Cot. Cf. Span. garbullo, a crowd, multitude; Ital. garbuglio, 'a trouble, a garboil, a disorder;' Florio. β. Of uncertain origin. Referred by Diez to Lat. garr-ire, to prattle, chatter; in conjunction with bullire, to boil, bubble, boil with rage. γ. The latter part of the word is thus well accounted for; see Boil. The former part is less sure, and seems to be more directly from the Ital. gara, strife, since Florio has 'garabullare, to rave.' Yet the source is probably the same either way; see Jar, to creak.

GARDEN, a yard, enclosure. (F.,—O. H. G.) M. E. gardin, Chaucer, C. T. 1053; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1028.—O. F. gardin (Burguy); whence F. jardin.—O. H. G. gartin, gen. and dat. of O. H. G. garto, a yard, garden (Diez); cf. mod. G. garten, a garden. This gen. form was retained in compounds, such as O. H. G. gartin-are, a gardener, M. H. G. garten-maysterin, the nun in a convent who took care of the garden. β. The O. H. G. garto is cognate with A. S. geard, whence E. yard; see Yard. γ. For the change from O. H. G. t to F. d see Brachet, Introd. § 117. Der. garden, vb.; garden-ing, garden-er. [†]

GARGLE, to rinse the throat. (F.) In Cotgrave. Modified from O. F. gargouiller, just as the M. E. gargyll (a gargyle) is from O. F. gargouille.—O. F. gargouiller, 'to gargle, or gargarize;' Cot.—O. F. gargouille; for which see Gargyle. ¶ The M. E. gargarise, used by Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 2 (R.), is from O. F. gargarizer, to gargle (Cot.), borrowed (through Lat. gargarizare) from Gk. γάργας (sev), to gargle. This is a reduplicated form from the ✓ GAR, to swallow, devour; as explained in Curtius, ii. 80. The words were probably confused. Der. gargle, sb.

GARGOYLE, in architecture, a projecting spout. (F.,—L.) M. E. gargyle, also spelt gargyll. The spelling gargyle is in Lidgate's Troybook (R.); we read of 'gargylles of golde fiersly faced with spoutes running' in Hall's Chron. Henry VIII, an. 19.—O. F. gargouille, 'the weesle or weason [weasand] of the throat; also, the mouth of a spout, a gutter;' Cot. Cf. Span. gargola, a gargyle. β. We find, in Ital., not only gargatta, gargozza, the throat, windpipe, but also gorgozza, the throat, gullet, dimin. of gorga, the throat. Thus gargyle is merely the dimin. of F. gorge, the throat; see Gorge. γ. The change of vowel was due to confusion with Lat. gargarizare; just as gargle (q. v.) was confused with M. E. gargarise (explained under Gargle).

GARISH, GAIRISH, glaring, staring, showy. (Scand.) 'The garish sun;' Romeo, iii. 2. 25. 'Day's garish eye;' Milton, Il Penseroso, 141. From the verb gars. Chaucer uses the slightly different form gauren, to stare; C. T. 5332, 14375. β. By the frequent change of s to r, we see that gars, to stare, is a variant of M. E. gasen, to gaze. [For an example of the change, see Frone.] See Gaze.

GARLAND, a wreath. (F.) In early use. M. E. gerlond, Chaucer, C. T. 668. The form gerlaundesche occurs in Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 23.—O. F. garlande, 'a garland;' Cot. [The mod. F. guirlande is borrowed from Ital. ghirlanda.] Cf. Span. guirnalda, Ital. ghirlanda, a garland. β. Of uncertain origin; see the discussion of the word in Diez. It seems as if formed with a suffix -ande from an M. H. G. *wierelen, a supposed frequentative of wieren, to adorn; from O. H. G. wiara, M. H. G. wiere, refined gold, fine ornament. ¶ Mr. Wedgwood's explanation, that the r is intrusive, and that it belongs to the sb. gala, wholly fails for the Ital. and Span. forms. Der. garland, vb.

GARLIC, a plant of the genus Allium. (E.) Lit. 'spear-plant;' from the shape of the leaves. M. E. garlik; Chaucer, C. T. 636.—A. S. gárlæc, used to translate Lat. allium in Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Somner, Nomina Herbarum.—A. S. gár, a spear; and læc, a leek, plant. + Icel. geirlaukr, sim. formed. See Gar (1), Gore, and Leek. ¶ The W. garleg is borrowed from E. See Barley.

GARMENT, a robe, coat. (F.,—O. Low G.) A corruption of M. E. garnement, P. Plowman, C. x. 119.—O. F. garnement, garniment, a robe; formed (with suffix -ment = Lat. -mentum) from O. F. garnir, to garnish, adorn, fortify. See Garnish.

GARNER, a granary, store for grain. (F.,—L.) M. E. garner; Chaucer, C. T. 595.—O. F. gernier, a variant of grenier, a granary (Burguy).—Lat. granaria, a granary. Doublet, granary, q. v. Der. garner, verb.

GARNET, a kind of precious stone. (F.,—L.) 'And gode garnettes bytwene;' Romance of Emare, ed. Ritson, l. 156. A corruption of granat, a form also used in E., and found in Cotgrave.—O. F. grenat [older form prob. granat], 'a precious stone called a granat, or garnet;' Cot. Cf. Span. granate, Ital. granato, a garnet.—Low Lat. granatus, a garnet. 'So called from its resemblance in colour and shape to the grains or seeds of the pomegranate;' Webster.—Lat. granatus, having many grains or seeds; granatum (for malum granatum), a pomegranate.—Lat. granum, a grain; see Grain. [†]

GARNISH, to embellish, decorate. (F.,—O. Low G.) In Spenser, Verses addressed to Lord Ch. Howard, l. 2; Prompt. Parv. p. 188. Also spelt warnish in M. E.; the pp. warnished is in Will. of Paleme, l. 1083.—O. F. garnir, guarnir, older form warnir, to avert, warn, defend, fortify, garnish (Burguy); pres. part. garnis-ant, warnis-ant, whence E. garn-ish, warn-ish. Of O. Low G. origin; the form of the original is best shown by A. S. warnian (also wearnian), to beware of; cf. O. Sax. warnian, to refuse, O. Friesic warnia, to give a pledge; all from the notion of 'wariness.' See further under Warn. Der. garnish, sb., garnish-ment, garnish-er; also garniture (Cotgrave), from F. garniture, 'garniture, garnishment' (Cot.), formed from Low Lat. garnitura, prop. fem. of fut. part. of Low Lat. garnire, to adorn, which is merely the F. word Latinised; also garnish-ee = 'the party in whose hands another man's money is attached' (Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715), barbarously formed on the model of a F. pass. part. as opposed to garnish-er considered as an agent; also garment, q. v., and garrison, q. v.

GARRET, a room at the top of a house. (F., -G.) M. E. garite (with one r), Prompt. Parv. p. 187; P. Plowman's Creed, ed. Skeat, 214. It properly means 'a place of look-out,' or 'watch-tower.'—O. F. garite, a place of refuge, place of look-out, watch-tower.—O. F. garir, older spelling warir, to preserve, save, keep.—O. H. G. warjan, to defend; cf. A. S. varian, to hold, defend. The latter is derived from A. S. war, wary. See Wary and Warn. ¶ The O. F. garir is perhaps rather of Low G. than of High G. origin, which seems to be also the case with the O. F. garnir; see Garnish.

GARRISON, a supply of soldiers for defending a fort. (F., -G.) M. E. garrison, provision, in La Belle Dame sans Mercy, l. 175, pr. in Political, Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 57; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvii. 294 (footnote), where another spelling is warryson, and other reading is varryson.—O. F. garrison, store, provision, supply.—O. F. garnis-ant, pres. part. of garnir, to supply, garnish; see Garnish. Thus garrison nearly is a doublet of garniture; also (nearly) of garment. ¶ Not quite the same word as M. E. garison or warison, on which see note to Waryson in Gloss. to Bruce.

GARROTE, GARROTE, a method of effecting strangulation. (Span., -C.) 'Garrote, a machine for strangling criminals, used in Spain. Many attempts to strangle were made by thieves called garrotters, in the winter of 1862-63. An act was passed in 1863 to punish these acts by flogging;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. [See garrot and garroter in Cotgrave.]—Span. garrote, a cudgel, tying a rope tight, strangling by means of an iron collar. Formed, with dimin. suffix -ote, from Span. garra, a claw, a talon, whence also the phrase echarle a uno la garra, to grasp, imprison. Of Celtic origin; connected with Breton gar, garr, W. and Corn. gar, the shank of the leg (Diez); cognate with Irish cara, the leg.—✓ KAR, to run, move. See Car. Der. garrote, verb; garrot-er; and see garter.

GARRULOUS, talkative. (L.) 1. Milton has garrulity, Sams. Agonistes, 491; and it occurs in Cotgrave, to translate F. garrulité, from Lat. acc. garrulitatem, talkativeness. 2. The adj. garrulous occurs in Chapman's Homer, Comment. on Iliad, b. iii; note 2. It is borrowed from Lat. directly, by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, strenuous, &c.—Lat. garrulus, talkative. Formed, with suffix -(u)l-, from garr-ire, to prattle.—✓ GAR, to shout, call; and whence also E. Call, q. v. Der. garrulous-ness, also garrul-i-ty, as above.

GARTER, a band round the leg, for fastening the hose. (F., -C.) 'Eke ther be knyghtes old of the garter;' The Flower and the Leaf (15th cent.), l. 519. The order was instituted by Edw. III, 23 April, 1349.—O. F. gartier, in dialects of N. France (Hécart), spelt gartier in Cotgrave, and explained by him as 'a garter;' mod. F. jarretière. Closely connected with O. F. garret (Burguy), mod. F. jarret, the ham of the leg; both words being alike formed from an O. F. *garre (equivalent to Span. garra, a claw, talon).—Breton gar, garr, the shank of the leg; cf. W. gar, the shank; see Garrote. Der. garter, verb, All's Well, ii. 3. 265. [†]

GAS, an aeriform fluid. (Dutch.) The term is known to have been a pure invention. The Belgian chemist Van Helmont (died A. D. 1644) invented two corresponding terms, gas and blas; the former came into use, the latter was forgotten. We may call it a Dutch word, as gas is the Du. spelling. ¶ As the word is thus known to have been an invention, it is absurd to find an origin for it. The utmost that can be said is that Van Helmont may have had in his mind the Du. geest, spirit, ghost, volatile fluid, as a foundation for gas; and the verb blazen, to blow, as a foundation for blas. Der. gas-e-ous, gas-o-meter. [†]

GASCONADE, boasting, bragging. (Gascony.) 'That figure of speech which is commonly distinguished by the name of Gasconade;' The Tatler, no. 115 (part 2).—F. gasconade, boasting; said to be a vice of the Gascons.—F. Gascon, an inhabitant of Gascony, formerly Vasconia. Der. gasconade, verb, gasconad-ing, gasconad-er.

GASH, to hack, cut deeply. (F., -Low Lat.) 'His gashed stabs;' Macbeth, ii. 3. 119. A corruption of an older form garsh or garse. 'A garse or gashe, incisure;' Levins, 33. 14. 'Garsshe in wode or in a knife, hoche;' Palsgrave. The pl. sb. garcen (another MS. has garsses) occurs in the Ancien Riwele, p. 258, in the sense of 'gashes caused by a scourge.'—O. F. garser, to scarify, pierce with a lancet (Roquefort); garscher, to chap, as the hands or lips (Cotgrave).—Low Lat. garsa, scarification, or the making of numerous small incisions in the skin and flesh; an operation called by the Greeks ἐγχαρᾶσις; Ducange. β. Origin obscure; it is possible that garsa may be a mere corruption of χαρᾶσις, an incision; either way, the root appears to be SKAR, to cut; whence also E. Shear. ¶ Not connected with Du. gat, a hole, as suggested in Wedgwood. Der. gash, sb.

GASP, to gape for breath. (Scand.) M. E. gaspen, Gower, C. A. ii. 260.—Icel. geispa, to yawn. + Swed. gäspa. + Dan. gispe. β. It is well known that sp commonly represents an earlier ps; thus clasp is M. E. clapsen, hasp was formerly haps, and aspen is from aps. Hence gaspa (the old form) stands for gap-sa, an extension of early Scand. and Icel. gapa, to gape; and we may consider gasp as a frequentative of gape; see Gape. Der. gasp, sb.

GASTRIC, belonging to the belly. (L., -Gk.) Kersey, ed. 1715, has only the Lat. gastricus succus, which becomes gastrick juice in Bailey's Dict., ed. 1731, vol. ii.—Lat. gastricus, gastric; formed with suffix -c from a crude form gastr = gastro.—Gk. γαστήρ, crude form of γαστήρ, the belly (stem γαστερ). β. Cognate with Skt. jathara, the belly, and prob. with Lat. uenter, though the letter-changes present difficulty. Prob. the orig. form was gatarā, whence Gk. γαστήρ and Lat. (g)ue-n-ter. Der. from the same root, gastro-nomy; from Gk. γαστήρ, and νόμος, derivative of νόμος, usage.

GATE, a door, opening, way. (E.) [In prov. E. and M. E. we often find gate = a street; this use is Scand.] M. E. gate, yate, yate. Spelt gate, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 237, l. 31; yate, Will. of Palerne, 3757; yete, Ancien Riwele, p. 74.—A. S. geat, a gate, opening; Matt. vii. 13. + Du. gat, a hole, opening, gap, mouth. + Icel. gat, an opening; gata, a way, path, street. + Swed. gata, a street, lane. + Dan. gade, a street. + Goth. gatuwa, a street. + G. gasse, a street. β. The root is seen in A. S. gitan, to get, hence, to arrive at, reach; so that gate = a way to get at a thing, a passage, lane, opening; Fick, iii. 98. See Get. (So also O. H. G. gazza, a street, is from kezzan, to get.) ¶ Not from the verb to go. Der. gat-ed, gate-way. [†]

GATHER, to draw into a heap, collect. (E.) Just as father corresponds to M. E. fader, so gather corresponds to M. E. gaderen or gaderien, to gather; as also mod. E. together corresponds to M. E. togideres. 'And gadred hem alle togideres' = and gathered them all together; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 80.—A. S. gædrian, gaderian; Luke, vi. 44; Grein, i. 366, 373. β. Formed, with causal suffix -ian, from A. S. gader, together, preserved in the compound gader-tang, associated with (Grein, i. 365), and also as gador or geador, together (Grein, i. 491); see Together. γ. Again, the suffix -er or -or (orig. -ar) has a frequentative force, and is a mere addition. A shorter form appears in the A. S. gæd, society, fellowship, company; whence also the A. S. gæd-el-ing, an associate, comrade; cf. Goth. gad-il-iggs (= gad-il-ings), a sister's son, Col. iv. 10. According to Fick (iii. 98) the Teutonic base GAD means to fit, to suit, and is also the origin of E. good; see Good. + Du. gaderen, to collect, from gader, together; the base GAD appears in gade, a spouse, consort; with which cf. G. gatte, a husband, gattin, a wife. Der. gather, sb.; gather-ing, gather-er.

GAUD, a show, ornament. (L.) Also spelt gaud, Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 33. Chaucer uses gaude in the sense of 'specious trick'; C. T. 12323.—Lat. gaudium, gladness, joy; used in Low Lat. of 'a large bead on a rosary'; whence M. E. gauded, furnished with large beads. 'A peire of bedes gauded al with grene'; Chaucer, C. T. 159 (see note in Clarendon Press edition); or see Gaudees in Halliwell. Cf. Lat. gaudere, to rejoice, pt. t. gauius sum; from a base gau-. + Gk. γαῖω, to rejoice; γαῖπος, proud; see Curtius, i. 211. Der. gaud-y, i. e. show-y; 'In gaudy grene,' Chaucer, C. T. 2081; gaud-i-ly, gaud-i-ness. Doublet, joy, q. v.

GAUGE, to measure the content of a vessel. (F., -Low L.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 2. 208 (where the old edd. have gagel). 'Or bore or gauge the hollow caues uncouth;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æneid, ii. 52.—O. F. gauger (printed gaugir in Roquefort), later jauger, 'to gauge, or measure a piece of [or?] cask'; Cot.—O. F. *gaugue (not found), old form of jaugue, 'a gauge, the instrument wherewith a cask is measured, also an iron lever'; Cot.—Low Lat. gaugia, the standard measure of a wine-cask (A. D. 1446); Ducange. Also spelt gaugia; and cf. Low Lat. gaugatum, the gauging of a wine-cask; gaugettum, a tribute paid for gauging, a gauge; gaugiator, a gauger.

β. All these words are probably further allied to Low Lat. jalagium, the right of gauging wine-casks; jalea, a gallon, F. jalle, a bowl; and hence related also to E. gallon; see Gallon. The orig. sense seems to have been 'to test the capacity of a gallon measure.' Der. guage or gauge, sb., gaug-ing, gaug-er. [†]

GAUNT, thin, lean. (Scand.) In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 1. 74. 'His own gaunt eagle'; Ben Jonson, Catiline, iii. 1. 'Gaunt, or lene;' also 'Gaunte, or slendry;' Prompt. Parv. p. 189. 'Gant, slim, slender;' Ray's South- and East-Country Words, ed. 1691. Also mentioned in Forby as a Norfolk, and in Moor as a Suffolk word. β. Being an East-Anglian word, it is presumably Scandinavian. It corresponds to Norweg. gand [= gant], a thin pointed stick, a tall and thin man, an overgrown stripling (Aasen); we also find Swed. dial. gank, a lean and nearly starved horse (Rietz). Cf. 'arm-gaunt steed', Shak. Ant. and Cleop. i. 5. 48. Der. gaunt-ly, gaunt-ness. [†]

GAUNTLET, an iron glove. (F., -Scand.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 33. - O. F. gantlet, 'a gauntlet, or arming-glove'; Cot. Formed, with dimin. suffixes -el- and -et, from O. F. gant, a glove. Of Scand. origin. - O. Swed. vante, a glove (Ihre); whence O. F. gant by the usual change of w to g in French; see GARNISH. + Dan. vante, a mitten. + Icel. vötr (stem vatt = vant), a glove. + Du. want, a mitten. β. The most probable source is O. Swed. winda, to wind, hence to involve, wrap, cognate with E. wind, verb. See Wind. [†]

GAUZE, a thin silken fabric. (F., -Palestine.) 'Gauze, a thin sort of silk-stuff'; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - O. F. gaze, 'cushion canvas, the thin canvas that serves women for a ground into their cushions or pursework; also, the sleight stuff tiffany'; Cot. Of historical origin; so called because first brought from Gaza, in Palestine. Cf. Low Lat. gazetum, wine brought from Gaza; gazzatum, gauze. [†] Several kinds of stuffs are named from places; e.g. damask from Damascus, calico from Calicut, &c.

GAVELKIND, a peculiar sort of tenure. (C.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Gavelkind, a tenure, or custom, whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons'; Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. α. The word has clearly taken its present form owing to a supposed derivation from M. E. gavel (with u = v), tribute, occurring in Ancrén Riwle, p. 202, &c., and derived from A. S. gafol, tribute (Leo, Bosworth); with the E. suffix kind (as in man-kind).

β. Yet this is a mere adaptation, the word being really of Celtic origin, and the custom a remnant from O. British. - Irish gabhailcine, the ancient law of gavelkind; where gabhail signifies a receiving, a tenure, from gabhaim, I take, receive; and cine signifies a race, tribe, family; so that the word means 'family-tenure'. Cf. W. gafael, Corn. gavel, a hold, holding, tenure; and enedl, a tribe. [†]

GAVOTTE, a kind of dance. (F.) Spelt gavot in Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus, as quoted in Todd's Johnson. - O. F. gavots, 'a kind of brawle [dance], danced, commonly, by one alone'; Cot. Of historical origin; 'orig. a dance of the Gavotes, i. e. people of Gap'; Brachet. Gap is in the department of the Upper Alps, and in the old province of Dauphiné.

GAWK, a simpleton, awkward fellow. (E.) The orig. sense is a 'cuckoo'. M. E. gouke, a cuckoo, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 927. The dimin. form goky is used in the sense of 'simpleton'; P. Plowman, B. xi. 299. - A. S. geac, a cuckoo; Grein, i. 495. + Icel. gaurk, a cuckoo. + Dan. giög, a cuckoo. + Swed. gök, a cuckoo; en otak-sam gök, an unthankful fellow. + O. H. G. couch, M. H. G. gouch, G. gauch, a cuckoo, a simpleton. Cf. also Lat. cucus, a cuckoo, a fool; used as a term of reproach. An imitative word; see Cuckoo. Der. gawk-y, awkward, ungainly.

GAY, lively, merry, sportive. (F., -M. H. G.) M. E. gay, Chaucer, C. T. 3213; Will. of Palerne, 816; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 3204. - O. F. gai, merry; spelt gay in Cotgrave. - M. H. G. gahe, O. H. G. gahi (older form kahi), G. jähe, quick, sudden, rash, and hence, lively; we also find M. H. G. gäch, with the same sense. - M. H. G. gän, G. gehen, to go; cognate with E. go; see Go. Cf. the E. slang phrase 'to be full of go'. Der. gai-ly, Will. of Palerne, 1625; gai-e-ty, used by Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, c. 5. s. 5 [not 15] (R.), from O. F. gayeté, 'mirth'; Cot. Also jay, q. v.

GAZE, to behold fixedly, stare at. (Scand.) M. E. gasen. 'When that the peple gased up and down'; Chaucer, C. T. 8879. Of Scand. origin, and perfectly preserved in Swed. dial. gasa, to gaze, stare, as in the phrase gasa äkring se, to gaze or stare about one (Rietz). β. The original notion is 'to stare in terror,' or 'to stick to the spot in terror,' from the Goth. base gais, which occurs in us-gais-ian, to make utterly afraid, and us-geis-nan, to be amazed. - ✓ GHAIS, to stick fast (esp. with terror); see this root, discussed s. v. Aghast, sect. B. [†] By the change of s to r, we have the form gauren, to stare, Chaucer, C. T. 10504, 14375. Der. gaze, sb., gazing-stock; also gar-ish.

GAZELLE, a kind of antelope. (F., -Arab.) Formerly gazel. 'Gazel, a kind of Arabian deer, or the antelope of Barbary'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - O. F. gazel, gazelle, 'a kind of wild goat'; Cot. 'Of Oriental origin; introduced from Africa by St. Louis' crusaders'; Brachet. - Arab. ghazäl, 'a fawn just able to walk; a wild goat'; Richardson's Dict. p. 1050. Explained as 'a gazelle' in Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 440.

GAZETTE, a small newspaper. (F., -Ital.) 'As we read a gazett'; Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. 1 (R.). - O. F. gazette, 'a certain Venetian coin scarce worth our farthing; also, a bill of news, or a short relation of the generall occurrences of the time, forged most commonly at Venice, and thence dispersed, every month, into most parts of Christendom'; Cot. β. The word is certainly from Ital. gazetta, but that word has two meanings, viz. (1) 'a young piot or magot a pie' [mag-pie]; and (2) 'a small coin in Italie'; Florio. Now the value of the latter (less than a farthing) was so small, that Mr. Wedgwood's objection is sound, viz. 'that it never could have been the price either of a written or a printed sheet'; so that this (the usual) explanation is to be doubted. γ. We may rather suppose that the word gazetta in the sense of magpie (and hence tittle-tattle) may have given name to the original Venetian gazette, first published about 1536 (Haydn); and hence came the Ital. gazzettare, to chatter as a magpie, to write gazettes (Florio).

D. Gazzetta, a magpie, is a dimin. from Ital. gazza, a magpie (Florio). E. Gazzetta, a small coin, is prob. a dimin. from Lat. gaza, treasure, wealth, a word borrowed from Gk. γάza, wealth, a treasury; which, again, is said to be from the Persian. [†]

1. The word gazel, meaning a small coin, occurs in Massinger, Maid of Honour, iii. 1 (speech by Jacomo), and in Ben Jonson, The Fox, ii. 1 (speech by Peregrine). 2. In Chambers' Etym. Dict. it is suggested that the coin gazetta was paid, not for the gazette itself, but for the privilege of reading it; and it is added that it was 'a written sheet, which appeared about the middle of the 16th century, during the war with Soliman II.' The reader can take his choice. Der. gazzet-er, orig. a writer for a gazette, now used to denote a geographical dictionary.

GEAR, dress, harness, tackle. (E.) The orig. sense is 'preparation'. M. E. gere, Chaucer, C. T. 354. - A. S. gearwe, pl. fem., preparation, dress, ornament; Grein, i. 495; whence was formed the verb gearwian, to prepare, cognate with Icel. göra, to cause; see Gar (2). + O. Sax. garuwi, gear. + Icel. göruv, gjörvi, gear. + O. H. G. garuwi, M. H. G. garwe, gear; whence O. F. garbe, and E. garb; see Garb (1). β. These sbs. are derived from an older adjective, preserved in Shak. in the form yare; viz. A. S. gearu, ready, Grein, i. 493; O. Sax. garu; O. H. G. garo (cf. G. gar, entirely); Du. gaar, dressed; see Yare. Der. gear, verb; gear-ing. Doublet, garb.

GED, the fish called a pike. (Scand.) A North. E. word. - Icel. gedda, a pike; Swed. gädda; allied to Icel. gaddr, a goad; see Gad, Goad. Named from the sharp thin head; whence also the name 'pike'. So also gar-fish, q. v.

GELATINE, a substance which dissolves in hot water and cools as a jelly. (F., -L.) 'Gelatina, any sort of clear gummy juice'; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. The mod. form is French. - F. gelatine. - Low Lat. gelatina, as cited by Kersey; formed from Lat. gelatus, pp. of gelare, to congeal. - Lat. gelu, frost; allied to E. cool, cold; see Cool. Der. gelatin-ate, gelatin-ous; and see Gelid. From the same source, jelly.

GELD, to emasculate. (Scand.) M. E. gelden; Wyclif, Matt. xix. 12. 'Geldyn, castro, testiculo, emasculo'; Prompt. Parv. p. 190. [The A. S. gylte, gelt, is due to Somner, and unauthorised.] - Icel. gelda. + Swed. gälla (for gälda). + Dan. gilde. Possibly related to Goth. giltha, a sickle; Mark, iv. 29. Der. geld-er; also geld-ing (Chaucer, C. T. 693), from Icel. gelding, a gelding = Swed. galling = Dan. gilding. On the suffix -ing, see March, A. S. Gram. sect. 228.

GELID, cool, cold. (L.) 'Dwells in their gelid pores'; Thomson, Autumn, 642. - Lat. gelidus, cool, cold. - Lat. gelu, frost. See Cool. Der. gelid-ly, gelid-ness. Doublet, cool.

GEM, a precious stone. (F., -L.) M. E. gemme; Chaucer, C. T. 8130, 13539. - O. F. gemme, 'a gem'; Cot. - Lat. gemma, a swelling bud; also a gem, jewel. β. Of uncertain origin; either connected with Lat. gemere, to sigh (orig. to swell or be full), Gk. γέμεν, to be full (Curtius, i. 214); or else connected with Skt. janman, birth, production (Fick, i. 66). The form of the root is, accordingly, either GAM or GAN. Der. gemmi-fer-ous, bud-bearing (Lat. ferre, to bear); gemmi-par-ous, bud-producing (Lat. parere, to produce); gemmate, having buds (Lat. gemmatus, pp. of gemmare, to bud); gemmal-ion.

GEMINI, twins. (L.) The name of a sign of the Zodiac. 'He was that time in Geminis'; Chaucer, C. T. 10096; where Geminis is the ablative case. - Lat. geminus, pl., twins; from the base gam, a variant of ✓ GAN, to generate; see Genus. Der. gemin-ous, double (= Lat. geminus, double), Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 15. § 5; gemin-at-ion, a doubling, Bacon, Colours of Good and Evil, sect. 8.

GENER (1), kind, breed, sex. (F., -L.) M. E. gendre; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, i. 18. The d is excrement, as so commonly the case after n in English; cf. tender, and see engender. - O. F. (and mod. F.) genre, 'kind'; Cot. - Lat. genere, abl. case of genus, kind, kin, cognate with E. kin; see Genus and Kin. [†] The deriv. from the abl. case is unusual, but is here due to the frequent use of the Lat. ablative in such phrases as genere natus, hoc genere, omni genere, &c.; cf. Ital. genere, kind. See below.

ENDER (2), to engender, produce. (F., -L.) M. E. gendren, Wyclif, Acts, vii. 8 (where the Vulgate has genuit). Really a clipped form of Engender, q. v.

GENEALOGY, a pedigree of a family, descent by birth. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. genealogie, Wyclif, Heb. vii. 3 (where the Vulgate has genealogia).—O. F. genealogie, 'a genealogy, pedigree'; Cot.—Lat. genealogia.—Gk. γενεαλογία, an account of a family; r Tim. i. 4.—Gk. γένεα, birth, race, descent; and -λογία, an account, from λέγειν, to speak of. Cf. Gk. γένος, birth, race, descent; see Genus and Logic. Der. genealog-ic-al, genealog-ic-al-ly, genealog-ist.

GENERAL, relating to a genus or class, common, prevalent. (F.,—L.) 'The viker general of alle'; Gower, C. A. i. 253. Chaucer has the adv. generally, C. T. 17277.—O. F. general, 'generall, universall'; Cot.—Lat. generalis, belonging to a genus.—Lat. gener-, stem of genus, a race. See Genus. Der. general, sb., esp. in the phrase in general, Gower, C. A. iii. 189, and in the sense of 'leader', All's Well, iii. 3. 1; general-ly; general-ship; also general-iss, general-ist-at-ion; also general-i-ty (Hooker, Eccl. Polity, ed. Church, b. i. sect. 6. subsect. 4), from O. F. generalité, 'generality, generalness'; Cot.; also general-iss-i-mo, supreme commander (see examples in Todd's Johnson), from Ital. generalissimo, a supreme commander, formed with the superlative suffix -ssimo = Lat. -simo = -timo = Aryan -tama (Schleicher, Compendium, p. 477).

GENERATE, to produce. (L.) Orig. a pp., as in 'S. Cubba was generate', i. e. born; Bale's English Votaries, pt. i (R.) 'Let the waters generate'; Milton, P. L. vii. 387.—Lat. generatus, pp. of generare, to procreate, produce.—Lat. gener-, stem of genus, a race, kind. See Genus. Der. generat-or, generat-ive; also generation (Wyclif, Mark, viii. 12), from O. F. generation = Lat. acc. generationem, from nom. generatio.

GENERIC, pertaining to a genus. (L.) The older word, in E., is generical. 'Generical, pertaining to a kindred'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A coined word, with suffix -ic (or -ical) from Lat. generi-, crude form of genus; see Genus. Der. generical-ly.

GENEROUS, of a noble nature. (F.,—L.) 'The generous [noble] and gravest citizens'; Meas. for Meas. iv. 6. 13.—O. F. generous [older forms generous, generous], 'generous'; Cot.—Lat. generosus, of noble birth; formed with suffix -osus from gener-, base of genus; see Genus. Der. generous-ly, generous-ness; generos-i-ty (Cor. i. 1. 215), from O. F. generosité = Lat. acc. generositatem, from nom. generositas.

GENESIS, generation, creation. (L.,—Gk.) Lat. genesis, the name of the first book of the Bible in the Vulgate version.—Gk. γένεσις, origin, source.—Gk. γεν-, to beget, produce; equivalent to GAN, to beget.

GENET, a carnivorous animal, allied to the civet. (F.,—Span.,—Arab.) 'Genet, a kind of cat'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Spelt genet in Skinner, ed. 1671.—F. genette, 'a kind of weasel, black-spotted, and bred in Spain'; Cot.—Span. gineta, a genet.—Arab. jarnet (with hard t); cited by Dozy, who refers to the Journal Asiatique, Juin, 1849, p. 541. [†]

GENIAL, cheering, merry. (F.,—L.) In Cotgrave.—O. F. genial, 'genial, belonging to luck or chance, or to a man's nature, disposition, inclination'; Cot.—Lat. genialis, pleasant, delightful.—Lat. genius, genius; also, social enjoyment. See Genius. Der. genial-ly, genial-ness, genial-i-ty.

GENICULATE, jointed. (L.) A botanical term. Bailey gives it in the Lat. form, viz. 'geniculatus, jointed'; vol. ii., ed. 1731.—Lat. geniculum, a little knee, a knot or joint in a plant. Formed, with suffixes -cu- and -l-, from geni-, put for genu, a knee; cognate with E. knee. See Knee.

GENITAL, belonging to generation. (F.,—L.) In Cotgrave.—O. F. genital, 'genital, fit for breed, apt to beget'; Cot.—Lat. genitalis, generative.—Lat. genitum, supine of gignere, to beget. Gignere (= gi-gen-ere) is a reduplicated form, from GAN, to beget; cf. Gk. γεννῶμαι = γι-γεν-ομαι; and Skt. jan, to beget. See Genus. Der. genitals, pl. sb., which occurs in Gower, C. A. ii. 156.

GENITIVE, the name of a case in grammar. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 1. 59. The suffix -ive is a substitution for an older -if, answering to F. -if, from Lat. -ivus.—O. F. genitif, 'the genitive case'; Cot.—Lat. genitivus, lit. of or belonging to generation or birth, applied in grammar to a particular case of nouns.—Lat. genitum, supine of gignere, to beget. See above.

GENIUS, a spirit; inborn faculty. (L.) See Shak. Macb. iii. 1. 56; Jul. Cæsar, ii. 1. 66; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 47; Gower, C. A. i. 48.—Lat. genius, the tutelary spirit of a person; also, inclination, wit, talent; lit. 'inborn nature'.—GAN, to produce, beget. See Genus. Der. genii, pl., genius-es, pl.; also geni-al, q. v.

JENNET, a Spanish horse; see Jennet.

GENTEEL, lit. belonging to a noble race, well-bred, graceful. (F.,—L.) A doublet of gentile; the ee represents the sound of the O. F. i. M. E. gentil, gentyl. 'Thy fayre body so gentyl'; Rob. of Glouc., p. 205.—O. F. gentil, 'gentle, . . . gracious, . . . also Gentile'; Cot.—Lat. gentilis, orig. belonging to the same clan; also, a gentile. See Gentile. Der. genteel-ly, genteel-ness; also gentil-i-ty, As You Like It, i. 2. 22. Doublet, gentle; also gentile.

GENTIAN, the name of a plant. (F.,—L.) In Minshew.—O. F. gentiane, 'gentian, bitterwort'; Cot.—Lat. gentiana, gentian. So named after the Illyrian king Gentius (about a.c. 180), who was the first to discover its properties; see Pliny, Nat. Hist. xxv. 7.

GENTILE, a pagan. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 6. 51.—O. F. gentil, 'gentle, . . . Gentile'; Cot.—Lat. gentilis, a gentile, lit. belonging to the same clan.—Lat. genti-, crude form of gens, a tribe, clan, race.—Lat. base GEN, from GAN, to beget, produce. Doublet, gentile; also, genteel.

GENTLE, docile, mild. (F.,—L.) M. E. gentil. 'So hardy and so gentil'; Rob. of Glouc., p. 167. 'Noble men and gentile and of heh burde' [high birth]; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 273.—O. F. gentil, 'gentle'; Cot.—Lat. gentilis. See Gentile and Genteel. Der. gent-ly, gentle-ness; gentle-man (M. E. gentilman, Gower, C. A. ii. 78); gentle-woman (M. E. gentilwoman, Chaucer, C. T. 15893); gentle-man-ly, gentle-folks; also gent-ry, q. v.

GENTRY, rank by birth; gentlefolks. (F.,—L.) M. E. gentrie. 'Also, to have pride of gentrie is right great folly; for oft time the gentrie of the body benimeth [taketh away] the gentrie of the soul'; Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Superbia. Gentrie is a corruption of the older form gentrise; see P. Plowman, C. xxi. 21, where we find the various spellings gentrise, gentrice, genterise, and gentrye.—O. F. gentrise, rank, formed from O. F. gentilise, or gentillece, by the change of l into r (Burguy). Gentillece is formed, with O. F. suffix -ee (F. -esse), from the adj. gentil, gentle; like F. noblesse from noble. See Gentle.

GENUINE, of the true stock, natural, real. (L.) 'The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain'; Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 9. Borrowed directly from Latin.—Lat. genuinus, innate, genuine. From the base genu-, an extension of the base gen- as seen in genus, &c.—GAN, to beget. See Genus. Der. genuine-ly, genuine-ness.

GENUFLECTION, GENUFLEXION, a bending of the knee. (F.,—L.) Spelt genusflexion in Howell's Letters, b. iii. let. 2. § 2.—F. genusflexion, 'a bending of the knee'; Cot.—Late Lat. acc. genusflexionem, from nom. genusflexio; Ducange.—Lat. genu, the knee; and flexus, pp. of flectere, to bend. See Knee and Flexible. ¶ The correcter spelling is with x; cf. Lat. flexio, a bending.

GENUS, breed, race, kin. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. In early use as a term in logic.—Lat. genus (stem gener-), race; cognate with E. kin; see Kin.—GAN, to beget; cf. Skt. jan, to beget; Gk. γένε-ος, race, γι-γ(ε)ν-ομαι, I am born; Lat. gi-g(e)n-ere, to beget; &c. Doublet, kin, q. v. Der. gener-a, pl.; gener-ic, gener-ic-al, gener-ic-al-ly. From the same root, gener-al, gener-ate, gener-ous; gender, en-gender, con-gener; gen-i-us, gen-i-al, gen-i-tal, con-gen-i-tal; gen-it-ive, gen-u-ine, gen-t-ile, gen-t-le, gen-t-eel; con-gen-i-tal; de-gen-er-ate, in-di-gen-ous, in-gen-i-ous, in-gen-u-ous, pro-gen-i-tor, pro-gen-y, re-gen-er-ate, &c. Also, from the Gk., gen-e-a-log-y, gen-esis, hetero-gen-e-ous, homo-gen-e-ous; endo-gen, exo-gen, hydro-gen, oxy-gen, nitro-gen, &c.

GEOGRAPHY, a description of the earth. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Minshew.—O. F. geographia, 'geography'; Cot.—Lat. geographia.—Gk. γεωγραφία, geographia, lit. earth-description.—Gk. γεω- = γῆ-ος = γη-ος, put for γη-ος, belonging to the earth, from γη, earth, land; and -γραφία, description, from γράφω, to write. Cf. Skt. go, the earth; see Curtius, i. 217. Der. geograph-er, geograph-ic-al. From the same form geo- as a prefix, we have numerous derivatives, such as geo-centr-ic (see Centre), geo-log-y (from Gk. λέγειν, to speak of), geo-mancy (from Gk. μαντεία, divination, through the French); and other scientific terms. See also Geometry and Georgic.

GEOMETRY, the science of measurement. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. geometrie, Gower, C. A. iii. 90.—O. F. geometrie, 'geometry'; Cot.—Lat. geometria.—Gk. γεωμετρία, lit. 'the measurement of land'.—Gk. γεω- = γῆ-ος = γη-ος, put for γη-ος, belonging to land; and -μετρία, measurement, from μετρέω, I measure, which from μετρέω, a measure. See above, and see Metro. Der. geometr-ic, geometr-ic-al, geometr-ic-al-ly, geometr-ic-i-an, geometer.

GEORGIC, a poem on husbandry. (L.,—Gk.) 'Georgicks, bookes intreating of the tillage of the ground'; Minshew, ed. 1627. The title of four books on husbandry by Virgil.—Lat. georgica neut. pl. (put for georgica carmina = georgic poems).—Lat. georgicus, relating to husbandry.—Gk. γεωργικός, relating to husbandry.—Gk. γεωργία, tillage.—Gk. γεωργεῖν, to till.—Gk. γη-ος (for γη-ος, relating to the earth); and ἐργον, to work. See Geography and Work. Der. George = Gk. γεωργός, a farmer.

GERANIUM, a kind of plant. (L.,—Gk.) Sometimes called crane's-bill or stork's-bill. 'Geranium, stork-bill or herb robert'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—Lat. geranium, Latinised from Gk. γέρανιον, a geranium, crane's bill.—Gk. γέρανος, a crane; cognate with E. crane; see Crane.

GERFALCON, a kind of falcon; see Gyrfalcon.

GERM, a seed. (F., -L.) Sir T. Browne speaks of the 'germ of . . . an egg;' Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 28, § 3. -F. germe, 'a young shoot, sprout;' Cot. -Lat. germen (stem germin-), a sprout, shoot, bud.

β. Prob. for cermen (= kar-man), growth; from the ✓ KAR, to move about; cf. Skt. char, to move about, live, act. See Fick, i. 522. Der. germin-al, germin-ate, germin-at-ion, from the stem germin-; from the same source, german, q. v., germane. Doublet, germen, Macbeth, iv. 1. 59. [†]

GERMAN, GERMANE, akin. (F., -L.) Nearly obsolete, except in quotations and in the phrase cousins-german or cousins-germans, i. e. cousins having the same grandfather. In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 802; Timon, iv. 3. 344; Hamlet, v. 2. 165. Formerly also spelt germain, as in Cotgrave, and orig. derived rather from the French than directly from Latin. The phrase 'cosins germans' (with the pl. adj. in s according to the F. idiom) occurs in Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus, C. T. Group B, 2558. -O. F. germain, 'germaine, come of the same stock;' Cot. -Lat. germanus, fully akin, said of brothers and sisters having the same parents. From the same root as Germ, q. v.

GERMEN, GERMINAL, GERMINATE; see Germ.

GERUND, a part of a Latin verb. (L.) The derivative gerundine is used as a coined word in Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, i. 1 (speech of Wittypate). -Lat. gerundium, a gerund. -Lat. gerundus, that which is to be done or carried on; fut. part. pass. of gerere, to carry on, perform. -✓ GAS, to bring, cause to go; an extension of ✓ GA, to go, come; allied to E. come. Der. gerund-i-al (from gerundi-um). See also below.

GESTATION, the carrying of young in the womb. (F., -L.) It occurs in the Index to Holland's tr. of Pliny. -O. F. gestation, 'a bearing, or carrying;' Cot. -Lat. acc. gestationem, from nom. gestatio, a carrying. -Lat. gestatus, pp. of gestare, to carry; intensive form of gerere, to carry. See above. Der. gestat-or-y.

GESTICULATE, to make gestures. (L.) 'Or what their servile apes gesticulate;' Ben Jonson, Poetaster, To the Reader (an Epilogue). -Lat. gesticulatus, pp. of gesticulari, to make mimic gestures. -Lat. gesticulus, a mimic gesture; formed, with suffixes -eu- and -i-, from gesti = gestu-, crude form of gestus, a gesture. -Lat. gestus, pp. of gerere, to carry; reflexively, to behave. See Gerund. Der. gesticulat-ion, gesticulat-or, gesticulat-or-y.

GESTURE, a movement of the body. (L.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 3. 37. -Low Lat. gestura, a mode of action. -Lat. gesturus, fut. part. act. of gerere, to carry; reflexively, to behave oneself. See Gerund and Gesticulate.

GET, to seize, obtain, acquire. (E.) M. E. geten, pt. t. gat, pp. geten; Chaucer, C. T. 5792, 293. -A. S. gitan, also gytan, gietan, geotan; pt. t. gat, pp. giten; rarely used in the simple form, but common in the compounds on-gitan, and-gitan, for-gitan, be-gitan, &c.; Grein, ii. 346, i. 511. + Icel. geta. + Goth. gitan, in the comp. bi-gitan, to find, obtain. + Lat. -hendere (base hed), in the comp. prehendere, to seize. + Gk. παύειν (base paú), to seize. -✓ GHAD, to seize; Fick, i. 576. Der. gett-er, gett-ing; be-get, for-get; from the same root are ap-pre-hend, com-pre-hend, re-pre-hend, &c.; also apprize, comprise, enterprise, surprise; impregnable, &c.

GEWGAW, a plaything, specious trifle. (E.) 'Gewgaws and gilded puppets;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Four Plays in One, Triumph of Time, sc. 1. Spelt gewgaudes, id. Woman's Prize, i. 4 (Rowland). Also gugawes, Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, c. 4. 'He counteth them for gygawes;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Court, 1060. Cotgrave explains babioles as 'a trifle, whimwham, gugaw, or small toy;' and fariboles as 'trifles, niftes, flim-flams, why-whaws, idle discourses.' The latter form why-whaw is a mere imitation of the older gugaw. The form gugaw is a corruption of M. E. giuegoue (= give-goue); 'wordes woole, ant wunne, ant wurschipe, and oðer swuche giuegouen' = the world's wealth and joy and worship, and other such gewgaws; Ancren Riwe, p. 196. β. The hard sound of g, and the pl. ending in -en, shew the word to be E. Also u between two vowels = v = older f; so that giuegoue = giuegofe. Here giue is the dat. of gifu, a gift, and signifies 'for a gift;' or it may simply stand for the nom. gifu. And gofe may be A. S. geafe, a gift, Grein, i. 491; cf. A. S. geafe, the dat. case of a sb. signifying 'grace' or 'favour;' Diplomatarium Anglicum Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 459, l. 2. γ. In any case, the word is clearly a reduplicated form from the verb gifan, to give; and the sense is 'given as a gift,' a trifling present, favour, trinket.

δ. It is preserved in North E. 'giffgaff', interchange of discourse, mutual donation and reception; hence the proverb - giffgaff makes good fellowship; Brockett's Glossary of Northern Words. ¶ The derivation from A. S. gegaf, base, vile, is impossible. In that word, the ge- is a mere unaccented prefix; yet the latter syllable may be from the same root. Cf. Icel. glyi-gjif, gewgaws, showy gifts; where -gjif = E. -gaw.

GHAISTLY, terrible. (E.) The h has been inserted, for no very good reason. M. E. gastly; 'gastly for to see;' Chaucer, C. T. 1986. -A. S. gastlic, terrible; Grein, i. 374. Formed, with suffix -lic (= like, -ly), from a base gaist (from an older gist), which is an extension of the base gais (from an older gis) seen in the Goth. us-gais-jan, to terrify, and in the Goth. us-geis-nan, to be astonished. See further under Aghast. ¶ Not to be confused with ghostly, q. v. Der. ghastli-ness; cf. also gasted, K. Lear, ii. 1. 57; gastness, Oth. v. 1. 106. [†]

GHERKIN, a small cucumber. (Du., -Pers.) The h is inserted to keep the g hard. 'Gherkins or Guerkins, a sort of pickled cucumbers;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Spelt gherkin in Skinner, ed. 1671. Shortened for agherkin. -Du. agurkje, a gherkin; cf. 'Gherkins, agurkes' in Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict. ed. 1754. β. Note that the Du. dimin. suffix -ken was formerly used (as explained by Ten Kate) where the dimin. suffix -je now occurs; so that agurkje stands for an older form agurkken, whence the E. gherkin must have been borrowed, with the loss merely of initial a. The form agurkken or agurken presupposes the older form agurke, cited from Sewel.

γ. Of Oriental origin; the a- is due to the Arab. article al; -gur-k is due to Pers. khiydr, a cucumber; Rich. Dict., p. 641. GHOST, a spirit. (E.) The h has been inserted. M. E. goost, gost; Chaucer, C. T. 2770. -A. S. gást, a spirit; Grein, i. 371. + Du. geest. + Dan. geist, genius, a spirit (perhaps borrowed from G.). + G. geist, a spirit. β. The root is the Teutonic GIS = Aryan GHIS, to terrify; as seen in Goth. us-gais-jan, to terrify. It seems to have been given as denoting an object of terror, much as in mod. E. Closely allied to ghastly, from which it differs, however, in the vowel-sound. See Ghastly, Yeast. Der. ghost-ly, ghost-li-ness. [†]

GHOUL, a kind of demon. (Pers.) Pron. gool, to rhyme with cool. -Pers. ghól, an imaginary sylvan demon; supposed to devour men and animals; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1062. GIAOUR, an infidel. (Ital., -Pers.) 'In Dr. Clarke's Travels, this word, which means infidel, is always written djour. Lord Byron adopted the Ital. spelling usual among the Franks of the Levant;' note 14 to Lord Byron's poem of The Giaour. -Pers. gáwr, an infidel; Rich. Dict. p. 1227. An Aryan word (Max Müller). [†]

GIANT, a man of great size. (F., -L., -Gk.) The i was formerly e; but i has been substituted to make the word look more like the Lat. and Gk. forms. M. E. geant, geant; Chaucer, C. T. 13738; King Alisaunder, 3465. -O. F. geant, 'a giant;' Cot. -Lat. acc. gigantem, from nom. gigas, a giant. -Gk. γίγας, a giant (stem γίγαν-). β. From the ✓ GAN, to beget, as if the word meant 'produced;' the prefix γi- seeming to be no more than a reduplication, though sometimes explained from Gk. γη, the earth, as if the word meant 'earth-born.' But this is merely a specimen of popular etymology. Cf. Gk. γί-γ(ε)-γοναι, I am born. Der. gigant-ic, q. v.; giant-ess.

GIBBERISH, nonsensical talk. (E.) Holinshed speaks of 'gibberishing Irish;' Descr. of Ireland, c. 1. 'All kinds of gibberish he had learnt to know;' Drayton, The Mooncalf (R.). Formed from the old verb gibber, to gabble; Hamlet, i. 1. 116. This is merely an imitative word, formed as a variant of jabber, and allied to gabble. The suffix -er is frequentative, and the base gib- is a weak form of gab. See Gabble, Jabber. [†]

GIBBET, a gallows. (F.) M. E. gibbet, gibet, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, i. 106; 'hangen on a gibet;' Ancren Riwe, p. 116. -O. F. gibbet, 'a gibbet;' Cot. (mod. F. gibet). β. Of unknown origin; Littré suggests a comparison with O. F. gibet, a large stick (Roquefort); apparently a dimin. of O. F. gibbe, a sort of arm, an implement for stirring the earth and rooting up plants, apparently a hoe (Roquefort). In this case, the old sense of gibbet was prob. 'an instrument of torture.' γ. Perhaps of Celtic origin; cf. Irish giob-aim, I tear, tug, pull; gibin, a jag. But this is a mere guess. [†]

GIBBON, a kind of ape. (?) Cf. F. gibbon, in Buffon.

GIBBOUS, humped, swelling. (F., -L.) 'Its round and gibbous back;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 26, § 5. The suffix -ous is put for F. -eux, by analogy with other words in which -ous represents O. F. -os (later -eux). -F. gibbeux, 'hulch, hunched, much swelling;' Cot. -Lat. gibbosus, hunched. Formed, with suffix -osus, from Lat. gibba, a hump, hunch; cf. gibbus, bent; gibber, a hump. Cf. Skt. kubja, hump-backed, kumbh, kubh, to be crooked, a lost verb seen in the deriv. kumbha, a pot (Benfey). See Cubit and Hump. Der. gibbous-ness.

GIBE, to mock, taunt. (Scand.) 'And common courtiers love to gybe and fleare;' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 716. Of Scand.

origin; cf. Swed. dial. gipa, to gape, also, to talk rashly and foolishly (Rietz); Icel. geipa, to talk nonsense; Icel. geip, idle talk. See Jape, Jabber. ¶ Also spelt jibe. Der. gibe, sb.

GIBLETS, the internal eatable parts of a fowl, removed before cooking. (F.) 'And set the hare's head against the goose gyblets;' Harrington's tr. of Orlando Furioso, b. xliii. st. 136 (R.); the date of the 1st edition is 1591. 'May feed on giblet-pie;' Dryden, tr. of Persius, vi. 172. 'Sliced beef, giblets, and pettiotoes;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman-hater, i. 2. M. E. gibelet; see Wright's Vocab. i. 179. — O. F. gibelet, which, according to Littre, is the old form of F. gibelotte, stewed rabbit. Of unknown origin; not necessarily related to F. gibier, game. Cf. Gael. giaban, a fowl's gizzard.

GIDDY, unsteady, dizzy. (E.) M. E. gidi, gydi; Rob. of Glouc. p. 68, l. 3. [The A. S. gidig is unauthorised, being only found in Somner's Dict.] Formed from A. S. gyddian, giddian, gyddigan, to sing, be merry; whence the orig. sense of giddy was 'mirthful.' It is said of Nebuchadnezzar, when his heart was elate with pride, that 'ongan ðá gyddigan þurh gylp micel' = he began then to sing (or, to be merry or giddy) through great pride; Cædmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 253; see Grein, i. 505. The verb giddian is a derivative from gid, gied, gyd, a song, poem, saying; Grein, i. 504; a common sb., but of obscure origin. Der. giddi-ly, giddi-ness. ¶ Perhaps the base gid stands for an older gig; see Gig, Jig.

GIER-EAGLE, a kind of eagle. (Du. and F.) In Levit. xi. 18. The first syllable is Dutch, from Du. gier, a vulture; cognate with G. geier, M. H. G. gír, a vulture. The word eagle is F. See Eagle.

GIFT, a thing given, present. (E.) M. E. gift, commonly gyft; Rob. of Glouc. p. 122; P. Plowman, A. iii. 90; B. iii. 99. [The word is perhaps rather Scand. than E.] = A. S. gift, gyft, rare in the sing., but common in the pl. (when it often has the sense of 'nuptials,' with reference to the marriage dowry). In Bosworth's Dict., we find the form gyfta, with a note that there is no singular, but immediately below is given a passage from the Laws of Ine, no. 31, in which the word gyft appears as a fem. sing., with the fem. sing. art. sid; see Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 122, sect. 31. In this obscure passage, sid gyft may mean either 'the dowry' or 'the marriage.' + Icel. gift, gyft (pron. gyft), a gift + Du. gift, a gift, present. + Goth. -gibts, -gifts, only in comp. fragibts, fragifts, promise, gift, espousal. + G. gift, chiefly used in comp. mitgift, a dowry. β. All from the corresponding verb, with the suffix -t (for -ti, weak form of -ta). See Give. Der. gift-ed; heaven-gifted, Milton, Samson Agon. 36. [†]

GIG, a light carriage, a light boat. (Scand.) The orig. idea is that of anything that easily whirls or twirls about. In Shak. gig means a boy's top; L. L. L. iv. 3. 167; v. i. 70, 73. In Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 852, we have: 'This hous is also ful of giggis;' where the sense is uncertain; it may be 'full of whirling things;' since we find 'ful . . . of other werkings' = full of other movements, immediately below. Dr. Strattmann interprets giggis by 'fiddles;' but this is another sense of the same word. β. The hard g shews it to be of Scand. origin, as distinguished from jig, the French form. The mod. Icel. gíga only means 'fiddle,' but the name seems to have been given to the instrument from the rapid motion of the player; cf. Icel. geiga, to take a wrong direction, to rove at random, to look askance; the orig. sense being perhaps 'to keep going.' Some translate Icel. geiga by 'to vibrate, tremble;' cf. Icel. göggra, to reel, stagger; Prov. E. jigger, a swaggerer; Halliwell. γ. Possibly from Teut. GA, to go, which seems to be reduplicated. See Jig.

GIGGLE, to laugh lightly, titter. (E.) 'Giggle, to laugh out, laugh wantonly;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. 'A set of gigglers;' Spectator, no. 158. An attenuated form of M. E. gagelen, to 'gaggle,' or make a noise like a goose; where again gaggle is a weaker form of cackle. 'Gagelin, or cryn as gees, clingo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 184. Cf. Icel. gagi, a goose; G. kichern, O. Du. ghichelen (Kilian), to giggle. A frequentative form, from an imitative root. See Cackle. Der. giggle, sb., giggler.

GIGLET, GIGLOT, a wanton woman. (Scand.; with F. suffix.) In Shak. Meas. for Meas. v. 352; 1 Hen. VI. iv. 7. 41. Earlier, in Prompt. Parv. p. 194; and see the note. Cf. geglotrye, giddiness; How the Good Wife taught her Daughter, l. 159 (in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat). A dimin., with suffix -et or -ot, from an older giggle or gigle. Cotgrave has: 'Gadrouillette, a minx, gigle, flirt, callet, gixie. Here again, gig-le and gixie (= gig-sy) are connected with Icel. gikkir, a pert person, Dan. gik, a wag; and perhaps with the base gig, applied to rapid motion, and thence to lightness of behaviour. See Gig.

GILD, to overlay with gold. (E.) M. E. gilden, Wyclif, Exod. xxvi. 29. — A. S. gyldan, to gild; only in the derivative ge-gyld, gilded, Wright's Voc. i. 41, col. 2. The y is substituted, by vowel-change, for o, as appearing in A. S. gold, gold; cf. Goth. gults, gold. Cf. Icel. gylia (for gylda), to gild. See Gold. Der. gilt, contracted form of gild-ed; gild-er, gild-ing.

GILL (1), an organ of respiration in fishes. (Scand.) 'Gylle of a fische, branchia;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt gile, Wyclif, Tobit, vi. 4. — Dan. gialle, a gill; Swed. gäl. + Icel. gölnar, sb. pl., the gills of a fish. Cf. Icel. gin, the mouth of a beast. — ✓ GHI, to gape, yawn. See Yawn, and see below.

GILL (2), a ravine, yawning chasm. (Scand.) Also spelt ghyll; common in place-names, as Dungeon Ghyll. — Icel. gil, a deep narrow glen with a stream at the bottom; geil, a ravine. — ✓ GHI, to yawn; see above.

GILL (3), with g soft; a quarter of a pint. (F.) M. E. gille, gylle; P. Plowman, B. v. 346 (where it is written lille=jille). — O. F. gelle, a sort of measure for wine; Roquefort. Cf. Low Lat. gillo, a wine-vessel; gella, a wine-vessel, wine-measure; Ducange. Allied to F. jale, a large bowl; also to E. gallon, which is the augmentative form, since a gallon contains 32 gills. See Gallon.

GILL (4), with g soft; a woman's name; ground-ivy. (L.) The name Gill is short for Gillian, which is in Shak. Com. Errors, iii. 1. 31. And Gillian is a softened form of Lat. Iuliana, due to F. pronunciation. This personal fem. name is formed from Lat. Iulius; see July.

β. The ground-ivy was hence called Gill-creeper-by-the-ground (Halliwell); or briefly Gill. Hence also Gill-ale, the herb ale-hoof (Hall.); Gill-burnit-tail, an ignis fatuus; Gill-hooter, an owl; Gill-firt, a wanton girl; firt-gill, the same, Romeo, ii. 4. 162.

GILLIE, a boy, page, menial. (Gael. and Irish.) Used by Sir W. Scott; but Spenser also speaks of 'the Irish horse-boys or cailles, as they call them;' View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 641, col. 2. — Gael. gille, giolla, Irish giolla, a boy, lad, youth, man-servant, lacquey. But Irish ceile, a spouse, companion, servant, whence Culdee, is a different word.

GILLYFLOWER, a kind of flower, a stock. (F., = L., = Gk.) Spelt gelliflowres in Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, 137. Spelt gilloflower by Cotgrave. By the common change of r to l, gilloflower stands for giroflower, spelt geraflower in Baret's Dict. (Halliwell); where the ending flower is a mere E. corruption, like the fish in crayfish, q. v. — O. F. giroflée, a gilloflower; and most properly, the clove gilloflower; Cot. B. Here we have clove-gilloflower as the full form of the name, which is Chaucer's cloue girofne, C. T. 13692; thus confirming the above derivation.

γ. From F. clou de girofle, where clou is from Lat. clavus, a nail (see Clove); and girofle is corrupted from Low Lat. caryophyllum, a Latinised form of Gk. καρυόφυλλον, strictly 'nut-leaf,' a clove-tree. (Hence the name means 'nut-leaf,' or 'nut-leaved clove.') — Gk. κάρυον, crude form of κάρπυον, a nut; and φύλλον, a leaf (= Lat. folium, whence E. foli-age).

GIMBALS, a contrivance for suspending a ship's compass so as to keep it always horizontal. (F., = L.) The contrivance is one which admits of a double movement. The name gimbals is a corruption (with excrement b) of the older word gimmals, also called a gemmow or gemmow-ring. See also gimbal and gimnal in Halliwell; and the excellent remarks in Nares. 'Gemmow, or Gemmow-ring, a double ring, with two or more links;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. In Shak. 'a gimnal bit' is a horse's bit made with linked rings; Hen. V. ii. chor. 26. The forms gemmow and gimnal correspond to O. F. gemaue, masc., and gemelle, fem., a twin. — Lat. gemellus, a twin; a dimin. form from Lat. geminus, double. See Gemini.

GIMCRACK, a piece of trivial mechanism, slight device, toy. (F.? and C.) Formerly also gincrack. 'This is a gincrack;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Elder Brother, iii. 3; where it is applied to a young man, and signifies 'a fop,' or 'a spruce-looking simpleton.' 1. The former syllable may either be gin, an engine, contrivance see Gin (2); or, as would rather appear, is the prov. E. gim or jim, signifying 'neat, spruce, smart;' Halliwell, and Kersey. In the latter case, the spelling gimcrack is erroneous. 2. The latter syllable is the sb. crack, 'an arch, lively boy,' a common sense of the word in old plays; see Halliwell and Nares. It is derived from the prov. E. crack, to boast, also spelt crake, well exemplified by Nares under the latter form. Hence a gimcrack = a spruce arch lad; or, as a term of contempt, an upstart or fop. Later, it was used of anything showy but slight; esp. of any kind of light machinery or easily broken toy. Cf. Gael. cracaire, a talker. See Crack.

GIMLET, GIMBLET, a tool for boring holes. (F., = G.) 'And see there the gimbles, how they make their entry;' Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, i. 1. — O. F. gimbelet, 'a gimlet or piercer;' Cot. = mod. F. gibele (by loss of m). Formerly (better) spelt guimbelet or guibelet; as seen by quotations in Littre. β. As we also have the form wimble in English with the same sense, the O. F. gu = M. H. G. w. Hence the word is formed (with a frequentative suffix -el, and a dimin. suffix -et) from a Teutonic base WIMB

γ. Of M. H. G. origin; the base wind and frequentative suffix -el produced a form windelen or wendelen, to turn repeatedly, preserved in mod. G. wendel-bohrer, a wimble or gimlet, wendel-baum, an axle-tree, and wendel-treppe, a winding staircase. See Wimble and Wind. ¶ There are Celtic forms for gimlet, but they seem to have been borrowed. The word is plainly Teutonic; cf. Icel. vindla, to wind up, vindill, a wisp.

GIMMAL, GIMMAL-RING; see Gimbals.

GIMP, with hard g, a kind of trimming, made of silk, woollen, or cotton twist. (F., -O. H. G.) 'Gimp, a sort of mohair thread covered with the same, or a twist for several works formerly in use;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Named from a resemblance to the folds of a nun's wimple, or neck-kierchief; at any rate, it is the same word. - F. guimpe, a nun's wimple, or lower part of the hood, gathered in folds round the neck; a shortened form of guimpe; thus the index to Cotgrave has: 'the crepin [wimple] of a French hood, guimpe, guimpe, guimpe. - O. H. G. wimpal, which (according to Littré) meant a summer-dress or light robe; G. wimpel, a pennon, pendant, streamer. See Wimple. ¶ It looks as if there has been confusion between the F. guimpe, a wimple, and the F. guipure, a thread of silk lace; since gimp (while answering to the former in form) certainly answers better to the latter in sense. The F. guipure is also of Teutonic origin, from the base WIP, to twist or bind round, appearing in Goth. weipan, to crown, wipja, a crown, waips, a crown = E. wisp, formerly wips. See Wisp. Note further, that wimple and wisp are both, probably, from the same root; which may account for the confusion above noted.

GIN (1), to begin. (E.; pron. with g hard.) Obsolete; or only used as a supposed contraction of begin, though really the orig. word whence begin is formed. It should therefore never be denoted by 'gin'; but the apostrophe should be omitted. Common in Shak. Macb. i. 2. 25, &c. M. E. ginnen; Chaucer, C. T. 3020. - A. S. ginnan, to begin; only used in the compounds on-ginnan, to begin, Matt. iv. 7; and be-ginnan, to begin. + Du. be-ginnen; the simple ginnen being unused. + O. H. G. bi-ginnan; G. be-ginnen. + Goth. ginnan, only in the comp. du-ginnan, to begin. β. Fick (iii. 98) connects it with Icel. gunnr, war; as if the orig. sense was 'to strike'. Cf. Skt. han, to strike. He also cites the Lithuanian ginù, I defend (connected with genu, I drive), Ch. Slavonic žena, I drive; i. 79, 577. - ✓ GHAN, to strike. See Begin.

GIN (2), a trap, snare. (1. Scand.; 2. F., -L.) 1. M. E. gin; 'uele ginnes heþ þe dyeuel uor to nime þet uolk' = many snares hath the devil for to catch the people; Aenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, p. 54. In this particular sense of 'trap' or 'snare,' the word is really Scandinavian. - Icel. ginna, to dupe, deceive; whence ginning, imposture, fraud; and ginnungr, a juggler. 2. But the M. E. gin was also used in a far wider sense, and was (in many cases) certainly a contraction of F. engin = Lat. ingenium, a contrivance or piece of ingenuity. Thus, in describing the mechanism by which the horse of brass (in the Squieres Tale) was moved, we are told that 'therein lieth the effect of al the gin' = therein is the pith of all the contrivance; C. T. 10636. For this word, see Engine. ¶ Particularly note the use of the word in P. Plowman, B. xviii. 250; 'For gygas the geaunt with a gynne engnyed' = for Gigas the giant contrived by a contrivance.

GIN (3), a kind of spirit. (F., -L.) Formerly called geneva, whence gin was formed by contraction. Pope has gin-shops; Dunciad, iii. 148. 'Geneva, a kind of strong water;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. So called by confusion with the town in Switzerland of that name; but really a corruption. - O. F. genevre, 'juniper;' Cot. [It is well known that gin is flavoured with berries of the juniper.] - Lat. iuniperus, a juniper; for letter-changes, see Brachet. See Juniper. [†]

GINGER, the root of a certain plant. (F., -L., -Gk., -Skt.) So called because shaped like a horn; the resemblance to a deer's antler is striking. In early use. M. E. ginger; whence ginger-bred (gingerbread); Chaucer, C. T. 13783. An older form gingiwere (= gingiwere) occurs in the Ancran Riwle, p. 370. - O. F. gingibre (and doubtless also gingibre) in the 12th century; mod. F. gingembre; Littré. - Lat. zingiber, ginger. - Gk. ζιγγίβερος, ginger. - Skt. griṅga-vera, ginger. - Skt. griṅga, a horn; and (perhaps) vera, body (i. e. shape). Der. ginger-bread. [†]

GINGERLY, with soft steps. (Scand.) 'Go gingerly;' Skelton, Garl. of Laurell, l. 1203; see Dyce's note. Lit. 'with tottering steps;' cf. Swed. dial. gingla, gāngla, to go gently, totter; frequent. verb from gāng, a going; see Gang.

GINGHAM, a kind of cotton cloth. (F.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. Called guingan in French. Both F. and E. words are corruptions (according to Littré) of Guingamp, the name of a town in Brittany where such fabrics are made. ¶ Webster says 'Java ginggan;' without any further explanation. E. Müller cites from Heyse, p. 384, the Javanese ginggang, perishable.

GINGLE, another spelling of Jingle, q. v.

GIPSY, the same as Gypsy, q. v.

GIRAFFE, the camelopard, an African quadruped with long neck and legs. (F., -Span., -Arab., -Egyptian.) 'Giraffa, an Asian beast, the same with Camelopardus;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Here giraffa = Span. girafa. We now use the F. form. - F. giraffe. - Span. girafa. - Arab. zarāf or zarāfat, a camelopard; Rich. Dict. p. 772, col. 2. See Dozy, who gives the forms as zarāfa, zorāfa, and notes that it is also called jorāfa. [†]

GIRD (1), to enclose, bind round, surround, clothe. (E.) M. E. gürden, girden, gerden; the pp. girt is in Chaucer, C. T. 331. - A. S. gyrdan, to gird, surround; Grein, i. 536. + Du. gorden. + Icel. gyrða, to gird (a kindred word to gerða, to fence in). + Dan. giorde. + G. gürten. β. These are weak verbs; an allied strong verb occurs in the Goth. comp. bi-gairdan, to begird; from a base GARD, to enclose, an extension of the Teut. base GAR, to seize. - ✓ GHAR, to seize (Fick, i. 580); whence also Gk. χείρ, the hand; Skt. har, to seize, and Lat. hortus, an enclosure. γ. Fick (iii. 102) gives the old base GARD, to enclose, as the Teutonic form, whence were formed the Teutonic garda, a hedge, yard, garden; gerda, a girth, girdle; and gordja, to gird. Der. gird-er; gird-le, q. v.; girth, q. v.

From the same root we also have garden, yard; and even chirography, horticulture, cohort, court, and surgeon. [†]

GIRD (2), to jest at, jibe. (E.) See Gride.

GIRDLE, a band for the waist. (E.) M. E. girdel, gerdel; Chaucer, C. T. 360. - A. S. gyrdel, a girdle; Mark, i. 6. + Du. gordel. + Icel. gyrbill. + Swed. gördel. + G. gürtel.

β. From the A. S. gyrdan, to gird, with suffix -el; see Gird. Doublet, girth.

GIRTH, the measure round the waist; the bellyband of a saddle. (Scand.) M. E. gerth. 'His gerth and his stiropes also;' Richard Coer de Lion, 5733; and see Prompt. Parv. This is a Scand. form. - Icel. gjörð, a girdle, girth; gerð, girth round the waist. + Dan. giord, a girth. + Goth. gairda, a girdle, Mark, i. 6. β. From the Teutonic base GARD, to enclose (Fick, iii. 102); see Gird.

Der. girth, verb; also written girt. Doublet, girdle. [†]

GIRL, a female child, young woman. (O. Low G.) M. E. gerl, girl, gurl, formerly used of either sex, and signifying either a boy or girl. In Chaucer, C. T. 3767, girl is a young woman; but in C. T. 666, the pl. girlles means young people of both sexes. In Will. of Palerne, 816, and King Alisaunder, 2802, it means 'young women;' in P. Plowman, B. i. 33, it means 'boys;' cf. B. x. 175. Both boy and girl are of O. Low German origin; see Boy. β. Formed as a dimin., with suffix -l (= -la), from O. Low G. gür, a child; see Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 528. Cf. Swiss gurre, gurrli, a depreciatory term for a girl; Sanders, G. Dict. i. 609, 641. Root uncertain. Der. girl-ish, girl-ish-ly, girl-ish-ness, girl-hood.

GIST, the main point or pith of a matter. (F., -L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. The sb. giste (= O. F. giste, a lodging, resting-place) occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and in Kersey. The latter has: 'Giste, a couch, or resting-place.' But the use of the word is really due to an old F. proverb, given by Cotgrave, s. v. lievre. 'Ie scay bien ou gist le lievre, I know well which is the very point, or knot of the matter,' lit. I know well where the hare lies. This gist is the mod. F. git, and similarly we have, in modern French, the phrase 'tout git en cela,' the whole turns upon that; and again, 'c'est là que git le lievre,' there lies the difficulty, lit. that's where the hare lies; Hamilton's F. Dict. β. The O. F. sb. giste (F. gitte) is derived from the vb. gésir, to lie, of which the 3 pers. pres. was gist (mod. F. git). - Lat. iacēre, to lie; an intransitive verb formed from Lat. iacōre, to throw. See Jet, verb.

GITTERN, a kind of guitar. (O. Du., -L., -Gk.) M. E. giteren (with one t); Chaucer, C. T. 12400; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 233. A corruption of cittern or cithern; see Cithern and Guitar. The form of the word is O. Dutch. 'Gkiterne, ghitterne, a guitar; Kilian and Oudemans.

GIVE, to bestow, impart, deliver over. (E.) M. E. yeuen, yiuen, zeuen, yiuen (with u for v); Chaucer, C. T. 230. In old Southern and Midland English, the g almost always appears as y (often written 3); the modern hard sound of the g is due to the influence of Northern English. 'Gifand and takand woundis wyd;' Barbour's Bruce, xiii. 160. The pt. t. is yaf or yaf, Northern gaf, changing to yeuen or zeuen in the pl. number; pp. yiuen, yiuen, zeuen, zeuen, rarely 3ifen, gifen. - A. S. gifan (also giefan, geofan, giefan, gyfan), Grein, i. 505; pt. t. ic geaf, pl. we geafon, pp. gefen. + Du. geuen. + Icel. gefa. + Dan. give. + Swed. gifva. + Goth. giban. + G. geben. β. From Teutonic base GAB, to give; root unknown. Der. giv-tr; also gif-t, q. v.

GIZZARD, a first stomach in birds. (F., -L.) Spelt gisard in Minshew. The d is excrement. M. E. giser. 'The fowel that hyt volor that etith the stomak or the giser of ticius' = the bird that is named the vulture, that eats the stomach or gizzard of Tityus;

Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 12, l. 3054. — O. F. gezier, jugier, juisier (mod. F. gésier); see Littré, who quotes a parallel passage from Le Roman de la Rose, 19506, concerning 'li juisier Ticius' = the gizzard of Tityus. — Lat. gigerium, only used in the pl. gigeria, the cooked entrails of poultry.

GLABROUS, smooth. (L.) Rare. 'French elm, whose leaves are thicker, and more florid, glabrous, and smooth;' Evelyn, i. iv. § 1 (Todd's Johnson). Coined, by adding suffix -ous, from Lat. glabr-, base of glaber, smooth. Akin to Lat. glubere, to peel, and gluma, a husk; the orig. sense being 'peeled.' Akin to Gk. γλαφυρός, hollowed, smoothed, from γλάφειν, to hew, carve, dig, a variant of γράφειν, to grave. See GRAVE, verb.

GLACIAL, icy, frozen. (F., — L.) 'Glacial, freezing, cold;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'White and glaucous bodies;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. ii. c. 1. § 3. — F. glacial, 'icy;' Cot. — Lat. glacialis, icy. — Lat. glacies, ice. Cf. Lat. gelu, cold; see Gelid. Der. From same source, glacier, q. v.; glacis, q. v.

GLACIER, an ice-slope or field of ice on a mountain-side. (F., — L.) Modern in E. A Savoy word. — F. glacier, as in 'les glaciers de Savoie;' Littré. — F. glace, ice. — Lat. glaciem, acc. of glacies, ice. See above.

GLACIS, a smooth slope, in fortification. (F., — L.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — F. glacis, 'a place made slippery, . . . a sloping bank or causey;' Cot. — O. F. glacer, 'to freeze, harden, cover with ice;' id. — F. glace, ice. See above.

GLAD, pleased, cheerful, happy. (E.) M. E. glad, Chaucer, C. T. 310; also glad, Ancrén Riwe, p. 282. — A. S. glæd, shining, bright, cheerful, glad; Grein, i. 512. + Du. glad, bright, smooth, sleek; O. Du. glad, glowing (Kilian). + Icel. gladr, bright, glad. + Dan. glad, joyous. + Swed. glad, joyous. + G. glatt, smooth, even, polished. + Russ. gladkie, even, smooth, polished, spruce. β. According to Fick, iii. 112, the base is GAL, equivalent to Aryan GHAL or GHAR. The orig. sense was 'shining;' hence it is from ✓ GHAR, to shine, Fick, i. 81; cf. Skt. ghri, to shine, gharma, heat; Gk. γλαρός, warm. See Glide, Glow. Der. glad-ly, glad-ness; also gladsome = M. E. gladsum, Wyclif, Psalm, ciii. 15, Chaucer, C. T. 14784; glad-some-ly, glad-some-ness; also gladd-en, in which the suffix -en is modern and due to analogy; cf. 'gladeth himself' = gladdens himself, Chaucer, C. T. 10923. And see below.

GLADE, an open space in a wood. (Scand.) 'Farre in the forrest, by a hollow glade;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 5. 13. Of Scand. origin, and closely connected with Icel. gladr, bright, shining (see Glad), the orig. sense being an opening for light, a bright track, hence an open track in a wood (Nares), or a passage cut through reeds and rushes, as in Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, iv. 1. 64. Cf. Swed. dial. glad-ypen, completely open, said of a lake from which the ice has all melted away (Rietz); Swed. dial. glatt (= gladt), completely, as in glatt öppet, completely open; id. Mr. Wedgwood also cites the Norwegian glette, 'a clear spot among clouds, a little taking up of the weather; glette, to peep; glott, an opening, a clear spot among clouds;' see Aasen. These are exactly similar formations from Icel. glitta, to shine; see Glitter, a word which is from the same root as Glad. And see Glow.

GLADIATOR, a swordsman. (L.) 'Two hundred gladiators;' Dryden, tr. of Persius, v. 115. — Lat. gladiator, a swordsman. — Lat. gladius, a sword. See Glaive. Der. gladiator-i-al; also, from the same source, gladi-ole, a plant like the lily, from Lat. gladi-ol-us, a small sword, dimin. of gladius.

GLAIR, the white of an egg. (F., — L.) Little used now. M. E. gleyre of an ey = white of an egg; Chaucer, C. T. 16274; and Prompt. Parv. — O. F. glair; 'la glaire d'un œuf, the white of an egg;' Cot. β. Here glair is a corruption of claire, as evidenced by related words, esp. by Ital. chiara d'un ovo, 'the white of an egg,' Florio (where Ital. chi = Lat. cl, as usual); and by Span. clara de huevo, glair, white of an egg. — Lat. clarus, clear, bright; whence Low Lat. clara oui, the white of an egg (Ducange). See Clear, Clarify. ¶ Not to be confused with Glaire.

GLAIVE, a sword. (F., — L.) M. E. gleiue (with u = v); Havelok, 1770; glayue, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 653 (or 654). — O. F. glaiue, 'a gleave, or sword, also, a lance, or horseman's staff;' Cot. — Lat. gladius, a sword; see Brachet. β. The form gladius stands for cladius, as shewn by the Irish claidheamh, a sword; see Claymore. Cf. Lat. clades, destruction, slaughter. γ. The form of the base is kla, for kal, leading to ✓ KAR. The sense of the root seems to be 'to strike;' cf. Skt. grī, to hurt, to wound, break.

¶ Perhaps allied to Hilt, q. v.

GLANCE, a swift dart of light, a glimpse, hasty look. (Scand.) Not in early use. Spencer has glancee as a verb: 'The glancing sparkles through her bever glared;' F. Q. v. 6. 38. It occurs often in Shak., both as vb. and sb.; Two Gent. i. 1. 4; Mids. Nt. Dr. v.

13. Either borrowed from O. Dutch, or of Scand. origin; it is better to take it as the latter, since the Swedish and Danish account for it more completely. Also note that the sb. is older than the verb, contrary to what might (at first) be expected. — Swed. glans, lustre, gloss, brightness, splendour; O. Swed. glans, splendour; whence the derived verb glänsa, to shine. + Dan. gländs, lustre, brightness, splendour, gloss; whence the verb gländse, to gloss, glaze. + Du. glans, lustre, brightness, splendour, gloss; whence glanzen, to put a gloss upon. + G. glanz, splendour; whence glänzen, to glitter. β. But this sb. glans is formed from an older verb, preserved in Dan. glindse, to shine, and in the Swed. dial. glinta, glänta, to slip, slide, glance aside (as when we speak of an arrow glancing against a tree); Rietz. Rietz makes the important and interesting remark, that Grimm (Gramm. iii. 59) supposes the existence of a strong verb glintan, to shine, with a pt. t. glant, and pp. gluntun, 'which is precisely the very form which survives among us [Swedes] still.' γ. It is further evident that glint is a nasalised form from the Teutonic base GLIT, to shine, glance (Fick, iii. 112); whence Icel. glit, a glitter, glita, glitra, to glitter, Goth. glit-munjan, to shine, glitter; also (with inserted n), Swed. dial. glinta, M. E. glinten; we may also compare Du. glinster, a glittering, glinsteren, to glitter. See Glint, Glitter, Glisten, Glass, and Glow.

GLAND, a cell or fleshy organ in the body which secretes animal fluid. (F., — L.) 'Gland, a flesh-kernel;' Kersey, ed. 1715. — O. F. glande, 'a kernell, a fleshy substance filled with pores, and growing between the flesh and skin;' Cot. — O. F. gland, an acorn. — Lat. glandem, acc. of glans, an acorn. β. Lat. glans stands for gal-, and is cognate with Gk. βάλανος, an acorn, lit. the 'dropped' or 'shed' fruit, from Gk. βάλλειν, to cast. — ✓ GAL, older form GAR, to fall, to let fall, cast; cf. Skt. gal, to fall, to drop. ¶ The change to Gk. β occurs also in Gk. βοῦς = Skt. go = E. cow; &c. Der. glandi-form, from Lat. glandi-, crude form of glans; glandi-fer-ous (from Lat. -fer, bearing); gland-ule, a dimin. form, whence glandul-ar, glandul-ous; gland-ers, a disease of the glands of horses, Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2. 51.

GLARE, to shine brightly, to stare with piercing sight. (E.) M. E. glaren. 'Swiche glaring eyen hadde he, as an hare;' Chaucer, C. T. 686 (or 684). 'It is not al gold that glareth;' id. House of Fame, i. 272. 'Thet gold thet is bricht and glareth;' Kentish Sermons, in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 27, l. 31. Probably a true E. word; cf. A. S. glær, a pellucid substance, amber (Bosworth, Leo). + Du. glören, to glimmer. + Icel. glóra, to gleam, glare like a cat's eyes. + M. H. G. glosen, to shine, glow. β. The r stands for an older s, as shewn by the M. H. G. form. Hence glare is closely connected with Glass, q. v. Der. glar-ing-ly, glar-ing-ness.

GLASS, a well-known hard, brittle, transparent substance. (E.) Named from its transparency. M. E. glas, Chaucer, C. T. 198. — A. S. glas, glass; Grein, i. 513. + Du. glas. + Dan. glas, glar. + Swed. glas; O. Swed. glas, glær (Ihre). + Icel. glær, sometimes glas. + G. glas, O. H. G. glas. β. One of the numerous derivatives of the old European base GAL, to shine (Fick, iii. 103). — ✓ GHAR, to shine; cf. Skt. ghri, to shine; gharma, warmth. See Glow. Der. glass-blow-er, glass-wort, glass-y, glass-i-ness; also glaze = M. E. glasen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 49, 61; whence glaz-ing, glaz-i-er (= glaz-er, like bow-er, law-er = bow-er, law-er).

GLAUCOUS, grayish blue. (L., — Gk.) A botanical word; see Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. — Lat. glauco, blueish. — Gk. γλαυκός, gleaming, glancing, silvery, bluish; whence γλαύσσειν (= γλαύκειν), to shine.

GLEAM, a beam of light, glow. (E.) M. E. gleam, gleem, glem; Havelok, 2122; Ancrén Riwe, p. 94. — A. S. glēm, [with long ē due to j], splendour, gleam, brightness, Grein, i. 513; Leo. Cf. gliomu, glimu, brightness, ornament; Grein, i. 515. + O. Sax. glimo, brightness; in 'glitandi glimo' = glittering splendour; Heland, 3146. + O. H. G. glimo, a glow-worm. β. The exact formation of the word is a little obscure; but the final m is merely suffixed (as in doo-m), the Teutonic base being gli- or gl-, put for an older base GAL.

γ. Related words further appear in the Gk. χλι-αρός, warm, χλι-ω, I become warm; Skt. ghri, to shine (base ghar). δ. Thus the Teutonic base GAL = Aryan GHAR; so that the root is GHAR, to shine. Fick, i. 578, 579. See Glow, Glimmer. Der. gleam, vb., gleam-y.

GLEAN, to gather small quantities of corn after harvest. (E.; modified by F.) M. E. glenen, P. Plowman, C. ix. 67. — O. F. glener, glaner, to glean; mod. F. glaner. — Low Lat. glenare, found in a document dated A. D. 561 (Brachet). — Low Lat. glena, glenna, gelina, gelima, a handful; a word ultimately of E. origin. β. We must notice the by-form gleam or gleme. 'To gleame come, spicilegere;' Levins, 208. 20. 'To gleme come, spicilegium facere; Gleaner of come, spicilegus;' Huloot. γ. The form gleme is also found, by metathesis, as gelm, which was weakened, as usual, to yelm. 'Yelm, v. to place straw ready for the thatcher, lit. to place handfuls ready. Women sometimes yelm, but they do not thatch;' Oxfordshire Glossary, E. D. S. GL. C. 5. 6. The original of gelm, or yelm, is the A. S. gilm, a handful; cf. 'gilm, a yelm, a handful of reaped corn, a bundle, bottle, manipulus. Eowre gilmas stodon=your sheaves stood up; Gen. xxxvii. 7;' Bosworth's A. S. Dict. 6. The prob. root is GHAR, to seize, whence, by the usual and regular gradations, would be formed a Teutonic base GAL or GIL, giving the sb. gil-m, a handful; cf. Gk. χαῖρ, the hand, Skt. hāra, the hand, also a seizing, a carrying away, Skt. hary, to take, hri, to seize, carry away. ¶ In this view, the O. F. glener was really derived from E., and not vice versa. In fact, the Low Lat. form cannot be clearly traced to any other source. The better form is gleam. Der. glean-er. [†]

GLEBE, soil; esp. land attached to an ecclesiastical benefice. (F., -L.) 'Have any glebe more fruitful;' Ben Jonson, The Fox, A. v. sc. 1 (Mosca). The comp. glebe-land is in Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 21. - O. F. glebe, 'glebe, land belonging to a parsonage;' Cot. - Lat. gleba, soil, a clod of earth; closely allied to Lat. globus. See GLOBE. Der. gleb-ous, gleb-y; glebe-land.

GLEDE (1), the bird called a kite. (E.) M. E. glede, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 1696. - A. S. glida, a kite, lit. 'the glider,' from the sailing motion of the bird; Grein, i. 56; allied to A. S. glidan, to glide. See GLIDE. ¶ Strictly, glida is from a base GLID, whence also glidan.

GLEDE (2), a glowing coal; obsolete. (E.) M. E. glede, Chaucer, C. T. 1099. - A. S. glēd, Grein, i. 513. [Here ē = ð, mutation of o.] - A. S. glōwan, to glow; see GLOW. So also Dan. gløde, a live coal; from glō, to glow.

GLEE, joy, mirth, singing. (E.) M. E. gle, glee; Will. of Palerne, 824; also gleu, glew, Havelok, 2332. - A. S. gleow, glēo, gliw, and sometimes glig, joy, mirth, music; Grein, i. 515. + Icel. glý, glee, gladness. + Swed. dial. gly, mockery, ridicule (Rietz). Cf. Gk. χλεύω, a jest, joke; Russ. glum, a jest, joke. β. Form of the root, GHLU; sense unknown.

GLÉN, a narrow valley. (C.) In Spenser, Sheph. Kalendar, April, 26. - Gael. and Irish gleann, a valley, gen; W. glyn; Corn. glyn. β. Perhaps related to W. glan, brink, side, shore, bank (of a river); with which cf. Goth. hlains, a hill, orig. 'a slope;' Luke, iii. 5; Lat. clinare, E. lean. See LEAN. ¶ The alleged A. S. glen is unauthorised.

GLIB (1), smooth, slippery, voluble. (Dutch.) The orig. sense is 'slippery;' Shak. has 'glib and oily;' K. Lear, i. 1. 227; 'glib and slippery;' Timon, i. 1. 53. We also find glibbery. 'What, shall thy lubrical and glibbery muse,' &c.; Ben Jonson, Poetaster, Act v (Tibullus). These are forms borrowed from Dutch. - Du. glibberig, slippery; glibberen, to slide; related to glippen, to slip away, glijden, to glide, glad, smooth, slippery. β. This Du. glibbery (of which glib is, apparently, a familiar contraction) prob. superseded the M. E. glider, a form not found in books, but preserved in Devonshire glidder, slippery (Halliwell), of which the more original glid occurs as a translation of lubricum in the A. S. version of Psalm, xxxiv. 7, ed. Spelman. This form glid, with its extension glider, is from A. S. glidan, to glide. [In exactly the same way we find M. E. slider, slippery (Chaucer, C. T. 1266), from the verb to slide.] See GLIDE.

¶ I find 'glib, slippery' in O'Reilly's Irish Dictionary, but this is doubtful; it seems due to Irish glibsléamhain, slippery with sleet, in which it is really the latter half of the word that means 'slippery.' The Gael. glib, glib really means 'sleet,' and orig. 'moisture;' cf. Corn. gleb, wet, moist, glibor, moisture. These words give no satisfactory explanation of Du. glibberig, which must not be separated from Du. glippen, to slip, steal away, glissen, to slide, and glijden, to glide. Der. glib-ly, glib-ness.

GLIB (2), a lock of hair. (C.) 'Long glibbes, which is a thick curled bush of heare, hanging downe over their eyes;' Spenser, View of State of Ireland; Globe ed. p. 630, col. 2. - Irish and Gael. glib, a lock of hair; also, a slut.

GLIB (3), to castrate; obsolete. (E.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, ii. 1. 149. The g is merely prefixed, and stands for the A. S. prefix ge- (Goth. ga-). The orig. form is lib. 'Acaponare, to capon, to gelde, to lib, to slaie;' Florio, ed. 1612. Of E. origin, as shewn by the prefixed g; lib would answer to an A. S. *lybban, where y would stand for an older u. Clearly cognate with Du. lubben, to castrate; and prob. allied to lop. See LOP.

GLIDE, to slide, flow smoothly. (E.) M. E. gliden, pt. t. glod or gloud; Chaucer, C. T. 10707. - A. S. glidan, Grein, i. 516. + Du. gliden. + Dan. glide. + Swed. glida. + G. gleiten. Cf. Russ. gladkie, smooth; gladite, to make smooth; also goluii, naked, bare, bald. β. Closely connected with Glad, q. v. Fick suggests for the latter the Teutonic base GLA or GAL = Indo-European GHAL = Aryan ✓ GHAR, to shine; whence also E. gl-ib, gl-eam, gl-ow, gl-immer, gl-ance, &c. See Gleam, Glow.

GLIMMER, to shine faintly. (Scand.) M. E. glimeren, whence the pres. part. glimerand, Will. of Palerne, 1427. - Dan. glimre, to glimmer; glimmer, glitter, also mica; Swed. dial. glimmer, to glitter, glimmer, a glimmer, glitter; Swed. glimmer, mica (from its glitter). + G. glimmer, a glimmer, mica; glimmern, to glimmer. β. These are frequentative forms with suffix -er-; shorter forms appear in Dan. glimme, to shine, Swed. glimma, to glitter, Du. glimmen, G. glimmen, to shine. γ. Even these shorter forms are unoriginal; cf. prov. G. glimm, a spark (Flügel); Swed. dial. glim, a glance (Rietz); words closely related to the E. sb. gleam. See Gleam, Glow. We even find the sb. glim, brightness, in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 1087; this is borrowed from the Scandinavian rather than taken from A. S. Der. glimmer, sb.; and see below.

GLIMPSE, a short gleam, weak light; hurried glance or view. (Scand.) The p is excrement; the old word was glimsa. M. E. glimsen, to glimpse; whence the sb. glimsing, a glimpse. 'Ye have som glimsing, and no parfit sight;' Chaucer, C. T. 10257. The word is a mere variant of glimmer, and formed by suffixing -s to the base glim-. See above.

GLINT, to glance, to shine. (Scand.) Obsolete; but important as being the word whence glance was formed; see GLANCE. 'Her eye glint Aside;' Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1223; cf. Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 70, 114, 671, 1026; B. 218. A nasalised form from the base GLIT, to shine; see GLITTER, Glow. [†]

GLISTEN, GLISTER, to glitter, shine. (E.) These are mere extensions from the E. base glis-, to shine; which appears in M. E. glisien, to shine; 'in glisynde wede'=in glistening garment; An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 91, l. 21. - A. S. *glisian, only in the deriv. glisnian, to gleam; Grein, i. 516. β. Glisnian is formed from the base glis- by the addition of the n so often used to extend such bases; and hence we had M. E. glisnien, with pres. part. glisnande, glittering; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 165. This M. E. glisnien would give a later E. glisen, but the word is always spelt glis-t-en, with an excrement t, which is frequently, however, not sounded. B. Similarly, from the base glis-, with suffixed -t and the frequentative -er, was formed M. E. glisteren or glisteren. 'The water glistered over al;' Gower, C. A. ii. 252. Cf. O. Du. glisteren (Oudemans); now nasalised into mod. Du. glinsteren, to glitter. C. Finally, the base glis- stands for an older glits-; see GLITTER, Glint.

GLITTER, to gleam, sparkle. (Scand.) M. E. glitteren (with one t); Chaucer, C. T. 979 (or 977); 'gliteren and glent;' Gawain and the Grene Knight, 604. - Icel. glitra, to glitter; frequentative of glita, to shine, sparkle. + Swed. glittra, to glitter; glitter, sb. glitter, spangle. Cf. A. S. glitnian, to glitter, Mark, ix. 3; Goth. glitmunjan, to shine, Mark, ix. 3. β. Shorter forms appear in O. Sax. glitan, M. H. G. glizen (G. gleissen), to shine; Icel. glit, sb. glitter. γ. All from the Teutonic base GLIT, to shine; Fick, iii. 112. This is an extension of the Teutonic base GLI, to shine; from Aryan ✓ GHAR, to shine. See Gleam, Glow. Der. glitter, sb.; and see glisten, glister, glint. [†]

GLOAT, to stare, gaze with admiration. (Scand.) Also spelt glote. 'So he glotes [stares], and grins, and bites;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Mad Lover, ii. 2. 'Gloting [peeping] round her rock;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odyssey, xii. 150. - Icel. glotta, to grin, smile scornfully. + Swed. dial. glotta, glutta, to peep (Rietz); connected with Swed. dial. gloa, (1) to glow, (2) to stare. Cf. Swed. glo, to stare; Dan. gloe, to glow, to stare. β. Hence glo-te is a mere extension of glow. See Glow.

GLOBE, a ball, round body. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 153. - O. F. globe, 'a globe, ball;' Cot. - Lat. globum, acc. of globus, a ball; allied to glomus, a ball, clue (E. clue or clew), and to gleba, a clod of earth (E. glebe). See Glebe and Clew. Root uncertain. Der. glob-ate (Lat. globatus, globe-shaped); glob-ose (Lat. globosus), Milton, P. L. v. 753, also written glob-ous, id. v. 649; glob-y; glob-ule (Lat. glob-ulus, dimin. of globus); glob-ul-ar, glob-ul-ous, glob-ul-ar-i-ty. See below.

GLOMERATE, to gather into a mass or ball. (Lat.) 'A river, which after many glomerating dances, increases Indus;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 70 (p. 69 in R.) - Lat. glomeratus, pp. of glomerare, to collect into a ball. - Lat. glomer-, stem of glomus, a ball or clew of yarn; allied to E. clew and to Lat. globus, a globe. See Clew and Globe. Der. glomerat-ion, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 832; also ag-glomerate, con-glomerate.

GLOOM, cloudiness, darkness, twilight. (E.) In Milton, P. L. i. 244, 544. [Seldom found earlier except as a verb. 'A glooming peace;' Romeo, v. 3. 305. 'Now glooming [frowning] sadly;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 6. 42. Cf. M. E. glommen, glomben (with excrement b), to frown; Rom. of the Rose, 4356.] - A. S. glóm, gloom, twilight; Grein, i. 517; also glómming (whence E. gloaming); id. +

Swed. glåm, in adj. glåmig, wan, languid of look; Swed. dial. glåmug, staring, woful, wan, from the vb. glo, glóa, to glow, shine, stare (Rietz). β. This connects the word at once with E. glow; see Glow. The orig. sense was 'a glow,' i. e. faint light; similarly glimmer is used of a faint light only, though connected with gleam. γ. Note also prov. G. glumm, gloomy, troubled, glum; see Glum. ¶ The connection between glow, faint light, and glow, light, is well illustrated by Spenser. 'His glistering armour made A little glooming light, much like a shade;' F. Q. i. 1. 14. Der. gloom-y, Shak. Lucrece, 803; gloom-i-ly, gloom-i-ness; gloom-ing.

GLORY, renown, fame. (F., -L.) M. E. glorie, Ancrén Riwle, pp. 358, 362. -O. F. glorie, later gloire. -Lat. gloria, glory; no doubt for cloria; cf. Lat. inclutus (in-clu-tus), renowned. + Gk. κλῆος, glory; κλυτός, renowned. + Skt. gravas, glory. + Russ. slava, glory. β. From the verb which appears in Lat. cluere, Gk. κλύειν, Russ. slumat, Skt. gru, to hear; all from ✓KRU, KLU, to hear; whence also E. loud. See Loud. Der. glori-ous, in early use, Rob. of Glouc. p. 483; glori-ous-ly, P. Plowman, C. xx. 15; glori-ous-ness; also glori-fy, M. E. glorifien, Wyclif, John, vii. 39 (F. glorifier, Lat. glorificare, to make glorious, from glori = gloria, and fic (= fac-ere), to do, make); also glori-fic-a-tion (from Lat. acc. glorificationem). Also Slav-onic, from Russ. slava, glory.

GLOSS (1), brightness, lustre. (Scand.) In Shak. Much Ado, iii. 2. 6. Milton has glossy, P. L. i. 672. -Icel. glossi, a blaze; glýs, finery. + Swed. dial. glösa, a glowing, dawning, becoming light; glossa, to glow, shine. + M. H. G. glosen, to glow; glose, a glow, gleam. β. An extension of Swed. dial. glóa, Icel. glóa, to glow. See Glow. Der. gloss, verb. ¶ Quite distinct from gloss (2), though some writers have probably confused them. Der. gloss-y, gloss-i-ly, gloss-i-ness.

GLOSS (2), a commentary, explanation. (L., -Gk.) M. E. glose (with one s), in early use; P. Plowman, C. xx. 15. [But the verb glosen, to gloss or gloze, was much more common than the sb.; see Chaucer, C. T. 7374, 7375; P. Plowman, C. vii. 303.] This M. E. glose is from the O. F. glose, 'a glosse;' Cot. But the Lat. form glossa (with double s) was substituted for the F. form in the 16th century; as, e. g. in Udal on S. Luke, c. 12 (R.). -Lat. glossa, a difficult word requiring explanation. -Gk. γλῶσσα, the tongue; also, a tongue, language, a word needing explanation. Of uncertain origin. Der. gloss, verb; glöze, q. v.; gloss-ary, q. v.; glossography, glossology; glottis, q. v.

GLOSSARY, a collection of glosses or words explained. (L., -Gk.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. -Lat. glossarium, a glossary; formed with suffix -ari-um from Lat. gloss-a, a hard word needing explanation. -Gk. γλῶσσα, the tongue, &c. See Gloss (2). Der. glossari-al, glossar-ist. See below.

GLOSSOGRAPHER, a writer of glossaries or glosses. (Gk.) In Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674. Coined from gloss-o, put for Gk. γλῶσσα, a hard word; and Gk. γράφειν, to write. See Gloss (2).

GLOTTIS, the entrance to the windpipe. (Gk.) Glottis, one of the five gristles of the larynx; Kersey, ed. 1715. -Gk. γλῶττις, the mouth of the windpipe (Galen). -Gk. γλῶττις, Attic form of γλῶσσα, the tongue. See Gloss (2). Der. glott-i-al, adj.; epi-glottis.

GLOVE, a cover for the hand. (E.) M. E. gloue (with u for v), glove; Chaucer, C. T. 2876; King Alisaunder, 2033. -A. S. glōf, glōf, glōf; Grein, i. 516. Cf. Icel. glöfi; prob. borrowed from A. S. glōf.

β. Possibly the initial g stands for ge- (Goth. ga-), a common prefix; and the word may be related to Goth. lofa, Icel. lófi, the flat or palm of the hand; Scottish loaf. Cf. Gael. lamh, the hand; whence lamhainn, a glove. Der. glove-er, fox-glove.

GLOW, to shine brightly, be ardent, be flushed with heat. (E.) M. E. glowen, Chaucer, C. T. 2134. -A. S. glōwan, to glow; very rare, but found in a gloss, as cited by Leo; the pt. t. is glōwū; see Addenda. + Icel. glóa. + Dan. gløe, to glow, to stare. + Swed. glo, to stare; Swed. dial. glo, glóa, to glow, to stare. + Du. gløejen, to glow, to heat. + G. glühen. Cf. Skt. gharma, warmth. β. From a Teut. base GLO (Fick, iii. 104), which from an older base GAL = GAR. -✓GHAR, to shine; cf. Skt. ghri, to shine, glow. Der. glow, sb.; glow-worm, Hamlet, i. 5. 89. ¶ The E. derivatives from the ✓GHAR, to shine, are numerous. The Teutonic form of this root was GAL, whence, by various modifications, we obtain the following. (1) Base GLA; whence (a) GLA-D, giving E. glad, glade; and (b) GLA-S, giving E. glass, glare (= glase). (2) Base GLO; whence E. glow, gloat, gloom, glum, gloss (1), glide (= glöd). (3) Base GLI; whence glib, glide; also GLI-M, giving gleam (= glima), glimmer, glimpse; also GLI-T, giving glitter, glint, glaunce, glister, glister. See each word discussed in its due place. ¶ GLOZE, to interpret, deceive, flatter. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Rich. II. ii. 1. 10. M. E. glosen, to make glosses; from the sb. glose, a gloss. See further under Gloss (2).

GLUE, a sticky substance. (F., -L.) M. E. glue, Gower, C. A.

ii. 248, l. 3. -O. F. glu, 'glew, birdlime;' Cot. -Low Lat. glutem, acc. of glus (gen. glutis), glue; a form used by Ausonius (Brachet). Allied to Lat. gluten, glutinium, glue; glutus, tenacious; from an unused verb gluere, to draw together. β. Perhaps from the same root as Clew, Claw, Cleave (2). Der. glue-y; and see glutin-ous, agglutin-ate.

GLUM, gloomy, sad. (Scand.) 'With visage sad and glum;' Drant, tr. of Horace; to translate Lat. saevus, Epist. ii. 2. 21. But the word was formerly a verb. M. E. glommen, glomben, to look gloomy, frown; Rom. of the Rose, 4356; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 94; Halliwell's Dict., p. 404. -Swed. dial. glomma, to stare; from Swed. dial. glóa, to stare; connected with Swed. glåmug, gloomy, and E. gloom; see Gloom.

GLUME, a husk or floral covering of grasses. (L.) A botanical term. Borrowed, like F. glume, from Lat. gluma, a husk, hull. -Lat. glubere, to peel, take off the husk; whence glumba = glüma. ¶ Fick (i. 574) suggests a connection with E. cleave, to split asunder. See Cleave (1). Der. glum-ac-e-ous (Lat. glumaceus).

GLUT, to swallow greedily, gorge. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 1. 63. 'Till leade (for golde) do glut his greedie cal;' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 68. -Lat. glutire, glutire, to swallow, gulp down. + Skt. grī, to devour; gal, to eat. -✓GAR, to devour; whence also Lat. gula, the throat. Der. glut-on, q. v.; from the same root, de-glut-it-ion, gullet, gules; probably glycerine, liquorice.

GLUTINOUS, gluey, viscous, sticky. (L.) 'No soft and glutinous bodies;' Ben Jonson, Sejanus, i. 1. 9. Englished from Lat. glutinosus, sticky. -Lat. glutun-um, glue; also gluten (stem glutin-), glue. See Glue. Der. glutinous-ness; also Cot. has 'glutinosité, glutinosité, glewiness;' glutin-at-ive; ag-glutin-ate.

GLUTTON, a voracious eater. (F., -L.) M. E. gloton, Chaucer, C. T. 12454; whence glotonie, gluttony; id. 12446. -O. F. gloton, later glouton, 'a glutton;' Cot. -Lat. acc. glutonem, from gluto, a glutton. -Lat. glutire, to devour. See Glut. Der. glutton-y, glutton-ous.

GLYCERINE, a certain viscid fluid, of a sweet taste. (F., -Gk.) Modern. Named from its sweet taste. F. glycérine; coined from Gk. γλυκερός, sweet, an extension of γλυκίς, sweet; on which see Curtius, i. 446. 'If Gk. γλυκίς and Lat. dulcis, sweet, go together, g must be earlier than d;' Curtius. Cf. Lat. glu-t-i-re, to devour; from ✓GAR, to devour. See Glut. Der. from the same source, liquorice, q. v.

GLYPTIC, relating to carving in stone. (Gk.) Mere Greek. -Gk. γλυπτικός, carving; γλυπτός, carved, fit for carving. -Gk. γλύφειν, to hollow out, engrave. Allied to Gk. γράφειν, to hew, γράφειν, to grave. See Grave, verb.

GNARL, to snarl, to growl. (E.) Perhaps obsolete. Shak. has 'gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite;' Rich. II, i. 3. 292; 'Wolves are gnarling;' 2 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 192. Gnar-l (with the usual added -l) is the frequentative of gnar, to snarl. 'For and this curle do gnar' = for if this cur doth snarl; Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 297. This word is imitative; the alleged A. S. gnýrran rests only on the authority of Somner. But the word may be called E. + Du. knorren, to grumble, snarl. + Dan. knurre, to growl, snarl; cf. knarre, knarre, to creak, knur, a growl, the purring of a cat. + Swed. knorra, to murmur, growl; knorr, a murmur. + G. knurren, to growl, snarl; knarren, knirren, to creak. Allied to Gnash. **¶

GNARLED, twisted, knotty. (E.) 'Gnarled oak;' Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 116. Gnarled means 'full of gnarls,' where gnar-l is a dimin. form of gnar or knar, a knot in wood. M. E. knarre, a knot in wood; Wyclif, Wisdom, xiii. 13; whence the adj. knarry, full of knots. 'With knotty knarry barein trees olde;' Chaucer, C. T. 1979. β. The spelling knur or knurr (for knar) also occurs; 'A bounche [bunch] or knur in a tree;' Elyot's Dict., ed. 1559, s. v. Bruscum. This word has also a dimin. form knuri, with the same sense of 'hard knot.' These words may be considered E., though not found in A. S. + O. Du. knor, 'a knurl;' Sewel's Du. Dict.; cf. Du. knorf, a knot. + Dan. knort, a knot, gnarl, knag; knortet, knotty, gnarled. + Swed. knorla, a curl, ringlet; knorlig, curled. + Icel. gnerr, a knot, knob. + G. knorren, an excrescence, lump; knorrig, gnarled. Remoter origin unknown. See Knurr.

GNASH, to grind the teeth, to bite fiercely. (Scand.) A modification of M. E. gnasten, to gnash the teeth; Wyclif, Isaiah, v. 29; viii. 19. -Swed. knasra, to crash (between the teeth). + Dan. knaske, to crush between the teeth, to gnash. + Icel. gnastan, sb. a gnashing; gnista, to gnash the teeth, to snarl; gnesta, to crack. + G. knastern, to gnash, crackle. β. Cf. also Du. knarsen, to gnash; G. knirschen, to gnash, crash, grate. The word seems to be a mere variant of Crash, and ultimately related to Crack. The same substitution of n for r is seen in Gael. cnac, to crack, break, crash, split, splinter.

GNAT, a small stinging insect. (E.) M. E. gnat, Chaucer, C. T. 5929. -A. S. gnat, Matt. xxiii. 24. β. It has been suggested that the insect was so named from the whirling of its wings; cf. Icel. gnata, to clash; gnat, the clash of weapons; gnauba, to rustle, gnaub, a rustling noise. Note also Norweg. knatta (Aasen), Dan. knittere, Du. knitteren, to crackle. ¶ It should, however, be noted that Swed. gnat means 'a nit'; this suggests a possible connection between the two words; yet the A. S. form of nit is huit, which does not seem to be quite the same thing.

GNAW, to bite furiously or roughly. (E.) M. E. gnawen; the pt. t. gnaw occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 14758; and gnaw in Rich. Coeur de Lion, ed. Weber, 3089. — A. S. gnagan; the compound for-gnagan, to devour entirely, occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 194, l. 1. + Du. knagen. + O. Icel. gnaga, mod. Icel. naga. + Dan. gnave. + Swed. gnaga.

β. In this word the g is a mere prefix, standing for A. S. ge = Goth. ga-. The simple verb appears in Icel. naga, Dan. nage, G. nagen, to gnaw, Swed. nagga, to nibble; and in the prov. E. nag, to tease, worry, irritate, scold. See NAIL.

GNEISS, a species of stratified rock. (G.) Modern. A term in geology. Borrowed from G. gneiss, a name given to a certain kind of rock. Der. gneiss-o-id, with a Gk. suffix, as in ASTEROID, q. v.

GNOME, a kind of sprite. (F., -Gk.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 63. — F. gnome, a gnome. Littré traces the word back to Paracelsus; it seems to be an adaptation of Gk. γνώμη, intelligence, from the notion that the intelligence of these spirits could reveal the secret treasures of the earth. The gnomes were spirits of earth, the sylphs of air, the salamanders of fire, and the nymphs of water. β. Others regard the word as a briefer form of gnomon, but the result is much the same. The Gk. γνώμη is from γνώμαι, to know. See GNOMON.

GNOMON, the index of a dial, &c. (L., -Gk.) 'The style in the dial called the gnomon;' Holland's Pliny, b. ii. c. 72. — Lat. gnomon, which is merely the Gk. word. — Gk. γνώμων, an interpreter, lit. 'one who knows;' an index of a dial. — Gk. γνώμαι, to know. — √ GAN, to know; whence also E. KNOW, q. v. Der. gnomon-ic, gnomon-ics, gnomon-ic-al.

GNOSTIC, one of a certain sect in the second Christian century. (Gk.) 'The vain science of the Gnosticks;' Gibbon, Rom. Empire, c. 14. — And see Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Gk. γνωστικός, good at knowing. — Gk. γνώσις, longer form of γνῶσις, known. — Gk. γνώμαι, to know. See GNOMON. Der. Gnostic-ism.

GNU, a kind of antelope. (Hottentot.) Found in S. Africa. The word is said to belong to the Hottentot language.

GO, to move about, proceed, advance. (E.) M. E. gon, goon, go; Chaucer, C. T. 379 (or 377); common. — A. S. gán, a contracted form of gangan (i. e. gang-an, where -an is the suffix of infin. mood); Grein, i. 368, 369. + Du. gaan. + Icel. ganga. + Dan. gaae. + Swed. gå. + Goth. gaggan, put for gangan. + G. gehen; O. H. G. kankan, gangan, gán, gēn. ¶ Not to be confused with Skt. gá, which is etymologically related to E. come; see Curtius, ii. 75. Doublet, gang, q. v. Der. go-by, go-cart, go-er, go-ing; also gait, q. v. The pt. t. went is from wend; see WEND.

GOAD, a sharp pointed stick for driving oxen. M. E. gode. 'Wip a longe gode;' P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 433. — A. S. gād, not common; but we find 'ongan þa gāde' = against the goad (cf. Acts, ix. 5); Ælfric's Hom. i. 386, l. 9 (where the accent seems to be that of the MS. itself). We find also gadu, a goad; Grein, i. 366. β. The appearance of the word under two forms is puzzling. Perhaps gadu was borrowed from Icel. gaddr, a goad; see GAD (1). The form gād answers to gasd, the s being dropped before d in this instance. Similarly, the Icel. gaddr = gasdr, by assimilation. These words are cognate with Goth. gazds, a goad, prick, sting (Gk. κέρπος); 1 Cor. xv. 55. γ. Again, by the common change of s to r, the form gasd also passed into an A. S. *gard, a rod, written gierd, gyrd, Grein, i. 536; whence E. yard. See YARD, in the sense of 'rod' or 'stick'.

δ. Again, the Goth. gazds is cognate with Lat. hasta, a spear; and the collation of all the forms leads us to infer an Aryan form ghasta, from a supposed √ GHAS, to strike, pierce, wound; cf. Skt. hims, to strike, kill.

GOAL, the winning-post in a race. (F., -O. Low G.) A term in running races. 'As, in rennyng, passynge the gole is accounted but rasshennesse;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 20. l. 4. 'No person . . . should have won the ryng or gott the gole before me;' Hall's Chron. Rich. III, an. 2. The 'gole' was a pole set up to mark the winning-place, and is now called the 'post.' — F. gaille, 'a pole, big rod;' Cot. In O. F., spelt waile (Roquefort). β. Of O. Low G. origin; O. Friesic walu, a staff; North Friesic waal (Outzen). + Icel. völur, a round stick, staff. + Goth. waluis, a staff; Luke, ix. 3. Cf. prov. E. wallop, in the sense 'to beat'; and see WALE, in the sense of 'a stripe made by a blow.' γ. The staff was named waluis from its roundness; cf. Russ. *val, a cylinder, from valiate, to roll; also Goth. walujan, to roll; Lat. woluere. See VOLUBLE. [†]

GOAT, the name of a well-known quadruped. (E.) M. E. goot, gote; Chaucer, C. T. 690 (or 688). — A. S. gāt; Grein, i. 373. + Du.

geit. + Dan. ged. + Swed. get. + Icel. geit. + G. geiss, geisse. + Goth. gaita. + Lat. haedus. β. All from an Aryan form GHADA, which from √ GHID, prob. meaning 'to play, sport'; cf. Lithuanian zaid-zu, I play (base ghid-). Fick, i. 584. Der. goats-beard, goat-moth, goat-sucker.

GOBBET, a mouthful, a little lump, small piece. (F., -C.) The short form gob is rare. 'Gob or Gobbet, a great piece of meat;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. M. E. gobet, a small piece; P. Plowman, c. vi. 100; Chaucer, C. T. 698. 'Thei tooken the relifs of brokun gobetis, twelue cofyns ful;' Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 20. — O. F. gobet, a morsel of food, not given in Burguy or Cotgrave, but preserved in the modern F. gobet, given as a popular word in Littré. A dimin. form, with suffix -et, from O. F. gob, a gulp, as used in the phrase 'l'avalla tout de gob' = at one gulp, or, as one gobbet, he swallowed it all; Cot. — O. F. gobet, 'to ravine, devour, feed greedily;' Cot. β. Of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. gob, the beak or bill of a bird, or (ludicrously) the mouth; Irish gob, mouth, beak, snout; W. gwp, the head and neck of a bird. ¶ The prov. E. gob, the mouth, is borrowed from Celtic directly. And see Gobble.

GOBBLE, to swallow greedily. (F.; with E. suffix.) 'Gobble up, to eat gobs, or swallow down greedily;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Not in early use. A frequentative, formed by adding -le, of O. F. gobet, 'to ravine, devour, feed greedily, swallow great morsels, let down whole goblets;' Cot. See Gobbet. β. At a late period, the word gobble was adopted as being a suitable imitative word, to represent the sound made by turkeys. In this sense, it occurs in Goldsmith's Animated Nature.

GOBELIN, a rich French tapestry. (F.) 'So named from a house at Paris, formerly possessed by wool-dyers, whereof the chief (Giles Gobelin) in the reign of Francis I. [1515-1547] is said to have found the secret of dyeing scarlet;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates.

GOBLET, a large drinking-cup. (F., -L.) 'A goblet of sylver;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. ii. c. 87. — F. goblet, 'a goblet, bole, or wide-mouthed cup;' Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -et) of O. F. gobel, (later form gobeau) which Cot. explains by 'a mazer or great goblet.' — Low Lat. cupellum, acc. of cupellus, a cup; a variant of Lat. cupella, a kind of vat, dimin. of cupa, a tub, cask, vat. See COOP, CUP. For the change from c to g, cf. Bret. kóp, góp, a cup.

GOBLIN, a kind of mischievous sprite, fairy. (F., -L., -Gk.) Formerly gobeline, in 3 syllables. 'The wicked gobbelines;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 73. — O. F. gobelin, 'a goblin, or hob-goblin;' Cot. — Low Lat. gobelinus, an extension of Low Lat. cobalus, a goblin, demon. — Gk. κόβαλος, an impudent rogue, a sprite, goblin. See COBALT.

GOBY, a kind of sea-fish. (L., -Gk.) 'Gobio or Gobius, the gudgeon or pink, a fish;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. The goby is a mere corruption of Lat. gobius (cf. F. gobie), orig. applied to the gudgeon. — Gk. κοβίος, a kind of fish, gudgeon, tench. See GUDGEON.

GOD, the Supreme Being. (E.) M. E. god (written in MSS. with small initial letter); Chaucer, C. T. 535. — A. S. god; Grein, i. 517. + Du. god. + Icel. gud. + Dan. gud. + Swed. gud. + Goth. guth. + G. gott. β. All from a Teutonic base GUTHA, God; Fick, iii. 107. Of unknown origin; quite distinct and separate from good, with which it has often been conjecturally connected. See Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 316, 8th ed. Der. god-ess, q. v.; god-child; god-father, q. v.; god-head, q. v.; god-less, god-like, god-ly, god-send, god-son; also god-bye, q. v.; gospell, q. v.; gossip, q. v.

GODDESS, a female divinity. (E.; with F. suffix.) M. E. goddesse (better godesse), a hybrid compound, used by Chaucer, C. T. 1103; Gower, C. A. i. 91. Made by adding to God the O. F. suffix -esse (= Lat. -issa = Gk. -ισσα). ¶ The A. S. word was gyden (Grein, i. 536); correctly formed by vowel-change and with the addition of the fem. suffix -en, as in VIXEN, q. v. Cf. G. göttin, fem. of gott.

GODFATHER, a male sponsor in baptism. (E.) M. E. god-fader, Rob. of Glouc. p. 69. Earlier, in William of Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright, p. 69 (temp. Edw. II). From god, God; and fader, father. β. Other similar words are godchild, Ancren Riwele, p. 210; M. E. goddoyster = god-daughter, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 48; M. E. godmoder = god-mother, id. same page; M. E. godsume = god-son, Wright's Vocab. i. 214, col. 2. And see Gossip.

GODHEAD, divinity, divine nature. (E.) M. E. godhed, Chaucer, C. T. 2383; spelt godhod, Ancren Riwele, p. 112. The suffix is wholly different from E. head, being the same suffix as that which is commonly written -hood. The etymology is from the A. S. hād, office, state, dignity, as in 'þri on hādum' = three in (their) Persons; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 42. ¶ This A. S. hād properly passed into -hood, as in E. man-hood; but in M. E. was often represented by -hede or -hed, so that we also find manhede, Will. of Palerne, 431. This accounts for the double form maiden-hood and maiden-hed.

GODWIT, the name of a bird. (E.) 'Th' Ionian godwit;' Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Odes, lib. v. od. 2, l. 53. The supposed etymology is from A.S. gōd wīht = good creature, good animal. The A.S. wīht, a wight, was applied to creatures of every kind, including birds. 'Donne wiht gehwylce deōra and fugla deāðlēg nimeð' = then the death-fire consumes every creature, animals and birds; Cynewulf's Crist, l. 982. ¶ The form is even closer to A.S. gōd wīt = good wit, intelligence; but the sense is too abstract.

GOGGLE-EYED, having rolling and staring eyes. (Of C. origin?). 'They gogle with their eyes hither and thither;' Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, c. 1. 'Glyare, or gogul-eye, limus, strabo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 199. 'Gogyl-eyid, gogelere, limus, strabo;' id. p. 201. Wyclif translates Lat. luscum by 'gogil-ized' = goggle-eyed; Mark, ix. 46. 'Goggle-eyed man, louche;' Palsgrave. The suffix -le is, as usual, frequentative; the base appears to be Celtic. = Irish and Gael. gog, a nod, slight motion; Irish gogaim, I nod, gesticulate; gogach, wavering, reeling; gogor, light (in demeanour); Gael. gogach, nodding, fickle; gogaill, a silly female, coquette. The special application of the word appears clearly in Irish and Gael. gog-huileach, goggle-eyed, having wandering eyes; from gog, to move slightly, and suil, the eye, look, glance.

β. The original sense is clearly 'having roving, unsteady, or rolling eyes;' afterwards used of ugly or staring eyes. The use of the word by Wyclif, in the sense of 'one-eyed,' suggests that he was thinking of the Lat. cocles, which is probably not connected. Der. goggle, verb, to roll the eyes (Butler); goggles, i.e. a facetious name for spectacles.

GOITRE, a swelling in the throat. (F., -L.) Modern. Used in speaking of the Swiss peasants who are afflicted with it. -F. goitre, a swelled neck. -Lat. guttur, the throat (through a debased form gutter); see Juvenal, Sat. xiii. 162.

GOLD, a precious metal. (E.) M.E. gold, Chaucer, C. T. 12704. -A.S. gold; Grein, i. 519. + Du. goud [for gold]. + Icel. gull. + Swed. and Dan. guld. + G. gold. + Goth. gulth; i Tim. ii. 9. + Russ. zlato. + Gk. χρυσός. + Zend. zarānu, zaranya, gold. + Skt. hiraṇa, gold. See the letter-changes noticed in Curtius, i. 251. β. The primary form is ghar-ta (whence Goth. gul-th, Russ. zla-to), whence also ghar-tja (giving Gk. χρυσός = χρυ-τjός); &c. -✓GHAR, to be yellow, related to GHAK, to shine. See Fick, i. 579. And see Green, Yellow, Chlorine; all from the same source. Der. gold-en (A.S. gyld-en, by the usual letter change, but altered in M.E. to gold-en); gold-beater, gold-dust, gold-finch (Chaucer, C. T. 4365), gold-fish, gold-leaf, gold-smith (Prompt. Parv. p. 202); mary-gold or mari-gold.

GOLF, the name of a game. (Du.) Mentioned in Acts of James II. See Jamieson's Dict., where the earliest mention of it is said to be in 1538. The name is taken from that of a Du. game played with a mallet and ball. -Du. kolf, 'a club to strike little bouls or balls with, a mallet-stick'; Sewel's Du. Dict. + Icel. kólfr, the (rounded) clapper of a bell, a bulb, a bolt for a crossbow; kylfa, a club. + Dan. kolbe, the butt-end of a weapon; kolv, a bolt, shaft, arrow. + Swed. kolf, a butt-end, bolt, retort (in chemistry). + G. kolbe, a club, mace, knob, butt-end of a gun; retort (in chemistry). β. The original sense seems to have been 'rounded end.' Of uncertain origin; see Fick, iii. 45.

GOLOSH, a waterproof overshoe. (F., -L.) The same as Galoche, q. v.

GONDOLA, a Venetian pleasure-boat. (Ital., -Gk.) Shak. has gondola, Merch. of Ven. ii. 8. 8; and gondolier, Oth. i. 1. 26. -Ital. gondola, a boat used (says Florio) only at Venice; a dimin. of gonda, used with the same meaning. -Gk. κόρυβη, a drinking-vessel; which the gondola was supposed to resemble. Said to be a word of Pers. origin. Perhaps from Pers. kandū, an earthen vessel, butt, vat; Rich. Dict. p. 1210.

GONFANON, GONFALON, a kind of standard or banner. (F., -M. H. G.) M.E. gonfanon, Rom. of the Rose, 1201, 2018. The form gonfalon is a corruption. The sb. gunfaneur = banner-bearer, occurs in the Ancien Riwle, p. 300. -O. F. gonfanon, gunfanon. -M. H. G. gunfano, a banner, lit. battle-standard. -M. H. G. gunt, gund, battle (chiefly preserved in female names, as Rhade-gund); and fano, vano (mod. G. fahne), a standard, banner. β. The M. H. G. gunt is cognate with A.S. gūð (for gunð), war, battle; Icel. gunnr, guðr, battle; from ✓GHAN, to strike; cf. Skt. han, to strike, kill; Russ. gnate, goniate, to chase; Pers. jang, war. γ. G. fahne is cognate with E. vane; see Vane.

GONG, a circular disc, used as a bell. (Malay.) Modern. In Douce, Illustrations of Shakespeare, i. 29. -Malay agong or gong, 'the gong, a sonorous instrument'; Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 12, col. 1.

GOOD, virtuous, excellent, kind. (E.) M.E. good, gode, Chaucer, C. T. 479. -A.S. gōd; Grein, i. 520. + Du. goed. + Icel. góðr. + Dan. and Swed. god. + Goth. gods. + G. gut. β. According to Fick, i. 98, the Teutonic base is GAD, to suit, fit; for which see Gather. Cf. Russ. godno, suitably; godnui, suitable. Der. good, sb., pl. goods (M. E. godes, P. Plowman, C. ix. 251); good-day; good-Friday (M. E. gode fridaye, P. Plowman, B. x. 414); good ly = A.S. gōdlic, Grein, i. 523; good-li-ness (not in early use, used in A. V. of Bible, Isaiah, xl. 6, and by Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xx. st. 107); good-natured; good-ness = A.S. gōdnes, Grein, i. 523; good-will. Also good-man, q. v. ¶ But not good-bye.

GOOD-BYE, farewell. (E.) A familiar (but meaningless) contraction of God be with you, the old form of farewell. Very common in Shak., where old edd. often have God buy you. 'God buy you, good Sir Topas;' Tw. Nt. iv. 2. 108 (first folio). 'God be with you; I haue done;' Oth. i. 3. 189 (first folio).

GOODMAN, the master of the house. (E.) In the Bible, A. V. Luke, xii. 39, &c. See Eastwood and Wright's Bible Wordbook (where, however, a wrong suggestion is made as to the etymology). M. E. godeman, in the Seven Sages, Thornton Romances, Introd. xlv. 1. 5. Observe especially the occurrence of godeman, as a tr. of Lat. paterfamilias, in An O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 33. 'Two bondmen, whyche be all vnder the rule and order of the good man and the good wyfe of the house;' Sir T. More's Utopia (E. version), ed. Arber, p. 75. Compounded of good and man. Cf. Lowland Scotch gude man, the master of a family; Jamieson.

GOOSE, the name of a bird. (E.) M.E. gos, goos, pl. gees; Chaucer, C. T. 4135, 15397. -A.S. gōs, pl. gēs; Grein, i. 523 (where gōs stands for an older gans, the long ō being due to loss of n). + Du. gans. + Dan. gaas (for gans), pl. gæs. + Swed. gås (for gans). + Icel. gás (for gans). + G. gans. + Lat. anser. + Gk. γήν. + Skt. hamsa. + Russ. gus. + Lithuan. žasis. β. 'Kuhn (Zeitschrift, ii. 261) is doubtless right in referring the stem γήν to a form γήν...

The oft-repeated etymology from γήν, to gape, does very well so far as the meaning goes, but the s, which is found in the word in all languages, is against it. It seems to be an addition to the root; Curtius, i. 200. ¶ From the same base GHAN we have also gann-et and gan-d-er. See Gannet, Gander. The occurrence of these words favours the theory that, in the primary form GHANSI (= goose), the s is a mere addition; thus making the derivation from ✓GHA, to gape, yawn, very probable. See Yawn. Der. goose-grass (so called because geese are fond of it), goose-quill, gos-hawk, q. v., gos-ling, q. v.

GOOSEBERRY, the berry of a certain shrub. (Hybrid; F., -M. H. G.; and E.) 'Not worth a gooseberry;' 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 196. 'A gooseberrie, uua [uua] crispa;' Levins, 104. 28. The ending berry is E. A. As in groom, q. v., an r has been inserted, so in gaffer and gooseberry an r has been lost. It is retained in North E. groser, gooseberries (Halliwell, Brockett). Burns has grozet, a gooseberry; To a Louse, st. 5. β. Thus gooseberry is equivalent to groise-berry or grose-berry, where groise or grose is an abbreviated (or more likely an original, but unrecorded) form of O. F. groisele, groselle, or groiselle, a gooseberry. The spellings groiselle and groselle are in Cotgrave; the spelling groisele occurs in a poem of the 13th century; see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 368, l. 33. Cf. groiseliel, groiseliel, 'a gooseberry shrub;' Cotgrave. γ. We have further proof; for the same O. F. groise (= groisele) has found its way into Irish, Gaelic, and Welsh; cf. Irish groisaid, Gael. groiseid, a gooseberry; W. gruys, a wild gooseberry. δ. The O. F. groisele is a dimin. of groise *, obviously of Teutonic origin; viz. from M. H. G. krús, curling, crisped; whence mod. G. krausbeere, a cranberry, rough gooseberry. Cf. Swed. krusbär, a gooseberry; Du. kruisbezie (lit. a cross-berry), a singular corruption of kroesbezie, by confusion between krús, a cross, and kroes, crisp, frizzled. Thus, the orig. form of the first syllable is traced back, with great probability, to M. H. G. krús, Swed. krus, Du. kroes, crisp, curled, frizzled; with reference to the short crisp curling hairs upon the rougher kinds of the fruit; cf. the Lat. name uva crispa in Levins, given above. ¶ Add, that the F. groiseliel was Latinised as grossularia, with a further tendency to confusion with Lat. grossus, thick; so that if the name had been turned into gross-berry, it would not have been surprising. The suggestion (in Webster) of a connection with E. gorse (formerly gorst) is quite out of the question, and entirely unsupported. [†] GOPHER, a kind of wood. (Heb.) In A. V. Gen. vi. 14. -Heb. gopher, a kind of wood; supposed to be pine or fir.

GORBELLIED, having a fat belly. (E.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, ii. 2. 93. Compounded of E. gore, lit. filth, dirt (here used of the contents of the stomach and intestines); and belly. β. All doubt as to the origin is removed by comparing Swed. dial. går-bäl, a fat paunch, which is certainly compounded of Swed. dial. går (Swed. gorr), dirt, the contents of the intestines, and bäl, the belly. See Rietz, p. 225. See Gore (1). And see below.

GORCROW, the carrion-crow. (E.) 'Raven and gorcrow, all my birds of prey;' Ben Jonson, The Fox, Act i. Compounded of E. gore, filth, dirt, carrion (a former sense of the word); and crow. See Gore (1). And see above.

GORDIAN, intricate. (Gk.) Only in the phr. 'Gordian knot'; Cymb. ii. 2. 34. Named from the Phrygian king Gordius (Gk. Γόρδιος), father of Midas, who, on being declared king, 'dedicated his chariot to Zeus, in the Acropolis of Gordium. The pole was fastened to the yoke by a knot of bark; and an oracle declared that whosoever should untie the knot should reign over all Asia. Alexander, on his arrival at Gordium, cut the knot with his sword, and applied the oracle to himself'; Smith's Classical Dict.

GORE (1), clotted blood, blood. (E.) It formerly meant also dirt or filth. It occurs in the sense of 'filthiness' in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 306. — A. S. gor, dirt, filth; Grein, i. 520. + Icel. gor, gore, the cud in animals, the chyme in men. + Swed. gorr, dirt, matter.

β. Allied to Icel. garnir, görn, the guts; Gk. χορδή, a string of gut, cord; Lat. hira, gut, hernia, hernia. See Fick, i. 580; iii. 102; Curtius, i. 250. — ✓GHAR, of uncertain meaning. Hence Cord, Chord, Yarn, and Hernia are all related words.

Der. gor-belly, q. v., gor-crow, q. v. Also gor-y, Macbeth, iii. 4. 51.

GORE (2), a triangular piece let into a garment; a triangular slip of land. (E.) M. E. gore, Chaucer, C. T. 3237. — A. S. gára, a projecting point of land; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, i. 1. 27. — A. S. gár, a spear; see Gore (3).

β. Similarly we have Icel. geiri, a triangular piece of land; from geirr, a spear. Also O. H. G. ker, M. H. G. gere, a promontory; G. gekre, a wedge, gusset; Du. geer, a gusset, gore.

GORE (3), to pierce, bore through. (E.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 25. Formed, as a verb, from M. E. gare, gore, gar, a spear.

'Brennes . . . lette glide his gar' = Brennus let fall his spear; Layamon, 5079. — A. S. gár, a spear; Grein, i. 370. (The vowel-change is perfectly regular; cf. bone, stone, loaf, from A. S. bán, stán, hláf).

+ Icel. geirr, a spear. + M. H. G. gér, O. H. G. ker, a spear. β. We know that r here stands for an older s, because the Lat. gaisum, a javelin, is a borrowed word from the Teutonic. Hence the theoretical Teutonic form is gaisa, a spear; Fick, iii. 96. Der. gore (2); see above.

GORGE, the throat; a narrow pass. (F., — L.) M. E. gorge, the throat; Allit. Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 3760. — O. F. gorge, the throat, gullet. — Low Lat. gorgia, the throat, a narrow pass; gorga, gurga, the same as Lat. gurgus (Ducange). — Lat. gurgus, a whirlpool, abyss; hence applied, in late times, to the gullet, from its voracity. Cf. Lat. gurgulio, the gullet. + Skt. gargara, a whirlpool; a reduplicated form, from ✓GAR, to swallow, devour; cf. Skt. gri, to devour. Der. gorge, verb, Romeo, v. 3. 46; gorget, a piece of armour to protect the throat, Troilus, i. 3. 174; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 3. 12. And see gorgeous.

GORGEOUS, showy, splendid. (F., — L.) 'In gorgeous array'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 808 c; 'they go gorgeously arrayed'; id. 808 a. A corruption of the singular O. F. gorgias, 'gorgeous, gaudy, flaunting, brave, gallant, gay, fine, trimme, quaintly clothed'; Cot. Cf. se gorgiaser, 'to flaunt, brave, or gallantise it'; id. β. Perhaps formed from O. F. gorgas, 'a gorget'; id.; as though to wear a gorget were a fine thing; or from the swelling of the throat considered as a symbol of pride.

γ. Either way, the word depends upon F. gorge, the throat; and much light is thrown upon the word by another entry in Cotgrave, viz. 'se rengorger, to hold down [let sink down] the head, or thrust the chin into the neck, as some do in pride, or to make their faces look the fuller; we say, to bridle it'.

δ. Note also Span. gorja, the throat; gorjal, a gorget, the collar of a doublet; gorguera, a gorget; gorguero, a kind of neckcloth, of ladies of fashion; gorguerin, a ruff round the neck. See Gorge. Der. gorgeous-ly, gorgeous-ness.

GORGON, a terrible monster. (L., — Gk.) In Shak. Macb. ii. 3. 77. — Lat. Gorgon, Gorgo. — Gk. Γοργώ, the Gorgon, a monster of fearful aspect. — Gk. γοργύς, fearful, terrible. Root unknown; perhaps related to Skt. garj, to roar. Der. Gorgon-ian, Milton, P. L. ii. 611.

GORILLA, a kind of large ape. (O. African.) The word is an old one, lately revived. It occurs just at the end of a treatise called the Periplus (περίπλου), i. e. 'circumnavigation,' written by a Carthaginian navigator named Hanno. This was originally written in the Punic language, and afterwards translated into Greek. He there describes some creatures 'which the interpreters called Gorillas.'

GORMANDIZE, to eat like a glutton. (F.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 5. 3. Cotgrave has: 'Gourmander, to ravine, devour, glut, gormandize or gluttonize it.' The addition of -ize was no doubt suggested by the previous existence in E. of the sb. gourmandyse, as in 'they ate withoute gourmandyse'; Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Helth, b. ii. c. 1. This is from O. F. gourmandise, gluttony; Cot. Both the sb. gourmandise and the vb. gourmander are from the O. F. gourmand, 'a glutton, gormand, belly-god'; Cot. See Gourmand. Der. gormandiz-er, gormandiz-ing.

GORSE, a prickly shrub, furze. (E.) For gorst. M. E. gorst, furze; Wyclif, Isaiah, lv. 13. — A. S. gorst. 'On gorste'; Luke, vi.

44; A. V. 'of a bramble-bnsh'; Vulgate, 'de rubo.' β. Remoter origin unknown. By some compared with O. Du. gors, grass (Oudemans); Wedgwood refers it to W. gores, gorest, waste, open. But gorse is neither 'grass' nor 'an open space.'

γ. I should rather suppose gorst = gro-st [cf. frost = A. S. forst]; and refer it to A. S. grówan, to grow, with the sense of 'growth.' Cf. bla-st from blow = A. S. bláwan; blo-ssom (A. S. bló-st-ma) from blow = A. S. bláwan. ¶ In this way, gorse is related to grass indirectly. See Grass, Grow.

GOSHAWK, a kind of hawk. (E.) Lit. a 'goose-hawk.' M. E. goshawk, Wyclif, Job, xxxix. 13. The connection with goose is proved by two successive entries in Wright's Vocab. i. 29, col. 1, viz. 'Auca, gos;' and 'Aucarius, gos-hafuc.' Here gos = A. S. gós, a goose; and hafuc = a hawk. The Vocabulary is ascribed to the tenth century. + Icel. gás-haukr, similarly formed. And see below.

GOSSLING, a young goose. (E.) In Shak. Cor. v. 3. 35. Here gos = M. E. gos = A. S. gós, a goose. The suffix -ling is a double diminutive, = l-ling. Cf. duck-ling, from duck. See Goose.

GOSPEL, the life of Christ. (E.) M. E. gospel, Chaucer, C. T. 483. Also godspel, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 100. — A. S. godspell, Grein, i. 519. — A. S. god, God; and spell, a story, history, narrative; see Grein, ii. 469. β. Thus the lit. sense is the 'narrative of God,' i. e. the life of Christ. It is constantly derived from A. S. gód, good, and spell, story, as though gód spell were a translation of Gk. εὐαγγέλιον; and it was no doubt sometimes so understood, as, e. g. in the Ormulum, l. 157 of the Introduction, where we read: 'Goddspell onn Ennglissch nemmedd iss god word and god tipesnde' = Gospel is named in English good word and good tiding.

γ. This derivation gives an excellent sense, and would have served well for a translation of the Greek word. Yet it is not a little remarkable that, when the A. S. word was introduced into Iceland, it took the form gúðspjall = God-story, and not gód-spjall = good story. And the O. H. G. word was likewise gotspel (= God-story), and not guot spel. We must accept the fact, without being prejudiced; remembering that, in compound substantives, the former element is much more often a sb. than an adjective.

¶ Some have conjectured that the word may have been altered from gúðspel. If so, the O. H. G. word requires a similar conjecture. And we have no proof of it. [†]

GOSSAMER, fine spider-threads seen in fine weather. (E.) M. E. gossomer, Chaucer, C. T. 10573. Spelt gossomer by W. de Biblesworth (13th cent.); Wright's Vocab. i. 147, last line. Of disputed origin; but M. E. gossomer is lit. goose-summer, and the prov. E. (Craven) name for gossamer is summer-goose; see Craven Gloss. The word is probably nothing but a corruption of 'goose-summer' or 'summer-goose,' from the downy appearance of the film. Thus the Gael. name is cleit lusán, lit. down on plants; and the Du. Dict. gives dons der planten, with the same sense, as an equivalent for gossamer. β. We may note, further, that Jamieson's Scottish Dict. gives summer-colt, i. e. summer-colt, as the name of exhalations seen rising from the ground in hot weather; and the Yorkshire expression for the same is very similar. 'When the air is seen on a warm day to undulate, and seems to rise as from hot embers, it is said, "see how the summer-colt rides!"' Whitby Glossary, by F. K. Robinson; quoted from Marshall.

γ. In the same Whitby Glossary, the word for 'gossamer' is entered as summer-gauze. This may be confidently pronounced to be an ingenious corruption, as the word gauze is quite unknown to Middle-English and to the peasants of Craven, who say summer-goose; see Carr's Craven Glossary, where the summer-colt and summer-goose are, however, confounded together. A homely derivation of this kind is likely to be the true one; the only real difficulty is in the transposition of the words.

δ. But here we are helped out by the German, which shows that the difficulty really lies in the double sense of the word summer. The G. sommer means not only 'summer,' but also 'gossamer,' in certain compounds. The G. name for 'gossamer' is not only sommerfäden (summer-threads), but also mädchen-sommer (Maiden-summer), der-alte-Weiber-sommer (the old women's summer), or Mechtildesommer; see E. Müller. This makes G. sommer = summer-film; and gives to gossamer the possible sense of 'goose-summer-film.' The connection of the word with summer is further illustrated by the Du. zomerdraden, gossamer, lit. 'summer-threads,' and the Swed. sommertråd, gossamer, lit. 'summer-thread.'

¶ Such guesses as 'God-summer,' 'gorse-summer,' and the like, have little to support them. It may be observed that the spelling gossamer (with a) is certainly corrupt. It should rather be gossomer or gossommer.

GOSSIP, a sponsor in baptism, a crony. (E.) The old sense was 'sponsor in baptism,' lit. 'god-relative.' The final p stands for b, and ss for ds. M. E. gossib, Chaucer, C. T. 5825; earlier, spelt godsib. See Poems of Will. of Shoreham, ed. Wright, pp. 68-70, where occur the words gossibbe, sibbe, and gossibrede (also spelt god-sibrede), a derivative from god ib by suffixing M. E. -rede (= A. S.

raden, E. -red in kind-red). β . Thus gossip stands for god-sib, i. e. related in God, as said above. The word sib in A. S. means 'peace,' but there was a derived word meaning 'relative' of which there are some traces. Thus, in Luke, xiv. 12, the Northumb. glosses to Latin cognatos are (in one MS.) sibbo and (in the other) gisibbe; and again, in the Ormulum, l. 310, it is said of Elizabeth that she was 'Sante Marje sibb,' i. e. Saint Mary's relative. Cf. Icel. sif, affinity; sifti, a relative; G. sippe, affinity; pl. sippen, kinsmen; Goth. sibja, relationship, adoption as sons, Gal. iv. 5; unsibis, lit. unpeaceful, hence, lawless, wicked, Mark, xv. 28; unsibja, iniquity, Matt. vii. 23. These are further related to Skt. sabhya, relating to an assembly, fit for an assembly, trusty, faithful; from sabha, an assembly.

GOUGE, a chisel with a hollowed blade. (F., -L.) Low Lat. Formerly googe. 'By googing of them out; Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, A. ii. sc. 1 (Meercraft). - F. gouge, 'a joiners googe,' Cot. Cf. Span. gubia, a gouge. - Low Lat. guvia, a kind of chisel, in Isidore of Seville, lib. xix. De Instrumentis Lignariis (Brachet). β . Of obscure origin. I suggest a connection with Gk. κονέω, a chisel, κονίς, a broad curved knife; from $\sqrt{\text{SKAP}}$, to hew.

GOURD, a large fleshy fruit. (F., -L.) M. E. gourd, Chaucer, C. T. 17031. - F. gourde, formerly spelt gouhourde or cougourde, both of which spellings are in Cotgrave. Gourde is short for gouhourde, which is a corruption of cougourde. - Lat. cucurbita, a gourd; evidently a reduplicated form. Perhaps related to corbis, a basket; Fick, i. 542.

GOURMAND, a glutton. (F.) Also gormand, gormond. 'To that great gormond, fat Apicius;' Ben Jonson, Sejanus, A. i. sc. 1. 'To gurmander, abliguerie;' Levins, 83. 21. - F. gourmand, 'a glutton, gormand, belly-god;' Cot. β . Of unknown origin; possibly from the Scandinavian. Cf. Icel. gormr, ooze, mud, grounds of coffee, &c., allied to gor, gore; see GORE (1). The Span. gormar means 'to vomit.' Der. gormand-ize or gormand-ise, q. v.

GOUT (1), a drop, a disease. (F., -L.) 'Gouts of blood;' Macb. ii. 1. 46. 'And he was al-so sik with goute,' i. e. with the disease; Rob. of Glouc. p. 564. The disease was supposed to be caused by a defluxion of humours; so that it is the same word as gout, a drop. - O. F. goute, goutte, a drop; also, 'the gowt;' Cot. - Lat. gutta, a drop. Prob. related to Skt. çhut, to ooze, drop, distil; çhyut, to drop; from çhyu (= çchyu), to move, depart, fall. Der. gout-y, gout-i-ness.

GOUT (2), taste. (F., -L.) Merely borrowed from F. gout, taste. - Lat. gustare, to taste; from the same root as E. choose. See CHOOSE.

GOVERN, to steer, direct, rule. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. gouvernen, (with u for v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 44. - O. F. gouverner, later gouverner. - Lat. gubernare, to steer a ship, guide, direct. (Borrowed from Gk.) - Gk. κυβερνῶν, to steer. β . Of doubtful origin; apparently allied to a supposed Gk. κύβη, the head; and perhaps to κύπτειν, to bend downwards; &c. Der. govern-able; govern-ess, Mids. Nt. Dream, ii. 1. 103; govern-ment, Tempest, i. 2. 75 (the older term being govern-ance, as in Chaucer, C. T. 12007); govern-ment-al; govern-or, M. E. gouvernor (with u for v), King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 1714, also gouvernour (u for v), Wyclif, James, iii. 4, from O. F. gouverneur = Lat. acc. gubernatorem; governor-ship.

GOWAN, a daisy. (Gael.) 'And pu'd the gowans fine;' Burns, Auld Lang Syne, st. 2. - Gael. and Irish gugan, a bud, flower, daisy.

GOWN, a loose robe. (C.) M. E. goune, Chaucer, C. T. 393; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 227. [Probably borrowed directly from the Celtic, rather than through O. F. gone, a gown, which is likewise of Celtic origin.] - W. gun, a gown, loose robe; cf. gunio, to sow, stitch. + Irish gunn, Gael. and Corn. gun, a gown; Manx goon. Der. gown-s-man.

GRAB, to seize, clutch. (Scand.) A vulgar word, seldom used, yet answering exactly to Swed. grabba, to grasp, and very near to O. Skt. grabh, to seize, a Vedic form, of which the later form is grah. The standard E. word is gripe. See GRAPPLE, GRIPE, Grip, Grasp.

GRACE, favour, mercy, pardon. (F., -L.) M. E. grace, in early use; Layamon, 6616 (later text). - O. F. grace = Lat. gratia, favour. - Lat. gratus, dear, pleasing. - $\sqrt{\text{GHAR}}$, to yearn; whence also Gk. χαίρειν, to rejoice, χαρά, joy, χάρις, favour, grace; Skt. hary, to desire; and E. yearn. See YEARN. Der. grace-ful, grace-ful-ly, grace-ful-ness; grac-i-ous, Chaucer, C. T. 8489; grac-i-ous-ly, grac-i-ous-ness; grace-less, grace-less-ly, grace-less-ness. And see grateful.

GRADATION, an advance by short steps, a blending of tints. (F., -L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 1. 37. - O. F. gradation, 'a gradation, step, degree;' Cot. - Lat. gradationem, acc. of gradatio, an ascent by steps. Cf. Lat. gradatim, step by step. - Lat. gradus, a step. See GRADE. Der. gradation-al, gradation-ed.

GRADE, a degree, step in rank. (F., -L.) Of late introduction into E.; see Todd's Johnson. [But the derived words graduate, &c., have been long in use; see below.] - F. grade, 'a degree;' Cot.

- Lat. gradus, a step, degree. - Lat. gradi (pp. gressus), to step, walk, go. β . Supposed to be cognate with Gk. γλίχουαι, I strive after; Skt. gridh, to be greedy. - $\sqrt{\text{GARDH}}$, to strive after; Fick, i. 74. See GREEDY. Der. grad-at-ion, q. v., grad-i-ent, q. v., grad-u-al, q. v., grad-u-ate, q. v. Doublet, gradus. From the same source are de-gree, de-grade, retro-grade; in-gred-i-ent; also ag-gress-ion, con-gress, di-gress, e-gress, in-gress, pro-gress, trans-gress; and see greedy, grallatory.

GRADIENT, gradually rising; a slope. (L.) Chiefly used in modern mechanics. - Lat. gradient-, stem of gradiens, pres. part. of gradi, to walk, advance. See GRADE.

GRADUAL, advancing by steps. (L.) 'By gradual scale;' Milton, P. L. v. 483. [Also as sb., a gradual, a service-book called in Latin graduale, and more commonly known in M. E. by the F. form grail.] - Low Lat. *gradualis, but only used in the neut. graduale (often gradale), to signify a service-book 'containing the portions to be sung by the choir, so called from certain short phrases after the Epistle sung in gradibus' [upon the steps]; Proctor, On the Common Prayer, p. 8. Formed, with suffix -alis, from gradus, crude form of gradus, a step. See GRADE. Der. gradual-ly. And see grail (1).

GRADUATE, one who has received a university degree; as verb, to take a degree, to mark off degrees. (L.) Cotgrave has: 'Gradué, graduated, having taken a degree;' and also: 'Gradé, graduate, or having taken a degree.' 'I would be a graduate, sir, no freshman;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Fair Maid, A. iv. sc. 2 (Dancer). - Low Lat. graduatus, one who has taken a degree; still in use at the universities. - Lat. gradu-, crude form of gradus, a degree; formed with pp. suffix -atus. Der. gradu-at-ion, gradu-at-or.

GRAFT, GRAFF, to insert buds on a stem. (F., -L., -Gk.) The form graft is corrupt, and due to a confusion with graffed, which was orig. the pp. of graff. Shak. has grafted, Macb. iv. 3. 51; but he also rightly has graft as a pp. 'Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants;' Rich. III. iii. 7. 127. Also the verb to graft. As You Like It, iii. 2. 124. Cf. Rom. xii. 17. M. E. graffen, to graft; P. Plowman, B. v. 137. β . The verb is formed from the sb. graff, a scion. 'This bastard graff shall never come to growth;' Shak. Lucr. 1062. - O. F. graffe, grafe, a style for writing with, a sort of pencil; whence F. greffe, 'a graft, a slip or young shoot;' Cot. [So named from the resemblance of the cut slip to the shape of a pointed pencil. Similarly we have Lat. graphium, (1) a small style, (2) a small shoot, scion, graft.] - Lat. graphium, a style for writing with. - Gk. γραφίον, another form of γραφείον, a style, pencil. - Gk. γράφειν, to write, grave. See GRAVE (1), GRAPHIC. Der. graft-er.

GRAIL (1), a gradual, or service-book. (F., -L.) M. E. graille, grayle. 'Grayle, boke, gradale, vel gradalis;' Prompt. Parv. p. 207; and see Way's note. - O. F. greel; Roquefort. - Low Lat. gradale; see explanation s. v. GRADUAL.

GRAIL (2), the Holy Dish at the Last Supper. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 53. A much disputed word; but the history has been thoroughly traced out in my Pref. to Joseph of Arimathea, published for the Early Eng. Text Society. Some of my remarks are copied into the article on Grail in the Supplement to the Eng. Cyclopædia. It is there shewn that the true etymology was, at an early period, deliberately falsified by a change of San Greal (Holy Dish) into Sang Real (Royal Blood, but perversely made to mean Real Blood). - O. F. grail, greal, grasal, a flat dish. - Low Lat. gradale, grasale, a flat dish, a shallow vessel. [The various forms in O. F. and Low Lat. are very numerous; see the articles in Roquefort, Ducange, and Charpentier's Supplement to Ducange.] β . The word would appear to have been corrupted in various ways from Low Lat. cratella, a dimin. of crater, a bowl. See CRATER. γ . The sense of grail was, in course of time, changed from 'dish' to 'cup.' It was, originally, the dish in which Joseph of Arimathea is said to have collected Our Lord's blood; but this was forgotten, and the Cup at the Last Supper was substituted to explain it.

GRAIL (3), fine sand. (F., -L.) Spenser uses the word in a way peculiarly his own; he seems to have meant 'fine particles;' he speaks of 'sandie grails;' and of 'golden grayles;' F. Q. i. 7. 6; Visions of Bellay, st. 12. - O. F. graille, fine, small; Burguy (mod. F. grêle). - Lat. gracilis, slender. + Skt. kṛiṣa, thin, emaciated. - $\sqrt{\text{KARK}}$, to be thin or lean; cf. Skt. kṛiṣ, to become thin. From the same root is Colossus. ¶ It is, of course, possible that Spenser was merely coining a new form of gravel. [*]

GRAIN, a single small hard seed. (F., -L.) M. E. grein, greyn, grain; Chaucer, C. T. 598; P. Plowman, B. x. 139. - O. F. grain. - Lat. granum, a grain, corn. + A. S. corn, a grain. - $\sqrt{\text{GAR}}$, to grind; cf. Skt. jṛi, to grow old, jaraya, to cause to wax old, to grind. See CORN. Der. grain-ed; also granule, q. v., grange, q. v., granary, q. v., granite, q. v. ¶ Grain in the sense of fibre of wood is the same word; cf. F. grain des pierres, the grain of stones (Hamilton). The phrase 'to dye in grain' meant to dye of a fast colour, by means of kermes, &c.; whence grained, deeply dyed, Hamlet, iii. 4. 90. The phrase is an old one; see P. Plowman, C. iii. 14, and the note.

GRALLATORY, long-legged, said of birds. (L.) A term applied to wading birds. Coined from Lat. grallator, a walker on stilts. —Lat. gralla, stilts, contracted from gradula, dimin. formed from gradus, a step. —Lat. gradi, to walk. See Grade. Der. grallatori-al. GRAMERCY, thanks! (F., —L.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 2. 128. Formerly grand mercy, Chaucer, C. T. 8964. —F. grand merci, great thanks. See Grand and Mercy.

GRAMINEOUS, relating to grass. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Coined from Lat. gramin-, stem of gramen, grass. —✓GAR, to eat, devour; cf. Skt. grī, to devour. Der. graminivorous, grass-eating, from gramini-, crude form of gramen, and uorare, to devour; see Voracious.

GRAMMAR, the science of the use of language. (F., —L., —Gk.) M. E. grammere, Chaucer, C. T. 13466; P. Plowman, B. x. 175. —O. F. gramaire, (13th cent.); see quotation in Littré. —Low Lat. *grammatica, fem. of *grammarius, not found, but regularly formed by adding the suffix -arius to Low Lat. gramma, a letter of the alphabet. —Gk. γράμμα, a letter of the alphabet. —Gk. γράφειν, to write. See Grave (1). Der. grammar-i-an, grammar-school; from the same source, grammatical; see below.

GRAMMATICAL, belonging to grammar. (F., —L., —Gk.) 'Those grammatic flats and shallows;' Milton, Of Education (R.). Grammatical is in Cotgrave. —O. F. grammatical, 'grammatically'; Cot. Formed with suffix -al, from Lat. grammaticus, grammatical. —Gk. γραμματικός, versed in one's letters, knowing the rudiments. —Gk. γραμμαρ, stem of γράμμα, a letter. See above. Der. grammatical-ly.

GRAMPUS, a kind of fish. (Ital.?—L.) 'Grampus, a fish somewhat like a whale, but less;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Sir T. Herbert mentions 'porpice, grampasse (the sus marinus), mullet,' &c.; Travels, p. 404, ed. 1655 (or p. 384, Todd's Johnson). 'There likewise we saw many grandpiscos or herring-hogs hunting the scholes of herring;' Josselyn (A. D. 1675); cited (without a reference) in Webster. The word is a sailor's corruption, either of Ital. gran pesce, great fish, or of Port. gran peixe, or Span. gran pez, with the same meaning. —Lat. grandis piscis, a great fish; see Grand and Fish. ¶ The word porpice is similarly formed. See Porpoise.

GRANARY, a storehouse for grain. (L.) 'Granary or Garner;' Kersey, ed. 1715. —Lat. granaria, a granary. —Lat. granum, corn. See Grain and Garner. Doublet, garner; also, grange.

GRAND, great, large. (F., —L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 274. Not much used earlier, except in compounds. But it must have been known at a very early period. The comp. grandame occurs in St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 22, l. 32. Grand-father is in Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 3. Fabian has grand-mother, vol. i. c. 124; ed. Ellis, p. 102. —O. F. grand, great. —Lat. grandis, great; prob. from the same root as gravis, heavy; see Grave (2). Der. grand-child, grandame, grand-sire, grand-father, grand-son, grand-mother, grand-daughter; grand-ly, grand-ness. And see below.

GRANDEE, a Spanish nobleman. (Span., —L.) Spelt grandy; 'in a great person, right worshipful sir, a right honourable grandy;' Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, To the Reader, p. 35 (R.). —Span. grande, great; also, a nobleman. —Lat. grandem, acc. of grandis, great. See Grand.

GRANDEUR, greatness. (F., —L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 110. —F. grandeur, 'greatness'; Cot. Formed, with suffix -eur (as if from a Lat. acc. grandorem), from F. grand, great. See Grand.

GRANDILOQUENT, pompous in speech. (L.) Not in early use. The sb. grandiloquence is in Kersey, ed. 1715. Formed (in rivalry of Lat. grandiloquus, grandiloquent), from grandi-, crude form of grandis, great, and loquent-, stem of pres. part. of loqui, to speak. See Grand and Loquacious. Der. grandiloquence.

GRANGE, a farmhouse. (F., —L.) M. E. grange, graunge; Chaucer, C. T. 12996; P. Plowman, B. xvii. 71. —O. F. grange, 'a barn for corn; also, a grange;' Cot. Cf. Span. granja, a farmhouse, villa, grange. —Low Lat. granea, a barn, grange. —Lat. granum, corn. See Grain.

GRANITE, a hard stone. (Ital., —L.) 'Granite or Granita, a kind of speckled marble;' Kersey, ed. 1715. —Ital. granito, 'a kind of speckled stone;' Florio. —Ital. granito, pp. of granire, 'to reduce into graines;' Florio; hence, to speckle. —Ital. grano, corn. —Lat. granum, corn. See Grain.

GRANT, to allow, bestow, permit. (F., —L.) M. E. graunten, granten, in very early use; Layamon, 4789, later text; Ancren Riwle, p. 34. —O. F. graaunter, graaunter, another spelling of O. F. craanter, creanter, to caution, to assure, guarantee; whence the later senses of promise, yield. Cf. Low Lat. creantare, to assure, guarantee; creantium, a caution, guarantee; Ducange. —Late Lat. *cre-dentare, to guarantee, not found except in the corrupter form cre-antare; closely related to Low Lat. credentia, a promise, whence F. créance. —Lat. credent-, stem of pres. part. of credere, to trust. See Creed. Der. grant, sb., grant-or, grant-ee. ¶ The change of initial may have been influenced by confusion with O. F. garantir, to warrant; see Guarantee.

GRANULE, a little grain. (L.) 'Granule, a little grain, or barley-corn;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. (Prob. directly from Lat.; but cf. F. granule.) —Lat. granulum, a little grain; dimin. of granum, a grain. See Grain. Der. granul-ar, granul-ate, granul-at-ion, granul-ous.

GRAPPE, the fruit of the vine. (F., —M. H. G.) In Chaucer, C. T. 17032; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 30. —O. F. grappe, 'a bunch, or cluster of grapes;' Cot. [The orig. sense was 'a hook,' then 'clustered fruit' (Brachet). In E., the sense has altered from 'cluster' to 'single berry']. Cf. Span. grapa, a hold-fast, cramp-iron; Ital. grappare, to seize; grappo, a clutching; grappolo, a cluster of grapes. —M. H. G. krappe, O. H. G. chrappho, a hook. —M. H. G. kripfen, O. H. G. chripfen, to seize, clutch; allied to E. cramp. See Cramp. Der. grape-ry, grape-shot. ¶ The senses of 'hook' and 'cluster' or 'hand-ful' result from that of 'clutching.' See grapnel.

GRAPHIC, pertaining to writing; descriptive. (L., —Gk.) 'The letters will grow more large and graphical;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 503 (R.). 'Each line, as it were graphic, in the face;' Ben Jonson, An Elegy on My Muse, Underwoods, 101. ix. 154. —Lat. graphicus, belonging to painting or drawing. —Gk. γραφικός, the same. —Gk. γράφειν, to write; see Grave. (1) Der. graphic-al, graphic-al-ly.

GRAPNEL, a grappling-iron. (F., —M. H. G.) M. E. grapnel (trisyllabic); Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 640 (Cleopatra). —O. F. (and F.) grappin, a grapnel; with dim. suffix -el, thus giving grappinel, in three syllables. Formed, with suffix -in, from F. grappe, a hook. —M. H. G. krappe, a hook. See Grape, Grapple.

GRAPPLE, to lay fast hold of, clutch. (F.) In Shak. L. L. L. ii. 218; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 4. 29. Properly to seize with a grapnel; and formed from the sb. —O. F. grappil, 'the grapple of a ship;' Cot. The same in sense as F. grappin. Both grapp-il and grapp-in are formed from F. grappe, sometimes formerly used in the sense of 'hook;' cf. the phrase mordre à la grappe, to bite at the hook, to swallow the bait (Hamilton). See further under Grape. [†] GRASP, to seize, hold fast. (E.) M. E. graspen, used in the sense of 'gripe,' to feel one's way; as in 'And graspeth by the walles to and fro;' Chaucer, C. T. 4291 (or 4293); also in Wyclif, Job, v. 14, xii. 25 (earlier version), where the later version has grobe. Just as clasp was formerly claps, so grasp stands for graps. The M. E. graspen stands for grap-sen, an extension of M. E. grapen = gropen, to grope. Thus grasp = grap-s is a mere extension of grobe. See Grobe. ¶ Similarly transpositions of sp are seen in the prov. E. wops for wasp, in A. S. haps, a hasp, A. S. aps, an aspen-tree; &c. The extension of the stem by the addition of s is common in A. S., and remains in E. clean-se from clean.

GRASS, common herbage. (E.) M. E. gras, gres; also gers. Spelt gras, Chaucer, C. T. 7577; gres and gresse, Prompt. Parv. p. 210; gers, Ayenbite of Inwynt, ed. Morris, p. 111. —A. S. gers, gras, Grein, i. 373, 525. + Du. and Icel. gras. + Swed. and Dan. gräs. + Goth. gras. + G. gras. β. The connection with Lat. gramen is not at all certain. It is rather to be connected with green and grow. See Grow. Der. grass-plot, grass-y; grass-hopper = A. S. gars-hoppa, Ps. lxxvii. 51, ed. Spelman; graze = M. E. gresin, Prompt. Parv. p. 210; graz-ier = graz-er (cf. bow-yer, law-yer).

GRATE (1), a frame-work of iron-bars. (Low Lat., —L.) M. E. grate. 'Grate, or trelys wyndowe, cancellus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 207. —Low Lat. grata, a grating; cf. Ital. grata, a grate, gridiron. A variant of Low Lat. crata, a grating, crate. —Lat. crates, a hurdle. See Crate. Thus grate is a mere variant of crate, due to a weakened pronunciation. Der. grat-ing, a dimin. form; grat-ed.

GRATE (2), to rub, scrape, scratch, creak. (F., —Scand.) M. E. graten. 'Grate brede [to grate bread], mico;' Prompt. Parv. p. 207. 'Gratyng of gyngure, fritura;' id. —O. F. grater, 'to scratch, to scrape;' Cot. = F. gratier. Cf. Ital. grattare, to scratch, rub. —Low Lat. cratare, found in the Germanic codes; 'si quis alium unguibus cratauerit;' Lex Frisonum, app. 5. —Swed. kratta, to scrape; Dan. kratte, kradse, to scrape. + Du. krassen, to scratch. + G. kratzen, to scratch. Cf. M. E. cracchen, to scratch. P. Plowman, B. prol. 186. Der. grat-er, grat-ing, grat-ing-ly. Doublet, scratch.

GRATEFUL, pleasant, thankful. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 132. The suffix -ful is E., from A. S. -ful, full. The first syllable appears again in in-grate, and is derived from O. F. grat, likewise preserved in O. F. in-grat, 'ungrateful;' Cot. —Lat. gratus, pleasing. See Grace. Der. grate-ful-ly, grate-ful-ness; also gratify, q. v.; and see gratis, gratitude, gratuitous, gratulate; also agree.

GRATIFY, to please, soothe. (F.,=L.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 406.—O. F. gratifier, 'to gratify'; Cot.—Lat. gratificare, gratificari, to please.—Lat. grati=grato-, crude form of gratus, pleasing; and -ficare (= facere), to make. See Grateful, Grace. Der. gratificat-ion, from Lat. acc. gratificationem, which from gratificatus, pp. of gratificari.

GRATIS, freely. (L.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. i. 3. 45.—Lat. gratis, adv. freely; put for gratius, abl. pl. of gratia, favour. See Grace. GRATITUDE, thankfulness. (F.,=L.) In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 291.—F. gratitude; Cot.—Low Lat. gratitudinem, acc. of gratitudo, thankfulness. Formed (like beatitudo from beatus) from gratus, pleasing; see Grateful.

GRATUITOUS, freely given. (L.) 'By way of gift, merely gratuitous'; Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3. rule 81.—Lat. gratuitus, freely given. Extended from gratu-, for gratus, pleasing. See Grateful. Der. gratuitous-ly; and see below.

GRATUITY, a present. (F.,=L.) So called because given freely or gratis. 'To be given me in gratuity'; Ben Jonson, The Humble Petition of Poor Ben to K. Charles, l. 10. And in Cotgrave.—O. F. gratuité, 'a gratuity, or free gift'; Cot.—Low Lat. gratuitatem, acc. of gratuitas, a free gift.—Lat. gratuitus, freely given. See above.

GRATULATE, to congratulate. (L.) In Shak. Rich. III. iv. 1. 10.—Lat. gratulatus, pp. of gratulari, to wish a person joy. Formed as if from an adj. *gratulus, joyful; an extension of gratus, pleasing. See Grateful. Der. gratulat-ion, gratulat-or-y; also con-gratulate, which has now taken the place of the simple verb.

GRAVE (1), to cut, engrave. (E.) M. E. graven (with u for v), to grave, also to bury; Chaucer, C. T. 8557; Layamon, 9960.—A. S. grafan, to dig, grave, engrave; Grein, i. 523. + Du. graven, to dig. + Dan. grave, to dig. + Icel. grafa, to dig. + Swed. gräva, to dig. + Goth. graban; Luke, vi. 48. + G. graben. + Gk. γράφειν, to scratch, engrave, write. + Lat. scribere, to write, inscribe; cf. Lat. serobis, serobis, a ditch, dike, i.e. cutting; scalpere, to cut.—✓SKRABH, SKARBH, an extended form of ✓SKAR, to cut, shear; see Shear; also Scalp, Sculpture, Scribe. ¶ The loss of initial s at once accounts for the close likeness between the Gk. and E. forms. Der. grave, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 12599, lit. 'that which is dug out,' a word which is found again even in the Russ. grób, a grave, a tomb; also grav-er, grav-ing, grove, groove. Doublet, scalp, verb; also (probably) carve. From the same root are glabrous, grammar, graphic, en-grave, and the endings -graph, -graphy, -gram.

GRAVE (2), solemn, sad. (F.,=L.) Lit. 'heavy.' In Spenser, F. Q. v. 7. 18.—F. grave, 'grave, stately'; Cot.—Lat. gravis, heavy, grave. + Goth. hauris, heavy, burdensome; 2 Cor. x. 10. + Gk. βαρύς, heavy. + Skt. guru, heavy. All from an Aryan form GARU, heavy. Der. grave-ly, grave-ness; also grav-ity (Shak.), from F. gravité (Cot.), from Lat. acc. gravitatem; gravi-tate, gravi-tat-ion; gravi-d, from Lat. gravidus, burdened. From the same root, care, q. v.; grief, q. v.; also ag-grav-ate, ag-grieve, baro-meter.

GRAVEL, fine small stones. (F.,=C.) M. E. gravel (with u for v), in early use; in King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 1465.—O. F. gravelle, later gravelle (Burguy, Cot.); dimin. of O. F. grave (spelt greve in Burguy), rough sand mixed with stones (Brachet). β. Prob. of Celtic origin; the original is also the base of the Bret. grouan, gravel, Corn. grow, gravel, sand, W. gro, pebbles; cf. also Gael. grothlach, gravelly, and Skt. grāvan, a stone, rock. Der. gravelly.

GRAVY, juice from cooked meat. (Scand.?) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV. i. 2. 184. Also spelt greavy, or greavy (with u for v). 'In fat and greavy'; Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. xviii. 166. 'With all their fat and greaue'; id. xviii. 62. Origin uncertain; but prob. originally the adjective formed from greave or greaves (also grave, graves), tallow-drippings. Thus gravy would signify (1) tallow-y, fat; and (2) fat, gravy. Observe that the word fat has suffered the very same change, from adj. to sb. See Greaves (1).

GRAY, ash-coloured; white mixed with black. (E.) M. E. gray, grey. 'Hire eyen grey as glas'; Chaucer, C. T. 152.—A. S. græg; Grein, i. 525. [The final g passes into y by rule, as in E. day from A. S. dæg.] + Du. grauw. + Icel. grár. + Dan. graa. + Swed. grå. + G. grau. + Lat. rauis, gray (put for hruvis, according to Fick, iii. 110). Cf. Skt. ghrīr, to become old; also spelt jūr. The Gk. γρῆος, aged, gray, is also related. Der. gray-ish, gray-beard; gray-l-ing (with double dimin. suffix).

GRAZE (1), to scrape slightly, rub lightly. (F.?) 'With the grazing of a bullet upon the face of one of the servants'; Ludlow, Memoirs, vol. i. p. 51 (R.). Apparently a coined word, founded on rase, i.e. to scrape lightly, the initial g having been suggested by the verb to grate.

β. Rase is from F. raser, 'to touch or grate on a thing in passing by it'; Cot. See Rase. ¶ The form of the word may be due to some confusion with graze (2). [†]

GRAZE (2), to feed cattle. (E.) Merely formed from grass. M. E. grasen. 'And lich an oxe, under the fote, He graseth as he nedes mote'; said of Nebuchadnezzar; Gower, C. A. i. 142. See Grass. Der. graz-i-er.

GREASE, animal fat, oily matter. (F.,=L.) M. E. grece, grese; Chaucer, C. T. 135, 6069.—O. F. gresse, graisse, fatness (Burguy, s. v. cras).—O. F. gras, orig. cras, fat.—Lat. crassus, thick, fat. See Crass. Der. greasy-, greas-i-ness.

GREAT, large, ample, big. (E.) M. E. gret, grete; Chaucer, C. T. 1279.—A. S. grēat, Grein, i. 527. + Du. groot. + G. gross, β. Perhaps further related to Lat. grandis, great. Der. great-ly, great-ness; great-coat, great-hearted; also great-grandfather, great-grandson. And see groat.

GREAVES (1), GRAVES, the sediment of melted tallow. (Scand.) 'To Grave a ship, to preserve the calking, by laying over a mixture of tallow or train-oil, rosin, &c. boiled together'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. This verb merely means to smear with grave or graves, i.e. a tallowy mess. Of Scand. origin; cf. O. Swed. grefwar, dirt, ljus-grefwar, candle-dirt, refuse of tallow (Ihre); Swed. dial. grevär, sb. pl. leavings of tallow, greaves (Rietz); cf. Platt-Deutsch grevem, greaves; Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 541. + G. griebe, the fibrous remains of lard, after it has been fried (Flügel). β. Of uncertain origin; see the account in Rietz. Der. grav-y, q. v.

GREAVES (2), armour for the legs. (F.) In Milton, Samson, 1121.—O. F. greves, 'boots, also greaves, or armour for the legs'; Cot. Cf. Span. grebas (pl. of greba), greaves.—O. F. greve, 'the shank, shin, or forepart of the leg'; Cot. β. Origin unknown; Littré derives it from Arab. jawrab, a shoe, stocking, sandal; Rich. Dict. p. 525. He adds that this word is pronounced gawrab in Egypt. This is not convincing.

GREBE, an aquatic bird. (F.,=C.) Modern; not in Johnson. So named from its crest.—F. grèbe, a grebe (Hamilton).—Bret. krib, a comb; cf. Bret. kriben, a crest or tuft of feathers on a bird's head. + Corn. and W. crib, a comb, crest; Corn. criban, a crest, tuft, plume; W. cribyn, a crest, cribell, a cock's comb.

GREEDY, hungry, voracious. (E.) M. E. gredi, gredy; Ancrén Riwe, p. 416; whence gredinesse, id. p. 416.—A. S. grædig, grædig; Grein, i. 525. + Du. greitig (for greedig). + Icel. grádrugr. + O. Swed. grädig, grädig (Ihre). + Dan. grædig. + Goth. gredags. + Skt. gridhnu, gridhra, griddhin, greedy; from the verb gridh (base gradh), to be greedy.—✓GARDH, to be greedy; whence also E. garde; see Grade. Der. greed-i-ly, greed-i-ness. The sb. greed, though of late use, is a perfectly correct form, answering to Icel. grádr, Goth. gredus, hunger, Russ. golod, hunger.

GREEN, of the colour of growing plants. (E.) M. E. green, grene, Chaucer, C. T. 6568; used as sb., 159, 6580, 6964.—A. S. grēne, Grein, i. 526. [Here ē stands for ð, the mutation of o, so that the base is gro-.] + Du. groen. + Icel. grænn (for grænn). + Dan. and Swed. grön. + G. grün, M. H. G. gruene, O. H. G. kruoni. + Russ. zelené, greenness. + Lithuan. žalies, green (Schleicher). + Gk. χλωρός, greenish. + Skt. hari, green, yellow.—✓GHRA, GHAR, GHAL, to be green; whence also yellow. See Yellow and Chlorine. From the same root is Grow, q. v. Der. green-s; the phrase 'wortes of grenes' is used to translate holera herbarum in The Anglo-Saxon and Early English Psalters, ed. Stevenson (Surtees Soc.), vol. i. p. 111; Ps. xxxvi. 2. Also green-cloth, green-crop, greengage (of obscure origin), green-grocer (see grocer), green-house, green-ish, green-ish-ness, green-room, green-sand, green-stone.

GREET (1), to salute. (E.) M. E. greten, Chaucer, C. T. 8890; Ancrén Riwe, p. 430.—A. S. grētan, to approach, visit, address; Grein, i. 526. + Du. groeten, to greet, salute. + M. H. G. gruezen, G. grüssen, to greet. Root obscure. Der. greet-ing.

GREET (2), to weep, cry, lament. (E.) In Northern E. only. M. E. greten, Havelok, 164, 241, 285.—A. S. grētan, grētan, to weep; Grein, i. 525. + Icel. gráta. + Dan. græde. + Swed. gråta. + Goth. gretan, to weep. Probably allied to Skt. hrad, to sound inarticulately, roar as thunder.—✓GHRAD, to sound, rattle; Fick, i. 82.

GREGARIOUS, associating in flocks. (L.) 'No birds of prey are gregarious'; Ray, On the Creation, pt. i. (R.).—Lat. gregarius, belonging to a flock.—Lat. greg-, base of grex, a flock; with suffix -arius. β. Apparently from a base gar-, lengthened form of ✓GAR, to assemble; cf. Gk. ἀγείρειν, to assemble. Fick, i. 566. Der. gregarious-ly, gregarious-ness; from the same source, ag-greg-ate, con-greg-ate, se-greg-ate, e-greg-i-ous.

GRENADE, a kind of war-missile. (F.,=Span.,=L.) Formerly also granado, which is the Span. form. 'Granado, an apple filled with delicious grains; there is also a warlike engine, that being filled with gunpowder and other materials, is wont to be shot out of a wide-mouthed piece of ordnance, and is called a granado for the likeness it hath to the other granado in fashion, and being fully stuffed as the other granado is, though the materials are very different; Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. — O. F. grenade, 'a pomegranet; also a ball of wildfire, made like a pomegranet; Cot. — Span. granada, a pomegranate, a hand-grenade. — Span. granado, full of seeds. — Lat. granatus, full of seeds. — Lat. granum, a grain. See Grain, Garnet. Der. grenad-ier.

GREY, the same as Gray, q. v.

GREYHOUND, a swift slender hound. (Scand.) 'Grei-houndes he hadde as swift as foul of flight; Chaucer, C. T. 190. Also spelt greahund, Ancren Riwele, p. 333, last line. — Icel. greyhundur, a greyhound; composed of grey, a dog, and hundr, a hound. The Icel. grey is also used alone in the sense of greyhound or dog; and the Icel. greybaka means a bitch. Cf. also Icel. greygligr, paltry. ¶ Whatever be the source of Icel. grey, there is no pretence for connecting it with E. gray, for which the Icel. word is grár.

GRIDDLE, a pan for baking cakes. (C.) M. E. gredil, a gridiron (in the story of St. Lawrence), Ancren Riwele, p. 122. Called a gridle (= griddle) in North. E. — W. gredyll, greidell, gradell, a circular iron plate to bake on, a griddle, grate; from greidio, to scorch, singe. + Irish greideal, greideil, a griddle, gridiron; also greadog, a griddle; from greadaim, I scorch, parch, burn. (The Swed. grädda, to bake, is prob. of Celtic origin.) Der. From the same base, by a slight change, was made the M. E. gredire, a griddle, P. Plowman, C. iii. 130. Very likely, this was at first a mere change of i to r, but the latter part of the word thus became significant, the M. E. ire meaning 'iron; hence our grid-iron, spelt gyrdiron in Levins, 163. 69. ¶ Not related to grill. [†]

GRIDE, to pierce, cut through. (E.) A favourite word with Spenser; see F. Q. ii. 8. 36; Sheph. Kal. February, l. 4; Virgil's Gnat, 254. And cf. 'griding sword; Milton, P. L. vi. 329. A mere metathesis of gird, M. E. girden, to strike, pierce, cut through, used by Chaucer, and borrowed from him by later poets. 'Thurgh girt [pierced through] with many a grevous bloody wound; Chaucer, C. T. 1012. β. This verb girden means to strike with a rod, from M. E. gerde, generally softened to zerde, a rod (mod. E. yard); cf. 'Or if men smot it with a zerde; Chaucer, C. T. 149. Cf. G. gerie, a switch; and see Yard. γ. The same word is used metaphorically in the phrase 'to gird at,' i. e. to strike at, try to injure; see Shak. 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 7; so also a gird is a cut, a sarcasm, Tam. Shrew, v. 2. 48. ¶ The same metathesis of r takes place in bride, q. v. The usual derivation of gride from Ital. gridare, to cry aloud, is absurd, and explains nothing.

GRIEF, great sorrow. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. grief, gref; spelt gref, Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, 187. — O. F. gref, grief, adj. burdensome, heavy, sad. — Lat. gravis, heavy, sad, grave. See Grave. Der. grieve, &c. See below.

GRIEVE, to afflict; to mourn. (F., — L.) M. E. greuen (with u=v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 41; P. Plowman, C. v. 95. — O. F. greuer, to grieve, burden, afflict. — Lat. gravare, to burden. — Lat. gravis, heavy. See Grave. Der. grievous (M. E. greuous, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 77); grievous-ly, grievous-ness; griev-ance, M. E. greuance, Gower, C. A. i. 289; and see above.

GRIFFIN, GRIFFON, an imaginary animal. (F., — L., — Gk.) Griffin is a weakened spelling; a better spelling is griffon. M. E. griffon, Chaucer, C. T. 2135. — F. griffon, 'a gripe, or griffon; Cot. Formed, with suffix -on, from Low Lat. griffus, a griffin. — Lat. gryphus, an extended form of gryps, a griffin. — Gk. γρύψ (stem γρυν-), a griffin, a fabulous creature named from its hooked beak. — Gk. γρυνός, curved; also, hook-nosed, hook-beaked. Root unknown.

GRIG, a small lively eel; a cricket. (Scand.) 'A grigge, a young eel. A merie grigge; Minshew, ed. 1627. The final g must be due to an older k, and the word is easily deducible from crick, the word of which crick-et is the diminutive. Cf. Lowland Sc. crick, a tick, a louse (Jamieson). It is certainly of O. Low G. origin, and probably Scandinavian. — Scand. dial. kräk, also krik, a little creature, esp. a crawling creature; Rietz. (Cf. Du. kriek, a cricket; krekel, a cricket.) — Swed. dial. kräka, to creep (Rietz); Icel. krækta, to crouch. Cf. G. kriechen, to creep. See Cricket. (1). ¶ The phrase as merry as a grig is either due to this word, or an easy corruption of the (apparently) older phrase as merry as a Greek; see quotations in Nares, amongst which we may note 'she's a merry Greek indeed; Troilus, i. 2. 118; 'the merry Greeks,' id. iv. 4. 58. Merygreek is a character in Udall's Roister Doister; A. D. 1553. Cf. Lat. græcari, to live like Greeks, i. e. effeminately, luxuriously; Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 11. [†]

GRILL, to broil on a gridiron. (F., — L.) Extended to grilly by Butler. 'Than have them grillied on the embers; Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 15 from end. — F. griller, 'to broil on a gridiron, to scorch; Cot. — F. gril, 'a gridiron; id. Formerly spelt greil, grail (Brachet). — Lat. acc. craticulum, a masc. form of craticula, a small gridiron; Mart. xi. 221 (whence F. grille, a grating). These are dimin. forms from Lat. crates, a hurdle. See Grate (1), Crate.

GRIM, fierce, angry-looking. (E.) M. E. grim, Chaucer, C. T. 11458. — A. S. grim, fierce, cruel, severe, dire, Grein, i. 527; a weakened form of A. S. gram, angry, furious, hostile; id. i. 523. Cf. also A. S. grimetan, to rage, roar, grunt. + Du. grimmig, angry; cf. grimmen, to foam with rage. + Icel. grimmr, grim, stem; gramr, wrathful. + Dan. grim, ugly, grim; gram, wrathful. + Swed. grym, cruel, grim, furious; cf. grymta, to grunt. + Goth. *gram, angry; only preserved in the derived verb gramjan, to make angry, excite to wrath. + G. grimmig, furious; grimmen, to rage; grimm, fury; gram, grief; gram, hostile. β. Other allied words are Russ. grom, a loud noise, thunder; gremiete, to thunder; Gk. χρόμη, χρόμος, noise; χρημίζω, χρημίζω, to neigh; see Curtius, i. 250. γ. All from ✓ GHARM, to make a loud noise, an extension of ✓ GHAR, to make a noise, to yell; cf. Skt. gharghara, an inarticulate noise, a rattle, gurgle; ghargharita, grunting. See Yell.

GRIMACE, an ugly look, smirk. (F., — Scand.) 'Grimace and affectation; Dryden, Poet. Epist. to H. Higden, l. 10. — F. grimace, 'a crabd looke; Cot. — Icel. grima, a mask, kind of hood or cowl; whence grimu-madr, a man in disguise. A grimace is so called from the disguised appearance due to it. + A. S. grima, a mask, helmet. β. Origin obscure; Fick connects it with the verb to grin; iii. 111. This relationship is rendered very probable by the Du. grins, a mask, a grin. See Grin. Der. grimace, verb. And see Grime, Grin. GRIMALKIN, a cat. (E.; partly O. H. G.) See Nares, who suggests that it stands for gray malkin, 'a name for a fiend, supposed to resemble a grey cat.' He is probably right. In this view, Malkin is for Maud-kin, dimin. of Maud (Matilda), with suffix -kin. The name Maud is O. H. G. The M. E. Malkin, as a dimin. of Maud, was in very common use; see Chaucer, C. T. 4450. It was a name for a slut or loose woman. [†]

GRIME, dirt that soils deeply, smut. (Scand.) In Shak. Com. of Errors, iii. 2. 106. As a verb, K. Lear, ii. 3. 9. M. E. grim; 'grim or gore; Havelok, 2497. [The A. S. grima, a mask, is (apparently) the same word, but the peculiar sense is Scand.] — Dan. grim, grimm, lampblack, soot, grime; whence grimet, streaked, begrimed. + Swed. dial. grima, a spot or smut on the face; Rietz. + Icel. grima, a cowl worn for disguise, mask. + O. Du. grijmsel, grimsel, soot, smut (Kilian); grimmelen, to soil, begrime (Oudemans). + Friesic grime, a mask, dark mark on the face; cited by Rietz. Cf. also Du. grijns, a mask, a grin; which connects the word with Grin, q. v. And see Grimace. Der. grim-y.

GRIN, to snarl, grimace. (E.) M. E. griennen, Ancren Riwele, 212; Layamon, 29550. — A. S. griennian, to grin; Grein, i. 525. + Du. grijnen, to weep, cry, fret, grumble; whence grijnsen, to grumble, to grin. + Icel. grena, to howl. + Dan. grine, to grin, simper. + Swed. grina, to distort the face, grimace, grin. + G. greinen, to grin, grimace, weep, cry, growl. β. A mere variant of Groan, q. v. Also further related to Grim, q. v. From ✓ GHARN, an extension of ✓ GHAR, to make a noise, discussed under Grim. Der. grin, sb. GRIND, to reduce to powder by rubbing. (E.) M. E. grinden, Chaucer, C. T. 14080; Ancren Riwele, p. 70. — A. S. grindan, Grein, i. 528. β. The base is GHRI, whence also Lat. fri-are, to rub, crumble to pieces; cf. Gk. χρίω, to graze, Skt. ghrish, to grind, from a base GHARS, in which the s is additional, as noted by Curtius, i. 251. These analogies are quite clear, though not pointed out in Fick or Curtius. All from ✓ GHAR, to grind. The Lat. fri-are, to rub, also shows an addition to the base. Der. grind-er, grind-stone; also grist, q. v. From the same base, fri-able, fri-cation.

GRIPE, to grasp, hold fast, seize forcibly. (E.) Also grip; but the form with long i is the original. 1. Grip is a very late form, altogether unnoticed in Todd's Johnson; it is French, from F. gripper, a word of Scand. origin, from Icel. grípa. 2. Gripe is the common old form, both as sb. and verb; see Shak. Macb. iii. 1. 62; K. John, iv. 2. 190. M. E. gripen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 248. — A. S. gripan, to seize; Grein, i. 529. + Du. grijpen. + Icel. grípa. + Dan. gripe. + Swed. gripa. + Goth. gripan. + G. greifen. + Russ. grabite, to seize, plunder. + Lith. grėbiu, I seize (Schleicher). + Skt. grak (Vedic grabh), to seize, take. — ✓ GARBH, to seize; cf. E. grab. Der. gripe, sb., gripes; and see grab, grope, grasp. [But grapnel and grapple are not related.]

GRISSETTE, a gay young Frenchwoman of the lower class. (F., — M. H. G.) Lately borrowed from F. grisetelle, orig. a cheap dress of gray colour, whence they were named. — F. gris, gray. — M. H. G. gris, gray; cf. G. gris, a gray-haired man. See Grizzly. ¶ Hence also F. gris, the fur of the gray squirrel; Chaucer, C. T. 194.

GRISLED, the same as Grizzled, q. v.

GRISKIN, the spine of a hog; prov. E. (Scand.) The lit. sense is 'a little pig; it is formed by the dimin. suffix -kin from the once common word gris or grice, a pig. 'Bothe my gees and my grys' = both my geese and pigs; P. Plowman, B. iv. 51. 'Gryce, swyne, or pygge, porcellus,' Prompt. Parv. p. 211; and see Way's note. — Icel. griss, a young pig. + Dan. grüis, a pig. + Swed. gris, a pig. + Gk. χοῖπος (for χοπο-ιος), a young pig; Curtius, i. 250. + Skt. grishvis, a boar; cited by Curtius. β. The root is clearly GHARS, to grind, rub; though the reason for the sense of the sb. is not clear; it may refer to the use of the animal's snout. See Grind.

GRISLY, hideous, horrible. (E.) M. E. grisly, Chaucer, C. T. 1973. 14115. — A. S. gryslíc, in the compound an-gryslíc, horrible, terrible; Grein, i. 8. By the common change of s to r, we also find A. S. gryrelle, terrible; Grein, i. 532. Allied to A. S. *grýsan, to feel terror, shudder (base grus), only found in the comp. ágrýsan, put for ágrýsan. 'And for helle ágrýse' = and shudder at the thought of hell; Laws of Cnut, i. 25; see Ancient Laws, ed. Thorpe, vol. i. p. 374. Cf. G. grausig, causing horror; graus, horrible, horror; grausen, to make to shudder = M. H. G. grúsen. β. Possibly related to Goth. gaurjan, to grieve, make to grieve; gaur, sad, grieved; which answers in form to Skt. ghora, horrible, dreadful, violent. Doublet, gruesome, q. v. [†]

GRIST, a supply of corn to be ground. (E.) M. E. grist. 'And moreouer . . . grynd at the Citeis myllis . . . as long as they may have sufficiant grist;' Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, pp. 335, 336. — A. S. grist, as a gloss to Lat. molitura; Wright's Vocab. i. 34, col. 2. We also find A. S. gristbitian, to gnash or grind the teeth (Grein, i. 529), with the same word forming a prefix. Formed from the base gri- of the verb grindan, to grind. See Grind. ¶ Cf. bla-st from blow (as wind), blossom (= blo-st-ma) from blow (to flourish). Der. grist-le.

GRISTLE, cartilage. (E.) 'Seales have gristle, and no bone;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 37; vol. i. p. 345 a. The word gristly occurs in the preceding clause. It was especially used with reference to the nose. 'Grystille of the nose, cartilago;' Prompt. Parv. 'Nease-gristles,' i. e. gristles of the nose (speaking of many people together); O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 251. — A. S. gristle, as a gloss to cartilago; Ælfric's Glos. in Wright's Vocab. i. 43, col. 2. + O. Fries. gristel, gristl, grestel, gerstel; Richtofen. β. The word is certainly the dimin. of grist, and derivable from the root of grind; with reference to the necessity of crunching it if eaten. So also Du. knarsbeen, gristle, from knarsen, to crunch (Wedgwood). See Grist. Der. grist-ly.

GRIT, gravel, coarse sand. (E.) Formerly greet. 'Greete, sabulum;' Levins, 89. 11. 'Sablonniere, a sand-bed, . . . a place full of sand, greet, or small gravel;' Cotgrave. M. E. greet, Ancrén Riwle, p. 70. — A. S. gréot, grit, dust; Grein, i. 527. + O. Fries. grét. + Icel. grjót. + G. gries. Closely allied to Grout, q. v. Der. gritt-y, gritt-i-ness; see also groats, grout.

GRIZZLY, GRIZZLED, of a grey colour. (F., — M. H. G.; with E. suffix.) Shak. has grizzled, Hamlet, i. 2. 240 (in some copies grisly); also grizzle as sb., a tinge of gray, Tw. Nt. v. 168. Formed with suffix -y (or -ed) from M. E. grisel, a gray-haired man. 'That olde grisel is no fole' [fool]; Gower, C. A. iii. 356. Grisel is formed, with suffix -el, from F. gris, gray. — M. H. G. gris, gray; cf. G. greis, a gray-haired man. β. Possibly related to E. gray, but the connection is not at all clear. Der. From the same source, gris-ette, q. v.

GROAN, to moan. (E.) M. E. gronen, Chaucer, C. T. 14892; Ancrén Riwle, p. 326. — A. S. gránian, to groan, lament; Grein, i. 524; allied to gremnian, to grin. See Grin. Der. groan-ing.

GROAT, a coin worth 4d. (O. Low G.) M. E. grote, Chaucer, C. T. 7546; P. Plowman, B. v. 31. — O. Low G. grote, a coin of Bremen, described in the Bremen Wörterb. ii. 550. The word (like Du. groot) means 'great'; the coins being greater than the small copper coins (Schwaren) formerly used in Bremen. Cogn. with E. great. See Great.

GROATS, the grain of oats without the husks. (E.) M. E. grotes, Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, 47 (Stratmann). — A. S. grátan, pl. gróats, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 292, l. 24. Hence the M. E. o and ea answer to A. S. á, as in many other cases; cf. E. oak from A. S. ác, and E. oats from A. S. áta, pl. átan. The A. S. á answers to Goth. ai, strengthened form of i, and grátan (like gri-st) is from the base of the verb grind; see Grist, Grind.

GROCEB, a dealer in tea and sugar. (F., — L.) Formerly spelt grosser, as in Holinshed's Chron. Rich. II, an. 1382; Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 193 (R.). A. In olden times, those whom we now call grocers were called spicers. Dealers were of two kinds, as now; there were wholesale dealers, called grossers or engrossers, and retail dealers, called regrators; see Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 547, note 1. Thus the word grosser, properly 'a wholesale dealer,' is now spelt grocer, and means 'a spicer.' B. Borrowed from O. F. grossier, 'a grocer; marchand grossier, that sells only by the great, or utters his commodities wholesale;' Cot. — O. F. gros, fem. grosse, great. See Gross. Der. grocer-y, formerly grossery, from O. F. grosserie, 'great worke; also grossery, wares uttered, or the uttering of wares, by whole-sale;' Cot. [†]

GROG, spirits and water, not sweetened. (F., — L.) An abbreviation of grogam. 'It derived its name from Admiral Edward Vernon, who wore grogam breeches, and was hence called "Old Grog." About 1745, he ordered his sailors to dilute their rum with water. . . He died 30 Oct., 1757;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. See Grogam.

GROGRAM, a stuff made of silk and mohair. (F., — L.) Formerly grogan, a more correct form (Skinner). 'He shall have the grogams at the rate I told him;' Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ii. 1. 10. So called because of a coarse grain or texture. — O. F. gros-grain, 'the stuff grogan;' Cot. — F. gros, gross, great, coarse; and grain, grain. See Gross and Grain. Der. grog, q. v.

GROIN, the fork of the body, part where the legs divide. (Scand.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 227. The same word as prov. E. grain, the fork of the branches of a tree. The word occurs in the Percy Folio MS., ed. Hales and Fumivall, i. 75, l. 12, where it is misinterpreted by Percy, but rightly explained in a note at p. lxxiii. 'Grain, (1) the junction of the branches of a tree or forked stick; (2) the groin;' Peacock, Gloss. of Words used in Manley (E. D. S.). And see Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary, and Halliwell. — Icel. grein, a branch, arm; cf. greina, to fork, branch off. + Dan. green, a branch, prong of a fork. + Swed. gren, a branch, arm, fork, stride; see gren in Rietz. (Root unknown.) Der. groin-ed, i. e. having angular curves which intersect or fork off.

GROOM, a servant, lad. (E.) Now esp. used of men employed about horses; but orig. of wider use. It meant a lad, servant in waiting, or sometimes, a labourer, shepherd. M. E. grom, grome; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 135; P. Plowman, C. ix. 227; Havelok, 790; King Horn, 971. β. Of uncertain origin; Stratmann cites the O. Du. grom and O. Icel. gromr, a boy, as parallel forms; but neither of these forms have any obvious etymology, and may be no more than corruptions of Du. gom (only used in the comp. bruidegom, a bridegroom) and Icel. gumi, a man, respectively. γ. In our word bridegroom, q. v., the r is well known to be an insertion, and the same may be the case when the word is used alone. Though the insertion of r is very remarkable, there are other instances, as in cart-r-idge for cartouche, part-r-idge, co-r-poral for F. caporal, vag-r-ant, hoa-r-se, &c.; see Mätzner, Engl. Gramm. i. 175. δ. A remarkable example shewing the probability of this insertion occurs in P. Plowman. In the A-text, vii. 205, the text has gomes, but three MSS. have gromes. In the B-text, vi. 219, at least seven MSS. have gomes. In the C-text, ix. 227, the MSS. have gromes.

ε. If the r can thus be disposed of, the etymology becomes extremely simple, viz. from A. S. guma, a man, Grein, i. 532; which is cognate with Du. gom (in bruidegom), G. gam (in bräutigam), O. H. G. gumo, Icel. gumi, Goth. guma, Lat. homo, a man. See Human.

GROOVE, a trench, furrow, channel. (Du.) In Skinner; rare in early books. 'Groove, a channel cut out in wood, iron, or stone;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Also: 'Groove or Grove, a deep hole or pit sunk in the ground, to search for minerals;' id. β. The proper spelling of the latter word is grove; see Manlove's poem on Leadmines (E. D. S. Glos. B. 8, ll. 18, 22, and the Glossary), printed A. D. 1653. We certainly ought to distinguish between the two forms. 1. The form groove, as a joiner's term, is Dutch, and borrowed from Du. groef (pron. groof) or groeve, a grave, channel, groove. 2. Grove, a mine, is the real E. form, and merely a peculiar use of the word grove, usually applied to trees. See Grove.

GROPE, to feel one's way. (E.) M. E. gropen, C. T. 646 (or 644); used in the sense of 'grasp,' King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1957. — A. S. gráþian, to seize, handle, Grein, i. 524; a weak verb, and unoriginal. — A. S. gráp, the grip of the fingers, grasp of the hand; id. — A. S. gráþan, to gripe. See Gripe. β. Similarly the Icel. greip, grip, grasp, is from Icel. grípa, to gripe; and the O. H. G. greifa, a two-pronged fork (cited by Fick, iii. 111) is from O. H. G. grifan, to gripe. And see Grasp. Der. grop-ing-ly.

GROSS, fat, large. (F., — L.) Very common in Shak.; Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43, &c. 'This grosse imagination;' Frith's Works, p. 140, col. 2. — O. F. gros (fem. grosse), 'grosse, great, big, thick;' Cot. — Lat. grossus, thick (a late form). Of uncertain origin; see Fick, i. 525 (s. v. krat). Der. gross-ly, gross-ness, gross-beak or gross-beak (F. gros bec, great beak, the name of a bird), grocer, q. v., grocer-y; also gross, sb., en-gross, in-gross, gro-gram, grog.

GROT, a cavern. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Umbrageous grots and caves;' Milton, P. L. iv. 257. — F. grotte, 'a grot, cave;' Cot. (Cf. Prov. erota, formerly cropta, cited by Littré.) — Low Lat. grupta, a crypt, cave; a form found in a Carolingian document: 'Insuper eidem contuli gruptas eremitarum . . . cum omnibus ad dictas gruptas pertinentibus,' in a Chartulary of A. D. 887 (Brachet). — Lat. crypta, a crypt; Low Lat. crypta. From Greek; see Crypt. And see Grotto. Doublet, crypt; also grotto. Der. grot-esque, q. v.

GROTTO, a cavern. (Ital., — L., — Gk.) A corruption of the older form grotta. 'And in our grottoes;' Pope, tr. of Homer's Odyss. b. x. 480. (Pope had his own grotto at Twickenham.) 'A grotto, or place of shade;' Bacon, Essay 45 (Of Building).—Ital. grotta, a grotto, cognate with F. grotte. See Grot.

GROTESQUE, ludicrous, strange. (F.,—Ital.,—L.,—Gk.) 'Grotesque and wild;' Milton, P. L. iv. 136. 'And this grotesque design;' Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 1044.—O. F. grotesque; pl. grotesques, 'pictures wherein all kinds of odde things are represented;' Cot.—Ital. grotesca, 'antick or landskip worke of painters;' Florio. [So called because such paintings were found in old crypts and grottoes.]—Ital. grotta, a grotto. See Grot, Grotto. ¶ Sir T. Herbert uses the Ital. form. 'The walls and pavements, . . . by rare artificers carved into story and grotesco work;' Travels, ed. 1665, p. 147.

GROUND, the surface of the earth. (E.) M. E. grund, ground, Chaucer, C. T. 455; Havelok, 1979; Layamon, 2296.—A. S. grund; Grein, i. 530. + Du. grond. + Icel. grunnr. + Dan. and Swed. grund. + Goth. *grundus, only in the comp. grundu-waddjus, a ground-wall, foundation; Luke, vi. 48, 49. + O. H. G. grunt, G. grund. + Lith. grūntas (Schleicher). β. The common supposition that the orig. sense was 'dust' or 'earth,' so the word meant 'ground small,' is very plausible. Certainly it appears as if connected with the verb to grind. See Grind. We also find Gael. grunnd, Irish grunnt, ground, bottom, base. Der. ground, verb (Chaucer, C. T. 416); ground-less, ground-less-ly, ground-less-ness, ground-ling, q. v., ground-sill, q. v., ground-sel, q. v.; also ground-floor, -ivy, -plan, -rent, -swell, -work. Also grounds, q. v.

GROUNDLING, a spectator in the pit of a theatre. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 2. 12; Beaum. and Fletcher, Prothetess, i. 3. 32. A term of contempt; made by suffixing -ling, a double dimin. ending (= ling), to the sb. ground. 2. There is also a fish called the groundling, so called because it keeps near the bottom of the water.

GROUNDS, dregs. (C.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Grounds, the settling or dregs of drink;' Kersey, ed. 1715. This peculiar use of the word is Celtic.—Gael. grunnas, lees, dregs; from Gael. grunnd, ground, cognate with E. ground. + Irish gruntas, dregs, grunnas, lees, dross; from grunnt, the ground, bottom. See Ground.

GROUNDSEL, a small plant. (E.) Corruptly written grensel in Levins. Better groundswell, as in Holland's Pliny, b. xxv. c. 13.—A. S. grundeswyllige, grundeswelge, grundeswille, with numerous references; Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 329. 'Senecio, grundswylige;' Wright's Vocab. i. 68, col. 2, l. 1. β. The lit. sense is 'ground-swallower,' i. e. occupier of the ground, abundant weed.—A. S. grund, ground; and swelgan, to swallow. See Leo's Glossar, col. 249.

GROUNDSILL, the timber of a building next the ground; a threshold. (E.) Spelt grunsell, Milton, P. L. i. 460. 'And so fyll downe deed on the groundsyll;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 176 (R.) Compounded of ground and sill; see Sill.

GROUP, a cluster, assemblage. (F.,—Ital.,—G.) 'Group, in painting, a piece that consists of several figures;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'The figures of the groups;' Dryden, Parallel of Painting and Poetry (R.).—F. groupe, a group; not in Cot.—Ital. gruppo, a knot, heap, group, bag of money.—G. kropp, a crop, craw, maw, wen on the throat; orig. a bunch. Cf. Icel. kroppr, a hunch or bunch on any part of the body. Prob. originally of Celtic origin. See Crop, of which group is a doublet. Der. group-ing, group, verb.

GROUSE, the name of a bird. (F.) 'Grouse, a fowl, common in the North of England;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Prof. Newton has kindly sent me a much earlier instance of the word. 'Attagen, perdis Asclepica, the Heath-cock or Grouse. . . . Hujus in Anglia duas habemus species, quarum major vulgo dicitur, the black game, . . . minor vero, the grey game;' Charleton, Onomasticon Zoicon, London, 1668, p. 73. β. Grouse appears to be a false form, evolved as a supposed sing. from the older word grice (cf. mouse, mice). Grice was used (according to Cotgrave) in the same sense. He gives: 'Griesche, gray, or peckled [speckled?] as a stare [starling]; Perdrin griesche, the ordinary, or gray partridge; Poule griesche, a moorhen, the hen of the grice or moorgame.' γ. Grice is merely borrowed from this O. F. griesche; cf. also O. F. greoche, a 13th cent. form given by Littré, s. v. grièche. He quotes as follows: 'Concornix est uns oisiaus que li François claiment greoiches, parce que ele fu premiers trovee en Grece,' i. e. Cotornix is a bird which the French call greoiches, because it was first found in Greece; Brunetto Latini, Trés, p. 211. δ. The stinging-nettle was called ortie griesche even in the 13th cent.; see Wright, Vocab. i. 140, col. 2. Of unknown origin; it can hardly be from Lat. Graciscus, Greekish.

¶ 1. That our E. grouse can be in 'any way related to Pers. khurús, a dung-hill cock (Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 221), is, I think, out of the question. The suggestion appears in Webster. 2. Another suggestion is to connect grouse with W. grugiar, a moor-hen (from grug, heath, and iar, a hen), but the Gaelic form of this word is fraoch-cheare (from fraoch, heather, and ceare, a hen), and it does not seem possible to deduce grouse from this, or even from the W. form.

GROUT, coarse meal; in pl. grounds, dregs. (E.) M. E. grut; which appears in the adj. grutten, grouty. 'bet tu ete grutlene bread'=that thou eat grouty bread; Ancrer Riwele, p. 186.—A. S. grūt, groats, coarse meal; Codex Diplomaticus, ed. Kemble, 235 (Leo). + Du. grut, groats. + Icel. grautr, porridge. + Dan. grød, boiled groats. + Swed. gröt, thick pap. + G. grütze, groats. + Lithuan. grudas, corn; cited by Fick, i. 586. + Lat. rudis, stones broken small, rubble. β. From a base ghruda (Fick). Doublet, groats, q. v. Allied to grūt, q. v. Der. gru-el, q. v.

GROVE, a collection of trees. (E.) The orig. sense must have been 'a glade,' or lane cut through trees; for this sense, cf. Glade. The word is a mere derivative of the E. verb grave, to cut. M. E. groue (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 1480, 1602; Layamon, 469.—A. S. gráf, a grove (Lye); but the word is very scarce. Leo refers to Codex Diplomaticus, ed. Kemble, 305.—A. S. grafan, to dig, grave, cut. See Grave (1). Doublet, groove, q. v.

GROVEL, to fall flat on the ground. (Scand.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 305. The formation of the verb to grovel was perhaps due to a singular grammatical mistake. Groveling was in use as an adverb with the suffix -ling, but this was readily mistaken for the pres. part. of a verb, and the -ing being dropped, the new verb to grovel emerged. β. Spenser uses the form groveling only. 'Streight downe againe herselfe, in great despite She groveling threw to ground;' F. Q. ii. i. 45. 'And by his side the Goddess groveling Makes for him endlesse mone;' F. Q. iii. 1. 38. 'Downe on the ground his carkas groveling fell;' F. Q. iii. 5. 23. In the last instance, the sense is 'flatly' or 'flat.' γ. The M. E. groveling or grovelings is a mere adverb. 'Groveling to his fete thay fell;' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1120. 'Grovelinge, or grovelingys, adv. Suppine, resupine;' Prompt. Parv. p. 215. After which is added: 'Grovelinge, nom. Suppinus, resupinus;' shewing that, in A. D. 1440, the word was beginning to be considered as being sometimes a nom. pres. part. Note also: 'Therfor grovelingys thou shall be layde;' Towneley Myst. p. 40. Way notes that in Norf. and Suff. the phrase 'to lie grubblins,' or with the face downwards, is still in use. δ. The correct M. E. form is grosting or grostings, where the -ling or -ings is the adv. suffix that appears in other words, such as dark-ling, flat-ling; see Darkling, Headlong. The former part of the word could be used alone, with exactly the same adverbial sense; as 'they fallen grof;' Chaucer, C. T. 951. The phrase is of Scand. origin.—Icel. grúfa, in the phr. liggja á grúfu, to lie grovelling, to lie on one's face, symja á grúfu, to swim on one's belly. Cf. also grúfa, verb, to grovel, couch, or cower down. Hence was formed grúfla, to grovel, which justifies the E. verb, though clear proof of direct connection between the words is wanting. + Swed. dial. gruva, flat on one's face; ligga á gruve, to lie on one's face; Rietz. Root uncertain; perhaps related to Grave (1). Der. grovell-er.

GROW, to increase, become enlarged by degrees. (E.) M. E. grouen, P. Plowman, B. xx. 56; C. xiii. 177.—A. S. gróuan, pt. t. gréow, pp. grówen; Grein, i. 529. + Du. groeien. + Icel. gróa. + Dan. groe. + Swed. gro. β. Esp. used of the growth of vegetables, &c., and hence closely connected with the word green, which is from the same root. See Green. ¶ The A. S. word for the growth of animals is properly weaxan, mod. E. wax, q. v. Der. grow-er; growth, Othello, v. 2. 14, not an A. S. word, but of Scand. origin, from Icel. gróðr, gróði, growth.

GROWL, to grumble. (Du.) In Skinner, ed. 1671; and in Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 195. Apparently borrowed from Dutch.—Du. grollen, to grumble. + G. grollen, to bear ill-will against, to be angry; also, to rumble (as thunder). + Gk. γροῦλίζειν, to grunt; γρόλλος, a pig; from γρῦ, the noise of grunting. β. Of imitative origin; see Grumble. Der. growl, sb., growl-er. [†]

GRUB, to grope in the dirt. (E.) M. E. grubben, gröbben. 'To grubbe vp metal;' Chaucer, Ætas Prima, l. 29. 'So depe thay grubbed and so fast;' Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 94, l. 268. Of obscure origin; but probably a mere variant of grope. The M. E. gröbben may stand for grobien = gropien, from A. S. gráþian, to grope. The orig. sense of grub would thus be 'to grope,' hence 'to feel for' or 'search for,' esp. in the earth. See Grope. ¶ It cannot well be from the Teutonic base GRAB, to dig, because the A. S. form of this verb was grafan, whence E. grave and grove. The connection of grub is rather with grab, gripe, grope, and grasp. Der. grub, sb., an insect; grubb-er, grubb-y.

GRUDGE, to grumble, murmur. (F.,—Scand.?) M. E. grochen, gruchen, grucchen, to murmur. 'Why grucchen we?' Chaucer, C. T. 3060; cf. ll. 3047, 3064. '3if þe gomes grucche'=if the men murmur, P. Plowman, B. vi. 219. Spelt grochi, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 67; grucchen, Ancren Riwle, p. 186. The earliest spelling was grucchen, then gruggen, and finally grudge, Tempest, i. 2. 249. — O. F. grocer, groucer, groucher, to murmur (Burguy); later gruger, 'to grudge, repine'; Cot. Cf. Low Lat. groussare, to murmur, found in a passage written A. D. 1358 (Ducange). β. Of somewhat uncertain origin, but prob. Scandinavian; cf. Icel. krylja (pt. t. krutli), to murmur, krutr, a murmur; Swed. dial. krutla, to murmur (Rietz). γ. Burguy refers O. F. grocer to M. H. G. grunzen, to grunt, but it comes to much the same thing. The orig. source is clearly the imitative sound kru or gru, as seen in Gk. γρῦ, the grunt of a pig; the words gru-dge, gru-ni, gru-w-l being all mere variants from the same base. See Growl, Grunt. ¶ Different from mod. F. gruger, to crumble. Der. grudge, sb., grudg-ing-ly.

GRUEL, liquid food, made from meal. (F., — O. Low G.) 'Or casten all the gruel in the fyr'; Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 711. — O. F. gruel (Burguy) = mod. F. gruau, — Low Lat. grutellum, a dimin. of grutum, meal, in a Carolingian text (Brachet). — O. Low G. grut (evidenced by Du. grut), groats, cognate with A. S. grūt, groats, grout, coarse meal. See Grout.

GRUESOME, horrible, fearful. (Scand.) Also gruesome, grusome, grousum, 'Death, that grusome carl'; Burns, Verses to J. Rankine. And see Jamieson's Sc. Dict., s. v. grousum. 'Grousome, horridus'; Levins, 162. 10. — Dan. gru, horror, terror; with Dan. suffix -som, as in virksom, active. Cf. Dan. grue, to dread, gruelig, horrid. + Du. gruwzaam, terrible, hideous. + G. grausam, cruel, horrible. β. A fuller form of Dan. gru appears in O. Sax. gruri, horror, cognate with A. S. gryre, horror. See further under Grisly.

GRUFF, rough, surly. (Dutch.) A late word. 'Such an one the tall, . . . such an one the gruff'; Spectator, no. 433. — Du. grof, coarse, plump, loud, blunt, great, heavy. + Swed. grof, coarse, big, rude, gross. + Dan. grov, the same. + G. grob, coarse; M. H. G. gerob, grop. β. The M. H. G. form shows that the initial g stands for ge (= A. S. ge = Goth. ga), a mere prefix. The prob. root is the Teutonic RUB, to break, violate, break through; whence A. S. reðfan, Icel. rjúfa, to break, cognate with Lat. rumpere, to break. See Rupture. If this be right, the orig. sense was 'broken,' hence rough, coarse, &c. Der. gruff-ly, gruff-ness.

GRUMBLE, to growl, murmur. (F., — G.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 249; &c. — F. grommeler, 'to grumble, repine'; Cot. — O. and prov. G. grummelen, used by E. Müller to translate E. grumble; a frequentative of the verb grumen, grumes, or grommen; cf. Bavarian sich grumen, to be vexed, fret oneself, Schmeller, 997; Du. grommen, to grumble, growl. β. The orig. sense is 'to be angry,' and the word is closely connected with G. gram, vexation, grimmen, to rage. Cf. Russ. grome, thunder. — ✓ GHARM, to make a loud noise; see further under Grim. Der. grumbler, grumb-ling-ly.

GRUME, a clot, as of blood. (F., — L.) Very rare, but used by De Quincey (Webster). Commoner in the adj. grum-ous. 'Grumous, full of clots or lumps'; Kersey, ed. 1715. — O. F. grume, 'a knot, bunch, cluster'; Cot. Cf. O. F. grumeau, a clot of blood; id. — Lat. grumus, a little heap or hillock of earth. + Gk. κῶμας, κλῶμας, a heap of stones. Root uncertain. Der. grum-ous.

GRUNSEL, used for Groundsill, q. v.

GRUNT, to make a sound like a pig. (E.) M. E. grunten, Ancren Riwle, p. 326. An extension of A. S. grunan, to grunt, found in Ælfric's Grammar (Bosworth). + Dan. grynne, to grunt. + Swed. grymta, to grunt. + G. grunzen. + Lat. grunnire, O. Lat. grundire. + Gk. γρῦειν. β. All of imitative origin; cf. Gk. γρῦ, the noise made by a pig. See Grudge. Der. grunt-er. [†]

GUAIACUM, a genus of trees in the W. Indies; also, the resin of the lignum vitae. (Span., — Hayti.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Kersey, ed. 1715. Latinised from Span. guayaco or guayacan, lignum vitae. 'From the language of Hayti'; Webster.

GUANO, the dung of a certain sea-fowl of S. America, used for manure. (Span., — Peruvian.) See Prescott, Conq. of Peru, c. 5. — Span. guano or huano. — Peruvian huano, dung (Webster).

GUARANTEE, GUARANTY, a warrant, surety. (F., — O. H. G.) Guarantee appears to be a later spelling of guaranty, garanty, or garrantie, probably due to the use of words such as lessee, feoffee, and the like; but the final -es is (in the present case) incorrect. Blount's Nomo-lexicon gives the spellings garanty and warrantie. Cotgrave has garrantie and warrantie. — O. F. garrantie (better garantie), 'garrantie, warrantie, or warrantise'; Cot.; fem. form of garanti, warranted, pp. of garantir, to warrant. — O. F. garant, also spelt guarant, warant (Burguy), and explained by Cotgrave as 'a vouchee, warrant, warranter, supporter, maintainer.' See further under Warrant. ¶ The O. H. G. w became in O. F. first w, then gu, and finally g. Thus O. F. garant and E. warrant are the same word. Der. guarantee, vb. [†]

GUARD, to ward, watch, keep, protect. (F. — O. H. G.) Common in Shak. both as verb and sb. [He also has guardage. Oth. i. 2.

70; guardant, Cor. v. 2. 67; guardian, Macb. ii. 4. 35. But the word does not seem to be much older. Rich. cites guardens (= guardians) from Surrey, tr. of Virgil's Æn. b. ii.] — O. F. gardier, 'to keep, ward, guard'; Cot.; also spelt guarder, as in the Chanson du Roland, xxiii (Littré); and, in the 11th century, warder. — O. H. G. warden, M. H. G. warden, to watch; cognate with E. ward. See further under Ward. Der. guard, sb.; guard-age, guard-ant, guard-ian (= O. F. garden, which Cot. explains by 'a warden, keeper, gardien'); guard-ed, guard-ed-ly, guard-ed-ness; guard-room, guard-ship. Doublet, ward; doublet of guardian, warden, q. v.

GUAVA, a genus of trees and shrubs of tropical America. (Span., — W. Indian.) The Span. name guayaba is no doubt borrowed from the W. Indian name. The guava is found within the tropics in Mexico, the W. Indies, and S. America. [†]

GUDGEON, a small fresh-water fish. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. i. 1. 102. M. E. gojone. 'Goiane, fische; gobius, gobio'; Prompt. Parv. — F. goujon, 'a gudgeon-fish, also the pin which the truckle of a pully runneth on; also, the gudgeon of the spindle of a wheele; any gudgeon'; Cot. — Lat. gobionem, acc. of gobio, a by-form of gobius, a gudgeon. — Gk. καβίος, a kind of fish, gudgeon, tench. The Sicilian name was κῆθος (Liddell and Scott).

GUELDER-ROSE, a species of Viburnum, bearing large white ball-shaped flowers. (Dutch.) So named from some resemblance of the flower to a white rose. The word rose is of Latin origin; see Rose. The word guelder stands for Geldre, the F. spelling of the province of Gelderland in Holland.

GUERDON, a reward, recompense. (F., — O. H. G. and L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 7460, 8759. He also has the verb guerdone = to reward; Pers. Tale, Group I, l. 283, Six-text ed.; but this is derived from the sb. Guerdonless occurs in Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, l. 400. — O. F. guerdon, 'guerdon, recompence, meed'; Cot. Equivalent to Ital. guidardone, a guerdon. — Low Lat. uiderdonum, which, according to Littré, is found in the time of Charles the Bald. β. This is a singular hybrid compound from O. H. G. wider (G. wider), against, back again, and the Lat. donum, a gift; and the whole word is an adaptation of O. H. G. widarlôn, a recompence (Graff, ii. 220). γ. The O. H. G. word has its exact cognate in the A. S. wider-leán, a recompence, Grein, ii. 697; which is compounded of the prefix wider, against, back again (connected with E. with- in the word with-stand) and the sb. leán = mod. E. loan. See With, Donation, and Loan. ¶ The same notion of 'back' occurs in the synonymous words re-ward, re-compence, re-muneration.

GUERRILLA, GUERRILLA, an irregular warfare carried on by small bands of men. (Span., — O. H. G.) We speak of guerilla warfare, making the word an adj., but it is properly a sb. — Span. guerrilla, a skirmish, lit. a petty war; dimin. of guerra, war (= F. guerre). — O. H. G. werra, discord, the same word as E. war. See War.

GUESS, to form an opinion at hazard, to conjecture. (Scand. or O. Low G.) The insertion of u was merely for the purpose of preserving the g as hard. M. E. gessen; Chaucer, C. T. 82. — Dan. gisse; Swed. gissa, to guess. + Icel. giska, to guess. + Du. gissen. + N. Friesic gezze, gedse (Outzen). β. Closely related to Dan. gjette, to guess; the Icel. giska = git-ska, formed from Icel. geita (1), to get, (2) to guess. The latter word is cognate with A. S. gitan, and mod. E. get; and it is highly probable that guess meant originally 'to try to get,' being a secondary (desiderative) verb formed from get. See Get. Der. guess, sb.; guess-work.

GUEST, a stranger who is entertained. (E.) The u is inserted to preserve the g as hard. M. E. gest, Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 1374; also gist, Ancren Riwle, p. 68. — A. S. gast, gest, gast; also gist, giest; Grein, i. 373. + Icel. gæstr. + Dan. giest. + Swed. gäst. + Du. gast. + Goth. gasts. + G. gast. + Lat. hostis, a stranger, guest, enemy. β. The orig. sense appears to be that of 'enemy,' whence the senses of 'stranger' and 'guest' arose. The lit. sense is 'striker.' — ✓ GHAS, GHANS, to strike; an extension of ✓ GHAN, to strike. Cf. Skt. hims, to strike, injure, desiderative of han, to strike, wound. Der. guest-chamber, Mark, xiv. 14. From the same root, gore, verb, garlic, goad, hostile.

GUIDE, to lead, direct, regulate. (F., — Teut.) M. E. gyden, Chaucer, C. T. 13410, 13417. [The M. E. form gyen is also common (C. T. 1952); see Guy.] The sb. is gyde, C. T. 806. — O. F. guider; cf. Ital. guidare, Span. guiar. β. The etymology has not been well made out; the initial gu, corresponding to Teutonic w, shews that the word is of Teutonic origin. γ. The obscurity is merely due to the want of a connecting link; the ultimate origin is doubtless, as suggested by Diez, to be found in the Mosco-Goth. witan, to watch, observe; cf. A. S. witan, to know. The original sense of guide was, probably, 'to make to know,' to shew; cf. Icel. viti, a leader, also a signal; A. S. witan, to observe; A. S. adj. wis, wise, knowing, wisa, a leader, director, wisian, to guide, lead, shew the way. See Wit, Wise. Der. guide, sb., guide-post.

GUILD, GILD, an association of men of one class for mutual aid. (E.) The insertion of u, though common, is quite unnecessary, and is unoriginal. See English Guilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, Early Eng. Text Soc., 1870. M.E. gilde, silde; the pl. gilden=guilds, occurs in Layamon, 32001. Cf. A.S. gegyldscipe, a guild, gegilda, a member of a guild, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, Æthelst. v. 8. 6; vol. i. p. 236. These words are formed from A.S. gild, a payment, also spelt gyld, grein, i. 507; from the A.S. gildan, to pay, whence also mod. E. yield; see Yield. +Du. gild, a guild-company, society. +Icel. gildi, payment, tribute; a guild. +Goth. gild, tribute-money, Lu. xx. 22. +G. gilde, a guild. β. All from a Teut. base GALD, to pay; see Fick, iii. 105. Der. guild-hall, M.E. gild-halle, Chaucer, C. T. 372.

GUILE, a wile, cunning, deceit. (F., -O. Low G.) In early use. M.E. gile, gyle; Layamon, 3198, 16382 (later text); and common later. -O.F. guile, guille; Burguy. From an old Low G. source, represented by A.S. wil, Icel. vel, væl, a trick, guile. See Wile. Der. guile-ful (M.E. gileful, Wyclif, Job, xiii. 7, Ps. v. 7), guile-ful-ly, guile-ful-ness (M.E. gilefulness, Wyclif, Eccles. xxxviii. 3); guile-less, guile-less-ness. Doublet, wile.

GUILLotine, an instrument for beheading men. (F. personal name.) Named after the supposed inventor, a physician named Joseph Ignatius Guillotin, who died in 1814. The first person executed by it was a highway robber named Pelletier, April 25, 1792; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Der. guillotine, verb.

GUILT, crime, punishable offence. (E.) The u is inserted to preserve the g as hard. M.E. gilt, Gower, C. A. ii. 122; Chaucer, C. T. 5057; commonly also gult, as in Ancræn Riwe, p. 258. -A.S. gylt, a crime; Grein, i. 536. β. The orig. sense was probably 'a fine' or 'a payment,' by way of recompense for a trespass; and the word is to be connected with A.S. gyld, a recompense. Both words are from the Teutonic base GALD, to pay, whence A.S. gyldan, to pay, yield. See Guile, Yield. Der. guilt-less=M.E. giltles, Chaucer, C. T. 5063; guilt-less-ly, guilt-less-ness; also guilt-y=A.S. gyltig, Matt. xxiii. 18; guilt-i-ly, guilt-i-ness.

GUINEA, the name of a gold coin. (African.) 'So named from having been first coined of gold brought by the African company from the coast of Guinea in 1663, valued then at 20s.; but worth 30s. in 1695. Reduced at various times; in 1717 to 21s.;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Der. guinea-fowl, guinea-hen, named from the same country. ¶ The guinea-pig is from S. America, chiefly Brazil. Hence it is supposed to be a corruption of Guiana-pig.

GUISE, way, manner, wise. (F., -O. H. G.) M.E. gise, gyse, Chaucer, C. T. 995. Also guise, guysse; first used in Layamon, 19641, later text, where the earlier text has wise. -O.F. guise, way, wise; cf. Prov., Port., Span., and Ital. guisa. [The gu stands for an older w.] -O. H. G. wisa, M. H. G. weise (G. weise), a way, wise, guise; cognate with A.S. wise, whence E. wise, sb. See Wise, sb. Doublet, wise.

GUITAR, a musical stringed instrument. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. -F. guitare (Litttré). -Lat. cithara. -Gk. κίθάρα, a kind of lyre. ¶ The M.E. form of the word is giterne, Chaucer, C. T. 3333. This also is of F. origin; Cotgrave gives 'Guiterne, or Guiterne, a gitterne.'

GULES, the heraldic name for red. (F., -L.) M.E. goules. Richardson cites: 'And to bere armes than are ye able Of gold and goules sete with sable;' Squier of Low Degre, l. 203, in Ritson's Metrical Romances, vol. iii. At p. 484 of Rob. of Glouc., ed. Heame, is a footnote in which we find: 'that bere the armes of goules with a white croys.' -F. goules, 'gules, red, or sanguine, in blazon,' Cot.; answering to Low Lat. gula, pl. of gula (1) the mouth, (2) gules. β. This word is nothing but the pl. of F. gueule, the mouth (just as Low Lat. gula is the pl. of gula), though the reason for the name is not very clear, unless the reference be (as is probable) to the colour of the open mouth of the (heraldic) lion. -Lat. gula, the throat. See Gullet. [†]

GULF, a hollow in the sea-coast, a bay, a deep place, whirlpool. (F., -Gk.) Formerly spelt goulfe, gulph. 'Hast thou not read in books Of fell Charybdis goulfe?' Turberville, Pyndara's Answer to Tymetes. Milton has the adj. gulphy, Vacation Exercise, l. 92; Spenser has gulphing, Virgil's Gnat, 542. -F. golfe (formerly also goulfe), 'a gulph, whirlpool;' Cot. Cf. Port., Span., and Ital. golfo, a gulf, bay. -Late Gk. κόλπος, variant of Gk. κόλπος, the bosom, lap, a deep hollow, bay, creek. [Cf. the various senses of Lat. sinus.] Der. gulf-y, en-gulf. [†]

GULL (1), a web-footed sea-bird. (C.) 'Timon will be left a naked gull, Which flashes now a Phoenix;' Timon, ii. 1. 31. -Corn. gullan, a gull (Williams); W. gwyllan; Bret. gwelan. See below.

GULL (2), a dupe. (C.) 'Yond gull Malvolio;' Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 73. So called from an untrue notion that the gull was a stupid bird. Thus a person who entraps dupes is called a gull-catcher, Tw. Nt. ii.

5. 204; and the word is identical with Gull (1). ¶ Similarly a stupid person is called an owl, though it is the bird of wisdom. Der. gull, verb, Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 145; gull-ible.

GULLET, the throat. (F., -L.) M.E. golet, guillet; Chaucer, C. T. 12477. 'Golet, or throte, gutter, gluma, gula;' Prompt. Parv. -F. goulet, 'the gullet;' Cot. Dimin. of O.F. gole, goule (mod. F. gueule), the throat. -Lat. gula, the throat. -✓ GAR, to devour; cf. Skt. grī, to devour, gal, to eat. From the same source we have gules, q. v. Doublet, gully, q. v.

GULLY, a channel worn by water. (F., -L.) In Capt. Cook's Third Voyage, b. iv. c. 4 (R.) Formerly written gullet. 'It meeteth afterward with another gullet,' i.e. small stream; Holinshed, Desc. of Britain, c. 11 (R.) -F. goulet, 'a gullet, . . . a narrow brook or deep gutter of water;' Cot. Thus the word is the same as Gullet, q. v.

GULP, to swallow greedily and quickly. (Du.) 'He has gulped me down, Lance;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit without Money, A. i. sc. 2. -Du. gulpen, to swallow eagerly; O. Du. golpen, gulpen, to quaff (Hexham). -Du. gulp, a great billow, wave, draught, gulp; O. Du. golpe, a gulp (Hexham). β. Remoter origin obscure; the Dan. gulpe has an almost opposite meaning, viz. to disgorge. There is a remarkable similarity in meaning to Du. golf, a billow, wave, gulf, which is a word merely borrowed from the French; and perhaps gulp is a mere variant of gulph or gulf. See Gulf. Der. gulp, sb.

GUM (1), the flesh of the jaws. (E.) M.E. gome. In Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 213, l. 230, where it means 'palate.' 'Gome in mannys mowthe, pl. goomys, Gingiva, vel gingivæ, plur.;' Prompt. Parv. -A.S. goma, the palate, jaws; Grein, i. 523. + Icel. góm, the palate. + Swed. gom, the palate. + Dan. gane (for game?), the palate. + O. H. G. gwomo, G. gaumen, the palate. -✓ GHA, to gape, the orig. sense being 'open jaws;' cf. Gk. χῆμα, a cockle, 'from its gaping double shell' (Liddell and Scott); χαίρειν, to gape. Der. gum-boil.

GUM (2), the hardened adhesive juice of certain trees. (F., -L., -Gk.) M.E. gomme, Chaucer, Good Women, 121; P. Plowman, B. ii. 226. -F. gomme, gum. -Lat. gummi. -Gk. κόμμη, gum; but not orig. a Gk. word. Remoter source unknown. Der. gum, verb; gummi-ferous, from Lat. suffix -fer, bearing, which from ferre, to bear; gumny, gummi-ness. [†]

GUN, an engine for throwing projectiles. (C.?) M.E. gonne, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 553; P. Plowman, C. xxi. 293; King Ali-saunders, ed. Weber, 3268. See note by Way in Prompt. Parv. p. 218. -W. gun, a bowl, a gun (used in the latter sense by Dafydd ab Gwilym in the 14th cent.); cf. Irish and Gael. gunna, a gun. ¶ Of obscure origin; the word was first applied to a catapult, or machine for throwing stones, &c. Perhaps the signification 'bowl' of W. gun points to the orig. sense, viz. that of the cup wherein the missile was placed. Der. gunner, gunner-y, gun-barrel, boat-carriage, cotton-powder, shot, smith, stock; also gun-wale, q. v.

GUNWALE, the upper edge of a ship's side. (C. and E.) Corruptly pronounced gunnel [gun]. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Gunwale, or Gunnel of a Ship, a piece of timber that reaches from the halfdeck to the fore-castle on either side;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Wales or Wails, those timbers on the ship's sides, which lie outmost, and are usually trod upon, when people climb up the sides to get into the ship;' id. β. Compounded of gun and wale; see Wale. So called because the upper guns used to be pointed from it. The sense of wale is 'stick' or 'beam,' and secondly, 'the mark of a blow with a stick.'

GURGLE, to flow irregularly, with a slight noise. (Ital., -L.) 'To gurgling sound Of Liffy's tumbling streams;' Spenser, Mourning Muse of Thestylis, l. 3. Imitated from Ital. gorgogliare, to gargle, purl, bubble, boil; cf. gorgoglio, a warbling, the gurgling of a stream. -Ital. gorgo, a whirlpool, gulf. -Lat. gurgēs, a whirlpool; cf. Lat. gurgulio, the gullet. See Gorge. ¶ To be distinguished from gargle, though both are from the same root GAR, to devour. Der. guggle, a corrupted form (Skinner).

GURNARD, GURNET, a kind of fish. (F., -L.; with Teut. suffix.) 'Gurnard, fische;' Prompt. Parv. 'Gurnarde, a fysche, gournault;' Palsgrave. See Levins. Shak. has gurnet, 1 Hen. IV, iv. 2. 13. Cotgrave has: 'Gournault, a gurnard fish;' but the E. word answers rather to a F. gournard (the suffixes -ard, -ald, -auld being convertible); and this again stands, by the not uncommon shifting of r, for grounard. The latter form is represented in Cotgrave by 'Grougnard, a gurnard,' marked as being a Languedoc word.

β. Again, we find another form of the word in O.F. grongnard (mod. F. groggnard), explained by Cotgrave as 'grunting;' and, in fact, the word gurnard means 'grunter.' 'The gurnards . . . derive their popular appellation from a grunting noise which they make when taken out of the water;' Eng. Cyclop. s. v. Trigla. γ. Formed by the suffix -ard (= O. H. G. hard, hart) from F. grogner, to grunt. -Lat. grunnire, to grunt. See Grunt. [†]

GUSH, to flow out swiftly. (Scand.) M.E. guschen, Morte

Arthure, ed. Brock, 1130. — Icel. gusa, to gush, spirt out, another form of the common verb gjósa (pt. t. gauss, pp. gosinn), to gush, break out as a volcano. + Du. gudsen, to gush; 'het bloed gudsde uyt zyne wonde, the blood did gush out of my wound;' Sewel. + Swed. dial. gása, to blow, puff, reek (Rietz). + Lat. haurire, to draw water, also to spill, shed. — ✓ GHUS, an extension of ✓ GHU, to pour; cf. Gk. χεῖν, χέειν, to pour. β. Closely allied to the ✓ GHUS is ✓ GHUD, to pour, whence Lat. fundere (E. fuse), Goth. giutan, G. giessen, Icel. gjóta, Swed. giuta, Dan. gyde, A. S. geotan, to pour. See Fick, i. 585. See Gut, Geysir, and Fuse. Der. gush-ing, gush-ing-ly; also gust (1), q. v.

GUSSET, a small insertion of cloth in a garment, for the purpose of enlarging it. (F., — Ital.) Particularly used of an insertion in the armhole of a shirt. The word occurs in Cotgrave. — F. gousset, 'a gusset; the piece of armour, or of a shirt, whereby the arm-hole is covered;' Cot. β. Named from some fancied resemblance to the husk of a bean or pea; the word being a dimin. of F. gousse, 'the huske, swad, cod, hull of beanes, pease, &c.;' Cot. — Ital. guscio, a shell, husk; a word of unknown origin.

GUST (1), a sudden blast or gush of wind. (Scand.) In Shak. Mer. of Ven. iv. 1. 77. — Icel. gustr, a gust, blast; also gjóta, a gust. Cf. Swed. dial. gust, a stream of air from an oven (Rietz). — Icel. gjósa, to gush; Swed. dial. gdsa, to reek (Rietz). See Gush. Der. gust-y, gust-i-ness.

GUST (2), relish, taste. (L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 33; and in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 39. — Lat. gustus, a tasting, taste (whence F. gouté); cf. gustare, to taste. — ✓ GUS, to choose; whence also Skt. jush, to enjoy, like, Gk. γεῖν, to taste, and E. choose. See Choose. Doublet, gusto, the Ital. form of the word. Der. dis-gust, q. v.

GUT, the intestinal canal. (E.) [The same word as prov. E. gut, a water-course, wide ditch; M. E. gote, Prompt. Parv. p. 205; see Way's note.] M. E. gutte, gotte; P. Plowman, B. i. 36; Rob. of Glouc. p. 289. — A. S. gut, 'receptaculum viscerum,' A. S. Gloss. in Haupt's Zeitschrift, ix. 408; A. S. Gloss. in Mone's Quellen und Forschungen, i. 1830, 198 (Leo). Ettmüller gives the pl. as guttas. β. The orig. sense is 'channel;' cf. Swed. gjuta, a mill-lead (Rietz); Dan. gyde, a lane; O. Du. gote, a channel (Hexham); G. gosse, a drain; M. E. gote, prov. E. gut, a drain, water-course. γ. All from ✓ GHUD, to pour; see Gush, Fuse. Not connected with gutter, which is of Latin origin. Der. gut, verb. [†]

GUTTA-PERCHA, a solidified juice of certain trees. (Malay.) 'Made known in England in 1843;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The trees yielding it abound in the Malayan peninsula and in Borneo. — Malay gatak, gutah, gum, balsam (Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 283); and percha, said to be the name of the tree producing it. Hence the sense is 'gum of the Percha-tree.' β. The spelling gutta is obviously due to confusion with the Lat. gutta, a drop, with which it has nothing whatever to do. 'Gutta in Malay means gum, percha is the name of the tree (Isonandra gutta), or of an island from which the tree was first imported (Pulo-percha);' Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th ed. i. 231. Marsden (p. 218) gives Pūlau percha as another name for the island of Sumatra. Pūlau means 'island,' id. p. 238; percha is explained in Marsden as meaning 'a remnant, small piece of cloth, tatters, rags;' and from this he takes Pūlau-percha to be named, without further explanation.

GUTTER, a channel for water. (F., — L.) M. E. goters; Prompt. Parv. The pl. goteres is in Trevisa, i. 181. — O. F. gutiére, [gotiere?], goutière; see quotations in Littré, s. v. goutière, a gutter; cf. Span. gotera, a gutter. β. Esp. used of the duct for catching the drippings of the eaves of a roof; hence the deriv. from O. F. gote, goute (mod. F. goutte), a drop. — Lat. gutta, a drop. Root uncertain. Der. gutter, verb. See below. [†]

GUTTURAL, pertaining to the throat. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. guttur, 'gutturall, belonging to the throat;' Cot. — Lat. gutturalis; formed with suffix -alis from guttur, the throat. β. Probably from the same root as gutta, a drop; see above. Der. guttural-ly.

GUY, GUY-ROPE, a rope used to steady a weight. (Span., — Teut.) 'A nautical term. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Guy, a rope made use of to keep anything from falling or bearing against a ship's side, when it is to be hoisted in;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — Span. guia, a guide, leader, guy. — Span. guair, to guide; the same word as F. guider, to guide. See Guide.

GUZZLE, to swallow greedily. (F.) 'Guzzle, to drink greedily, to tipple;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Cotgrave explains O. F. martiner by 'to quaffe, swill, guzzle.' — O. F. gouzziller, given by Cotgrave only in the comp. desgouzziller, 'to gulp, or swill up, to swallow down;' but Littré gives gosiller, saying that brandy is said gosiller, when, in distillation, it passes over mixed with wine. Cf. also F. s'égosiller, to make one's throat sore with shouting; clearly connected with F. gosier, the throat. β. Littré connects gosier with Lorraine gosse, the throat, the stomach of fatted animals; cf. Ital. gozzo, the crop of a bird, throat. Remoter source unknown. Der. guzzle-er.

GYMNASIUM, a place for athletic exercises. (L., — Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. gymnasium. — Gk. γυμνάσιον, an athletic school; so called because the athletes were naked when practising their exercises. — Gk. γυμνάσειν, to train naked, to exercise. — Gk. γυμνός, more commonly γυμνός, naked. Root unknown. Der. From the same source are gymnast = Gk. γυμναστής, a trainer of athletes; gymnast-ic, gymnast-ics; also gymnick, a coined word, Milton, Samson Agon. 1324.

GYNARCHY, government by a woman. (Gk.) Spelt gunarchy by Lord Chesterfield (Todd). Coined from Gk. γυν-ή, a woman, and ἀρχεῖν, to rule; cf. olig-archy, tetr-archy, &c. See Queen.

GYPSUM, a mineral containing sulphate of lime and water. (L., — Gk., — Pers.) 'Gypsum, parget, white-lime, plaister; also, the parget-stone;' Kersey, ed. 1715. — Lat. gypsum, chalk. — Gk. *γύψον, not found, a by-form of γύψος, chalk; Herod. vii. 69. β. Prob. of Eastern origin; cf. Pers. jabstn, lime; Arab. jibs, plaster, mortar; Rich. Dict. p. 494.

GYPSY, one of a certain nomad race. ((F., — L., — Gk., — Egypt.) Spelt gipsen by Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, l. 86. This is a mere corruption of M. E. Egyptien, an Egyptian. Chaucer calls St. Mary of Egypt 'the Egipcien Marie;' C. T. Group B. 500 (l. 4920); and Skelton, swearing by the same saint, says 'By Mary Gipcy!' Garland of Laurell, 1455. — O. F. Egyptien, Egipien. — Late Lat. Egyptianus, formed with suffix -anus from Lat. Egyptius, an Egyptian. — Gk. Αἰγύπτιος, an Egyptian. — Gk. Αἴγυπτος, Egypt. From the name of the country. γ. The supposition that they were Egyptians was false; their orig. home was India. [†]

GYRE, a circle, circular course. (L., — Gk.) 'Or hurtle rownd in warlike gyre;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 5. 8; cf. iii. 1. 23. — Lat. gyrus, a circle, circuit. — Gk. γῦρος, a ring, circle; cf. γῦρος, adj. round. Der. gyrate, from Lat. gyratus, pp. of gyrare, to turn round, formed from gyrus; gyrat-ion, gyrat-or-y; also gyr-falcon, q. v.

GYRFALCON, GERFALCON, a bird of prey. (F., — L.?) 'Gyrfalcon, a bird of prey;' Kersey, ed. 1715; spelt gerfalcon in Cotgrave; gyrfalcon in Trevisa, i. 323, to translate Lat. gyrofalco. α. The prefix is French, the word being modified from O. F. gerfaut, 'a gerfalcon, the greatest of hawks, called also falcon gerfaut;' Cot. Cf. Ital. gerfalcon, girfalcon, gerfalcon, a gerfalcon. — Low Lat. gerofalco, a gerfalcon, a corruption of Low Lat. gyrofalco, a gyrfalcon. β. So named from his circling flight. — Lat. gyro-, crude form of gyrus, a circle (of Gk. origin); and falcon, a falcon. See Gyre and Falcon. γ. Not from G. geier, a vulture, which is itself derived from Lat. gyrare (Diez). But others take gyro- to be put for gero-, which is referred to M. H. G. gīr, G. geier, a vulture, supposed in that case to be a Teutonic word. [†]

GYVES, fetters. (C.) In early use; only in the plural. M. E. gyves, gyves (with u for v); Layamon, 15338; P. Plowman, C. xvi. 254. Of Celtic origin; cf. W. gefm, a fetter, gyve; Gael. geimheal [with mh = v], a fetter, chain; Irish geimheal, geimheal, geimheal, chains, gyves, fetters, restraint, bondage, captivity. β. The source of these sbs. appears in the Irish geibhim, I get, obtain, find, receive; gabhaim, I take, receive; Gael. gabh, to take, accept, receive.

H.

HA, an exclamation. (E.) 'A ha! the fox!' Chaucer, C. T. 15387. When reduplicated, it signifies laughter. 'Ha! ha! ha!' Temp. ii. 1. 36. Common in Shak. as an exclamation of surprise. Of onomatopoeitic origin; see also Ah + O. Fries. kaha, to denote laughter. + M. H. G. há, G. he; M. H. G. hahá, to denote laughter.

HABERDASHER, a seller of small wares. (F., — Scand.) 'An haberdasher;' Chaucer, C. T. 363. 'The haberdasher heapeth wealth by hattes;' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 64. 'Haberdasher, a hatter, or seller of hats; also, a dealer in small wares;' Kersey. 'A haberdasher, mercier; a poore, petty haberdasher of small wares, mercerot;' Sherwood, index to Cotgrave. α. So named from their selling a stuff called hapertas in Old French, of which (possibly) hats were sometimes made. In the Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 225, is mentioned 'la charge de hapertas;' in the E. version by Riley, 'the load of hapertas.' And again, at p. 231, we find 'les feez de leyne d'Espagne, wadmal, mercerie, canevass, . . . feutre, lormerie, peil, haberdashrie, esquireux, . . . et les autres choses qe l'em acustement par fee, vi. d.;' thus Englished by Riley: 'the fixed charge upon wool of Spain, wadmal, mercery, canvas, . . . felt, lymere, pile, haberdassherie, squirrel-skins, . . . and upon other articles that pay custom at a fixed rate, is six pence.' β. The word is of Scand. origin. Mr. Wedgwood cites from an old Icel. lexicon (by Gudmundus Andreæ) the Icel. hapurtask, which he explains by 'trumpery, things of trifling value, scruta frivola, ripsraps.' But this throws no light on the Icel. word itself. γ. I suspect that the true sense of the word hapertas was, originally, 'pedlars' wares,' and that they were named from the bag in which they were carried; cf. Icel. haprtask, hafrtask, a haversack (Cleasby and Vigfusson).

δ. In this case, the primary use of the bag was to carry oats or provisions in; and the former part of the word is the same as the former part of the word Haversack, q. v. ε. The syllable task is from Icel. taska, a trunk, chest, pouch, pocket; cognate with G. tasche, a pouch, scrip. Thus the orig. sense of haberdasher was 'one who bears an oat-bag,' hence, a pedlar. Der. haberdasher-y. [†]

HABERGEON, a piece of armour to defend the neck and breast. (F., —O. H. G.) M. E. habergeon, Chaucer, C. T. 76; hawberion, Wyclif, 1 Kings, xvii. 5. —O. F. haubergon, hauberjon, a small hauberk (Burguy); dimin. of O. F. hauberc; see Hauberk.

HABILIMENT, dress, attire. (F., —L.) 'The whiche furnyschynghe his people with all habylmentys of warre;' Fabyan's Chron., Charles VII. (of France); ed. Ellis, p. 553. —F. habillement, 'apparell, clothing;' Cot. Formed with suffix -ment from habiller, 'to cloth, dresse, apparell;' Cot. β. The verb habiller signified orig. 'to get ready,' and is a clumsy formation from the F. habile, able, ready; which is from the Lat. habilis, manageable, fit. See Able. Der. from the same source, dis-habille, q. v.

HABIT, practice, custom, dress. (F., —L.) M. E. habit, abit; the latter spelling being common. Spelt habit, P. Plowman, B. prol. 3; abit, id. C. prol. 3; Ancren Riwe, p. 12, l. 8. —O. F. habit, 'a garment, raiment, . . . also, an habit, a fashion settled, a use or custom gotten;' Cot. —Lat. habitus, acc. of habitus, condition, habit, dress, attire. —Lat. habitus, held in a certain condition, pp. of habere, to have, hold, keep. β. The origin of Lat. habere remains quite uncertain; it is not the same word with E. have, which = Lat. capere; see Have. Der. habit, verb, pp. habited, i. e. dressed, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 557; habit-u-al, from O. F. habitual (mod. F. habituel), explained 'habitually' by Cotgrave, and from Low Lat. habitu-alis, formed with suffix -alis from habitu, crude form of habitus, habit; habit-u-al-ly; habitu-ate, from Lat. habituatus, pp. of habituare, to bring into a certain habit or condition. Also, from the same source, habit-u-de, q. v., habit-able, q. v., habit-at, q. v., habit-at-ion, q. v., hab-ili-ment, q. v. From the Lat. habere are also numerous derivatives, as ex-hibit, in-hibit, in-habit, pro-hibit; ab-le, ab-ili-ty, dis-hab-ille; debt; prebend; binnacle, malady.

HABITABLE, that can be dwelt in. (F., —L.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 157; earlier, in Gower, C. A. iii. 104. —F. habitable, 'inhabitable;' Cot. —Lat. habitabilis, habitable; formed with suffix -bilis from habita-re, to dwell, frequentative form of Lat. habere, to have (supine habitu-um). See Habit. Der. habitabl-y, habitable-ness, inhabitable.

HABITANT, an inhabitant. (F., —L.) Perhaps obsolete. In Milton, P. L. viii. 99; x. 588. —F. habitant, 'an inhabitant;' Cot; pres. part. of F. habiter, to dwell. —Lat. habitare, to dwell. See Habitable. Der. in-habitant.

HABITAT, the natural abode of an animal or plant. (L.) A word coined for use in works on natural history. It means 'it dwells (there).'; —Lat. habitas, 3 pers. s. pres. of habitare, to dwell. See Habitable.

HABITATION, a dwelling. (F., —L.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 17. M. E. habitacion, Chaucer, C. T. 2928. —F. habitation, 'a habitation;' Cot. —Lat. habitationem, acc. of habitatio, a dwelling. —Lat. habitus, pp. of habitare, to dwell. See Habitable.

HABITUDE, usual manner, quality. (F., —L.) In Shak. Complaint, 114. —F. habitude, 'custom, use;' Cot. —Lat. habitudō, condition; formed with suffix -do from habitu, crude form of habitus, a habit; see Habit.

HACK (1), to cut, chop, mangle. (E.) M. E. hakken. 'To hakke and hewe;' Chaucer, C. T. 2867. 'Hacked of his heaued' = hacks of his head; Ancren Riwe, p. 298. —A. S. haccan, to hack (Bosworth); for which I can find no authority. + Du. hakken, to hew, chop. + Dan. hakke, to hack, hoe. + Swed. hacka, to chop. + G. hacken, to chop, cleave. β. All from a base HAK, to cut. Der. haggle, q. v. Doublet, hask; and see hatch. γ. Mr. Oliphant calls attention to O. Northumb. hackande, troublesome, in Early Eng. Psalter, Surtees Soc., Ps. xxxix. 13. 'Hence, perhaps, our "hacking cough." [†]

HACK (2), a hackney. See Hackney.

HACKBUT, an arquebus, an old kind of musket. (F., —Du.) In Holinshed, Hist. Scotland, an. 1583; hackbutter, a man armed with a hackbut, id. an. 1544. Rich. says that 'the 33 Hen. VIII. c. 6, regulates the length in stock and gun of the hackbut or demihague, and sets forth who may keep and use them.' Also spelt hackbut, less correctly. —O. F. haquebute, 'an haquebut, or arquebuse, a caliver;'

Cot. β. So called from the bent shape of the gun, which was an improvement upon the oldest guns, which were made straight; see Arquebus. It seems to be a mere corruption of Du. haakbus (haeckbusse in Hexham), an arquebus; due, apparently, to some confusion with O. F. buter, to thrust. —Du. haak, a hook; and bus, a gun-barrel; thus the sense is 'gun with a hook.'

HACKLE (1), HATCHEL, an instrument for dressing flax or hemp. (Du.) Better spelt Heckle, q. v.

HACKLE (2), any flimsy substance unspun, as raw silk. (Du.) So named from its looking as if it had been dressed or hackled; see Hackle (1). It also means a long shining feather on a cock's neck; or a fly for angling, dressed with such a feather.

HACKNEY, HACK, a horse let out for hire. (F., —Du.) M. E. hakney; Chaucer, C. T. 16027; P. Plowman, B. v. 318. —O. F. haquenée, haquenée, 'an ambling horse, gelding, or mare;' Cot. Cf. Span. hacanea, Ital. chinea (short for acchina), the same. —O. Du. hackeneye, an hackney (Hexham). β. Of obscure origin; but probably derived from Du. hakken, to hack, chop, hew, mince; and Du. negge, a nag. Cf. Swed. hacka, to hack, hew, peck, chatter with cold, stammer, stutter; this suggests that the Du. hakken was here familiarly used in the sense of 'jolt;' and, probably, the orig. sense was 'jolting nag,' with reference to the rough horses which customers who hired them had to put up with, or with reference to their 'faltering' pace. See Hack and Nag.

γ. Littré gives the syllable hack in this word the sense of 'horse;' this is quite wrong, as hack in the sense of 'horse' is merely a familiar abbreviation of hackney, just as cab stands for cabriolet, or bus for omnibus. So, too, the verb to hack, in the sense of 'treat roughly,' or 'use for rough riding,' is quite modern, and due to the abbreviated form of the substantive. Der. hackney-ed, hackney-coach.

HADDOCK, a sea-fish. (E.?) M. E. haddocke. 'Hic morus, a haddocke;' Wright's Vocab. i. 222, col. 2. Spelt haddok, Prompt. Parv. Of unknown origin; the Gael. adag, a haddock, seems merely a borrowed word from English; similarly, the O. F. hadot, 'a salt haddock' (Cotgrave), is plainly a less original form. The suffix -ock is perhaps diminutive, as in hill-ock; the base had- has some similarity to Gk. ῥάδος, a cod, but it is hard to explain the forms. The Irish name is codog. γ. Webster explains it from W. hadog, having seed, prolific, from the sb. had, seed; but I find no proof that W. hadog means a haddock. Can haddock be a corruption of A. S. hacod? See Hake.

HADES, the abode of the dead. (Gk.) Spelt Ades, Milton, P. L. ii. 964. —Gk. ᾍδης, ᾍδης (Attic), ᾍδης (Homeric), the nether world. 'Usually derived from α, privative, and ιδᾶν, to see [as though it meant 'the unseen']; but the aspirate in Attic makes this very doubtful;' Liddell and Scott.

HÆMATITE, HÆMORRHAGE; see Hematite, Hemorrhage.

HAFT, a handle. (E.) M. E. haft, heft. 'Los in the haft' = loose in the handle; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 339. Spelt haft, Wyclif, Deut. xix. 5; heft, Prompt. Parv. —A. S. heft, a handle; Grein, ii. 20. + Du. heft, hecht. + Icel. hefti (pron. hefti). + G. heft, a handle, hilt, portion of a book.

β. The orig. sense is 'that which is seized;' from the pp. seen in Icel. haftr, one who is taken, a prisoner, and in Goth. hafis, joined together; with which compare Lat. captus, taken. γ. All from the verb seen in A. S. habban, Icel. hafa, Goth. haban, Lat. capere. See Have.

HAG, an ugly old woman. (E.) M. E. hagge; P. Plowman, B. v. 191. The pl. heggen is in the Ancren Riwe, p. 216. The A. S. form is fuller, viz. hægesse, used to translate Lat. pythonissa, a prophetess or witch; Wright's Vocab. i. 60, col. 1. In the same column, we also find: 'Tisiphona, wælcyrre; Parcae, hægesse;' on which Mr. Wright remarks: 'The Anglo-Saxon of these words would appear to be transposed. Hægesse means properly a fury, or in its modern representative, a hag, and would apply singly to Tysiphone, while wælcyrrian was the name of the three fates of the A. S. mythology.' [Sommer also gives a form hægessa, but for this I can find no authority.] + G. hexe, a witch; O. H. G. hazissa, apparently short for hagazissa; cf. M. H. G. hacke, a witch. β. The suffix -esse, O. H. G. -z-issa, contains a feminine ending; the base is possibly (as has been suggested) the A. S. kaga (G. hag), a hedge, bush; it being supposed that witches were seen in bushes by night. See Hedge, and Haggard.

γ. The Du. haagdis, haagedis, a lizard, strikingly resembles in form the A. S. hægtesse; and is easily derived from Du. haag, a hedge. Der. hag-gard (2), q. v.; and even haggard (1) is from the same base.

HAGGARD (1), wild, said of a hawk. (F., —G.) Orig. the name of a wild, untrained hawk. 'As hagard hauke;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 11. 19. 'For haggard hawkes mislike an empty hand;' Gascoigne's Flowers, Memories, John Vaughan's Theme, l. 26. —O. F. hagard, 'hagard, wild, strange, froward . . . Falcon hagard, a hagard, a falcon that preyed for herself long before she was taken; Cot. β. The orig. sense is 'living in a hedge,' hence, wild. Formed with suffix -ard (of G. origin) from M. H. G. hag (O. H. G. hac), a hedge; see Hedge, Haw. ☞ Quite distinct from haggard (2), though perhaps from the same root.

HAGGARD (2), lean, hollow-eyed, meagre. (E.) This word is certainly a corruption of haggēd, confused in spelling by the influence of the word above. 'The ghostly prudes with hagged face;' Gray, A Long Story, 4th stanza from end. Wedgwood cites from Lestrang's Fables: 'A hagged carrion of a wolf and a jolly sort of dog with good flesh upon's back fell into company.' The orig. sense is 'hag-like,' or 'witch-like,' formed with suffix -ed from Hag, q. v.

HAGGLE (1), to cut awkwardly, mangle. (E.) 'York, all haggled over;' Hen. V, iv. 6. 11. A weakened form of hack-le, the frequentative of hack, to cut. See Hack (1). Cf. Lowland Sc. hag, to hack. And see below.

HAGGLE (2), to be slow in making a bargain. (E.) Cotgrave explains O. F. harceler by 'to vex, harry, ... also, to haggle, hucke, hedge, or pautler long in the buying of a commodity.' He similarly explains barguigner by 'to chaffer, ... dodge, haggle, brabble, in the making of a bargain.' It is plain that higgle is a weakened form of the same word.

β. It seems probable that haggle stands for hackle, the frequentative of hack; see Hack (1). The particular use of the word appears more plainly in Dutch. Cf. Du. hakkelen, to mangle, to stammer; explained by Sewel as 'to hackle, mangle, fault;'; also Du. hakketeren, to wrangle, cavil; both derivatives of Du. hakken, to hack.

γ. Thus the word is ultimately the same as Haggle (1). Der. haggl-er; and see higgle.

HAGIOGRAPHY, holy writings. (Gk.) A name given to the last of the three Jewish divisions of the Old Testament, containing Ps., Prov., Job, Dan., Ez., Nehem., Ruth, Esther, Chron., Cant., Lam., and Eccles. = Gk. ἁγιόγραφα (βιβλία), books written by inspiration. = Gk. ἁγιο-, crude form of ἅγιος, devoted to the gods, sacred, holy; and γράφειν, to write. β. ἅγιος is from √YAG, to worship; cf. Skt. yaj, to worship. For γράφειν, see Grave. Der. hagiograph-y (in Minshew), hagiograph-er.

HA-HA, the same as Haw-haw; see Haw.

HAIL (1), frozen rain. (E.) M. E. hazel, Layamon, 11975; spelt havel in the later text. Later hayl, hail (y = i for j) Chaucer, Good Women, Cleop. 76. = A. S. hagal, hagol; Grein. + Icel. hagl. + Du., Dan., Swed. hagel. + G. hagel. Allied to Gk. κάλαξ, κόχλαξ, a round pebble; so that hail-stone is tautological. Der. hail, verb. M. E. hailen, Prompt. Parv.; also hail-stone, M. E. hailston, Wyclif, Wisdom, v. 23 (later text).

HAIL (2), to greet, call to, address. (Scand.) M. E. heilen. 'Heylyn, or gretyn, saluto;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt hezzienn (for hezlen), Ormulum, 2814. A verb formed from Icel. heill, hale, sound, in good health, which was particularly used in greeting, as in kom heill, welcome, hail! far heill, farewell! β. The usual Icel. verb is heilsa, to say hail to one, to greet one, whence M. E. hailen, to greet. In P. Plowman, B. v. 101, we have: 'I hailse hym hendeliche, as I his frende were' = I greet him readily, as if I were his friend; and, in this very passage, the Bodley MS. reads: 'I haile him.' Cf. Swed. hel, hale, helsa, health, helsa, to salute, greet; Dan. heel, hale, hølse, to salute, greet. See Hale (1), and Whole.

HAIL! (3), an exclamation of greeting. (Scand.) 'All hail, great master! grave sir, hail, I come!' Temp. i. 2. 189. 'Hayl be þow, mary' = Lat. ave Maria; Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, l. 422. = Icel. heill, hale, whole; but esp. used in greeting. See Hail (2), and Hale.

☞ Similar is the use of A. S. wes hál, lit. be whole, may you be in good health; but the A. S. hál produced the E. whole, as distinct from Scand. hale. See Wassail.

HAIR, a filament growing from the skin of an animal. (E.) M. E. heer, her, Chaucer, C. T. 591; Ancren Riwle, p. 424. = A. S. hár, hér, Grein, ii. 24. + Du. haar. + Icel. hár. + Dan. haar. + Swed. hår. β. The European type is HARA, Fick, iii. 67. Root unknown. Der. hair-y, M. E. heeri, Wyclif, Gen. xxvii. 11; hair-iness; hair-less; also hair-breadth, -cloth, -powder, -splitting, -spring, -stroke, -trigger, -worm.

HAKE, a sea-fish of the cod family. (Scand.) 'Hake, fysche, squilla;' Prompt. Parv. = Norweg. hakefisk (lit. hook-fish), a fish with hooked under-jaw, esp. of salmon and trout (Aasen); from Norweg. hake, a hook; see Hook. Compare A. S. hacod, glossed by Lat. lucius; Wright's Vocab. i. 55, col. 2; whence also Prov. E. haked, a large pike (Cambridgeshire); Blount's Glossographia. + G. hecht, M. H. G. hechet, O. H. G. hachit, a pike. β. This explains A. S. hacod as meaning 'hooked,' -od being the pp. ending; see Hatch (1). Observe also Icel. haka (Swed. kaka, Dan. hage), the chin, with reference to the peculiar under-jaw of the fish; cf. Icel. kaki, Swed. kake, Dan. hage, a hook.

HALBERD, HALBERT, a kind of pole-axe. (F., = M. H. G.) In Shak. Com. Errors, v. 185. Ben Jonson has halbardiers, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, iii. 5. 14. = O. F. halebarde, 'an halberd;' Cot. = M. H. G. helmbarte, later halenbarte, mod. G. hellebarte, an axe with which to split a helmet, furnished with a conveniently long handle, as if derived from M. H. G. (and G.) helm, a helmet; and M. H. G. (and G.) barte, O. H. G. parta, a broad axe.

β. But this was an accommodation of the sense to the common meaning of helm; the real orig. meaning was 'long-handled axe,' from M. H. G. halm, a helve, handle; see Helm (1). 2. The origin of O. H. G. parta is obscure; some derive it from O. H. G. perjan, M. H. G. bern, berren, to strike, cognate with Icel. berja, Lat. ferire, to strike; see Ferule. Others connect O. H. G. parta with O. H. G. part, G. bart, a beard, and this certainly accounts better for the vowel. As to the connection between 'beard' and 'axe,' compare Icel. barð (the same word as E. beard, but used in the sense of a fin of a fish, or beak of a ship) with Icel. barða, a kind of axe; whilst the Icel. skeggja, a kind of halberd, is plainly derived from skegg, a beard. The connection is again seen in O. F. barbelé, explained by Cotgrave as 'bearded, also full of snags, snips, jags, notches; whence flesche barbelée, a bearded, or barbed arrow; see Barb. Similarly the halberd may have been named from the jagged and irregular shape of the iron head. Der. halberd-ier, O. F. halebardier, 'an halberdier;' Cot.

HALCYON, a king-fisher; as adj., serene. (L., = Gk.) 'Halcyon days' = calm days, 1 Hen. VI, i. 2. 131. It was supposed that the weather was always calm when the kingfishers were breeding. 'They lay and sit about midwinter, when daies be shortest; and the time whiles they are broody, is called the halcyon daies; for during that season, the sea is calme and naugible, especially in the coast of Sicilie;' Holland's Pliny, b. x. c. 32. = Lat. halcyon, commonly alcyon, a kingfisher. = Gk. ἀλκυών, ἀλκυών, a kingfisher. β. Of uncertain origin; the aspirate seems to be wrong; clearly cognate with Lat. alcedo, the true Lat. name for the bird.

HALE (1), whole, healthy, sound. (Scand.) 'For they bene hale enough, I trowe;' Spenser, Sheph. Kal., July, 107. M. E. heil, heyl. 'Heyl fro sekensesse, sanus;' Prompt. Parv. = Icel. heill, hale, sound; Swed. hel; Dan. heel. β. Cognate with A. S. hál, whence M. E. hool, E. whole. Der. hail (2), hail (3).

HALE (2), HAUL, to drag, draw violently. (E.) M. E. halien, halen; whence mod. E. hale and haul, dialectal varieties of the same word. Spelt halie, P. Plowman, B. viii. 95; hale, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 151. = A. S. holian, geholian, to acquire, get; it occurs as geholode, pl. of the pp., in Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet, p. 209, l. 19. + O. Fries. halia, to fetch. + O. Sax. halón, to bring, fetch. + Du. halen, to fetch, draw, pull. + Dan. hale, to haul. + Swed. hala, to haul. + G. holen, to fetch (as a naut. term, to haul); O. H. G. holón, halón, to summon, fetch.

β. Allied to Lat. calare, to summon, Gk. καλεῖν, to summon. = √KAR, to resound, cry out. See Calends. Der. haul, sb., haul-er, haul-age; also halyard, q. v. ☞ Hale is the older form; we find 'halede hine to grunde' = haled him to the ground, Layamon, 25888 (later text); haul first occurs in the pp. ihauled, Life of Becket, ed. W. H. Black, l. 1497. [*]

HALF, one of two equal parts of a thing. (E.) M. E. half; 'half a bushel'; Chaucer, C. T. 4242. = A. S. healf, Northumb. half, Luke, xix. 8; where the later A. S. text has half. + Du. half. + Icel. hálf. + Swed. half. + Dan. halv. + Goth. halbs. + G. halb, O. H. G. halp.

β. In close connection with this adj. we find M. E. half, A. S. healf (Gen. xiii. 9), Icel. hálf, Goth. halba, O. H. G. halpa, used with the sense of 'side,' or 'part;' and this may have been the orig. sense. It occurs, e.g. in the Goth. version of 2 Cor. iii. 9, where the Gk. ἐν τοῖντο τῷ μέτρῳ is translated by in thizai halbai. Thus the European type is HALBA, sb., a part, side.

HALIBUT, a large flat-fish. (E.) 'Hallibut, a fish like a plaice;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Cotgrave translates O. F. flatelet by 'a hallibut (fish)'. Compounded of M. E. hali, holy (see Holy), and butte, a flounder, plaice, which occurs in Havelok, 759. So called because excellent eating for holidays; the sense being 'holy' (i.e. holiday) plaice. The fish often attains to a large size, and weighs as much as 400 lbs. The cognate languages have similar names for it. + Du. heilbot; from heilig, holy, and bot, a plaice. Cf. Swed. helgflyndra, from helig, holidays, and flyndra, a flounder. Dan. helleflynder, from heilig, holy, and flynder, a flounder. [†]

HALL, a large room. (E.) M. E. halle, Chaucer, C. T. 2523.—A. S. heall, heal (for older hal), Grein, ii. 50; the acc. healle occurs in Mark, xiv. 15, where the latest text has halle. + Du. hal. + Icel. hall, höll. + O. Swed. hall. (The G. halle is a borrowed word.) β. From the Teutonic base HAL, to conceal, whence A. S. helan, to hide, conceal, cover; just as the corresponding Lat. cella is from Lat. celare, to conceal, cover; the orig. sense being 'cover,' or place of shelter. See Cell, a doublet, from the same root. Der. hall-mark, guild-hall. ☞ Quite unconnected with Lat. aula.

HALLELUJAH, the same as Alleluiah, q. v.

HALLIARD, the same as Halyard, q. v.

HALLOO, HALLOA, a cry to draw attention. (E.) 'Halow, schypmannys crye, Celeuma;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. halloo, King Lear, iii. 4. 79, where the folio edd. have alow, and the quarto edd. have a lo (Schmidt). I suppose it to differ from Holla, q. v., and to be nothing else but a modification of the extremely common A. S. interj. eald, Matt. xxiii. 33, 37. β. In this word, ea stands for a, the modern ah! whilst la is the modern lo. See Ah and Lo.

γ. The prefixing of h is an effect of shouting, just as we have ha! for ah! when uttered in a bolder tone; or it may have been due to confusion with holla. Der. halloo, verb, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 291. ☞ Cotgrave has F. halle, 'an interj. of cheering or setting on a dog,' whence halter, 'to hallow, or encourage dogs with hallowing.'

HALLOW, to sanctify, make holy. (E.) M. E. halzien, Layamon, 17496; later halwe, P. Plowman, B. xv. 557; halweu, halowe, Wyclif, John, xi. 55.—A. S. hālgian, to make holy; from hālig, holy. See Holy. And see below.

HALLOWMASS, the feast of All Hallows or All Saints. (Hybrid; E. and L.) In Shak. Rich. II. v. i. 80. A familiar abbreviation for All Hallows' Mass—the mass (or feast) of All Saints. In Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 351, we have the expression alle halowene tyd—all hallows' tide; and again, the tyme of al halowene—the time of all hallows.

β. Here hallows is the gen. pl. of M. E. halowe or halwe, a saint; just as halowene is the M. E. gen. pl. of the same word. The pl. halwes (= saints) occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 14.

γ. The M. E. halwe = A. S. hālgā, definite form of the adj. hālig, holy; so also the M. E. halowen = A. S. hālgan, definite form of the nom. pl. of the same adj. See Holy, and see Mass (2).

2. Similarly, halowe'en = all hallows' even.

HALLUCINATION, wandering of mind. (L.) 'For if vision be abolished, it is called cæcitas, or blindness; if depraved, and receive its objects erroneously, hallucination;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 18. § 4. Also in Minshew, ed. 1627. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -tion, from Lat. hallucinatio, allucinatio, or alucinatio, a wandering of the mind.—Lat. hallucinari, allucinari, or alucinari, to wander in mind, dream, rave. Of uncertain origin. Der. hallucinate, verb, hallucinatio—or-y.

HALM, the same as Haulm, q. v.

HALO, a luminous ring round the sun or moon. (L.—Gk.) 'This halo is made after this manner;' Holland's Plutarch, p. 681 (R.)—Lat. acc. halo, from nom. halos, a halo.—Gk. ἅλως, a round threshing-floor, in which the oxen trod out a circular path; cf. ἀλέειν, to grind, ἐλύνειν, to wind, curve.—✓ WAL, for WAR, to turn; cf. Lat. voluere, to roll, Skt. valaya, a circle, circular enclosure. See Voluble.

HALSER (in Minshew), the same as Hawser, q. v.

HALT, lame. (E.) M. E. halt, Havelok, 543.—A. S. healt, Northumb. halt, Luke, xiv. 21. + Icel. haltir. + Dan. halt. + Swed. halt. + Goth. halts. + O. H. G. halz. Root uncertain. Der. halt, verb = M. E. halten, A. S. healtian (Ps. xvii. 47); halt-ing, halt-ing-ly. ☞ For halt = stop! see Addenda.

HALTER, a rope for leading a horse, a noose. (E.) M. E. halter, Gower, C. A. ii. 47. [Perhaps helfter = halter, in O. Eng. Misc., ed. Morris, i. 53, l. 18.]—A. S. healfter (rare); the dat. on healfstre = with a halter, occurs as a translation of Lat. in camo in Ps. xxxi. 12 (Camb. MS.), ed. Spelman; also spelt helfter; we find 'capistrum, helftre,' Wright's Vocab. i. 84, col. 1; cf. Thorpe's Analecta, p. 28, l. 1.—+ O. Du. halfter (Hexham). + G. halfter, a halter. Perhaps from ✓ KAL (Skt. kal), to drive. Der. halter, verb.

HALVE, to divide in half. (E.) See Half.

HALYARD, HALLIARD, a rope for hoisting or lowering sails. (E.) Both spellings are in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. The ropes are so called because fastened to the yards of the ship from which the sails are suspended; and the word is short for hale-yard, because they hale or draw the yards into their places. See Hale (2) and Yard.

HAM, the inner or hind part of the knee; the thigh of an animal. (E.) M. E. hamme, hamme; the pl. is spelt both hammen and hammes, Ancren Riwle, p. 122.—A. S. hamm; 'poples, hamm;' Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. 2; 'suffragines, hammā' (pl.); id. + O. H. G. hamma, prov. G. hamme. β. So called because of the 'bend' in the leg; cf. Lat. camurus, crooked, W. cam, bent.—✓ KAM, to be crooked. See Chamber. Der. ham-string, sb.

Shak. Troil. i. 3. 154; ham-string, verb. ☞ Diez derives Ital. gamba, F. jambe, the lower part of the leg, from the same root KAM, to bend; see Gambol, and Gammon (1). [†]

HAMADRYAD, a dryad or wood-nymph. (L.—Gk.) Properly used rather in the pl. Hamadryades, whence the sing. hamadryad was (incorrectly) formed, by cutting off the suffix -es. Chaucer, C. T. 2930, has the corrupt form Amadrydes.—Lat. pl. hamadryades (sing. hamadryas), wood-nymphs.—Gk. pl. Ἀμαδρυάδες, wood-nymphs; the life of each nymph depended on that of the tree to which she was attached.—Gk. ἅμα, together with (i. e. coexistent with); and δρῦς, a tree. ἅμα is co-radicate with same; and δρῦς with tree. See Same and Tree.

HAMLET, a small village. (F.—O. Low G.) M. E. hamelet, of three syllables; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 269; spelt hamelat, Barbour, Bruce, iv. 195; hamillet, id. ix. 403 (Edinb. MS.); hamlet, id. x. 403 (Camb. MS.).—O. F. hamel (whence mod. F. hameau), with dimin. suffix -et. Hamel is used by Froissart, ii. 2. 232 (Littre). The suffix -el is also dimin.; the base being ham.—O. Friesic ham (North Friesic hamm, Outzen), a home, dwelling; cognate with A. S. hām, whence E. home. See Home. ☞ The fact that the word is French explains the difference of vowel. [†]

HAMMER, a tool for driving nails. (E.) M. E. hamer, hammer; Chaucer, C. T. 2510; Havelok, 1877.—A. S. hamor, Grein, ii. 11. + Du. hamer. + Icel. hamarr. + Dan. hammer. + Swed. hammare. + G. hammer; O. H. G. hamar.

β. Of doubtful origin; Curtius (i. 161) connects it with Church Slavonic kamēni (Russ. kamēne), a stone, Lithuanian akmīd (stem akmen), a stone, Gk. ἀκμων, an anvil, thunderbolt, Skt. akman, a stone, thunderbolt; and remarks that 'in German, as in Slavonic, metathesis has taken place.' This etymology appears to be correct; and the root is (probably) ✓ AK, to pierce, the orig. sense of Skt. akman being 'pointed stone;' cf. Skt. aganī, the thunderbolt of Indra; and note the 'hammer of Thor,' i. e. a thunderbolt.

γ. Fick (iii. 64) says that the comparison of hammer with Skt. akman is 'not to be thought of,' and refers it to ✓ KAM, to be crooked; but this gives no appreciable sense. We should naturally expect the original hammer to have been a stone, and the metathesis of form is quite possible. Der. hammer, verb, K. John, iv. 1. 67; hammer-head (a kind of shark).

HAMMERCLOTH, the cloth which covers a coach-box. (Hybrid; Du. and E.) In Todd's Johnson. The form hammer is an E. adaptation of the Du. word hemel (which was not understood); with the addition of E. cloth, by way of giving a sort of sense.—Du. hemel (1), heaven (2) a tester, covering. 'Den hemel van een koetsse, the seating of a coach,' Hexham; explained by Sewel as 'the testem of a coach.'

β. Cognate with Swed., Dan., and G. himmel, heaven, a canopy, tester. All these are derivatives from the form appearing in A. S. hama, Icel. hamr, a covering.—Teut. base HAM = ✓ KAM, to curve, cover as with a vault; see Chamber. [†]

HAMMOCK, a piece of strong netting slung to form a hanging bed. (West Indian.) 'Those beds which they call hamacas, or Brasill beds;' Hackluyt's Voyages, iii. 641 (R.) 'Cotton for the making of hamaccas, which are Indian beds;' Raleigh, Discovery of Guiana, ed. 1596, p. 32 (Todd). 'Beds or hamacks;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 6 (id.). Columbus, in the Narrative of his First Voyage, says: 'a great many Indians came today for the purpose of bartering their cotton, and hamacas, or nets, in which they sleep' (Webster). Cf. Span. hamaca, a hammock. Of West Indian origin; perhaps slightly changed to a Span. form. ☞ Ingeniously corrupted in Dutch to hangmat, i. e. a hanging mat; but the older Du. form was hammak (Sewel).

HAMPER (1), to impede, hinder, harass. (E.) M. E. hamperen, hampren; the pp. is hampred and hampred, Will. of Paleme, 441, 4694. 'For, I trow, he can hamper thee;' Rom. of the Rose, 6428. A difficult word; the p is probably excrement, giving an older form hameren, equivalent to M. E. hamelen, to mutilate, which itself took an excrement b at a later time, so that hamper and hample are, in fact, doublets. 'Hampling or hampling of dogs is all one with expeditating. Manwood says, this is the ancient term that foresters used for that matter;' Blount's Law Lexicon. 'Expeditate, in forest laws, signifies to cut out the ball of great dogs' fore-feet, for preservation of the king's game;' id. The orig. sense of to hample or hamper is to mutilate, render lame; cf. Lowland Sc. hiamle, to walk in an ungainly manner; hamp, to halt in walking, to stutter; hamprel, one who stumbles often in walking; hamper, one who cannot read fluently (Jamieson).—A. S. hamelian, to mutilate, maim; Grein, ii. 10. + Icel. hamla, to mutilate, maim. + G. hammeln. β. According to Fick, iii. 65, the forms hamla, hamelian are from an older hamfla, formed from the base hamf in Goth. hamfs, maimed, Mark, ix. 43. γ. This Goth. hamfs is cognate with Gk. καρφός, blunt, dumb, deaf (Curtius, i. 187), and with Gk. κάρων, a capon.—✓ SKAP, to cut; see Capon. Der. hamper, a fetter (rare).

HAMPER (2), a kind of basket. (Low Lat., -F., -G.) 'An hamper of golde;' Fabyan's Chron., an. 1431-2; ed. Ellis, p. 607. A corruption of HANAPER, q. v. 'Clerk of the Hamper or hanaper (Clericus hanaperii) is an officer in chancery (Anno 2 Edw. iv. c. 1) otherwise called Warden of the Hamper in the same statute;' Blount's Law Lexicon. - Low Lat. hanaperium, a large vessel for keeping cups in. - O. Fr. hanap (Low Lat. hanapus), a drinking-cup. - O. H. G. knapp (M. H. G. napp), a drinking-cup. + A. S. hnæp, as a gloss to Lat. ciathus (cyathus); Wright's Vocab. i. 24, col. 2. + Du. næp, a cup, bowl, basin. Root unknown. Doublet, hanaper.

HANAPER, the old form of Hamper, q. v. Cf. 'hanypere, or hamper, canistrum;' Prompt. Parv., p. 226. 'The Hanaper office in the Court of Chancery derives its name from the hanaperium, a large basket in which writs were deposited,' &c.; Way's note.

HAND, the part of the body used for seizing and holding. (E.) M. E. hand, hond, Chaucer, C. T. 843. - A. S. hand, hond; Grein, ii. 11. + Du. hand. + Icel. hönd, hand. + Dan. haand. + Swed. hand. + Goth. handus. + G. hand; O. H. G. hant. β. The European type is HANDU; derived from HANTH, base of Goth. hinthan, to seize, a strong verb (pt. t. hantth, pp. hunthans), only found in the compounds frakinthan, to take captive, uwinthan, to take captive. Remoter origin unknown. Der. hand, verb, Temp. i. 1. 25; hand-er; hand-barrow, hand-bill, hand-book (imitated from G. handbuch, see Trench, Eng. Past and Present); hand-breadth, Exod. xxv. 25; hand-cart; hand-ful (Wyclif has hondfullis, pl., Gen. xxxvii. 7); hand-gallop; hand-glass, hand-grenade, hand-kerchief (see Kerchief), hand-less, hand-maid (Gen. xvi. 1), hand-maiden (Luke, i. 48), hand-spike, hand-staves (Ezek. xxxix. 9), hand-weapon (Numb. xxxv. 18), hand-writing. And see hand-cuff, hand-i-cap, hand-i-craft, hand-i-work, hand-le, hand-sel, hand-some, hand-y.

HANDCUFF, a manacle, shackle for the hand. (E.) In Todd's Johnson, without a reference; rare in books. The more usual word (in former times) was hand-fetter, used by Cotgrave to translate O. F. manette, manicle, and manotte. The word is undoubtedly an adaptation of M. E. handcops, a handcuff; the confusion between cops, a fetter (an obsolete word) and the better known M. E. coffes (cuffs) was inevitable. We find 'manica, hond-cops' in a vocabulary of the 12th century; Wright's Vocab. i. 95, col. 2. - A. S. hand-cops; we find 'manice, hand-cops' in an earlier vocabulary; id. i. 86, col. 1; also 'compes, fót-cops,' just above. The A. S. cops is also spelt cosp; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. iv. met. 3.

HANDICAP, a race for horses of all ages. (E.) In a handicap, horses carry different weights according to their ages, &c., with a view to equalising their chances. The word was formerly the name of a game. 'To the Miter Taverne in Woodstreete . . . Here some of us fell to handycap, a sport that I never knew before;' Pepys's Diary, Sept. 18, 1666. The game is thus explained in Dr. Brewer's Dict. of Phrase and Fable. 'A game at cards not unlike Loo, but with this difference; the winner of one trick has to put in a double stake, the winner of two tricks a triple stake, and so on. Thus: if six persons are playing, and the general stake is 1s., and A gains 3 tricks, he gains 6s., and has to "hand i' the cap" or pool 3s. [4s.?] for the next deal. Suppose A gains two tricks and B one, then A gains 4s. and B 2s., and A has to stake 3s. and B 2s. for the next deal.' But this game does not seem to have originated the phrase.

β. There was, I believe, a still older arrangement of the kind, described in Chambers' Etym. Dict., where it is explained as 'originally applied to a method of settling a bargain or exchange by arbitration, in which each of the parties exchanging put his hand into a cap while the terms of the award were being stated, the award being settled only if money was found in the hands of both when the arbiter called "Draw."'

γ. A curious description of settling a bargain by arbitration is given in P. Plowman, B. v. 327; shewing that it was a custom to barter articles, and to settle by arbitration which of the articles was more valuable, and how much (by way of 'amends') was to be given to the holder of the inferior one. From this settlement of 'amends' arose the system known as handicapping. The etymology is clearly from hand i' cap (=hand in cap), probably rather from the drawing of lots than from the putting in of stakes into a pool. See my Notes on P. Plowman.

HANDICRAFT, manual occupation, by way of trade. (E.) Cotgrave translates O. F. mestier by 'a trade, occupation, mystery, handicraft.' A corruption of handicrafts; the insertion of i being due to an imitation of the form of handiwork, in which i is a real part of the word. - A. S. handcraft, a trade; Canons under K. Edgar, sect. xi; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 246. See Hand and Craft. Der. handicrafts-man.

HANDIWORK, HANDYWORK, work done by the hands. (E.) M. E. handiwerk, hondiwerk; spelt hondiwerk, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 129, l. 20. - A. S. handgeuorc, Deut. iv. 28. - A. S. hand, hand; and geuorc, another form of uorc, work. See Hand and Work. ¶ The prefix ge- in A. S. is extremely common, and makes no appreciable difference in the sense of a word. In later E., it is constantly rendered by i- or y-, as in y-clept, from A. S. gecleopod. In Icel. handaverk, handa is the gen. pl.

HANDLE, to treat of, manage. (E.) M. E. handlen, Chaucer, C. T. 8252. - A. S. handlian, Gen. xxvii. 12. Formed with suffix -l and causal -ian from A. S. hand, hand. + Du. handelen, to handle, trade. + Icel. höndla. + Dan. handle, to treat, use, trade. + Swed. handla, to trade. + G. handeln, to trade. All similarly formed. See Hand. Der. handle, sb., lit. a thing by which to manage a tool; the pl. hondlen occurs early, in St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne and Brock, p. 59; cf. Dan. handel, a handle.

HANSEL, HANSEL, a first instalment or earnest of a bargain. (E. or Scand.) 1. In making bargains, it was formerly usual to pay a small part of the price at once, to conclude the bargain and as an earnest of the rest. The lit. sense of the word is 'delivery into the hand' or 'hand-gift.' The word often means a gift or bribe, a new-year's gift, an earnest-penny, the first money received in a morning, &c. See Hansel in Halliwell. M. E. hansle, P. Plowman, C. vii. 375; B. v. 326; hansell, Rich. Redeles, iv. 91. 2. Another sense of the word was 'a giving of hands,' a shaking of hands by way of concluding a bargain; see hansal in Icel. Dict.; and it is probable that this is the older meaning of the two. - A. S. handselen, a delivery into the hand; cited by Lye from a Glossary (Cot. 136), but the reference seems to be wrong. [The A. S. word is rare, and the word is rather to be considered as Scand.] - A. S. hand, the hand; and sellan, to give, deliver, whence E. sell. Thus the word hansel stands for hand-sale. See Hand and Sell, Sale. + Icel. hansal, a law term, the transaction of a bargain by joining hands; 'hand-shaking with the men of old the sign of a transaction, and is still used among farmers and the like, so that to shake hands is the same as to conclude a bargain' (Cleasby and Vigfusson); derived from Icel. hand, hand, and sal, lit. a giving. + Dan. hansel, a handsel, earnest. + Swed. handsöl. Der. hansel or hansel, verb, used in Warner's Albion's England, b. xii. c. 75 (R.).

HANDSOME, comely, orig. dexterous. (E.) Formerly it signified able, adroit, dexterous; see Trench, Select Glossary; Shak. has it in the mod. sense. M. E. handsom. 'Handsom, or esy to hond werke, esy to han hand werke, manualis;' Prompt. Parv. - A. S. hand, hand; and suffix -sum, as in wyn-sum, winsome, jovious; but the whole word handsom does not appear. + Du. handzaam, tractable, serviceable. β. The suffix -sum is the same as Du. -zaam, G. -sam (in lang-sam); see Winsome. Der. handsome-ly; handsomeness, Troil. ii. 1. 16.

HANDY (1), dexterous, expert. (E.) 'With handy care;' Dryden, Baucis and Philemon, l. 61. The M. E. form is invariably hendi (never handi), but the change from e to a is a convenience; it is merely a reversion to the orig. vowel. It occurs in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1336. 'Thenne beo 3e his hendi children' = then ye are his dutiful children; Ancræn Riwe, p. 186. - A. S. hendig, appearing in the comp. list-hendig, having skilful hands (Grein); which is composed of A. S. list, skill, and hendig, an adj. regularly formed from the sb. hand by the addition of the suffix -ig and the consequent vowel change from a to e. See Hand. + Du. handig, handy, expert. + Dan. hendig, usually behendig, expert, dexterous. + Swed. händig, dexterous. + Goth. handugs, clever, wise. Cf. G. behend, agile, dexterous; and see Handy (2).

HANDY (2), convenient, near. (E.) This is not quite the same word as the above, but they are from the same source. 'Ah! though he lives so handy, He never now drops in to sup;' Hood's Own, i. 44. M. E. hende. 'Nade his help hende ben' = had not help been near him; William of Palerne, 2513. - A. S. gehende, near; 'sumor is gehende' = summer is nigh at hand, Luke, xxi. 30; 'he was gehende þam scipe' = he was nigh unto the ship, John, vi. 19. [The prefix ge- could always be dropped, and is nearly lost in mod. English.] The A. S. gehende is an adv. and prep., formed from hand by suffixed -e (for -i?) and vowel-change. See Handy (1).

HANDYWORK, the same as Handiwork, q. v.

HANG, to suspend; to be suspended. (E.) In mod. E. two verbs have been mixed together. The orig. verb is intransitive, with the pt. t. hung, pp. hung; whence the derived transitive verb, pt. t. and pp. hanged. [So also in the case of lie, lay, sit, set, fall, fell, the intrans. is the orig. form.] The infin. mood follows the form of the A. S. trans. rather than of the intransitive verb, on which account the unoriginal form will be first considered here. A. Trans. and weak verb, pt. t. and pp. hanged. 'Born to be hanged;' Temp. i. 1. 35. But the pt. t. is generally turned into hung, as in 'hung their eyelids down;' 1 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 81. M. E. hangien, hongien; also hangen, hongen. 'Hanged hym after' = he hanged himself afterwards; P. Plowman, B. i. 68; pp. hanged, id. B. prol. 176. - A. S.

hangian, hongian, Grein, ii. 14; the pt. t. hangode occurs in Beowulf, ed. Grein, 2085. + Icel. hengja, to hang up (weak verb). + G. hängen (weak verb). These are the causal forms of the strong verb following. B. M. E. hangen, pt. t. heng (sometimes hing), pp. hongen. 'And theron heng a broche of gold ful schene;' Chaucer, C. T. 160. 'By unces henge his lokkes that he hadde;' id. 679. The infin. hangen is conformed to the causal and Icel. forms, the A. S. infin. being always contracted. — A. S. hōn, to hang, intr. (contr. from hakan or hankan); pt. t. hēng, pp. hongen; Grein, ii. 95. + Icel. hanga, to hang, intr.; pt. t. hékk (for hēng), pp. hanginn. + Goth. hakan, pt. t. haihak (formed by reduplication), pp. hahans. + G. hangen, pt. t. hieng, hing, pp. gehangen.

O. All these verbs are from a European base HANH (Fick, iii. 58), corresponding to a root KANK, whence Lat. cunctari, to hesitate, delay, and Skt. ṣank, to hesitate, be in uncertainty, doubt, fear. And again, KANK is a nasalised form of ✓ KAK, whence Gk. κακείν, to linger, be anxious, fear, standing for an older form κακείν. 'We must assume an Indo-European root kak, nasalised kan, and refer ḱevos to κόκνος;' Curtius, ii. 375. The orig. sense of ✓ KAK seems to be 'to be in doubt,' 'be anxious,' 'be suspended in mind,' or simply 'to waver.' ¶ The Du. hangen, Dan. hænge, Swed. hänga, are forms common to both trans. and intrans. senses. Der. hang-er, (1) one who hangs, (2) a suspended sword, orig. part of a sword-belt whence the sword was suspended, Hamlet, v. 2. 157; hanger-on, hang-ing; hang-ings, Tam. Shrew, ii. 351; hang-man, Meas. iv. 2. 18; hang-dog, Pope, Donne Versified, Sat. iv. 267; also hank, q. v.; hank-er, q. v. [†]

HANK, a parcel of two or more skeins of yarn, tied together. (Scand.) Cotgrave translates O. F. bobine by 'a skane or hanke of gold or silver thread.' Cf. prov. E. hank, a skein, a loop to fasten a gate, a handle (Halliwell). The rare M. E. verb hanken, to fetter, occurs in Cursor Mundi, 16044. — Icel. hanki, the hasp or clasp of a chest; hink, hangr, a hank, coil; hang, a coil of a snake. + Dan. hank, a handle, ear of a vessel. + Swed. hank, a string, tie-band. + G. henkel, a handle, ring, ear, hook. β. The orig. sense seems to be 'a loop' for fastening things together, also a loose ring to hang a thing up by; and the form hangr shews the connection with Icel. hanga, to hang, also to hang on to, cleave to; whence the sense of fastening. Cf. G. hanken, to hang (a man). See Hang, Hanker.

HANKER, to long importunately. (E.) Not in early use. 'And felt such bowel-hankerings To see an empire, all of kings;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 239. Cf. prov. E. hank, to hanker after (North); Halliwell. This verb is a frequentative of hang, with the same change of ng to nk as in the sb. hank; cf. the phrases 'to hang on,' and 'to hang about,' and the use of Icel. hanga in the sense of 'to cleave to.' + O. Du. hengelen, to hanker after (Sewel), from Du. hangen, to hang, depend; mod. Du. hunkeren, to hanker after, corrupted from the older form hankeren (= hankeren); see Sewel. ¶ The change from ng to nk is also well shewn by G. hanker (= hang-er), a hangman; G. hanken, to hang (a man). See Hang, Hang. [†] HANSEATIC, pertaining to the Hanse Towns in Germany. (F., — O. H. G.) The Hanse towns were so called because associated in a league. — O. F. hanse, 'the hanse, a company, society, or corporation of merchants;' Cot. — O. H. G. hansa, mod. G. hanse, an association, league (Flügel). + Goth. hansa, a band of men, Mk. xv. 16; Luke, vi. 17. + A. S. hós [for hans], a band of men; Beowulf, 924. ¶ The league began about A. D. 1140 (Haydn).

HANSEL, the same as Handsel, q. v.

HANSOM, a kind of cab. (E.) Modern. An abbreviation for 'Hansom's patent safety cab.' From the name of the inventor. Hansom is no doubt the same as handsome, in which the d is frequently dropped. Many surnames are nicknames; see Handsome.

HAP, fortune, chance, accident. (Scand.) M. E. hap, happ; P. Plowman, B. xii. 108; Layamon, 816, 3857. — Icel. happ, hap, chance, good luck. Cf. A. S. gehap, fit; Ælfric's Colloquy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 21, l. 7; also A. S. mægenhap, full of strength, móðhap, full of courage, Grein, ii. 219, 259. ¶ The W. hap, luck, hap, chance, must be borrowed from E.; but the Irish cobh, victory, triumph, is prob. cognate. Der. happ-y, orig. lucky, Pricke of Conscience, 1334; happ-i-ly, happ-i-ness; hap-less, Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 108; hap-less-ly; hap-ly, Shak. Two Gent. i. 1. 32 (happily in the same sense, Meas. iv. 2. 98); hap-hazard, Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 578 (R.); happ-en, verb, q. v.; mis-hap, per-haps.

HAPPEN, to befall. (Scand.) M. E. happenen; Gower has hapneth = it happens; C. A. iii. 62. '3if me þe lyffe happene' = if life be granted me; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1269. β. The form happenen is an extension of the commoner form happen (mod. E. hap); 'In any cas that mighte falle or happe;' Chaucer, C. T. 587. γ. The latter verb is formed directly from the sb. hap above. ¶ With the ending -enen compare Goth. verbs in -nan.

HARANGUE, a popular address. (F., — O. H. G.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 663. — O. F. harangue, 'an oration, . . set speech, long tale;' Cot. Cf. Span. arenga, Ital. aringa, arringa, an harangue. β. The Ital. aringa signifies a speech made from an aringo, which Florio explains by 'a pulpit;' aringo also meant an arena, lists, and prob. a hustings. The more lit. sense is a speech made in the midst of a ring of people. — O. H. G. hring (mod. G. ring), a ring, a ring of people, an arena, circus, lists; cognate with E. ring and circus. See Ring, Circus. ¶ The vowel a (for i) reappears in the sb. rank; see Rank, Range. The prefix ha- in F., and a- in Span. and Ital., are due to the G. h-, now dropped. Der. harangue, verb, Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 438.

HARASS, to torment, vex, plague. (F.) Also spelt harras. 'To harass and weary the English;' Bacon, Life of Hen. VII. ed. Lumby, p. 61 (spelt harrasse in R.). — O. F. harasser, 'to tire, or tole out, . . vex, disquiet;' Cot. β. Of disputed origin; but it seems best to suppose it to be an extension of O. F. harer; 'harer un chien, to hound a dog at, or set a dog on a beast;' Cot. — O. H. G. haren, to cry out. — ✓ KAR, to call out; cf. Gk. κηρύξ, a herald. Der. harass, sb., Milton, Samson, 257; harass-er.

HARBINGER, a forerunner. (F., — O. H. G.) In Shak. Macb. i. 4. 45. See Trench, Select Glossary. The n stands for r, and the older form is M. E. herbergeour, one who provided lodgings for a host or army of people. This sense is retained in Bacon, who says: 'There was a harbinger who had lodged a gentleman in a very ill room;' Apophthegms, no. 54. 'The fame anon throughout the town is born . . By herbergeours that wenten him before;' Chaucer, C. T. 5417. In the title of the legend of St. Julian, in Bodley MS. 1596, fol. 4, he is called 'St. Julian the gode herberjour,' i. e. the good harbourer. Herbergeour is formed (by help of the suffix -our, denoting the agent) from the O. F. herberger, 'to harbour, lodge, or dwell in a house;' Cot. (and see Burguy). — O. F. herberge, 'a house, harbour, lodging;' Cot.; mod. F. auberge. — M. H. G. herberge, O. H. G. hereberga, a lodging, harbour; see further under Harbour.

HARBOUR, a lodging, shelter, place of refuge. (Scand.) M. E. herberwe, Chaucer, C. T. 767; whence mod. E. harbour by change of -erwe to -our, and the use of ar to represent the later sound of er. The w stands for an older 3, and this again for g; the spelling herberze is in Layamon, 28878. — Icel. herbergi, a harbour, inn, lodging, lit. a 'host-shelter;' derived from Icel. herr, an army, and bjarga, to save, help, defend. + O. Swed. herberge, an inn; derived from har, an army, and berga, to defend (Ihre). + O. H. G. hereberga, a camp, lodging; der. from O. H. G. heri, hari (mod. F. keer), an army, and bergan, to shelter: whence come mod. F. auberge, Ital. albergo, an inn, and mod. E. harbinger, q. v. β. For the former element, cf. also A. S. here, Goth. harris, a host, army, the European form being HARJA (Fick, iii. 65). Cognate with Lithuan. karas, war, army, lit. 'destroyer,' from ✓ KAR, to kill, destroy, whence Skt. gāra, hurting, grī, to hurt, wound, Gk. κλῆειν, to break, and perhaps Russ. karate, to punish; see Harry.

¶ For the latter element, cf. Goth. baigan, A. S. beorgan, to preserve; and see Bury. ¶ It is usual to cite A. S. hereberga as the original of harbour; but it is quite unauthorised. Der. harbour, verb, M. E. herberwen, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 73, from Icel. herbergja, to shelter, harbour, a verb formed from the sb. herbergi; also harbour-er; harbour-age, K. John, ii. 234; harbour-less; harbour-master; also harbinger, q. v.

HARD, firm, solid, severe. (E.) M. E. hard, Chaucer, C. T. 229 (and common). — A. S. heard, John, vi. 60. + Du. hard. + Dan. haard. + Swed. hård. + Icel. hárdr. + Goth. hardus. + G. hart. + Gk. καρτίς, strong; cf. κατερέος, κατερέος, valiant, stout. β. There is a little doubt about the relationship of Gk. καρτίς; if it be right, the forms are all from a base KART, from ✓ KAR, to make. See Curtius, i. 189. Der. hard-ly, hard-ness = A. S. heardnes, Mark, x. 5; hard-en = M. E. hardnen, Ormulum, 1574, 18219, which is an extension of the commoner M. E. harden, of which the pp. yharded occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 10559; hard-en-ed; hard-ship, M. E. heardschipe, Ancren Riwle, p. 6, l. 9; hard-ware; hard-featured, hard-fisted, hard-handed, hard-hearted, hard-mouthed, hard-visaged; also hard-y, q. v.

HARDY, stout, strong, brave. (F., — O. H. G.) M. E. hardi, hardy, P. Plowman, B. xix. 285; the comp. hardiere is in Layamon, 4348, later text. — O. F. hardi, 'hardy, daring, stout, bold;' Cot. Hardi was orig. the pp. of O. F. hardir, of which the compound enhardir is explained by Cotgrave to mean 'to hearten, imbolden.' — O. H. G. hartjan (M. H. G. herten), to harden, make strong. — O. H. G. harti (G. hart), hard; cognate with A. S. heard, hard. See Hard. Der. hardi-ly, hardi-ness, P. Plowman, B. xix. 31; hardi-head, Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 38; hardi-hood, Milton, Comus, 650. ¶ Hardi-ly, hardi-ness, hardi-head, hardi-hood are all hybrid compounds, with E. suffixes; shewing how completely the word was naturalised.

HARE, the name of an animal. (E.) M. E. hare, Chaucer, C. T. 13626. — A. S. hara, as a gloss to Lat. lepus, Ælfric's Gloss, in Wright's Vocab. i. 22, 78. + Du. haas. + Dan. and Swed. hare. + Icel. héri. + G. hase; O. H. G. haso. + W. ceinach (Rhys). + Skt. gaça, orig. gasa, a hare, lit. a jumper. β . The A. S. form stands for an older hasa, as shewn by the Du., G., and Skt. forms. The Skt. gives the etymology; gaça being from the verb gaç, orig. pas, to jump, move along by leaping. Hence all the forms are from a root KAS, to jump, prob. connected with E. haste. See Haste. Der. hare-brained, 1 Hen. IV. v. 2. 19; hare-lip, K. Lear, iii. 4. 123; hare-lipped; harri-ier, q. v.; hare-bell, q. v.

HAREBELL, the name of a flower. (E.) In Cymb. iv. 2. 222. The word does not appear among A. S. names of plants. Certainly compounded of hare and bell; but, owing to the absence of reason for the appellation, it has been supposed to be a corruption of hairbell, with reference to the slenderness of the stalk of the true hairbell, the Campanula rotundifolia. The apparent absence of reason for the name is, however, rather in favour of the etymology from hare than otherwise, as will be seen by consulting the fanciful A. S. names of plants given in Cockayne's Leechdoms, vol. iii. To name plants from animals was the old custom; hence hare's beard, hare's ear, hare's foot, hare's lettuce, hare's palace, hare's tail, hare-thistle, all given in Dr. Prior's Popular Names of British Plants; to which add A. S. haran-hyge (hare's foot trefoil), haran-sneol (now called viper's bugloss), haran-wyrt (hare's wort), from Cockayne's Leechdoms. The spelling hair-bell savours of modern science, but certainly not of the principles of English etymology. ¶ A similar modern error is to derive fox-glove from folks-glove (with the silly interpretation of folks as being 'the good folks' or fairies), in face of the evidence that the A. S. name was foxes glôfa = the glove of the fox. [†]

HAREM, the set of apartments reserved for females in large Eastern houses. (Arab.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Spelt haram in Moore's Lalla Rookh; 'And the light of his haram was young Nourmahal.' Also in Byron, Bryde of Abydos, c. i. st. 14. — Arab. haram, women's apartments; lit. 'sacred'; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 197. — Arab. root harama, he prohibited; so that the haram is the place which men are prohibited from entering.

HARICOT, (1) a stew of mutton, (2) the kidney bean. (F.) 'Haricot, in cookery, a particular way of dressing mutton-cutlets; also, a kind of French beans;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — F. haricot, 'mutton sod with little turneps, some wine, and toasts of bread crumbled among,' &c.; Cotgrave (who gives two other methods of preparing it, shewing that it was sometimes served with 'chopped herbs'). β . See Littré, who discusses it; it is found that the sense of 'bean' is late, whilst the sense of 'minced mutton with herbs' is old. The oldest spelling is herigote (14th cent.); cf. O. F. harligote, a piece, morsel (Burguy). We may certainly conclude that the bean was so named from its use in the dish called haricot.

γ . Of unknown origin, but presumably Teutonic. We also find the following. 'Herigotes, dew-claws, also spurs;' Cot. 'Harigot, petite flûte, flageolet fait avec les os des pieds, ou tibia de cheveau et d'agneau;' Roquefort. 'Arigot, harigot, sorte de pipe, petite flûte militaire;' id. (The right key would probably connect and explain these words). [†]

HARK! listen! (E.) M. E. herke, Coventry Mysteries, 55 (Stratmann). The imp. mood of M. E. herken; 'to herken of his sawe,' Chaucer, C. T. 1528. Closely allied to M. E. herkennen, to hearken. See Hearken.

HARLEQUIN, the leading character in a pantomime. (F.) 'The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress;' Dryden (in Todd's Johnson; no reference). — F. arlequin, a harlequin; spelt harlequin in the 16th cent. Cf. Ital. arlecchino, a harlequin, buffoon, jester. β . Some derive the F. word from the Italian; but it is not an old word in the latter language, and the borrowing seems to have been the other way.

γ . It seems best to connect F. arlequin (harlequin) with the O. F. hierlekin or hellequin (13th century) for which Littré gives quotations. This word was used in the phrase li maisnie hierlekin (Low Lat. harlequini familias) which meant a troop of demons that haunted lonely places, called in Middle-English Hurlewaynes kynne or Hurlewaynes meyné = Hurlewain's kin or troop, mentioned in Richard the Redeles, i. 90, and in the Prologue to the Tale of Beryn, l. 8. The orig. signification of O. F. hierlekin, Low Lat. harlequanus, and M. E. hurlewayn seems to have been a demon, perhaps the devil. Cf. also Ital. Alichino, the name of a demon in Dante, Inf. xxi. 118. The origin of the name is wholly unknown. See note to Rich. Redeles, ed. Skeat, i. 90. ¶ I shall here venture my guess. Perhaps hierlekin may have been of O. Low German origin; thus O. Frisian helle kin (A. S. helle cyn, Icel. heljar kyn) would mean 'the kindred of hell' or 'the host of hell,' hence a troop of demons. The sense being lost, the O. F. maisnie would be added to keep up the idea of 'host,' turning hierlekin into (apparently) a personal name of a single demon. The change from hellekin to harlequin, &c., arose from a popular etymology which connected the word with Charles Quint (Charles V.); see the story in Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 581.

HARLOT, a wanton woman. (F.) Orig. used of either sex indifferently; in fact, more commonly of men in Mid. Eng. It has not, either, a very bad sense, and means little more than 'fellow.' 'He was a gentil harlot and a kind;' Chaucer, C. T. 649. 'A sturdy harlot [a stout fellow] wente hem ay behind;' id. 7336. 'Dauwe the dykere with a dosen harlotes of portours and pykeporres and pylede toth-drawers' = Davy the ditcher with a dozen fellows who were porters and pick-purses and hairless (?) tooth-drawers; P. Plowman, C. vii. 369. 'Begge as on harlot' = beg like a vagabond, Ancren Riwe, p. 356. Undoubtedly of Romance origin. — O. F. arlot (probably once harlot), explained by Roquefort as 'fripon, coquin, voleur,' a vagabond, a robber; also spelt herlot, for which Diez gives a reference to the Romance of Tristan, i. 173. β . The Prov. arlot, a vagabond, occurs in a poem of the 13th century; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale, 207. 20. Florio explains Ital. arlotto by 'a lack-Latin, a hedge-priest,' and arlotia as a harlot in the modern E. sense. Ducange explains Low Lat. arlotus to mean a glutton.

γ . Of disputed origin, but presumably Teutonic, viz. from the O. H. G. harl, a man. This is a well-known word, appearing also as Icel. harl, a man, fellow, A. S. ceorl, a man, and in the mod. E. churl; see Churl. The suffix is the usual F. dimin. suffix -ot, as in bill-of from bille; see Brachet's Dict. § 281; it also appears in the E. personal name Charlotte, which is probably the very same word. We actually find the whole word carlot in Shak. As You Like It, iii. 5. 108. Note also the form Arletta, said to have been the name of the mother of William I. ¶ We find also W. herlod, a stripling, lad; but this is merely the E. word borrowed; the Cornish not only borrowed the E. harlot unchanged (with the sense of 'rogue'), but also the word harlutry, corruption, which is plainly the M. E. harlotrie, with a suffix (-rie) which is extremely common in French. See Williams, Cornish Lexicon, p. 211. Der. harlot-ry = M. E. harlotrie, of which one meaning was 'ribald talk;' see Chaucer, C. T. 563, 3147. The suffix -ry is of F. origin, as in caval-ry, bribe-ry, &c.

HARM, injury, wrong. (E.) M. E. harm, P. Plowman, C. xvi. 113; spelt herm, Ancren Riwe, p. 116. — A. S. hearm, herm, grief of mind, also harm, injury; Grein, ii. 60. + Icel. harmr, grief. + Dan. harne, wrath. + Swed. harm, anger, grief, pity. + G. harm, grief. β . Cf. Russ. srame, shame; Skt. grama, toil, fatigue. The latter is from the vb. gram, to exert one's self, toil, be weary. — γ . KRAM, or KARM, to be tired; whence some derive also Lat. clemens, and E. clement (Fick, l. 48). Der. harm, verb, M. E. harmen, spelt hearmen in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 263, l. 7; harm-ful, Wyclif, Prov. i. 22; harm-ful-ly, harm-ful-ness; harm-less = M. E. harmles, Will. of Palerne, 1671; harm-less-ly, harm-less-ness.

HARMONY, concord, esp. of sounds. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. harmonie, Gower, C. A. iii. 90. 'There is a melodye in heauen, whiche clerkes clepen armony;' Testament of Love, in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. cccl. col. 2. — F. harmonie. — Lat. harmonia = Gk. ἀρμονία, a joint, joining, proportion, harmony. — Gk. ἀρμός, a fitting, joining. — Gk. ἀρμω (fut. ἀρῶ), to fit, join together. — γ . AR, to fit; whence also E. arm, article, &c. Der. harmon-ic, Milton, P. L. iv. 689; harmoni-cs, harmoni-c-al, harmoni-c-al-ly; harmoni-ous, Temp. iv. 119; harmoni-ous-ly, harmoni-ous-ness; harmon-ise (Cudworth), harmon-is-er, harmon-ist, harmoni-um (about A. D. 1841).

HARNESS, equipment for a horse. (F., — C.) In old books, it almost always means body-armour for soldiers; 1 Kings, xx. 11; &c. M. E. harnes, harneys, Chaucer, C. T. 1613; spelt herneys, P. Plowman, B. xv. 215. 'He dude quyk harnesche hors' = he commanded horses to be quickly harnessed, King Alisaunder, 4708. — O. F. harnas, harnois, hernois, armour. — Bret. harnes, old iron; also armour. — Bret. houarn (pl. hern), iron; cognate with W. haiarn, Gael. iarnun, Irish iaran, iron. See Iron. ¶ The G. harnisch, Du. harnas, &c., are borrowed from French. Der. harness, verb, = O. F. harnascher.

HARP, a stringed musical instrument. (E.) M. E. harpe, Gower, C. A. iii. 301; Layamon, 4898. — A. S. hearpe, Grein, ii. 62; and see Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxv. § 6 (b. iii. met. 12). + Du. harp. + Icel. harpa. + Swed. harpa. + Dan. harpe. + G. harfe, O. H. G. harpha.

β . Root unknown; but perhaps connected with Lat. crepare, to crackle, crabro, a hornet; if so, it orig. meant 'loud-sounding.' ¶ There is no pretence for connecting it, as usual, with Gk. ἀρμή, meaning 'a sickle,' or 'a bird of prey.' See note to Harpoon. Der. harp-er = A. S. hearpere, in Ælfred, as above; harp, verb, A. S. hearpan, id.; also harpsichord, q. v.

HARPOON, a dart for striking whales. (Du., — F.) 'Some fish with harpons' (late edd. harpoons), Dryden, Art of Love, 875. The dart is also called 'a harping-iron.' Harpon is the F., harpoon the Du. form. — Du. harpon (pron. like E. harpoon), 'a harping-iron;' Sewel. — F. harpon, orig. 'a crampiron wherewith masons fasten stones together' (Cotgrave); hence, a grappling-iron. — O. F. harpe,

'a dog's claw or paw'; Cot.; cf. 'se harper l'un à l'autre, to grapple, grasp, hasp, clasp, embrace, cope, close together, to scuffle or fall together by the ears'; id. Cf. Span. arpon, a harpoon, arpo, a grappling-iron, arpar, to tear to pieces, rend, claw. Also Ital. arpagone, a harpoon, arpese, a cramp-iron, clamp, arpicare, to clamber up, arpino, a hook, arpione, a hinge, pivot, hook, tenter. β . The notion of 'grappling' seems to underlie all these words; but the origin is by no means clear; Littré cites an O. H. G. harfan, to seize, which Scheller spells hrepān; this seems to be nothing but mod. G. raffen, to snatch up; and I doubt its being the true source. γ . Surely the Ital. arpagone is nothing but the Lat. acc. harpagōnem; I suppose the base harp- to be no other than that which appears in Lat. harpago, a hook, grappling-iron, harpaga, a hook, and harpax, rapacious; all words borrowed from Gk.; cf. Gk. ἀρπᾶγς, a hook, rake, ἀρπάζειν, rapacious, ἀρπάζειν, a bird of prey, all from the base API in ἀρπάζειν, to snatch, tear, ravish away; the true form of the root being RAP, as in Lat. rapere, to seize. See HARPY. η Diez identifies F. harpe, a dog's claw, with F. harpe, a harp, on the plea that the harp was probably 'hook-shaped'; of which there is no proof. Der. harpoon-er.

HARPSICHORD, an old harp-shaped instrument of music. (F.) Also spelt harpiscon or harpsecol. 'On the harpiscon or virginals'; Parthenia Sacra, ed. 1633, p. 144 (Todd). 'Harpsechord or Harpsecol, a musical instrument'; Kersey. Spelt harpsechord in Minshew, ed. 1627. The corrupt forms of the word are not easy to explain; in particular, the letter s seems to have been a mere intrusion.—O. F. harpechorde, 'an arpsichord or harpsichord'; Cot. Compound of O. F. harpe, a harp (from a Teutonic source); and chorde, more commonly corde, a string. See Harp, Chord, and Cord.

HARPY, a mythological monster, half bird and half woman. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 3. 83.—O. F. harpie, or harpie, 'a harpy'; Cot.—Lat. harpia, chiefly used in pl. harpiaie, Verg. Æn. iii. 226.—Gk. pl. ἀρπυιαι, harpies; lit. 'the spoilers.'—Gk. ἀρπάζειν, the base of ἀρπάζειν, to seize; cognate with Lat. rap-, the base of rapere, to seize. See Rapacious.

HARQUEBUS, the same as Arquebus, q. v.

HARRIDAN, a worn-out wanton woman. (F.) In Pope, Macer, a Character, l. 24. It is a variant of O. F. haridelle, which Cot. explains by 'a poor tit, or leane ill-favored jade'; i. e. a worn-out horse. Probably connected with O. F. harer, to set a dog on a beast, hence, to drive, urge. See Harass. [\dagger]

HARRIER (1), a hare-hound. (E.) Formerly harier, more correctly. So spelt in Minshew, ed. 1627. The word occurs also in Blount, Ancient Tenures, p. 39 (Todd). Formed from hare, with suffix -ier; cf. bow-yer from bow, law-yer from law.

HARRIER (2), a kind of buzzard. (E.) Named from its harrying or destroying small birds. See Harry.

HARROW, a frame of wood, fitted with spikes, used for breaking the soil. (E.) M. E. harwe, P. Plowman, B. xix. 268; spelt haru, harow, harwe, Cursor Mundi, 12388. A. S. hearge, a harrow (in a gloss). 'Herculus, hearge'; Wright's Voc. ii. 43, col. 2. + Du. hark, a rake. + Icel. herfi, a harrow. + Dan. harv, a harrow; harve, to harrow. + Swed. harka, a rake; harka, to rake; harf, a harrow; harfva, to harrow. + G. härke, a rake (Flügel); harken, to rake. Root unknown; cf. Gk. ἄρπης, a peg, pin, skewer. η The F. herce, a harrow, is a different word; see Hearse. Der. harrow, verb, M. E. harwen, P. Plowman, C. vi. 19.

HARRY, to ravage, plunder, lay waste. (E.) Also written harrow, but this is chiefly confined to the phrase 'the Harrowing of Hell,' i. e. the despoiling of hell by Christ. M. E. herzien, later herien, herwen, harwen. 'By him that harwed helle'; Chaucer, C. T. 3512. 'He that heried helle'; Will. of Palerne, 3725.—A. S. hergian, to lay waste, Grein, ii. 38. Lit. to 'over-run with an army'; cognate with Icel. herja, Dan. heerge, to ravage.—A. S. herg-, which appears in herg-es, gen. case of here, an army, a word particularly used in the sense of 'destroying host'; Grein, ii. 35. β . The A. S. here is cognate with Icel. herr, Dan. hær, Swed. här, G. heer, and Goth. harjis, a host, army; all from European base HARJA, an army, from Europ. root HAR, to destroy, answering to Aryan $\sqrt{\text{KAR}}$, to destroy; cf. Skt. krī, to hurt, wound, krīna, wasted, decayed; Lithuan. karas, war, army. Der. harrier (2).

HARSH, rough, bitter, severe. (Scand.) M. E. harsk, rough to the touch, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1084. 'Harske, or haske, as sundry frutys'; Prompt. Parv.—Dan. harsh, rancid; Swed. härsk, rank, rancid, rusty; O. Swed. harsk (Ihre). + G. harsch, harsh, rough. β . Cf. Lithuan. kartus, harsh, bitter (of taste); Skt. katu, pungent, krit, to cut. Der. harsh-ly, harsh-ness.

HART, a stag, male deer. (E.) M. E. hart, Chaucer, C. T. 11503; spelt heort, Layamon, 26762.—A. S. heort, heort, Grein, ii. 69. + Du. hert. + Icel. hjórt. + Dan. hiort. + Swed. hjort. + G. hirsch, O. H. G. hiruz.

β . These answer to a European type HERUTA η

(Fick, iii. 67), from a shorter HERU; the latter corresponds to Lat. ceruus, a hart, W. caru, a hart, stag, and these are again expansions from the base KAR which appears in the Gk. κέρας, a horn, and is related to E. horn. The orig. sense is 'horned animal.' See further under Horn. Der. harts-horn, so called because the horns of the hart abound with ammonia; harts-tongue.

HARVEST, the ingathering of crops, the produce of labour. (E.) Sometimes used in the sense of 'autumn'; see Wyclif, Jude, 12; Shak. Temp. iv. 116. M. E. heruest (with u for o), P. Plowman, B. vi. 292, 301.—A. S. harfest, autumn, Grein, ii. 24; the orig. sense being 'crop.' + Du. herfst, autumn. + Icel. haust, autumn (contracted form). + Dan. høst, harvest, crop (contr. form). + Swed. höst, autumn (contr. form). + G. herbst, autumn, harvest; M. H. G. herbest, O. H. G. herpist.

β . All with a suffix -as-ta from Teut. base harp-, equivalent to the base warp- of the cognate Gk. καρπός, fruit.— $\sqrt{\text{KARP}}$, to seize; as in Lat. carp-ere, to pluck, gather. γ . This root is perhaps related to $\sqrt{\text{SKARP}}$, to cut; see Sharp. Der. harvest, verb; harvest-er; harvest-home, 1 Hen. IV, i. 3. 35; harvest-man, Cor. i. 3. 39; harvest-moon, harvest-time. From the same root, ex-cerpt.

HASH, a dish of meat cut into small slices. (F.,—G.) 'Hash, cold meat cut into slices and heated again with spice, &c.' Kersey, ed. 1715. An abbreviation of an older form hachey or hachee, in Cotgrave.—O. F. hachis, 'a hachey, or hachee; a sliced gallinaufrey or minced meat'; Cot.—O. F. hacher, 'to hack, shread, slice'; id.—G. hacken, to hack; cognate with E. hack. See Hack. η In E., the sb. is older than the vb. to hash; conversely in F. Der. hash, vb.; and see hatch (3).

HASPE, a clasp. (E.) M. E. haspe, Chaucer, C. T. 3470. 'Hespe of a dore, pessulum; Prompt. Parv. [Haspe stands for haspe, by the same change as in clasp from M. E. clapsen, aspen from A. S. æps.]—A. S. hæspe, as a gloss to sera (a bolt, bar), in Wright's Voc. i. 81, col. 1. + Icel. hespa. + Dan. haspe, a hasp, reel. + Swed. haspe, a hasp. + G. haspe, a hasp; haspel, a staple, reel, windlass; cf. Du. haspel, a windlass, reel. β . All from an old Teut. base HAP-SA, in which the suffix may be compared with that in A. S. rædel-s (for rædel-sa), a riddle. The orig. sense 'that which fits'; cf. A. S. gehap, fit; and see Hap.

HASSOCK, a stuffed mat for kneeling on in church. (C.) 'Hassock, a straw-cushion us'd to kneel upon'; Kersey, ed. 1715. Also in Phillips, New World of Words, 1706, in the same sense; see Trench, Select Glossary. So called from the coarse grass of which it was made; M. E. hassok. 'Hassok, ulphus'; Prompt. Parv.; see Way's Note, showing the word to be in use A. D. 1147; whilst in 1465 there is mention of 'segges, soddes, et hassokes' = sedges, sods, and hassocks. Forby explains Norfolk hassock as 'coarse grass, which grows in rank tufts on boggy ground.' β . In this case, the suffix answers rather to W. -og than to the usual E. dimin. suffix; the W. -og being used to form adjectives, as in goludog, wealthy, from golud, wealth. The orig. signification of the word is 'sedg-y', the form being adjectival.—W. hesg-og, sedgy, from hesg, s. pl. sedges; cf. W. hesgyn, a sieve, hesor, a hassock, pad. Cf. also Corn. hescon, a bulrush, sedge, reed; and (since the W. initial h stands frequently for s) also Irish seisg, a sedge, bog-reed. Thus hassock (= sedg-y) is co-radicate with sedge. See Sedge.

HASTATE, shaped like the head of a halberd. (Lat.) Modern, and botanical.—Lat. hastatus, spear-like, formed from hasta, a spear, which is co-radicate with E. goad. See Goad.

HASTE, HASTEN, to go speedily; Haste, speed. (Scand.) The form hasten appears to be nothing more than the old infin. mood of the verb; the pt. t. and pp. hastened (or hastned) do not occur in early authors; perhaps the earliest example is that of the pp. hastened in Spenser, Shep. Kal., May, 152. Strictly speaking, the form haste (pt. t. hasted) is much to be preferred, and is commoner than hasten both in Shak. and in the A. V. of the Bible. M. E. hasten (pt. t. hastede), where the n is merely the sign of the infin. mood, and was readily dropped. Thus Gower has: 'Cupide . . . Seih [saw] Phebus hasten him so sore, And, for he shulde him haste more, . . . A dart throughout his hert he caste'; C. A. i. 336. 'To hasten hem'; Chaucer, C. T. 8854. 'But hasteth yow' = make haste, id. 17383. 'He hasteth wel that wysly can abyde; and in wikked haste is no profit'; id., Six-text, B. 2244.

β . It is hard to say whether the vb. or sb. first came into use in English; perhaps the earliest example is in the phr. in hast = in haste; K. Alisaunder, 3264. Neither are found in A. S.—O. Swed. hasta, to haste; hast, haste (Ihre); Dan. haste, to haste; hast, haste. + O. Fries. hast, haste. + Du. haasten, to haste; haast, haste. + G. hasten, to haste; hast, haste (not perhaps old in G.).

γ . The base appears to be HAS, corresponding to $\sqrt{\text{KAS}}$, whence Skt. cas (for cas), to jump, bound along (Benfey). See Hare. The suffix -ta is prob. used to form a sb., as in trus-ta (base traus-ta); and the verb was formed from the sb. Der. hast-y

(from the sb.; cf. Swed. and Dan. hastig, Du. haastig, O. Fries. hastich, hastig), Will. of Palerne, 475; hast-i-ly, hast-i-ness. We also find M. E. hastif, hasty, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii. 520; this is from O. F. hastif, adj. formed from the O. F. haste (mod. F. hâte), haste, which was borrowed from the Teutonic.

HAT, a covering for the head. (E.) M. E. hat, Chaucer, C. T. 472, 1390. — A. S. hat; 'Galerus, vel pileus, fellen hat;' Wright's Vocab. i. 22, col. 1; 'Calamanca, hat;' id. i. 41, col. 1. + Icel. hatt. + Swed. hatt. + Dan. hat. β. Prob. connected with Lat. cassis (base cad), a helmet, from the base KAD, shortened form of ✓SKAD, to cover; cf. Skt. chhad, to cover. ¶ Not to be confused with G. hut, which is cognate with E. hood. Der. hatt-er, hat-band (Minsheu).

HATCH (1), a half-door, wicket. (E.) A word presenting some difficulty. 'Leap the hatch;' King Lear, iii. 6. 76. It is the same as North of E. heck, an enclosure of open-work, of slender bars of wood, a hay-rack, the bolt or bar of a door; a heck-door is a door only partly panelled, the rest being latticed (Halliwell); cf. Lowland Sc. hack or heck, a rack for cattle, a frame for cheeses (Jamieson). It seems to have been specially used of anything made with cross-bars of wood. Palsgrave has: 'Hatche of a door, hecg.' In a 15th-cent. vocabulary we find: 'Hoc osticulum, a hatche;' Wright's Vocab. i. 261, col. 1. [The form hatch is prob. E.; the form heck is Scand.] — A. S. haca, the bolt of a door, a bar; a rare word, found in a gloss (Leo); whence probably a form hæce, for which the dictionaries give no reference. + Du. hek, a fence, rail, gate. + Swed. häck, a coop, a rack. + Dan. hæk, hække, a rack; cf. hækkebuur, a breeding-cage. β. All, probably, from the same source as hook; the name seems to have been given to various contrivances made of light rails or bars fastened or 'hooked' together; cf. prov. E. hatch, to fasten (Halliwell); and see Shak. Per. iv. 2. 37. But the word remains obscure. See note to Hatch (2), and see Hook. Der. hatch (2), q. v., hatch-er, q. v.; also hatch-way. [†]

HATCH (2), to produce a brood by incubation. (E.) M. F. hachen. 'This bird [this bird] . . . hopith for to hache;' Richard the Redeles, Pass. iii. l. 44. Not found earlier, but formed from the sb. hatch discussed above. β. To hatch birds is to produce them under a hatch or coop. Thus, from Swed. häck, a coop, is formed the verb håcka, to hatch, to breed; and from Dan. hække, a rack, is formed hækkebuur, a breeding-cage (lit. a hatch-bower), and hække-fugl, a breeder (lit. a hatch-fowl). In German, we have hecken, to hatch, from the sb. hecke, a breeding-cage. ¶ The G. hecke also means a hedge, but its connection with E. hedge is not at all certain; the words for hatch and hedge seem to have been confused, though probably from different sources. Hence much of the difficulty of tracing the word clearly.

HATCH (3), to shade by minute lines, crossing each other, in drawing and engraving. (F., -G.) 'Hatch, to draw small strokes with a pen;' Kersey, ed. 1715. A certain kind of ornamentation on a sword-hilt was called hatching; hence 'hatched in silver,' Shak. Troil. i. 3. 65; 'my sword well hatched;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Bonduca, ii. 2. — F. hacher, 'to hack, . . . also to hatch a hilt;' Cot. — G. hacken, to cut; cognate with E. hack. See Hack (1), and Hash. Der. hatch-ing (perhaps sometimes confused with etching); and see hatch-et.

HATCHES, a frame of cross-bars laid over an opening in a ship's deck. (E.) M. E. haches, Chaucer, Good Women, 648; Will. of Palerne, 2770. Merely the pl. of Hatch (1), q. v. Der. hatch-way, from the sing. hatch.

HATCHET, a small axe. (F., -G.) M. E. hachet. 'Axe other [or] hatchet;' P. Plowman, B. iii. 304. — F. hachette, 'a hatchet, or small axe;' Cot. Dimin. of F. hache, 'an axe;' id. — F. hacher, to hack; see Hatch (3).

HATCHMENT, the escutcheon of a deceased person, publicly displayed. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hamlet, iv. 5. 214. Well known to be a corruption of atch'ment, the shortened form of achievement (mod. E. achievement), the heraldic name for the same thing. Dryden uses achievement in the true heraldic sense; Palamon and Arcite, l. 1620. See Achieve.

HATE, extreme dislike, detestation; to detest. (E.) A. The sb. is M. E. hate, Chaucer, C. T. 14506. — A. S. hete, Grein, ii. 39; the mod. E. sb. takes the vowel a from the verb; see further. + Du. haat. + Icel. hatr. + Swed. hat. + Dan. had. + Goth. hatis. + G. hass. β. All from a Teutonic base HAT, which Fick (iii. 60) connects with E. hunt, with the notion of 'pursue.' The form of the root is KAD; cf. W. cas, hateful, casau, to hate. B. The verb is M. E. hatien, haten. 'Alle ydel ich hatye' = all idle men I hate; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 225. — A. S. hatian, Grein, ii. 18. + Du. haten. + Icel. hata. + Swed. hata. + Dan. hade. + Goth. hatjan, hatan. + G. hassen. Der. hat-er; hateful, Chaucer, C. T. 8608, hateful-ly, hateful-ness; also hat-red, q. v.; from the same source, heinous, q. v.

HATRED, extreme dislike. (E.) M. E. hatred, P. Plowman, B. iii. 140; fuller form hatreden, Pricke of Conscience, 3363. Not found in A. S.; but the suffix is the A. S. suffix -ræden, signifying 'law,' 'mode,' or 'condition,' which appears in frædræden, friendship (Gen. xxxvii. 4), &c.; see Kindred. And see Hate.

HAUBERK, a coat of ringed mail. (F., -O. H. G.) Orig. armour for the neck, as the name implies. M. E. hauberik, Chaucer, C. T. 2433; hauberik, King Alisaunder, 2372. — O. F. hauberc, older form halberc (Burgundy). — O. H. G. halsberc, halsberge, a hauberk. — O. H. G. hals (G. hals), the neck, cognate with A. S. heals, Lat. collum, the neck; and O. H. G. bergan, perkan, to protect, cognate with A. S. beorgan, to protect, hide. See Collar and Bury. Der. haubergeon, q. v.

HAUGHTY, proud, arrogant. (F., -L.) a. The spelling with gh is a mistake, as the word is not E.; it is a corruption of M. E. hautein, loud, arrogant. 'I peine me to haue a hautein speech' = I endeavour to speak loudly; Chaucer, C. T. 12264. 'Myn hauteyn herte' = my proud heart; Will. of Palerne, 472. β. The corruption arose from the use of the adj. with the E. suffix -ness, producing a form hautein-ness, but generally written hautesness, and easily misdivided into hauti-ness. 'For heo [she, i. e. Cordelia] was best and fairest, and to hautesness drew lest' [drew least]; Rob. of Glouc. p. 29. — O. F. hautain, also spelt haultain by Cotgrave, who explains it by 'hauty, proud, arrogant.' — O. F. haut, formerly halt, high, lofty; with suffix -ain = Lat. -anus. — Lat. altus, high; see Altitude. Der. haughti-ly; haughti-ness (put for hautin-ness = hautein-ness, as explained above).

HAULM, HALM, HAUM, the stem or stalk of grain. (E.) Little used, but an excellent E. word. 'The haume is the strawe of the wheat or the rie;' Tusser's Husbandry, sect. 57, st. 15 (E. D. S.). 'Halm, or stobyl [stubble], Stipula;' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. healm; in the compound healm-straw, lit. haulm-straw, used to translate Lat. stipulam in Ps. lxxxii. 12, ed. Spelman. + Du. halm, stalk, straw. + Icel. hálmr. + Dan. and Swed. halm. + Russ. soloma, straw. + Lat. culmus, a stalk; calamus, a reed (perhaps borrowed from Gk.) + Gk. κάλamos, a reed; καλαμή, a stalk or straw of corn. β. From the same root as Culminate, q. v.

HAUNCH, the hip, bend of the thigh. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. hanche, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1100; spelt haunche, Ancrens Riwele, 280. — F. hanche, 'the haunch or hip;' Cot. Cf. Span. and Ital. anca, the haunch; the F. word was also sometimes spelt anche (Cotgrave), the h being unoriginal. — O. H. G. enchá, einchá (according to Diez, also ancha), the leg; allied to O. H. G. enchila, the ancle, and E. ancle. β. The orig. sense is 'joint' or 'bend;' cf. Gk. ἄγκυς, the bent arm; and see Ancle, Anchor.

HAUNT, to frequent. (F.) M. E. haunten, hanten, to frequent, use, employ. 'That haunten folie' = who were ever after folly; Chaucer, C. T. 12398. 'We haunten none tauernes' = we frequent no taverns; Pierce Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 106. 'Haunted Maumetrie' = practised Mohammedanism, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 320. The earliest use of the word is in Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 25, l. 15. — O. F. hanter, 'to haunt, frequent, resort unto;' Cot. β. Origin unknown, and much disputed. Suggestions are: (1) Icel. heimta, lit. to fetch home, to draw, claim, recover; but neither form nor sense suits; (2) Bret. hent, a path; (3) a nasalised form of Lat. habitare, to dwell (Littré); (4) a Low Lat. form ambitare (not found), to go about, from Lat. ambitus, a going about (Scheler). The last seems to me the most likely; there are many such formations in F. Der. haunt, sb.

HAUTBOY, a kind of musical instrument. (F., -L. and Scand.) Also called oboe, the Ital. name. In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 351; where the old edd. have hoebuy. Spelt hau'boy (sic) in Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry, where the Lat. has tibia; Ars Poet. 202. Spelt hobois, hoboy in Cotgrave. — O. F. hautbois (or hautbois), 'a hoboïs, or hoboy;' Cot. — O. F. haut, later haut, high, from Lat. altus, high; and F. bois = Low Lat. boscus, a bush. See Altitude and Bush. Thus the lit. sense is 'high wood;' the hautboy being a wooden instrument of a high tone. Doublet, oboe.

HAVE, to possess, hold. (E.) M. E. hauen, pt. t. hadde, pp. had (common). — A. S. habban, pt. t. hæfde, pp. gehaefde. + Du. hebben. + Icel. hafa. + Swed. hafva. + Dan. have. + Goth. haban. + G. haben. β. All from the Teut. base HAB; Fick, iii. 63. Allied to Lat. capere, to seize, hold; Gk. ἔχω, a handle; W. caffael, to get (Rhys). — ✓KAP, to seize, hold; Fick, i. 518. Der. haft, q. v.; perhaps haven, q. v., hawk, q. v.; from the same root, cap-acious, and numerous other words; see Capacious.

HAVEN, an inlet of the sea, harbour, port. (E.) M. E. hauen (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 409; spelt haueue, Layamon, 8566. — A. S. hæfene (acc. hæfenan), A. S. Chron. an. 1031. + Du. haven. + Icel. höfn. + Dan. havn. + Swed. hamn. + G. hafen. β. Allied to A. S. haf (Grein, ii. 19), Icel. and Swed. haf, Dan. hav, the open sea, main; we also find O. H. G. haba in the sense, not only of 'possessions,' but of 'the sea.' γ . From the Teut. base HAB, (A. S. habban, Goth. haban), to have, hold; the haven being that which contains ships, and the deep sea being capacious or all-containing. See HAVE.

HAVERSACK, a soldier's bag for provisions. (F., -G.) Lit. 'oat-bag' or 'oat-sack.' A late importation. It occurs in Smollett's tr. of Gil Blas, b. ii. c. 8 (R.) = F. havresac, a haversack, knapsack (Hamilton). -G. Haversack, haversack, a sack for oats. -G. haber, hafer, oats (cognate with Icel. hafir, Du. haver, Swed. hafre, Dan. havre, oats), from M. H. G. habere, O. H. G. habaro, oats; and G. sack, cognate with E. sack. See HAVERDASHER.

HAVOC, general waste, destruction. (E.) 'Cry havoc,' Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 275; Jul. Cæs. iii. 1. 273; 'cries on havoc,' Hamlet v. 2. 375. 'Pell-mell, havoc, and confusion;' 1 Hen. IV. v. 1. 82. Not in early use (in this sense at least). Of uncertain origin. β . The best etymology seems to be that which supposes it to be the A. S. hafoc, a hawk (see HAWK); the chief difficulty being in the late preservation of an A. S. form, esp. when the form hawk was in general use. But it may have been handed down in a popular proverb, without remembrance of the meaning; the phrase 'cry havoc!' (like Skelton's 'ware the hawke') seems to have been a popular exclamation, and has been supposed to have been orig. a term in hawking. The form hauek (havek) in the sense of 'hawk' occurs as late as about A. D. 1200, in Layamon, 3258. γ . Others derive it from W. hafoc, havoc, destruction; this would, of course, be right, were it not for the probability that this W. word is but the E. word borrowed; a probability which is strengthened by observing that there is a true W. word hafoc, meaning 'abundant,' or 'common,' allied to W. hafug, abundance. Der. havoc, verb (rare), Hen. V. i. 2. 173, where a cat is said 'to tear and havoc more than she can eat.'

HAW, a hedge; a berry of the haw-thorn. (E.) The sense of 'inclosure' or 'hedge' is the orig. one. In the sense of 'berry,' the word is really a short form for haw-berry or hawthorn-berry; still it is of early use in this transferred sense. M. E. hawe. Chaucer uses hawe, lit. a haw-berry, to signify anything of no value, C. T. 6241; but he also has it in the orig. sense. 'And eke ther was a polkat in his hawe' = there was a polecat in his yard; C. T. 12789. -A. S. haga, an enclosure, yard, house, Grein, ii. 5; whence the usual change to later hage, haze, hawe, by rule. + Icel. hagi, a hedged field, a pasture. + Swed. hage, an enclosed pasture-ground. + Dan. have [for hage], a garden. + Du. haag, a hedge; whence 's Gravenhage', i. e. the count's garden, the place called by us the Hague. + G. hag, a fence, hedge; whence the deriv. hagen, a grove, now shortened to hain.

β . All from the Teut. base HAG, to surround. - γ KAK, to surround; cf. Skt. kach, kachch, to bind, kakshya, a girdle, an enclosed court; from the same root is Lat. cingere, to surround, and E. cincture. See CINCTURE. Der. haw-haw, a sunk fence, a word formed by reduplication; haw-finch; haw-thorn = A. S. hægborn, which occurs as a gloss to alba spina, Wright's Vocab. i. 33, col. 2. Also hedge, q. v.

HAWK (1), a bird of prey. (E.) M. E. hawk, Chaucer, C. T. 4132, 5997. Earlier hæwek (= havek), Layamon, 3258. -A. S. hafoc, more commonly hafoc, Grein, ii. 42. + Du. havic. + Icel. haukr. + Swed. hök. + Dan. høg. + G. habicht, O. H. G. hapuh. β . All probably from the Teut. base HAB, to seize, hold; see HAVE, and cf. Lat. capere. Der. hawk, verb, M. E. hauken, Chaucer, C. T. 7957; hawk-er.

HAWK (2), to carry about for sale. (O. Low G.) Not in early use. Rich. quotes from Swift, A Friendly Apology, the line: 'To hear his praises hawk'd about.' The verb is a mere development from the sb. hawker, which is an older word. See HAWKER.

HAWK (3), to force up phlegm from the throat, to clear the throat. (W.) 'Without hawking or spitting;' As You Like It, v. 3. 12. -W. hœchi, to throw up phlegm; hœch, the throwing up of phlegm. Apparently an imitative word.

HAWKER, one who carries about goods for sale, a pedlar. (O. Low G.) Minshew tells us that the word was in use in the reign of Hen. VIII; it is much older, in E., than the verb to hawk. 'Hawkers, be certain deceitful fellows, that goe from place to place buying and selling brasse, pewter, and other merchandise, that ought to be vittered in open market . . . You finde the word An. 25 Hen. VIII, cap. 6, and An. 33 eiusdem, cap. 4;' Minshew. 'Those people which go up and down the streets crying newsbooks and selling them by retail, are also called Hawkers;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The earliest trace of the word is in P. Plowman, B. v. 227, where the trade of the pedlar is denoted by hokkerya, spelt also hukkerye and hukrie; shewing that the base of the word is the same as that of the word huckster.

β . A word introduced from the Netherlands; cf. O. Du. heukeren, to sell by retail, to huckster; heukelaar, a huckster, retailer (Sewel). We find also Dan. høker, a chandler, huckster, høkere, a hawk's trade, høkere, to hawk; Swed. hökert, higgling, høkare, a chandler, cheesemonger. Also G. hökler, a retailer of goods. See further under HUCKSTER.

HAWSER, HALSER, a small cable. (Scand.) 'Hawser, a three-strand [three-strand?] rope, or small cable. Hawsers, two large round holes in a ship under the beak, through which the cables pass when the ship lies at anchor;' Kersey, ed. 1715. In Sherwood's index to Cotgrave, halser means a tow-rope by which boats are drawn along. In Grafton's Chron., Rich. III, an. 3, we read: 'He wayed up his ancors and halsed up his sayles.' Like many sea-terms, it is of Scand. origin. Both the sb. hawser and the verb to halse are formed from halse, sb. the orig. form of hawse, used as a sea-term. -Icel. hals, hals, the neck; also (as a sea-term), part of the bow of a ship or boat; also, the front sheet of a sail, the tack of a sail, the end of a rope; whence the verb halsla, to clew up a sail. + Dan. hals, the neck; (as a sea-term) tack; ligge med styrbords halse, to be on the starboard tack; halser! raise tacks and sheets! + Swed. hals, neck, tack. And cf. Du. hals, neck; halsklamp, a hawse-hole. β . Thus the orig. sense is neck, then front of the bow of a ship; then a hole in the front of the bow; whence halser = a rope passing through such a hole; also halse, to clew up a sail, from the Icel. use of the derived verb. γ Not to be confused with hale, haul, hoist, or hoise. As to hals, see HAUBERK. But see Addenda. [*]

HAWTHORN, from haw and thorn; see HAW.

HAY, grass cut and dried. (E.) Formerly used also of uncut growing grass. M. E. hey, hay; Chaucer, C. T. 16963. 'Vpon grene hey' = on green grass; Wyclif, Mark, vi. 39. -A. S. hæg, grass, hay; 'ofer þæt grēne hæg' = on the green grass; Mark, vi. 39. + Du. hooi. + Icel. hey. + Dan. and Swed. hø. + Goth. hawi, grass. + G. heu, M. H. G. houwe, O. H. G. hewi, hay. β . The true sense is 'cut grass'; the sense of 'growing grass' being occasional. The common Teutonic type is HAUVA, from the base HAU of the E. verb to hew, i. e. to cut; Fick, iii. 57. See HEW. Der. hay-cock, hay-maker. (But not M. E. hay-ward, where hay = hedge.)

HAZARD, chance, risk. (F., -Span., -Arab., -Pers.) M. E. hasard, the name of a game of chance, generally played with dice; Chaucer, C. T. 12525. Earlier, in Havelok, 2326. -F. hasard, 'hazard, adventure;' Cot. The orig. sense was certainly 'a game at dice' (Littré). β . We find also Span. azar, an unforeseen accident, hazard, of which the orig. sense must have been 'a die;' O. Ital. zara, 'a game at dice called hazard, also a hazard or a nicke at dice;' Florio. It is plain that F. ha-, Span. a-, answers to the Arab. article al, turned into az by assimilation. Thus the F. word is from Span., and the Span. from Arab. al zār, the die, a word only found in the vulgar speech; see Devic's Supplement to Littré. -Pers. zār, a die; Zenker. Der. hazard, verb, hazard-ous.

HAZE, vapour, mist. (Scand.?) Not in early use. The earliest trace of it appears to be in Ray's Collection of Northern-English Words, 1691 (1st ed. 1674). He gives: 'it hazes, it misles, or rains small rain.' As a sb., it is used by Burke, On a Regicide Peace, let. 4 (R.) 'Hazy weather' is in Dampier's Voyages, ed. 1684 (R.) Being a North-Country word, it is probably of Scand. origin. Cf. Icel. hæss, gray, dusky, said of the colour of a wolf; a word certainly related to A. S. hasu, hasu, used to signify a dark gray colour, esp. the colour of a wolf or eagle; whence also hasu-fæg, of a gray colour; see Grein, ii. 14, 15. If this be right, the orig. sense was 'gray,' hence dull, as applied to the weather; and the adj. hazy answers to A. S. haswig-, only found in the compound haswig-feðere, having gray feathers (Grein). γ Mahn suggests the Breton azzen, a vapour, warm wind. Der. haz-y, haz-i-ness.

HAZEL, the name of a tree or shrub. (E.) M. E. hasel. 'The hasel and the haz-borne [haw-thorn]; Gawayne and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, 744. -A. S. hæsel. 'Corilus, hæsel. Saginus, hwit hæsel;' Wright's Vocab. i. 32, col. 1. 'Abellana, hæsl, vel hæsel-hnutu [hazel-nut]; id. 33, col. 2. + Du. hazelaar. + Icel. hasl, hasl. + Dan. and Swed. hassel. + G. hasel; O. H. G. hasala. + Lat. corulus (for cosulus). + W. coll (Rhys). β . All from the base KASALA, root KAS; but the orig. meaning is unknown. Der. hazel-nut = A. S. hæselhnutu, as above; hazel-twigg, Tam. Shrew, ii. 255.

HE, pronoun of the third person. (E.) M. E. he; common. -A. S. hē; declined as follows. Masc. sing. nom. hē; gen. his; dat. him; acc. hine. Fem. sing. nom. hē; gen. and dat. hire; acc. hi. Neut. sing. nom. and acc. hit; gen. his; dat. him. Plural (for all genders); nom. and acc. hī, hig; gen. hira, heora; dat. him, heom. + Du. hij. + Icel. hann. + Dan. and Swed. han. β . The E. and A. S. forms are not connected with the Gothic third personal pronoun is (= G. er), but with the Goth. demonstrative pronoun his, this one, only found in the masc. dat. himma, masc. acc. hina, neut. acc. hita, in the singular number. Cf. Gk. ἐκείνος, ἐκείνος, that one, from a base KI, related to the pronominal base KA. The latter base has an interrogative force; cf. Skt. kas, who, cognate with E. who. See Who.

HEAD, the uppermost part of the body. (E.) M. E. hed, heed; earlier heved (= heved), from which it is contracted. 'His hed was balled' [bald]; Chaucer, C. T. 198. In P. Plowman, B. xvii. 70, it is spelt hed; but in the corresponding passage in C. xx. 70, the various readings are hede, heed, and heuede. — A. S. heafod, Mark, xvi. 24, where the latest MS. has heafed. + Du. hoofd. + Icel. höfuð. + Dan. hoved. + Swed. hufvud. + Goth. haubith. + G. haupt, O. H. G. houbit. + Lat. caput. β. Further allied to Gk. κεφαλή, the head; Skt. kapāla, the skull. From ✓ KAP, but it is uncertain in what sense; perhaps 'to contain'; see HAVE. Der. head, vb.; head-ache, -band (Isa. iii. 20), -dress, -gear, -land, -less, -piece (K. Lear, iii. 2. 26), -quarters, -stall (Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 58), -stone (Zech. iv. 7), -tire (1 Esdras, iii. 6), -way, -wind. Also head-ing, a late word; head-s-man (All's Well, iv. 3. 342); head-y (2 Tim. iii. 4), head-ly, head-i-ness. Also head-long, q. v. Doublet, chief, q. v.

HEADLONG, rashly; rash. (E.) Now often used as an adj., but orig. an adv. M. E. hedling, heedling, hedlynges, hedwedlynges; Wyclif, Deut. xxii. 8; Judg. v. 22; Matt. viii. 32; Luke, viii. 33. 'Heore hors hedlyng mette' = their horses met head to head; King Alisaunder, 2261. The suffix is adverbial, answering to the A. S. suffix -lunga, which occurs in grund-lunga, from the ground. 'Funditus, grundlunga;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Somner (1659); p. 42, l. 4. In this suffix, the l is a mere insertion; the common form being -unga or -inga; as in eall-unga, entirely, fær-inga, suddenly. Again, -unga is an adv. form, made from the common noun-suffix -ung, preserved abundantly in mod. E. in the form -ing, as in the word learn-ing.

HEAL, to make whole. (E.) M. E. helen. 'For he with it coude bothe hele and dere'; i. e. heal and harm; Chaucer, C. T. 10554. — A. S. hēlan, to make whole; very common in the pres. part. hēlend = the healing one, saviour, as a translation of Jesus. Regularly formed from A. S. hāl, whole; see Whole. + Du. heelen, from heel, whole. + Icel. heila, from heill, hale; see Hale. + Dan. hele, from heel, hale. + Swed. hela, from hel. + Goth. hailjan, from hails. + G. heilen, from heil. Der. heal-er, heal-ing; and see Healt.

HEALTH, soundness of body, or of mind. (E.) M. E. helth, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 137. — A. S. hēlþ (acc. hēlþe), Ælfric's Hom. i. 466, l. 8; ii. 396, l. 21. Formed from A. S. hāl, whole; hēlan, to heal. The suffix -þ denotes condition, like Lat. -tas. ¶ Not a very common word in old writers; the more usual form is M. E. hele (P. Plowman, C. vi. 7, 10), from A. S. hēlu, Grein, ii. 22. Der. health-y, health-i-ly, health-i-ness; health-ful, health-ful-ly, health-ful-ness; health-some, Romeo, iv. 3. 34.

HEAP, a pile of things thrown together. (E.) M. E. heep (dat. heepe, hepe), Chaucer, C. T. 577; P. Plowman, B. vi. 190. — A. S. heap, a heap, crowd, multitude, Grein, ii. 56. + Du. hoop. + Icel. höp. + Dan. hob. + Swed. hop. + G. haufe, O. H. G. hufo. + Russ. kupa, a heap, crowd, group. + Lithuanian kaupas, a heap (Fick, iii. 77). β. All from ✓ KUP, which is perhaps the same as Skt. kup, to be excited; the orig. sense seems to be 'tumult'; hence, a swaying crowd, confused multitude, which is the usual sense in M. E. Der. heap, vb., A. S. heāpian, Lu. vi. 38. Doublet, hope (2).

HEAR, to perceive by the ear. (E.) M. E. heren (sometimes huyre), pt. t. herde, pp. herd; Chaucer, C. T. 860, 13448, 1577. — A. S. hýran, hýran, pt. t. hýrde, pp. gehýred; Grein, ii. 132. + Du. hooren. + Icel. heyra. + Dan. høre. + Swed. höra. + Goth. hausjan. + G. hören, O. H. G. hórjan. β. Of uncertain origin; it seems best to connect Gk. ἀκούειν, to hear, with Lat. cavere, to beware, Skt. kavis, a wise man, and the E. show (all from ✓ SKAW), rather than with the Goth. hausjan, E. hear. See Curtius, i. 186. γ. It does not seem possible so to ignore the initial h as to connect it with the word ear, though there is a remarkable similarity in form between Goth. hausjan, to hear, and Goth. auso, the ear. The latter, however, is allied to Lat. audire, which is far removed from E. hear. See Ear. Der. hear-er, hear-ing, hear-say, q. v., hearken, q. v.

HEARKEN, to listen to. (E.) M. E. herken, Chaucer, C. T. 1528. Another form was horknen, id. C. T. 2210. Only the latter is found in A. S. — A. S. hýrcnian (sometimes heorcnian), Grein, ii. 133. Evidently an extended form from hýran, to hear. + O. Du. horknen, horken, harken, to hearken, listen (Oudemans); from Du. hooren, to hear. + G. horken, to hearken, listen, from O. H. G. hórjan (G. hören) to hear. See Hear.

HEARSAY, a saying heard, a rumour. (E.) From hear and say. 'I speake unto you since I came into this country by hearsay. For I heard say that there were some homely thieves,' &c.: Bp. Latimer, Ser. on the Gospel for St. Andrew's Day (R.). The verb say, being the latter of two verbs, is in the infin. mood, as in A. S. 'Ful ofte time I have herd sain;' Gower, C. A. i. 367. 'He . . . secan hýrde' = he heard say, Beowulf, ed. Grein, 875.

HEARSE, a carriage in which the dead are carried to the grave. (F., — L.) Much changed in meaning. M. E. herse, herce. First (perhaps) used by Chaucer: 'Adown I fell when I saw the herse;' Complaint to Pity, st. 3. 'Herce on a dede corce (herce upon dede corcys), Pirama, piramis;' Prompt. Parv. p. 236. Mr. Way's note says: 'This term is derived from a sort of pyramidal candlestick, or frame for supporting lights, called hercia or herpica, from its resemblance in form to a harrow, of which mention occurs as early as the xiith century. It was not, at first, exclusively a part of funeral display, but was used in the solemn services of the holy week . . . Chaucer appears to use the term herse to denote the decorated bier, or funeral pageant, and not exclusively the illumination, which was a part thereof; and towards the 16th century, it had such a general signification alone. Hardyng describes the honours falsely bestowed upon the remains of Richard II. when cloths of gold were offered "upon his hers" by the king and lords;' &c. See the whole note, which is excellent. The changes of sense are (1) a harrow, (2) a triangular frame for lights in a church service, (3) a frame for lights at a funeral, (4) a funeral pageant, (5) a frame on which a body was laid, (6) a carriage for a dead body; the older senses being quite forgotten. — O. F. herce, a harrow, also, a kind of portcullis, that's stuck, as a harrow, full of sharp, strong, and outstanding iron pins [which leads up to the sense of a frame for holding candles]; Cot. Mod. F. herse, Ital. erpice, a harrow. — Lat. hirpicem, acc. of hirpex, a harrow, also spelt irpex. ¶ A remarkable use of the word is in Berners' tr. of Froissart, cap. cxxx, where it is said that, at the battle of Crecy, 'the archers ther stode in maner of a herse,' i. e. drawn up in a triangular form, the old F. harrow being so shaped. See Specimens of English, ed. Skeat, p. 160.

HEART, the organ of the body that circulates the blood. (E.) M. E. herte, properly dissyllabic. 'That dwelled in his hertē sike and sore, Gan failen, when the hertē feltē deth;' Chaucer, C. T. 2806, 2807. — A. S. heorte, fem. (gen. heortan), Grein, ii. 69. + Du. hart. + Icel. hjarta. + Swed. hjeria. + Dan. hierte. + Goth. hairto. + G. herz, O. H. G. herzā. + Irish cridhe. + Russ. serdtse. + Lat. cor (crude form cordi). + Gk. κῆρ, καρδία. + Skt. hrid, hridaya (probably corrupt forms for grīd, grīdaya). β. The Gk. καρδία is also spelt καρδία (Doric) and καρδίη (Ionic); this is connected with καρδαιν, καρδαίνειν, to quiver, shake; the orig. sense being that which quivers, shakes, or beats. — ✓ KARD, to swing about, hop, leap; cf. Skt. kurd, to hop, jump; Fick, i. 47; Benfey, 197. Der. heart-ache, Hamlet, iii. i. 62; heart-blood = M. E. herte blod, Havelok, 1819; heart-breaking, Ant. i. 2. 74; heart-broken, heart-burn, heart-burning, L. L. L. i. x. 280; heart-ease, heart-en, 3 Hen. VI, ii. 2. 79; heart-felt, heart-less = M. E. herteles, Wyclif, Prov. xii. 8; heart-less-ly, heart-less-ness, heart-rending, heart-sick, heart-sickness, heart-whole. Also heart's-ease, q. v., heart-y, q. v.

HEARTH, the floor in a chimney on which the fire is made. (E.) M. E. herth, herthe; a rare word. 'Herthe, where fyre ys made;' Prompt. Parv. — A. S. heorð, as a gloss to foculare; Wright's Vocab. i. 27, col. 1. + Du. haard. + Swed. hård, the hearth of a forge, a forge. + G. herd, a hearth; O. H. G. heri, ground, hearth. β. Perhaps orig. 'a fireplace'; cf. Goth. haurja, burning coals, Lithuan. kurti, to heat an oven (Nesselmann). Der. hearth-stone (in late use).

HEART'S-EASE, a pansy. (E.) 'Hearts-ease, or Pansey, an herb;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Lit. ease of heart, i. e. pleasure-giving. HEARTY, cordial, encouraging. (E.) M. E. herty. 'Herty, cordialis;' Prompt. Parv. An accommodation of the older M. E. herily. '3e han herily hate to oure hole peple' = ye have hearty hate against our whole people; Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, 961. Thus the orig. sense was heart-like. Der. hearti-ly, hearti-ness.

HEAT, great warmth. (E.) M. E. hete, Chaucer, C. T. 16876. — A. S. hætu, hæto; Grein, ii. 24; formed from the adj. hāt, hot. + Dan. hede, heat; from hed, hot. + Swed. hetta, heat; from het, hot. β. The Icel. hiti, heat, Du. hitte, G. hitze, are not precisely parallel forms; but are of a more primitive character. See further under Hot. Der. heat, verb = A. S. hætan, in comp. onhætan, to make hot, formed rather from the adj. hāt, hot, than from the sb.; heat-er.

HEATH, wild open country. (E.) M. E. hethe (but the final e is unoriginal); Chaucer, C. T. 6, 608; spelt heth, P. Plowman, B. xv. 451. — A. S. hæð, Grein, ii. 18. + Du. heide. + Icel. heiðr. + Swed. hed. + Dan. hede. + Goth. haiþi, a waste. + G. heide. + W. coed, a wood. + Lat. -cetum in comp. bu-cetum, a pasture for cows; where bu- is from bos, a cow. β. All from an Aryan base KAITA, signifying a pasture, heath, perhaps 'a clear space'; cf. Skt. chitra, visible. Der. heath-y; also heath-en, q. v., heath-er, q. v. HEATHEN, a pagan, unbeliever. (E.) Simply orig. 'a dweller on a heath'; see Trench, Study of Words; and cf. Lat. paganus, a pagan, lit. a villager, from pagus, a village. The idea is that dwellers in remote districts are among the last to be converted. M. E. heþen. 'Hethene is to mene after heth and vntiled erthe' = heathen takes its sense from heath and untilled land; P. Plowman, B. xv. 451. — A. S. hæðen, a heathen; Grein, ii. 18. — A. S. hæð, a heath. See Heath. β. So also Du. heiden, a heathen, from heide, a heath; Icel. heidinn, from heidr; Swed. heden, from hed; Dan. heden, from hede; Goth. haiþno, a heathen woman, from haiþi; G. heiden, from heide. Der. heathen-dom = A. S. hæðendóm, Grein, ii. 19; heathen-isk, heathen-ish-ly, heathen-ish-ness, heathen-ism.

HEATHER, HEATH, a small evergreen shrub. (E.) So named from its growing upon heaths. Heather is the Northern form, and appears to be nothing more than heath-er = inhabitant of the heath; the former syllable being shortened by the stress and frequency of use. Compare heath-en, in which the suffix is adjectival. See Heath.

HEAVE, to raise, lift or force up. (E.) M. E. heuen (with u for v); Chaucer, C. T. 552; earlier form hebben, Rob. of Glouc., p. 17, l. 8. — A. S. hebban, Grein, ii. 28; pt. t. hóf, pp. hafen; orig. a strong verb, whence the later pt. t. hove, occasionally found. + Du. heffen. + Icel. hefja. + Swed. håfva. + Dan. hæve. + Goth. haffan. + G. heben, O. H. G. heffan. β. Root uncertain; prob. connected with Lat. capere, to seize, and with E. Have, but it is not clear in what manner it is related. Der. heav-er, heave-offering; also heav-y, q. v.

HEAVEN, the dwelling-place of the Deity. (E.) M. E. heuen (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 2563. — A. S. heofon, hiofon, hefon, Grein, ii. 63. + O. Icel. hifinn (mod. Icel. himinn). + O. Sax. hevan (the v being denoted by a crossed b). β. Of unknown origin; a connection with the verb to heave has been suggested, but has not been clearly made out.

HEAVY, hard to heave, weighty. (E.) M. E. heui, heuy (with u = y). Chaucer has heuy and heuinesse; C. T. 11134, 11140. — A. S. hefig, heavy; Grein, ii. 29; lit. 'hard to heave,' from A. S. hebban (= heffan, cf. pt. t. hóf), to heave. + Icel. höfgr, heavy; from hefja, to heave. + O. H. G. hepig, hebig (obsolete), heavy; from hepfan, heffan, to heave. ¶ The shortened sound of the former syllable is the result of stress of accent. Der. heavi-ly; heavi-ness = A. S. hefignes (Grein).

HEBDOMADAL, weekly. (L., — Gk.) 'As for hebdomadal periods or weeks;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 12. § 11. — Lat. hebdomadalis, belonging to a week. — Lat. hebdomad-, stem of hebdomas, a number of seven, a week; with suffix -alis. — Gk. ἑβδομάς, a number of seven, a week; cf. ἑβδομος, seventh. — Gk. ἑβδρά (for σεπτά), seven; cognate with E. seven. See Seven.

HEBREW, a descendant of Abraham. (F., — L., — Gk., — Heb.) In Merch. of Ven. i. 3. 58, 179. — F. hébreu, spelt hébriou in Cotgrave. — Lat. Hebraeus. — Gk. ἑβραῖος. — Heb. ivri, a Hebrew (Gen. xiv. 13); of uncertain origin, but supposed to be applied to Abraham upon his crossing the Euphrates; from Heb. avar, he crossed over. [†]

HECATOMB, a sacrifice of a large number of victims. (F., — L., — Gk.) Lit. a sacrifice of a hundred oxen. In Chapman's tr. of Homer's Iliad, b. i. l. 60. — F. hecatombe; Cot. — Lat. hecatombē. — Gk. ἑκατόμβη, a sacrifice of a hundred oxen; or any large sacrifice. — Gk. ἑκατόν, a hundred, put for ἑν-κατόν, where ἑν is neut. of εἷς, one, and -κατόν is cognate with Skt. çata, Lat. centum, A. S. hund; and βοῦς, an ox, cognate with E. cow. See Hundred and Cow.

HECKLE, HACKLE, HATCHEL, an instrument for dressing flax or hemp. (Du.) M. E. hekele, hechele. 'Hekle, mataxa;' Prompt. Parv. 'I heckell (or hetchyll) flaxe;' Palsgrave. 'Hec mataxa, a hekylle;' Wright's Vocab. i. 269, col. 2. — Du. hekel, a heckle. [The word came to us from the Netherlands.] It is the dimin. of Du. haak, a hook, with dimin. suffix -al and consequent vowel-change. + Dan. æggle, a heckle; from hage, a hook. + Swed. häckla; from hake, a hook. + G. heckel, doublet of häkel, a little hook; from haken, a hook. See Hook. Der. hackle (1), hackle (2), q. v.

HECTIC, continual; applied to a fever. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'My fits are like the fever ectick fits;' Gascoigne, Flowers, The Passion of a Lover, st. 8. Shak. has it as a sb., to mean 'a constitutional fever;' Hamlet, iv. 3. 68. — F. hectique, 'sick of an hectic, or continuall fever;' Cot. — Low Lat. *hecticus, for which I find no authority, but it was doubtless in use as a medical word. — Gk. ἐκτικός, hectic, consumptive (Galen). — Gk. ἔξω, a habit of body; lit. a possession. — Gk. ἔχω, fut. of ἐχέω, to have, possess. — ✓ SAGH, to hold in, stop; whence also Skt. saḥ, to hold in, stop, bear, undergo, endure, &c. Der. hectic, sb.

HECTOR, a bully; as a verb, to bully, to brag. (Gk.) 'The hectoring kill-cow Hercules;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. i. l. 352. From the Gk. Hektor ('Εκτωρ), the celebrated Trojan hero. The lit.

sense of Gk. ἐκτωρ is 'holding fast;' from the Gk. ἐχέω, to hold. See Hectic.

HEDGE, a fence round a field, thicket of bushes. (E.) M. E. hegge, Chaucer, C. T. 15224. — A. S. hege; nom. pl. hegas; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 376, ll. 14, 17. Hege comes from a base hag-ia, formed from hag- with suffix -ia, causing vowel-change of hag- to heg-; i. e. it is a secondary form from A. S. haga, a hedge, preserved in mod. E. in the form haw; see Haw. + Du. hegge, heg, a hedge; from haag, a hedge. + Icel. hegger, a kind of tree used in hedges; from hagi, a hedge (see note in Icel. Dict. p. 774). Der. hedge, verb (Prompt. Parv. p. 232), hedge-bill, hedge-born, 1 Hen. VI. iv. 1. 43; hedge-hog, Temp. ii. 2. 10; hedge-pig, Macb. iv. 1. 2; hedge-priest, L. L. L. v. 2. 545; hedge-row, Milton, L'Allegro, 58; hedge-school; hedge-sparrow, K. Lear, i. 4. 235; also hedge-er, Milton, Comus, 293. [†]

HEED, to take care, attend to. (E.) M. E. heden, pt. t. hedde; Layamon, 17801; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1050 (or 1051). — A. S. hēdan, to take care; pt. t. hēdde; Grein, ii. 29. A weak verb, formed by vowel change from a sb. *hōd, care, not found in A. S. but equivalent to G. hut, O. H. G. huota, heed, watchfulness. + O. Friesic huda, hoda, to heed, protect; from hude, hode, sb. protection. + O. Sax. hōdian, to heed. + Du. hoeden, to heed, guard; from hoede, guard, care, protection. + G. hüten, to protect (O. H. G. huaten), from G. hut (O. H. G. huota, protection). β. For the vowel-change, cf. bleed (A. S. blēdan) from blood (A. S. blōd).

γ. There is a distinction to be made between this A. S. *hōd, care (doubtless a fem. sb.), and A. S. hōd, a hood (doubtless masc.); just as between Du. hoede, fem. heed, and hoed, masc. hood; and again, between G. hut, fem. heed, and hut, masc. a hat. Yet it seems reasonable to refer them to the same root. The notion of 'guarding' is common to both words. See Hood. Der. heed, sb. — M. E. hede, Chaucer, C. T. 305; heed-ful, heed-ful-ly, heed-ful-ness, heed-less, heed-less-ly, heed-less-ness.

HEEL (1), the part of the foot projecting behind. (E.) M. E. heel, heele; Wyclif, John, xiii. 18. — A. S. hēla, the heel; Grein, ii. 30. We find also the gloss: 'Calx, hēla, hōh nipeward' = the heel, the lower part of the heel; Wright's Vocab. i. 283, col. 2. + Du. hiel. + Icel. hæll. + Swed. hæl. + Dan. hæl. β. Probably also the same word with Lat. calx, Gk. λάξ (for κλάξ), the heel; Lithuanian kulnis, the heel; Curtius, i. 451. γ. If so, there is probably a further connection with Lat. -cellere, to strike, occurring in the compound percellere, to strike, smite, the form of the root being KAR. Cf. Skt. kal, to drive; Fick, i. 45. ¶ It is proper to note Grein's theory, viz. that A. S. hēla is a contraction for hōh-ila, with the usual vowel-change from ō (followed by i) to é; this would make the word a diminutive of A. S. hōh, which also means 'the heel,' and is a commoner word. But this seems to set aside the Du. and Scand. forms, and ignores the generally accepted identification of E. heel with Lat. calx. Der. heel-piece.

HEEL (2), to lean over, incline. (E.) α. This is a very corrupt form; the word has lost a final d, and obtained (by compensation) a lengthened vowel. The correct form would be held or hild. M. E. helden, hilden. Palsgrave has: 'I hylde, I leane on the one syde, as a bote or shyp, or any other vessel, ie encline de cousté.' Sytte fast, I rede [advise] you, for the bote begynneth to hylde.' 'Heldyn, or bowyn, inclino, flecto, deflecto;' Prompt. Parv. p. 234; see Way's note. β. The M. E. helden or hilden was frequently transitive, meaning (1) to pour, esp. by tilting a vessel on one side; and (2) intransitively, to heel over, to incline. Wyclif has: 'and whanne the boxe of alabastre was brokun, she helde it [poured it out] on his heed;' Mark, xiv. 3. — A. S. hyldan, heldan, trans. to tilt, incline, intrans. to bow down; Grein, ii. 131. 'Þú gestaðoladest eorðan swá feste, þæt hió on ænige healfre ne heldes' = Thou hast founded the earth so fast, that it will not heel over on any side; Ælfric's Metres, xx. 164. It is a weak verb, formed from the (participial) adjective heald, inclined, bent down, which occurs in nider-heald, bent downwards; Grein, ii. 295. + Icel. halla, to lean sideways, heel over, esp. used of a ship; from hallr, leaning, sloping. + Dan. helde, to slant, slope, lean, tilt (both trans. and intrans.); from held, an inclination, slope. + Swed. hälla, to tilt, pour. + M. H. G. halden, to bow or incline oneself downwards; from hald, leaning forwards. Root uncertain; perhaps Teut. HAL, to strike, bend; Fick, iii. 71.

HEFT, a heaving. (E.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. ii. 1. 45. Formed from the verb to heave just as haft is formed from the verb to have. ¶ Heft also occurs as another spelling of haft.

HEGIRA, the flight of Mohammed. (Arab.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'The era of the Hegira dates from the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina, on the night of Thursday, July 15, 622. The era begins on the 16th;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. — Arab. hijrah, separation (here flight); the Mohammedan era; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 695. Cf. Arab. hajr, separation, absence; id. ¶ Hence, pronounce the E. word as hejira, with soft g and no i.

HEIFER, a young cow. (E.) M. E. hayfare, hekfere. 'Juvenca, hayfare;' Wright's Vocab. i. 177, l. 4; 'Hec juvenca, a hekfere;' id. 250, col. 2. — A. S. heahfore. 'Annicula, vel vaculla, heahfore;' also, 'Altium, fat heahfore;' [a fat heifer]; id. p. 23, col. 2. Lit. 'a high ox,' i.e. a full-grown ox or cow. Compounded of A. S. heah, high; and far (Northumb. far), an ox. In Matt. xxii. 4, the Lat. tauri is glossed by fearras, fearres in the Wessex versions, and by farras in the Lindisfarne MS. β. The A. S. far is cognate with M. H. G. pfar, O. H. G. varro, far, an ox, and the Gk. φόρος, a heifer.

—✓PAR, as seen in Lat. parere, to produce; see Parent. [†]

HEIGH-HO, an exclamation of weariness. (E.) Also, in Shak., an exclamation of joy; As You Like It, iv. 3. 169; ii. 7, 180, 182, 190; iii. 4. 54. Compounded of heigh, a cry to call attention, Temp. i. 1. 6; and ho! interjection. Both words are of natural origin, to express a cry to call attention.

HEIGHT, the condition of being high; a hill. (E.) A corruption of highth, a form common in Milton, P. L. i. 24, 92, 282, 552, 723; &c. Height is common in Shak. Merch. Ven. iv. 1. 72; &c. M. E. highte, hyghte, as in Chaucer, C. T. 1786 (where it rhymes with lyghte); also heþe (= hegthe), Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 317; heighthe, Mandeville's Travels, p. 40. — A. S. heahðu, hēhðu; Grein, ii. 47. — A. S. heah, high. + Du. hoogte, height; from hoog, high. + Icel. hæð; from hár. + Swed. höjd, from hög. + Dan. høide; from höi. + Goth. hauhiþa; from hauhs. ¶ The G. höhe does not exhibit the suffix. See High. Der. height-en, Shak. Cor. v. 6. 22; formed by analogy with length-en, strength-en, &c.; not an orig. form; the A. S. verb is hean (= high-en), Grein, ii. 55.

HEINOUS, hateful, atrocious. (F., — O. L. G.) Properly trisyllabic. M. E. heinous, hainous; Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1617. — O. F. hainos, odious; formed with suffix -os (= Lat. -osus, mod. F. -eux) from the sb. haine, hate. — O. F. hair, to hate. From an O. Low G. form, well exemplified in Goth. hayan or hajan (= hation), to hate; not from the cognate O. H. G. hazzon. See Hate. Der. heinous-ly, heinous-ness.

HEIR, one who inherits property. (F., — L.) The word being F., the h is silent. M. E. heire, heyr; better heir, heyr; Chaucer, C. T. 5188; also eyr, Will. of Palerne, 128; eir, Havelok, 410. — O. F. heir, eir (later hoir), an heir. — Lat. heres, an heir; allied to Lat. herus, a master, and Gk. χρησ, the hand. — ✓GHAR, to seize, take; cf. Skt. āri, to convey, take, seize. Curtius, i. 246. ¶ The O. F. heir is either from the nom. heres, or from the old acc. herem, the usual acc. form being heredem. Der. heir-dom, heir-ship, hybrid words, with E. suffixes; heir-apparent, 1 Hen. IV, i. 2. 65; heir-ess, with F. suffix, Blackstone's Comment., b. iv. c. 15 (R.); heir-less, Wint. Ta. v. 1. 10; heir-presumptive, heir-male; also heir-loom, q. v.

HEIR-LOOM, a piece of property which descends to an heir along with his inheritance. (Hybrid; F. and E.) 'Which he an heir-loom left unto the English throne;' Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 11. Compounded of heir (see above); and loom, a piece of property, furniture, the same word with loom in the sense of a weaver's frame. See Loom. [†] HELIALAC, relating to the sun. (L., — Gk.) A term in astronomy, used and defined in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13. § 7; 'We term that . . the helialac [ascension of a star], when a star which before, for the vicinity of the sun, was not visible, being further removed, beginneth to appear.' — Late Lat. heliacus, Latinised from the Gk. ἡλιακός, belonging to the sun. — Gk. ἥλιος, the sun; on which difficult word see Curtius; he shews the probability that it is from the ✓SUN to shine, burn, whence also Skt. ukh, to burn. Der. helialac-ly.

HELIOCENTRIC, belonging to the centre of the sun. (Gk.) An astronomical term; in Kersey, ed. 1715. Coined from helio = Gk. ἥλιο, crude form of ἥλιος, the sun; and centric, adj. coined from helio = Gk. κέντρον, centre. See Heliacal and Centre. β. Similar formations are helio-graphy, equivalent to photography, from γράφειν, to write; helio-latry, sun-worship, from λατρεία, service, worship; helio-trope, q. v.

HELIOTROPE, the name of a flower. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. heliotrope, 'the herbe turnsole;' Cot. — Lat. heliotropium. — Gk. ἡλιοτρόπιον, a heliotrope. — Gk. ἥλιο, crude form of ἥλιος, the sun; and τροπ-, base connected with τρέπειν, to turn; so that the lit. sense is 'sun-turner,' or the flower which turns to the sun. See Heliacal and Trope.

HELIX, a spiral figure. (L., — Gk.) 'Helix, barren or creeping ivy; in anatomy, the outward brim of the ear; in geometry, a spiral figure;' Kersey, ed. 1715. — Lat. hēlix, a volute, spiral; kind of ivy. — Gk. ἐλῆξ, anything twisted, a tendril, spiral, volute, curl. — Gk. ἐλίσσειν, to turn round. — Gk. root fel, fal; equivalent to Lat. vol- in volute, to roll. — ✓WAR, to turn about. See Volute, of which helix is, practically, a doublet. Der. helices, the pl. form; helic-al, helic-al-ly.

HELL, the place of the dead; the abode of evil spirits. (E.) M. E. helle; Chaucer, C. T. 1202. — A. S. hel, hell, a fem. sb., gen. helle; Grein, ii. 29. + Du. hel. + Icel. hel. + Dan. helvede; Swed. helvete; from O. Swed. halvite, a word borrowed (says Ihre) from A. S. helle-wite, lit. hell-torment, in which the latter element is the A. S. wite, torment. + G. hölle, O. H. G. hella. + Goth. halja, hell. β. All from the Teutonic base HAL, to hide, whence A. S. helan, G. hehlen, to hide; so that the orig. sense is the hidden or unseen place. The A. S. helan is cognate with Lat. celare, to hide, from the base KAL, to hide, whence also Lat. cella, E. cell. γ. It is supposed that the base KAL, older form KAR, is a development from a root SKAR, of which one meaning was 'to cover;' cf. Skt. kri, to pour out, to cast, to cover. Der. hell-ish, hell-ish-ly, hell-ish-ness; hell-fire = A. S. helle-fyr, Grein, ii. 31; hell-hound, M. E. helle-hund, Seinte Marherete, ed. Cockayne, p. 6, l. 4 from bottom.

HELLEBORE, the name of a plant. (F., — L., — Gk.) Also spelt ellebore, as frequently in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxv. c. 5. — O. F. ellebore, 'hellebore;' Cot. Properly hellebore. — Lat. helleborus. — Gk. ἐλλέβορος, the name of the plant. Of uncertain origin; the latter half of the word is probably related to Gk. βορά, food.

HELM (1), the instrument by which a ship is steered. (E.) Properly used of the tiller or handle of the rudder. M. E. helme; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii. 149. — A. S. helma, masc., Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, cap. xxxv. § 4; lib. iii. pr. 12. + Icel. hjálmr, a rudder. + G. helm, a helve, handle.

β. Closely allied to hauhm, from the likeness between a stalk and a handle. Another kindred word is helve. See Haulm, Helve, Halberd. Der. helms-man; where helms = helm's (the possessive case). Also hal-berd.

HELM (2), HELMET, armour for the head. (E.) M. E. helm, Chaucer, C. T. 2611. — A. S. helm, masc., (1) a protector, (2) a protection, helm; Grein, ii. 31. + Du. helm (also helmet), a helm, casque. + Icel. hjálmr, a helmet. + Dan. hielm. + Swed. hjel. + G. helm. + Goth. hilm. + Russ. shlem, a helmet. + Lithuan. szalmas. β. All formed with suffix -ma from the base KAL (Teutonic HAL), to cover, protect; the orig. sense being 'covering.' See Hell. Der. helm-ed, Chaucer, C. T. 14376; helm-et, a dimin. form, with suffix -et of F. origin, perhaps borrowed from Du. helmet.

HELMINTHOLOGY, the natural history of worms. (Gk.) A scientific word. Coined from Gk. ἐλμυνθό, crude form of ἐλμυς, a worm; and -λογία, a discourse, from λέγειν, to speak. The Gk. ἐλμυς is also found as ἐλμυ, i.e. that which curls about; from the same source as ἐλῆξ, a helix. See Helix. Der. helminthologi-c-al.

HELOT, a slave, among the Spartans. (L., — Gk.) Rare. The pl. helots answers to Lat. pl. Helōtes, borrowed from Gk. Εἰλωτες, pl. of Εἷλος, a helot, bondsman; said to have meant one of the inhabitants of Helos ('Elos'), a town of Laconia, who were enslaved under the Spartans. Der. helot-ism.

HELP, to aid, assist. (E.) M. E. helpen, pt. t. halp, pp. holpen; Chaucer, C. T. 1670, 1651, 10244. — A. S. helpan, pt. t. healp, pp. holpen; Grein, ii. 33. + Du. helpen. + Icel. hjálpa. + Dan. hielp. + Swed. hjelpa. + Goth. hilpan. + G. helfen. O. H. G. helfan. β. All from the Teutonic base HALP = Aryan KALP, to help; whence also Skt. klip, to be fit for, kalpa, able, able to protect; Lithuan. szelpiti, to help. Der. help, sb. = A. S. helpe (Grein); help-er, help-ful, help-ful-ness, help-less, help-less-ly, help-less-ness; also help-mate, a coinage due to a mistaken notion of the phrase an help meet (Gen. ii. 18, 20); thus Rich. quotes from Sharp's Sermons, vol. iv. ser. 12: 'that she might be an help-mate for the man.'

HELVE, a handle of an axe. (E.) M. E. helue (= helve), Wyclif, Deut. xix. 5; spelt hellfe (for helfe), Ormulum, 9948. — A. S. hielf, of which the dat. hielfe occurs in Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 166, l. 8; also helfe, as in 'Manubrium, hæft and helfe;' Wright's Vocab. i. 35, col. 1. + O. Du. helve, a handle; Oudemans. + M. H. G. halp, a handle. Allied to Helm (1) and Haulm.

HEM (1), the border of a garment. (E.) M. E. hem; pl. hemmes, Wyclif, Matt. xxiii. 5. — A. S. hemm, hem; 'Limbus, stemming vel hem;' Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 1. Allied to Friesic häm, a hem, edge, border, noted by Outzen s. v. hemmel, heaven. Cf. G. hamme, a fence, hedge; Flügel. Also G. himmel, heaven, a canopy, orig. a vault, allied to Latin camera, a vault, chamber. β. All from the Teut. base HAM, equivalent to Lat. KAM. — ✓KAM, to bend. Thus the orig. sense is a 'bend' or curved border, edge. Der. hem, verb, chiefly in the phr. to hem in (cf. G. hemmen, to stop, check, hem, from hamme, a fence), Shak. Troilus, iv. 5. 193.

HEM (2), a slight cough to call attention. (E.) 'Cry hem! when he should groan,' Much Ado, v. 2. 16; cf. As You Like It, i. 3. 19. An imitative word, formed from the sound. Allied to Hum. In Dutch, we also find the same word hem, used in the same way. Der. hem, verb, As You Like It, i. 3. 18.

HEMATITE, an ore of iron. (L., — Gk.) The sesqui-oxide of iron; so called because of the red colour of the powder (Webster).

'The sanguine load-stone, called hamatiles;' Holland's Pliny, b. xxvi. c. 16.—Lat. hamatiles; Pliny.—Gk. αμαρῖτης, blood-like.—Gk. αμαρ-, stem of αμα, blood.

HEMI-, half. (Gk.) From a Lat. spelling (hemi-) of the Gk. prefix ἡμι-, signifying half; cognate with Lat. semi-, half. See Semi-.

HEMISPHERE, a half sphere, a half globe. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Cotgrave.—O. F. hemisphere, 'a hemisphere'; Cot.—Lat. hemisphaerium.—Gk. ἡμισφαῖριον, a hemisphere.—Gk. ἡμι-, prefix, signifying half; and σφαῖρα, a ball, sphere. See Hemi- and Sphere. Der. hemispheri-c-al; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 13.

HEMISTICH, half a line, in poetry. (L.,—Gk.) Not from F. hemistiche (Cotgrave), but directly from Lat. hemistichium, by dropping the two latter syllables. Kersey has: 'Hemistichium, a half verse.'—Gk. ἡμιστίχιον, a half verse.—Gk. ἡμι-, half; and στίχος, a row, order, line, verse. See Hemi- and Distich.

HEMLOCK, a poisonous plant. (E.) M. E. hemlok; spelt humloke, humlok, Wright's Vocab. i. 226, col. 1; 265, col. 1; homelok, id. i. 191, col. 2.—A. S. hemlic, hymlice; Gloss. to Cockayne's Saxon Leechdoms.

1. The first syllable is of unknown origin; Stratmann connects it with a supposed M. E. hem, malign; but the instances of this word are not quite certain. Still it probably implies something bad; and may be related to G. hammen, to maim; see Hamper.

2. The second syllable is from A. S. lede, a leek, plant, whence the M. E. loke above, and modern E. -lock. The same ending occurs in char-lock, gar-lic. See Leek. [†]

HEMORRHAGE, a great flow of blood. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Spelt hemorrhay by Ray, On the Creation, pt. 1 (R.).—O. F. hemorrhagie, 'an abundant flux of blood'; Cot.—Late Lat. hemorrhagia, Latinised from Gk. αἱμορραγία, a violent bleeding.—Gk. αἷμα-, for αἷμα, blood; and ρᾱγ-, base of ρῥῑννυμι, I break, burst; the lit. sense being 'a bursting out of blood.' Gk. ῥᾱγ = E. break; see Break.

HEMORRHOIDS, EMERODS, painful tubercles round the margin of the anus from which blood is occasionally discharged. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) 'Hemorroides be vaynes in the foundement'; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 10.—F. hemorroïde, 'an issue of blood by the veins of the fundament'; Cot.—Lat. hemorrhoides, hemorrhoids, pl. of hemorrhoidis.—Gk. αἱμορροΐδες, pl. of αἱμορροΐς, adj., liable to flow of blood.—Gk. αἷμα-, for αἷμα, blood; and ῥεΐν-, to flow, cognate with Skt. sru, to flow. Der. hemorrhoid-al. Doublet, emerods.

HEMP, a kind of plant. (L.,—Gk.,—Skt.) M. E. hemp, Havelok, 782. Contracted from a form henep; the n becoming m by the influence of the following p.—A. S. henep, kenep; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 124. ll. 1, 3, and note. Cf. Du. hennepe; Icel. hampr; Dan. hamp; Swed. hampa; G. hanf; O. H. G. hanaf (Fick). All from Lat. cannabis; Gk. κάνναβις; hemp.—Skt. ḥanā, hemp. β. The Lat. word is merely borrowed from Gk. 'Grimm and Kuhn both consider the Gk. word borrowed from the East, and the Teutonic one from the Lat. cannabis which certainly made its way to them'; Curtius, i. 173. The word was borrowed so early that it suffered letter-change. Der. hemp-en, with adj. suffix, as in gold-en; Hen. V, iii. chor. 8. Also canvas, q. v.

HEN, the female of a bird, especially of the domestic fowl. (E.) M. E. hen, Chaucer, C. T. 15445; pl. hennes, id. 14872.—A. S. henn, hen, hæn; Grein, ii. 23. The proper form is hæn, formed by vowel-change from A. S. hana, a cock; Grein, ii. 11. + Du. hen, fem. of haan, a cock. + Icel. hana, fem. of hani, a cock. + Dan. høne, fem. of hane, a cock. + Swed. høna, fem. of hane, a cock. + G. henne, fem. of hahn, a cock. Cf. Goth. hana, a cock. β. Thus hen is the fem. of a word for cock (obsolete in English), of which the old Teutonic type was HANA.

γ. The word hana means, literally, 'singer,' the suffix -a denoting the agent, as in A. S. hant-a, a hunter.—✓KÄN, to sing; whence Lat. canere, to sing. Der. hen-bane, Prompt. Parv. p. 235; lit. 'fowl-poison'; see Bane. Also hen-coop, hen-harrier, a kind of hawk (see Harrier); hen-pecked, i. e. pecked by the hen or wife, as in the Spectator, no. 176: 'a very good sort of people, which are commonly called in scorn the hen-pecked.' [†]

HENCE, from this place or time. (E.) α. M. E. hennes, P. Plowman, B. i. 76; whence the shorter form hens, occurring in Lidgate's Minor Poems, p. 220 (Stratmann). In the modern hence, the -ce merely records that the M. E. hens was pronounced with sharp s, not with a final z-sound.

β. In the form hennes, the suffixed s was due to a habit of forming adverbs in -s or -es, as in tuy-es, twice, need-es, needs; an older form was henne, Havelok, 843, which is found as late as in Chaucer, C. T. 2358.

γ. Again, henne represents a still older henen or heonan, spelt heonene in Ancræn Riwle, p. 230, l. 8.—A. S. heonan, hionan, hence; Grein, ii. 67; also heonane, id. 68. Here heonan stands as usual for an older kinan. Shorter forms appear in the A. S. heona (for hina), hence, Grein, ii. 67; hine, id. 76. + G. hinnen (chiefly used with von preceding it), hence; O. H. G. hinnan, hence; a shorter form appears in hin, there, thither. B. All these forms are adverbial formations from a pronominal base; cf. Goth. hina, him, accus. case of the third personal pronoun, cognate with A. S. hine, him, and G. ihn, him; also in the accus. case. The nom. of A. S. hine is he, he; to which accordingly the reader is referred. See He.

¶ Similarly, Lat. hinc, hence, is connected with Lat. hic, this. Der. henceforth, compounded of hence and forth, and answering to A. S. forð heonan, used of time; see examples in Grein, ii. 68, ll. 1-4; henceforward, comp. of hence and forward.

HENCHMAN, a page, servant. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 121. 'Compare me the few . . . disciples of Jesus with the solemn pomp . . . of such as go before the bishop, of his hensmen, of trumpets, of sundry tunes,' &c.; Udal, on St. Mark, c. 11 (R.). 'And every knight had after him riding Three hensmen on him awaiting'; The Flower and the Leaf, l. 252 (a poem wrongly ascribed to Chaucer, and belonging to the fifteenth century).

β. Of disputed origin; but we also find Hinseman as a proper name in Wilts. (in the Clergy List, 1873); and this renders it almost certain that the right etymology is from M. E. hengest (cognate with Du. and G. hengst, Swed. and Dan. hingst), a horse, and E. man. We find similar formations in Icel. hestvörðr (lit. horse-ward), a mounted guard (Cleasby); and in Swed. hingstridare (lit. horse-rider), 'a groom of the king's stable, who rides before his coach'; Widegren's Swed. Dict. In this view, the sense is simply 'groom,' which is the sense required by the earliest quotation, that from the Court of Love.

γ. The M. E. hengest occurs in Layamon, l. 3546, and is from A. S. hengest, a horse (Grein, ii. 34), and once a common word. It is cognate with Icel. hestr, Swed. and Dan. hingst and häst, G. hengst, from an orig. Teutonic hangista; Fick, iii. 59.

¶ The usual derivation is from haunch-man, a clumsy hybrid compound, clumsily explained to mean 'one who stands beside one's hip.' Surely, a desperate guess. I find in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691, the following: 'Henchman, qui equo innititur bellicoso, from the G. hengst, a war-horse: with us it signifies one that runs on foot, attending upon a person of honor or worship. [Mentioned] Anno 3 Edw. 4. cap. 5, and 24 Hen. 8. cap. 13. It is written henxman, anno 6 Hen. 8. cap. 1.' [†]

HENDECAGON, a plane figure of eleven sides and angles. (Gk.) So called from its eleven angles.—Gk. ἐνδεκα, eleven; and γωνία, an angle. Ἐνδεκα = έν, one, and δέκα, ten. See Heptagon.

HENDECASYLLABIC, a term applied to a verse of eleven syllables. (Gk.) From Gk. ἐνδεκα, eleven (= έν, one, and δέκα, ten); and σλλαβή, a syllable. See Decasyllabic.

HEP, HIP, the fruit of the dog-rose. See Hip (2).

HEPATIC, pertaining to the liver. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) 'Hepatiques, obstructions of the liver; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—O. F. hepatique, 'hepatic, of or belonging to the liver'; Cot.—Lat. hepaticus.—Gk. ἥπατικός, belonging to the liver.—Gk. ἥπατι-, crude form of ἥπαρ, the liver. + Lat. iecur, the liver. + Skt. yakrit, yakan, the liver. All from a base YAK. Der. hepatic-al; hepatic-a, a flower, the liver-wort; see hepaticque, hepatique in Cotgrave.

HEPTAGON, a plane figure with seven sides and angles. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. So called from its seven angles.—Gk. ἑπτὰ, seven, cognate with E. seven; and γωνία, an angle, corner, from γωνν, a knee. See Seven and Knee. Der. heptagon-al.

HEPTAHEDRON, a solid figure with seven bases or sides. (Gk.) Spelt heptaedron in Kersey, ed. 1715.—Gk. ἑπτὰ, seven, cognate with E. seven; and ἔδρα, a seat, base, from the same base as E. seat and sit. See Seven and Sit.

HEPTARCHY, a government by seven persons. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Applied to seven Old-English kingdoms, viz. those of Kent, Sussex, Wessex, Essex, Northumberland, Mercia, and East Anglia. The term is not a good one; see Freeman, Old Eng. Hist. for Children, p. 40.—Gk. ἑπτὰ, seven; and -αρχία, government. See Seven and Anarchy.

HER, possessive and objective case of the fem. of the third pers. pronoun. (E.) M. E. hire, the usual form; also here, Chaucer, C. T. 4880; hure, P. Plowman, C. iv. 45-48.—A. S. hire, gen. and dat. case of heo, she; the possessive pronoun being made from the gen. case, and indeclinable; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, Grammat. Introduction. The word is to be divided as hi-re, where hi- is to be referred to the Teutonic pronominal base HI (Fick, iii. 74), signifying 'this'; and -re is the usual A. S. fem. inflection in the gen. and dat. of adjectives declined according to the strong declension. See He. Der. her-s, M. E. hires, Chaucer, C. T. 4647, not found much earlier; her-self.

HERALD, an officer who makes proclamations. (F.,—O. H. G.) M. E. herald, heraud; Chaucer, C. T. 2601; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 16.—O. F. heralt, heraut, a herald; Low Lat. heraldus; cf. Ital. araldo, a herald.—O. H. G. herolt (G. herold), a herald; we also find O. H. G. Heriold, Hariold, as a proper name, answering to Icel. Haraldr and E. Harold.

β. Hariold is a contracted form for Hari-wald, where Hari = O. H. G. hari (G. heer), an army; and wald = O. H. G. walt, strength. Thus the name means 'army-strength,' i. e. support or stay of the army, a name for a warrior, esp. for an officer. The limitation of the name to a herald was due to confusion with O. H. G. foraharo, a herald, from forharēn, to proclaim; cf. Gk. κῆρυξ, a herald. γ. We may note that O. H. G. hari answers to A. S. here, army; a word also used in forming proper names, as in Here-ward. See further under HARRY. And, for the latter part of the word, see Valid. Der. herald-ic; also herald-ry, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 213, spelt heraldie, Gower, C. A. i. 173.

HERB, a plant with a succulent stem. (F., -L.) The word being of F. origin, the h was probably once silent, and is still sometimes pronounced so; there is a tendency at present to sound the h, the word being a short monosyllable. M. E. herbe, pl. herbes; Chaucer, C. T. 14972, 14955; King Alisaunder, 331. -F. herbe, 'an herb'; Cot. -Lat. herba, grass, a herb; properly herbage, food for cattle. β. Supposed to be allied to O. Lat. forbea, food, and to Gk. φορβή, pasture, fodder, forage. -✓ BHARB, to eat; cf. Skt. bharb, to eat; Gk. φάρβειν, to feed. Der. herb-less, herb-ac-eous, in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6. § 15, from Lat. herbaceus, grassy, herb-like; herb-age, from F. herbage, 'herbage, pasture' (Cot.), answering to a Lat. form *herbaticum; herb-al; herb-al-ist, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6. § 4; herb-ar-ium, from Lat. herbarium, a book describing herbs, a herbal, but now applied to a collection of plants; herbivorous, herb-devouring, from Lat. vorare, to devour (see VORACIOUS). And note M. E. herbere, a herb-garden, from Lat. herbarium through the French; a word discussed under Arbour.

HERD (1), a flock of beasts, group of animals. (E.) M. E. heerde, heorde. 'Heerde, or flock of bestys'; Prompt. Parv. p. 236. 'Ane heorde of heorten' = a herd of harts; Layamon, 305. -A. S. heord, herd, hyrd, (1) care, custody, (2) herd, flock, (3) family; Grein, ii. 68. + Icel. hjórd. + Dan. hiord. + Swed. hjord. + G. heerde. + Goth. hairda. Root unknown. Der. herd, vb., M. E. herdian, to draw together into a herd, P. Plowman, C. xiv. 148; herd-man, M. E. herdeman, hirdeman, Ormulum, 685a; later form herd-s-man, Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 344. Der. herd (2).

HERD (2), one who tends a herd. (E.) Generally used in the comp. shep-herd, cow-herd, &c. M. E. herde, Chaucer, C. T. 605 (or 603); Will. of Palerne, 6; spelt hurde, P. Plowman, C. x. 267. -A. S. heorde, hirde; Grein, ii. 77. + Icel. hirdir. + Dan. hyrde. + Swed. herde. + G. hirt. + Goth. hairdeis. β. Formed from the word above; thus A. S. heorde is from heord; Goth. hairdeis is from hairda; the A. S. suffix -e here denotes the agent, and signifies 'keeper', or 'protector of the herd.' Cf. Lithuan. herdzus, a cow-herd. Der. cow-herd, goat-herd, shep-herd.

HERE, in this place. (E.) M. E. her, heer; Chaucer, C. T. 1610, 1612. -A. S. hér; Grein, ii. 34. + Du. hier. + Icel. hér. + Dan. her. + Swed. här. + G. hier. + O. H. G. hiar. + Goth. her. β. All from a type HIRA, formed from the pronominal base HI (Fick, iii. 74); so that here is related to he just as where is related to who. See He. Der. here-about, Temp. ii. 2. 41; hereabouts; hereafter, M. E. her-after, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 243; here-by, M. E. her-by, Owl and Nightingale, 127; here-in, M. E. her-inne, Havelok, 458; here-of, M. E. her-of, Havelok, 2585; here-tofore, 1 Sam. iv. 7; here-unto, 1 Pet. ii. 21; here-upon, answering to M. E. her-on, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 130; here-with, Malachi, iii. 10.

HEREDITARY, descending by inheritance. (L.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 1. 223; and in Cotgrave, to translate F. hereditaire. Englistened from Lat. hereditarius, hereditary. -Lat. heredita, base of hereditare, to inherit. -Lat. heredi, crude form of heres, an heir. See Heir. Der. hereditari-ly. From the same base we have heredita-ble, a late and rare word, for which heritable was formerly used, as in Blackstone's Comment. b. ii. c. 5 (R.); also heredita-ment, given in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.

HERESY, the choice of an opinion contrary to that usually received. (F., -L., -Gk.) The word means, literally, no more than 'choice.' M. E. heresye, Ayenbite of Inwyrt, p. 267 (see Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 103, l. 149); eresie, Wyclif, Acts, xxiv. 14. -O. F. heresie, 'heresie, obstinate or wicked error'; Cot. -Lat. hæresis. -Gk. αἵρεσις, a taking, choice, sect, heresy. -Gk. αἰρεῖν, to take; on which see Curtius, ii. 180. Der. heretic, q. v.

HERETIC, the holder of a heresy. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. eretik, heretik, Wyclif, Tit. iii. 10. -O. F. heretique, 'an heretic'; Cot. -Lat. hæreticus. -Gk. αἰρετικός, able to choose, heretical. -Gk. αἰρεῖν, to take, choose. See Heresy. Der. heretic-al.

HERIOT, a tribute paid to the lord of a manor on the decease of a tenant. (E.) See Blackstone, Comment. b. ii. capp. 6, 28; and see Hariot in Blount's Law Lexicon; and Heriot in Jamieson's Scot. Dict. Sir D. Lyndesay speaks of a heried hors, a horse paid as a heriot. The Monarche, b. iii. l. 4734. Corrupted from A. S. heregeatu, lit. military apparel; Grein, ii. 36. The heregeatu consisted of 'military habiliments or equipments, which, after the death of the vassal, escheated to the sovereign or lord, to whom they were delivered by the heir; Thorpe, Ancient Laws, b. ii. glossary, s. v. In later times, horses and cows, and many other things were paid as heriots to the lord of the manor. 'And þam cinge minne heregeatu, feówer sward, and feówer spæra, and feówer scyldas, and feówer beágas, . . feówer hors, and twá sylfene fata;' i. e. And [I bequeath] to the king my heriots, viz. four swords, and four spears, and four shields, and four torques . . four horses, and two silver vessels; Will dated about 946-955; in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 499. -A. S. here, an army (hence, belonging to war); and geatu, geatwe, preparation, apparel, adornment; Grein, i. 495. [†]

HERITAGE, an inheritance. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. heritage, Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 25, last line but one; King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1281; also eritage, Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, 981. -O. F. heritage, 'an inheritance, heritage'; Cot. Formed, with suffix -age (answering to Lat. -aticum) from O. F. heriter, to inherit. -Lat. hereditare, to inherit; the loss of a syllable is exemplified by Low Lat. heritator, used for heredicator; it would seem as if the base heri- was substituted for heredi-. -Lat. heredi-, crude form of heres, an heir; see Heir. Der. from same source, heritable, herit-or.

HERMAPHRODITE, an animal or plant of both sexes. (L., -Gk.) In Gascoigne, The Steele Glas, l. 53. See Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17. -Lat. hermaphroditus. -Gk. ἐρμαφρόδιτος; a coined word, made up from Gk. Ἑρμῆς, Hermes (Mercury), as representing the male principle; and Ἀφροδίτη, Aphrodite (Venus), the female. Hence the legend that Hermaphroditus, son of Hermes and Aphrodite, when bathing, grew together with Salmacis, the nymph of a fountain, into one person. Der. hermaphrodit-ic, -ic-al, -ism; also hermaphroditism.

HERMENEUTIC, explanatory. (Gk.) A modern word. From Gk. ἐρμηνευτικός, skilled in interpreting. -Gk. ἐρμηνεύω, an interpreter; of which a shorter form is ἐρμηνεύς. Connected (perhaps) with Ἑρμῆς, Hermes (Mercury), the tutelary god of skill; but the connection is not certain; see Curtius, i. 433. Der. hermeneutic-al, hermeneutic-ly, hermeneut-ics (the science of interpretation).

HERMETIC, chemical, &c. (Gk.) 'Their seals, their characters, hermetic rings;' Ben Jonson, Underwoods, lxi. An Execration upon Vulcan, l. 73. -Low Lat. hermeticus, relating to alchemy; a coined word, made from the name Hermes (= Gk. Ἑρμῆς); from the notion that the great secrets of alchemy were discovered by Hermes Trismegistus (Hermes the thrice-greatest). Der. hermetic-al, hermetic-ly. ¶ Hermetically was a term in alchemy; a glass bottle was said to be hermetically (i. e. perfectly) sealed when the opening of it was fused and closed against the admission of air.

HERMIT, one who lives in solitude. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. eremite, heremite; in early use. It first appears in Layamon, 18763, where the earlier text has eremite, the later heremite. This form was probably taken directly from Lat. heremita, the later form hermite being from the French. Heremite occurs in P. Plowman, B. vi. 190, and even as late as in Holinshed's Description of Britain, b. i. c. 9 (R.). The shorter form hermyte is in Berners' tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 204 (R.). -F. hermite, 'an hermit'; Cot. -Low Lat. heremita, a form occurring in P. Plowman, B. xv. 281; but usually eremita. -Gk. ἐρημίτης, a dweller in a desert. -Gk. ἐρημία, a solitude, desert. -Gk. ἐρήμος, deserted, desolate. Root uncertain. Der. hermit-age, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 34, spelt heremytage, Mandeville's Travels, p. 93, from F. hermitage, 'an hermitage'; Cot. Also hermit-ic-al, spelt heremeticall in Holinshed, Desc. of Britain, b. i. c. 9 (R.), from Lat. heremiticus (better eremiticus), solitary.

HERN, the same as Heron, q. v.

HERNIA, a kind of rupture; a surgical term. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. -Lat. hernia, a rupture, hernia. Of uncertain origin.

HERO, a warrior, illustrious man. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 270. -O. F. heroë, 'a worthy, a demygod'; Cot. -Lat. heroëm, acc. of heros, a hero. -Gk. ἦρως, a hero, demi-god. + Skt. vīra, a hero. + Lat. uir, a man, hero. + A. S. wer, a man. See Virile. ¶ The mod. F. héros is now accommodated to the spelling of the Lat. nom. The Lat. acc. is, however, still preserved in the Span. heros, Ital. eroe. Der. hero-ic, spelt heroicke in Spenser, F. Q. v. l. 1, from O. F. heroïque (Cot.), which from Lat. heroicus; hero-ic-al-ly, hero-ism; also hero-ine, q. v.

HEROINE, a famous woman. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Minshew. 'A heroine is a kinde of prodigy;' Evelyn, Memoirs; Mrs. Evelyn to Mr. Bohun, Jan. 4, 1672 (R.). -F. heroïne, 'a most worthy lady'; Cot. -Lat. heroine. -Gk. ἡρώϊνη, fem. of ἦρως, a hero. See Hero.

HERON, a long-legged water-fowl. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. heroune, Chaucer, Parliament of Fowles, 346. Also hayron, Wright's Vocab. i. 177. 'Hec ardea, a herne;' id. 252. 'Heern, byrde, heryn, herne, ardea;' Prompt. Parv. p. 237. -O. F. hairon, 'a heron, herne, henschaw'; Cot. (Mod. F. héron; Prov. aigros; Ital. aghirone, airone; Span.

airon.)—O. H. G. heigr, heiger, a heron; with suffixed -on (Ital. -one).
 + Swed. häger, a heron. + Dan. heire, a heron. + Icel. hegri, a heron.
 β. Fick further compares these words with G. käher, heher, a jackdaw, lit. 'laugher,' from the ✓ KAK, to laugh; cf. Skt. kakk, kakkh, to laugh; Lat. cachinnus, laughter; prov. E. heighaw, a wood-pecker. Similarly it is probable that the 'heron' was named from its harsh voice.

¶ The A. S. name was krakra, Wright's Vocab. i. 29, col. i; 77, col. i; with which cf. W. cregyr, a screamer, a heron (from W. creg, cryg, hoarse); G. reiherr, a heron; Lat. graculus, a jay; all similarly named from the imitative word which appears in E. as crake, creak, croak. See Crake. Der. heron-er, M. E. heronere, Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 413; from O. F. haironnier; Cotgrave explains faucon haironnier as 'a heron, a falcon made only to the heron.' Also heron-ry. And see Heronshaw, Egret.

HERONSHAW, HERNshaw, (1) a young heron (2) a heronry. (F.) Spenser has hernshaw in the sense of heron; F. Q. vi. 7. 9. Two distinct words have been confused here. 1. Hernshaw, a heron, is incorrect, being a corruption of heronsew; the name heronsew for the heron is still common in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire. Mr. Peacock's Glossary of Manley and Corringham (Lincoln) words has: 'Heronsew, the common heron. "There were vewed at this present survey certayne heronsewes whiche have allwayes used to brede there to the number of iiij."—Survey of Glastonbury, temp. Hen. VIII, Mon. Ang. i. 11. See Chaucer, Squyres Tale, 68.' The etymology of this heronsew is given by Tyrwhitt, who cites the F. herongeau from 'the glossary,' meaning probably that in Urry's ed. of Chaucer; but it is verified by the fact that the O. F. heroncel (older form of herongeau) occurs in the Liber Custumarum, p. 304, and means 'a young heron.' The suffix -cel is a double dimin., as in lion-cel, later lionceau. Cf. also M. E. beu-tee = F. beau-té. 2. Hernshaw in its other sense is correct; and is compounded of heron, and shaw, a wood. The sense is given by Cotgrave, who explains O. F. haironniers by 'a heron's nest, or aerie; a hernshaw, or shaw of wood wherein herons breed.' Hence heronshaw (1) is (F., — O. H. G.); heronshaw (2) is hybrid.

HERRING, a small fish. (E.) M. E. hering (with one r), Havelok, 758. — A. S. hæring; the pl. hæringas is in Ælfric's Colloquy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 24; also hæring, Wright's Vocab. i. 56, l. 4. + Du. haring. + G. hüring. β. The explanation in Webster is probably correct; viz. that the fish is named from its appearance in large shoals; from the Teutonic base HARYA, an army (Fick, iii. 65), as seen in Goth. harjis, A. S. here, G. heer, (O. H. G. hari), an army. See Harry. [†]

HESITATE, to doubt, stammer. (L.) Spelt hesitate, hesitate in Minsheu, ed. 1627. [Perhaps merely made out of the sb. hesitation, which occurs in Cotgrave to translate F. hesitation, whereas he explains hesiter only by 'to doubt, feare, stick, stammer, stagger in opinion.' — Lat. hesitatus, pp. of hesitare, to stick fast; intensive verb formed from hæsum, supine of hære, to stick, cleave. — Lithuanian gaizti, gaizoti, to tarry, delay (Nesselmann); Fick, i. 576. — ✓GHAI, to stick, cleave. Der. hesitat-ion, hesit-anc-y; from the same root, ad-here, co-here, in-her-ent.

HEST, a command. (E.) M. E. hest, heste, a command; also, a promise; Chaucer, C. T. 14062. The final t is properly excrement, as in whils-t, against-t, amongst-t, amidst-t, from M. E. whiles, againes, amonges, amiddes. And it was easily suggested by confusion with the Icel. heit. — A. S. hæs, a command, Grein, i. 24. — A. S. hátan, to command. + Icel. heit, a vow; from heita, to call, promise. + O. H. G. heiz (G. geheiss), a command; from O. H. G. heizan (G. heissen), to call, bid, command. Cf. Goth. haitan, to name, call, command. β. Fick (iii. 55) suggests a connection with Gk. κίρμα, I hasten, E. hie, q. v. In this case, the base is KID, an extension of ✓KI.

HETEROCLITE, irregularly inflected. (L., — Gk.) A grammatical term; hence used in the general sense of irregular, disorderly. 'Ther are strange heteroclitis in religion now adaies;' Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. iv. let. 35. — Lat. heteroclitus, varying in declension. — Gk. ἑτερόκλιτος, otherwise or irregularly inflected. — Gk. ἑτερο-, crude form of ἕτερος, other; and -κλιτος, formed from κλίνω, to lean, cognate with E. lean.

HETERODOX, of strange opinion; heretical. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. Compounded from Gk. ἑτερο-, crude form of ἕτερος, another, other; and δόξα, opinion, from δοκέω, to think. Der. heterodox-y, Gk. ἑτεροδοξία.

HETEROGENEOUS, dissimilar in kind. (Gk.) Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674, gives the adjectives heterogenes, heterogeneous, and the sb. heterogeneity. Compounded from Gk. ἑτερο-, crude form of ἕτερος, another, other; and γένος, kind, kin, cognate with E. kin. Der. heterogeneous-ly, -ness; heterogeneity-y.

HEW, to hack, cut. (E.) M. E. hewen, Chaucer, C. T. 1424. — A. S. heávan, to hew; Grein, ii. 62. + Du. houwen. + Icel. höggva. + Swed. hugga. + Dan. hugge. + G. hauen. + O. H. G. houvan. + Russ. kovati, to hammer, forge. Allied to Lat. cutere, to strike, pound, beat. The root appears to be KU, to strike, beat. Der. haw-er; also hoe, q. v.

HEXAGON, a plane figure, with six sides and angles. (L., — Gk.) Hexagonal is in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. Hexagone in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Named from its six angles. — Lat. hexagōnum, a hexagon. — Gk. ἑξάγωνος, six-cornered. — Gk. ἕξ, six, cognate with E. six; and γωνία, an angle, corner, from Gk. γωνία, a knee, cognate with E. knee. See Six and Knee. Der. hexagon-al, hexagon-al-ly.

HEXAMETER, a certain kind of verse having six feet. (L., — Gk.) 'This provoking song in hexameter verse;' Sidney's Arcadia, b. i. (R.) 'I like your late English hexameters;' Spenser, letter to Harvey, qu. in Globe ed. of Spenser, p. xxviii. — Lat. hexameter; also hexametrus. — Gk. ἑξάμετρος, a hexameter; properly an adj. meaning 'of six metres' or feet. — Gk. ἕξ, six, cognate with E. six; and μέτρον, a measure, metre. See Six and Metre.

HEY, interjection. (E.) M. E. hei, Legend of St. Katharine, l. 579; hay, Gawwayn and Grene Knight, 1445. A natural exclamation. + G. hei, interjection. + Du. hei, hey! ho!

HEYDAY (1), interjection. (G. or Du.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 190. 'Heyda, what Hans Fluterkinn is this? what Dutchman does build or frame castles in the air?' Ben Jonson, Masque of Augurs. Borrowed either from G. heida, ho! hallo! or from Du. hei daar, ho! there. It comes to much the same thing. The G. da, Du. daar, are cognate with E. there. ¶ The interj. hey is older; see above.

HEYDAY (2), frolicsome wildness. (E.) 'At your age the heyday in the blood is tame;' Hamlet, iii. 4. 69. I take this to be quite a different word from the foregoing, though the commentators confuse the two. In this case, and in the expression 'heyday of youth,' the word stands for high day (M. E. hey day); and it is not surprising that the old editions of Shakespeare have heyday in place of heyday; only, unluckily, in the wrong place, viz. Temp. ii. 2. 190. Cf. 'that sabbath day was an high day;' John, xix. 31. For the old spellings of high, see High. [†]

HIATUS, a gap, defect, &c. (L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. — Lat. hiatus, a gap, chasm. — Lat. hiatus, pp. of hiare, to yawn, gape; cognate with E. yawn. See Yawn. Doublet, chasm, q. v.

HIBERNAL, wintry. (F., — L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13. § 10, where it is spelt hybernal. — F. hibernal, 'wintry;' Cot. — Lat. hibernalis, wintry; lengthened from Lat. hibernus, wintry. β. Hi-bernus is from the same root as Lat. hi-ems, winter, Gk. χι-ών, snow, and Skt. hi-ma, cold, frost, snow; the form of the root is GHI. Der. from same source, hibern-ate.

HICCOUGH, HICCUP, HICKET, a spasmodic inspiration, with closing of the glottis, causing a slight sound. (E.) Now generally spelt hiccough. Spelt hiccup (riming with prick up), Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. i. 346. Also hicket, as in the old edition of Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 9. § 5; and in Minsheu. Also hicheock; Florio explains Ital. singhiozzi by 'yexings, hicheocks.' Also hickock; Cotgrave has: 'Hoquet, the hickock, or yexing;' also 'Hocquet, to yex, or clock [cluck], to have the hiccup or hicheock.' β. It seems to be generally considered that the second syllable is cough, and such may be the case; but it is quite as likely that hiccough is an accommodated spelling, due to popular etymology. The evidence takes us back to the form hick-ock, parallel to hick-et, both formed from hick by the help of the usual dimin. suffixes -ock, -et. Cf. F. hoquet, the hiccough, in which the final -et is certainly a dimin. suffix; and probably some confusion with F. hoquet caused the change from hick-ock to hick-et.

γ. The former syllable hic, hik, or hick is of imitative origin, to denote the spasmodic sound or jerk; and is preserved in the word Hitch, q. v. It is not peculiar to English. + Du. hik, the hiccough; hikken, to hiccough. + Dan. hikke, the hiccough; also, to hiccough. + Swed. kicka, the hiccough; also, to hiccough. And cf. W. ig, a hiccough, sob; igio, to sob; Breton hik, a hiccough, called hak in the dialect of Vannes, whence (probably) F. hoquet. β. All from a base HIK, weakened form of KIK, used to denote convulsive movements in the throat; see Chincough.

HICKORY, an American tree of the genus Carya. Origin unknown.

HIDALGO, a Spanish nobleman of the lowest class. (Span., — L.) The word occurs in Terry, Voyage to East India, ed. 1655, p. 169 (Todd); also in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 116. — Span. hidalgo, a nobleman; explained to have originally been hijo de algo, the son of something, a man of rank, a name perhaps given in irony. β. Hijo, O. Span. figo, is from Lat. filium, acc. of filius, son; see Filial. Algo is from Lat. aliquid, something.

HIDE (1), to cover, conceal. (E.) M. E. hiden, huden; Chaucer, C. T. 1479; Ancren Riwle, p. 130. — A. S. hidan, hýdan; Grein, ii. 125. + Gk. κρύβειν, to hide. And cf. Lat. custos (for custos), a guardian, protector. — ✓KUDH, to hide; an extension of ✓KU, to hide; which again is a weakened form of ✓SKU, to cover; Fick, i. 816. See Sky. Der. hid-ing; and see hide (2).

HIDE (2), a skin. (E.) M. E. hide, Pricke of Conscience, l. 5299; hude, Ancrén Riwle, p. 120. — A. S. hýd, the skin; Grein, ii. 125. + Du. huid. + Icel. húð. + Dan. and Swed. hud. + O. H. G. hút; G. haut. + Lat. cutis, skin. + Gk. κύτος, κύτος, skin, hide. — ✓ SKU, to cover; Fick, i. 816. See SKY. Der. hide-bound, said of a tree the bark of which impedes its growth, Milton's Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 32, l. 2; also hide (3).

HIDE (3), to flog, castigate. (E.) Colloquial. Merely 'to skin' by flogging. Cf. Icel. hýða, to flog; from Icel. húð, the hide. Der. hid-ing.

HIDE (4), a measure of land. (E.) 'Hide of land;' Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691. Of variable size; estimated at 120 or 100 acres; or even much less; see Blount. Low Lat. hida; Ducange. — A. S. hid; Ælfred's tr. of Bede, b. iii. c. 24; b. iv. c. 13, 16, 19. (See Kemble's Saxons in England, b. i. c. 4; and the Appendix, shewing that the estimate at 120 or 100 acres is too large.) β. This word is of a contracted form; the full form is higid; Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 657; Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus, no. 243. This form higid is equivalent to hiwisc, another term for the same thing; and both words orig. meant (as Bede says) an estate sufficient to support one family or household. They are, accordingly, closely connected with A. S. hiwan, domestics, those of one household, and with the Goth. heirwa-franja, the master of a household; see further under HIVE.

¶ Popular etymology has probably long ago confused the hide of land with hide, a skin; but the two words must be kept entirely apart. The former is A. S. higid, the latter A. S. hýd.

HIDEOUS, ugly, horrible. (F.) The central e has crept into the word, and it has become trisyllabic; the true form is hidous. It is trisyllabic in Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 3. 34. M. E. hidous (the invariable form); Chaucer, C. T. 3520; he also has hidously, C. T. 1701. — O. F. hidous, hidus, hideux, later hideux, hideous; the oldest form is hidous.

β. Of uncertain origin; if the former s in hidous is not an inserted letter, the probable original is Lat. hispidus, roughish, an extended form of Lat. hispidus, rough, shaggy, bristly. Der. hideous-ly, hideous-ness.

HIE, to hasten. (E.) M. E. hien, hyen, hizen; P. Plowman, B. xx. 322; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 10605. The M. E. sb. hie or hye, haste, is also found; id. 4627. — A. S. higian, to hasten; Grein, ii. 72. β. Allied to Gk. hiev, to go, move, κίβναι, I go; also to Lat. ciere, to summon, cause to go; citius, quick. — ✓ KI, to sharpen, excite; cf. Skt. ḱi, to sharpen; whence also E. hone. See CITE.

HIERARCHY, a sacred government. (F., — Gk.) Gascoigne has the pl. hierarchies; Steel Glass, 993; ed. Arber, p. 77. The sing. is in Cotgrave. — F. hierarchie, 'an hierarchy'; Cot. — Gk. ἱεραρχία, the power or post of an ἱεράρχης. — Gk. ἱεράρχης, a steward or president of sacred rites. — Gk. ἱερός, crude form of ἱερός, sacred; and ἀρχεῖν, to rule, govern.

β. The orig. sense of ἱερός was 'vigorous'; cognate with Skt. ishiras, vigorous, fresh, blooming (in the Peterb. Dict.); see Curtius, i. 499; from ✓ IS, probably 'to be vigorous.' For ἀρχεῖν, see ARCH, prefix. Der. hierarchy-cal; we also find hierarch (Milton, P. L. v. 468), from Gk. ἱεράρχης. [†]

HIEROGLYPHIC, symbolical; applied to picture writing. (L., — Gk.) 'The characters which are called hieroglyphicks;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1051 (R.). 'An hieroglyphical answer;' Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. iii. c. 5. s. 4 (R.). — Lat. hieroglyphicus, symbolical. — Gk. ἱερογλυφικός, hieroglyphic. — Gk. ἱερός, crude form of ἱερός, sacred; and γλύφειν, to hollow out, engrave, carve, write in incised characters. See HIERARCHY and GLYPTIC. Der. hieroglyphic-al, -al-ly; also the sb. hieroglyph, coined by omitting -ic.

HIEROPHANT, a revealer of sacred things, a priest. (Gk.) In Warburton's Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4 (R.). — Gk. ἱεροφάντης, teaching the rites of worship. — Gk. ἱερός, crude form of ἱερός, sacred; and φαίνειν, to shew, explain. See HIERARCHY and PHANTOM.

HIGGLE, to chaffer, bargain. (E.) 'To higgle thus;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2. l. 491. And used by Fuller, Worthies, Northumberland (R.). A weakened form of haggle; see HAGGLE (2). Der. higgle-ver. [†]

HIGH, tall, lofty, chief, illustrious. (E.) M. E. heigh, high, hey, hy; Chaucer, C. T. 318; P. Plowman, B. x. 155. — A. S. heah, hēh; Grein, ii. 44. + Du. hoog. + Icel. hár. + Swed. kög. + Dan. høi. + Goth. hauhs. + G. hoch; O. H. G. hōh.

β. The orig. sense is 'knoblike,' humped or bunched up; cf. G. hocken, to set in heaps; höcker, a knob, hump, bunch; G. hügel, a bunch, knob, hillock; Icel. kauger, a mound. The still older sense is simply 'bent' or 'rounded'; cf. Skt. kukshi, the belly, kucha, the female breast. γ. From Teutonic base HUH, to bend, bow, project upwards in a rounded form. — ✓ KUK, to bend, make round; cf. Skt. kuch, to contract, bend. Der. heigh, height, q. v.; high-ly; also high-born, K. John, v. 2. 79; high-bred; high-coloured, Ant. and Cleop. ii. 7. 4; high-fed; high-floven; high-handed; high-minded, 1 Hen. VI. i. 5. 12; high-minded-ness; high-ness. Temp. ii. 1. 172; high-priest; high-road; high-spirited; high-way = M. E. heigh weye, P. Plowman, B. x. 155; high-way-man; high-wrought, Othello, ii. 1. 2; with numerous similar compounds. Also high-land, which see below.

HIGHLAND, belonging to a mountainous region. (E.) 'A generation of highland thieves and redshanks;' Milton, Observ. on the Art. of Peace (qu. in Todd). From high and land; corresponding somewhat to the M. E. upland, used of country people as distinguished from townfolk. Der. highland-er; highlands.

HIGHT, was or is called. (E.) Obsolete. A most singular word, presenting the sole instance in English of a passive verb; the correct phrase was he hight = he was (or is) called, or he was named. 'This grisly beast, which lion hight by name' = which is called by the name of lion; Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 140. M. E. highte. 'But ther as I was wont to highte [be called] Arcite, Now highte I Philostrate;' Chaucer, C. T. 1557. Older forms hatte, hetle. 'Clarice hatte that maide' = the maid was named Clarice; Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, l. 479. 'Thet hetten Calef and Iosseu' = that were named Caleb and Joshua; Aeyenbite of Inwyt, p. 67. And see Stratmann's Dict. s. v. kāten. — A. S. hätte, I am called, I was called; pres. and pt. t. of A. S. hātan, to be called, a verb with passive signification; from A. S. hātan, active verb, to bid, command, call; Grein, ii. 16, 17. + G. ich heisse, I am named; from heissen, (1) to call, (2) to be called.

β. Best explained by the Gothic, which has haitan, to call, name, pt. t. hauhait; whence was formed the true passive pres. tense kaitada, I am called, he is called; as in 'Thomas, saci kaitada Didymus' = Thomas, who is called Didymus; John, xi. 6. See further under HEST.

HILARITY, cheerfulness, mirth. (F., — L., — Gk.) 'Restraining his ebriety unto hilarity;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 23, part 16. — F. hilarité, mirth; omitted by Cotgrave, but see Littré. — Lat. hilaritatem, acc. of hilaritas, mirth. — Lat. hilaris, hilarus, cheerful, gay. (Not an orig. Lat. word; but borrowed. — Gk. ἰαρός, cheerful, gay. Cf. Gk. ἰαος, propitious, kind. Der. Hence the late word hilarious, formed as if from a Lat. hilariosus; hilarious does not occur in Todd's Johnson. From same source, ex-hilarate.

¶ Hilary Term is so called from the festival of St. Hilary (Lat. hilaris); Jan. 13.

HILDING, a base, menial wretch. (E.) In Shak. used of both sexes; Tam. Shrew, ii. 26; &c. [Not derived, as Dr. Schmidt says, from A. S. healdan, to hold; which is impossible.] 'The word is still in use in Devonshire, pronounced hilderling, or hinderling;' Halliwell. Hence the obvious etymology. Hilding is short for hilderling, and hilderling stands for M. E. hinderling, base, degenerate; Ormulum, 4860, 4889. Made up from A. S. hinder, behind; and the suffix -ling. See HIND (3) and (on the suffix) CHAMBERLAIN.

HILL, a small mountain. (E.) M. E. hil (with one l); Havelok, 1287; also hul, Ancrén Riwle, p. 178. — A. S. hyll; Grein, ii. 132. 'Collis, hyll;' Wright's Vocab. i. 54, col. 1. And see Northumbrian version of St. Luke, xxiii. 30. + O. Du. hil, hille; Oudemans. β. Further allied to Lithuan. kalmas, Lat. collis, a hill; Lat. celsum, lofty; culmen, a top. See CULMINATE, and HAULM. Der. hill-y, hill-i-ness; dimin. hill-ock, in Shak. Venus and Adonis, 237. ¶ Not connected with G. hügel, a hill; for that is related to E. how, a hill; see HOW (2).

HILT, the handle of a sword. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, v. 2. 159; it was common to use the pl. *hilt*s with reference to a single weapon; Jul. Cæsar, v. 3. 43. M. E. hilt; Layamon, 6506. — A. S. hilt, Grein, ii. 75. + Icel. hjal. + O. H. G. helza, a sword-hilt. β. The Icel. hjal also means the guard between the hilt and blade; the Lat. gladius, sword, is perhaps related; Fick, iii. 72. ¶ In any case, it is quite unconnected with the verb to hold. Der. hilt-ed.

HIM, the objective case of he; see HE.

HIN, a Hebrew liquid measure. (Heb.) In Exod. xxix. 40, &c. Supposed to contain about 6 quarts. — Heb. hin, a hin; said to be a word of Egyptian origin.

HIND (1), the female of the stag. (E.) M. E. hind, hynde; P. Plowman, B. xv. 274. — A. S. hind, fem.; Grein, ii. 76. + Du. hinde, a hind, doe. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. hind. + O. H. G. hinda, M. H. G. hinde; whence G. hindin, a doe, with suffixed (fem.) -in. β. Fick (iii. 61) gives the Teutonic type as HENDA, as if from the Teut. base HANTH, to take by hunting; see HAND.

HIND (2), a peasant. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 12. The d is excrement. M. E. hine, Chaucer, C. T. 605; hyne, P. Plowman, B. vi. 133. — A. S. hina, a domestic; but the word is unauthenticated as a nom. sing., and is rather to be considered a gen. pl.; so that hina really stands for hina man = a man of the domestics. We find hina ealder = elder of the domestics, i. e. master of a household; Ælfred's tr. of Bede, iii. 9. β. Further, hina stands for hiwana, hiuena, gen. pl. of hiwan (pl. nom.), domestics; Grein, ii. 78. So called because belonging to the household or hive. See HIVE.

HIND (3), adj. in the rear. (E.) We say 'hind feet,' i. e. the two feet of a quadruped in the rear. But the older expression is 'hinder feet,' as in St. Brandan. ed. Wright, 30, the pos. degree not being used; we also find hynderere, hyndrere, Wyclif, Gen. xvi. 13. — A. S. hindan, only as adv., at the back of; hindeweard, hindwards, backwards; hinder, adv. backwards; Grein, ii. 76. + Goth. hindar, prep. behind; hindana, prep. beyond. + G. hinter, prep. behind; hinten, adv. behind. All from the base which appears in A. S. hine, hence. See Hence, He, Behind. Der. hind-ward, Wyclif, Ps. xlix. 17, lxxix. 4; also hind-most, q. v.; hinder, verb, q. v.; be-hind.

HINDER, to put behind, keep back, check. (E.) M. E. hindren, hyndren; Gower, C. A. i. 311. He also has the sb. hinderer; i. 330; iii. 111. — A. S. hindrian; A. S. Chron. an. 1003. — A. S. hinder, adv. behind; from hindan, behind. + Icel. hindra, to hinder. See Hind (3). Der. hinder-er; also hindr-ance (for hinder-ance), with F. suffix -ance; 'damage, hurt, or hindrance'; Frith's Works, p. 15.

HINDMOST, last. (E.) In Shak. Sonnet 85, 12; 2 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 2.

a. The suffix has nothing to do with the word most; the word is to be divided as hind-m-ost, a double superlative; where both -m- and -ost (= -est) are superlative suffixes; so also in the case of Aftermost, Utmost. The corruption of -est to -ost is due to confusion with the word most in popular etymology. The form hind-most is not old; Chaucer has hinderest, C. T. 624.

β. The suffix -est being the usual one for the superlative, we have only to account for the rest of the word. — A. S. hindema, hindmost; Grein, ii. 76. Here the suffix -ma is the same as that seen in Lat. optimus, optumus, best; see Aftermost. + Goth. hindumists, hindmost, Matt. viii. 12; to be divided as hind-u-mists; cf. Goth. frumista, first. See Hind (3). ¶ Also spelt hindermost, as in Holinshed, Hist. Scotland, an. 1290 (R.) Here the r is an insertion, due to confusion with hinder; but the e is correct; cf. A. S. hindema.

HINGE, the joint on which a door turns. (Scand.) The i was formerly e. M. E. henge (with hard g), a hinge; with dimin. form hengel, a hinge. 'As a dore is turned in his hengis' [earlier version, in his heeng]; Wyclif, Prov. xxvi. 14. 'Hengyl of a dore'; Prompt. Parv. p. 235. 'Hic gumser, a hengylle'; Wright's Vocab. i. 261, col. 1. β. So called because the door hangs upon it; from M. E. hengen, to hang, a word of Scand. origin. 'Henged on a tre'; Havelok, 1429. — Icel. hengja, to hang; cognate with A. S. hangian, to hang; see Hang (A). Cf. Du. hengsel, a hinge. Der. hinge, v.

HINT, a slight allusion. (E.) a. The verb is later than the sb. 'As I have hinted in some former papers'; Tatler, no. 267. Only the sb. occurs in Shak., where it is a common word; Oth. i. 3. 142, 166. Esp. used in the phrases 'to take the hint,' or 'upon this hint.' β. Hint properly signifies 'a thing taken,' i. e. a thing caught or apprehended; being a contraction of M. E. hinted, taken; or rather a variant of the old pp. hent, with the same sense. 'Hyntyd, raptus'; Hyntyn, or revyn, or hentyn, rapio, arripio; Prompt. Parv. p. 240. The earlier spelling of the verb was henten, pt. t. hente, Chaucer, C. T. 700; the pp. hent occurs even in Shak. Meas. iv. 6. 14. — A. S. hentan, to seize, to hunt after; Grein, ii. 34. Cf. Goth. hinthan, to seize, catch with the hand. See Hit, Hunt. Der. hint, verb. [+]

HIP (1), the haunch, upper part of the thigh. (E.) M. E. hipe, hippe, hippe. 'About hire hippes large'; Chaucer, C. T. 474. 'Hupes had hue faire' = she had fair hips; Alisaunder, l. 190; printed with Will. of Palerne. ed. Skeat. — A. S. hype; Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 383, l. 2. + Du. heup. + Icel. huppr. + Dan. høfte. + Swed. höft. + Goth. hups. + G. hüfte, O. H. G. huf. β. The suffixed -t or -te in some of these words stands for the old Aryan suffix -ta; the Teutonic base of hip is HUPI; Fick, iii. 77. The orig. sense was probably 'a bend,' a joint, or else, 'a hump'; cf. Gk. κύπτειν, to bend forward; κύφος, bent; κύφος, a hump, hunch. — ✓ KUP, also KUBH, to go up and down; Fick, i. 536, 537. See Heap, Hump, Hoop, Hop. Der. hipbone, A. S. hype-bān; Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. 1, last line. ¶ From the phrase 'to have on the hip,' or 'catch on the hip' (Merch. of Ven. i. 3. 47, iv. 1. 334) may very well have been formed the word hipped, i. e. beaten, foiled; but this word was sooner or later connected with hypochondria; see Hippish.

HIP (2), also HEP, the fruit of the dog-rose. (E.) M. E. hepe. 'And swete as is the brambel flour That bereth the rede hepe'; Chaucer, C. T. 13677. — A. S. heop, in the comp. heop-brymel, a hip-bramble; Wright's Vocab. i. 33, col. 1; to translate Lat. rubus. + M. H. G. hiefe, O. H. G. hiufo, a bramble-bush. Root unknown. [+]

HIPPISH, hypochondriacal. (Gk.) In Byron, Beppo, st. 64. The word is merely a colloquial substitute for hypochondriacal, of which only the first syllable is preserved. See note at end of Hip (1). [+]

HIPPOCAMPUS, a kind of fish. (Gk.) It has a head like a horse, and a long flexible tail; whence the name. — Gk. ἵπποκαμπος, ἵπποκαμπος, a monster, with a horse's head and fish's tail. — Gk. ἵππο-, crude form of ἵππος, a horse; and κάμπος, to bend.

HIPPOPOTAMUS, the river-horse. (L., — Gk.) M. E. ypotamus, Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, 157. Also ypotanos, King Alisaunder, 6554. Both corrupted from Lat. hippopotamus. — Gk.

ἵπποπόταμος, the river-horse of Egypt; also called ἵππος ποτάμιος = river-dwelling horse. — Gk. ἵππο-, crude form of ἵππος, a horse; and ποτάμιος, a river. β. The Gk. ἵππος stands for ἕκος, cognate with Lat. equus, a horse; see Equine. Ποτάμιος is fresh, drinkable water; see Potable. ¶ From the same Gk. ἵππος we have hippo-drome, a race-course for horses; hippo-phagy, a feeding on horse-flesh; hippogriff, a monster, half horse, half griffin; &c.

HIRE, wages for service. (E.) M. E. hire, Chaucer, C. T. 509; also hure, huyre, hyre, P. Plowman, A. ii. 91; B. ii. 122. — A. S. hýr, fem. (gen. hýre), Luke, x. 23. + Du. huur, wages, service. + Swed. hyra, rent, wages. + Dan. hyre, hire. + O. Fries. here, a lease. + G. heuer, hire (Flügel's Dict.). β. The orig. sense was perhaps 'service'; the word is probably connected with A. S. híred (for híwred), a family, household, and with E. hind (a servant) and hive. See Hive, Hide (4), Hind (2). Der. hire, verb, A. S. hýrian, Matt. xx. 7; hire-ling, A. S. hýreling, Mark, i. 20.

HIRSUTE, rough, shaggy, bristly. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 616 (R.) — Lat. hirsutus, rough, bristly. Allied to Lat. horrere, to bristle. See Horror. Der. hirsute-ness (Todd).

HIS, of him, of it. (E.) Formerly neut. as well as masc. See He, Its.

HISS, to make a sound like a serpent or a goose. (E.) Wyclif has hissing, a hissing, 2 Chron. xxix. 8. The Lat. sibulat is glossed by hyssyt, i. e. hisses; Wright's Vocab. i. 180, l. 1. — A. S. hysian, to hiss; the Lat. irridebit is glossed by hyseð; A. S. Psalter, ed. Spelman, ii. 4. + O. Du. hisschen, to hiss; Kilian, Oudemans. β. Formed from the sound; the Du. sissen, G. zischen, to hiss, are even more expressive; cf. fizz, whizz, whistle. Der. hiss, sb.; hiss-ing, Jer. xviii. 16, &c.; and see hist, hush.

HIST, an interjection enjoining silence. (E. or Scand.) In Shak. Romeo, ii. 2. 159. In Milton, Il Penseroso, 55, the word hist appears to be a past participle = hushed, silenced; so that 'with thee bring . . . the mute silence hist along' = bring along with thee the mute hushed silence. (So also whist; see Whist.) Perhaps the orig. form was hiss, a particular use of the verb above. Cf. Dan. hys, interj. silence! hyse, to hush. See Hush.

HISTOLOGY, the science which treats of the minute structure of the tissues of plants and animals. (Gk.) A modern scientific term. Coined from Gk. ἱστο-, crude form of ἱστός, a web; and -λογία, equivalent to λόγος, a discourse, from λέγω, to speak. β. The orig. sense of ἱστός is a ship's mast, also the bar or beam of a loom, which in Greek looms stood upright; hence, a warp or web. γ. So called because standing upright; from Gk. ἵστημι, to make to stand, set, place; from ✓ STA, to stand; see Stand.

HISTORY, also STORY, a narrative, account. (L., — Gk.) Story (q. v.) is an abbreviated form. M. E. historie. Fabyan gave to his Chronicle (printed in 1516) the name of The Concordance of Histories. In older authors, we commonly find the form storie, which is of F. origin. Historie is Englished directly from Lat. historia, a history. — Gk. ἱστορία, a learning by enquiry, information, history. — Gk. ἱστορ-, stem of ἵστωρ or ἵστωρ, knowing, learned; standing for ἵδ-τωρ, from the base ἵδ- of εἶδέναι, to know. — ✓ WID, to know; see Wit. Der. histori-an, formerly historien, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 11 (R.); histori-c-al, Tyndal's Works, p. 266, col. 2; histori-c-al-ly: histori-c; histori-o-grapher, a writer of history (from Gk. γράφειν, to write), Gascoigne's Steel Glas, 981; histori-o-graphy. [+]

HISTRIONICAL, relating to the stage. (L.) In Minshew. 'And is a histrionical contempt'; Ben Jonson, Magnetic Lady, A. iii. sc. 4. Coined, with suffix -al, from Lat. histrionicus, of or belonging to a player. — Lat. histrioni-, crude form of histrion, a player, actor. β. The orig. sense was probably 'one who makes others laugh'; cf. Skt. has, to laugh, hasra, a fool.

HIT, to light upon, to strike, to attain to, succeed. (Scand.) M. E. hitten, P. Plowman, B. xii. 108; xvi. 87; Layamon, l. 1550. — Icel. hitta, to hit upon, meet with. + Swed. hitta, to find, discover, light upon. + Dan. hitte, to hit upon. β. Prob. allied to Goth. hinthan, to catch, occurring in the compound frakinthan, to take captive; and to E. hent, hint. See Hint. Cf. also Lat. cadere, to fall, happen. Der. hit, sb.

HITCH, to move by jerks, catch slightly, suddenly. (E.) M. E. hicchen. 'Hytechn, hychyn, hylchen, or remeyvn, Amoveo, moveo, removeo'; Prompt. Parv. p. 239; where the word should have been printed as hychyn or hycchen. We also find: 'Hatchyd [read hacchyd], or remeyvyd, hichid, hychyd, Amotus, remotus'; ibid. Cf. Lowland Scotch hatch, hotch, to move by jerks; Jamieson.

β. The M. E. hicchen can only be a weakened form from an older hikken, used to denote convulsive movement; see Hiccough. ¶ I see no evidence for connecting hitch with hook; though the notion of hooking seems to have crept into the word in modern use. It is rather connected with Hustle, q. v. Der. hitch, sb.

HITHE, HYTHE, a small haven. (E.) M.E. hithe; as in Garlik-hithe, P. Plowman, B. v. 324; and see Prompt. Parv., p. 242, note 1. — A.S. hýð, a haven; Grein, ii. 126. Allied to the verb to hide, and to hide, a skin, covering; with the same sense of protecting or shielding; from ✓KU, shortened form of ✓SKU, to protect, cover. See Hide (1) and Hide (2).

HITHER, to this place. (E.) M.E. hider, hither, Chaucer, C. T. 674; the right form in Chaucer being probably hider, since he rhimes thider with slider; C. T. 1265. [So also M.E. fader, moder are now father, mother; the difference being probably one of dialect.] — A.S. hider (common); also hiðer; Grein, ii. 71. + Icel. hédra. + Dan. hid. + Swed. hit. + Goth. hidre. + Lat. citra, on this side. β. From the Teutonic pronominal base HI, answering to Aryan KA; with comparative suffix, as in af-ter, wher-ther. See He. Der. hither-to; hither-ward, M.E. hiderward, P. Plowman, B. vi. 323.

HIVE, a basket for bees. (E.) The old sense is 'house.' M.E. hive (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 15398. Spelt hyfe, Wright's Vocab. i. 223, col. 2. From the A.S. *hīw, a house; preserved only in the comp. hīw-réden, a family, household (Lat. domus), Matt. x. 6; hīwisc, a household, Luke, xiii. 25; &c. Cf. Northumbrian higo, used to translate Lat. familia; Luke, ii. 4. The word is also to be traced in A.S. hīwan, sb. pl. domestics, Grein, ii. 78; Icel. hjú, a household, híbýti, a homestead; Goth. hēiwafrauja, the master of a house, Mark, xiv. 14; and (probably) in M.H.G. hīrat, G. heirath, marriage. β. All from a Teutonic base HI, equivalent to Aryan ✓KI, to lie, rest; whence Skt. śi, to lie, repose, Gk. κείμαι, I lie. From the same root are also Lat. civis, a citizen; E. civic, civil, city, cemetery, quiet, &c. ¶ But see the important correction in Addenda. [3*]

HO, HOA, a call to excite attention. (E.) α. 'And cried ho!' Chaucer, C. T. 1706. Merely a natural exclamation; cf. Icel. hó, interj. hó!, also Icel. hóa, to shout out hó! β. In some cases, it seems to have been considered as a shortened form of hold; so that we even find 'withouten ho' = without intermission, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 1083. Cf. Du. hou, hold! stop! from houden, to hold.

HOAR, white, grayish white. (E.) M.E. hor, hoor; Chaucer, C. T. 3876, 7764; P. Plowman, B. vi. 85. — A.S. hár, Grein, ii. 14. + Icel. hárr, hoar, hoary. β. Fick (iii. 67) suggests comparison with Skt. gára, variegated in colour, also used of hair mixed with gray and white; Benfey, p. 942. ¶ To be kept distinct from Icel. hár, which is the E. high (the r being merely the sign of the nom. case); and also from E. hair. Der. hoar-y, occurring in the comp. horilocket, having hoary locks, Layamon, 25845; hoar-i-ness; also hoar-frost, M.E. hoorfrost, Wyclif, Exod. xvi. 14; also hoar-hound, q. v.

HOARD, a store, a treasure. (E.) M.E. hord, Chaucer, C. T. 3262; Gower, C. A. iii. 155. — A.S. hord, Grein, ii. 96. + Icel. hodd. + G. hort. + Goth. huzd, a treasure. β. The Teutonic type is HUS-DA (Fick, iii. 79); from the same source as house; a hoard is 'a thing housed.' See House. Der. hoard, verb, A.S. hordian, in Sweet's A.S. Reader; cf. Goth. huzdjan, to hoard; hoard-er, A.S. hordere (Bosworth).

HOARDING, HOARD, a fence enclosing a house while builders are at work. (F., — Du.; or Du.) Rare in books; it is difficult to say how long it may have existed in E. as a builders' term. Either taken directly from Du. horde, a hurdle; or from O. F. horde, a palisade, barrier (Burguy), which is the same word. The suffix -ing is, of course, English. The true E. word is Hurdle, q. v. [†]

HOARHOUND, HOREHOUND, the name of a plant. (E.) The true hoarhound is the white, Marrubium vulgare; the first part of the word is hoar, and the plant is so called because its bushy stems are covered with white woolly down; Johns, Flowers of the Field. It is also 'aromatic'; whence the latter part of the name, as will appear. The final d is excrement; the M.E. form being horehune. 'Marubium, horehune;' Wright's Vocab. i. 139. — A.S. hārhuine; or simply hūne; for numerous examples of which see Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 334; where we also find: 'the syllable hār, hoary, describes the aspect, so that "black horehound" shews how we have forgotten our own language.' The words are also found separate; hā hāran hūnan. We also find hwite hāre hūnan, white horehound, an early indication of the black horehound, Ballota nigra, a very strong-smelling plant. β. The first syllable is obvious; see Hoar. The second syllable means 'strong-scented'; cf. Lat. cunila, a species of origanum, Pliny, xix. 8. 50; Gk. κονίλη, a species of origanum; so named, in all probability, from its strong scent; cf. Skt. krūy, to stink; Benfey, p. 224. ¶ It thus appears that the right names should have been hoar houn and black houn; white hoar-hound involves a reduplication; and black hoarhound, a contradiction.

HOARSE, having a rough, harsh voice. (E.) The r in this word is wholly intrusive, and is (generally) not sounded; still, it was inserted at an early period. M.E. hoos, hos, hors; all three spellings occur in P. Plowman, B. xvii. 324 (and various readings); horse, Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 347. — A.S. hás, Grein, ii. 14. + Icel. háss. + Dan. hás. + Swed. hes. + Du. heesch. + G. heiser. β. All from a Teutonic type HAISA; Fick, iii. 57. Root unknown. Der. hoarse-ly, hoarse-ness.

HOARY, white; see Hoar.

HOAX, to trick, to play a practical joke. (Low Lat.) In Todd's Johnson; not found in early writers. The late appearance of the word shews that it is a mere corruption of hocus, used in just the same sense. 'Legerdemain, with which these jugglers hocus the vulgar;' Nalson, in Todd. 'This gift of hocus-pocussing;' L'Estrange (Todd). See Hocus-Pocus. ¶ Not from the A.S. hux, husc, a taunt, occurring in Layamon; as has been too cleverly suggested. There is no bridge to connect the words chronologically; and they have different vowels. Der. hoax, sb.

HOB (1), HUB, the nave of a wheel, part of a grate. (E.) The true sense is 'projection.' Hence hub, 'the nave of a wheel (Oxfordshire); a small stack of hay, the mark to be thrown at in quoits, the hilt of a weapon; up to the hub, as far as possible;' Halliwell. The mark for quoits is the same word as hob, 'a small piece of wood of a cylindrical form, used by boys to set on end, to put half-pence on to chuck or pitch at;' Halliwell. Hob also means the shoe (projecting edge) of a sledge. The hob of a fire-place is explained by Wedgwood as 'the raised stone on either side of the hearth between which the embers were confined.' β. Though not easily traced in early English, the sense is well preserved in the related word hump, which is the same word with a nasalised termination. Thus the true orig. base was hup, easily corrupted to hub, hob. From the Teutonic base HUP, to go up and down (Fick, iii. 77), whence also E. hop, hump. See Hop (1), Hump. Der. hob-nail, a nail with a projecting head, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 398; 2 Hen. VI, iv. 10. 63; hob-nail-ed.

HOB (2), a clown, a rustic, a fairy. (F., — O. H. G.) 'The hobbes as wise as grauest men;' Drant's tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry (R.) 'From elves, hobs, and fairies that trouble our dairies;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Monsieur Thomas, iv. 6. See Nares; also Hob in Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary, where, however, the suggestion of identification of hob with elf is to be rejected. It is quite certain that Hob was a common personal name, and in early use. 'To beg of Hob and Dick;' Cor. ii. 3. 123. That it was in early use is clear from its numerous derivatives, as Hobbs, Hobbins, Hobson, Hopkins, Hopkinson. β. That Hob, strange as it may seem, was a popular corruption of Robin is clearly borne out by the equally strange corruption of Hodge from Roger, as well as by the name of Robin Good-fellow for the hob-goblin Puck; (Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 34, 40). γ. The name Robin is French, and, like Robert, is of O. H. G. origin; Littré considers it as a mere pet corruption from Robert, a name early known in England, as being that of the eldest son of Will. I. Der. hob-goblin. See Robin.

HOBBLE, to limp, walk with a limp. (E.) M.E. hobelen (with one b), P. Plowman, A. i. 113; P. Plowman's Crede, 106; and see Barbour's Bruce, iv. 447. The frequentative of hop; so that the lit. sense is 'to hop often.' + Du. hobbelen, to toss, ride on a hobby-horse, stammer, stutter (all with the notion of repetition of uneven motion). + Prov. G. hoppeln, to hop, hobble (Flügel). See Hop (1). Der. hobble, sb.

HOBBY (1), HOBBY-HORSE, an ambling nag, a toy like a horse, a favourite pursuit. (F., — O. Low G.) See Hobby in Trench, Select Glossary. A hobby is now a favourite pursuit, but formerly a toy in imitation of a prancing nag, the orig. sense being a kind of prancing horse. In Hamlet, ii. 2. 142. 'They have likewise excellent good horses, we term the hobbies;' Holland, Camden's Ireland, p. 63. A corruption of M.E. hobin, a nag; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xiv. 68, 500. — O. F. hobin, 'a hobby, a little ambling and shortmaned horse;' Cot. [Said in Littré to be a Scotch word; but it was merely a F. word in use in Scotland in the fourteenth century; the suffix -in (= Lat. -inus) being wholly French. Cf. Ital. ubino, a Shetland pony.] — O. F. hober, 'to stirre, move, remove from place to place, a rustic word;' Cot. β. Of O. Du. or Scand. origin. — O. Du. hobben, to toss, move up and down; Du. hobben, to toss; a weakened form of hoppenn, to hop, which is cognate with E. Hop (1), q. v. γ. So too we find O. Swed. hoppa, a young mare, from hoppa, to hop; Ihre. So also Dan. hoppe, a mare; North Friesic hoppe, a horse, in children's language (Outzen). [†]

HOBBY (2), a small species of falcon. (F., — O. Low G.) Cotgrave translates O. F. hobreau by 'the hawk termed a hobby.' M.E. hobi, hoby (with one b). 'Hoby, hawk;' Prompt. Parv.; pl. hobies, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, cap. xviii; see Spec. of English, ed. Skeat, p. 204. Like other terms of falconry, it is of F. origin; being merely the corruption of the O. F. hobreau mentioned above. So named from its movement. — O. F. hober, 'to stirre, move, remove from place to place;' Cot. See Hobby (1). ¶ This etymology is confirmed by noting that the O. F. verb hober was sometimes spelt auher (Cot.); corresponding to which latter form, the hobby was also called aubereau. Note also M. E. hobeler, a man mounted on a hobby or small horse; Barbour's Bruce, xi. 110.

HOBGOBLIN, a kind of fairy. In Minshen, ed. 1627; and in Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 40. Compounded of hob and goblin. See Hob (2) and Goblin.

HOBNAIL, a kind of nail. See Hob (1).

HOBNOB, HABNAB, with free leave, in any case, at A. S. (E.) Compounded of hab and nab, derived respectively from A. S. habban, to have, and nabban, not to have. 1. In one aspect it means 'take it or leave it'; implying free choice, and hence a familiar invitation to drink, originating the phrase 'to hob-nob together.' 'Hob-nob is his word; give't or take't'; Twelfth Night, iii. 4. 262. 2. In another aspect, it means hit or miss, at random; also, in any case. 'Philautus determined, hab, nab, to sende his letters; i. e. whatever might happen; Lyly's Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 354. 'Although set down hab-nab, at random;' Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 990. β . Hab is from A. S. habban; see Have. Nab is from A. S. nabban, a contracted form of ne habban, not to have.

HOCK (1), the hough; see Hough.

HOCK (2), the name of a wine. (G.) 'What wine is it? Hock;' Beaum. and Fletcher, The Chances, A. v. sc. 3. A familiar corruption of Hochheim, the name of a place in Germany, on the River Main, whence the wine came. It means 'high home;' see High and Home.

HOCKEY, the name of a game. (E.) Also called hokey; so named because played with a hooked stick; see Hook. ¶ In some places called bandy, the ball being banded backwards and forwards.

HOCUS-POCUS, a juggler's trick, a juggler. (Low Lat.) Hokus-Pokus is the name of the juggler in Ben Jonson, Magnetic Lady, Chorus at end of Act i. In Butler's Hudibras, it means a trick; 'As easily as hocus-pocus;' pt. iii. c. 3. l. 708. If the word may be said to belong to any language at all, it is bad Latin, as shewn by the termination -us. The reduplicated word was a mere invention, used by jugglers in playing tricks. 'At the playing of every trick, he used to say "hocus pocus, tontus, talontus, vade celeriter, jubee;"' Ady's Candle in the Dark, Treat. of Witches, &c. p. 29; cited in Todd. See the whole article in Todd. ¶ The 'derivations' sometimes assigned are ridiculous; the word no more needs to be traced than its companions tontus and talontus. Der. hocus, to cheat; see Todd. Hence, perhaps, hoax, q. v.

HOD, a kind of trough for carrying bricks on the shoulder. (F., -G.) 'A lath-hammer, trowel, a hod, or a traie;' Tusser, Five Hundred Points of Husbandry, sect. 16, st. 16 (E. D. S. edition, p. 37, last line). Corrupted from hot, prob. by confusion with prov. E. hod, a box (lit. a hold, receptacle); Whitby Glossary. - F. hotte, a scuttle, dorer, basket to carry on the back; the right hod is wide at the top and narrow at the bottom; Cot. Of Teutonic origin; O. Du. hotte, a pedler's box or basket, carried on the back (Oudemans); provin. G. hotte, a wooden vessel, tub, a vintager's dorer (Flügel). β . Root uncertain; but the word is probably related to hut; thus the Skt. hut not only means 'a hut,' but also 'a vessel serving for fumigation;' Benfey, p. 191. See Hut. [†] Der. hod-man.

HODGE-PODGE, a mixture; see Hotchpot.

HOE, an instrument for cutting up weeds, &c. (F., -G.) 'How, pronounced as [i. e. to rhyme with] mow and throw; a narrow iron rake without teeth, to cleanse gardens from weeds; rastrum Gallicum [a French rake]; Ray's Collection of South-Country Words, ed. 1691. Written haugh by Evelyn (R.) - F. houe, 'an instrument of husbandry, which hath a crooked handle, or helve of wood, some two foot long, and a broad and in-bending head of iron;' Cot. - O. H. G. houwa, G. haue, a hoe. - O. H. G. houwan, to hew; cognate with E. hew. See Hew. Der. hoe, vb.

HOG, the name of an animal, a pig. (C.) M. E. hog; Wyclif, Luke, xv. 16; King Alisaunder, 1885. - W. hwch, a sow. + Bret. houch, hoch, a hog. + Corn. hoch, a pig, hog. β . Since a Welsh initial h answers to an Aryan s, we may doubtless consider these words as cognate with Irish suig, a pig, and A. S. sugu, a sow; cf. also Lat. sus, Gk. ūs. See Sow. Der. hogg-ish, hogg-ish-ly, hogg-ish-ness; hog-ring-er; hog's-lard. ¶ But see the Addenda. [*]

HOGSHEAD, a measure containing about 52½ gallons; a half-pipe. (O. Du.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 252; L. L. L. iv. 2. 88; &c. Also in Cotgrave, to translate F. tonneau; it seems to have meant a large cask. Minshew, ed. 1627, refers us to 'An. i Rich. III, cap. 13.' The E. word is a sort of attempt at a translation or accommodation of the O. Du. word, which was imported into other languages as well as English. - O. Du. okshoofd, oxhoofd, a hogshead; see Sewel's Du. Dict. and Bremen Wörterbuch. β . This word was certainly understood to mean 'ox-head,' though the mod. Du. form for 'ox' is os. We may, however, compare Dan. okshoved, meaning (1) head of an ox, (2) a hogshead; O. Swed. oxhufvud, a hogshead, lit. 'ox-head' (Ihre); G. oxkopf, a hogshead, borrowed directly from the Dutch unchanged.

γ . Origin of the name unknown; the most probable suggestion is that by H. Tiedeman, in Notes and Queries, iv. 2. 46, that the cask may have been named from the device of an 'ox-head' having been branded upon it. In any case, the first syllable, in English, is a corruption. ¶ Numerous guesses, mostly silly, have been made. The word is found in Dutch as early as 1550 (Tiedeman). [†]

HOLDEN, HOYDEN, a romping girl. (O. Du.) See hoyden in Trench, Select Glossary; in old authors, it is usually applied to the male sex, and means a clown, a lout, a rustic. 'Badault, a fool, dolt, sot, . . . gaping hoydon;' Cot. 'Falourdin, a luske, lowte, . . . lumpish hoydon;' id. 'Hilts. You mean to make a hoyden or a hare Of me, to hunt counter thus, and make these doubles;' Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, A. ii. sc. 1. - O. Du. heyden (mod. Du. heiden), a heathen, gentile; also a gipsy, vagabond; Sewel. - O. Du. heyde, a heath. See Heathen, Heath. ¶ The Du. ey being sounded nearly as English long i, the vowel-change is slight; precisely the same change occurs in hoise; see Hoist. The W. hoeden, having only the modern E. meaning of 'coquette,' must have been borrowed from English, and is not the original, as supposed in Webster.

HOIST, to heave, raise with tackle. (O. Du.) The t is ex-crescent, and due to confusion with the pp. The verb is properly hoise, with pp. hoist = hoised. 'Hoised up the main-sail;' Acts, xxvii. 40. Shak. has both hoise and hoist, and (in the pp.) both hoist and hoisted; Rich. III, iv. 4. 529; Temp. i. 2. 148; Hamlet, iii. 4. 207; Antony, iii. 10. 15, iv. 12. 34, v. 2. 55. 'We hoise up mast and sayle;' Sackville's Induction, st. 71 (A. D. 1563). - O. Du. hyssen, to hoise (Sewel); mod. Du. hijscen. [The O. Du. y (mod. i) being sounded like English long i, the vowel-change is slight, and much like that in hoyden, q. v.] + Dan. heise, hisse, to hoist. + Swed. kissa, to hoist; kissa upp, to hoist up. Cf. F. hisser, to hoist a sail, borrowed from the Scandinavian; quite distinct from F. hausser, to exalt, which is from Lat. altus, high (F. haut). Root unknown; cf. Lithuan. kiszti, to place. [†]

HOLD (1), to keep, retain, defend, restrain. (E.) M. E. holden, Chaucer, C. T. 12116. - A. S. healdan, haldan, Grein, ii. 50. + Du. houden. + Icel. halda. + Swed. hålla. + Dan. holde. + Goth. haldan. + G. halten. β . The general Teutonic form is haldan (Fick, iii. 73); which is probably an extension from the Teutonic base HAL, to raise; see Hill, Haulm, Holm. Der. hold, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 10481; hold-fast, hold-ing.

HOLD (2), the 'hold' of a ship. (Du.) 'A hulk better stuffed in the hold;' 2 Hen. IV, iv. 2. 70. Not named, as might be supposed, from what it holds; but a nautical term, borrowed (like most other such) from the Dutch. The d is really ex-crescent, and due to a natural confusion with the E. verb. The right sense is 'hole.' - Du. hol, a hole, cave, den, cavity; Sewel gives also 'het hol van een schip, the ship's hold or hull.' Cognate with E. Hole, q. v.

HOLE, a cavity, hollow place. (E.) M. E. hole, hol; Chaucer, C. T. 3440, 3442; Havelok, 1813. - A. S. hol, a cave; Grein, ii. 92. + Du. hol. + Icel. hol, kola. + Dan. hul. + Swed. höl. + G. hohl; O. H. G. hol. Cf. also Goth. hulundi, a hollow, cave; us-hulon, to hollow out, Matt. xxvii. 60. β . The root is not quite certain; Fick (iii. 70, l. 527) refers it to Teutonic base HAL, to cover, hide; from ✓KAL, to hide; see Hell. γ . But some endeavour to connect E. hole, hollow with Gk. κῶλος, hollow; from Gk. κῆναι, to take in, whence also κῆναι, κῆναι, a cavity; all from ✓KU, to contain, take in, be hollow; Fick, i. 551. The latter view is that taken by Curtius, i. 192; in this case, the -l is merely suffixed. See Hollow and Hold (2). [†]

HOLIBUT, a fish. (E.) See Halibut.

HOLIDAY, a holy day, festival, day of amusement. (E.) For holy day. Spelt holy day; Chaucer, C. T. 3309; haliday, P. Plowman, B. v. 409. See Holy and Day.

HOLINESS, a being holy. (E.) See Holy.

HOLLA, HOLLO, stop, wait! (F.) Not the same word as halloo, q. v., but somewhat differently used in old authors. The true sense is stop! wait! and it was at first used as an interjection simply, though easily confused with halloo, and thus acquiring the sense of shout. 'Holla, stand there;' Othello, i. 2. 56. 'Cry holla [stop!] to thy tongue;' As You Like It, iii. 2. 257. - F. hold, 'an interjection, hoe there, enough; . . . also, hear you me, or come hither;' Cot. - F. ho, interjection; and là, there. β . The F. là is an abbreviation from Lat. illac, that way, there, orig. fem. ablative from illie, pron. he yonder, which is a compound of ille, he, and the enclitic ce, meaning 'there.' Der. holla, hollo, verb; K. Lear, iii. 1. 55; Twelfth Night, i. 5. 291. ¶ But note that there is properly a distinction between holla (with final a), the French form, and hollo (with final o), a variant of halloo, the English form. Confusion was inevitable; yet it is worth noting that the F. la accounts for the final a, just as A.S. la accounts for the final o or oo; since A.S. a becomes long o by rule, as in bán, a bone, stán, a stone.

HOLLAND, Dutch linen. (Du.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 82. From the name of the country; Du. Holland. It means holt-land, i.e. woodland. Der. from the same source, hollands, i.e. gin made in Holland. [†]

HOLLOW, vacant, concave; as sb., a hole, cavity. (E.) M. E. holwe, Chaucer, C. T. 291, 1365. — A.S. holh, only as a sb., signifying a hollow place, vacant space; also spelt holg, heolce; see Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 365; Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 218, ll. 1, 3, 4, 9; p. 241, l. 7. An extended form from A.S. hol, a hole; see Hole. Der. hollow, verb; 'hollow your body more, sir, thus;' Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ed. Wheatley, i. 5. 136; hollow-ly, Temp. iii. 1. 70; hollow-ness, M. E. holownesse, Chaucer, Troil. v. 1821; hollow-eyed, Com. Errors, v. 240; hollow-hearted, Rich. III, iv. 4. 435.

HOLLY, the name of a prickly shrub. (E.) The word has lost a final n. M. E. holin, holyn. The F. hous [holly] is glossed by holyn in Wright's Vocab. i. 163, l. 17; the spellings holin, holie both occur in the Ancræn Riwle, p. 418, note 1. — A.S. holen, holegn; Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 332. + W. celyn; Corn. celin; Bret. helen, holly. + Gael. cuilinn; Irish cuileann, holly.

β. The change from A.S. h to Celtic c shews that the words are cognate; the base of the A.S. word is also preserved in Du. hulst, G. hülse, holly; and from the older form (said to be huliz) of the G. word the F. houx is derived. γ. Thus the form of the base appears as KUL (= Teutonic HUL); possibly connected with Lat. culmen, a peak, culmus, a stalk; perhaps because the leaves are 'pointed.' Der. holm-oak, q. v.

HOLLYHOCK, a kind of mallow. (Hybrid; E. and C.) It should be spelt with one l, like holiday. M. E. holihoc, to translate Lat. althæa and O. F. ymalæ, in a list of plants; Wright's Vocab. i. 140, col. 1, l. 6. [Here the O. F. ymalæ = mod. F. guimauve, the marsh mallow (Cot.)] Also spelt holihocce, holihoke; see Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 332, col. 1, bottom. Compounded from M. E. holi, holy; and hocce, hoke, hoc, a mallow, from A.S. hoc, a mallow; id. Minsheu, ed. 1627, gives 'Holie hocke, i. e. malua sacra.'

β. The mallow was also called in A.S. hoclæf, which at first sight seems to mean 'hook-leaf;' but we should rather keep to the orig. sense of 'mallow' for hoc, as the word seems to have been borrowed from Celtic; cf. W. hocys, mallows; hocys bendigaid, hollyhock, lit. 'blessed mallow' (where bendigaid is equivalent to Lat. benedictus).

γ. The hollyhock was doubtless so called from being brought from the Holy Land, where it is indigenous. Wedgwood. [†]

HOLM, an islet in a river; flat land near a river. (E.) 'Holm, a river-island;' Coles, ed. 1684. 'Holm, in old records, an hill, island, or fenny ground, encompassed with little brooks;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The true sense is 'a mound,' or any slightly rising ground; and, as such ground often has water round it, it came to mean an island. Again, as a rising slope is often situated beside a river, it came to mean a bank, wharf, or dockyard, as in German. The most curious use is in A.S., where the main sea itself is often called holm, from its convex shape, just as we use 'The Downs' (lit. hills) to signify the open sea. M. E. holm. 'Holm, place besydone a water, Hulmus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 243; see Way's note, which is full of information about the word. [The Low Lat. hulmus is nothing but the Teutonic word Latinised.] — A.S. holm, a mound, a billow, the open sea; Grein, ii. 94. + Icel. holmr, holmi, holmr, an islet; 'even meadows on the shore with ditches behind them are in Icelandic called holms.' + Dan. holm, a holm, quay, dockyard. + Swed. holme, a small island. + G. holm, a hill, island, dockyard, wharf (Flügel). + Russ. kholm, a hill. + Lat. culmen, culmen, a mountain-top; cf. Lat. collis, a hill. See Culminate, Column.

HOLM-OAK, the evergreen oak. (E.) Cotgrave translates O. F. yeuse by 'the holme oake, barren scarlet oak, French oak.' The tree is the Quercus Ilex, or common evergreen oak, 'a most variable plant, . . . with leaves varying from being as prickly as a holly to being as even as the edge as an olive;' Eng. Cyclop. s. v. Quercus. Whether because it is an ever-green, or because its leaves are sometimes prickly, we at any rate know that it is so called from its resemblance to the holly.

β. The M. E. name for holly was holin, sometimes corrupted to holm or holy. 'Holme, or holy;' Prompt. Parv. p. 244; and see Way's note. 'Hollie, or Holmtree;' Minsheu. The form holm is in Chaucer, C. T. 2923. Thus holm-oak = holly-oak. See Holly.

HOLOCAUST, an entire burnt sacrifice. (L., = Gk.) So called because the victim offered was burnt entire. It occurs early, in the Story of Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1319, 1326, where it is plainly taken from the Vulgate version of Gen. xxii. 8. — Lat. holocaustum; Gen. xxii. 8. — Gk. δλόκαυστον, neut. of δλόκαυστος, δλόκαυτος, burnt whole. — Gk. δλο, crude form of δλος, whole, entire; and καλεν (fut. καλοσ-ω), to burn. β. The Gk. δλος is related to Lat. solidus; καλεν is from √ KU, to burn. See Solid and Calm.

HOLSTER, a leathern case for a pistol. (Du.) Merely 'a case;' though now restricted to a peculiar use. In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 391. — Du. holster, a pistol-case, holster; also, a soldier's knapsack (Sewel).

β. The word is not orig. E., though we find hulstred = covered, Rom. of the Rose, 6146; but the Du. word is cognate with A.S. heolstor, a hiding-place, cave, covering, Grein, ii. 67; as well as with Icel. hulstr, a case, sheath; Goth. hulistr, a veil, 2 Cor. iii. 13.

γ. Derived from Du. hullen, to cover, mask, disguise; similarly the Icel. hulstr is from Icel. hylja, to cover; and the Goth. hulistr is from Goth. huljan, to cover. The A.S. verb corresponding to the weak verbs Du. hullen, Icel. hylja, Goth. huljan, to cover, does not appear in MSS. but is preserved in the prov. Eng. hull, to cover up = M. E. hulen, to cover (Stratmann).

δ. This verb is closely related to Goth. hulandi, a hollow, A.S. hol, a hole, and E. hole; and all these words are to be referred back to the Teutonic base HAL, to cover = √ KAL, to cover, whence A.S. helan, Lat. celare, to cover; also Lat. occudere, to cover over. See Hole, Conceal, Occult.

ε. Fick gives the European form as HULISTRA = hul-is-tra, with double suffix, denoting the agent, so that the word means 'coverer;' cf. Lat. mag-is-ter, min-is-ter. Thus the suffix is not simply -ster, but -s-ter; where the -s- answers to Aryan suffix -as-, which mostly is used to form neuter nouns of action, seldom for nouns denoting an agent; Schleicher, Compendium, § 230. The suffix -ter is common, and occurs in Lat. pa-ter, ma-ter; and commonly denotes the agent. See also Hull, a related word.

HOLT, a wood, woody hill. (E.) 'Holt, a small wood, or grove;' Kersey, ed. 1715. M. E. holt, Chaucer, C. T. 6. 'Hoc virgultum, a holt;' Wright's Vocab. i. 270, col. 1. — A.S. holt, a wood, grove; Grein, ii. 95. + Du. hout (for holt), wood, timber, + Icel. holt, a copse. + G. holz, a wood, grove; also wood, timber. β. Cf. also W. celt, a covert, shelter; from celu, to hide. Also Irish coill (pl. coillte), a wood; coillteach, woody; ceilt, concealment.

γ. The orig. sense was 'covert' or 'shelter;' from √ KAL, to hide. See Holster, Hole.

HOLY, sacred, pure, sainted. (E.) This word is nothing but M. E. hool (now spelt whole) with suffix -y. M. E. holi, holy; Chaucer, C. T. 178, 5095. — A.S. hālig; Grein, ii. 7. — A.S. hāl, whole; with suffix -ig (= mod. E. -y); so the orig. sense is 'perfect,' or excellent. + Du. heilig; from heel, whole. + Icel. heilagr, often contracted to helgr; from heill, hale, whole. + Dan. heilig; from hehl. + Swed. helig; from hel. + G. heilig; from heil. See Whole, Hale. Der. holi-ly; holi-ness, A.S. hālignes; holi-day, q. v.; holly-hock (for holy hock), q. v.; hali-but (= holly but), q. v.

HOMAGE, the submission of a vassal to a lord. (F., = L.) In early use. In Rob. of Glouc. p. 46, l. 5; p. 134, l. 17; P. Plowman, B. xii. 155. — O. F. homage, later hommage, the service of a vassal. — Low Lat. homaticum (also hominium), the service of a vassal or 'man.' — Lat. homo (stem homin-), a man; hence, a servant, vassal; lit. 'a creature of earth.' — Lat. humus, earth, the ground.

β. From the base GHAMA, earth; whence also Russ. zemlia, earth, land; Gk. χαμα, on the ground. And see Human. γ. The A.S. guma, a man, is cognate with Lat. homo; see Bridegroom.

HOME, native place, place of residence. (E.) M. E. hoom, home; Chaucer, C. T. 2367; P. Plowman, B. v. 305; vi. 203; commonly in the phrase 'to go home.' — A.S. hām, home, a dwelling; Grein, ii. 9. The acc. case is used adverbially, as in hām cuman, to come home; cf. Lat. ire domum. + Du. heim, in the comp. heimelijck, private, secret. + Icel. heimr, an abode, village; heima, home. + Dan. hiem, home; also used adverbially, as in E. + Swed. hem, home; and used as adv. + G. heim. + Goth. haims, a village. + Lithuanian kēmas, a village (Fick, iii. 75). + Gk. κόμη, a village.

β. All from √ KI, to rest; cf. Gk. κίμαι, I lie, κοίτος, sleep, κοίτη, a bed; Skt. śā, to lie down, repose. From the same root is Lat. civis, a villager, hence a citizen, and E. hive. See Hive, City, Cemetery, Quiet. Thus the orig. sense is 'resting-place.' Der. home-bred, Rich. II, i. 3. 187; home-farm; home-felt; home-keeping, Two Gent. of Verona, i. 1. 2; home-less, A.S. hāmleás (Grein); home-less-ness; home-ly, Chaucer, C. T. 330; home-li-ness, M. E. homeliness, Chaucer, C. T. 8305; home-made; home-sick; home-sick-ness; home-spun, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 79; home-stall; home-stead (see Stead); home-ward, A.S. hāmweard, Gen. xxiv. 61; home-wards.

HOMEOPATHY, HOMŒOPATHY, a particular treatment of disease. (Gk.) The system is an attempt to cure a disease by the use of small doses of drugs such as would produce the symptoms of the disease in a sound person. Hence the name, signifying 'similar feeling.' Proposed by Dr. Hahnemann, of Leipsic (died 1843). Englished from Gk. ὁμοιοπάθεια, likeness in feeling or condition, sympathy. — Gk. δμοιο-, crude form of δμοιος, like, similar; and παθ-ειν, aorist infin. of πάσχειν, to suffer. The Gk. δμοιος is from δμῶς, where w is unoriginal; see Whoop. Der. hoop-ing-cough, a cough, accompanied with a hoop or convulsive noisy catching of the breath; formerly called the chincough. See Chincough. ¶ Also spelt whooping-cough, but this makes no real difference.

HOOPOE, the name of a bird. (L.) α. The old name for the bird was houpe or hoopo, as in Minshew's Dict., ed. 1627. This is the F. form; from F. huppe, O. F. huppe, huppe; spelt huppe in Philip de Thaum, Livre des Creatures, l. 1238, pr. in Wright's Popular Treatises on Science, p. 119.

β. Both E. hoopoe and F. huppe are from Lat. upupa, a hoopoe; the initial h in the mod. E. form being borrowed from the h in the F. form.

γ. Called επωψ in Greek; both Lat. upupa and Gk. επωψ (= ap-ap-s) are words of onomatopoeic origin, due to an imitation of the bird's cry. ¶ The bird has a remarkable tuft on its head; hence F. huppe, a tuft of feathers. But the tuft is named from the bird; not vice versa.

HOOT, to shout in derision. (Scand.) M. E. houten, whence the pp. yhouted, yhouted = hooted at; P. Plowman, B. ii. 218; also huten, Ormulum, 2034. Of Scand. origin; the original being preserved in O. Swed. huta, in the phrase huta ut en, lit. to hoot one out, to cast out with contempt, as one would a dog (Ihre); Swed. huta ut, to take one up sharply.

β. Formed from the Swed. interj. hut, begone! a word prob. of onomatopoeic origin, and perhaps Celtic; cf. W. hut, off! away! Irish ut, out! psal. Gael. ut! interjection of dislike.

γ. Cognate with hoot is M. H. G. hiuzen, hiuzen, to call to the pursuit, from the interjection hiu (mod. G. hui), hallo! So also Dan. huie, to shout, hoot, halloo, from hui, hallo! The loss of t in the Danish form well illustrates the O. F. huer, to shout. Der. hoot, sb.; hie, in the phrase hue and cry; see Hue (2).

HOP (1), to leap on one leg. (E.) Formerly used of dancing on both legs. M. E. hoppen, huppen. 'At every bridal wolde he singe and hoppe,' i. e. dance; Chaucer, C. T. 4373. 'To huppe abowte' = to dance about, P. Plowman, C. xviii. 279. — A. S. hoppian, to leap, dance; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 202, l. 22. + Du. hoppen, to hop. + Icel. hoppa, to hop, skip. + Swed. hoppa, to leap, jump, hop. + Dan. hoppe (the same). + G. hüpfen (the same).

β. All from the Teutonic base HUP, to hop, go up and down; Fick, iii. 77. — ✓ KUP, to go up and down; whence Skt. kup, to be excited, and Lat. cupido, strong desire; see Cupidity. Der. hop, sb. (we still sometimes use hop in the old sense of 'a dance'); hopper (of a mill), M. E. hoper or hopper, Chaucer, C. T. 4034, 4037; hop-scotch, a game in which children hop over lines scotched or traced on the ground (see Scotch); hopp-le, a fetter for horses, causing them to hop or progress slowly, a frequentative form. Also hobb-le (= hop-le); see Hobble. Also grass-hopper, q. v. And see Hip (1), Heap, Hump, Hoop (1); all from the same root.

HOP (2), the name of a plant. (Du.) In Cotgrave, to translate O. F. houblon (= F. houblon). Also in Minshew's Dict., ed. 1627. 'Hoppe, humulus, lupulus;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'Hoppes in byere' [beer]; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 21. 'Introduced from the Netherlands into England about 1524, and used in brewing;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. — Du. hop, the hop-plant. + G. hopfen, the hop. β. We also find Icel. humall, Swed. and Dan. humle, O. Du. hommel, the hop (Kilian); whence was formed the late Lat. humulus, now used as the botanical name. [The F. houblon is of Walloon origin, and ultimately from the Dutch.]

γ. These forms must be connected, and point back to a base hump (see Hump) and to the ✓ KAMP, to bend; cf. Gk. καμπύλος, bent, crooked, curved; in allusion to the twining nature of the plant. See Hoop (1). δ. This is made clearer by noting that the Gk. κούφος, light, Skt. chapala, trembling, unsteady, giddy, wanton, are from the same ✓ KAMP; and that the Skt. kamp also means to tremble, vibrate. These words illustrate the loss of m, and further give to the hop the notion of slenderness and lightness as well as of twining.

¶ We may also note that the ✓ KAP, KAMP is probably related to the ✓ KUP, producing a sort of connection with the verb to hop above. Der. hop-vine, hop-bind (corruptly hop-bine). [†]

HOPE (1), expectation; as a verb, to expect. (E.) The verb is weak, and seems to be derived from the sb. M. E. hope, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 88. M. E. hopen, verb, sometimes in the sense 'to expect;' as, 'Our manciple, I hope he wol be deed' = I fear he will be dead; Chaucer, C. T. 4027. See P. Plowman, C. xviii. 313, and the note. — A. S. hopa, sb., only used in the comp. tíðhopa, hope, Grein, ii. 545; hopian, v. to hope, Grein, ii. 96. + Du. hoop, sb., hopen, v. + Dan. haab, sb., haabe, v. + Swed. hoffen, sb.; whence the reflexive verb hoppas, to hope. + M. H. G. hoffe, sb., represented by mod. G. hoffnung; G. hoffen, to hope.

β. Perhaps allied to Lat. cupere, to desire; see Cupidity. Der. hope-ful, hope-ful-ly, hope-ful-ness; hope-less, -ly, -ness. [†]

HOPE (2), a troop. (Du.) Only in the phr. forlorn hope, North's Plutarch, ed. 1631, p. 372; from Du. verloren hoop; See Forlorn.

Here hoop = band, troop, as in 'een hoop krijghs-wolk, a troupe or a band of souldiers;' Hexham. The usual sense is heap; see Heap.

HORDE, a wandering troop or tribe. (F., — Turk., — Tatar.) Used in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 61. — F. horde, first in use in the 16th century (Littre). — Turk. ordú, a camp; Pers. órdú, 'a court, camp, horde of Tartars;' also urdú, a camp, an army; Rich. Pers. Dict., pp. 56, 201. First applied to the Tatar tribes. [†]

HOREHOUND, a plant; see Hoarhound.

HORIZON, the circle bounding the view where earth and sky seem to meet. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 81. [But we also find M. E. orizonte, Chaucer, Treatise on the Astrolabe, prol. l. 7. This is (through the O. F.) from the Lat. acc. horizontem.]

— F. horizon, 'a horizon;' Cot. — Lat. horizon (stem horizont-). — Gk. ὁρίζων, the bounding or limiting circle; orig. the pres. pt. of the vb. ὁρίζω, to bound, limit. — Gk. ὅρος, a boundary, limit; of which the Ionic form is ὄρος = ὄρφος, from the base ὄρ-; Curtius, ii. 350. — ✓ AR, perhaps in the sense of 'reach;' cf. Skt. ri, to go, to go to; Fick assigns the meaning 'to separate;' i. 21. Der. horizont-al, horizont-al-ly.

HORN, the hard substance projecting from the heads of some animals. (E.) M. E. horn, Chaucer, C. T. 116. — A. S. horn, Grein, ii. 98. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. horn. + Du. horen [for horn, the e being due to the trilling of the r.] + G. horn + Goth. hauru. + W., Gael., and Irish corn. + Lat. cornu.

β. All from a base kar-na, a horn, the -na being a suffix which does not appear in the Gk. κέρας, a horn (base kar-wa). Probably from ✓ KAR, to be hard; see Curtius, i. 177, 180. Der. horn-beam, a tree; horn-bill, a bird; horn-blende, a mineral term, wholly borrowed from G. horn-blende, where -blende is from blenden, to dazzle, lit. to make blind; horn-book, L. L. v. 1. 49; horn-ed, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 243, spelt hornyd in Prompt. Parv. p. 247; horn-owl or horn-ed owl; horn-pipe, Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 47, a dance so called because danced to an instrument with that name, mentioned in the Rom. of the Rose, 4250; horn-stone; horn-work, a term in fortification, named from its projections; horn-less; horn-y, Milton, P. R. ii. 267; also horn-et, q. v. From the same source are corn (2), corn-er, corn-et, &c.

HORNET, a kind of large wasp. (E.) So called from its antennæ or horns. In Holland's Pliny, b. xi. c. 21. — A. S. hyrnet, hyrny; the pl. hyrnyttas occurs in Exod. xxiii. 28. 'Crabro, hyrnet;' Ælfric's Gloss., De Nominibus Insectorum. Formed, with dimin. suffix -et, from horn, a horn, by regular vowel-change; cf. hyrned = horned, Grein, ii. 133. The vowel has, however, reverted in mod. E. to the original o, for clearness. See Horn. [†]

HOROLOGE, an instrument for telling the hours, a clock. (F., — Lat., — Gk.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 135. Perhaps obsolete. M. E. orologe, Chaucer, C. T. 14860. — O. F. horologe, later horloge; 'Horloge, a clock or dyall;' Cot. — Lat. horologium, a sun-dial, a water-clock. — Gk. ὥρολόγιον, the same. — Gk. ὥρο, for ώρα, a season, period, hour; and -λογιον, formed from λέγειν, to tell. See Hour and Logic. Der. horology-y, horolog-i-c-al.

HOROSCOPE, an observation of the sky at a person's nativity. (F., — L., — Gk.) A term in astrology. In Cotgrave. [Chaucer uses the Lat. term horoscopum; Treatise on the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, pt. ii. § 4. 8, 36.] — F. horoscope, 'the horoscope, or ascendant at a nativity;' Cot. — Lat. horoscopus, a horoscope; from horoscopus, adj., that shews the hour. — Gk. ὥροσκόπος, a horoscope; from the adj. ὥροσκόπος, observing the hour. — Gk. ὥρο, for ώρα, season, hour; and σκοπεῖν, to consider, related to σκέπτομαι, I consider. See Hour and Spy. Der. horoscop-y, horoscop-i-c, horoscop-ist.

HORRIBLE, dreadful, fearful. (F., — L.) M. E. horrible, also written orrible, Chaucer, C. T. 4893. — O. F. horrible, 'horrible, terrible;' Cot. — Lat. horribilis, terrible, lit. to be trembled at; formed with suffix -bilis from horrere, to tremble, shake. See Horror.

Der. horribil-y, Chaucer, C. T. 15435; horrible-ness.

HORRID, dreadful. (Lat.) Directly from Latin. Spenser uses it in the Lat. sense of 'rough.'

'His haughty helmet, horrid all with gold;' F. Q. i. 7. 31. — Lat. horridus, rough, bristly, &c. — Lat. horrere, to be rough. See Horror. Der. horrid-ly, horrid-ness.

HORRIFY, to make afraid, scare. (Lat.) A late word; not in Johnson. Coined, by analogy with words in -fy (mostly of F. origin), from Lat. horrificare, to cause terror. — Lat. horrificus, causing terror.

— Lat. horri-, from horrere, to dread; and -ficare, for facere, to make. Der. From Lat. horrificus has also been coined the adj. horrific, Thomson's Seasons, Autumn, 782. See Horror.

HORROR, dread, terror. (Lat.) Formerly also spelt horrou (Minshew), as if taken from the French; yet such does not seem to have been the case. We find 'sad horror' in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 23; and horrors in Hamlet, ii. 1. 84, in the first folio edition. Cf. F. horreur, 'horror;' Cot. — Lat. horror, terror, dread. — Lat. horrere, to bristle, be rough; also, to dread, with reference to the bristling of the hair through terror. Cf. Skt. arish, to bristle, said of the hair, esp. as a token of fear or of pleasure. Thus horre is for horere (cf. Lat. hirsutus, rough, shaggy); from ✓GHARS, to be rough (Fick, i. 589); probably related to ✓GHAR, to grind; see Grind. Der. From Lat. horre we have horrent (from the stem of the pres. part.); also horri-ble, q. v., horri-d, q. v.; horri-fy, q. v.; and horri-fic.

HORSE, a well-known quadruped. (E.) The final e merely marks that the s is hard, and is not to be pronounced as z. M. E. hors; pl. hors (unchanged), also hors-es, as now. Chaucer, C. T. 74, 10504. 'They sellen bothe here hors and here harneys' = they sell both their horses and their harness; Mandeville's Travels, p. 38. — A. S. hors, neut.; pl. hors, Grein, ii. 98. + Icel. hross; also hors. + Du. ros. + G. ross, M. H. G. ros, ors, O. H. G. hros. β. It is usual to compare these words with the Skt. hresh, to neigh; Benfey's Dict., p. 1126. But the comparison, obvious as it may look, is unlikely, since the E. h and Skt. h are not corresponding letters. Indeed, Fick takes the Teutonic type to be HORSA, as if the A. S. were the older form, and ingeniously refers it to a Teutonic root HAR (HOR), to run, cognate with Lat. currere, to run, whence also E. course with the sense of 'horse.' See Course.

γ. This supposition is made more probable by the fact that the same base will account for A. S. horse, swift, Grein, ii. 98; cf. M. H. G. rosch, swift; and see Rash. Der. horse, verb, Wint. Ta. i. 2. 288; horse-back, M. E. hors-bak, Gower, C. A. iii. 256; horse-block, horse-breaker, horse-fly, horse-guards; horse-hair, Cymb. ii. 3. 33; horse-leech, Hen. V. ii. 3. 57; horse-man, Wint. Ta. iv. 3. 67; horse-man-ship, Hen. V. iii. 7. 58; horse-power, horse-race, horse-racing; horse-shoe, Merry Wives, iii. 5. 123; horse-tail, horse-trainer, horse-whip, sb. and vb. Also numerous other compounds, as horse-bread, horse-flesh, horse-pond, all readily understood. Also horse-chestnut, said to be so called because the nuts were ground and given to horses; the word also occurs in several plant-names, as horse-foot, horse-knop, horse-radish, horse-tail, horse-thistle, horse-tongue, horse-vetch. Also wal-rus.

HORTATORY, full of encouragement. (L.) 'He animated his soldiers with many hortatorie orations;' Holland, Ammianus, p. 202 (R.) Formed as if from Lat. *hortatorius, a coined word from hortator, an encourager. — Lat. horta, stem due to hortari, to encourage; prob. connected with hori (pres. tense horior), to urge, incite. Root uncertain. Der. So also hortative (Minshew), a better form, from Lat. hortativus, encouraging; also ex-hort, q. v.

HORTICULTURE, the art of cultivating gardens, gardening. (L.) A modern word. Coined from horti = horto, crude form of hortus, a garden; and culture, Englished form of Lat. cultura, cultivation. See Culture. β. Lat. hortus is cognate with Gk. χόρος, a yard; also with E. garth and yard. See Cohort. Der. horticultural, horticulturist.

HOSANNA, an expression of praise. (Gk., — Heb.) In Matt. xxi. 9, 15; &c. It is rather a form of prayer, as it signifies 'save, we pray.' — Gk. ὡσαννά, Matt. xxi. 9. — Heb. hōshānā 'save, we pray (or save, I pray); Ps. cxviii. 25. — Heb. hōshānā, to save, Hiphil of yāsha; and nā, a particle signifying entreaty.

HOSE, a covering for the legs and feet; stockings. (E.) M. E. hose, pl. hosen; Chaucer, C. T. 458; Ancren Riwle, p. 420. — A. S. hosa, pl. hosan; 'Caliga vel ocrea, hosa;' Wright's Vocab. i. 81, col. 2. + Du. hoos, hose, stocking, spout, water-spout. + Icel. hosa, the hose covering the leg between the knee and ankle, a kind of gaiter. + Dan. hose, pl. hoser, hose, stockings. + G. hose, breeches. Root unknown. Cf. Russ. koshulia, a fur jacket. Der. hos-i-er, where the inserted i answers to the y in law-y-er, bow-y-er; hos-i-er-y.

HOSPICE, a house for the reception of travellers as guests. (F., — L.) Modern; chiefly used of such houses in the Alps. — F. hospice, a hospice. — Lat. hospitium, a hospice. — Lat. hospiti, crude form of hospes, a guest; also, a host. See Host (1), Hospital.

HOSPITABLE, shewing kindness to strangers. (F., — L.) In K. John, ii. 244; Cor. i. 10. 26. — F. hospitable, 'hospitable;' Cot. Coined, with suffix -able, from Low Lat. hospitare, to receive as a guest; Ducange. — Lat. hospit, stem of hospes, a guest, host. See Host (1). Der. hospitabl-y, hospitable-ness.

HOSPITAL, a building for receiving guests; hence, one for receiving sick people. (F., — L.) M. E. hospital, hospitale; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 81; hospital, Eng. Guilds, ed. T. Smith, p. 350, l. 25. — O. F. hospital, 'an hospital, a spittle;' Cot. — Low Lat. hospitale, a large house, palace, which occurs A. D. 1243 (Brachet); a sing. formed from Lat. pl. hospitalia, apartments for strangers. — Lat. hospit, stem of hospes; see Host (1). Der. hospital-er, M. E. hospitaler. Chaucer, C. T. Persones Tale, De Luxuria; hospital-ity, As You Like It, ii. 4. 82. Doublets, hostel, hotel, spital.

HOST (1), one who entertains guests. (F., — L.) M. E. host, hoste, Chaucer, C. T. 749, 753, &c. — O. F. hoste, 'an hoste, inn-keeper;' Cot. Cf. Port. hospede, a host, a guest. — Lat. hospitem, acc. of hospes, (1) a host, entertainer of guests, (2) a guest. β. The base hospit- is commonly taken to be short for hosti-pit-; where hosti- is the crude form of hostis, a guest, an enemy; see Host (2). Again, the suffix -pit- is supposed to be from Lat. potis, powerful, the old sense of the word being 'a lord;' cf. Skt. pati, a master, governor, lord; see Possible.

γ. Thus hospes = hosti-pes = guest-master, guest-lord, a master of a house who receives guests. Cf. Russ. gospode, the Lord, gospodare, governor, prince; from goste, a guest, and -pode = Skt. pati, a lord. Der. host-ess, from O. F. hostesse, 'an hostesse,' Cot.; also host-el, q. v., host-ler, q. v., hotel, q. v.; and from the same source, hospital, q. v., hospice, q. v., hospitable, q. v.

HOST (2), an army. (F., — L.) The orig. sense is 'enemy' or 'foreigner.' M. E. host, Chaucer, C. T. 1028; frequently spelt ost, Will. of Palerne, 1127, 1197, 3767. — O. F. host, 'an host, or army, a troop;' Cot. — Lat. hostem, acc. of hostis, a stranger, an enemy; hence, a hostile army, host. + Russ. goste, a guest, visitor, stranger, alien. + A. S. gæst; see Guest. Der. host-ile, Cor. iii. 3. 97, from F. hostile, which from Lat. hostilis; host-ile-ly; host-il-ity, K. John, iv. 2. 247, from F. hostilité, which from Lat. acc. hostilitatem. Doublet, guest. ¶ Further remarks are made in Wedgwood.

HOST (3), the consecrated bread of the eucharist. (L.) 'In as many hosties as be consecrate;' Bp. Gardner, Of the Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 35 (R.) And in Holland's Plutarch, p. 1097 (R.) Coined by dropping the final syllables of Lat. hostia, a victim in a sacrifice; afterwards applied to the host in the eucharist. β. The old form of hostia was festia (Festus), and it signified 'that which is struck or slain.' — Lat. hostire (old form festire), to strike. γ. Probably from a ✓GHAS, to strike (Fick, i. 582); whence also E. gad, goad, and Lat. kasta, a spear; cf. Skt. kims, to strike, an anomalous desiderative form from han, to strike. See Goad.

HOSTAGE, a person delivered to the enemy as a pledge for the performance of the conditions of a treaty. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. hostage, Layamon, 4793, 8905 (later text only). — O. F. ostage, 'an hostage, pawne, surety,' Cot.; mod. F. otage. Cf. Ital. ostaggio; Prov. ostajie, Bartsch, Chrestomathie Prov. col. 173, l. 18. — Low Lat. *obsidaticum, acc. of *obsidaticus, not found, yet preserved also in Ital. statico, a hostage, and regularly formed from late Lat. obsidatus, the condition of a hostage, hostage-ship. Obsidatus is formed (by analogy with principatus from princip-, stem of princeps) from Lat. obsid-, stem of obses, a hostage, one who remains behind with the enemy. — Lat. obsidere, to sit, stay, abide, remain. — Lat. ob, at, on, about; and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit. See Sit. ¶ The h is prosthetic; the supposed connection with Lat. hostis, the enemy, is wrong.

HOSTEL, an inn. (F., — L.) Now commonly hotel, q. v. M. E. hostel, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1397; Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 805. — O. F. hostel, an inn. Regularly contracted from Low Lat. hospitale; see Hospital. Doublets, hotel, hospital, spital. Der. hostel-ry, M. E. hostelrie, Chaucer, C. T. 23; hostler, q. v.

HOSTLER, OSTLER, a man who takes care of horses at an inn. (F., — L.) 'Host'ler, the horse-groom, but properly the keeper of an hostelry;' Coles, ed. 1684. Orig. the inn-keeper himself, so named from his hostel. M. E. hostiler, Chaucer, C. T. 241. — O. F. hostelier, 'an inn-keeper;' Cot. — O. F. hostel; see Hostel.

HOT, very warm, fiery, ardent. (E.) The vowel was formerly long. M. E. hot, hoot, hote, hote, Chaucer, C. T. 396, 1739. 'Nether cold, nether hoot;' Wyclif, Rev. iii. 16. — A. S. hōt, hot; Grein, ii. 15. + Du. heet. + Icel. heitr. + Swed. het. + Dan. hed. + G. heiss, O. H. G. heiz. β. The common Teut. type is HAITA (Fick, iii. 75), from the base HIT, to be hot, to burn (cf. Icel. hiti, heat, G. hitze); extended from the base HI, to burn, whence Goth. hais, a torch. — ✓KI, to burn, Fick, i. 550; but it seems uncertain. Cf. Lithuan. kaitra, heat. Der. hot-bed; hot-blooded, Merry Wives, v. 5. 2; hot-headed; hot-house, Meas. ii. 1. 66; hot-ly, hot-spurr. Also heat, q. v.

HOTCH-POT, HODGE-PODGE, a farrago, confused mass. (F., — Du.) Hodge-podge is a mere corruption; the old term is hotch-pot. The intermediate form hotch-potch is in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 336. 'A hotchpot, or mangle-mangle;' Minshew. An hotchpotte, incision;' Levins. — F. hochepot, 'a hotch-pot, or gallimaufrey, a confused mangle-mangle of divers things jumbled or put together;' Cot. Cf. F. hocher, 'to shake, wag, jog, nob, nod;' id. — O. Du. hutsot, 'hodge-podge, beef or mutton cut into small pieces;' Sewel. So called from shaking or jumbling pieces of meat in a pot. — O. Du. huts, base of hutsen, to shake, jolt (Oudemans); and Du. pot, a pot. From hutsen was also formed the frequentative verb hutselen, 'to shake up and down, either in a tub, bowl, or basket;' Sewel. The verb hutsen was also spelt hutsen (Sewel), which comes still closer to the French. See Hustle and Pot.

HOTEL, an inn, esp. of a large kind. (F., — L.) A modern word; borrowed from mod. F. hôtel = O. F. hostel. See Hostel.

HOTTENTOT, a native of the Cape of Good Hope. (Du.) The word is traced in Wedgwood, who shews that the Dutch gave the natives this name in ridicule of their peculiar speech, which sounded to them like stuttering. He cites the word from Schouten (1653). En is Dutch for 'and'; hence hot en tot = 'hot' and 'tot'; where these words indicate stammering. Cf. hateren, to stammer, in Hexham's Du. Dict., 1647; tateren, to tattle (Sewel).

HOUDAH, HOWDAH, a seat to be fixed upon an elephant's back. (Arab.) Used in works of travel; and in The Surgeon's Daughter, c. xiv. by Sir W. Scott. — Arab. hawdaj, a litter carried by a camel, in which Arabian ladies travel; a seat to place on an elephant's back; Rich. Dict. p. 1694, col. 2; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 709. (Initial letter, hā, the 27th letter.)

HOUGH, HOCK, the joint in the hind-leg of a quadruped, between the knee and fetlock, corresponding to the ankle-joint in man; in man, the back part of the knee-joint. (E.) Now generally spelt hock; but formerly hough. 'Unto the camel's hough;' 2 Esdras, xv. 36. (A. V.) Cotgrave translates F. jarret by 'the hamle, the hough.' M. E. houch, Wallace, ed. Jamieson, i. 322. The pl. hōyes occurs in Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1357. — A. S. hōh, the heel; Grein, ii. 92. + Icel. hā, in the comp. hásinn = hock-sinew. + Dan. hā, in the comp. hase, corruption of hasen = hock-sinew. + Du. hak, the heel; also, a hoe. β. Probably allied to Lat. coxa, the hip. The E. heel may perhaps also be related; see HEEL. Fick (iii. 59) also compares the Lithuanian kinka, a knee-joint; and the Skt. kaksha, an arm-pit. Der. hough, verb, to cut the hamstring of a horse, Josh. xi. 6, 2 Sam. viii. 4; often corrupted to hox, sometimes spelt hocks; see Shak. Wint. Ta. i. 2. 244; Wyclif, Josh. xi. 6 (later version); and examples in Richardson, s. v. hock.

HOUND, a dog. (E.) M. E. hound, hund; P. Plowman, B. v. 261; Havelok, 1994. — A. S. hund, Matt. vii. 6. + Du. hond. + Icel. hundr. + Dan. and Swed. hund. + G. hund. + Goth. hunds. β. All from a Teutonic type HUN-DA, extended from HUN = HWAN; a form cognate with the base of Lat. can-is, a dog, Gk. κύων (genitive κυων-ός), Skt. çvan, a dog; the Aryan base being KWAN, a dog. Hence also Irish cu, Gael. cu, W. ci, a dog; Russ. suka, a bitch. Root uncertain. Der. hound, verb, in Otway, Caius Marius, Act iv. sc. 2 (R.); hound-fish, Chaucer, C. T. 9699; hound's-tongue.

HOURL, a certain definite space of time. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. houre, Chaucer, C. T. 14733. — O. F. hore, heure (mod. F. heure). — Lat. hora. — Gk. ōra, a season, hour; cf. ōpos, a season, a year; probably cognate with E. year. — √ YĀ, to go, an extension of √ I, to go; cf. Skt. yātu, time. See YEAR. Der. hour-ly, adj. Temp. iv. 108, adv. Temp. i. 2. 402; hour-glass, Merch. of Ven. i. 1. 25; hour-plate. (Also from Lat. hora) hor-ar-y, Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674; hor-al, Prior, Alma, c. 3 (R.) Also horo-logs, horo-scope, which see.

HOURL, a nymph of Paradise. (Pers.) 'With Paradise within my view And all his houris beckoning through'; Byron, The Giaour; see note 39 to that poem. — Pers. hūrī, one virgin of Paradise; hūrī, a virgin of Paradise, a black-eyed nymph; so called from their fine black eyes. Cf. Arab. hawrā, fem. of akwar, having fine black eyes; Rich. Arab. Dict. pp. 585, 33; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 206. (The initial letter is hā, the 6th letter of the Arab. alphabet.)

HOUSE, a dwelling-place; a family. (E.) M. E. hous, Chaucer, C. T. 252. — A. S. hūs, Matt. xii. 25. + Du. huis. + Icel. hús. + Dan. hus. + Swed. hus. + Goth. *hus, in the comp. gud-hus, a house of God. + G. haus, O. H. G. hūs. β. Probably cognate with Skt. hōsha or hōpa, a coop, a sheath, a shell, an egg, an abode, a store-room. The form of the root is KUS, of uncertain meaning; perhaps related to √ KU, to cover, and further to √ SKU, to cover; Fick, i. 537. See HIDE (2) and SKY. Der. house, verb, now 'to provide a house for,' as in Gower, C. A. iii. 18, but the M. E. housen also meant 'to build a house,' as in Rob. of Glouc. p. 21, l. 13 (cf. 'howsyn, or puttyn yn a howse, domifero;' 'howsyn, or makyn howsyt, domifeco;' Prompt. Parv. p. 251); house-breaker, house-breaking; house-hold, M. E. household, Chaucer, C. T. 5681, so called because held together in one house; house-hold-er, M. E. householder, Chaucer, C. T. 341; house-keeper, Cor. i. 3. 55, Macb. iii. i. 97; house-keeping, L. L. L. ii. 104; house-leek, M. E. hous-leke, Prompt. Parv. p. 251; house-less, K. Lear, iii. 4. 26; house-maid, house-steward, house-warming, house-wife, spelt kusewif, Ancrén Riwe, p. 416, also hosewif or huswif, Wyclif, 3 Kings, xvii. 17, and frequently huswife, as in Shak. Cor. i. 3. 76, Romeo, iv. 2. 43; house-wife-ry or hus-wife-ry, Oth. ii. 1. 113, with which cf. 'huswifery, yconomia;' Prompt. Parv. See also HUSBAND, HUSSY, HUSTINGS, HOARD.

HOUSEL, the eucharist or sacrament of the Lord's Supper. (E.) The orig. sense is 'sacrifice.' M. E. housel, Rom. of the Rose, 6386; P. Plowman, C. xxii. 394. — A. S. hūsel (for hunsel), the eucharist; Grein, ii. 112. + Goth. hunsel, a sacrifice, Matt. ix. 13. β. No doubt derived from a root signifying 'to kill'; and perhaps connected with Gk. καίειν, κτείνειν, to kill. Skt. kshan, to wound, kshin, to hurt, kill, kshi, to destroy, hurt. Der. housel, verb, M. E. houselen, houselen, P. Plowman, C. xxii. 3; unhousel'd, Hamlet, i. 5. 77. [H] with house, but probably often supposed to be related to it; the old form was houss, the addition -ings being English. 'The cattle used for draught . . . are covered with houssings of linnen;' Evelyn, Diary, end of May, 1645. 'A velvet bed of state drawn by six horses, houss'd with the same;' Evelyn, Diary, Oct. 22, 1658. 'Spread on his back, the houss and trappings of a beast;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metam. b. xii. 582. 'Housse, the cloth which the king's horseguards wear behind the saddle;' Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. — F. houss, 'a short mantle of course cloth (and all of a peece) worn in ill weather by country women about their head and shoulders; also a footcloth for a horse; also a coverlet;' Cot. Cf. Low Lat. hucia, a long tunic; housia, a long tunic, coverlet for a horse, also spelt husia, hussia. Duncange dates hucia in A. D. 1326, and husia in A. D. 1259, so that the word is of some antiquity. The sense is clearly 'covering.' β. Of Teutonic origin; Benecke, in his M. H. G. Dict., gives the forms hulst, hulft, a covering, and cites hulft = Low Lat. hulcitum, hulcia, from a gloss; he also gives hulsche, a husk; cf. G. hülse, a husk, shell; Du. hulse, a husk, hulsel, a woman's head-attire (Sewel). — O. H. G. hullen, to cover. See HOLSTER, HUSK. ¶ The W. hus, a covering, may be merely borrowed from E. houss. [†]

HOVEL, a small hut. (E.) M. E. hovel, hovil. 'Hovyllé, lytlylle howse, Teges;' Prompt. Parv. p. 250. 'Hovyl for swyne, or oþer beestys;' ibid. A diminutive, with suffix -el, from A. S. hof, a house; Grein, ii. 92; also spelt hōfa. 'Ædes, hōfa; Ædicula, lytel hof;' Wright's Vocab. i. 57, col. 2. + Icel. hof, a temple, a hall. + G. hof, a yard, court. The common Teutonic type is HOFA; Fick, iii. 63. β. Perhaps related to A. S. habban, to have, contain; cf. Lat. capax, capable of holding. See HAVE. ¶ Some connect it with A. S. hebban, to heave, a temple being built up; this does not so well suit the G. sense of 'yard.' Cf. Gk. κῆρος, a garden.

HOVER, to fluctuate, hang about, move to and fro. (E.) In Macb. i. 1. 12. 'Hover, to stay, wait for. "Will you hover till I come?"' E. D. S. Gloss. B. 22, p. 96. A frequentative, with suffix -er, of M. E. hōven (= hōven), sometimes used in precisely the same sense, and once a common word. 'O night! alas! why nilt thou [wilt thou not] over us hōve;' Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1433; also in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 83 (on which see the note); 'Where that she hōved and abode;' Gower, C. A. iii. 63; 'He hōved and abode;' Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 2825; 'He hōved' = he waited, Rob. of Glouc. p. 172, l. 12. β. The orig. sense seems to have been to 'abide' or 'dwell'; and the verb was probably formed from A. S. hof, a house; on which see HOVEL above. This is made more probable by the fact, that, though the A. S. verb hofian does not occur, we nevertheless find the closely related O. Friesic hovia, to receive into one's house, entertain, whence the sense of merely lodging or abiding easily flows. Similarly, the O. Du. hōven meant to entertain in a house; as, 'Men mag hem huizen noch hōven' = one may neither lodge nor entertain him (Sewel).

¶ The chief difficulty about the word is the existence of W. hofian, hōfo, to hover, to fluctuate, to suspend; but possibly the W. word may have been borrowed from the English. Then all is clear. [†]

HOW (1), in what way. (E.) M. E. how, hou, hu; spelt hu, Ancrén Riwe, p. 182, l. 20; also hwu, id., p. 256, l. 10; also whow, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 141. — A. S. hū; Grein, ii. 110. + O. Fries. hu, ho, how. + Du. hoe. + Goth. hwauiwa. β. The Goth. form shews that the word is undoubtedly formed from the interrogative pronoun who, which is Goth. hwas, A. S. hwā. And if the Goth. hwauiwa is to be resolved into hwe aiwa = why ever, then how only differs from why by the added aye. See WHO, WHY, AYE. Or perhaps Goth. -iwa = Skt. -iva, like, in some way. Der. how-be-it, Hen. V. i. 2. 91, Cor. i. 9. 70; how-ever, K. John, i. 173; how-so-ever, Hamlet, i. 5. 84. [†]

HOW (2), a hill. (Scand.) Chiefly in place-names; as Silver How, near Grasmere. M. E. hōgh; 'bath ouer hill and hōgh' = both over hill and how, Cursor Mundi, 15826 (Göttingen MS.). — Icel. haugr, a how, mound; Swed. hög, a heap, pile, mound; Dan. høj, a hill. See Fick, iii. 77; where it is well remarked that the orig. Teutonic type is HAUGA, which is nothing but the substantive form of the Teutonic adj. HAUHA, high. Cf. Icel. hár, Swed. hög, Dan. høj, high; also Lithuan. haukasas, a hill. See HIGH.

HOWDAH, the same as Houdah, q. v.

HOWITZER, a short light cannon. (G., — Bohemian.) Sometimes spelt howitz; a mod. word, in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from G. haubitze, a howitzer; a word formerly spelt hauffnitz. — Bohemian haufnice, orig. a sling for casting a stone. (Webster, E. Müller.)

HOWL, to yell, cry out. (F., — L.) M. E. houlen, Chaucer, C. T. 2819; Gower, C. A. ii. 265. — O. F. huller, 'to howle or yell;' Cot. — Lat. ululare, to shriek, howl. — Lat. ulula, an owl. + Gk. ὕλην, to howl; ὀλοῦργη, a wailing cry. + G. heulen, to howl, hoot as an owl; M. H. G. hiuveln, hiulen, hulen; from G. eule, M. H. G. hiuuel, O. H. G. hiuweld, also úwila (without the aspirate), an owl. See OWL.

β. All from ✓UL, to howl; cf. Skt. ulūka, an owl; Fick, i. 511. ¶ As Scheler remarks, the h in O. F. huller was due to German influence. Even in German, the h is unoriginal; cf. Icel. ýla, to howl. Der. howl, sb.; also hurly-burly, q. v. [†]

HOX, to hamstring; see Hough.

HOY (1), a kind of sloop. (Du.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 64. 'Equippt a hoye, and set hir under sayle;' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 136. — Du. heu, heude, a kind of flat-bottomed merchantman, a hoy; whence also F. heu, explained by Cotgrave to mean 'a Dutch hoy.' The E. word perhaps answers better to the Flemish form hui, cited by Littré. Of uncertain origin.

HOY (2), interj. stop! (Du.) A nautical term. 'When one ship hails another, the words are, What ship, hoy? that is, stop, and tell the name of your ship;' Pegge, Anecdotes of the English Language, p. 16 (Todd). — Du. hui, hoy! come! well! An exclamation, like E. ho. See Ho! Der. a-hoy, q. v.

HOYDEN, the same as Hoiden, q. v.

HUB, the projecting nave of a wheel; a mark at which quoits are cast; &c. (E.) The orig. sense is 'projection.' 'Hubs, naves of wheels;' Marshall's Leicestershire and Warwickshire Words, ed. 1790 (E. D. S.) Marked by Halliwell as an Oxfordshire word. The same word as hub; see Hob (1), Hump.

HUBBUB, a confused noise. (F.—Teut.) The old spelling is whoobub, Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 629; Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, ii. 5. 35. Possibly for whoop-whoop, by reduplication; but, in any case, connected with whoop. — F. houper, to whoop; see Whoop.

HUCKABACK, a sort of linen cloth. (Low G.?) 'Huckaback, a sort of linen cloth that is woven so as to lie partly raised;' Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. The word bears so remarkable a resemblance to Low G. huckebak, G. huckebak, pick-a-back, that it seems reasonable to suppose that it at first meant 'peddler's ware;' see Huckster.

HUCKLE-BONE, the hip-bone. (E.) 'The hip... wherein the joint doth move The thigh, 'tis called the huckle-bone;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, v. 296. 'Ache in the huckle-bones;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 7. Huckle is the dimin. of prov. Eng. huck, a hook, common in many dialects (Halliwell); and huck is a mere variant of hook; thus huck-le = hook-el. Cf. Skt. kuch, to bend; the sense of huckle being 'a small joint.' See Hook. ¶ Similarly, huckle-backed, 'having round shoulders' (Webster), is the equivalent of crook-backed, as regards its sense.

HUCKSTER, a peddler, hawker, retailer of small articles. (O. Du.) Properly a feminine form, the corresponding masc. form being hawker, as now spelt, though it should rather have been hucker. We have the expression 'she hath holden hokkerye,' i. e. followed a huckster's trade; P. Plowman, B. v. 227. But the A. S. distinction in gender between the terminations -er and -ster was lost at an early period, so that the word was readily applied to men. 'Huckstare, huckstere, auxionator, auxionatrix, auxionarius. Hukstare of frute, colibista;' Prompt. Parv. p. 252. Hucster, as a gloss to institorum; Wright's Vocab. i. 123. 'Forr þatt tē3 turndenn Godess hus intill hucsterness boje' = for that they turned God's house into a huckster's booth; Ormulum, 15816, 7. β. An O. Low G. word, but it does not appear in A. S. The related words are Du. heuker, a retailer, heukem, to retail; also heukeren, to sell by retail, to huckster; heukelaar, a huckster, retailer; Sewel's Du. Dict. Also Swed. hökare, a cheesemonger, hökeri, higgling; Dan. hökre, a chandler, huckster, hökeri, the huckster's trade; hökerske, a 'huxteress' (this form is just the Dan. equivalent of E. huckster); hökre, to huckster. γ. The word was imported, about A. D. 1200, probably from the Netherlands; the termination -ster being Dutch as well as English, as shewn by Du. spin-ster, a spinster, &c.

δ. The etymology is much disputed; but it is solved by Hexham's Du. Dict., which gives us hucken, to stoop or bow; een hucker, a stooper, bower, or bender; onder eenen swaren last hucken, to bow under a heavy burden; een hucker, a huckster, or a mercer. Compare also the Icel. hökra, to go bent, to crouch, creep, slink about, on which it is noted that 'in modern usage hökra means to live as a small farmer, whence hökr, in bú-hökr, small farming;' Cleasby and Vigfusson. Nothing could be more fitting than to describe the peddler of olden times as a croucher, creeper, or slinker about; his bent back being due to the bundle upon it. (See Sir W. Scott's description of Bryce Snailfoot in The Pirate.) ε. Hence the word is directly derived from O. Du. huycchen, hukken, to stoop down, crouch (Oudemans). Cf. Icel. húka, to sit on one's hams, with its deriv. hökra; Low G. hukem, to crouch (Brem. Wört.); E. hook, hug; with which cf. Skt. kuch, to bend. So also G. hucke is properly the bent back, whence G. huckebak, pick-a-back; G. hocken is to squat, and G. höcker means (1) a hump on the back, and (2) a huckster. See Hug, Hucklebone, Hook, Hawker.

HUDDLE, to throw together confusedly, to crowd together. (E.) Used in late authors in the sense of performing a thing hastily; see examples in Todd; but it simply meant, originally, to throng or crowd; see Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 28; Much Ado, ii. 1. 152. 'To huddle up together;' Minshew. Rare in early writers; but the equivalent form to huddler (the suffixes -er, -le being similarly used to express a frequentative) is represented by M. E. hodren = hoderen (with one d). 'For scatred ar thi Scottis, and hodred in þer hottes' = for thy Scots are scattered, and huddled together in their huts; Rob. Manning, tr. of Langtoft, ed. Hearne, p. 273. β. But again, this M. E. hoderen also had the sense of 'cover;' as in 'hodur and happe' = cover and wrap up; Le Bone Florence, 112, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. iii; and the true notion of huddle or hudder was to crowd together for protection or in a place of shelter, a notion still preserved when we talk of cattle being huddled together in rain. γ. Briefly, hoderen is the frequentative of M. E. huden, to hide, Ancræn Riwe, p. 174, more frequently written hiden, whence mod. E. hide; see Hide. Thus to huddle is to hide closely, to crowd together for protection, to crowd into a place of shelter. The change from hudder to huddle was probably due to the influence of the derived sb. huddels (= A. S. hýdels), a hiding-place; Ancræn Riwe, p. 146; Wyclif, Deut. xxvii. 15. δ. The notion of doing things hastily may have been due to the influence of Du. hutsen, to shake, jolt (see Hustle); and see houd, houdele, hott, hotch, hotter (all connected with hustle), in Jamieson's Scot. Dict. ¶ The connection with G. huddeln, to bungle, is to be rejected; this verb belongs to hustle; yet it may have influenced the later and extended senses of huddle. The etymology given above is curiously verified by the Low G. hudderken, used chiefly of hens, meaning to sit upon the chickens and keep them warm; also of children, as, de Kinder in der Slaap hudderken = to lull the children asleep. That is, the hens huddle up the chickens, and the nurses the children. Moreover, this hudderken is the frequentative of Low G. huden, to hide, with insertion of k, characteristic of diminution. See Bremen Wörterb. ii. 665.

¶ Perhaps it may be well to remark that G. huddeln = Du. hoetelen Swed. hulta, Dan. hulte, to bungle; and the corresponding E. word, if it existed, would take the form huttle, not huddle. [†]

HUE (1), show, appearance, colour, tint. (E.) M. E. hweð, often a dissyllabic word; Chaucer, C. T. 396, 3255; but properly monosyllabic, and spelt heu, Havelok, 2918. — A. S. hiw, heow, heó, appearance, Grein, ii. 78. + Swed. hy, skin, complexion. + Goth. hiwi, form, show, appearance, a Tim. iii. 5. Cf. Icel. hégómi, falsehood, where hó = E. hue; see Cleasby and Vigfusson. Root unknown. Der. hue-d, M. E. hewed, Chaucer, C. T. 11557; hue-less.

HUE (2), clamour, outcry. (F.—Scand.) Only in the phr. hue and cry, Merry Wives, iv. 5. 92; 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 556. See Hue and cry in Blount's Nomolexicon; he notes that 'hue is used alone, anno 4 Edw. I. stat. 2. In ancient records this is called hutesium at clamor;' for the latter phrase he cites a passage from the Close Rolls, 30 Hen. III. m. 5. M. E. hue, a loud cry; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 872 (or 873). — O. F. huer, 'to hoot, ... make hue and cry;' Cot. He also gives hude, 'a showing, ... outcry, or hue and cry.' Of Scand origin; from O. Swed. huta, to hoot; see Hoot.

HUFF, to puff, bluster, bully. (E.) 'A huff, a huffing or swagging fellow. Huff, to puff or blow, to rant or vapour;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Hence huffer, a braggart; 'By such a braggadocio huffer;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3, l. 1034. The old sense was 'to blow' or 'puff up.' 'When as the said winde within the earth, able to huffe up the ground, was not powerful enough to breake forth and make issue;' Holland's Pliny, b. ii. c. 85. Also spelt hoove; 'But if it thunder withall, then suddenly they [the pearl-oysters] shut all at once, and breed only those excrescences... like unto bladders puffed up and hooved with wind;' Holland's Pliny, b. ix. c. 35. β. Of imitative origin; cf. Lowland Sc. hauch (with guttural ch), the forcible respiration of one who exerts all his strength in giving a stroke; hech (with guttural ch), to breathe hard; Jamieson. We find huf, puf, and haf, paf in Reliq. Antiq. i. 240, to represent forcible blowing; cf. puff. We find the cognate word in the G. hauchen, to breathe, blow, puff. Also, huff probably stands for an older hugh, with a final guttural. Cf. Puff, Whiff. ¶ It is likely that the form hoove arose from confusion with hoven, the old pp. of heave. Der. huff, at draughts, simply means 'to blow;' it seems to have been customary to blow upon the piece removed; Jamieson gives 'blaw, to blow, also, to huff at draughts; I blaw, or blow you, I take [i. e. huff] this man.' (So also in Danish; blæse en brikke, to huff (lit. blow) a man at draughts.) Also huff-er, in Hudibras, as above; huff-ish, huff-ish-ly, huff-ish-ness, huffy, huff-i-ness.

HUG, to embrace closely. (Scand.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 6. 16; Rich. III, i. 4. 252; &c. The original sense is to squat, cower together; cf. the phrase 'to hug oneself.' Palsgrave has: 'I hugge, I shrink in my bed. It is a good sporte to se this lytle boye hugge in his bed for cold.' β. Of Scand. origin; best shewn in the Dan. siddé paa hug (lit. to sit in a crouched form, to sit in a hook), to squat upon the ground, sit on one's hams. The verb is the Swed huka, in the phrase huka sig, to squat down; Icel. huka, to sit on one's hams. It appears again in the O. Du. huycken, huken, to crouch, G. hocken, to crouch, squat, Skt. kuch, to bend. γ . Fick refers these to the \checkmark KUK, KWAK, to bend; related to \checkmark KAK, to surround; i. 36. Closely related words are Hucklebone, Hook, Hunch, &c.

HUGE, very great, vast. (F.) M. E. huge, Chaucer, C. T. 2953; P. Plowman, B. xi. 242; Will. of Palerne, 2569. Oddly spelt hogge; 'an hogge geaunt'; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 31, l. 17. The etymology is much disguised by the loss of an initial a, mistaken for the E. indef. article; the right word is ahuge. (The same loss occurs in M. E. avow, now always vow, though this is not quite a parallel case, since vow has a sense of its own.) — O. F. ahuge, huge, vast; a 12th-century word. In the account of Goliath, in Les Livres des Rois, we find: 'E le fer de la lance sis cenx, e la hanste fud grosse e ahuge cume le suble as teissures' — and the iron of his lance weighed six hundred (shekels), and the shaft (of it) was great and huge as a weaver's beam; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 45, l. 36. The word is spelt ahugue in Roquefort, who cites this passage, and points out that it corresponds with the E. word. β . Of unknown origin; but not improbably from the old form of mod. G. erhöhen, to exalt, heighten, increase, from the adj. hoch, M. H. G. houch, high, cognate with E. High. [\dagger] Der. huge-ly; huge-ness, Cymb. i. 4. 157.

HUGUENOT, a French protestant. (F., — G.) 'Huguenots, Calvinists, Reformists, French Protestants'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. And in Minshew. — F. huguenots, s. pl. 'Huguenots, Calvinists, Reformists'; Cot. Named from some person of the name of Huguenot, who was at some time conspicuous as a reformer. Such was Mahn's conjecture, who added that the name was probably a diminutive of F. Hugues, Hugh, and was nothing but a Christian name. β . The conjecture is perfectly verified by Littré's discovery, that Huguenot was in use as a Christian name two centuries before the time of the Reformation. 'Le 7 octobre, 1387, Pascal Huguenot de Saint Junien en Limousin, docteur en decret'; Hist. Litt. de la France, t. xxiv. p. 307. Cf. Jeannot as a dimin. of Jean. γ . The F. Hugues is of German origin. — M. H. G. Hûg, Hûc, Hugh; lit. a man of intelligence, a thoughtful man. — O. H. G. hugu, thought; huggen, to think; the verb being cognate with Lat. cogitare, to think. See Cogitate.

\dagger Scheler enumerates 15 false etymologies of this word; the favourite one (from G. eidgenossen) being one of the worst, as it involves incredible phonetic changes. [\dagger]

HULK, a heavy ship. (Low Lat., — Gk.) Sometimes applied to the body of a ship, by confusion with hull; but it is quite a different word, meaning a heavy ship of clumsy make; Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 277. The hulks were old ships used as prisons. M. E. hulke. 'Hulke, shyppe, Hulcus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 252. 'Hulke, a shyppe, heureque'; Palsgrave. 'Orque, a hulk or huge ship'; Cot. — Low Lat. hulka, a heavy merchantship, a word used by Walsingham; see quotation in Way's note to Prompt. Parv.; also spelt hulcus, as quoted above. Also spelt (more correctly) holcas; Ducange. — Gk. ὁλκάς, a ship which is towed, a ship of burden, merchantman. — Gk. ὀλκεν, to draw, drag; whence also ὀλκή, a dragging, ὀλός, a machine for dragging ships on land; from the base φελε. + Russ. vleche, vleschek, to trail, drag, draw. + Lithuan. welku, I pull. β . The form of the root is WALK, for WARK; the sense is perhaps 'to pull.' See Curtius, i. 167. Der. hulk-ing, hulk-y, i. e. bulky or unwieldy. \dagger Not the same word as M. E. hulke, a hovel, Wyclif, Isaiah, i. 8; which is from A. S. hulc, a hut; Wright's Vocab. i. 58. [\dagger]

HULL (1), the husk or outer shell of grain or of nuts. (E.) M. E. hule, hole, hool. 'Hoolle, hole, holl, or huske, Siliqua'; Prompt. Parv. p. 242. 'Hull of a beane or pese, escosse. Hull or barcke of a tree, escorce'; Palsgrave; and see Way's note in Prompt. Parv. Peeze hole (or pese hule) = pea-shell; P. Plowman, B. vii. 194, in two MSS.; see the footnote. — A. S. hulu, a husk; in two glosses (Leo). Connected with the causal verb hulian *, to hide, cover, not found in A. S., but appearing at a very early period, and spelt hulen in the Ancien Riwle, p. 150, note a; so also 'hule and huide' = cover up and hide, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 279, l. 4. Cognate words are O. Saxon bihullean, to cover, Heliand, 1406 (Cotton MS.); Du. hullen, to put a cap on, mask, disguise; Goth. huljan, to hide, cover; G. ver-hüllen, to wrap up; Icel. hylja, to hide, cover; Swed. hölja, to cover, veil; Dan. hylle, to wrap. β . All from \checkmark KAL, to hide; see further under Holster. Der. see husk, houings.

HULL (2), the body of a ship. (E.) Not in very early use. 'She never saw above one voyage, Luce, And, credit me, after another, her hull Will serve again'; Beaumont and Fletcher. Wit Without Money, i. 2. 17. The hull is, literally, the 'shell' of the ship, being the same word with the above; see Hull (1). β . But it is probable that its use with respect to a ship was due to some confusion with Du. hol, the hold of a ship; see Hold (2). Der. hull, verb, to float about, as a ship does when the sails are taken down, Shak. 1st W. Nt. i. 5. 217; Rich. III, iv. 4. 438; Hen. VIII, ii. 4. 199. So in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, we find: 'Hull, the body of a ship, without rigging. Hulling is when a ship at sea takes in all her sails in a calm. [\dagger]

HUM (1), to make a low buzzing or droning sound. (E.) M. E. hummen; Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1199; Palladius on Husbandry, ed. Lodge, vii. 124. Of imitative origin. + G. hummen, to hum. Cf. also Du. hommelen, to hum; the frequentative form. Der. hum (2), q. v., hum-bug, q. v., hum-drum, q. v., humble-bee, q. v.; also humming-bird, Pope's Dunciad, iv. 46, called a hum-bird, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 8. § 10.

HUM (2), to trick, to cajole. (E.) A particular use of the word above. In Shak. hum not only means to utter a low sound, as in Temp. ii. i. 317, but also to utter a sound expressive of indignation, as in 'turns me his back And hums', Macb. iii. 6. 42; 'to bite his lip and hum At good Cominius', Cor. v. i. 49. See Richardson and Todd, where it further appears that applause was formerly expressed by humming, and that to hum was to applaud; from applause to flattery, and then to cajolery, is not a long step. See the passage in Ben Jonson, The Alchemist, Act i. sc. 1, where Subtle directs his dupe to 'cry hum Thrice, and then buz as often,' shewing that the word was used in a jesting sense. β . Wedgwood well points out a similar usage in Port. zumbir, to buzz, to hum, zombar, to joke, to jest; to which add Span. zumbiar, to hum, resound, joke, jest, make one's-self merry, zumbon, waggish. Der. hum, sb. a hoax (Todd); hum-bug, q. v. Cf. humh! interj., Beaumont and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, i. 2.

HUMAN, pertaining to mankind. (F., — L.) Formerly humaine, but now conformed to the Lat. spelling. 'All humaine thought'; Spenser, F. Q. vi. 3. 51. 'I meruayle not of the inhumanities that the humain people committeth'; Golden Book, lett. 11 (R.) — O. F. humain, 'gentle, . . . humane, manly'; Cot. — Lat. humānus, human. — Lat. hom-o, a man. See Homage. Der. human-ly, human-ise, human-is-at-ion, human-ist, human-kind; also human-i-ty, M. E. humanitee, Chaucer, C. T. 7968, from O. F. humaniteit, which from Lat. acc. humanitatem, nom. humanitas; hence humanis-ar-i-an. And see Humane.

\dagger The accent distinguishes human, of French origin, from humane, taken directly from Latin. The older word has the accent thrown back; see below.

HUMANE, gentle, kind. (Lat.) In Shak., humane (so spell) does duty both for human and humane, the accent being always on the former syllable; see Schmitz, Shak. Lexicon. Hence it has the sense of 'kind'; Temp. i. 2. 346. We have now differentiated the words, keeping the accent on the latter syllable in humāne, to make it more like the Lat. humanus. We may therefore consider this as the Lat. form. Both Lat. humanus and F. humain have the double sense (1) human, and (2) kind. See Human. Der. humane-ly, humane-ness.

HUMBLE, lowly, meek, modest. (F., — L.) M. E. humble, Chaucer, C. T. 8700. — O. F. (and F.) humble, 'humble'; Cot. (With excrement b.) — Lat. humilis, humble; lit. near the ground. — Lat. humus, the ground; humi, on the ground; whence also E. human and homage. See Human, Homage. Der. humbl-y; humble-ness (formerly humblesse, Chaucer, C. T. 1783). Also, from Lat. humilis, humili-ty, q. v., humili-ate, q. v. Also, from Lat. humus, ex-hume, q. v. And see Chameleon.

HUMBLE-BEE, a humming bee. (E.) To humble is to hum; or more literally, to hum often, as it is the frequentative form, standing for humme-le; the b being excrement. 'To humble like a bee'; Minshew. M. E. humbelen, for hummelen. 'Or elles lyk the humbeling [old texts, humbling] After the clappe of a thundring'; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 531. Hence the deriv. hombull-bee; Reliquie Antiquæ, ed. Wright and Halliwell, i. 81. 'Hic tabanus, a humbyl-bee'; Wright's Vocab. i. 255. + Du. hommelen, to hum, a frequentative form; hommel, a humble-bee, a drone. + G. hummel, a humble-bee; hummen, to hum. See Hum (1).

HUMBUG, a hoax, a piece of trickery, an imposition under fair pretences. (E.) 'Humbug, a false alarm, a bugbear'; Dean Milles MS. (written about 1760), cited in Halliwell. The word occurs in a long passage in The Student, vol. ii. p. 41, ed. 1751, cited in Todd. The earliest trace of the word is on the title-page of an old jest-book, viz. 'The Universal Jester, or a pocket companion for the wits; being a choice collection of merry conceits, drolleries, . . . bon-mots, and humbugs,' by Ferdinando Killigrew, London, about 1735-40. See the Slang Dictionary, which contains a very good article on this word. It is a mere compound of hum, to cajole, to hoax, and the old word bug, a spectre, bugbear, ghost; the sense being 'sham bugbear' or 'false alarm,' exactly as given by Dean Milles. The word has changed its meaning from 'false alarm' or 'sham scare' to 'false pretence' or 'specious cheat,' an easy change. See Hum (2) and Bug. Der. humbug, verb; humbug, sb., improperly used for humbugger.

HUMDRUM, dull, droning. (E.) Used as an adv., with the sense of 'idly' or 'listlessly' in Butler. 'Shall we, quoth she, stand still hum-drum?' Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 112. But it is properly an adj., signifying monotonous, droning, tedious, as in 'an old humdrum fellow'; Addison, Whig Examiner (1710), No. 3 (Todd). Merely compounded of hum, a humming noise, and drum, a droning sound. See Hum (1) and Drum.

HUMERAL, belonging to the shoulder. (Lat.) 'Humeral muscle, the muscle that moves the arm at the upper end'; Kersey, ed. 1715.—Low Lat. humeralis, belonging to the shoulder; cf. Lat. humeralis, a cape for the shoulders.—Lat. humerus, better umerus, the shoulder. + Gk. ὑμῶς, the shoulder + Goth. amsa, the shoulder. + Skt. amsa, the shoulder. β. All from √AM, of uncertain meaning; perhaps 'to be strong'.

HUMID, moist. (F.,—L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 151; and in Cotgrave.—F. humide, 'humid, moist'; Cot.—Lat. humidus, better umidus, moist.—Lat. humēre, better umēre, to be moist; from a base UG, whence also uivens, moist, uivudus, udus, moist. + Gk. ὑγρός, moist. β. From √UG, earlier form WAG, to moisten, wet; whence also Skt. uksh, to wet, sprinkle; also (from the earlier form) Icel. vörk, moist, prov. E. wokey, moist (Halliwell), and M. E. wokien, to moisten, P. Plowman, C. xv. 25. See Curtius, i. 229; Fick, i. 287.

Der. humid-ness, humid-i-ty, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43; and see humour.

HUMILIATE, to make humble. (Lat.) A late word, really suggested by the sb. humiliation, used in Milton, P. L. iii. 313, x. 1092. The verb is formed from Lat. humiliatus, pp. of humiliare, to humble.—Lat. humili-, crude form of humilis, humble. See Humble. Der. humiliat-ion (formed by analogy with other words in -ation) from Lat. acc. humiliationem, nom. humiliatio.

HUMILITY, humbleness, meekness. (F.,—L.) M. E. humilite, Chaucer, C. T. 13405.—O. F. humiliteit, later humilité.—Lat. acc. humiliatatem, from nom. humilitas, humility.—Lat. humili-, crude form of humilis, humble. See Humble.

HUMOUR, moisture, temperament, disposition of mind, caprice. (F.,—L.) See Trench, Select Glossary, and Study of Words. 'He knew the cause of every maladye, And wher engendred, and of what humour;' Chaucer, C. T. 422, 423. [The four humours, according to Galen, caused the four temperaments of mind, viz. choleric, melancholy, phlegmatic, and sanguine.]—O. F. humor (Littre), later humour, 'humour, moisture'; Cot.—Lat. humōrem, acc. of humor, moisture.—Lat. humēre, better umēre, to be moist. See Humid. Der. humour, verb, humor-ous, humor-ous-ly, humor-ous-ness, humour-less, humor-ist; from the same source, hum-ect-ant, moistening (rare).

HUMMOCK, HOMMOCK, a mound, hillock, mass. (E.) 'Common among our voyagers,' Rich.; who refers to Anson, Voyage round the World, b. ii. c. 9; Cook, Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 4. It appears to be merely the diminutive of hump, which again is merely a nasalised form of heap. Cf. Du. homp, a hump, hunch; 'een homp kaas, a lunch [i. e. hunch] of cheese;' Sewel. 'Hompelig, rugged, craggy;' id. So too Low G. hümpel, a little heap or mound; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 669. Hummock is formed with dimin. -ock, as in hill-ock; whilst the Low G. hümp-el is formed with the dimin. -el. See Hump, Hunch.

HUMP, a lump, bunch, esp. on the back. (E.) 'Hump, a hunch, or lump, Westmoreland;' Halliwell. Of O. Low G. origin, and may be claimed as E., though not in early use. 'Only a natural hump [on his back];' Addison, Spectator, no. 558. 'The poor hump-backed gentleman;' id. no. 559. + Du. homp, a hump, lump; cf. Low G. hümpel, a small heap, Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 669. β. A nasalised form of heap, and from the same source, viz. the Teut. base HUP, to go up and down, preserved in E. hop; see Heap, Hop (1). γ. The Aryan root is √KUP, KUBH, to go up and down, bend about (Fick, iii. 77); whence also Gk. κύφος, a hump, κύφωμα, a hump on the back, κύφονατος, hump-backed; Lithuan. kūmpas, hunched; also Skt. kubja, hump-backed; and see Benfey's note on Skt. kumbha, a pot. Der. hump-backed; humm-ock, q. v.; hunch, q. v.

HUNCH, a hump, bump, a round or ill-shaped mass. (E.) Used as nearly a parallel form to hump, but the likeness in sense is due to the similar sense of the roots of the words. It is really the nasalised form of hook; see Hook. Hunch-backed occurs in the later quarto edd. of Shak. Rich. III, iv. 4. 81 (Schmidt). 'Thy crooked mind within hunch'd out thy back;' Dryden, qu. in Todd (no reference). β. Without the nasal, we find E. hook and hug, Icel. hökka, to go bent, crouch, húka, to sit on one's hams, O. Du. huycken, hukken, to stoop down, crouch (Oudemans), O. Low G. hukken, to bend one's self together, squat down (Bremen Wörterb. ii. 665); G. hucke, the bent back, höcker, a hunch on the back, höckerig, hunch-backed. See Hug.

γ. In Skt. we have both forms, with and without the nasal; hunch, to bend, ākunchita, contracted; kuch, to bend, sam kuch, to contract one's self. δ. All from √KUK, for KWAK, to bend; Fick, i. 36. Der. hunch, vb., hunch-backed.

HUNDRED, ten times ten. (E.) M. E. hundred, Chaucer, C. T. 2155; also hundreth, Pricke of Conscience, 4524.—A. S. hundred, Grein, ii. 111. A compound word.—A. S. hund, a hundred, Grein, ii. 111; and red, usually red, speech, discourse, but here used in the early sense of reckoning or rate; cf. Goth. garathjan, to reckon, number, Matt. x. 30; and see Rate, Read. β. The same suffix occurs not only in Icel. hund-ræð, O. H. G. hundert-ri, but also in Icel. át-ræðr, eighty, ní-ræðr, ninety, tí-ræðr, a hundred, and tolf-ræðr, a hundred and twenty. And as Icel. át-, ní-, tí-, and tolf-mean eight, nine, ten, and twelve respectively, it is seen that the 'rate' of numbering was originally by tens; moreover, hundred = tenth-red, as will appear.

γ. We easily conclude that the word grew up by the unnecessary addition of -red (denoting the rate of counting) to the old word hund, used by itself in earlier times. δ. Dismissing the suffix, we have the cognate O. H. G. hunt (also once used alone), Goth. hund, W. cant, Gael. ciad, Irish cead, Lat. centum, Gk. ἑκατὼν, Skt. śata, all meaning a hundred. ε. All from an Aryan form KANTA, a hundred. It is known (from Gothic) that KANTA stands for DAKANTA, tenth, from DAKAN, ten, and originally meant the tenth ten, i. e. the hundred; the Gothic (in speaking of a single hundred) has the full form taihun-taihund, a hundred (= dakan-dakanta), i. e. ten-tenth. Hence hund = tenth without the t, just as centum = de-centum, &c.

¶ The M. E. hundreth is a Scand. form; from the Icel. hundræð. Der. hundred-th, hundred-fold, hundred-weight, often written cut, where c = Lat. centum, and wt = Eng. weight.

HUNGER, desire of food. (E.) M. E. hunger, Chaucer, C. T. 14738.—A. S. hungor, Grein, ii. 111. + Icel. hungur. + Swed. and Dan. hunger. + Du. honger. + G. hunger. + Goth. hukrus, hunger; whence huggrian (= hungrian), to hunger. β. Probably allied to Skt. kuñch, to make narrow, contract, kuñchana, shrinking; so that hunger denotes the feeling of being shrunk together, like the expressive prov. E. clammed, lit. pinched, used in the phr. 'clammed wi' hunger.'

See Hunch and Hug. Der. hunger, verb = A. S. hyngnan (with vowel-change of u to y); hungry = A. S. hungrig (Grein); hungri-ly; hunger-bitten, Job, xviii. 12.

HUNT, to chase wild animals. (E.) M. E. hunen, honten, Chaucer, C. T. 1640.—A. S. huntingan; see Ælfric's Colloquy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 21. Properly 'to capture'; a secondary verb formed from a supposed verb *hindan, pp. *hunden; only found in Gothic. We find however another A. S. derivative from the same source, viz. hentan, to seize, also a weak verb; Grein, ii. 34. β. So also we find Goth. hunts, captivity, Eph. iv. 8; formed from the pp. huntsans of the verb hinthan (pt. t. hant), to seize, take captive, only used in the comp. fra-hinthan, with pp. fra-hunthans, a captive, Luke, iv. 19. γ. The base HANTH is a nasalised form of HATH, equivalent to Aryan √KAT, to-fell, to drive, appearing in Skt. gātaya, to fell, to drive, a causal from Skt. gad, to fall (= Lat. cadere), from √KAD, to fall.

Fick, i. 56. Der. hunt, sb.; hunt-er, later form for M. E. hunte, Chaucer, C. T. 1638, from A. S. hunta, a hunter, in Ælfric's Colloquy; hunt-r-ess, with F. suffix -ess, As You Like It, iii. 2. 4; hunt-ing, sb., hunt-ing-box, hunt-ing-seat; hunt-s-man (= hunt's man), Mid. Nt. Dr. iv. 1. 143; hunts-man-ship; hunts-up (= the hunt is up, i. e. beginning), Rom. iii. 5. 34, replaced by the hunt is up, Tit. Andron. ii. 2. 1.

HURDLE, a frame of twigs interlaced or twined together, a frame of wooden bars. (E.) M. E. hurdle; pl. hurdles, K. Alisaundre, 6104.—A. S. hyrdle; 'cleta, cratis, hyrdle;' 'crates, i. e. flecta, hyrdle;' from Wright's Vocab. i. 26. col. 2, 34. col. 1. A dimin. from an A. S. base *hurd, not found, but having several cognates, as seen below. + Du. horde, a hurdle. + Icel. hurd. + G. hurde, M. H. G. huri. + Goth. haurds, a door, i. e. one made of wicker-work, Matt. vi. 6. γ. All from a Teut. base HORDI, from a Teut. verb HARD, to weave. Cognate with Lat. crates, cratis, a hurdle, Gk. κάρταλος, a (woven) basket, from √KART, to weave; whence also Skt. krit, to spin, karit, to connect together. See Fick, i. 525, iii. 68. Der. hurdle, verb, pp. hurdled, Milton, P. L. iv. 186. Doublet, crate, q. v.

HURDY-GURDY, a kind of violin, but played by turning a wheel. (E.) 'Hum! plays I see, upon the hurdy-gurdy;' Foote's play of Midas (Todd). Foote died A. D. 1777. It is in vain to seek far for the etymology, as it was doubtless coined in contempt, to express the disagreeable sound of the instrument, and is of purely imitative origin. Cf. Lowland Sc. hur, to snarl; gurr, to snarl, growl, purr; Jamieson. 'R is the dog's letter, and hurroth in the sound;' Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar. The word seems to have been fashioned on the model of hurly-burly. See Hurry. [†]

HURL, to throw rapidly and forcibly, to push forcibly, drive. (F.,—C.; with E. suffix.) 'And hurlest [Tyrrwhitt has hurledest] al from est till occident' = and whirled all from east to west; Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 297 = l. 4717. 'Into which the flood was hurlid;' Wyclif, Luke, vi. 49, in six MSS.; but seventeen MSS. have hurliid. So again, in Luke, vi. 48, most MSS. have hurliid, but eight have hurliid. In the Ancien Riwe, p. 166, we find 'mid a lutel hurlunge' = with a slight collision; where another reading is hurtling. β. It is plain that hurl is, in fact, a contraction of hurtle; for the M. E. hurien and hurilen are equivalent words, used in the sense of to push violently, jostle, strike with a forcible collision. For those who wish to make the comparison, further references are (1) for hurien: Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 211; Poems and Lives of Saints, ed. Furnivall, xxiii. 25; Will. of Palerne, 1243; Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 140; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 44, 223, 376, 413, 874, 1204, 1211; Destruction of Troy, 1365; Rob. of Glouc. p. 487, 537; Fabyan's Chron., an. 1380-1 (R.); Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 2, &c.; (2) for hurilen, Wyclif, Jerem. xlviii. 12; Prompt. Parv. p. 253; Will. of Palerne, 5013; Pricke of Conscience, 4787; Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, Cleopatra, 59; &c. γ. The equal value of these words is best seen in passages where they are followed by together, and express 'collision.' Thus, we have: 'thet hurled togederes' = that come into collision, Ancren Riwe, p. 166; and again: 'þat heuen hastili and erþe schuld hurtel togeder' = that quickly heaven and earth should come into collision; Will. of Palerne, 5013. Both hurl and hurle are frequentatives of hurt. See further under Hurtle and Hurt. Der. hurl-er.

HURLY-BURLY, a tumult. (F. and E.) In Macb. i. 1. 3; as adj., 1 Hen. IV. v. 1. 78. A reduplicated word, the second syllable being an echo of the first, to give more fullness. The simple form hurly is the original; see K. John, iii. 4. 169; 2 Hen. IV. iii. 1. 25. = F. hurlier, 'to howle, to yell;' Cot. Cf. Ital. urlare, to howl, yell. Both these forms are corrupt, and contain an inserted r. The O. F. form was orig. huller, to howl, also in Cot.; cf. Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 354, l. 24; and the correct Ital. form is ululare, to shriek, also to howl or yell as a wolf (Florio). = Lat. ululare, to howl. = Lat. ulula, an owl. See Howl, Owl. ¶ The mod. F. hurluburlu was probably borrowed from Shakespeare; it is a later word than the English; see Littré. The mod. E. hullabaloo seems to be a corruption. [†]

HURRAH, an exclamation of joy. (Scand.) The older form is Huzzah, q. v.

HURRICANE, a whirlwind, violent storm of wind. (Span. = Caribbean.) Formerly hurricane. 'The dreadful spout, Which shipmen do the hurricane call;' Shak. Troilus, v. 2. 172. = Span. huracan, a hurricane (of which another form was probably huracano). = Caribbean huracan, as written by Littré, who refers to Oviedo, Hist. des Indes. See also Washington Irving's Life of Columbus, b. viii. c. 9 (Trench); Rich. quotes from Dampier's Voyages, v. ii. pt. ii. c. 6, that hurricanes are 'violent storms, raging chiefly among the Caribbee islands.'

HURRY, to hasten, urge on. (Scand.) Quite different from harry, with which Richardson confuses it. In Shak. Romeo, v. 1. 65; Temp. i. 2. 131. Extended by the addition of y from an older form hurr, just as scurry is from shirr. It is probably the same word with the rare M. E. horien, to hurry. 'And by the hondes hym hent and horyed hym withinne' = and they [the angels] caught him [Lot] by the hand, and hurried him within; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 883. = O. Swed. hurra, to swing or whirl round (Ihre); Swed. dial. kurra, to whirl round, to whiz; Swed. dial. hurr, great haste, hurry (Rietz). + Dan. hurte, to buzz, to hum. + Icel. hurr, a noise. β. Of purely imitative origin, and the same word with the more expressive and fuller form whirr; see Whir, Whiz. Ben Jonson says of the letter R that it is 'the dog's letter, and *hurthe*th in the sound.' Der. hurry, sb.

HURST, a wood. (E.) In Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 2: 'that, from each rising hurst,' M. E. hurst (Stratmann). Very common in place-names in Kent, e.g. Pens-hurst. = A. S. hyrst, i.e. Hurst in Kent; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 65. + M. H. G. hurst, a shrub, thicket. Lit. 'interwoven thicket'; allied to Hurdle.

HURT, to strike or dash against, to injure, harm. (F., -C.) In early use. M. E. hurten, hirten, used in both senses (1) to dash against, push; and (2) to injure. Ex. (1) 'And he him *hurte*th [pusheth] with his hors adoun,' Chaucer, C. T. 2618 (Six-text, A. 2616), according to 4 MSS.; 'heo hurten heora hafden' = they dashed their heads together, Layamon, 1878. (2) 'That no man hurte other' = that none injure other; P. Plowman, B. x. 366. In the Ancren Riwe, it has both senses; see the glossary. = O. F. hurter, later heurter, 'to knock, push, jure, jolt, strike, dash, or hit violently against;' Cot. 'Se heurter à une pierre, to stumble at a stone,' id.; which explains the sense 'to stumble' in the quotation from Wyclif given under Hurtle. β. Of Celtic origin; best shewn by W. hyrddu, to ram, push, impel, butt, make an assault, hurdd, a push, thrust, butt, hurdd, pl. hyrddod, a ram; corroborated by Corn. hordh, a ram, spelt hor in late Cornish (Williams); and cf. Manx heurin, a he-goat (Williams). Thus the orig. sense was 'to butt as a ram;' from which the other senses easily flow. ¶ We find also Prov. urtar, hurtar (Gloss. to Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale), Ital. urtare, to knock, hit, dash against; also from the Celtic source. Also Du. herten, to jolt, shake, M. H. G. hurten, to dash against; but these (according to Diez) are not very old words, and must have been simply borrowed from the Romance languages. The alleged A. S. hyrt, wounded, is unauthorised. Der. hurt, sb., Ancren Riwe, p. 112, Chaucer, C. T. 10785; hurt-ful, hurt-ful-ly, hurt-ful-ness; hurt-less, hurt-less-ly, hurt-less-ness.

HURTLE, to come into collision with, to dash against, to rattle. (F., -C.; with E. suffix.) Nearly obsolete, but used in Gray's Fatal Sisters, st. 1; imitated from Shak. Jul. Cæsar, ii. 2. 22. M. E. hurilen, to jostle against, dash against, push; see references under Hurl. To these add: 'And he him hurileth with his hors adoun;' Chaucer, C. T. 2618 (Six-text, A. 2616), in the Ellesmere MS., where most other MSS. have hurteth. β. In fact, hurt-le is merely the frequentative of hurt in the sense 'to dash.' And this hurt is the M. E. hurten, to dash, also to dash one's foot against a thing, to stumble. 'If any man wandre in the dai, he hirtith not,' i.e. stumbles not; Wyclif, John, xi. 9. Hurten, to dash, is the same with the mod. E. word. See further under Hurt.

HUSBAND, the master of a house, the male head of a household, a married man. (Scand.) The old sense is 'master of a house.' M. E. husbonde, husebonde. 'The husebonde . . . warneð his hus þus' = the master of the house guardeth his house thus; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 246. 'Till a vast husbandis hous' = to an empty [waste] house of a farmer; Barbour's Bruce, vii. 151. = A. S. hūs-bōnda; 'æt hira hūsbandum' = from their fellow-dwellers in the same house; Exod. iii. 22. Not a true A. S. word, but borrowed from Scandinavian. = Icel. húsbonði, the master or 'goodman' of a house; a contracted form from húsbonandi or húsbiandi. = Icel. hús, a house; and búandi, dwelling, inhabiting, pres. part. of búa, to abide, dwell. See Busk, Bondage. Der. husband-man, M. E. housbonde-man, a householder, Wyclif, Matt. xx. 1, spelt husbond-man, Chaucer, C. T. 7350; husband-ry, M. E. housbonderye, P. Plowman, B. i. 57, spelt husbondrie, Chaucer, C. T. 9173.

HUSH, to enjoin silence. (E.) Chiefly used in the imp. mood and in the pp. M. E. husken, hussen; 'and husht was al the place,' Chaucer, C. T. 2983, ed. Tyrwhitt; spelt hust, hust in Six-text, A. 2981. 'Tho weren the cruel clarious ful whist [Camb. MS. hust] and full stille;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. 5, l. 1340. 'After ianglyng wordes cometh hushite, peace and be still;' Test. of Love, ed. 1561, fol. 290 a, col. 1.

β. The word is purely imitative, from the use of the word hush or hush to signify silence; and it is seen that whist is but another expression of the same thing. See Whist. Cf. Low G. huse bussee, an expression used in singing children to sleep; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 678. So also G. husch, hush! quick! And see Hist. Der. hush-money, Guardian, no. 26, April 10, 1713. ¶ In the form hushed or husht, the t was often regarded as an integral part of the word, just as in whist. 'I huste, I styll,' Palsgrave; 'to huste, silere;' Levins.

HUSK, the dry covering of some fruits, &c. (E.) M. E. huske. 'Huske of frute or oþer lyke;' Prompt. Parv. p. 254. The word has lost an l, which is preserved in other languages; the right form is hulsk. [The A. S. has only the closely related word hulc, a hut, as in 'tugurium, hulc;' Wright's Vocab. i. 58, col. 1. This is a totally different word from the mod. E. hulk, but is closely allied to holster (a Dutch word) and to the A. S. heolster, a cave, covering, and to Icel. hulstr, a case, sheath.] The orig. sense is 'covering' or sheath; and hul-sk is derived (with suffixed -sk) from M. E. hulen, to cover, mod. prov. E. hull, to cover, cognate with Goth. huljan, to cover. See further under Hull (1). + Du. hulse, 'a husk' (Sewel). + Swed. hylsa, 'a cod, pod' (Widegren). + Low G. hulse, a husk; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 668. + M. H. G. hulsche, a husk (Benecke); G. hülse, a husk, shell. Der. hush, verb, to take off the shells; hush-ed.

HUSKY, hoarse, as applied to the voice. (E.) Not connected with husk, but confused with it. In Todd's Johnson; but a rare word in literature. A corruption of husty or hausty, i.e. inclined to cough. Formed from 'haust, a dry cough;' Coles' Eng. Dict. ed. 1684. M. E. hoost, host, a cough; Prompt. Parv. p. 248. = A. S. hwōsta, a cough; which occurs to translate tussis in Ælfric's Grammar (Bosworth, Lye). + Du. hoest, a cough. + Icel. hósti, + Dan. hoste. + Swed. hosta. + G. husten, a cough; also, to cough. + Russ. kashele, a cough. + Lithuan. kosulys, a cough; kósti, to cough. + Skt. kāsa, a cough. All from √ KĀS, to cough; Skt. kās, to cough. Der. hush-k-i-ness.

HUSSAR, a cavalry soldier. (Hungarian.) 'Hussars, Husares, Hungarian horsemen;' Coles' Dict. ed. 1684. 'After the manner of the Hussars;' Spectator, no. 576. 'Hussars, light cavalry in Poland and Hungary, about 1600 [rather, 1460]. The British Hussars were enrolled in 1759;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. = Hungarian huszar, the twentieth; from husz, twenty. So called because Mathias Corvinus, king of Hungary and Bohemia (1458-1490), raised a corps of horse-soldiers in 1458 by commanding that one man should be chosen out of every twenty in each village; see Littré, Scheler, and Mahn. The Hungarian or Magyar belongs to the Finno-Ugrian or Finno-Hungarian group of languages, and is of an agglutinative character; it belongs to the Turanian family; see Max Müller's Lect. on Language, vol. i. App. no. iii. [†]

HUSSIF, a case containing thread, needles, and other articles for sewing. (Scand.) Hussif, that is, house-wife; a roll of flannel with a pin-cushion attached, used for the purpose of holding pins, needles, and thread; Peacock, Gloss. of words used in Manley and Corringham, co. Lincoln. And in common use elsewhere. β . That the word has long been confused with hussy, huswife, or housewife, and hence obtained its final f, is certain. γ . It is equally certain that this is an error; it is of Scand. origin.—Icel. húsi, a case; skerishúsi, a scissors-case.—Icel. hús, a house. See HOUSE. ¶ Thus the connection with house is correct; but the latter syllable has been misunderstood. [†]

HUSSY, a pert girl. (E.) 'The young husses;' Spectator, no. 242. Hussy is a corruption of huswife; cf. 'Doth Fortune play the huswife with me now?' Hen. V, v. i. 85. And again, huswife stands for house-wife = woman who minds a house; from house and wife in the general sense of woman; cf. 'the good housewife Fortune,' As You Like It, i. 2. 33; 'Let housewives make a skillett of my helm;' Oth. i. 3. 273. See HOUSE and WIFE. And see HUSSIF.

HUSTINGS, a platform used by candidates for election to parliament. (Scand.) The modern use is incorrect; it means rather a 'council,' or assembly for the choice of such a candidate; and it should rather be used in the singular husting. Minshew has hustings, and refers to 11 Hen. VII. cap. 21. M. E. husting, a council; 'hulden muchel husting' = they held a great council; Layamon, 2324.—A. S. husting, a council (of Danes); A. S. Chron. an. 1012; see gloss. to Sweet's A. S. Reader. Not an A. S. word, but used in speaking of Danes.—Icel. húsping, 'a council or meeting, to which a king, earl, or captain summoned his people or guardsmen.'—Icel. hús, a house; and ping, (1) a thing, (2) as a law term, 'an assembly, meeting, a general term for any public meeting, esp. for purposes of legislation; a parliament, including courts of law.' Cf. Swed. ting, a thing, an assize; hälla ting, to hold assizes; Dan. ting, a thing, court, assize. β . The Icel. hús is cognate with E. house; and ping with E. thing. See HOUSE and THING.

HUSTLE, to push about, jostle in a crowd. (Du.) It should have been hutsle, but the change to hustle was inevitable, to make it easier of pronunciation. In Johnson's Dict., but scarce in literature.—Du. hutselen, to shake up and down, either in a tub, bowl, or basket; onder malkanderen hutselen, to huddle together [lit. to hustle one another]; Sewel. A frequentative form of O. Du. hutsen, Du. hutsen, to shake, jog, jolt. Cf. Lowland Sc. hotch, hott, to move by jerks, hotter, to jolt. See HITCH, HOTCHPOT. Der. hodge-podge.

HUT, a cottage, hovel. (F.,—O. H. G.) M. E. hutte. 'For scatred er þi Scottis, and hodred in þer hottes' = for scattered are thy Scots, and huddled in their huts; Rob. Manning, tr. of Langtoft, ed. Heame, p. 273.—F. hutte, 'a cote [cot] or cottage;' Cot.—O. H. G. hutta, G. hütte, a hut, cottage; whence also Span. huta, a hut; and probably Du. hut, Dan. hytte (since these words have not the Low G. d for H. G. t). + Swed. hydda, a hut. + Skt. hutí, a hut; from hut, to bend (hence, to cover). See COTYLEDON.

HUTCH, a box, chest, for keeping things in. (F.,—Low L.) Chiefly used now in the comp. rabbit-hutch. Shak. has bolting-hutch, a hutch for bolted (or boulded) flour; 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 495. Milton has hutch'd = stored up; Comus, 719. M. E. huche, hucche, P. Plowman, B. iv. 116; pl. huches, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 850.—O. F. (and F.) huche, 'a hutch or binne;' Cot.—Low Lat. hutica; 'quadam cista, vulgo hutica dicta;' Ducange. β . Of unknown origin; but almost certainly Teutonic; and prob. from O. H. G. huatan, M. H. G. hueten, to take care of, from O. H. G. huota, heed, care, cognate with E. heed. See HEED.

HUZZAH (G.), HURRAH (Scand.), a shout of approbation. Huzzah is the older form, and was also written huzza. 'Loud huzzas;' Pope, Essay on Man, iv. 256. 'They made a great huzza, or shout, at our approach, three times;' Evelyn's Diary, June 30, 1665. It appears to be one of the very few words of German origin.—G. hussa, huzza; hussa rufen, to shout huzza. β . Probably of merely interjectional origin. We find also Dan. hurra, hurrah! Swed. hurra, hurrah! hurvarop, a cheer (rop = a shout); hurra, v., to salute with cheers. Cf. Dan. hurra, to hum, to buzz. See HURRY.

HYACINTH, a kind of flower. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Cotgrave and Minshew; and in Milton, P. L. 701.—F. hyacinthe, 'the blew or purple jacinth, or hyacinth flower; we call it also crow-toes;' Cot.—Lat. hyacinthus.—Gk. ῥάκινθος, an iris or larkspur (not what is now called a hyacinth); said, in Grecian fable, to have sprung from the blood of the youth Hyacinthos; but, of course, the fable is later than the name. Der. hyacinth-ine, i. e. curling like the hyacinth, Milton, P. L. iv. 301. Doublet, jacinth.

HYÆNA, the same as HYENA, q. v.

HYBRID, mongrel, an animal or plant produced from two different species. (L.,—Gk.?) 'She's a wild Irish born, sir, and a hybride;' Ben Jonson, New Inn, A. ii. sc. 2 (Host); also spelt hybride in Minshew.—Lat. hibrida, hybrida, a mongrel, hybrid. β . Usually derived from Gk. ὑβριδ-, stem of ὑβρις, insult, wantonness, violation. γ . See this word discussed in Curtius, ii. 155; he takes the h to be formative, whilst ὑβρ- is compared with Lat. super-us, above (cf. Lat. super-bia, pride) and Skt. upari, over, above. See SUPERIOR and OVER. ¶ The Greek origin of the Latin word is somewhat doubtful.

HYDRA, a many-headed water-snake. (L.,—Gk.) In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 93.—Lat. hydra.—Gk. ὑδρα, a water-snake; also written ὑδρος, from the base ὑδ- which appears in ὑδωρ, water. + Skt. udras, a water-animal, otter; cited by Curtius, i. 308. + Russ. vidra, an otter. + Lithuan. udrà, an otter. + A. S. oter, an otter. See OTTER and WATER. Der. hydra-headed, Hen. V, i. 1. 35.

HYDRANGÆA, a kind of flower. (Gk.) A coined name, referring to the cup-form of the capsule, or seed-vessel; Johnson's Gardeners' Dict., 1877. Made from Gk. ὑδωρ, water; and ἀγγεῖον, a vessel.

HYDRAULIC, relating to water in motion, conveying or acting by water. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) 'Hydraulick, pertaining to organs, or to an instrument to draw water, or to the sound of running waters (Bacon);' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Bacon has hydraulicks, Nat. Hist. § 102.—F. hydraulique, 'the sound of running waters, or music made thereby;' Cot.—Lat. hydraulicus.—Gk. ὑδραυλικός, belonging to a water-organ.—Gk. ὑδραυλῖς, an organ worked by water.—Gk. ὑδρ-, for ὑδωρ, water; and αὔλος, a tube, pipe; from the base af, to blow. ¶ For a description of what the hydraulic organ really was, see Chappell's Hist. of Music.

HYDRODYNAMICS, the science relating to the force of water in motion. (Gk.) A scientific term; coined from Gk. ὑδρo-, from ὑδωρ, water; and E. dynamics, a word of Gk. origin. See WATER and DYNAMIC.

HYDROGEN, a very light gas. (Gk.) A scientific term; coined from hydro-, standing for Gk. ὑδρo-, from ὑδωρ, water; and gen, for Gk. root γεν-, to produce, generate. The name means 'generator of water.' See WATER and GENERATE.

HYDROPATHY, the water-cure. (Gk.) Coined from hydro-, standing for Gk. ὑδρo-, from ὑδωρ, water; and Gk. πάθος, suffering, hence, endurance of treatment. See WATER and PATHOS. Der. hydropath-ic, hydropath-ist.

HYDROPHOBIA, fear of water. (L.,—Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715; spelt hydrophobie, a French form; in Minshew. A symptom of the disease due to a mad dog's bite. Coined from Gk. ὑδρo-, from ὑδωρ, water; and Gk. φόβος, fear, from $\sqrt{\text{BHA}}$, to tremble, whence also Skt. bhī, to fear, and Lat. febris, a fever. See WATER and FEVER.

HYDROPSY, the old spelling of DROPSY, q. v.

HYDROSTATICS, the science which treats of fluids at rest. (Gk.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. Scientific. Coined from hydro- = Gk. ὑδρo-, from ὑδωρ, water; and E. statics. See WATER and STATICS.

HYENA, a sow-like quadruped. (L.,—Gk.) Also spelt hyæna; Milton, Samson, 748. [Older authors use the French form, as hyen, Shak. As You Like It, iv. 1. 156. M. E. hyene, Chaucer, Le Responce de Fortune a Pleintif, st. 2.] —Lat. hyæna.—Gk. ῥαῖνα, a hyena, lit. 'sow-like;' thought to resemble a sow.—Gk. ῥ-, stem of ῥα, a sow, cognate with E. sow; with fem. adj. suffix -aina. See HOG, SOB.

HYMEN, the god of marriage. (L.,—Gk.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 1. 23.—Lat. hymen.—Gk. Ἥμην, the god of marriage. Der. hymenean or hymenean, Milton, P. L. iv. 711, from O. F. hymenean, 'of or belonging to a wedding;' Cot., from Lat. Hymenæus, Gk. ἡμέναιος, another name of Hymen, though the proper signification is a wedding-song; later turned into hymen-eal, as in 'hymeneal rites,' Pope's Homer, ll. xviii. 570.

HYMN, a song of praise. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) M. E. ympe, Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 30; in which the p is excrescent after m, as in M. E. solempne = solemn.—O. F. ymne (Littré), later hymne, 'a hymne;' Cot.—Lat. hymnum, acc. of hymnus.—Gk. ῥμνος, a song, festive song, hymn.

β . Some suppose that the expression ῥμνος δοῦναι in Homer, Od. viii. 429, means 'a web of song;' thus linking ῥμνος with ὑφ-, a web, from the base ὑφ-, from $\sqrt{\text{WABH}}$, to weave. See WEAVE. Der. hymno-log.

HYPALLAGE, an interchange. (L.,—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Minshew, ed. 1627.—Lat. hypallage, 'a rhetorical figure, by which the relations of things seem to be mutually interchanged; as, dare classibus austris (= to give the winds to the fleet) instead of dare classes austris (to give the fleet to the winds); Virg.

Æn. iii. 61; 'White. - Gk. ὑπαλλαγή, an interchange, exchange, hypallage. - Gk. ὑπέρ, for ὑπὸ, under (see Sub-); and ἀλλαγή, a change, from ἀλλάσσειν, to change. - Gk. ἄλλος, another, other; from a base ALIA, whence also alien and else. See Alien, Else.

HYPER-, prefix, denoting excess. (L., -Gk.) Lat. hyper, put for Gk. ὑπέρ, above, beyond, allied to Lat. super, above. See Super-. Hence hyper-baton, a transposition of words from their natural order, lit. 'a going beyond,' from βαίνειν, to go, cognate with E. come; hyper-critical, coined from hyper- and critical; hyper-borean, extreme northern (Minshew), from Lat. boreas, Gk. βορέας, the north wind; hyper-metrical, &c. And see below.

HYPERBOLE, a rhetorical exaggeration. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 407. - Lat. hyperbole. - Gk. ὑπερβολή, excess, exaggeration. - Gk. ὑπέρ, beyond (see Hyper-); and βάλλειν, to throw, cast. - ✓GAR, GAL, to fall; see Gland. Der. hyperbol-ic-al, Cor. i. 9. 51. Doublet, hyperbola, as a mathematical term.

HYPHEN, a short stroke (-) joining two parts of a compound word. (L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. hypothen, which is merely a Latinised spelling of Gk. ὑπὲν, together, lit. 'under one.' - Gk. ὑφ-, for ὑπὸ, under (see Hypo-); and έν, one thing, neuter of ές, one, which is prob. allied to E. Same, q. v.

HYPO-, prefix, lit. 'under.' (Gk.) Gk. ὑπό, under; cognate with Lat. sub. See Sub-.

HYPOCHONDRIA, a mental disorder, inducing gloominess and melancholy. (L., -Gk.) The adj. hypochondriac occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Named from the spleen, which was supposed to cause hypochondria, and is situate under the cartilage of the breast-bone. - Lat. hypochondria, sb. pl., the parts beneath the breast-bone. - Gk. ὑποχόνδρια, pl. sb., the same. - Gk. ὑπό, under, beneath; and χόνδρος, a corn, grain, groat, gristle, and esp. the cartilage of the breast-bone. Der. hypochondria-c, hypochondria-c-al; also hip, to depress the spirits, hipp-ish. See Hippish.

HYPOCRISY, pretence to virtue. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. hypocrisie, Chaucer, C. T. 12344; ypocrisie, P. Plowman, B. xv. 108. - O. F. hypocrisie, 'hypocrisie, dissembling;' Cot. - Lat. hypocrisis, in 1 Tim. iv. 2 (Vulgate). - Gk. ὑπόκρισις, a reply, answer, the playing of a part on the stage, the acting of a part, hypocrisy. - Gk. ὑποκρίνομαι, I reply, make answer, play a part. - Gk. ὑπό, under; and κρίνομαι, I contend, dispute, middle voice of κρίνειν, to judge, discern. See Critic. Der. from the same source, hypocrite, Chaucer, C. T. 10828, F. hypocrite, Lat. hypocrita, hypocrites, from Gk. ὑποκριτής, a dissembler, Matt. vi. 2; hypocrit-ic, hypocrit-ic-al, hypocrit-ic-al-ly.

HYPOGASTRIC, belonging to the lower part of the abdomen. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt hypogastrick in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'The hypogaster or paunch;' Minshew. - O. F. hypogastrique, 'belonging to the lower part of the belly;' Cot. - Late Lat. hypogastricus. - Gk. ὑπογάστριον, the lower part of the belly. See Hypo- and Gastric.

HYPOSTASIS, a substance, personality of each Person in the Godhead. (L., -Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. 'The hypostatical union is the union of humane nature with Christ's Divine Person;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. hypostasis. - Gk. ὑπόστασις, a standing under, prop, groundwork, subsistence, substance, Person of the Trinity. - Gk. ὑπό, under; and στάσις, a placing, a standing, from ✓STA, to stand. See Hypo- and Stand. Der. hypostatic = Gk. ὑποστατικός, adj. formed from ὑπόστασις; hypostatic-al.

HYPOTENUSE, HYPOTHENUSE, the side of a right-angled triangle which is opposite the right angle. Hypotenuse in Kersey, ed. 1715; but it should rather be hypotenuse. - F. hypotenuse. - Lat. hypotenusa. - Gk. ὑποτείνουσα, the subtending line (γραμμή, a line, being understood); fem. of ὑποτείνων, pres. pt. of ὑποτείνειν, to subvert, i. e. to stretch under. - Gk. ὑπό, under; and τείνειν, to stretch. - ✓TAN, to stretch. See Subtend. [†]

HYPOTHEC, a kind of pledging or mortgage. (F., -L., -Gk.) A law term. The adj. hypothecary is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Hypothec is Englished from O. F. hypothèque, 'an engagement, mortgage, or pawning of an immovable;' Cot. - Lat. hypotheca, a mortgage. - Gk. ὑποθήκη, an under-prop, also a pledge, mortgage. - Gk. ὑπό, under; and base θη-, θε-, to place, from ✓DHA, to place. See Hypothesis. Der. hypothec-ate, to mortgage; hypothec-al-ion.

HYPOTHESIS, a supposition. (L., -Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. The pl. hypotheses is in Holland's Plutarch, p. 623 (R.) - Late Lat. hypothesis. - Gk. ὑποθέσις, a placing under, basis, supposition. - Gk. ὑπό, under; and base θε-, to place, from ✓DHA, to place. See Hypo- and Thesis. Der. hypothetic, adj. = Gk. ὑποθετικός, supposed, imaginary; hypothetic-al, hypothetic-al-ly.

HYSSOP, an aromatic plant. (F., -L., -Gk., -Heb.) Spelt hyssope in Minshew. M. E. ysope, Wyclif, Hebrews, ix. 19. - O. F. hyssope, 'hisop;' Cot. - Lat. hyssopum, hyssopus. - Gk. ὑσσώπος, an aromatic plant, but different from our hyssop; Heb. ix. 19. - Heb.

éxóbh, a plant, the exact nature of which is not known; see Concise Dict. of the Bible.

HYSTERIC, convulsive, said of fits. (F., -L., -Gk.) Kersey has hysteric and hysterical; only the latter is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - O. F. hyterique; 'affection hysterique, the suffocation of the matrix;' Cot. - Lat. hysterics; whence hysterica passio, called in E. 'the mother;' see K. Lear, ii. 4. 57. - Gk. ὑστερικός, suffering in the womb, hysterical. - Gk. ὑστέρα, the womb; prob. connected with ὑστέρος, latter, lower, comparative from base UD, out; see Out, Utter. β. Similarly Lat. uterus, the womb, is thought to stand for ut-terus, compar. from the same base. Cf. Skt. udara, the belly, lower part; from ud, out. Der. hysteric-al, -al-ly; hysterics, hysteria.

I.

I, nom. case of first personal pronoun. (E.) M. E. (Northern) ik, i; (Southern) ich, uch, i. - A. S. ic. + Du. ik. + Icel. ek. + Dan. jeg. + Swed. jag. + Goth. ik. + G. ich; O. H. G. ih. + W. i. + Russ. ia. + Lat. ego. + Gk. ἐγώ, ἐγών. + Skt. aham, prob. corrupted from agam; see Curtius, i. 383. β. All from the Aryan form AGAM, apparently a compound word; composed of the pronominal base A, and the enclitic partiele GAM or GA which appears in Gk. γε and Skt. ha (Vedic gha) as well as at the end of Goth. mi-k, thu-k, si-k, accusative cases of the first, second, and third (reflexive) pronouns. See Curtius, ii. 137. See Me, which is, however, from a different base.

I-, prefix with negative force. (L.) Only in i-gnoble, i-gnominy, i-gnore, as an abbreviation of Lat. in-; see In- (3).

IAMBIC, a certain metre or metrical foot, denoted by ι, for short followed by long. (L., -Gk.) 'Iambick, Elegiack, Pastoral;' Sir P. Sidney, Apologie for Poetrie (1595); ed. Arber, p. 28. - Lat. iambicus. - Gk. ιαμβικός, iambic. - Gk. ιαμβος, an iamb or iambic foot, also iambic verse, a lampoon. β. So called because used for satiric poetry; the lit. sense being 'a throw,' or 'a cast.' - Gk. λάπτειν, to throw, cast; doubtless closely related to Lat. iacere, to throw. See Curtius, ii. 59, 154. See Jet. ¶ Iamb is sometimes used to represent Gk. ιαμβος.

IBEX, a genus of goats. (L.) Ibex in Minshew. A scientific name. - Lat. ibex, a kind of goat, chamois.

IBIS, a genus of wading birds. (L., -Gk., -Coptic.) 'A fowle in the same Egypt, called ibis;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 27. - Lat. ibis. - Gk. ἴβις; an Egyptian bird, to which divine honours were paid; Herod. ii. 75, 76. Of Coptic or Egyptian origin. [†]

ICE, any frozen fluid, esp. water. (E.) M. E. ys, iis; spelt ijs (= iis), P. Ploughman's Crede, 436; yse (dat. case), Rob. of Glouc. p. 463, l. 4. - A. S. ís, ice; Grein, ii. 147. + Du. ijs. + Icel. ís. + Dan. iis. + Swed. is. + G. eis; O. H. G. is. β. Apparently from a ✓IS, to glide, go swiftly; cf. Skt. ish, to go, hasten, fly; Icel. eisa, to go swiftly, as in ganga eisandi, to go dashing through the waves, said of a ship. See Fick. i. 29, 30; iii. 31, 32. See Iron. Der. ice-berg, quite a modern word, not in Todd's Johnson, in which the latter element is the Du. and Swed. berg, Dan. bjerg, G. berg, a mountain, hill; whence Du. ijsberg, Swed. isberg, Dan. iisbjerg, G. eisberg, an iceberg. [It is not at all clear in which of these languages iceberg first arose; it does not seem to be an old word in Danish or Swedish, yet it is probable that we borrowed it (together with ice-blink) from one of these languages. It is certainly a sailor's word.] Also ice-blink, from Dan. iisblink, Swed. isblink, a field of ice extending into the interior of Greenland; so named from its shining appearance; from Dan. blinke, to gleam; see Blink. Also ice-boat, ice-bound, ice-cream (abbreviated from iced-cream), ice-field, ice-float, ice-floe, ice-house, ice-island, Ice-land, ice-man, ice-pack, ice-plant. Also ice, vb., ic-ing. Also ic-y = A. S. isig; Grein, ii. 147; ic-i-ly, ic-i-ness. And see Icicle.

ICHNEUMON, an Egyptian carnivorous animal. (L., -Gk.) In Holland's Pliny, b. viii. c. 24. - Lat. ichneumon (Pliny). - Gk. ἰχνεύμων, an ichneumon; lit. 'a tracker;' so called because it tracks out the eggs of the crocodile, which it devours. See Aristotle, Hist. Animals, 9. 6. 5. - Gk. ἰχνεύειν, to track, trace, hunt after. - Gk. ἰχνος, a track, footstep. β. The origin of Gk. ichnos is not clear; it appears to be related to Gk. έκνειν, to go back, to yield, from ✓WIK, perhaps to separate. Cf. Skt. vich, to separate. See Curtius, i. 166. Der. From the same source is ichno-graphy, a design traced out, ground-plan, a term in architecture (Vitruvius).

ICHOR, the juice in the veins of gods. (Gk.) 'The sacred ichor;' Pope, tr. of Homer, Il. v. 216. - Gk. ἰχώρ, juice, the blood of gods; related to Gk. ικμάς, moisture, ικμαίνειν, to wet, from ✓SIK, to moisten, sprinkle; cf. Skt. sich, to sprinkle, to wet, G. seihen, to strain, to filter. Curtius, i. 168; ii. 344. Der. ichor-ous.

ICHTHYOGRAPHY, a description of fishes. (Gk.) A scientific term. Coined from Gk. ιχθυο-, crude form of ιχθυς, a fish; and γραφειν, to describe.

β. So also ichthyology, spelt ichthyology by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 24. § 1; from Gk. ιχθυς, a fish, and λόγος, a discourse, from λέγειν, to speak of.

ICICLE, a hanging point of ice. (E.; partly C.) M. E. isikel; spelt yekel, iseyokel, isikle, isechel, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 227; C. xx. 193. Compounded of M. E. ys, ice (see ICE); and ikyl, also used alone in the same sense of 'icicle', as in Prompt. Parv., p. 250. Levins also has ickles=icicles.—A. S. iscigel, compounded of is, ice, and gicel, a small piece of ice; orig. written ises gicel, where ises is in the gen. case. *Stiria, ises gicel; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 21, col. 2.

β. Gicel is a dimin. from gic-, put for IK or IAK, an old word for 'ice', still preserved in Celtic, viz. in the Irish aigh, Gael. eigh, W. ia (for iag), ice. Thus the word really = ice-icel, though the second ice is a Celtic word and not the same word with the first. + Icel. iss, ice; and jökull (used by itself), an icicle, dimin. of jaki, a piece of ice, cognate with or borrowed from the Celtic word above indicated. + Low G. is-hekel, in the Dittmarsh dialect isjäkel; Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 704. ¶ Observe that -ic- in ic-icel is totally different from -ic- in art-ic-le, part-ic-le.

ICONOCLAST, a breaker of images. (Gk.) Iconoclasts*, or breakers of images; Bp. Taylor, Of the Real Presence, s. 12 (R.) A coined word; from Gk. εικονο-, crude form of εικών (Latinised as icon), an image; and κλάσσειν, a breaker, one who breaks, from κλέειν, to break. Der. iconoclast-ic.

ICOSAHEDRON, a solid figure, having twenty equal triangular faces. (Gk.) Spelt icosaedron in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Coined from Gk. εικοσι, twenty; and εδρα, a base, lit. a seat, from base ιδ-, to sit, cognate with E. Sit. Der. icosahedr-al.

IDEA, a (mental) image, notion, opinion. (L., = Gk.) Idea* is a bodiless substance, &c.; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 666. 'The fayre Idea;' Spenser, Sonnet 45.—Lat. idea.—Gk. ιδέα, the look or semblance of a thing, species.—Gk. ιδεῖν, to see.—✓ WID, to see; cf. Skt. vid, to perceive, know. See Wit, verb. Der. ide-al, from O. F. ideal, 'ideall' (Cot.), which from Lat. ideal; whence ide-al-ly, ide-al-ise, ide-al-ism, ide-al-ist, ide-al-is-at-ion, ide-al-ist-ic, ide-al-ity (most of these terms being modern).

IDENTICAL, the very same. (L.) *Of such propositions as in the schools are called identical;' Digby, Of Man's Soul, c. 2. Coined by adding -al to the older term identick, spelt identick in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. 'The beard's th' identique beard you knew;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. l. 149. Identick is formed as if from a Low Lat. *identicus, suggested by the older identitas; see Identity. Der. identick-al-ly, -ness.

IDENTITY, sameness. (F., = Low Lat., = L.) Identity* and diversity;' Holland's Plutarch, p. 54 (R.); and in Minshew.—F. identité, 'identity, likeness, the being almost the very same;' Cot.—Low Lat. identitatem, acc. of identitas, sameness; a word which occurs A. D. 1249; Ducange.—Lat. identit-, occurring in identit-dem, repeatedly; with suffix -ias.—Lat. idem, the same.—Lat. i-, from base I, pronominal base of the 3rd person; and -dem, from base DA, likewise a pronom. base of the 3rd person. Der. From the same Lat. identit- we have identit-fy = F. identifier (Littre); whence identi-fic-at-ion; see identical.

IDES, the 15th day of March, May, July, and October, and the 13th of other months. (F., = L.) *The ides of March;' Jul. Cæsar, i. 2. 18, 19.—F. ides, 'the ides of a month;' Cot.—Lat. idus, the ides.

β. Of disputed origin; we can hardly derive it from a supposed idware, as that would rather be a derivative from idus. It is prob. connected with Skt. indus, the moon.

IDIOM, a mode of expression peculiar to a language. (F., = L., = Gk.) *The Latin and Greeke idiom;' Milton, Of Education (R.) Spelt idiome in Minshew.—F. idiome, 'an ideom, or proper form of speech;' Cot.—Lat. idioma.—Gk. ιδίωμα, an idiom, peculiarity in language.—Gk. ιδίω, I make my own.—Gk. ιδιος, crude form of ιδιος, one's own, peculiar to one's self. Corrupted from the stem σφε- with suffix -yos, as explained by Curtius, ii. 272. 'In this way (he says) from the stem σφε-... came also σφε-yos, σφε-dyos, later σφε-dios, φε-dios, and finally ιδιος.' Cf. Skt. svayam, reflexive pronoun of the three persons, self; from the base SAWA, SWA, one's own, reflex. possess. pronoun, with suffix YA. Der. idiom-at-ic, from ιδίωμα; stem of ιδίωμα; idiom-at-ic-al, idiom-at-ic-al-ly. Also idiopath-y, a primary disease not occasioned by another, from ιδιος, crude form of ιδιος, and παθ-, as seen in παθεῖν, to suffer (see Pathos); idio-path-ic, idio-path-ic-al-ly. And see below.

IDIOSYNCRASY, peculiarity of temperament, a characteristic. (Gk.) *Whether quails, from any idiosyncrasy or peculiarity of constitution, &c.; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 28, last section.—Gk. ιδιος, crude form of ιδιος, peculiar to one's self; and σύνκρασις, a mixing together, blending. For Gk. ιδιος, see Idiom. The Gk.

σύνκρασις is compounded of σύν, together, and κράσις, a mingling; see Crasis.

IDIOT, a foolish person, one weak in intellect. (F., = L., = Gk.) See Trench, Study of Words. M. E. idiot, Chaucer, C. T. 5893 (not 3893).—F. idiot, 'an ideot (sic) or natural fool;' Cot.—Lat. idiota, an ignorant, uneducated person.—Gk. ιδιώτης, a private person, hence one who is inexperienced or uneducated. (See 1 Cor. xiv. 16, where the Vulgate has locum idiotæ, and Wyclif 'the place of an idiot.')—Gk. ιδίω, I make my own.—Gk. ιδιος, crude form of ιδιος, one's own. See Idiom. Der. idiot-ic, idiot-ic-al, idiot-ic-al-ly, idiot-ism (= idiom); also idiot-ey, in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715, formed from idiot as frequent-ey is from frequent.

IDLE, unemployed, useless, unimportant. (E.) M. E. idel, Chaucer, C. T. 2507, 12572; hence the phr. in idel = in vain, id. 12576.—A. S. idel, vain, empty, useless; Grein, ii. 135. + Du. ijdel, vain, frivolous, trifling. + Dan. idel, sheer, mere. + Swed. idel, mere, pure, downright. + G. eitel, vain, conceited, trifling; O. H. G. ital, empty, useless, mere.

β. The orig. sense seems to have been 'clear' or 'bright'; hence, pure, sheer, mere, downright; and lastly, vain, unimportant. The A. S. idel exactly answers to the cognate Gk. ιδῆρος, clear, pure (used of springs), a scarce word, given in Curtius, i. 310, which see.—✓ IDH, to kindle; cf. Skt. indh, to kindle; whence Gk. αἶθρην, to burn, αἶθρην, upper (clear) air, αἶθρα, clear sky; also A. S. id (for aid), a burning, funeral pile, O. H. G. eit, a funeral pile, eiten, to burn, glow. See Æther. Der. id-ly; idle, verb; id-er; idle-ness, Ormulum, 4736, from A. S. idelnes, Grein, ii. 135.

IDOL, a figure or image of a god. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. idole, Chaucer, C. T. 15753.—O. F. idole; see Sherwood's index to Cot.—Lat. idolum, 1 Cor. viii. 4 (Vulg.); also idolon.—Gk. εἰδωλον, an image, likeness.—Gk. εἶδομαι, I appear, seem; cf. Gk. εἶδον, I saw, ιδεῖν, to see.—✓ WID, to see; cf. Skt. vid, to perceive; and see Wit, verb. Der. ido-latry (corruption of idolo-latry), M. E. idolatrie, Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Avaritia, § 2, from F. idolatrie = Low Lat. idolatria, shortened form of idololatria, from Gk. εἰδωλολατρία, service of idols, Coloss. iii. 5; composed of εἶδωλον, crude form of εἶδωλον, and λατρεία, service, from λάτρεω, a hired servant, which from λάτρον, hire. Also idolater, from O. F. idolatre, 'an idolater' (Cot.); also ill-spelt idolastre in O. F., whence M. E. idolastre, an idolater, Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Avaritia, § 3; the O. F. idolatre is developed from O. F. idolatr-ic, explained above. Hence also idolatr-ess, idolatr-ise, idolatr-ous-ly. Also idol-ise (Kersey), idol-is-er; see idyl.

IDYL, IDYLL, a pastoral poem. (L., = Gk.) Idyl*, a little pastoral poem;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Idyl*, a poem consisting of a few verses;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Lat. idyllum.—Gk. εἰδύλλιον, a short descriptive pastoral poem; so called from its descriptive representations.—Gk. εἶδος, form, shape, figure, appearance, look.—Gk. εἶδομαι, I appear, seem; see further under Idol. Der. idyll-ic.

IF, a conjunction, expressive of doubt. (E.) M. E. if, Chaucer, C. T. 145; ȝif, P. Plowman, B. prol. 7; giff, Barbour, Bruce, i. 12.—A. S. gif; Grein, i. 505. + Icel. ef, older form also if, if. + Du. of, or, if, whether, but; cf. Du. alsof=as if. + O. Fries. ief, gef, ef, of, if. + O. Sax. ef, if. + Goth. iba, ibai, perhaps, answering in form to E. if, Icel. ef, O. Fries. ief, gef, ef, O. Sax. ef; whence jabai, if (compounded of jah, and, also, and ibai) answering in form to Du. of, O. Fries. of, O. Sax. of, G. ob. + O. H. G. iba, condition, stipulation, whence the dat. case ibu, ipu, used in the sense of 'if'; lit. 'on the condition'; also (answering to Goth. jabai) O. H. G. upi, upa, ube, oba, mod. G. ob, whether. β. The O. H. G. ibu is the dat. case of iba, as said above; so also the Icel. ef, if, is closely related to (and once a case of) Icel. ef (older form if), doubt, hesitation, whence also the verb efa (formerly ifa), to doubt. All the forms beginning with e or i can be derived from a Teutonic type EBAI, dat. case of EBA, stipulation, doubt; see Fick, iii. 20. The other forms are evidently closely related.

γ. The W. o, if (for op, Rhys) is also cognate; we may also compare Lat. op- in op-inus, imagining, op-inari, to suppose, op-inio, an opinion; see Opinion. There is a probable further connection with Lat. apisci, to acquire, and aptus, fit; see Apt. The probable root is ✓ AP, to attain; cf. Skt. āp, to attain, obtain. Thus the train of thought would pass from 'attainment' to 'stipulation,' and thence to 'doubt.' ¶ The guess of Horne Tooke's, that A. S. gif is the imperative mood of A. S. gifan, to give, has been copied only too often. It is plainly wrong, (1) because the A. S. use of the words exhibits no such connection, and (2) because it fails to explain the Friesic, Icelandic, German, and Gothic forms, thus ignoring the value of comparison in philology. But it will long continue to be held as indubitably true by all who prefer plausibility to research, and who regard English as an isolated language.

IGNITION, a setting on fire. (F., = L.) *Not a total ignition;' Sir T. Browne, Works, b. ii. c. 2. § 6.—F. ignition, 'a burning, firing;' Cot. Coined (as if from Lat. *ignitio, a burning) from Lat. ignitus, pp. of ignire, to set on fire.—Lat. ignis, fire. + Skt. agni, fire.

β. 'It is not improbable that Skt. agni-s = Lat. igni-s, Lith. ugn-s, is derived from the root AG (Skt. aj) to move;' Curtius, i. 134. For this root, see Agile. Der. Hence ignite, a later word, though perhaps formed directly from Lat. pp. ignitus; ignit-ible. Also igneous, Englished from Lat. igneus, fiery, by the common change from Lat. -us to E. -ous. Also, directly from the Latin, ignis fatuus, lit. 'foolish fire,' hence, a misleading meteor; see Fatuus. 'Fuller (Comment. on Ruth, p. 38) would scarcely have spoken of "a meteor of foolish fire," if ignis fatuus, which has now quite put out "firedrake," the older name for these meteors, had not been, when he wrote, still strange to the language, or quite recent to it;' Trench, Eng. Past and Present, lect. iv.

IGNOBLE, not noble, mean, base. (F., -L.) In Shak. Rich. III, iii. 7. 127. -F. ignoble, 'ignoble;' Sherwood's index to Cotgrave. -Lat. ignobilis. -Lat. i-, short for in-, not; and gnobilis, later nobilis, noble. See I- and Noble. Der. ignobl-y, ignoble-ness. And see Ignominy.

IGNOMINY, disgrace, dishonour. (F., -L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, v. 4. 100. -F. ignominie, 'ignominy;' Cot. -Lat. ignominia, disgrace. -Lat. i-, short for in-, not; and gnomini, crude form of gnomen, later nomen, name, renown. See Name. Der. ignomini-ous, ignomini-ous-ly, -ness. See Ignore.

IGNORE, not to know, to disregard. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. -F. ignorer, 'to ignore, or be ignorant of;' Cot. -Lat. ignorare, not to know. -Lat. i-, short for in-, not; and the base gnō-, seen in gnoscerere, later noscere, to know. See Know. Der. ignorant, in the Remedy of Love, st. 34, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 323 b, from F. ignorant (Cot.), which from Lat. ignorant-, stem of pres. pt. of ignorare; ignorant-ly; also ignorance, in early use, Ancren Riwle, p. 278. 1. 7, from F. ignorance (Cot.), which from Lat. ignorantia, ignorance. Also ignoramus, formerly a law term; 'Ignoramus (i. e. we are ignorant) is properly written on the bill of indictments by the grand enquest, empanelled on the inquisition of causes criminal and publick, when they mislike their evidence, as defective or too weak to make good the presentment;' Blount's Law Dict., 1691; cf. Minshew.

IGUANA, a kind of American lizard. (Span., -W. Indian.) 'The iguana' is described in a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792, vol. ii. 263. Also called guana. -Span. iguana. β. 'Cuvier states, on the authority of Hernandez and Scaliger, that it was originally a St. Domingo word, where it was pronounced by the natives hiuana or igoana;' Beeton's Dict. of Universal Information. Littré gives yuana as a Caribbean word, cited by Oviedo in 1525. [†]

IL- (1), the form assumed by the prefix in- (= Lat. in, prep.) when followed by l. Exx.: il-lapse, il-lation, il-lision, il-lude, il-luminate, il-lusion, illustrate, illustrious. See In- (2).

IL- (2), the form assumed by the prefix in-, used in a negative sense, when followed by l. Exx.: il-legal, il-legible, il-legitimate, il-liberal, il-licit, il-limitable, il-literate, il-logical. See In- (3).

ILIAC, pertaining to the smaller intestines. (F., -L.) 'The iliac passion is most sharpe and grievous;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxx. c. 7. -F. iliacque, 'of or belonging to the flanks;' Cot. Formed as if from Lat. *iliacus (not given in White's Dict.), adj. regularly formed from Lat. ilia, sb. pl. the flanks, groin.

ILIAD, an epic poem by Homer. (L., -Gk.) Called 'Homer's Iliads' by the translator Chapman. -Lat. Iliad-, stem of Ilios, the Iliad. -Gk. Ἰλιάδ, the stem of Ἰλιάς, the Iliad. -Gk. Ἰλιος, Ilios, the city of Ilius; commonly known as Troy. -Ἰλιος, Ilius, the grandfather of Priam, and son of Tros (whence Troy).

ILL, evil, bad, wicked. (Scand.) The comp. and superl. forms are Worse, Worst, q. v. M. E. ill, ille, Ormulum, 6647; common as adv., Havelok, 1165; chiefly used in poems which contain several Scand. words. -Icel. illr, adj. ill; also (better) written illr. + Dan. ilde (for ille), adv. ill, badly. + Swed. illa, adv. ill, badly. β. The long vowel in Icel. is a mark of contraction; illr is nothing but a contraction of the word which appears in A. S. as yfel, and in mod. E. as evil. See Evil. Der. ill, adv., ill, sb.; ill-ness, Macb. i. 5. 21 (not in early use); ill-blood, ill-bred, ill-breeding, ill-favoured, ill-natured, ill-starred, ill-will.

ILLAPSE, a gliding in, sudden entrance. (L.) Rare. 'The illapse of some such active substance or powerful being, illapsing into matter,' &c.; Hale, Origin. of Mankind, p. 321 (R.) Coined (in imitation of lapse) from Lat. illapsus, a gliding in. See Il- (1) and Lapse. Der. illapse, vb.

ILLATION, an inference, conclusion. (F., -L.) 'Illation, an inference, conclusion;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Cotgrave. -F. illation, 'an illation, inference;' Cot. -Lat. acc. illationem, from nom. illatio, a bringing in, inference. -Lat. il- = in-, prefix, in; and latus = ilatus, borne, carried, brought = Gk. ἡλτός, borne, from ἵλ, to lift. See Il- (1) and Tolerate. ¶ Since latus is used as the pp. of ferre, to bear, whence in-fer-ence, the senses of illation and inference are much the same. Der. il-lative (rare), il-lative-ly.

ILLEGAL, contrary to law. (L.) 'Not an illegal violence;' Milton, Reason of Church Government, b. ii (R.) And in Kersey. From Il- (2) and Legal. β. Prob. suggested by the sb. illegality, which is in earlier use, from F. illegalité, 'illegality;' Cot. Der. illegal-ity (but see remark); illegal-ly, illegal-ise.

ILLEGIBLE, not to be read. (F., -L.) 'The secretary poured the ink-bottle all over the writings, and so defaced them that they were made altogether illegible;' Howell (in Todd; no reference). Coined from Il- (2) and Legible. Der. illegibl-y, illegible-ness; also illegibil-ity.

ILLEGITIMATE, not born in wedlock. (L.) In Shak. Troil. v. 7. 18. From Il- (2) and Legitimate. Der. illegitimate-ly, illegitimacy.

ILLIBERAL, niggardly, mean. (F., -L.) 'Illiberal, niggardly;' Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. Bacon has illiberalitie; Essay vii (Of Parents). From Il- (2) and Liberal. Der. illiberal-ly, illiberal-ity.

ILLICIT, unlawful. (F., -L.) 'Illicitus, unlicite, unlawful;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1684. -F. illicite, 'illicitous;' Cot. -Lat. illicitus, not allowed. -Lat. il- = in- = E. un-, not; and licitus, pp. of licere, to be allowed, to be lawful. 'Licet, it is left to me, open to me (cf. καταλείπεται, ὑπολείπεται) is the intransitive to linguere, to leave; and is related to it as pendet is to pendere, jaacet to jacere;' Curtius, ii. 61. See Leave, verb, and License. Der. illicit-ly, illicit-ness.

ILLIMITABLE, boundless. (L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 892. From Il- (2) and Limitable; see Limit. Der. illimitabl-y, illimitable-ness.

ILLISION, a striking against. (L.) In Holland's Plutarch, p. 867; and Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 27, part 10. Formed (by analogy with F. sbs. from Lat. accusatives) from Lat. illisio, a striking or dashing against. -Lat. il- = in, prep. against; and latus, pp. of laedere, to strike, hurt. See Il- (1) and Lesion.

ILLITERATE, unlearned, ignorant. (L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iii. i. 296. -Lat. illiteratus, unlettered. -Lat. il- = in- = E. un-, not; and litteratus, literate. See Il- (2) and Literate. Der. illiterate-ly, -ness.

ILLOGICAL, not logical. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. From Il- (2) and Logical; see Logic. Der. illogical-ly, -ness.

ILLUDE, to deceive. (L.; or F., -L.) 'I cannot be illuded;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 166. Cf. F. illuder, 'to illude, delude, mock;' Cot. -Lat. illudere, pp. illusus, to make sport of, mock, deceive. -Lat. il- = in-, on, upon; and ludere, to play. See Il- (1) and Ludicrous. Der. illus-ion, q. v.; also illus-ive, Thomson, To Seraphina, l. 2; illus-ive-ly, illus-ive-ness.

ILLUMINATE, to enlighten, light up. (L.) In the Bible, A. V., Heb. x. 32; Shak. Jul. Caesar, i. 3. 110. But properly a pp., as in Bacon, Adv. of Learning, b. i. 7. § 3; G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, prol. to bk. xii., l. 54. [Older writers use illumine; see Dunbar, Thirissill and Rois, st. 3. We also find the shortened form illum, Hamlet, i. 1. 37. Both from F. illuminer; Cot.] -Lat. illuminatus, Heb. x. 32 (Vulgate); pp. of illuminare, to give light to. -Lat. il-, for in, on, upon; and luminare, to light up. -Lat. lumin-, stem of lumen, light. See Il- (1) and Luminary. Der. illuminat-ion, illuminat-ive, illuminat-or; also illumine (see above), for which Gower uses enlumine, C. A. iii. 86; whence the short form illum (see above), with which cf. relume, Oth. v. 2. 13.

ILLUSION, deception, false show. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 11446. -F. illusion, 'illusion;' Cot. -Lat. acc. illusionem, from nom. illusio, a deception. -Lat. illusus, pp. of illudere. See Illude; which also see for illusive.

ILLUSTRATE, to throw light upon. (L.) In Shak. Hen. VIII, iii. 2. 181. Properly a pp.; see L. L. L. iv. 1. 65; v. 1. 128. -Lat. illustratus, pp. of illustrare, to light up, throw light on. -Lat. il-, for in, upon; and lustrare, to enlighten. See Illustrious. Der. illustrat-or, illustrat-ion, illustrat-ive, illustrat-ive-ly; and see below.

ILLUSTRIOUS, bright, renowned. (F., -L.; or L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 178. A badly coined word; either from F. illustre, by adding -ous, or from the corresponding Lat. illustris, bright, renowned; the former is more likely. [Its form imitates that of industrious, which is correct.] β. The origin of Lat. illustris is disputed. According to one theory, it is from Lat. lustrum, a lustration, which is prob. to be referred to ✓LU, to wash; see Lustration. Or, more likely, it stands for illuc-s-tris, from the base luc- seen in luc-id-us, bright (shortened to lū in lu-men, light, lu-na, moon); see Lucid. γ. The prefix is the prep. in; see Il- (1). Der. illustrious-ly, -ness.

IM- (1), prefix. (F., -L.; or E.) A. In some words, im- is a corruption of the O. French prefix em-, but is spelt im- (as sometimes in later F.) by confusion with the Latin prefix im- whence it is derived. B. And further, by a confusion arising from the double use of the prefix in- (which is both Eng. and Lat.) it was often looked upon as a fair substitute for the E. in, and is prefixed to words of purely E. origin, when the next letter is b or p. Exx.: im-bed, im-bitter, im-body, im-bosom, im-bower, im-brown; and similarly im-park.

IM- (2), prefix. (L.) In many words, im- = in-, from the Lat. prep. in, in; the next letter being b, m, or p. Exx.: im-bue, im-merge, im-migrate, im-minent, im-mil, im-pel, im-pend, &c.

IM- (3), prefix. (F., -L.) In some words im- = F. im- = Lat. im-, substituted for in-, negative prefix, when the letter following is b, m, or p. See IN- (3). Exx.: im-becile, im-mediate, im-memorial, im-mense, im-modest, im-munity, im-palpable, &c. And see IM- (1).

IMAGE, a likeness, statue, idol, figure. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 420, 14167. -F. image, 'an image'; Cot. -Lat. imaginem, acc. of imago, a likeness. Formed, with suffix -ago, from the base im- seen in im-itari, to imitate. See IMITATE. Der. image-ry, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 100; Gower, C. A. ii. 320; also imag-ine, q. v.

IMAGINE, to conceive of, think, devise. (F., -L.) M. E. imaginen; Chaucer, C. T. 5309. -F. imaginer, 'to imagine, think'; Cot. -Lat. imaginari, pp. imaginatus, to picture to one's self, imagine. -Lat. imagin-, stem of imago, a likeness; see IMAGE. Der. image-er; imagin-able, Sir T. More, Works, p. 1193 d; imagin-abl-y, imagin-able-ness; imagin-ar-y, Com. of Errors, iv. 3. 10; imagin-at-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 15223; imagin-at-ive = M. E. imaginatif, Chaucer, C. T. 11406; imagin-at-ive-ness.

IMBALM, the same as Embalm, q. v. (F.) Milton has im-balm'd, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 6. l. 7.

IMBANK, the same as Embank, q. v. (F. and E.)

IMBARGO, the same as Embargo, q. v. (Span.) In Coles' Dict. ed. 1684.

IMBARK, the same as Embark, q. v. (F.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627.

IMBECILE, feeble. (F., -L.) 'We in a manner were got out of God's possession; were, in respect to Him, become imbecile and lost;' Barrow, Sermons, vol. ii. ser. 22 (R.) [Formerly a rare word as an adj.; but the verb to imbecill (accented on the penultimate) was rather common; see note below.] Imbecility is in Shak. Troil. i. 3. 114. -O. F. imbecille, 'weak, feeble'; Cot. -Lat. imbecillum or imbecillum, acc. of imbecillus or imbecillis, feeble. Root uncertain. Der. imbecil-i-ty.

¶ The examples in R. shew that the verb to imbecill or imbecel, to weaken, enfeeble, was once tolerably well known. It also meant 'to diminish' or 'subtract from,' and this is probably the origin of our modern E. embezzle, to purloin, the etymology of which is not given in its proper place. The example from Udal, on the Revelation of St. John, c. 16, shews the intermediate stage in the sense. It runs as follows: 'The seconde plage of the seconde angell, as the seconde iudgemente of God againste the regiment of Rome, and this is imbeselynge and dimynishe [diminution] of their power and dominion, many landes and people fallynge from them.' The quotations (in R.) from Drant's tr. of Horace, b. i. sat. 5 and sat. 6, introduce the lines: 'So tyrannous a monarchie imbecelyng freedom, than' [then]; and: 'And so imbecill all they strengthe that they are naught to me.' These lines completely establish the accentuation of the verb, and further illustrate its sense. See Embezzle, and the quotations in Richardson under embezzle, imbecile, and imbezzle. The old word bezzle, to squander, is still the same word, with loss of the first syllable.

IMBED, to lay, as in a bed. (E.; with F. prefix.) In Todd's Johnson. From IM- (1) and Bed.

IMBIBE, to drink in. (F., -L.; or L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. -F. imbiber, in use in the 16th cent. -Lat. imbibere, to drink in. -Lat. im- = in-, in; and bibere, to drink. See BIB. β. Bibere is a reduplicated form from the base BI, weakened form of PI, to drink. -√ PA, to drink; cf. Skt. pā, to drink; pibāmi, I drink. See Potation. ¶ Or taken immediately from Latin. Der. imbib-ion, once a common term in alchemy; see Ben Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1 (Subtle). Der. imbue, q. v.; imbrue, q. v.

IMBITTER, to render bitter. (E.; with F. prefix.) 'Why loads he this imbitter'd life with shame?' Dryden, tr. of Homer's Iliad, b. i. From IM- (1) and Bitter.

IMBODY, the same as Embody. (E.; with F. prefix.) See Milton, P. L. i. 574; Comus, 468.

IMBORDER, to border. From IM- (1) and Border. In Milton, P. L. ix. 438.

IMBOSOM, the same as Embosom. (E.; with F. prefix.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 75. v. 597.

IMBOWER, to shelter with a bower. (E.; with F. prefix.) From IM- (1) and Bower. In Milton, P. L. i. 304.

IMBRICATED, bent and hollowed like a gutter-tile. (L.) A term in botany. Both imbricated and imbrication are in Kersey, ed. 1715. -Lat. imbricatus, pp. of imbricare, to cover with a gutter-tile. -Lat. imbric-, stem of imbrex, a gutter-tile. -Lat. imbr-, crude form of imber, a shower of rain. + Gk. θύβρος, a shower. + Skt. ambhas, water; abhra, a rain-cloud. Said to be from √ ABH, to swell. Der. imbricat-ion.

IMBROWN, to make brown. (E.; with F. prefix.) From IM- (1) and Brown. In Milton, P. L. iv. 246.

¶ IMBRUE, IMBREW, EMBREW, to moisten, drench. (F., -L.) '[Mine eyes] With teares no more imbrue your mistress face;' Turberville, The Lover Hoping Assuredly. 'Imbrew'd in guilty blood;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 47. -O. F. embruer; Cot. gives 's'em-bruer, to imbrue or bedabble himself with.' Allied to O. Ital. im-bevere, which Florio gives as equivalent to imbuire, 'to sinke into, to wet or moisten in, to steepie into, to embreue;' cf. mod. Ital. imbeverre, to imbibe. β. The O. F. embruer is formed, like mod. F. abreuer, from a causal verb -bever, to give to drink, turned into -brever in the 16th century, and thence into -bruer. See abreuer in Brachet.

γ. This causal verb is founded on O. F. beure (F. boire), to drink; from Lat. bibere, to drink. δ. Hence imbrue is the causal of to imbibe, and signifies 'to make to imbibe,' to soak, drench. See IMBIBE. ¶ Probably it has often been confounded with imbrue, which is really its doublet; see IMBUE. Utterly unconnected with E. brew, with which it is sometimes supposed to be allied.

IMBUE, to cause to drink, tinge deeply. (L.) 'With noysome rage imbeu'd;' Spenser, Ruines of Rome, st. 24. l. 6. Cf. Milton, P. L. viii. 216. -Lat. imbuere, to cause to drink in. -Lat. im-, for in, in; and base BU, weakened form of PU, which is the causal from the base BI, to drink, weakened form of PI, to drink. See IMBIBE. Doublet, imbrue, q. v.

IMITATE, to copy, make a likeness of. (L.) 'Imitate and follow his passion;' Sir T. More, Works, 1346 b. -Lat. imitatus, pp. of imitari, to imitate. Imitari is a frequentative form of *imare, not found. Root uncertain. Der. imitat-ion, imitat-or, imitat-ive, imitat-ive-ly; imit-a-ble, imit-a-bil-i-ty.

IMMACULATE, spotless. (L.) 'The moste pure and immaculate lamb,' Udal, on St. Matt. c. 26; Shak. Rich. II, v. 3. 61. And in Levins. -Lat. immaculatus, unspotted. -Lat. im- = in-, not; and maculatus, pp. of maculare, to spot. -Lat. macula, a spot. See Mail (1). Der. immaculate-ly, immaculate-ness.

IMMATERIAL, not material. (F., -L.) In Shak. Troil. v. i. 35. -O. F. immateriel, 'immaterial'; Cot. See IM- (3) and Material. ¶ The final syllable has been changed to -cl, to make it nearer the Latin. Der. immaterial-ly, -ise, -ism, -ist, -i-ty.

IMMATURE, not mature. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 277. See IM- (3) and Mature. Der. immature-ly, -ness; immatur-ed.

IMMEASURABLE, not to be measured. (F., -L.) 'Their immeasurable outrage;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 590 b. See IM- (3) and Measurable. Der. immeasurable-ness, immeasurabl-y. Doublet, immense.

IMMEDIATE, without intervention, direct, present. (F., -L.) 'Their authoritye is so hygh and so immediate of [not to] God;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 893 d. -O. F. immediat, 'immediate'; Cot. See IM- (3) and Mediate. Der. immediate-ly, -ness.

IMMEMORIAL, beyond the reach of memory. (F., -L.) 'Their immemorial antiquity;' Howell, Familiar Letters, b. ii. let. 59 (R.); let. 60, ed. 1678. -F. immemorial, 'without the compass, scope, or reach of memory'; Cot. See IM- (3) and Memorial. Der. immemorial-ly.

IMMENSE, immeasurable, very large. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. i. 790; and in Cotgrave. -F. immense, 'immense'; Cot. -Lat. immensus, immeasurable. -Lat. im- = in-, not; and ensus, pp. of metiri, to measure. See IM- (3) and Mete. Der. immense-ly, immense-ness, immensus-i-ty; immensus-ur-able, from mensurus, fut. pp. of metiri; immensus-ur-abil-i-ty.

IMMERGE, to plunge into. (L.) 'Immerged, or Immersed, dipt in or plunged;' also 'Immerse, to plunge or dip over head and ears;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Immerse occurs as a pp. in Bacon, Nat. Hist. s. 114. -Lat. immergere, pp. immersus, to plunge into. -Lat. im- = in, in, into; and mergere, to plunge, sink. See IM- (2) and Merge. Der. immerse, from pp. immersus; immers-ion.

IMMIGRATE, to migrate into a country. (L.) 'Hitherto I have considered the Saracens, either at their immigration into Spain about the ninth century,' &c.; Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, Diss. i.; ed. 1840, vol. i. p. xviii. The verb is quite modern. -Lat. immigratus, pp. of immigrare, to migrate into. See IM- (2) and Migrate. Der. immigrat-ion; immigrant.

IMMINENT, projecting over, near at hand. (L.) 'Against the sinne imminent or to come;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 370 b. -Lat. imminent-, stem of pres. part. of imminuere, to project over. -Lat. im- = in, upon, over; and minere, to jut out. See Eminent. Der. imminent-ly; imminence, Shak. Troil. v. 10. 13.

IMMIT, to send into, inject. (L.) 'Immit, to squirt, or convey into;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Immission is in Bp. Taylor, Great Exemplar, pt. ii. dis. 12 (R.) -Lat. immittere, pp. immissus, to send into. See IM- (2) and Missile. Der. immiss-ion, from pp. immissus.

IMMOBILITY, steadfastness. (F., -L.) 'The earth's settled ness and immobility;' Wilkins, That the Earth may be a Planet, b. ii. prop. 5 (R.) -F. immobilité, 'steadfastness'; Cot. -Lat. acc. immo- bilitatem, from Lat. immobilitas, immobility. — Lat. immobilis, immovable. See Im- (3) and Mobile.

IMMODERATE, not moderate. (L.) In Shak. Meas. i. 2. 131. Sir T. More has immoderately; Works, p. 87 a, l. 1. — Lat. immoderatus. See Im- (3) and Moderate. Der. immoderate-ly.

IMMODEST, not modest. (F., —L.) In Spenser, F. Q. b. ii. c. 6. st. 37. — F. immodeste, 'immodest'; Cot. — Lat. immodestus. See Im- (3) and Modest. Der. immodest-ly, immodest-y.

IMMOLATE, to offer in sacrifice. (L.) Cotgrave has immolated, to explain F. immolâ. — Lat. immolatus, pp. of immolare, to sacrifice; lit. to throw meal upon a victim, as was the custom. — Lat. im—in, upon; and mola, meal, cognate with E. meal. See Im- (2) and Meal. Der. immolation, from F. immolation, 'an immolation, sacrifice'; Cot.

IMMORAL, not moral, wicked. (F., —L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. From Im- (3) and Moral. Der. immoral-ly, -ity.

IMMORTAL, not mortal. (F., —L.) M. E. immortal, Chaucer, C. T. 5059. — O. F. immortel, 'immortal'; Cot. — Lat. immortalis. See Im- (3) and Mortal. Der. immortal-ly; immortal-ise, 1 Hen. VI. i. 2. 148; immortal-ity, Shak. Lucrece, 725.

IMMOVABLE, not movable. (F., —L.) M. E. immovable; Test. of Love, ed. 1561, fol. 317 back, col. 1, l. 5. [There are 2 folios called 317.] From Im- (3) and Movable; see Move. Der. immovable-ness, immovabl-y.

IMMUNITY, freedom from obligation. (F., —L.) In Hall's Chron. Edw. IV, an. 10 (R.); and in Minshew. — F. immunité, 'immunity'; Cot. — Lat. immunitatem, acc. of immunitas, exemption. — Lat. immunus, exempt from public services. — Lat. im—in, not; and munis, serving, obliging (whence also communis, common). — ✓ MU, to bind; see Common.

IMMURE, to shut up in prison. (F., —L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iii. 126; Merch. Ven. ii. 7. 52. Shak. also has immures, sb. pl. fortifications, walls, Troilus, prol. 1. 8; spelt emures in the first folio. Similarly immure stands for emmure. — O. F. emmurer, 'to immure, or wall about'; Cot. — F. em = Lat. im—in, in, within; and F. murer, 'to wall'; Cot. — Lat. murare, to wall. — Lat. murus, a wall. See Im- (1) and Mural.

IMMUTABLE, not mutable. (F., —L.) 'Of an immutable necessity'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 838 h [not p. 839]. — F. immutable, with same sense as immovable, which is the better form; both are in Cotgrave. — Lat. immutabilis. See Im- (3) and Mutable. Der. immutabl-y, immutabl-ness; immuta-bil-ty.

IMP, a graft, offspring, demon. (Low Lat., —Gk.) Formerly used in a good sense, meaning 'scion' or 'offspring.' 'Well worthy impe;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 6. 'And thou, most dreaded impe of highest Jove;' id. Intro. d. b. i. st. 3. M. E. imp, ymp, a graft on a tree; impen, ympen, to graft. 'I was sumtyme a frere [friar]. And the couentes [convent's] gardynere, for to graffe ympes; On limitours and listres lesynges I ymped;' P. Plowman, B. v. 136–8. 'Of feeble trees their comen wretched impes;' Chaucer, C. T. 13962. The pl. sb. impen occurs in the Ancrens Riwele, p. 378, l. 24; and the pp. i-imped, i. e. grafted, in the same, p. 360, l. 6. The verb is due to the sb. [The A. S. imþian, to graft (Lye), is unauthorised]. — Low Lat. impotus, a graft, occurring in the Lex Salica; see the text called Lex Emendata, c. xxvii. § 8. — Gk. ἐμψυτος, engrafted; James, i. 21. — Gk. ἐμψύειν, to implant. — Gk. ἐμ- for ἐν, in; and ψύειν, to produce, from ✓ BHU, to be. See In and Be. ¶ From the same source are W. impio, to graft, imp, a graft, scion; Dan. ympe, Swed. ympa, G. impfen, O. H. G. imþiōn, imþhōn, to graft; also F. enter, to graft; shewing that the word was widely spread at an early period. Der. imp, vb., Rich. II, ii. 1. 292, M. E. impen, as above. [†]

IMPACT, a striking against, collision. (L.) Modern. 'The quarrel [crossbow-bolt] by that impact driven, True to its aim, fled fatal;' Southey, Joan of Arc, b. viii. — Lat. impactus, pp. of impingere, to impinge. See Impinge. ¶ The right form of the sb. should rather have been impaction. The word impacted occurs in Holland's Pliny, b. xx. c. 21. 'Impacted, dashed or beaten against, cast or put into;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

IMPAIR, to make worse, injure, weaken. (F., —L.) 'Whose praise hereby no whit impaired is;' Spenser, Colin Clout, l. 655. M. E. empeiren, also written enpeiren; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 3, l. 3418; b. iv. pr. 6, l. 4015. — O. F. empeirer (Burguy); later empier, 'to impair'; Cot. — Low Lat. impaiorare, to make worse. — Lat. im—in, with an intensive force; and Low Lat. peiiorare, to make worse. — Lat. peiior, worse; a comparative form from a lost positive, and of uncertain origin.

IMPALE, the same as Empale, q. v. (F., —L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. In Shak. it means 'to surround;' Troilus, v. 7. 5; but it is the same word. Der. impalement.

IMPALPABLE, not palpable. (F., —L.) In Holland's Plutarch, p. 193 (R.); and in Cotgrave. — F. impalpable, 'impalpable'; Cot. See Im- (3) and Palpable. Der. impalpabl-y.

IMPANEL, IMPANNEL, the same as Empanel, q. v. IMPARIETY, want of parity. (F., —L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. From Im- (3) and Parity; cf. Lat. imparitas. See Par. [No O. F. imparité in Cotgrave.]

IMPARK, EMPARK, to close for a park. (F.) 'Impark, to enclose . . . a piece of ground for a park;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Not . . . held nor emparked within any laws or limits;' Bp. King, Vine Palatine, 1614, p. 32 (Todd). Cf. O. F. emparcher, of which Cotgrave gives the pp. emparché, 'impounded.' Coined from Im- (1) and Park. [†]

IMPART, to give a part of, communicate. (F., —L.) 'The secret thoughtes imparted with such trust;' Surrey, Prisoned in Windsor, l. 37; see Specimens of English, ed. Skeat, p. 220. — O. F. impartir, 'to impart'; Cot. — Lat. impartire, impartire, to bestow a share on. — Lat. im—in, for in, on, upon; and partire, partiri, to share. — Lat. parti-, crude form of pars, a part. See Part. Der. imparti-ble.

IMPARTIAL, not partial. (F., —L.) In Shak. Rich. II, i. 1. 115. From Im- (3) and Partial. Der. impartial-ly, impartial-ity.

IMPASSABLE, not to be passed through. (F., —L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 254. From Im- (3) and Passable; see Pass. Der. impassabl-y, impassable-ness.

IMPASSIBLE, incapable of feeling. (F., —L.) 'This most pure parte of the soule, . . . deüne, impassible, and incorruptible;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 23 (R.) Impassibilitie is in Sir T. More's Works, p. 1329 b. — F. impassible, 'impassible, senseless'; Cot. — Lat. impassibilis, incapable of passion or suffering. — Lat. im—in, not; and passibilis, capable of suffering. — Lat. passus, pp. of patis, to suffer. See Im- (3) and Passion, Patience. Der. impassible-ness, impassibili-ty.

IMPASSIONED, roused to strong feeling. (F., —L.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 678. From the prefix im = Lat. in, with an intensive force; and Passion. Der. A similar formation is impassionate, rarely used.

IMPASSIVE, not susceptible of feeling, not shewing feeling. (F., —L.) In Milton, P. L. vi. 455. From Im- (3) and Passive. Der. impassive-ly, -ness; Burton uses impassionate in a like sense (R.)

IMPATIENT, not patient. (F., —L.) M. E. impatient. 'Impatient is he that wol not be taught;' Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Superbia, sect. 1. — F. impatient, 'impatient'; Cot. See Im- (3) and Patient. Der. impatient-ly, impatience, impacienci-y.

IMPAWN, to pledge. (F.) In Shak. Hen. V, i. 2. 21; Hamlet, v. 2. 155, 171. From im-, prefix, a substitute for F. em = L. im—in; and pawn; see Im- (1) and Pawn.

IMPEACH, to charge with a crime. (F., —L.) The orig. sense is 'to hinder,' and it was once so used. 'The victorie was much hindered and impeached;' Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 308 (R.) 'To impeach and stop their breath;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 3. M. E. apechen, a corruption of empechen; the pp. apeched occurs in Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright (Percy Soc.), p. 38, l. 24. — O. F. empescher, 'to hinder, let, stop, bar, impeach'; Cot. β. There is also an old F. form empeescher, in which the s again appears to be merely adventitious. Littré and Scheler connect these with Prov. empedegar, which they cite; and these forms may all be derived from Low Lat. impedicare, to fetter. Impedicare is from the prefix im—in, in, on; and pedica, a fetter, from pedi-, crude form of pes, a foot; see Im- (1) and Foot. γ. At the same time, the Span. empechar, Ital. impacciare, to delay, are to be referred to Low Lat. *impactare (not found), a frequentative from impingere, pp. impactus, to bind, to fasten. Impingere is compounded of im—in, in, on; and pingere (base PAG), to fasten, from ✓ PAK, to bind; cf. Skt. pag, to bind, pāga, a fetter, Gk. πῆγνυμι, I fix. It is very likely that the two sources may have been more or less confused, and may both have influenced the O. F. empescher. See Despatch. Der. impeach-er, impeach-able; impeach-ment, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 15.

IMPEARL, to adorn with pearls. (F.) In Milton, P. L. v. 747. From Im- (1) and Pearl.

IMPECCABLE, not liable to sin. (L.) 'Impeccable, that cannot offend or do amiss;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. impeccabilis, faultless. — Lat. im—in, negative prefix; and peccabilis, peccable. See Im- (3) and Peccable. Der. impeccabili-ty.

IMPEDE, to obstruct. (L.) In Macbeth, i. 5. 29. The sb. impediment is commoner, and earlier; in Wyatt, Ps. 102 (R.) — Lat. impedire, to intangle the feet, obstruct. — Lat. im—in, in; and pedi-, crude form of pes, a foot; see Im- (2) and Foot. Der. impedi-ment, impedi-tive.

IMPEL, to drive forward, urge. (L.) 'The flames impell'd;' Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 230. — Lat. impellere, pp. impulsus, to urge on. — Lat. im—in, on, forward; and pellere, to drive. See Im- (2) and Pulsate. Der. impell-ent, impell-er; and (from pp. impulsus) im-pulse, Milton, P. L. iii. 120; impuls-ion, id. Sams. Agon. 422; impuls-ive, impuls-ive-ly, impuls-ive-ness.

IMPEND, to hang over, be near. (L.) Milton has impendent,

P. L. ii. 177, v. 891. — Lat. impēdere, to hang over. — Lat. im = in, on, over; and pendere, to hang. See Im-(2) and Pendant. Der. impending; also impending, from the stem of the pres. part.

IMPENETRABLE, not penetrable. (F., — L.) In Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 23; Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 3. 18. — F. impenetrable, 'impenetrable'; Cot. See Im-(3) and Penetrate. Der. impenetrably, Milton, P. L. vi. 400; impenetrability.

IMPENITENT, not penitent. (F., — L.) Sir T. More has both impenitent and impenitence; Works, p. 573 a. From Im-(3) and Penitent. Der. impenitent-ly, impenitence; impenitency, Bible, A. V. heading to Isa. ix.

IMPERATIVE, authoritative. (F., — L.) In Minsheu. — O. F. imperatif, 'imperative, imperious; the imperative mood in grammar'; Cot. — Lat. imperativus, due to a command. — Lat. imperatum, a command; neut. of imperatus, pp. of imperare, to command. — Lat. im = in; and parare, to make ready, order. See Im-(1) and Parade. Der. imperative-ly; and see imperial.

IMPERCEPTIBLE, not perceptible. (F., — L.) 'Hang on such small imperceptible strings' [not things]; Cowley, Davidides, b. iv; last line of sect. 25. — F. imperceptible, 'imperceptible'; Cot. See Im-(3) and Perceptible, Perceive. Der. imperceptibly, imperceptible-ness, imperceptibility.

IMPERFECT, not perfect. (F., — L.) Really of French origin, but conformed to the Latin spelling. M. E. imparfit, inparfit, imparfit; P. Plowman, B. xv. 50; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 9, l. 2291. — O. F. imperfait (Burguy); imperfait (Cotgrave). — Lat. imperfectus. See Im-(3) and Perfect. Der. imperfect-ly, imperfect-ness, imperfect-ion.

IMPERIAL, relating to an empire. (F., — L.) M. E. emperial, Gower, C. A. iii. 61, 113. — O. F. emperial (Burguy); later imperial (Cot.). — Lat. imperialis, belonging to an empire. — Lat. imperium, an empire. See Empire. Der. imperial-ly, imperial-ism, imperial-ist; also (from Lat. imperium) imperi-ous, Hamlet, v. i. 236, Oth. ii. 3. 276; imperi-ous-ly, imperi-ous-ness.

IMPERIL, to put in peril. (E. and F., — L.) In Ben Jonson, Magnetic Lady, at the end of Act ii; Probee's second speech. From Im-(1) and Peril.

IMPERISHABLE, not perishable. (F., — L.) In Milton, P. L. vi. 435. — F. imperissable, 'unperishable'; Cot. See Im-(3) and Perish. Der. imperishably, imperishable-ness, imperishability.

IMPERSONAL, not personal. (F., — L.) In Levins. Ben Jonson treats of impersonal verbs; Eng. Grammar, b. i. c. 16. — F. impersonnel, 'impersonal'; Cot. — Lat. impersonalis. See Im-(3) and Person. Der. impersonal-ly, impersonal-ity.

IMPERSONATE, to personify, to personate or represent a person's qualities. (L.) 'The masques . . . were not only furnished by the heathen divinities, but often by the virtues and vices personated'; Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, sect. lxi; ed. 1840, iii. 400. From Lat. im = in, used as a prefix; and personate. See Im-(2) and Person. Der. impersonation.

IMPERTINENT, not pertinent, trifling, rude. (F., — L.) M. E. impertinent; Chaucer, C. T. 7930. — F. impertinent, 'impertinent, unfit'; Cot. — Lat. impertinent-, stem of impertinens, not belonging to. See Im-(3) and Pertinent, Pertain. Der. impertinence, Milton, P. L. viii. 105; impertinency, K. Lear, iv. 6. 178; impertinent-ly.

IMPETURBABLE, not easily disturbed. (L.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. — Lat. imperturbabilis, that cannot be disturbed. See Im-(3) and Perturb. Der. imperturbability.

IMPERVIOUS, impassable. (L.) In Cowley, Ode upon Dr. Harvey, st. ii. l. 6; and in Milton, P. L. x. 254. — Lat. imperiuius, impassable; the Lat. -us being turned into E. -ous, as in arduous, conspicuous, &c. — Lat. im = in = E. un-, not; per, through; and via, a way. See Viaduct. Der. imperiuous-ly, -ness.

IMPETUS, sudden impulse, violent push. (L.) In Boyle's Works, vol. i. p. 138 (R). — Lat. impetus, an attack, impulse; lit. 'a falling on'. — Lat. im = in, on, upon; and petere, to seek, tend to, lit. to fly or fall. — $\sqrt{\text{PAT}}$, to fall, fly; cf. Skt. pat, to fly, E. find, to light on; see Im-(2) and Find. Der. impetuous, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 9. 16, from F. impetueux, which from Lat. impetuosus; impetuous-ly, impetuous-ness, impetuosity.

IMPIETY, want of piety. (F., — L.) In Shak. Much Ado, iv. 1. 105. — F. impiété, 'impiety'; Cot. See Im-(3) and Piety. And see Impious.

IMPONDERABLE, without sensible weight. (L.) Modern. The older word is imponderous; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5. § 10. From Im-(3) and Ponderable or Ponderous.

IMPORT, to bring in from abroad, to convey, signify, interest. (F., — L.; or L.) In the sense 'to bring in from abroad,' the word is Latin. 'It importeth also playne and open blasphemy'; Sir T. More, Works, pp. 325, 326 a. — F. importer; 'cela importe moult, that imports much, that is of great consequence'; Cot. — Lat. importare, to import, bring, introduce, cause. — Lat. im = in, in; and portare, to carry; see Port (1). Der. import, sb.; import-ant, L. L. L. v. 1. 104, from F. important, pres. pt.; important-ly; importance, Wint. Ta. v. 2. 20, from F. importance; also import-er, importation.

IMPORTABLE, intolerable. (F., — L.) Obsolete. In the Prayer of Manasses (A. V.); Spenser, F. Q. ii. 8. 35; and earlier, in Chaucer, C. T. 9020. — F. importable, 'intolerable'; Cot. — Lat. importabilis, that cannot be borne. See Im-(3) and Port (1).

IMPORTUNE, to molest, urge with eager solicitation. (F., — L.) In Ant. and Cleop. iv. 15. 19; Meas. i. 1. 57. Formed from M. E. importune, adj., molesting, troublesome; cf. 'And for he will be importune Unto no man, ne onerous'; Rom. of the Rose, 5635. — O. F. importun, 'importunate, urgent, earnest with, troublesome'; Cot. — Lat. importunus, unfit, unsuitable, troublesome, grievous, rude. β. The Lat. importunus (with prefix im = in = E. un-, not) and opportunus (with prefix ob) are both related to Lat. portus, a harbour, of which the orig. sense was rather approach or access; so that importunus = hard of access, unsuitable, &c. See Port (2). Der. importun-ity (Levins), from F. importunité = Lat. acc. importunitatem; also importunate (Levins), a coined word; importunate-ly, importunate-ness.

IMPOSE, to lay upon, enjoin, obtrude, palm off. (F., — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 8. 49. — F. imposer, 'to impose'; Cot. — F. im = Lat. im = in, on, upon; and poser, to place; see Im-(1) and Pose. Der. imposing, impos-ly.

IMPOSITION, a laying on, tax, deception. (F., — L.) 'The second cause of thimposicion'; Remedy of Love, st. 64; a 15th-cent. poem, pr. in some edd. of Chaucer. — F. imposition. — Lat. acc. impositionem, from nom. impositio, a laying on. — Lat. impositus, pp. of imponere, to lay on. — Lat. im = in, on; and ponere, to put, lay; see Im-(1) and Position. Der. from same source: impost, from F. impost, 'an impost, custom' (Cot.), which from Lat. pp. impositus; impostor, Temp. i. 2. 477, from Lat. impostor, a deceiver; imposture, Hall's Chron. Hen. VI, an. 26, from F. imposture, 'imposture, guile' (Cot.).

IMPOSSIBLE, not possible. (F., -L.) M. E. impossible, Chaucer, C. T. 6270, 9483. -F. impossible, 'impossible'; Cot. -Lat. impossibilis. See Im- (3) and Possible. Der. impossibilit-y.

IMPOSTHUME, an abscess. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'A boyle or imposthume'; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 25. Also (better) spelt apostume, as in Cotgrave. -O. F. apostume, 'an apostume, an inward swelling full of corrupt matter'; Cot. Also (better) spelt aposteme; Cot. -Lat. apostema, an abscess. -Gk. ἀπόστημα, a standing away from; hence, a separation of corrupt matter. -Gk. ἀπό, from, cognate with E. of, off; and στήν, base of ἵστημι, I set, place, stand, from STA, to stand. See Apo- and Stand. Der. imposthum-ate, imposthum-al-ion.

Here the prefix im- is due to mere corruption; so also in impovertish. [†]

IMPOSTOR, IMPOST, see under Imposition.

IMPOTENT, not potent, feeble. (F., -L.) M. E. impotent; Gower, C. A. iii. 383. -F. impotent, 'impotent'; Cot. -Lat. impotentem, acc. of impotens, unable. See Im- (3) and Potent. Der. impotent-ly, impotence, impotence-y.

IMPOUND, to put into a pound, as cattle. (E.) In Shak. Hen. V, i. 2. 160. From Im- (1) and Pound (2). Der. impound-age.

IMPOVERISH, to make poor. (F., -L.) 'Him and his subjects still impoverishing'; Drayton, Barons' Wars, b. v (R.) And in Minshew. A corruption from O. F. appovriss-, base of pres. part. of appovrir, 'to impoverish, begger'; Cot. Cf. appovrissement, an impoverishment, beggery; id. -F. ap- = Lat. ad, towards; and O. F. povre, poor. See Poor. For a similar corruption of the prefix, see Imposthume. Der. impoverish-ment (Cotgrave). [†]

IMPRACITABLE, not practicable. (Low Lat. -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706, and Kersey, ed. 1715. From Im- (3) and Practicable. Der. impracticable-ly, impracticable-ness, impracticability.

IMPRECATE, to invoke a curse on. (L.) The sb. imprecation (from F. imprecation) is in earlier use than the verb, and is given in Minshew. So too: 'the imprecation of the vestall nun Tuccia'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxviii. c. 2. -Lat. imprecatus, pp. of imprecari, to call down by prayer. -Lat. im- = in, upon, on; and precari, to pray. See Im- (2) and Pray. Der. imprecat-ion (see above); imprecat-or-y.

IMPREGNABLE, not to be taken or seized upon. (F., -L.) 'Impregnable cities and strong holdes'; Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 27. [The g is inserted much as in souveraign, and was no doubt once silent.] -O. F. imprenable, 'impregnable'; Cot. -F. im- = Lat. im- = in, negative prefix; and F. prendre, to take, from Lat. prehendere, to seize. See Comprehend and Get. Der. impregnabl-y, impregnability.

IMPREGNATE, to render pregnant. (L.) Milton uses impregn, P. L. iv. 500, ix. 737; this is a mere abbreviation, not a true F. form. -Lat. imprægnatus, pp. of an (unused) imprægnare, to make pregnant. -Lat. im- = in, in; and prægnas, seen in prægnans, prægnas, pregnant. See Im- (2) and Pregnant. Der. impregnation.

IMPRESS, to imprint, make an impression, press. (L.) M. E. impressen, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1543; Gower, C. A. i. 257. The sb. impression is in Chaucer, C. T. 3613. -Lat. impressare, frequentative of imprimere, to impress. -Lat. im- = in, upon; and primere, to press. See Im- (2) and Press. Der. impress, sb., Two Gent. iii. 2. 6; impress, from Ital. impresa, an emprise, also, an emblem, Rich. II, iii. 1. 25; impress-ion, Gower, C. A. ii. 14; impress-ible, impress-ibl-y, impress-ible-ness, impress-ive, impress-ive-ly, impress-ive-ness. But impress-ment, a seizing of provisions or sailors for public service, is a coined word from the press in Press-gang, q. v.

IMPRINT, to print upon, impress deeply. (F., -L.) 'Imprinted that feare so sore in theyr imaginacyon'; Sir T. More, Works, 1196d [not 1197]. From Im- (1) and Print. Der. imprints, sb. (a late word). The O. F. word is empreindre. [†]

IMPRISON, to put in prison. (F., -L.) M. E. imprisonen, occurring in a note on p. 464 of Rob. of Glouc., ed. Hearne. Put for emprison. -O. F. emprisonner, 'to imprison'; Cot. -F. em- = Lat. im- = in, in; and F. prison, a prison. See Im- (1) and Prison. Der. imprison-ment.

IMPROBABLE, not probable. (F., -L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 141. -F. improbable, 'improbable'; Cot. See Im- (3) and Probable. Der. improbabl-y, improbability.

IMPROMPTU, off hand; a thing composed extempore. (F., -L.) 'They were made ex tempore, and were, as the French call them, impromptus'; Dryden, A Discourse on Satire; in Dryden's Poems, ed. 1856, p. 366. -F. impromptu; 'L'Impromptu de Versailles' is the title of a comedy by Molière. -Lat. in promptu, in readiness; where promptu is the abl. of promptus, a sb. formed from promere, to bring forward. See In and Prompt.

IMPROPER, not proper. (F., -L.) M. E. improper. 'Improperlich he demeth fame'; Gower, C. A. i. 21. -F. impropre, 'unproper'; Cot. From Im- (3) and Proper. Der. improper-ly; so also im- propriety, in Selden's Illustrations to Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 2 (R.), from im- and propriety.

IMPROPRIATE, to appropriate to private use. (L.) 'Canst thou improprie to thee Augustus' worthy praise?' Drant, tr. of Horace, Ep. to Quinctius (Ep. i. 16, l. 29). Coined from Lat. im- = in, in, hence to (a person); and propriare, to appropriate. -Lat. proprius, one's own; see Im- (2) and Proper. Der. impropriat-ion.

IMPROVE, to make better. (F., -L.) In Shak. Jul. Cæsar, ii. 1. 159. 'Approve and improve, approuement and improvement, are used in our old law as respectively equivalent'; Richardson. See Blount's Nomolexicon. Improve is a coined word, made with the prefix im- (= Latin in, in) instead of with the prefix ap- (= Lat. ad) but with much the same sense as approve. The latter part of the word is therefore E. prove, F. prouver, Lat. probare. See Approve and Prove. Der. improv-able, improv-abl-y, improv-able-ness, improving-ly, improve-ment, Bacon, Essay 34, Of Riches.

IMPROVIDENT, not provident. (L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. VI, ii. 1. 58. From Im- (3) and Provide; see Provide. Der. improvident-ly, improvidence. Doublet, imprudent.

IMPROVISE, to recite extemporaneously, bring about on a sudden. (F., -Ital., -L.) Quite modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. -F. improviser. -Ital. improvisare, to sing extempore verses. -Ital. improvviso, sudden, unprovided for. -Lat. improvisus, unforeseen. -Lat. im- = in, negative prefix; and provisus, pp. of providere, to foresee. See Im- (3) and Provide. Der. improvis-er, improvis-ate, improvis-at-ion; we even find improvis-at-ise, Chambers, Cyclop. of Eng. Literature, ii. 499, col. 2.

IMPRUDENT, not prudent. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. Milton has imprudence, P. L. xi. 686. -F. imprudent, 'imprudent'; Cot. -Lat. imprudens, stem of imprudens, not prudent. See Im- (3) and Prudent. Der. imprudent-ly, imprudence.

IMPUDENT, shameless. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 5. -F. impudent, 'impudent'; Cot. -Lat. impudent, stem of impudens, shameless. -Lat. im- = in = E. un-, not; and pu-dens, modest, properly pres. part. of pu-dere, to feel shame (a word of doubtful origin). Der. impudent-ly; impudence, from F. impudence, 'impudence' (Cot.).

IMPUGN, to attack, call in question. (F., -L.) In rather early use. M. E. impugnen; P. Plowman, B. vii. 147. -F. impugner, 'to impugn, fight or stirre against'; Cot. -Lat. impugnare, to fight against. -Lat. im- = in, against; and pugnare, to fight. See Im- (1) and Pugnacious, Pugilism. Der. impugn-er, impugn-able.

IMPULSE, IMPULSION, IMPULSIVE; see Impel.

IMPUNITY, safety from punishment. (F., -L.) 'As touching both the impunitie and also the recompense of other the informers'; Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 1035 (R.); and in Cotgrave. -F. impunité, 'impunity'; Cot. -Lat. impunitatem, acc. of impunitas, impunity. -Lat. impuni, crude form of impunis, without punishment. -Lat. im- = in = E. un-, not; and pæna, penalty. See Im- (3) and Pain.

IMPURE, not pure. (F., -L.) 'Impure and uncleane'; Tyndall, Works, p. 193, col. 2. -F. impur, 'impure'; Cot. -Lat. impurus. See Im- (3) and Pure. Der. impure-ly, impure-ness, impurity, Shak. Lucrece, 854.

IMPUTE, to place to the account of, reckon against as a fault, ascribe, charge. (F., -L.) In Levins. 'Th' imputed blame'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 20. -F. imputer, 'to impute, ascribe, or attribute unto'; Cot. -Lat. imputare, to bring into a reckoning. -Lat. im- = in, in; and putare, to reckon, suppose, orig. to cleanse. -Lat. putus, cleansed, pure; from the same source as purus, pure. See Im- (1) and Pure. Der. imput-er, imput-able, imput-abl-y, imput-able-ness, imputabil-ity; imput-at-ion, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 13; imput-at-ive, imput-at-ive-ly.

IN, prep. denoting presence or situation in place, time, or circumstances. (E.) M. E. in; passim. -A. S. in; passim. + Du. in. + Icel. í. + Swed. and Dan. í. + Goth. in. + G. in. + W. yn. + O. Irish in (Fick, i. 486). + Lat. in. + Gk. ἐν, ἐν. β. In is a weakened form of en, appearing in Gk. ἐν, ἐν-δωρ; the Gk. ἐν seems to be a locative case, and is further related to Gk. ἀνά, Goth. ana, G. an, E. on; see On. γ. All from ANA, pronominal base of the third person; 'ἀνά is evidently a case-form of the demonstrative stem, which is preserved as ana in Sanskrit, as anas (= Lat. ille) in Lithuanian, and as onū with the same meaning in Church-Slavonic; Curtius, i. 381. Der. in-ner, from A. S. innera, a comparative adj., Grein, ii. 143; in-most, M. E. inemaste (written for innemest), Castel of Love, ed. Weymouth, l. 809 (Stratmann), from A. S. innemest, an authorised form (Bosworth). The form innermost is doubly corrupt, having an inserted r, and o substituted for older e; the correct form is innemest = A. S. innemest above. Even this is a double superlative, with the suffix -est added to the formative m which in itself denotes the superlative (as in Latin primus); see this explained under Aftermost, Foremost. Similarly innest should rather have been innest. Der. (continued): in-ward, q. v.; also there-in, where-in, with-in; in-as-much, in-so-much; in-ter, in-tro; also inn, q. v.

IN- (1), prefix, in. (E.) In some words, the prefix in- is purely E., and is merely the prep. in in composition. Exx.: in-born, in-breathe, in-bred, in-land, in-lay, in-let, in-ly, in-mate, in-side, in-sight, in-sure, in-stall, in-step, in-twine, in-twist, in-weave, in-wrap, in-wrought. See In.

IN- (2), prefix, in. (L.; or F., -L.) In some words, the prefix is not the E. prep. in, but the cognate Lat. form. Exx.: in-augurate, in-carcerate, in-carnate, in-cidence, &c. These words are rather numerous.

β. Sometimes the Lat. word has passed through F. before reaching E. Exx.: in-cise, in-cite, in-cline, in-dication, &c. ¶ In- (2) becomes il- before l, as in il-lusion; im- before m and p, as in im-bue, im-peril; ir- before r, as in ir-rigate.

IN- (3), prefix, with negative force. (L.; or F., -L.) In numerous words, the prefix in- has a negative force; from Lat. neg. prefix in-, which is cognate with E. un- (with the same force), O. Irish an-, Skt. an- (frequently shortened to a-), Gk. ἀνα-, ἀν- (often shortened to ἀ-), Zend ana-, an-, a-. β. This negative prefix is probably identical with the preposition ANA, which appears as Gk. ἀνά, up, Zend ana, up, Goth. ana, up, to, against. Thus the Gk. ἀνά occasionally has the sense of 'back' or 'backwards', as in ἀνα-ρέειν, to throw the head back in token of refusal, to deny; cf. ἀνά ῥόον, up stream, against the stream; whence the negative use may easily have arisen. See Curtius, i. 381. And see On, In. β. In many words, the Lat. word has reached us through the medium of French. Exx.: in-capable, in-certainty, in-clement, in-compatible, &c. ¶ In- (3) becomes i- before gn, as in i-gnoble; il- before l, as in il-legal; im- before m and p, as in im-mense, im-pure; ir- before r, as in ir-rational.

INABILITY, lack of ability. (F., -L.) M. E. inabilité; in A. Goody Balade, a poem wrongly ascribed to Chaucer, l. 61; see Chaucer's Works, ed. Morris, vi. 277. See In- (3) and Able.

INACCESSIBLE, not accessible. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 1. 37. -F. inaccessible; Cot. From In- (3) and Accessible; see Accede. Der. inaccessibility, inaccessibility.

INACCURATE, not accurate. (L.) 'Very inaccurate judgments;' Warburton, Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 6 (R.) Inaccuracy is in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. From In (3) and Accurate. Der. inaccurate-ly, inaccuracy.

INACTION, want of action. (F., -L.) In Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. From In- (3) and Action; see Act. Der. inaction-ive, inactive-ly; in-activity, Swift, Horace, b. iv. ode 9.

INADEQUATE, not adequate. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. From In- (3) and Adequate. Der. inadequate-ly, inadequacy, inadequacy.

INADMISSIBLE, not admissible. (F., -L.) In late use. Used by Burke, On a Regicide Peace, let. 1, note (R.) -F. inadmissible, 'unadmittable;' Cot. From In- (3) and Admissible; see Admit.

INADVERTENT, unattentive, heedless. (L.) Spelt inadvertant in Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. Inadvertence is in earlier use; Coles' Dict., ed. 1684; inadvertency in Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 5 (R.) Inadvertent is of Lat. origin; inadvertence is from the F. inadvertence, 'inconsideration;' Cot. See In- (3) and Advert. Der. inadvertent-ly; also in-advertence, in-advertency, as above.

INALIENABLE, not alienable. (F., -L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. -F. inalienable, 'unalienable;' Cot. From In- (3) and Alienable; see Alien.

INANE, empty, void, silly, useless. (L.) 'We speak of place, distance, or bulk, in the great inane [i.e. void, used as a sb.]; Locke, On Human Underst. b. ii. c. 15. s. 7. [Not from F., but suggested by F. ininité, 'emptiness, inanity' (Cot.), which is from Lat. ininitatem, acc. of ininitas, emptiness.] -Lat. inanis, void, empty. β. The Lat. inanis is of uncertain etymology; the prefix is almost certainly in-, with a neg. force; ā-nis would appear to be from ✓AK, but the sense is not clear. Der. inan-i-ty; inan-it-ion, q. v.

INANIMATE, lifeless. (L.) 'Inanimate, without life;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -Lat. inanimatus, lifeless. See In- (3) and Animate. Der. inanimat-ion.

INANITION, emptiness, exhaustion from lack of food. (F., -L.) 'Repletion and inanition may both doe harme;' Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, p. 235 (R.) -F. inanition, 'an emptying;' Cot. Formed from pp. ininitus of Lat. ininitare, to empty; from ininit-, crude form of ininitis, empty. See Inane.

INAPPLICABLE, not applicable. (L.) Bailey has inapplicableness, vol. ii. ed. 1731. From In- (3) and Applicable; see Apply. Der. inapplicability, inapplicability.

INAPPRECIABLE, not appreciable. (L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. From In- (3) and Appreciable; see Appreciate.

INAPPROACHABLE, not approachable. (F., -L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. From In- (3) and Approachable; see Approach.

INAPPROPRIATE, not fit. (L.) Late; not in Todd. From In- (3) and Appropriate. Der. inappropriately, inappropriateness.

INAPT, not apt. (F., -L.) Quite modern; but ineptitude is in Howell, Familiar Letters, b. i. s. 1. let. 9; dated 1619. From In- (3) and Apt. ¶ Note that ineptitude is a correct spelling, from Lat. ineptitudo; so too the Lat. adj. is ineptus, not inaptus. Der. inapt-ly, inapt-itude. Doublet, inept, q. v. (a better form).

INARTICULATE, not distinct. (L.) 'The inarticulate sounds of music;' Giles Fletcher, Poems; Pref. to the Reader. -Lat. inarticulatus, indistinct. From In- (3) and Articulate. Der. inarticulate-ly, -ness; inarticulation.

INARTIFICIAL, without artifice. (L.) 'An inartificial argument;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 7. § 2. -Lat. inartificialis, not according to the rules of art. From In- (3) and Artificial; see Artifice. Der. inartificial-ly.

INASMUCH, seeing that. (E.) Merely the three words in as much run together. It does not appear to be in early use, but to have been suggested by the older phrases forasmuch as (Luke, i. 1, A. V.), and by as much as. Cf. 'be als moche as that ryvere may serve' = by as much as that river, &c.; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 45. See Mätzner's Engl. Gram. ii. 457.

INATTENTION, lack of attention. (F., -L.) 'The universal indolence and inattention among us;' Tatler, no. 187. From In- (3) and Attention; see Attend. Der. inattention-ive, inattention-ive-ly.

INAUDIBLE, not audible. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, v. 3. 41. See In- (3) and Audience. Der. inaudible-ly, inaudibility.

INAUGURATE, to consecrate, install, enter upon or invest with an office formally, begin formally. (L.) 'The seat on which her kings inaugurated were;' Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 17. Properly a pp., as in 'being inaugurated and invested in the kingdoms;' Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 14 (R.) 'When is the inauguration?' Beaumont and Fletcher, Valentinian, v. 5. 1. -Lat. inauguratus, pp. of inaugurare, to consult the divining birds, practise augury, inaugurate. -Lat. in- prep. in, for, towards; and augurare, to act as augur. See In- (2) and Augur. Der. inauguration (see above); inaugurate-or; inaugural.

INAUSPICIOUS, not auspicious. (L.) In Shak. Romeo, v. 3. 111. See In- (3) and Auspice. Der. inauspicious-ly, -ness.

INBORN, born within one, native. (E.) 'And straight, with inborn vigour, on the wing;' Dryden, Mrs. Anne Killigrew, l. 191. Coined from in, prep.; and born, pp. of bear. See In- (1) and Bear (1). So also Icel. innborninn, inborn.

INBREATHED, breathed in. (E.) 'Dead things with in-breathed sense;' Milton, At a Solemn Musick, l. 4. See In- (1) and Breathe.

INBRED, bred within, innate. (E.) 'My inbred enemy;' Milton, P. L. ii. 785. From in, prep.; and bred, pp. of Breed.

INCAGE, to put in a cage. (F., -L.) Better encage. In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 1. 102. -F. encager, 'to incage, to shut within a cage;' Cot. -F. en = Lat. in, in; and cage, a cage. See In- (2) and Cage.

INCALCULABLE, not to be counted. (L.) 'Do mischiefs incalculable;' Burke, On Scarcity (R.) From In- (3) and Calculable; see Calculate. Der. incalculability.

INCANDESCENT, glowing hot. (L.) Incandescence is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -Lat. incandescent, stem of pres. part. of incandescere, to glow. -Lat. in, towards; and candescere, inceptive form of candere, to glow. See In- (2) and Candle. Der. incandescence.

INCANTATION, a magical charm. (L.) M. E. incantacion, Gower, C. A. iii. 45. Coined, in imitation of F. words with suffix -tion, from Lat. incantatio, an enchanting. -Lat. incantatus, pp. of incantare, to sing charms. See Enchant.

INCAPABLE, not capable. (F., -L.) In Drayton, Moses his Birth, b. i (R.); Milton, P. L. ii. 140, v. 505; and in Minshew. -F. incapable, 'uncapable;' Cot. From In- (3) and Capable. Der. incapability; and see below.

INCAPACITY, want of capacity. (F., -L.) In Minshew. -F. incapacité, 'incapacity;' Cot. Cf. Lat. incapax, incapable. From In- (3) and Capacity; see Capacious. Der. incapacity; incapacitation, Burke, Thoughts on the Present Discontents, ed. E. J. Payne (Clar. Press), p. 63, l. 3.

INCARCERATE, to put in prison. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -Lat. in, in; and carceratus, pp. of carcerare, to imprison. -Lat. carcer, a prison; a word of uncertain origin. Der. incarceration.

INCARNADINE, to dye of a red colour. (F., -Ital., -L.) In Shak. Macb. ii. 2. 62; see Rich. and Nares. -F. incarnadin, 'carnation, of a deep, rich, or bright carnation;' Cot. -Ital. incarnadino, 'carnation or flesh colour;' Florio. Also spelt incarnatino (Florio), as in mod. Italian. -Ital. incarnato, incarnate, of flesh colour. -Lat. incarnatus, incarnate. See Incarnation.

INCURVATE, to bend, crook. (L.) Suggested by the sb. incurvation, which is in earlier use. 'Incurvation, a crook'ning or bowing;' Kersey, ed. 1715. -Lat. incurvatus, pp. of incurvare, to bend into a curve. -Lat. in, in, into; and curvare, to curve. -Lat. curvus, crooked; see In- (2) and Curve. Der. incurvat-ion.

INDEBTED, being in debt. (F., -L.) In Luke, xi. 4 (A. V.). M. E. endettid; Chaucer, C. T. 16202. -O. F. endetter, endebter, 'to bring into debt'; Cot. -F. en, in, into; and O. F. dette, debt, a debt. See In- (2) and Debt. Der. indebted-ness.

INDECENT, not decent. (F., -L.) In Spenser, b. ii. c. 9. st. 1. -F. indecent, 'undecent'; Cot. -Lat. indecent, stem of indécens, unbecoming. See In- (3) and Decent. Der. indecent-ly, indecent-y.

INDECISION, want of decision. (F., -L.) Used by Burke (R.) -F. indécision, 'an indecision'; Cot. See In- (3) and Decide. Der. indécisive, indécisive-ly, -ness.

INDECLINABLE, that cannot be declined. (L.) A grammatical term. In Minshew. -Lat. indeclinabilis, indeclinable. -Lat. in-, neg. prefix; and declinare, to decline, inflect a substantive. See In- (3) and Decline. Der. indeclinabl-y.

INDECORUM, want of propriety. (L.) 'Should commit the indecorum to set his helmet sideways'; Milton, Tetrachordon (R.) And in Minshew's Dict., ed. 1627. -Lat. indecorum, what is unbecoming; neut. of indecorus, unbecoming. See In- (3) and Decorum. Der. indecorous, used by Burke (R.); a later word in E., though directly from Lat. indecorus; hence indecorous-ly.

INDEED, in fact, in truth. (E.) M. E. in dede, in reality, according to the facts. 'And how that al this proces fil in dede' = and how all this series of events happened in reality; Chaucer, C. T. 14328. We find nearly the modern usage in the following. 'Made her owne weapon do her finger blede, To fele if pricking wer so good in dede'; Sir T. Wiat, Of his Love that pricked her finger with a needle. From in, prep.; and dede, dat. case of deed. See In and Deed.

INDEFATIGABLE, that cannot be wearied out. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 408; and in Minshew. -F. indefatigable, 'indefatigable'; Cot. -Lat. indefatigabilis, not to be wearied out. -Lat. in-, negative prefix; and defatigare, to weary out, from de, down, extremely, and fatigare, to weary. See In- (3) and Fatigue. Der. indefatigabl-y, indefatigable-ness.

INDEFEASIBLE, not to be defeated or made void. (Norm. F., -L.) A French law-term. 'An indefeasible title'; Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1553 (R.) Also spelt indefeasable; Tatler, no. 187. From In- (3) and Defeasible; see Defeasance, Defeat. Der. indefeasibl-y, indefeasible-ty.

INDEFENSIBLE, not defensible. (L.) Used by South, vol. v. sermon 4 (R.) From In- (3) and Defensible. See Defend. Der. indefensibl-y.

INDEFINABLE, that cannot be defined. (L.) Modern. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. From In- (3) and Definable. See Indefinite.

INDELEBLE, not to be blotted out. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. Misspelt for indeleble. Owing to the lack of E. words ending in -eble, it has been made to end in -ible, by analogy with terrible, horrible, and the like. The correct spelling indeleble often occurs (see Rich. and Todd) and is given in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Might fix any character indeleble of disgrace upon you'; Bacon, Letters, ed. 1657, p. 13 (Todd). -O. F. indeleble, 'indeleble'; Cot. -Lat. indelebilis, indeleble. -Lat. in-, not; and delebilis, destructible, from delere, to destroy. See In- (3) and Delete. Der. indelebl-y, indeleblity.

INDELICATE, not delicate, coarse. (F., -L.) 'If to your nice and chaster ears That term indelicate appears'; Churchill, The Ghost, b. iii (R.) Indelicacy is in the Spectator, no. 286. From In- (3) and Delicate. Der. indelicate-ly, indelicate-y.

INDEMNIFY, to make good for damage done. (F., -L.) 'I believe the states must at last engage to the merchants here that they will indemnify them from all that shall fall out on this occasion'; Sir W. Temple, to Lord Arlington (R.) Cf. O. F. indemniser, 'to indemnize, or indamnif'; Cot. [A clumsy and ignorantly formed compound, made as if from an O. F. indemnifier or Low Lat. indemnificare, neither of which is used; the true words being O. F. indemniser and Low Lat. indemniscare.] -Lat. indemnisi, crude form of indemnisi, unharmed; and F. suffix -fier = Lat. -ficare, forms due to Lat. facere, to make; see Fact. β. Lat. indemnisi is from in-, neg. prefix; and dammum, harm, loss; see In- (3) and Damage. Der. indemnificat-ion. And see Indemnity.

INDEMNITY, security from loss, compensation for loss. (F., -L.) 'Provide sufficiently for thindemnity [i. e. the indemnity] of the wytnes'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 970 b. -F. indemnité, 'indemnity'; Cot. -Lat. indemnitas, acc. of indemnitas, security from damage. -Lat. indemnisi, crude form of indemnisi; see Indemnify.

INDEMONSTRABLE, not demonstrable. (L.) 'Undiscernable, and most commonly indemonstrable'; Bp. Taylor, Liberty of Prophesying, s. 2. -Lat. indemonstrabilis, not to be shewn. See In- (3) and Demonstrate.

INDENT, to notch, cut into points like teeth. (Law Lat.) A law term. In making duplicates of deeds, it was usual to cut or indent the edges exactly alike so that they would tally with each other upon comparison. The deeds with edges so cut were called indentures, and the verb to indent came also to mean to execute a deed or make a compact. See indentura in Ducange. 'Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears, When they have lost and forfeited themselves?' 1 Hen. IV, i. 3. 87. It was also used as a term in heraldry, as in the following. 'His banner, . . . the which was gouldes, . . . bordred with syluer, indented'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 60 (R.) Hence used in a general sense. 'With indented glides'; As You Like It, iv. 3. 113. -Law Lat. indentare, to notch or cut into teeth; whence also O. F. enderter (Cotgrave). -Lat. in, in, into; and dent, stem of dens, a tooth, cognate with E. Tooth, q. v. Der. indenture, Hamlet, v. 1. 119, (= Law Lat. indentura, Ducange) formed with F. suffix -ure (= Lat. -ura) by analogy with F. sbs. such as bless-ure from bless-er, &c. Also indentat-ion. [†]

INDEPENDENT, not dependent. (L.) The Independents formed a sect famous in history. 'Robert Brown preached these views [i. e. such views as they held] in 1585 . . . A church was formed in London in 1593, when there were 20,000 independents . . . Cromwell, himself an Independent, obtained them toleration'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. From In- (3) and Dependent; see Depend. Der. independent-ly, independence, independency.

INDESCRIBABLE, not to be described. (L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. From In- (3) and Describable; see Describe.

INDESTRUCTIBLE, not to be destroyed. (L.) 'Primitive and indestructible bodies'; Boyle, Works, vol. i. p. 538 (R.) From In- (3) and Destructible; see Destroy. Der. indestructibl-y, indestructible-ness, indestructibility.

INDETERMINATE, not fixed. (L.) 'Both imperfect, disordered, and indeterminate'; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 845 (R.) -Lat. indeterminatus, undefined. -Lat. in-, not; and determinatus, pp. of determinare, to define, limit, fix; see In- (3) and Determine. Der. indeterminate-ly, indeterminat-ion; so also indetermin-able, indetermin-abl-y; and indetermin-ed.

INDEX, a hand that points out, a table of contents to a book. (L.) See Nares. In Shak. Rich. III, ii. 2. 149; Troil. i. 3. 343; Hamlet, iii. 4. 52. [The Lat. pl. is indices; the E. pl. is indexes.] -Lat. index (stem indic-), a discloser, informer, index, indicator. -Lat. indicare, to point out. See Indicate. Der. index, verb (modern); index-learning, Pope, Dunciad, ii. 279.

INDIAMAN, a large ship employed in trade with India; from India and man. See Indigo and Man.

INDIAN RUBBER, INDIA-RUBBER, caoutchouc, so named from its rubbing out pencil marks, and because brought from the W. Indies; from India and Rubber. ¶ The use of Indian with reference to the West Indies was once common; see Temp. ii. 2. 34; Pope, Horace, Ep. I. i. 69. See Indigo.

INDICATE, to point out, shew. (L.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Indication is earlier, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -Lat. indicatus, pp. of indicare, to point to, point out. -Lat. in, towards; and dicare, to proclaim, make known. -√ DIK, to shew; whence also E. Token, q. v. Der. indicat-or, indicat-or-y, indicat-ion; also indicat-ive, a grammatical term, used in the F. grammar prefixed to Cotgrave's F. Dict.; indicat-ive-ly; also index, q. v.

INDICT, to accuse. (L.; rather F., -L.) The spelling is Latin; but the pronunciation is invariably indite [i. e. rhyming with bite], shewing that it is really French. See further under Indite. Shak. has indict (old editions indite) in Hamlet ii. 2. 464; Oth. iii. 4. 154. Der. indict-able; indict-ment, Wint. Ta. iii. 2. 11; and see Indiction.

INDICTION, a cycle of 15 years. (F., -L.) Lit. an imposition of a tax, an impost, tax. Specially applied to the period called the Indiction, 'a cycle of tributes orderly disposed for 15 years, not known before the time of Constantine . . . In memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Maxentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, the council of Nice ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, but by the Indiction, which has its epocha 1 Jan. 313. It was first used by the Latin church in 342'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Given and explained in Minshew and Blount. -F. indiction, 'a term of 5, 10, or 15 years used by the ancient Romans in their numbering of years; also an imposition, tax, or tallage'; Cot. -Lat. indictionem, acc. of indictio, an imposition of a tax. -Lat. indictus, pp. of indicare, to appoint, impose. -Lat. in, in, to; and dicere, to say, speak, tell, appoint. See In- (2) and Diction.

INDIFFERENT, impartial, neutral, unimportant. (F., -L.) In Eccles. xlii. 5 (A. V.) See Bible Wordbook and Nares. And see Shak. Rich. II, ii. 3. 116; Jul. Cæs. i. 3. 115; Tam. Shrew, iv. 1. 94. -F. indifferent, 'indifferent, equal, tolerable, in a mean between both'; Cot. -Lat. indifferent, stem of indifferens, indifferent, careless. From In- (3) and Different; see Differ. Der. indifferent-ly, Jul. Cæsar, i. 2. 87; Titus Andron. i. 430; Hamlet. iii. 2. 41; indifference.

INDIGENOUS, native, born in, naturally produced in. (L.)

'Negroes . . . not indigenous or proper natives of America;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 10. § 7. — Lat. indigenus, native; by change of -us to -ous, as in very numerous instances. — Lat. indi-, put for indo or indu, old Lat. extensions from the prep. in (cf. Gk. ἐνδο, within); and *-genus, born, formed from √GAN, to beget. Cf. Lat. genitus, pp. of gignere, to beget. See Genus.

INDIGENT, destitute, needy, poor. (F., —L.) M. E. indigent; the sb. indigence is in Chaucer, C. T. 4524, 4534; Gower, C. A. iii. 153. — F. indigent, 'indigent'; Cot. — Lat. indigent-, stem of indigens, a needy person, lit. needing; orig. pres. pt. of indigere, to need, to be in want. — Lat. ind-, shortened from indo or indu, an old Lat. extension from the prep. in (cf. Gk. ἐνδο, within); and egere, to be in want. — β. Egere is formed from an adj. *egus, needy, only found in comp. ind-egus, needy. Cf. Gk. ἀχρη, poor, needy (rare), Theocritus, 16. 33. Both Lat. and Gk. words appear to be from √AGH, to be in want; Fick, i. 482. Perhaps this root is closely related to √AGH, to choke, compress. Der. indigent-ly, indigence.

INDIGESTED, not digested, undigested. (L.) Indigested in the sense of 'unarranged' is now commonly so written, as if to distinguish it from undigested, applied to food; but the words are the same. 'Hence, heap of wrath, foul undigested lump;' 2 Hen. VI. v. 1. 157. The shorter form indigest also occurs; 'monsters and things indigest;' Shak. Sonnet 114, l. 5. — Lat. indigestus, (1) unarranged, (2) undigested. — Lat. in-, not; and digestus, pp. of digerere, to arrange, digest. See In- (3) and Digest. Der. indigest-ible (cf. digestible in Chaucer, C. T. 439), from F. indigestible, 'indigestible,' Cot., from pp. indigestus; indigest-ibl-y; also indigest-ion, from F. indigestion, 'indigestion,' Cot.

INDIGNATION, anger at what is unworthy. (F., —L.) M. E. indignacion. 'The hates and indignacions of the accusour Ciprian;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4. l. 327. — F. indignation, 'indignation;' Cot. — Lat. indignationem, acc. of indignatio, displeasure. — Lat. indignatus, pp. of indignari, to consider as unworthy, be displeased at. — Lat. indignus, unworthy. — Lat. in-, not; and dignus, worthy. See In- (3) and Dignity. Der. So also indignant, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 23, from Lat. indignant-, stem of pres. part. of indignari; indignant-ly; also indignity, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 7. 36, from O. F. indigneté, 'indignity' (Cot.), from Lat. indignitatem, acc. of indignitas, unworthiness, indignity, indignation.

INDIGO, a blue dye obtained from a certain plant. (F., —Span., —L., —Gk., —Pers., —Skt.) Most of it comes from India, whence the name. The mod. name indigo is French, a word borrowed from Spanish. Holland uses the Span. form. 'There cometh from India . . . great store of indico;' tr. of Pliny, b. xxxv. c. 7. — F. indigo. — Span. indico, indigo; lit. 'Indian.' — Lat. Indicum, indigo; neut. of Indicus, Indian. — Gk. ινδικόν, indigo; neut. of ινδικός, Indian. — Pers. Hind, India; Rich. Dict. p. 1691. The name is due to the Indus, a large river. — Skt. sindhu, the river Indus, a river. — Skt. syand, to flow. ¶ The Persian changes s into h; see Max Müller, Lectures, i. 265. From the same source we have Cinder, q. v.

INDIRECT, not direct, crooked. (F., —L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iv. 1. 350. — F. indirect, 'indirect, not right;' Cot. — Lat. indirectus. See In- (3) and Direct. Der. indirect-ly, -ness, indirect-ion, Hamlet, ii. 1. 66.

INDISCERNIBLE, not discernible. (L.) Spelt indiscernable in Kersey, ed. 1715. From In- (3) and Discernible; see Discern. Der. indiscernib-ly.

INDISCREET, not discreet. (F., —L.) M. E. indiscret; spelt indyscret in Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, l. 825. — F. indiscret, 'indiscret;' Cot. — Lat. indiscretus, unseparated, indiscriminate; also, that does not discern or distinguish. See In- (3) and Discreet; also Discern. Der. indiscreet-ly, -ness; also indiscretion, from F. indiscretion, 'indiscretion;' Cot. See below.

INDISCRIMINATE, confused. (L.) 'The use of all things indiscriminate;' Bp. Hall, b. v. sat. 3, l. 25. Here it is used as an adverb. — Lat. indiscriminativ, adv., without distinction. — Lat. in-, not; and discriminativ, with a distinction. — Lat. discrimin-, stem of discrimen, a separation, distinction. See In- (3) and Discriminate. Der. indiscriminate-ly.

INDISPENSABLE, that cannot be dispensed with. (L.) In Bale's Apology, fol. 133 (R.). From In- (3) and Dispensable; see Dispense. Der. indispensabl-y, indispensable-ness.

INDISPOSED, disinclined, unwell in health. (F., —L.) 'The indisposed and sickly;' K. Lear, ii. 4. 112. — O. F. indispos, also indisposé, 'sickly, crazie, unhealthfull, ill-disposed;' Cot. — F. in- = Lat. in-, not; and O. F. dispos, also disposé, 'nimble, well disposed in body,' Cot.; from the verb disposer. See In- (3) and Dispose. Der. Hence the verb indispose, which is quite modern; indisposed-ness; similarly, indispos-it-ion, Timon, ii. 2. 139, from F. indisposition, Cot.

INDISPUTABLE, not disputable, certain. (F., —L.) 'Indisputably certain;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 12. § 1. From

In- (3) and F. disputable, 'disputable,' Cot.; see Dispute. Der. indisputabl-y, indisputable-ness.

INDISSOLUBLE, not dissoluble. (F., —L.) 'The indissoluble knot;' Udal, on St. Matthew, c. 19. — F. indissoluble, 'indissoluble;' Cot. — Lat. indissolubilis. — Lat. in-, not; and dissolubilis, that may be dissolved. See In- (3) and Dissolute. Der. indissolubl-y, indissoluble-ness, indissolubili-ty.

INDISTINCT, not distinct. (F., —L.; or L.) In Ant. and Cleop. iv. 14. 10. — F. indistinct, 'indistinct;' Cot. — Lat. indistinctus. From In- (3) and Distinct. Der. indistinct-ly, -ness; so also indistinguish-able, Shak. Troil. v. 1. 33; indistinguishabl-y.

INDITE, to dictate for writing, compose, write. (F., —L.) It should rather be endite. M. E. enditen, Chaucer, C. T. 1874, 2743. 'Indyted or endyted of clerkly speche, Dictatus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 261. 'Indyted be [by] lawe, for trespass, Indictatus;' id. — O. F. endictier, 'to indict, accuse, impeach;' Cot. Also spelt enditer, with the sense 'to point out;' Bartsch, Chrest. Française. — Low Lat. indictare, to accuse; frequentative of Lat. indicare, to proclaim, enjoin, impose. It is clear that the senses of the related words indicare, to point out, and dictare, to dictate, have influenced the sense of indite, and it is hardly possible to separate the influence of dicare from that of dicere. See Dictate, Diction. ¶ The spelling indict is reserved for the sense 'to accuse.' Der. indit-er, indite-ment. Doublet, indict, q. v.

INDIVIDUAL, separate, pertaining to one only. (L.) 'If it were not for two things that are constant . . . no individuall would last one moment;' Bacon, Essay 58, Of Vicissitude. Formed, with suffix -al, from Lat. individu-us, indivisible, inseparable; hence, distinct, apart. — Lat. in-, not; and diuiduus, divisible, from diuidere, to divide; see In- (3) and Divide. Der. individual-ly, individual-ise, individual-is-at-ion; -ism, -i-ty; also individu-ate (rare), individu-at-ion; and see below.

INDIVISIBLE, not divisible. (F., —L.) 'That indivisible point or centre;' Hooker, Eccl. Polity, ed. Church, b. i. sect. viii. subsect. 8. Also in Cotgrave. — F. indivisible, 'indivisible;' Cot. — Lat. indivisibilis. From In- (3) and Divisible; see Divide. Der. indivisibl-y, indivisible-ness, indivisibili-ty.

INDOCILE, not docile. (F., —L.) 'Hogs and more indocile beasts;' Sir W. Petty, Adv. to Hartlib (1648), p. 23; Todd. — F. indocile, 'indocile;' Cot. — Lat. indocilis, not teachable. See In- (3) and Docile. Der. indocil-i-ty.

INDOCTRINATE, to instruct in doctrine. (L.) 'His indoctrinating power;' Milton, Apology for Smectymnus (R.). Coined as if from Low Lat. *indoctrinare, not found. — Lat. in, in; and doctrina, learning. See In- (2) and Doctrin. Der. indoctrinat-ion.

INDOLENCE, idleness. (L.) A shortened form of the older indolency. 'Indolence or Indolency;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Only indolency is given in Coles and Blount, and occurs in Holland's Plutarch, p. 480 (R.). Indolence and indolent both occur in the Spectator, no. 100. Indolency is Englished from Lat. indolentia, freedom from pain; hence, ease. — Lat. in-, neg. prefix; and dolent-, stem of dolens, pres. part. of dolere, to grieve. See In- (3) and Dolour. Der. indolent (later than indolency); indolent-ly.

INDOMITABLE, untameable. (L.) 'It is so fierce and indomitable;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 383 (R.). A coined word; from Lat. in-, not; and domitare, frequentative of domare, to tame, cognate with E. tame; see In- (3) and Tame. Der. indomitabl-y.

INDORSE, the same as Endorse. (L.) ¶ The O. F. is endorser; the Low Lat. is indorsare. Der. indors-er, indors-ee, indorse-ment.

INDUBITABLE, not to be doubted. (F., —L.) 'He did not indubitably believe;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 1. § 6. — F. indubitable, 'undoubtable;' Cot. — Lat. indubitabilis, indubitable. — Lat. in-, not; and dubitabilis, doubtful, from dubitare, to doubt. See Doubt. Der. indubitabl-y, indubitable-ness; so also in-dubious.

INDUCE, to lead to, prevail on. (L.) 'Induceth in many of them a loue to worldly things;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 880 h. — Lat. inducere, to lead in, conduct to. — Lat. in, towards; and ducere, to lead. See In- (2) and Duct. Der. induc-er, induc-ible; induce-ment, Spenser, F. Q. vii. 6. 32; also induct, q. v.

INDUCT, to introduce, put in possession. (L.) 'Inducted and brought in thither;' Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 1029 (R.). — Lat. inductus, pp. of inducere, to bring in; see above. Der. induct-ion, from F. induction, 'an induction, entry, or leading into' (Cot.), from Lat. inductionem, acc. of inductio, an introducing; induct-ive, induct-ive-ly.

¶ Induction was formerly used for 'introduction;' as in Sackville's Induction to the Mirror for Magistrates.

INDUE (1), to invest or clothe with, supply with. (L.) 'Infinite shapes of creatures there are found . . . Some fitt for reasonable sowles indew;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 6. 35. 'Indu'd with robes of various hue;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metam. b. xi. l. 264; where the Lat. has 'induitur uelamina mille colorum,' Metam. xi. 589. — Lat.

indue, to put into, put on, clothe with. β. Connected with indue, clothes, ex-usia, spoils; the prefix is ind- rather than in-, there being no connection with Gk. ἐνδύειν, ἐνδύειν, to put on. See EXUVIÆ. Der. indue-ment (rare). And see below.

INDUE (2), a corruption of ENDUE, q. v. (F., -L.) This word is totally distinct from the above, but some of our best writers seem to have much confused them. For instances, see Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 105, Oth. iii. 4. 146, &c.; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 6. See Todd's Johnson. The mistake chiefly arises in the phrase 'indued with,' miswritten for 'endued with,' in the sense of 'endowed with;' see Shak. Two Gent. v. 4. 153, Com. Errors, ii. 1. 22. Dryden uses 'indued with' correctly, as in the instance cited under INDUE (1).

INDULGENCE, permission, licence, gratification. (F., -L.) M. E. indulgence, P. Plowman, B. vii. 193; Chaucer, C. T. 5666. -F. indulgence, 'indulgence;' Cot. -Lat. indulgentia, indulgence, gentleness. -Lat. indulgenti-, crude form of pres. part. of indulgere, to be courteous to, indulge. β. Origin unknown; it is not even certain whether the prefix is in- or ind-. Der. indulg-ent, Ant. and Cleop. i. 4. 16, from F. indulgent, 'indulgent;' Cot. Hence the (later) verb indulge, Dryden, tr. of Persius, Sat. v. 74, answering to Lat. indulgere.

INDURATE, to harden. (L.) Indurated occurs thrice, and induration twice, in Barnes, Works, p. 282. Properly a pp., as in Tyndal, Works, p. 28, col. 1; 'for their hearts were indurate,' -Lat. induratus, pp. of indurare, to harden. See ENDURE. Der. induration.

INDUSTRY, diligence. (F., -L.) In Shak. Two Gent. i. 3. 22; spelt industree, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 45. -F. industrie, 'industry;' Cot. -Lat. industria, diligence. -Lat. industrius, diligent. β. Of uncertain origin; perhaps for industrius = indo-stru-us, from indo, O. Lat. extension from in, in; and the base stru-, occurring in struere, to arrange, build (hence, to toil); see INSTRUCT. Der. industri-al, industri-ally; also industri-ous, Temp. iv. 33, from F. industrieux, 'industrious' (Cot.), which from Lat. industri-osus, abounding in industry; industri-ously.

INDWELLING, a dwelling within. (E.) 'The personal indwelling of the Spirit;' South's Sermons, vol. v. ser. 7 (R.) From IN (1), and DWELLING, sb. formed from DWELL. Der. So also indwell-er, Spenser, F. Q. vii. 6. 55.

INEBRIATE, to intoxicate. (L.) In Levins. -Lat. inebriatus, pp. of inebriare, to make drunk. -Lat. in, in, used as an intensive prefix; and ebriare, to make drunk, from ebri-us, drunk. See EBRIETY. Der. inebriat-ion, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 23, part 16; also in-ebriety.

INEDITED, unpublished. (L.) Modern; see Todd. From IN (3) and EDIT.

INEFFABLE, unspeakable. (F., -L.) In Levins and Minshew. -F. ineffable, 'ineffable;' Cot. -Lat. ineffabilis, unutterable. -Lat. in-, not; and effabilis, utterable, from effari, to speak out, utter. -Lat. ef = ex, out; and fari, to speak; see FAME. Der. ineffab-ly, Milton, P. L. vi. 721.

INEFFACEABLE, not to be effaced. (F., -L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. -O. F. ineffaçable, 'uneffaceable;' Cot. See IN (3) and EFFACE. Der. ineffaceab-ly.

INEFFECTIVE, not effective. (L.) 'An ineffective pity;' Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 12 (R.) From IN (3) and EFFECTIVE; see EFFECT. Der. ineffectively; so also ineffect-u-al, Milton, P. L. ix. 301; ineffectual-ly, -ness. And see below.

INEFFICACIOUS, that has no efficacy. (F., -L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. From IN (3) and EFFICACIOUS; see EFFICACY. Der. inefficacious-ly; so also inefficient, a late word, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; whence inefficient-ly, inefficiency.

INELEGANT, not elegant. (L.) In Levins; and Milton, P. L. v. 335. -Lat. inelegant, stem of inelegans. See IN (3) and ELEGANT. Der. inelegant-ly, ineleganc-y.

INELIGIBLE, not eligible. (F., -L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. From IN (3) and ELIGIBLE. Der. ineligib-ly, ineligibility.

INELOQUENT, not eloquent. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 219. -F. ineloquent, 'uneloquent;' Cot. See IN (3) and ELOQUENT.

INEPT, not apt, inexpert, foolish. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave and Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -O. F. inepte, 'inept, unapt;' Cot. -Lat. ineptus, improper, foolish. -Lat. in-, not; and aptus, fit, proper. See APT. Der. inept-ly, inepti-tude. Doublet, inapt, q. v.

INEQUALITY, want of equality. (F., -L.) 'But onely considering the inequality;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 1 (R.) -F. inequalité, 'inequality;' Cot. See IN (3) and EQUAL. ¶ The adj. inequal (for unequal) is in Chaucer, C. T. 2273.

INERT, dull, inactive. (L.) 'Inertly strong;' Pope, Dunciad, iv. 7. -Lat. inert-, stem of iners, unskilful, inactive. -Lat. in-, not; and ars (gen. art-is), art, skill. See ART. Der. inert-ly, inert-ness; also inert-ia = Lat. inertia, inactivity.

INESTIMABLE, that cannot be valued, priceless. (F., -L.)

In Shak. Rich. III. i. 4. 27. From IN (3) and ESTIMABLE; see ESTIMATE. Der. inestimab-ly.

INEVITABLE, that cannot be avoided. (F., -L.) 'Inevitable destiny;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 645 d. -F. inevitable, 'inevitable;' Cot. -Lat. inevitabilis, unavoidable. -Lat. in-, not; and evitabilis, avoidable. -Lat. evitare, to avoid. -Lat. e-, out, away; and vitare, to shun (of doubtful origin). Der. inevitab-ly, inevitability.

INEXACT, not precise. (L.) Modern; not in Todd; coined from IN (3) and EXACT. Der. inexact-ly, -ness.

INEXCUSABLE, not excusable. (F., -L.) In Bible, 1551, Rom. ii. 1. -F. inexcusable, 'unexcusable;' Cot. -Lat. inexcusabilis, Rom. ii. 1 (Vulgate). See IN (3) and EXCUSE. Der. inexcusab-ly, inexcusable-ness.

INEXHAUSTED, not spent. (L.) In Dryden, On Mrs. Anne Killigrew, l. 28. From IN (3) and EXHAUSTED; see EXHAUST. Cf. Lat. inexhaustus, inexhausted. Der. inexhaust-ible, in Cowley's Pref. to Poems, on his Davideis (R.); inexhaustib-ly, inexhaustibili-ty.

INEXPERIENCE, want of experience. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 931. From IN (3) and EXPERIENCE. Cf. Lat. inexperientia (though inexperience is not in Cotgrave). Der. inexperient-ed.

INEXPERT, not expert. (F., -L.; or L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 52; xii. 218. From IN (3) and EXPERT. Der. inexpert-ly, -ness.

INEXPIABLE, that cannot be expiated. (F., -L.) In Levins; and in Milton, Samson, 839. From IN (3) and EXPIABLE; see EXPIATE. Der. inexpiab-ly, inexpiability.

INEXPLICABLE, that cannot be explained. (F., -L.) In Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 12 (R.); and Hamlet, iii. 2. 13. -F. inexplicable, 'inexplicable;' Cot. -Lat. inexplicabilis. -Lat. in-, not; and explicare, to unfold, explain. See EXPICATE. Der. inexplicab-ly, inexplicability.

INEXPRESSIBLE, that cannot be expressed. (L.) In Milton, P. L. v. 595; viii. 113. From IN (3) and EXPRESSIBLE; see EXPRESS. Der. inexpressib-ly; so also inexpress-ive, inexpress-ive-ly, -ness.

INEXTINGUISHABLE, that cannot be quenched. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 88; vi. 217. From IN (3) and EXTINGUISH.

¶ The old form is inextinguible, Sir T. More, Works, p. 825 g, from F. inextinguible (Cot.), Lat. inextinguibilis, Matt. iii. 12 (Vulgate). Der. inextinguishab-ly.

INEXTRICABLE, that cannot be extricated. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave; and Milton, P. L. v. 528. -F. inextricable, 'inextricable;' Cot. -Lat. inextricabilis. See IN (3) and EXTRICATE. Der. inextricab-ly.

INFALLIBLE, quite certain. (F., -L.) In Shak. Meas. iii. 2. 119. -F. infallible, 'infallible;' Cot. From IN (3) and FALLIBLE. Der. infallib-ly, infallibili-ty.

INFAMY, ill fame, vileness. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. vi. 6. 1. -F. infamie, 'infamy;' -Lat. infamia, ill fame. -Lat. infami-s, of ill report, disreputable. -Lat. in-, not; and fam-a, fame; see FAME. Der. So also in-fam-ous, accented infamous, Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 27, from in- and famous. [†]

INFANT, a babe, person not of age. (L.) [The M. E. enfaunt (shortened to fauit, P. Plowman, B. vii. 94), from F. enfant, has been supplanted by the Law Lat. form.] In Spenser, F. Q. vi. 9. 14. -Lat. infant-, stem of infans, a babe, lit. one who cannot speak. -Lat. in-, not; and fans, speaking, pres. part. of fari, to speak. See FAME. Der. infanc-y, Temp. i. 2. 484, suggested by F. enfance, infancy; infant-ile, from O. F. infantile (Cot.), which from Lat. infantilis; infant-ine, from O. F. infantine, 'infantine,' Cot.; infanti-cide = F. infanticide, 'child-murdering' (Cot.), from Lat. infanticidium, child-murder: and this from Lat. infanti-, crude form of infans, and -cid = caed- in caed-ere, to kill (see CÆSURA); infanticid-al; and see INFANTRY.

INFANTRY, a band of foot-soldiers. (F., -Ital., -L.) 'The principal strength of an army consisteth in the infantry or foot;' Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 72. -F. infanterie, 'the infantry or footmen of an army;' Cot. -Ital. infanteria, 'infantry, soldiery on foot;' Florio. β. The lit. sense is 'a band of infants,' i. e. of young men or servants attendant on knights. -Ital. infante, an infant. -Lat. infantem, acc. of infans, an infant; see INFANT.

INFATUATE, to make foolish, besot. (L.) In Minshew. Properly a pp., as: 'There was never wicked man that was not infatuate;'

Bp. Hall, Contemplations on O. T., b. xviii. c. 4. par. 7.—Lat. infatuatus, pp. of infatuare, to make a fool of.—Lat. in-, as intensive prefix; and fatuus, foolish; see Fatuous. Der. infatuat-ion.

INFECT, to taint. (F.,—L.) Properly a pp., as: 'the pynce, whose mynd in tender youth infect, shal redily fal to mischief; Sir T. More, Works, p. 39 b. So also infect in Chaucer, C. T. 422 (Six-text, A. 420), where Trywhitt has 'in suspect.' Hence M. E. infecten, to infect, Prompt. Parv. p. 261.—O. F. infect, 'infect, infected;' Cot.—Lat. infectus, pp. of inficere, to put in, dip, mix, stain, tinge, infect.—Lat. in, in; and facere, to make, put; see Fact. Der. infect-ion, infect-i-ous, infect-i-ous-ly, infect-i-ous-ness; infect-ive (Levins), from Lat. infectivus.

INFELICITY, misfortune. (F.,—L.) M. E. infelicitie, Complaint of Creseide, st. 6.—O. F. infelicitie (omitted by Cot.).—Lat. infelicitatem, acc. of infelicitas, ill luck. See In- (3) and Felicity. Der. infelicit-ous.

INFER, to bring into, deduce, imply. (F.,—L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 840 h.—F. inferre, 'to inferre, imply;' Cot.—Lat. inferre, to bring into, introduce, infer.—Lat. in, into; and ferre, to bring, cognate with E. bear; see Bear. Der. infer-able, or inferrible, infer-ence, infer-ent-i-al, infer-ent-i-al-ly.

INFERIOR, lower, secondary. (F.,—L.) Now conformed to the Lat. spelling. Spelt inferiour in some edd. of Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 54 (R.) Spelt inferioure in Levins.—O. F. inferieur, 'inferiour, lower;' Cot.—Lat. inferiorum, acc. of inferior, lower, compar. of inferus, low, nether. β Strictly, infer-ior is a double comparative; inferus and infimus (lowest) are comparative and superl. forms answering to Skt. adhara, lower, and adhama, lowest, from adhas, adv. underneath, low, down. γ Again, the Skt. adhas is from a pronom. base A, with suffix -DHA. Inferus appears to be a nasalised form of adhara. Der. infer-ior-i-ty; and see Infernal.

INFERNAL, hellish. (F.,—L.) M. E. infernal, Chaucer, C. T. 2686.—F. infernal (Burguy).—Lat. infernalis, belonging to the lower regions, infernal.—Lat. infernus, lower; extended from inferus, low. See Inferior. Der. infernal-ly.

INFEST, to disturb, harass, molest. (F.,—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 48.—F. infester, 'to infest;' Cot.—Lat. infestare, to attack, trouble.—Lat. infestus, attacking, hostile. β Infestus=infed-tus, from in, against, and federe=*fendere, to strike, found in de-fendere, of-fendere; see Defend, Offend. So also Lat. infensus, hostile=infend-tus, from in and fendere.*

INFIDEL, faithless, unbelieving; a heathen. (F.,—L.) 'Oute of the handes of the infidelles;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 40 (R.).—O. F. infidèle, 'infidell;' Cot.—Lat. infidelis, faithless. See In- (3) and Fidelity. Der. infidel-i-ty, from F. infidélité, 'infidelity;' Cot.

INFINITE, endless, boundless. (L.) M. E. infiniit, Chaucer, C. T. 2829.—Lat. infinitus, infinite. See In- (3) and Finite. ¶ The O. F. form is infini; but it is not improbable that there was an older form infiniit, from which the M. E. word was really taken. Der. infinite-ly; infiniit-ly (M. E. infiniitee), from F. infinité, which from Lat. acc. infinitatem; infiniit-ude, from F. infinitude (Cot.); infiniit-ive, from F. infinitif (Sherwood's index to Cot.), which from Lat. infinitivus, the unlimited, indefinite mood (in grammar); also infiniit-esimal, a late and coined word, in which the suffix is imitated from that of cent-esimal, q. v.; infiniit-esimal-ly.

INFIRM, feeble, weak. (L.) 'Infirm of purpose;' Mach. ii. 2. 52.—Lat. infirmus, not firm, weak. See In- (3) and Firm. Der. infirm-ly; also infirm-ar-y, q. v., infirm-i-ty, q. v.

INFIRMARY, a hospital for the infirm. (F.,—L.) Modified from M. E. enfermerie so as to bring it nearer to the Lat. spelling. The M. E. enfermerie is almost always shortened to fermerie, as in Prompt. Parv. p. 157.—O. F. enfermerie, 'an hospital;' Cot.—Low Lat. infirmaria, a hospital.—Lat. infirmus; see Infirm.

INFIRMITY, feebleness. (F.,—L.) M. E. infirmitee, spelt infirmite, Wyclif, 2 Cor. xi. 30.—F. infirmité, 'infirmity;' Cot.—Lat. infirmitatem, acc. of infirmus, weakness.—Lat. infirmus; see Infirm.

INFIX, to fix into. (L.) 'Infixed into his flesh;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1114 a.—Lat. infixus, pp. of inficere, to fix in.—Lat. in, in; and ficere, to fix; see Fix.

INFLAME, to cause to burn, excite. (F.,—L.) In Shak. K. John, v. 1. 7. Modified from O. F. enflamber, 'to inflame' (Cot.), so as to bring it nearer to Lat. inflammare, to set in a flame.—Lat. in, in; and flamma, a flame. See Flame. Der. inflamm-able, from F. inflammable, 'inflammable' (Cot.), formed from Lat. inflammare; inflamm-a-bili-ty; inflamm-at-ion, 2 Hen. IV. iv. 3. 103; inflamm-at-or-y.

INFLATE, to blow into, puff up. (L.) In Levins; and in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 7 (Of Fylberts). Orig. a pp., as in The Complaint of Creseide, l. 48.—Lat. inflatus, pp. of inflare, to blow into.—Lat. in, into; and flare, cognate with E. Blow, q. v. Der. inflat-ion, from F. inflation, 'an inflation;' Cot.

INFLECT, to bend, bend in, modulate the voice; (in grammar) to vary the terminations. (L.) 'Somewhat inflected,' i. e. bent; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 1. § 4.—Lat. inflectere, to bow, curve, lit. bend in.—Lat. in, in; and flectere, to bend; see Flexible. Der. inflect-ion (better spelt inflex-ion, as in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 1. § 2), from Lat. inflexio, from inflex-us, pp. of inflexere; inflex-ion-al; inflex-ive.

INFLEXIBLE, that cannot be bent. (F.,—L.) In Minshew; and Milton, Samson, 816.—F. inflexible, 'inflexible;' Cot.—Lat. inflexibilis, not flexible. See In- (3) and Flexible. Der. inflexibil-y, inflex-ive.

INFLICT, to lay on, impose. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 22.—Lat. inflicere, pp. of infligere, to inflict.—Lat. in, upon; and fligere, to strike.—✓BHLAGH, to strike; whence also E. Blow, a stroke, q. v. Der. inflict-ion, Meas. i. 3. 28; inflict-ive, from O. F. inflictif, 'inflictive;' Cot.

INFLORESCENCE, mode of flowering, said of plants. (F.,—L.) A modern botan. term.—F. inflorescence (Littre). Coined from Lat. inflorescent, stem of pres. part. of inflorescere, to burst into blossom.—Lat. in, in; and florescere, to flourish; see Flourish.

INFLUENCE, an inspiration, authority, power. (F.,—L.) Properly a term in astrology; see quotation from Cotgrave below. 'Than faire Phebus . . . causing, by his moving And influence, life in al erthly thing;' Testament of Creseide, st. 29.—O. F. influence, 'a flowing in, and particularly an influence, or influent course, of the planets; their virtue infused into, or their course working on, inferior creatures;' Cot.—Low Lat. influentia, an inundation, lit. a flowing into.—Lat. influenti-, crude form of pres. part. of influeri, to flow into.—Lat. in, in; and fluere, to flow; see Fluid. Der. influence, verb; influential, from Lat. influenti- (as above); influential-ly; influse, q. v. Doublet, influenza.

INFLUENZA, a severe catarrh. (Ital.,—L.) Modern. Borrowed from Ital. influenza, lit. influence, also (according to Littre) an epidemic catarrh. A doublet of Influence, q. v. [†]

INFLUX, a flowing in, abundant accession. (L.) Formerly used as we now use 'influence.' 'That dominion, which the starres have . . . by their influxes;' Howell, Forraie Travell, sect. vi; ed. Arber, p. 36.—Lat. influxus, a flowing in.—Lat. influxus, pp. of influeri, to flow in; see Influence.

INFOLD, to inwrap. (E.) Sometimes written enfold, but badly. In Shak. Macb. i. 4. 31. From In- (1) and Fold.

INFORM, to impart knowledge to. (F.,—L.) M. E. informen, Gower, C. A. i. 87.—F. informer, 'to inform;' Cot.—Lat. informare, to put into form, mould, tell, inform.—Lat. in, into; and forma, form; see Form. Der. inform-er; inform-ant; inform-al-ion, M. E. informacion, Gower, C. A. iii. 145.

INFORMAL, not formal. (L.) In Shak. Meas. v. 236. From In- (3) and Formal; see Form. Der. informal-ly, informal-i-ty.

INFRACTION, a violation, esp. of law. (F.,—L.) Used by Waller (Todd's Johnson; without a reference). A later substitution for the older term infraction.—F. infraction, the same as infraction, 'an infraction, infringement;' Cot.—Lat. infractio, acc. of infractus, a weakening.—Lat. infractus, pp. of infringere; see Infringe.

INFRANGIBLE, that cannot be broken. (F.,—L.) In Minshew; and in Holland's tr. of Plutarch, p. 661 (R.).—F. infrangible, 'infrangible, unbreakable;' Cot. See In- (3) and Frangible. Der. infrangibili-ty.

INFREQUENT, not frequent. (L.) In Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 21 (R.).—Lat. infrequent, stem of infrequens, rare. See In- (3) and Frequent. Der. infrequent-ly, infrequent-y.

INFRINGE, to break into, violate, esp. law. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 3. 144, 146.—Lat. infringere, to break into.—Lat. in, into; and frangere, to break. See Fraction. Der. infringe-ment.

INFURIATE, to enrage. (Ital.,—L.) Properly a pp., as in Milton, P. L. vi. 486. Introduced by Milton (who was a scholar of Italian) from Ital. infuriato, pp. of infuriare, 'to grow into fury or rage;' Florio.—Ital. in furia, 'in a fury, ragingly;' Florio.—Lat. in, in; and furia, properly a Fury, hence, fury. See Fury.

INFUSE, to pour into. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iv. 1. 132, 137.—F. infuser, 'to infuse;' Cot.—Lat. infusus, pp. of infundere, to pour into.—Lat. in, in; and fundere, to pour; see Fuse (1). Der. infus-ion, Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 816; infus-or-i-a, infus-or-i-al.

INFUSIBLE, not fusible. (F.,—L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 11. From In- (3) and Fusible; see Fuse (1).

INGATHERING, a gathering in. (E.) In Bible, ed. 1551, and A. V.: Exod. xxiii. 16. From In- (1) and Gather.

INGERENDER, the same as Engender. (F.,—L.) In Minshew; and Milton, P. L. ii. 794, iv. 809, x. 530.

INGENIOUS, witty, skilful in invention. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 9. Shak. often uses it indiscriminately with ingenuous (Schmidt). Cf. ingeniously, Timon, ii. 2. 230.—F. ingenieus, 'ingenious, witty, inventive;' Cot.—Lat. ingeniosus, clever.—Lat. ingenium, temper, natural capacity, genius. See Engine, Genius. Der. ingenious-ly, -ness. And see below.

INGENUOUS, frank, honourable. (L.) In Shak., who confuses it with ingenious (Schmidt); see L. L. i. 2. 29; iii. 59; iv. 2. 80.—Lat. ingenuus, inborn, free-born, frank, candid.—Lat. in, in; and *genere, old form of gignere, to beget (pt. t. gen-u), from GAN, to beget. Der. ingenuously, -ness; also ingenu-i-ty, Ben Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, Act iii. sc. 3 (some edd., sc. 9, Macilente's speech), from F. ingenuité, 'ingenuity' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. ingenuitatem. And see above.

INGLE, fire. (C.,—L.) Burns has ingle-lowe, blaze of the fire. The Vision, st. 7. 'Ingle, fire;' Ray's Gloss, ed. 1691.—Gael. and Irish aingeal, fire; from Lat. ignis, Skt. agni, fire. See Ignition. [†]

INGLORIOUS, not glorious. (F.,—L.) In Shak. K. John, v. 1. 65.—F. inglorieux, 'inglorious;' Cot.—Low Lat. ingloriosus, formed from Lat. inglorius, inglorious. See In- (3) and Glory. Der. ingloriously, -ness. ¶ Perhaps borrowed directly from Lat. inglorius, like arduous from Lat. arduus, &c.

INGOT, a mass of metal poured into a mould, a mass of unwrought metal. (E.) See my note to Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2. 17. M. E. ingot, Chaucer, C. T. 16677, 16691, 16696, 16701; where it means 'a mould in which metal is cast;' see the passages. But the true sense is that which is still preserved, viz. 'that which is poured in,' a mass of metal.—A. S. in, in; and goten, poured, pp. of geotan, to pour, shed water, fuse metals; Grein, i. 504. Cf. Du. ingieten, Swed. ingjuta, to pour in. β. The A. S. geotan is cognate with Du. gieten, G. giessen, Icel. gjóta (pp. gotinn), Dan. gyde, Swed. gjuta (pp. guten), Goth. gutan, to pour, shed, fuse; all from GHUD, to pour, seen also in Lat. funderere (pt. t. fudi, pp. fusus); which is an extension of GHU, to pour. See Fuse, Chyle. α. From the E. ingot is derived the F. lingot, an ingot, which stands for l'ingot, by that incorporation of the article which is not uncommon in French; cf. lendemain (= le en demain), loriot (from Lat. aureolus), luette (from Lat. uva), lierre (from Lat. hedera). And again, from F. lingot was formed the Low Lat. lingotus, which is not an early word, but assigned by Ducange to A. D. 1440. This Low Lat. word has been by some fancifully derived from Lat. lingua, the tongue; owing to a supposed resemblance of a mass of molten metal to the shape of the tongue; much as the countryman described the size of a stone as being 'as big as a lump of chalk.' B. Scheler hesitates to accept the derivation here given, from the notion that the A. S. verb geotan soon became obsolete. This is quite a mistake, as it is still extant; see 'Vote, to pour,' in Halliwell, and cf. Cleveland yelling, a small iron pan; and more E. dialect-words from the same source might be adduced. The M. E. verb seten was long in use also; see examples in Stratmann, s. v. setolen, 3rd ed., p. 262. 'His mase [mace] he toke in his honde tho, That was made of yoten bras,' i. e. brass formed in a mould; Rich. Coer de Lion, ed. Weber, 371. 'The lazor tok forth his coupe [cup] of gold; Bothe were yoten in o mold,' i. e. both the lazor's cup and another were cast in one mould; Amis and Amiloun, ed. Weber, 2023. 'Mawmez igoten of golde'=idols cast out of gold; Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 38, l. 13. C. Moreover, there was a derivative sb. gote, a channel; see Prompt. Parv., p. 205, and note; it occurs in the statutes 33 Hen. VIII, c. 33, 2 and 3 Edw. VI, c. 30; still in use in the forms gote, gowt, gut, got, in various parts of England; cf. Du. goot, a gutter; Low G. güte, gote, a can for pouring out, the beak of such a can; göte, a pouring out; see Bremen Wörterb. ii. 502. D. And note particularly that the whole word ingot has its exact parallel in the cognate (yet independent) G. einguss, 'infusion, instillation, pouring in, potion, drink (given to horses); as a technical term, jet, ingot;' Flügel's G. Dict. This word, by Grimm's law, and by the usual vowel-changes, corresponds to the E. word, letter for letter, throughout. (Much more might be added.)

INGRAFT, ENGRAFT, to graft upon. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) See Engraffed and Engraft in Schmidt, Shak. Lexicon. Spelt ingraft, Milton, P. L. xi. 35. Coined from In- (1) or In- (2) and Graft, q. v.

INGRAIN, to dye of a fast colour. (F.,—L.) M. E. engreynen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 15, xiv. 20; cf. P. Plowman's Crede, l. 230. See the excellent note by Mr. Marsh, in his Lect. on the E. Language, ed. Smith, p. 55, on the signification of to dye in grain, or of a fast colour. And see Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 255, Hamlet iii. 4. 90; Milton, Il Pens. 33, Comus, 750.—F. en graine, in grain; Cot. gives 'graine, the seed of herbs, also grain wherewith cloth is died in grain, scarlet die, scarlet in graine.' β. The F. en=Lat. in, in; the F. graine is from Low Lat. grana, the dye produced from cochineal, which appears also in Span. and Ital. grana, grain, seed, cochineal. γ. So named from the resemblance of the dried cochineal to fine grain or seed; see Grain. ¶ It is probable that grana is really a Spanish word; and even Granada is said to take its name from the number of trees on which the cochineal-insect is found.

INGRATITUDE, to commend to the favour of. (L.) In Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 93, l. 2. Coined from Lat. in, into; and gratia, favour; see Grace.

INGRATITUDE, want of gratitude. (F.,—L.) M. E. ingratitude, Ayenbite of Inwytt, ed. Morris, p. 18, l. 4.—F. ingratitude, 'ingratitude;' Cot.—Lat. ingratitude, unthankfulness.—Lat. ingrati-, crude form of ingratus, unpleasant, unthankful. See In- (3) and Grateful. Der. ingrate, Tam. Shrew, i. 2. 70, from F. ingrat=Lat. ingratus; whence ingrate-ful, Tw. Nt. v. 50.

INGREDIENT, that which enters into a compound. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. ii. 1. 33.—F. ingredient, 'an ingredient, a beginning or entrance; also, in physick, a simple put into a compound medicine;' Cot.—Lat. ingredient-, stem of pres. pt. of ingredi (pp. ingressus), to enter upon, begin.—Lat. in, in; and gradi, to walk; see Grade. And see Ingress.

INGRESS, entrance. (L.) In Holland, Pliny, b. xxi. c. 14 (R.)—Lat. ingressus, an entering.—Lat. ingredi, to enter upon; see above. INGUINAL, relating to the groin. (L.) A medical term; apparently modern.—Lat. inguinalis, belonging to the groin.—Lat. inguin-, stem of inguen, the groin. β. Perhaps 'a narrowing;' from the same root as anxious.

INGULF, the same as Engulf. (F.) Spelt ingulfe in Minsheu. INHABIT, to dwell in, occupy. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 391. M. E. enhabiten, Wyclif, Acts, xvii. 26.—F. inhabiter, 'to inhabit;' Cot.—Lat. inhabitare, to dwell in.—Lat. in, in; and habitare, to dwell; see Habit. Der. inhabit-able; inhabit-ant, Mach. i. 3. 41; inhabit-er, Rev. viii. 13 (A. V.).

INHALE, to draw in the breath. (L.) A late word. In Thomson, Spring, 834.—Lat. inhale, to breathe upon.—Lat. in, upon; and halare, to breathe. ¶ The E. sense assumes the Lat. verb to mean 'to draw in breath,' which is not the case. Inhale is used in contrast with Exhale, q. v. Der. inhal-at-ion.

INHARMONIOUS, not harmonious. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) A mod. word; in Cowper, The Task, i. 207. Coined from In- (3) and Harmonious; see Harmony. Der. inharmounious-ly, -ness.

INHERENT, existing inseparably, innate. (L.) 'A most inherent baseness;' Shak. Cor. iii. 2. 123.—Lat. inherent-, stem of pres. part. of inherere, to stick fast in.—Lat. in, in; and herere, to stick. See Hesitate. Der. inherent-ly; inherence, from F. inherence, an inherence; inherency. Very rarely, inhere is used as a verb.

INHERIT, to possess as an heir, come to property. (F.,—L.) 'Inheryte, or receyue in heritage, Heredito;' Prompt. Parv. p. 261. Coined by prefixing in (Lat. in) to O. F. heriter, 'to inherit;' Cot.—Lat. hereditare, to inherit.—Lat. heredi- or heredi-, crude form of heres or haeres, an heir. See Heritage, Heir. Der. inherit-able, inherit-or, inherit-ress; inherit-ance, K. John, i. 72.

INHIBIT, to check, restrain. (L.) In Levins; and in Shak. All's Well, i. 1. 157; Oth. i. 2. 79.—Lat. inhibitus, pp. of inhibere, to have in hand, check.—Lat. in, in; and habere, to have. See Habit. Der. inhibit-ion, Dunbar, Thirissill and Rois, st. 10, from F. inhibition, 'an inhibition;' Cot.; inhibit-or-y.

INHOSPITABLE, not hospitable. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Per. v. i. 254.—F. inhospitable, 'unhospitable;' Cot. See In- (3) and Hospitable. Der. inhospitabl-y, inhospitable-ness; so also in-hospitality.

INHUMAN, not human, barbarous, cruel. (F.,—L.) Also written inhumane in old authors; Shak. Merch. Ven. iv. 1. 4.—F. inhumain, 'inhuman, ungentle;' Cot.—Lat. inhumanus. See In- (3) and Human. Der. inhuman-ly, inhuman-i-ty.

INHUME, to inter, deposit in the earth. (F.,—L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627.—F. inhumer, 'to bury, inter;' Cot.—Lat. inhumare, to bury in the ground.—Lat. in, in; and humus, the ground. See Humble. Der. inhum-at-ion, Sir T. Browne, Urn Burial, c. 1.

INIMICAL, like an enemy, hostile. (L.) 'Inimical to the constitution;' Brand, Essay on Political Associations, 1796; Todd's Johnson.—Lat. inimicalis, extended from inimicus, unfriendly.—Lat. in-, not; and amicus, a friend; see In- (3) and Amity. Der. inimical-ly.

INIMITABLE, that cannot be imitated. (F.,—L.) 'For the native and inimitable eloquence;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 23.—F. inimitable, 'unimitable;' Cot.—Lat. inimitabilis.—Lat. in-, not; and imitabilis, that can be imitated; see In- (3) and Imitate. Der. inimitabl-y.

INIQUITY, wickedness, vice, crime. (F.,—L.) M. E. iniquitee, Chaucer, C. T. 4778, 12196.—F. iniquité, 'iniquity;' Cot.—Lat. iniquitatem, acc. of iniquitas, injustice, lit. unequalness.—Lat. in-, not; and aequitas, equality, uniformity, justice; see In- (3) and Equity. Der. iniquit-ous, iniquit-ous-ly.

INITIAL, commencing, pertaining to the beginning. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—Lat. initialis, incipient.—Lat. initium, a beginning.—Lat. initus, pp. of inire, to enter into.—Lat. in, into; and ire, to go, from ✓I, to go. Der. from same source, commence, q.v. And see Initiate.

INITIATE, to instruct in principles. (L.) The participial form occurs in Shak. Macb. iii. 4. 143; 'the initiate fear that wants hard use.'—Lat. initiatum, pp. of initiare, to begin.—Lat. initium, a beginning. See Initial. Der. initiat-ion, initiat-ive, initiat-ory.

INJECT, to throw into, cast on. (L.) 'Applied outward or injected inwardly;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxvi. c. 15. 'The said injection;' id. b. xx. c. 22 (Of Horehound).—Lat. iniec-tus, pp. of in-icere (in-icere), to throw into.—Lat. in, into; and icere, to throw; see Jet. Der. injection.

INJUDICIOUS, not judicious. (F.,—L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; and Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, dec. 3. cas. 9 (R.) From In- (3) and Judicious. Der. injudicious-ly, -ness; so also in-judicial.

INJUNCTION, an enjoining, order. (L.) 'After the special injunction of my lord and master;' Bale, Image, pt. i. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from Lat. in-iunctionem, acc. of in-iunctio, an injunction, order.—Lat. in-iunctus, pp. of in-iungere, to join into, enjoin. See Enjoin.

INJURE, to hurt, harm. (F.,—L.) (Perhaps really made from the sb. injury, which was in earlier use.) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 5. 9.—F. injurier, 'to wrong, injure, misuse;' Cot.—Lat. iniuriari, to do harm to.—Lat. iniuria, an injury.—Lat. iniurius, wrongful, unjust.—Lat. in-, neg. prefix; and iuri-, crude form of ius, law, right; see Just. Der. injury, M. E. inurie, Wyclif, Col. iii. 25, evidently formed rather from an O. F. *injurie (not recorded) than from O. F. injure, an injury (the usual form), both forms answering to Lat. iniuria, an injury; injury-ous, injury-ously, -ness. And see below.

INJUSTICE, want of justice. (F.,—L.) 'If he be seene to exercise injustice or wrong;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 4.—F. injustice, 'injustice;' Cot.—Lat. iniustitia. See In- (3) and Justice.

INK, a fluid for writing with, usually black. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) 'Inke, encaustum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 261. Older form enke, Wyclif, Jer. xxxvi. 18.—O. F. enque, ink (Littre); the mod. F. form being encre, with inserted r.—Lat. encaustum, the purple red ink used by the later Roman emperors; neut. of encaustus, burnt in, encaustic.—Gk. ἐγκαυστος, burnt in. See Encaustic.

¶ Littre remarks that the accent on the Lat. encaustum varied; from encaustum was derived the O. F. enque, whilst from encastum was derived the Ital. inchostro (ink). Der. ink-y; ink-holder, ink-stand; ink-horn, Ezek. ix. 2 (A.V.), but otherwise obsolete. [†]

α. In the Prompt. Parv. we find the curious entry: 'Lynyolf, or linniof, threde to sow wythe the schone or botys, lynolf, Indula, lincium.' Here the final f appears to be a corrupt addition, leaving linniol as another form of lynolf or linniol. β. But it is certain that linniol is the same word with O. F. lignol or ligniol (Roquefort) or ligneuil (Cotgrave), which also took the form lingell in English. 'Lyngell that souters sowe with, cheffgros, lignier;' Palsgrave. And since linniol also appears as linniol, we have good ground for supposing that lingell might appear as ingle or inkle, by an easy corruption.

γ. This shews that Mr. Wedgwood is probably right in deriving inkle from lingell by the loss of initial l, which might easily have been mistaken for the French definite article, and thus be dropped as being supposed to be unnecessary. There are similar cases in which an l has been prefixed owing to a similar mistake; I have met with landiron with the sense of andiron; see Andiron. For further examples of lingell, lingel, or lingle, see Halliwell and Jamieson.—O. F. ligneuil, 'shoomakers thread, or a tatching end,' Cot.; spelt lignel in the 13th cent. (Littre). Dimin. of F. ligne, thread (Littre).—Lat. linea, fem. of lineus, hempen, flaxen.—Lat. linum, flax. See Linen. [†]

INKLING, a hint, intimation. (Scand.) In Shak. Ham. VIII. ii. 1. 140; Cor. i. 1. 59. 'What cause hee hadde soo to thynke, harde it is to saye, whyther hee, being toward him, anye thyng knewe that hee suche thyng purposed, or otherwyse had anye inke-lyng thereof; for hee was not likelye to speake it of noughte;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 38 a. Inking is a verbal sb. formed from the M. E. verb inckle. 'To inckle the truthe;' Alisaunder, ed. Skeat, 616 (in Appendix to Will. of Paleme).

β. Inckle or inkle is a frequentative verb from a base ink-, to murmur, mutter. This word is now only preserved in the parallel form im-, appearing in Icel. ymta, Dan. ymte, to murmur, mutter, an iterative verb from ymja, to whine, which from ymr, a humming sound.

γ. And again, ymr is from a base um-, appearing in Icel. umla, to mutter, to mumble; cf. Swed. hum, a slight sound, whence the phrase få hum om, to get a hint of, get an inkling of.

δ. Finally, the Swed. hum, like E. hum, is of imitative origin; see Hum. Cf. O. Dan. ymmel, a murmur, ymle, to whisper, rumour (Molbeck's Dan. Dict. s.v. ymle), which is a parallel form with M. E. inckle.

¶ Observe that the base um- changes to ym- by the usual vowel-change in the Scand. languages, which becomes im- in E., also regularly. The formative suffix -k- together with the frequentative -l- gives in-k-le in place of im-k-le, whilst the equivalent suffix -t- gives Dan. ym-te, Norweg. ymta (Aasen).

INLAND, an accessible part of the country. (F.) Orig. a sb., signifying a place near some great town or centre, where superior civilisation is supposed to be found. The counties lying round London are still, in a similar spirit, called 'home' counties. Used in contrast to upland, which signified a remote country district where manners were rough. See Shak. Tw. Nt. iv. 1. 52; Hen. V. i. 2. 142; &c.—A. S. inland (a legal term), a domain; see Laws of King Edgar, i. 1, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 263; also p. 432, last line but one.—A. S. in, within; and land, land, country. Cf. Icel. inlendr, native. See In and Land. Der. inland, adj. As You Like It, ii. 7. 96; inland-er, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. iii. c. 11, l. 7.

INLAY, to lay within, ornament with inserted pieces. (E.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. v. 59; Cymb. v. 5. 352. From In and Lay. Der. inlay-er; inlaid (pp. of the verb).

INLET, a place of ingress; a small bay. (E.) The orig. sense is 'admission' or 'ingress'; hence, a place of ingress, esp. from the sea to the land. Spelt inlate: 'The king o blis will haf inlate'—the king of glory will have admission, must be admitted; Cursor Mundi, 18078.—A. S. in, in; and létan, to let. Cf. the phr. 'to let in.' See In and Let.

INLY, adj., inward; adv., inwardly. (E.) As adj. in Two Gent. ii. 7. 18; commonly an adv., Temp. v. 200. M. E. inly (chiefly as adv.), Chaucer, C. T. 6930.—A. S. inlic, adj. inward, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. iii. c. 15; whence inlice, adv. inwardly.—A. S. in, in; and lic, like; see In and Like.

INMATE, one who lodges in the same place with another, a lodger, co-inhabitant. (E.) In Minshew; and Milton, P. L. ix. 495, xii. 166. From In, prep. within; and Mate, a companion, q.v.

INMOST, INNERMOST; see under In.

INN, a large lodging-house, hotel, house of entertainment. (E.) M. E. in, inn; Ancren Riwle, p. 260, l. 6; dat. inne, P. Plowman, B. viii. 4.—A. S. in, inn, sb.; Grein, ii. 140.—A. S. in, inn, adv. within.—A. S. in, prep. in; see In. + Icel. inni, an inn; cf. inni, adv. indoors; inn, adv. indoors; from in, the older form of in, prep. in. Der. inn, verb (see Inning); inn-holder; inn-keeper, 1 Hen. IV. iv. 2. 51.

INNATE, in-born, native. (L.) In Minshew. Formerly spelt innated; see examples in Nares.—Lat. innatus, in-born; pp. of innasci, to be born in.—Lat. in, in; and nasci, to be born; see Native. Der. innate-ly, -ness.

INNAVIGABLE, impassable by ships. (F.,—L.) 'Th' innavigable flood;' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, vi. 161.—F. innavigable.—Lat. innavigabilis. From In- (3) and Navigable; see Navigate.

INNER, INNERMOST; see under In.

INNING, the securing of grain; a turn at cricket. (E.) As a cricket term, invariably used in the pl. innings, though only one side has an inning at a time. Merely a peculiar use of the verbal sb. formed from the verb to inn, i.e. to house or secure corn when reaped, also to lodge. Cf. 'All was inned at last into the king's barn;' Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII. ed. Lumby, p. 65, l. 6. The verb to inn is from the sb. Inn, q.v.

INNOCENT, harmless, not guilty. (F.,—L.) M. E. innocent, Chaucer, C. T. 5038, 5102. Innocence also occurs, id. 11905.—F. innocent, 'innocent;' Cot.—Lat. innocent-, stem of innocens, harmless.—Lat. in-, not; and nocens, harmful; pres. part. of nocere, to hurt; see In- (3) and Noxious. Der. innocent-ly, innocence; innocency, Gen. xx. 5 (A.V.). And see Innocuous.

INNOCUOUS, harmless. (L.) Sir T. Browne has innocuously, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 28, § last. Englished from Lat. innocuus, harmless; by change from -us to -ous, as in numerous instances.—Lat. in-, not; and nocuus, harmful, from nocere, to harm; see Innocent. Der. innocuous-ly, -ness. Doublet, innoxious.

INNOVATE, to introduce something new. (L.) In Levins Shak. has innovation, Hamlet, ii. 2. 347; innovator, Cor. iii. 1. 175.—Lat. innovatus, pp. of innovare, to renew.—Lat. in, in; and novare, to make new, from novus, new; see In- (2) and Novel. Der. innovat-ion, innovat-or.

INNOXIOUS, harmless. (L.) 'Benign and of innoxious qualities;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13, § 25.—Lat. innocuius, harmless. From In- (3) and Noxious. Der. innocuius-ly.

INNUENDO, INUENDO, an indirect hint. (L.) The spelling inuendo, though not uncommon, is incorrect. 'Innuendo is a law term, most used in declarations and other pleadings; and the office of this word is only to declare and ascertain the person or thing which was named uncertain before; as to say, he (inuendo, the plaintiff) is a thief; when as there was mention before of another person;' Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674.—Lat. inuendo, i.e. by intimation; gerund of innuere, to nod towards, intimate.—Lat. in, in, to-wards; and nuere, to nod. See In- (2) and Nutation.

INNUMERABLE, that cannot be counted. (F., -L.) M. E. innumerable, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 267, l. 17. -F. innumerable, 'innumerable'; Cot. -Lat. innumerabilis. -Lat. in-, not; and numeralis, that can be counted, from numerare, to number; see Number. Der. innumerable-ly.

INNUTRITIOUS, not nutritious. (L.) Innutrition, sb., is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; the adj. appears to be later. From In- (3) and Nutritious. Der. So also in-nutrition.

INOBSERVANT, not observant, heedless. (L.) Inobservance is used by Bacon (R.) -Lat. inobservant, stem of inobservans; from In- (3) and Observant; see Observe. Der. inobservance.

INOCULATE, to engraft, introduce into the human system. (L.) 'The Turkish inoculation for the small pox was introduced to this country under the name of ingrafting' (R.); he refers to Lady Mary W. Montague's Letters, let. 31. On the other, inoculate in old authors signifies to engraft; see Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xix. c. 8. sect. on 'grafting herbs'; and Hamlet, iii. 1. 119. -Lat. inoculatus, pp. of inoculare, to engraft, insert a graft. -Lat. in, in; and oculus, an eye, also a bud or burgeon of a plant; see Eye. Der. inoculat-ion.

INODOROUS, not odorous. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. -Lat. inodorus, inodorous. From In- (3) and Odorous; see Odour.

INOFFENSIVE, giving no offence. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. v. 345, viii. 164. From In- (3) and Offensive; see Offend. Der. inoffensive-ly, -ness.

INOFFICIAL, not official. (F., -L.) Apparently modern. From In- (3) and Official; see Office. Der. inofficial-ly.

INOPERATIVE, not operative. (F., -L.) In South's Sermons, vol. vi. ser. 4. (R.) From In- (3) and Operative.

INOOPORTUNE, not opportune, unfitting. (F., -L.) 'An inopportune education'; Bp. Taylor, Great Exemplar, pt. iii. ad s. 15. From In- (3) and Opportune. Der. inoportune-ly.

INORDINATE, unregulated, immoderate. (L.) Skelton has inordinat, Why Come Ye Nat to Court, 1228; and inordinatly, 701. -Lat. inordinatus, irregular. -Lat. in-, not; and ordinatus, pp. of ordinare, to set in order. -Lat. ordin-, stem of ordo, order; see Order. Der. inordinate-ly, -ness; inordinat-ion.

INORGANIC, not organic. (F., -L.) Formerly inorganical; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Organical or inorganical'; Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, p. 26 (R.) From In- (3) and Organic; see Organ. Der. inorganic-al-ly; inorgan-is-ed.

INQUEST, a judicial inquiry. (F., -L.) M. E. enquete, Will. of Shoreham, p. 94, l. 26. -O. F. enquete, 'an inquest'; Cot. -Lat. inquisita (sc. res), a thing enquired into; fem. of inquisitus, pp. of inquirere, to search into. See Inquire, Enquire. Doublet, inquiry.

INQUIETUDE, want of rest, disquiet. (F., -L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. -O. F. inquietude, 'disquiet'; Cot. -Lat. inquietudo, restlessness. -Lat. in-, not; and quietudo, rest, from quietus, quiet. See Quiet.

INQUIRE, ENQUIRE, to search into or after. (L.) The spelling inquire is Latin, but the word is really a modification of the older enquire, of F. origin. Spelt inquire, Spenser, F. Q. b. ii. introd. st. 4. -Lat. inquirere, pp. inquisitus, to search into. See Enquire. Der. inquir-er, inquir-ing, inquir-ing-ly; inquir-y, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 5. 24; also inquisit-ion, Temp. i. 2. 35, from F. inquisition = Lat. inquisitionem, acc. of inquisitio, a searching for, from pp. inquisit-us; inquisition-al; inquisit-or (Levins), from Lat. inquisitor, a searcher; inquisit-or-i-al, inquisit-or-i-al-ly; inquisit-ive, M. E. inquisitif, Gower, C. A. i. 226, iii. 289, an O. F. spelling of Lat. inquisitivus, searching into; inquisit-ive-ly, -ness. And see inquest.

INROAD, a raid into an enemy's country. (E.) 'Many hot inroads They make in Italy'; Ant. and Cleop. i. 4. 50. Compounded of in, prep., and road, the Southern E. equivalent of North E. raid, a riding, from A. S. rád, a riding. See Road, Raid, Ride. ¶ The change from A. S. d to later oa is the usual one.

INSANE, not sane, mad. (L.) In Macb. i. 3. 84. -Lat. insanus, not sane. See In- (3) and Sane. Der. insane-ly, insan-i-ty.

INSATIABLE, not satiable. (F., -L.) 'With their vengeance insatiable'; Lament of Mary Magdalen, st. 17. -F. insatiable, 'insatiate, unsatiable'; Cot. -Lat. insatiabilis. See In- (3) and Satiate. Der. insatiabil-y, insatiable-ness, insatiabili-ty.

INSCRIBE, to engrave as on a monument, engrave, imprint deeply. (L.) In Shak. Hen. VIII. iii. 2. 315. -Lat. inscribere, pp. inscriptus, to write upon. -Lat. in, upon; and scribere, to write. See Scribe. Der. inscrib-er; also inscription, Merch. Ven. ii. 7. 4, from F. inscription = Lat. inscriptionem, acc. of inscriptio, an inscription, from pp. inscriptus; inscript-ive.

INSCRUTABLE, that cannot be scrutinised. (F., -L.) 'God's inscrutable will'; Bames, Works, p. 278, col. 1. -F. inscrutable, 'inscrutable'; Cot. -Lat. inscrutabilis. -Lat. in-, not; and *scrutabilis (not found), formed from scrutari, to scrutinise. See Scrutiny. Der. inscrutabl-y, inscrutable-ness, inscrutabili-ty.

INSECT, a small animal, as described below. (F., -L.) 'Well may they all be called insecta, by reason of those cuts and divisions, which some have about the necke, others in the breast and belly, the which doe goe round and part the members of the bodie, hanging together only by a little pipe and fistulous conveyance'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 1. -F. insecte, 'an insect'; Cot. -Lat. insectum. 'Iure omnia insecta appellata ab incisuris, quæ nunc ceruicum loco, nunc pectorum atque alui, præcincta separant membra, tenui modo fistula coheræntia'; Pliny, b. xi. c. 1. § 1. -Lat. insectus, pp. of insecare, to cut into. -Lat. in, into; and secare, to cut. See Section. Der. insect-ile; insecti-vorous (from Lat. vorare, to devour).

INSENSATE, void of sense. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vi. 789; Samson, 1685. -Lat. insensatus, irrational. -Lat. in-, not; and satus, gifted with sense, from sensus, sense; see In- (3) and Sense.

INSENSIBLE, devoid of feeling. (F., -L.) In Levins; and Shak. Cor. iv. 5. 239. -F. insensible, 'insensible'; -Lat. insensibilis. From In- (3) and Sensible; see Sense. Der. insensibl-y, insensibili-ty. So also in-sentient.

INSEPARABLE, not separable. (F., -L.) In Shak. As You Like It, i. 3. 78. -F. inseparable, 'inseparable'; Cot. -Lat. inseparabilis. From In- (3) and Separable; see Separate. Der. inseparabl-y, inseparable-ness, inseparabili-ty.

INSERT, to join into, introduce into. (L.) 'I haue . . . inserted'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 1053 f. -Lat. insertus, pp. of inserere, to insert, introduce into. -Lat. in, into; and serere, to join, bind, connect; see In- (2) and Series. Der. insert-ion.

INSESSORIAL, having feet (as birds) formed for perching on trees. (L.) Scientific and modern. Formed from insessus, pp. of insidere, to sit upon. -Lat. in, upon; and sedere, to sit; see Sit.

ENSHRINE, the same as Enshrine. (E. and L.)

INSIDE, the inward side or part. (E.) Sir T. More, Works, p. 1256 f, has 'on the outsyde' opposed to 'on the insyde'. Formed from In and Side.

INSIDIOUS, ensnaring, treacherous. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -F. insidieux, 'deceitfull'; Cot. -Lat. insidiosus, cunning, deceitful. -Lat. insidia, sb. pl. (1) troops of men who lie in wait, (2) a plot, snare, cunning wiles. -Lat. insidere, to sit in, take up a position, lie in wait. -Lat. in-, in; and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit; see In- (2) and Sit. Der. insidious-ly, -ness.

INSIGHT, the power of seeing into. (E.) M. E. insight, insiht. 'Salomon, Which hadde of euery thing insight' = Solomon, who had insight into everything; Gower, C. A. ii. 80. Spelt insiht, Layamon, 30497. -O. Northumbrian insiht, used to translate Lat. argumentum in the phrase 'incipit argumentum secundum Johannem' in the Lindisfarne MS. -A. S. in, in; and sight, sight. See In and Sight. + Du. inzicht, insight, design. + G. einsicht, insight, intelligence.

INSIGNIA, signs or badges of office. (L.) Borrowed from Lat. insignia, pl. of insigne, a distinctive mark, which was orig. the neut. of the adj. insignis, remarkable. See Ensign.

INSIGNIFICANT, poor, mean, vile. (L.) 'Little insignificant monk'; Milton, A Defence of the People of England (R.) From In- (3) and Significant; see Sign. Der. insignificant-ly, insignificance, insignificanc-y. So also in-significative.

INSINCERE, not sincere. (F., -L.) 'But ah! how insincere are all our joys'; Dryden, Annus Mirab. st. 209. From In- (3) and Sincere. Der. insincere-ly, insincer-i-ty.

INSINUATE, to introduce artfully, hint. (L.) In Levins; and in Shak. Rich. II. iv. 165. -Lat. insinuatus, pp. of insinuare, to introduce by winding or bending. -Lat. in, in; and sinuare, to wind about, from sinus, a bend. See Sinuous. Der. insinuat-ing, insinuat-ing-ly; insinuat-ion, K. John, v. 1. 68, from F. insinuation, 'an insinuation'; Cot.; insinuat-or, insinuat-ive.

INSIPID, tasteless. (F., -L.) 'His salt, if I may dare to say so, [is] almost insipid'; spoken of Horace; Dryden, Discourse on Satire; Poems, ed. 1856, p. 377, l. 7. -F. insipide, 'unsavory, smackless'; Cot. -Lat. insipidus, tasteless. -Lat. in-, not; and apidus, well-tasting, savoury. See Savour. Der. insipid-ly, insipid-i-ty.

INSIST, to dwell upon in discourse. (F., -L.) In Shak. Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 245. -F. insister, 'to insist on'; Cot. -Lat. insistere, to set foot on, persist. -Lat. in, upon; and sistere, to set, causal verb formed from stare, cognate with E. Stand.

INSNARE, the same as Ensnare. (E.)

INSOBRIETY, intemperance. (F., -L.) A late word; in Todd's Johnson. From In- (3) and Sobriety; see Sober.

INSOLENT, contemptuous, rude. (F., -L.) M. E. insolent, Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Superbia. -F. insolent, 'insolent, mala- pert, saucy'; Cot. -Lat. insolent, stem of insolens, not customary.

unusual, haughty, insolent.—Lat. in-, not; and solens, pres. part. of solere, to be accustomed, to be wont (root unknown). Der. insolent-ly; insolence, Court of Love, l. 936; insolency, in the Bible Wordbook.

INSOLIDITY, want of solidity. (F.,—L.) Used in 1660; see quotation in Todd. From In- (3) and Solidity; see Solid.

INSOLUBLE, not soluble, that cannot be solved. (F.,—L.) Insolubles, in the sense of 'insoluble problems,' occurs in Sir T. More, Works, p. 355 b.—F. insoluble, 'insoluble'; Cot.—Lat. insolubilis. See In- (3) and Soluble. Der. insolub-ly, insoluble-ness, insolubility. And see below.

INSOLVENT, unable to pay debts. (L.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. 'If his father was insolvent by his crime;' Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 2. Formed from Lat. in-, not; and solvent-, stem of solvens, pres. part. of solvere, to solve, to pay; see Solve. Der. insolvency (Kersey).

INSOMUCH, to such a degree. (E.) 'Insomuch I say I know you are;' As You Like It, v. 2. 60. From In, So, and Much; see Inasmuch.

INSPECT, to look into, examine. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. [But the sb. inspection is in much earlier use, and occurs in Gower, C. A. iii. 46, 99.]—Lat. inspectare, to observe; frequent. of inspicere, to look into.—Lat. in, in; and specere, to spy; see Spy. Der. inspect-or, inspect-or-ship; also inspect-ion—F. inspection, 'an inspection' (Cot.), from Lat. inspectionem, acc. of inspectio, a looking into.

INSPIRE, to breathe into, infuse, influence. (F.,—L.) M. E. enspiren, Chaucer, C. T. 6, Gower, C. A. iii. 226.—O. F. enspirer, usually inspirer, the latter being the form in Cotgrave.—Lat. inspirare, to breathe into, inspire.—Lat. in, into; and spirare, to breathe; see Spirit. Der. inspir-able, inspir-at-ion, inspir-at-or-y, inspir-er; also in-spirit (Pope, To Mrs. M. B. l. 13), from in and spirit.

INSPISSATE, to make thick, as fluids. (L.) 'The sugar doth inspissate the spirits of the wine;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 726.—Lat. inspissatus, pp. of inspissare, to thicken.—Lat. in, into, here used as intensive prefix; and spissare, to thicken.—Lat. spissus, dense. β. Lat. spissus stands for spitius, a pp. form, meaning 'joined together' or 'compressed.' Cf. Lith. spitui, I beset; Fick, i. 834.—European base SPI, to bind together (Fick).

INSTABILITY, want of stability. (F.,—L.) 'For some, lamenting the instabilitie of the Englishe people;' Hall's Chron. Hen. IV, an. 1.—F. instabilité, 'instability'; Cot.—Lat. instabilitatem, acc. of instabilitas.—Lat. instabilis, unstable. See In- (3) and Stable, adj.

INSTALL, INSTAL, to place in a stall, seat, or office. (F.,—Low Lat.,—O. H. G.) Though the word might easily have been coined from Eng. elements, yet, as a fact, it was borrowed. 'To be installed or enthronised at Yorke;' Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII, an. 22.—F. installer, 'to install, settle, establish, place surely in.'—Low Lat. installare, to install.—Lat. in, in; and Low Lat. stallum, a stall, seat, place to sit in; Ducange. β. The Low Lat. stallum is from O. H. G. stal, G. stall, a stall, place, cognate with E. stall. See Stall. Der. install-at-ion, from O. F. installation (Cot.); installment, formerly used in the sense of installation, Shak. Rich. III, iii. 1. 163; a coined word.

INSTANCE, solicitation, occasion, example. (F.,—L.) 'At his instance;' Chaucer, C. T. 9485.—F. instance, 'instance, earnest-ness, urgency, importunity'; Cot.—Lat. instantia, a being near, urgency.—Lat. instanti-, crude form of instans, present, urgent; pres. part. of instare, to be at hand, press, urge.—Lat. in, upon, near; and stare, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q. v. Der. instant, adj. urgent, Luke, xxiii. 23, from Lat. instant-, stem of instans; instant-ly—urgently, Luke, vii. 4; also instant, sb.—moment, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 5. 11, from F. instant, 'an instant, moment' (Cot.), from the same Lat. instant-. Also instant-ane-ous, Thomson, To the Memory of Lord Talbot, l. 27, coined as if from a Lat. *instant-aneus, made by analogy with Lat. contempor-aneus, whence E. contempor-aneous; instant-ane-ous-ly.

INSTATE, to put in possession. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Meas. v. 249. Coined from in-, equivalent to F. en-, prefix; and state. See In- (2) and State.

INSTEAD, in the place. (E.) M. E. in stede, Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 227. We also find on stede nearly in the same sense. 'And he toc him on sunes stede'—and he took him in place of a son, received him as a son; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2637.—A. S. on stede, lit. in the place. 'On þæra nægla stede'—in the place of the nails; John, xx. 25. See In and Stead.

INSTEP, the upper part of the foot, where it rises to the front of the leg. (E.) So defined in R. In The Spectator, no. 48. A rare word; formerly spelt instup or instop. 'Condepied, the instup;' Cot. Minshew, ed. 1627, refers, under Instep, to Instop; and also gives: 'the instop of the foot,' as well as 'Instuppe, vide Instoppe.' β. It is clear that instep is a corruption of an older instop or instup; and it is probable that the etymology is from in and stoop, i. e. the 'in-bend' of the foot; and not from in and step, which makes no sense; see Stoop.

γ. It is an E. word, though unfortunately not found, as yet, in old writers. The earliest quotation (in R.) is from Drayton, The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 2. [†]

INSTIGATE, to urge on, incite. (L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 5. 77; and in Levins.—Lat. instigatus, pp. of instigare, to goad on, incite.—Lat. in, in, on; and ✓ STIG, to stick, prick, sting, whence Lat. stingere, to prick or scratch out, to quench. See Sting, Stigma. Der. instigat-ion, Wint. Ta. ii. 1. 163, from F. instigation, 'an instigation'; Cot.; instigat-or; and see instinct.

INSTIL, to infuse drop by drop. (F.,—L.) 'A faythfull preacher . . . doth instill it into us;' Fryth, Works, p. 166, col. 2.—F. instiller, 'to drop, trill, drizzle'; Cot.—Lat. instillare, to pour in by drops.—Lat. in, in; and stilla, a drop. See Still (2). Der. instill-at-ion, from F. instillation, 'an instillation'; Cot.

INSTINCT, a natural impulse or instigation, esp. that by which animals are guided aright. (F.,—L.; or L.) 'A secrete inward instincte of nature;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 521 c.—F. instinct, 'an instinct or inclination'; Cot. [Or perhaps directly from Latin.]—Lat. instinctus, an instigation, impulse.—Lat. instinctus, pp. of instingere, to goad on, instigate.—Lat. in, on; and ✓ STIG, to stick, prick; see Instigate. Der. instinct-ive, instinct-ive-ly, Temp. i. 2. 148; also instinct, adj.—instigated, moved, Pope, tr. of Iliad, b. xviii. l. 442, from Lat. pp. instinctus.

INSTITUTE, to establish, set up, erect, appoint. (L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 162; Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 8; and in Levins.—Lat. institutus, pp. of instituere, to set, plant, establish.—Lat. in, in (with little force); and statuere, to place, from status, a position. See Statute, State. Der. institute, sb.; institut-ion, Meas. for Meas. i. 1. 11, from F. institution, 'an institution'; Cot.; institut-ion-al, institut-ion-ar-y, institut-ive.

INSTRUCT, to inform, teach, order. (L.) Properly a pp., as in 'to be taught and instruct'; Tyndal, Works, p. 435, col. 1.—Lat. instructus, pp. of instruere, to build into, instruct.—Lat. in, into; and struere, to build; see Structure. Der. instruct-ible; instruct-ion, L. L. L. iv. 2. 81, from F. instruction, 'an instruction'; Cot.; instruct-ive, instruct-ive-ly, -ness; instruct-or, -ress; and see instrument.

INSTRUMENT, a tool, machine producing music, contract in writing, a means. (F.,—L.) M. E. instrument—a musical instrument, Chaucer, Assembly of Foules, 197.—F. instrument, 'an instrument, implement, engine,' &c.; Cot.—Lat. instrumentum, formed with suffix -mentum and prefix in-, from struere, to build; see Instruct. Der. instrument-al, instrument-al-ly, instrument-al-ity, instrument-al-ist, instrument-al-ion.

INSUBJECTION, want of subjection. (F.,—L.) A late word; added to Johnson by Todd. From In- (3) and Subjection.

INSUBORDINATE, not subordinate. (L.) Quite modern. From In- (3) and Subordinate. Der. insubordinat-ion.

INSUFFERABLE, intolerable. (F.,—L.) 'Perceiving still her wrongs insufferable were;' Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 6. Coined with prefix in- (=not) and suffix -able from Suffer, q. v. Der. insufferabl-ly, Milton, P. L. ix. 1084.

INSUFFICIENT, not sufficient. (L.) Shak. has insufficiency, Wint. Ta. i. 1. 16; also insufficiency, Mid. Nt. Dr. ii. 2. 128.—Lat. insufficient, stem of insufficiens. From In- (3) and Sufficient; see Suffice. Der. insufficient-ly, insufficiency, insufficienc-y.

INSULAR, belonging to an island. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. insulaire.—Lat. insularis, insular.—Lat. insula, an island. β. Supposed to be so called because situate in salo, 'in the main sea'; from in, in, and salō, abl. of salum, the main sea. γ. The Lat. salum is cognate with Gk. σάλας, the 'swell' or surge of the sea, hence, open sea; and σάλας probably stands for σφαλος, cognate with E. swell; see Swell. Thus insula—in the swell of the sea. Der. insular-ly, insular-i-ty; also insul-ate, from Lat. insulatus, made like an island; insul-at-or, insul-at-ion. And see Isle.

INSULT, to treat with indignity, affront. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Rich. II, iv. 254.—F. insulter, 'to insult'; Cot.—Lat. insultare, to leap upon or against, scoff at, insult; frequent. form of insilire, to leap into, spring upon.—Lat. in, upon; and salire, to leap. See Salient. Der. insult, sb.—O. F. insult, 'an affront'; Cot.; insult-er, insult-ment, Cymb. iii. 5. 145.

INSUPERABLE, insurmountable. (F.,—L.) In Cotgrave; and Milton, P. L. iv. 138.—F. insuperable, 'insuperable'; Cot.—Lat. insuperabilis, insurmountable.—Lat. in-, not; and superare, to surmount, from super, above. See Super-. Der. insuperabl-y, insuperabili-ty.

INSUPPORTABLE, intolerable. (F.,—L.) Accented as insupportable, Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 11.—F. insupportable, 'unsupportable'; Cot.—F. in-—Lat. in-, not; and F. supporter, from supporter, to support; see Support. Der. insupportabl-y, insupportable-ness.

INSUPPRESSIBLE, that cannot be suppressed. (L.) A coined word; used by Young, On Orig. Composition (R.) Shak. has insuppressive, Jul. Cæs. ii. i. 134. From In- (3) and Suppress.

INSURE, to make sure, secure. (F., -L.) M. E. ensuren, Chaucer, C. T. 12071 (Petworth MS.; most MSS. have assuren). Used instead of O. F. asseurer (Cot.), aseurer (Burguy), by the substitution of the prefix en (=Lat. in) for the prefix a (=Lat. ad). The form -seurer is from O. F. seur, sure. See In- (2) and Sure; also Assure. Der. insur-able, insur-er, insur-ance; insur-anc-er, Dryden, Threnodia Augustalis, 186.

INSURGENT, rebellious. (L.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. = Lat. insurgent-, stem of pres. part. of insurgere, to rise up. = Lat. in, upon; and surgere, to rise; see Surge. Der. insurgency; and see insurrection.

INSURMOUNTABLE, not surmountable. (F., -L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. = F. insurmountable, 'unsurmountable'; Cot. = F. in = Lat. in, not; and surmountable, from surmonter, to surmount; see Surmount. Der. insurmountably.

INSURRECTION, rebellion. (L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, v. i. 79. Formed by analogy with F. words in -tion from Lat. insurrectio, an insurrection. = Lat. insurrectus, pp. of insurgere, to rise up, rebel; see Insurgent. Der. insurrection-al, insurrection-ary, insurrection-ist.

INTACT, untouched. (L.) Quite modern; neither in Rich. nor Todd. = Lat. intactus, untouched. = Lat. in, not; and tactus, pp. of tangere, to touch; see Tangent, Tact.

INTANGIBLE, that cannot be touched. (L.) 'Intactible or Intangible'; Kersey, ed. 1715. From In- (3) and Tangible.

INTAGLIO, an engraving, esp. a gem in which the design is hollowed out. (Ital., -L.) 'We meet with the figures which Juvenal describes on antique intaglios and medals'; Addison on Italy (Todd). = Ital. intaglio, an engraving, sculpture, carving. = Ital. intagliare, to cut into, engrave. = Ital. in = Lat. in, in; and tagliare, to cut. = Low Lat. talcare, to cut, esp. to cut twigs. = Lat. talea, a rod, stick, bar, twig. See Tally. Der. intagli-at-ed.

INTEGER, that which is whole or entire; a whole number. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715, as an arithmetical term. = Lat. integer, adj. whole, entire; lit. untouched, unharmed. = Lat. in, not; and tag-, base of tangere, to touch; see Tangent. Der. integr-al, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, formed from integr-um, neut. of integer used as sb.; integr-al-ly, integr-ate, integr-at-ion, integr-ant; also integr-ity, Sir T. More, Works, p. 1337 h, from F. intégrité (Cot.) = Lat. integritatem, acc. of integritas, soundness, blamelessness. Doublet, entire, q. v.

INTEGUMENT, a covering, skin. (L.) In Chapman, tr. of Homer, Il. xxii. l. 7 from end. = Lat. integumentum, a covering. = Lat. in, upon; and tegere, to cover. See Tegument. Der. integument-ary.

INTELLECT, the thinking principle, understanding. (F., -L.) M. E. intellect, Chaucer, C. T. 2805. = O. F. intellect, 'the intellect'; Cot. = Lat. intellectus, perception, discernment. = Lat. intellectus, pp. of intelligere, to discern; see Intelligence. Der. intellect-u-al, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 23; intellect-u-al-ly; intellection, intellect-ive.

A.* iii. 85. = F. intelligence; Cot. = Lat. intelligentia, perception. = Lat. intelligenti-, crude form of intelligens, pres. part. of intelligere, to understand, lit. 'to choose between.' = Lat. intel-, put for inter, between, before l following; and legere, to choose; see Legend. Der. intelligenc-er, Rich. III, iv. 4. 71; intelligenc-ing, Wint. Ta. ii. 3. 68; also intelligent, Wint. Ta. i. 2. 378, from Lat. intelligens, stem of intelligens; intelligent-ly, intelligent-i-al; also intelligible, Wyclif, Wisdom, vii. 23, from F. intelligible, 'intelligible' (Cot.), from Lat. intelligibilis, perceptible to the senses, Wisdom, vii. 23 (Vulgate); intelligibl-y, intelligibili-ty.

INTEMPERANCE, want of temperance, excess. (F., -L.) Spelt intemperance, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 36. = F. intemperance, 'intemperance'; Cot. = Lat. intemperantia, want of mildness or clemency, intemperance, excess. See In- (3) and Temperance. Der. intemperate, Meas. v. 98, and in Levins, from Lat. intemperatus, untempered; intemperate-ly, intemperate-ness.

INTEND, to fix the mind upon, purpose. (F., -L.) M. E. entenden, Gower, C. A. i. 12; later spelt intend, to bring it nearer Latin. = F. entendre, 'to understand, conceive, apprehend,' Cot.; whence entendre a, 'to study, mind, heed,' id. = Lat. intendere, to stretch out, extend, stretch to, bend, direct, apply the mind. = Lat. in, towards; and tendere, to stretch; see Tend. Der. intend-ant, Kersey, ed. 1715, from O. F. intendant, one of 'the four overseers or controllers of the exchequer, at first brought in by king Francis the First' (Cot.), formed as a pres. part. from Lat. pres. part. intendens; intend-anc-y; intend-ed; intend-ment, As You Like It, i. i. 140; also intense, q. v.; intent, q. v.

INTENSE, highly increased, esp. in tension, severe. (L.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 389. = Lat. intensus, stretched out, pp. of intendere, to stretch out; see Intend. Der. intense-ly, intense-ness, intens-ity; intens-ify (from F. suffix -fier = Lat. -ficare, for facere, to make); intens-ive, intens-ive-ly, intens-ive-ness.

INTENT, design, intention. (F., -L.) M. E. entente, Chaucer, C. T. 960; Ancren Riwle, p. 252, note a. Later, intent, Gower, C. A. ii. 262. = F. entente, 'intention, purpose, meaning,' Cot. Entente is a participial sb. formed from the vb. entendre; see Intend. Der. The adj. intent (Milton, P. L. ix. 786) is directly from Lat. intensus, pp. of intendere; intent-ly, intent-ness. Also intent-ion, Wint. Ta. i. 2. 138, (spelt intencyone in Prompt. Parv.), from F. intention, 'an intention, intent,' from Lat. intentionem, acc. of intentio, endeavour, effort, design; intent-ion-al, intent-ion-al-ly, intention-ed.

INTER, to bury. (F., -L.) M. E. enterren. 'And with gret dule entyrit was he;' Barbour's Bruce, xix. 224. Later, inter, K. John, v. 7. 99. = F. enterrer, 'to interre, bury'; Cot. = Low Lat. interrare, to put into the ground, bury. = Lat. in, in; and terra, the earth; see Terrace. Der. inter-ment = M. E. enterment, Gower, C. A. ii. 319, from F. enterrement, 'an interring'; Cot.

INTER-, prefix, among, amongst, between. (L.) Lat. inter-, prefix; from inter, prep. between, among. A comparative form, answering to Skt. antar, within, and E. under, and closely connected with Lat. interus, interior. See Interior, Under. In a few cases, the final r becomes l before l following, as in intel-lect, intel-ligence. Most words with this prefix are purely Latin, but a few, as inter-weave, are hybrid. In some cases, inter- stands for the F. entre.

INTERACTION, mutual action. (L.; and F., -L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Coined from Inter- and Action.

INTERCALATE, to insert between, said of a day in a calendar. (L.) In Ralegh, Hist. of World, b. ii. c. 3. s. 6. Intercalation is explained in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. intercalatus, pp. of intercalare, to proclaim that something has been inserted. = Lat. inter, between, among; and calare, to proclaim; see Calends. Der. intercalat-ion; also intercalar = Lat. intercalaris; intercalar-y = Lat. intercalarius.

INTERCEDE, to go between, mediate, plead for one. (F., -L.) Milton has intercede, P. L. xi. 21; intercession, P. L. x. 228; intercessour, P. L. iii. 219. = F. interceder; 'interceder pour, to intercede for'; Cot. = Lat. intercedere, lit. to go between. = Lat. inter, between; and cedere, to go; see Inter- and Cede. Der. interced-ent, interced-ent-ly; also (from pp. intercessus) intercession-ion = F. intercession, 'intercession,' Cot.; intercession-al; intercess-or, formerly intercessour, from F. intercesseur, 'an intercessor' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. intercessorem; hence intercessor-i-al, intercessor-y.

INTERCEPT, to catch by the way, cut off communication. (F., -L.) Orig. a pp.; thus Chaucer has intercept = intercepted; On the Astrolabe, pt. ii. § 29, l. 34 (ed. Skeat). 'To intercept, interciper'; Levins (1570). = F. intercepter, 'to intercept, forestall'; Cot. = Lat. interceptus, pp. of intercipere, lit. to catch between. = Lat. inter, between; and capere, to catch, seize. See Inter- and Capable. Der. intercept-er; intercept-ion, Hen. V, ii. 2. 7.

INTERCESSION, INTERCESSOR; see Intercede.

INTERCHANGE, to change between, exchange. (F., -L.) Formerly entrenchange. 'Full many strokes . . . were entrenchauged twixt them two'; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 3. 17. = F. entrechanger; 's'entrenchanger, to interchange'; Cot. = F. entre = Lat. inter, between; and changer, to change. See Inter- and Change. Der. interchange-able; interchange-abl-y, Rich. II, i. 1. 146; interchange-ment, Tw. Nt. v. 162.

INTERCOMMUNICATE, to communicate mutually. (L.) Modern; not in Todd. Coined from Inter- and Communi-cate; see Commune. Der. intercommunicat-ion; so also inter-commun-ion.

INTERCOSTAL, lying between the ribs. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = F. intercostal, 'between the ribs'; Cot. Coined from Lat. inter, between; and costa, a rib. See Inter- and Costal.

INTERCOURSE, commerce, connection by dealings, communication. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 1031, vii. 751. Spelt entrecourse in Minshew, ed. 1627. Modified from F. entrecours, intercourse; omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th century in the sense of commerce; see Littré. = Low Lat. intercursum, commerce; Lat. intercursum, interposition. See Inter- and Course. Der. So also inter-current, inter-currence.

INTERDICT, a prohibitory decree. (L.) A law term, from Law Latin. [The F. form entredit is in early use; Rob. of Glouc. p. 495, l. 6 (and note); entredite, Gower, C. A. i. 259. Hence the M. E. verb entrediten, Rob. of Glouc., p. 495, l. 17.] 'An interdicte, that no man shal rede, ne syngen, ne crystene children, ne burye the deede, ne receyue sacramente'; Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed.

Arber, p. 70, last line. — Law Lat. interdictum, a kind of excommunication, Ducange; Lat. interdictum, a decree of a judge. — Lat. interdictus, pp. of interdicere, to pronounce judgment between two parties, to decree. — Lat. inter, between; and dicere, to speak, utter. See Inter- and Diction. Der. interdict, vb.; interdict-ion, Macb. iv. 3. 106; interdict-ive, interdict-ory.

INTEREST (1), profit, advantage, premium for use of money. (F., — L.) Differently formed from the word below. 'My well-won thrift, which he calls interest;' Merch. Ven. i. 3. 52. — O. F. interest (mod. F. intérêt), 'an interest in, a right or title to a thing; also interest, or use for money;' Cot. — Lat. interest, it is profitable, it concerns; 3 p. s. pres. indic. of interesse, to concern, lit. to be between. — Lat. inter, between; and esse, to be. See Inter- and Essence. ¶ Littre remarks that the F. has considerably modified the use of the Lat. original; see his Dict. for the full history of the word. He also bids us observe that the Span. interes, Port. interesse, Ital. interesse, interest, are all taken from the infinitive mood of the Lat. verb, not from the 3 p. s. pres., as in French; cf. Low Lat. interesse, interest. Besides this, the use of this sb. helped to modify the verb below; q. v. Spenser has the Ital. form interesse, F. Q. vii. 6. 33.

INTEREST (2), to engage the attention, awaken concern in, excite in behalf of another. (F., — L.) A very curious word; formed (by partial confusion with the word above) from the pp. interess'd of the obsolete verb interess. The very same confusion occurs in the formation of Disinterested, q. v. 'The wars so long continued between The emperor Charles and Francis, the French king, Have interess'd, in either's cause, the most Of the Italian princes;' Massinger, Duke of Milan, i. 1. 'Tib. By the Capitol, And all our gods, but that the dear republic, Our sacred laws and just authority Are interess'd therein, I should be silent;' Ben Jonson, Sejanus, iii. 1. 'To interess themselves for Rome, against Carthage;' Dryden, On Poetry and Painting (R.) 'To interess or interest, to concern, to engage;' Kersey, ed. 1715. — O. F. interessé, 'interested, or touched in;' Cot. Cf. Ital. interessare (pp. interessato); Span. interessar (pp. interesado), to interest. — Lat. interesse, to concern; see Interest (1). Der. interest-ed (really a reduplicated pp.), a late word, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; interest-ing, interest-ing-ly; also dis-interest-ed, q. v.

INTERFERE, to interpose, intermeddle. (F., — L.) A word known in the 15th cent., but not much used. Chiefly restricted to the peculiar sense of hitting one leg against another; said of a horse. 'Entyrferyn, intermisceo;' Prompt. Parv. 'To interfeere, to hacke one foot or legge against the other, as a horse doth;' Minshew, ed. 1627. 'To enterfeir, to rub or dash one heel against the other, to exchange some blows;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — O. F. entreferir, 'to interchange some blows; to strike or hit, at once, one another; to interfeere, as an horse;' Cot. — F. entre, between; and ferir, to strike. — Lat. inter, between; and ferire, to strike. See Inter- and Ferule. Der. interfer-er, interfer-ence.

INTERFUSE, to pour between. (L.) Milton has interfus'd, P. L. vii. 89. — Lat. interfusius, pp. of interfundere, to pour between. See Inter- and Fuse (1). Der. interfus-ion.

INTERIM, an interval. (L.) At least 14 times in Shak.; see Jul. Caesar, ii. 1. 64; &c. — Lat. interim, adv. in the mean while. — Lat. inter, between; and im, old acc. of is, demonst. pronoun, from pronom. base I.

INTERIOR, internal. (L.) In Shak. Rich. III. i. 3. 65. — Lat. interior, compar. of interus, which is itself a comparative form. Thus interior (like inferior) is a double comparative. The Lat. interus and intimus correspond to Skt. antara (interior) and antima, Vedic antama (last), which are, respectively, compar. and superl. forms. The positive form appears in Lat. and E. in. See In. Der. interior, sb., Merch. Ven. ii. q. 28; interior-ly; and see internal.

INTERJACENT, lying between. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. Interjacency is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. interiacent, stem of pres. part. of interiacere, to lie between. — Lat. inter, between; and iacere, to lie. See Inter- and Gist. Der. interiaceno-y.

INTERJECTION, a word thrown in to express emotion. (F., — L.) In Shak. Much Ado, iv. 1. 22. — F. interjection, 'an interjection;' Cot. — Lat. interjectionem, acc. of interiectio, a throwing between, insertion, interjection. — Lat. interiectus, pp. of interiacere, to cast between. — Lat. inter, between; and iacere, to cast; see Inter- and Jet. Der. interjection-al; also interject, verb (rare).

INTERLACE, to lace together. (F., — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 3. 23; and in Sir T. More, Works, p. 739 b. Spelt enterlace in Minshew, ed. 1627. Modified from O. F. entrelasser, 'to interlace;' Cot. — F. entre, between; and lasser, lacer, to lace; Cot. See Inter- and Lace. Der. interlace-ment.

INTERLARD, to place lard amongst. (F., — L.) 'Whose grain doth rise in flakes, with fatness interlarded;' Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 26, l. 225. Modified from F. entrelarder, 'to interlard, mingle different things together;' Cot. See Inter- and Lard.

INTERLEAVE, to insert blank leaves in a book between the others. (Hybrid; L. and E.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Coined from Inter- and Leave, the latter being a coined verb from the sb. leaf (pl. leaves).

INTERLINE, to write between the lines. (L.) 'I interline, I blot, correct, I note;' Drayton, Matilda to K. John (R.); and in Cotgrave, to translate F. entreligner. — Low Lat. interlineare, to write between lines for the purpose of making corrections; used A. D. 1278; Ducange. — Lat. inter, between; and linea, a line. See Inter- and Line. Der. interline-ar, from Low Lat. interlinearis; whence interline-ar-y, Milton, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 41, l. 2; interline-at-ion.

INTERLINK, to connect by uniting links. (Hybrid; L. and Scand.) 'With such infinite combinations interlinked;' Daniel, Defence of Rhyme (R.) Coined from Lat. inter and link. See Inter- and Link.

INTERLOCUTION, a conference, speaking between. (F., — L.) 'A good speech of interlocution;' Bacon, Essay 32, Of Discourse. — F. interlocution, 'an interlocution, interposition;' Cot. — Lat. interlocutionem, acc. of interlocutio. — Lat. inter, between; and locutus, pp. of loqui, to speak; see Inter- and Loquacious. Der. So also interlocut-or, Bp. Taylor, Great Exemplar, pt. iii. s. 11 (R.), from Lat. inter and locutor, a speaker; interlocut-ory.

INTERLOPER, an intruder. (Hybrid; L. and Du.) 'Interlopers in trade;' Minshew's Dict., ed. 1627. 'Interlopers, leapers or runners between; it is usually applied to those merchants that intercept the trade or traffick of a company, and are not legally authorised;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. inter, between; and Du. looper, a runner, from loopen, to run, cognate with E. leap. See Inter- and Leap; and see Elope. Der. interlope, vb., coined from the sb.

INTERLUDE, a short piece played between the acts of a play. (L.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 2. 6; and in G. Douglas, ed. Small, v. i. p. 45, l. 18. Coined from Lat. inter, between; and ludus, a play, or ludere, to play; see Inter- and Ludicrous. Der. interlud-er.

INTERLUNAR, between the moons. (L.) 'Hid in her vacant interlunar cave;' Milton, Samson Agon., 89. Applied to the time when the moon, about to change, is invisible. Coined from Lat. inter, between; and luna, moon. See Inter- and Lunar.

INTERMARRY, to marry amongst. (Hybrid; L. and F.) See examples in R. from Bp. Hall and Swift. Coined from Lat. inter, amongst; and marry, of F. origin; see Inter- and Marry. Der. intermarri-age.

INTERMEDDLE, to mingle, meddle, mix with. (F., — L.) M. E. entremedlen; 'Was entremedled ther emong;' Rom. of the Rose, 906. — O. F. entremedler, a variant of entremesler, 'to intermingle, interlace, intermix;' Cot. [For this variation, see mesler, medler, in Burguy.] — O. F. entre, from Lat. inter, among; and O. F. medler, to meddle. See Inter- and Meddle. Der. intermeddl-er.

INTERMEDIATE, intervening. (F., — L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. — F. intermediat, 'that is between two;' Cot. — Lat. inter, between; and mediatus, pp. of mediare, to halve. See Inter- and Mediate. Der. intermediate-ly.

INTERMINABLE, endless. (L.) In Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 6, l. 4987. — Lat. interminabilis, endless. — Lat. in-, not; and terminare, to terminate, from terminus, an end. See In- (3) and Term. Der. interminab-ly, interminable-ness.

INTERMINGLE, to mingle together. (Hybrid; L. and E.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 25; earlier, in Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. b. iv (R.) From Lat. inter, amongst; and mingre. See Inter- and Mingle.

INTERMIT, to interrupt, cease for a time. (L.) In Shak. Jul. Cas. i. 1. 59. — Lat. intermittere, to send apart, interrupt. — Lat. inter, between; and mittere, to send; see Inter- and Missile. Der. intermitt-ent, as in 'an intermittent ague,' Holland, tr. of Ammianus, p. 420, from the pres. part.; intermitt-ing-ly; also intermiss-ion, Macb. iv. 3. 232, from F. intermission (Cot.) = Lat. intermissionem, acc. of intermissio, formed from intermissus, pp. of intermittere; intermiss-ive, 1 Hen. VI. i. 1. 88.

INTERMIX, to mix together. (Hybrid; L. and E.) Shak. has intermixed; Rich. II. v. 5. 12. Coined from Lat. inter, among; and E. mix; see Inter- and Mix. Der. inter-mixture, from inter- and mixture, q. v.

INTERNAL, being in the interior, domestic, intrinsic. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 10. 59. Coined, with suffix -al, from Lat. internus, inward; extended from inter-, inward; see Interior. Der. internal-ly. From the same source, denizen, q. v., entrails, q. v.

INTERNECINE, thoroughly destructive. (L.) 'Internecline war;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 774. — Lat. internecinus, thoroughly destructive. — Lat. interneci-o, utter slaughter. — Lat. inter, thoroughly (see White); and necare, to kill. See Inter- and Necromancy.

INTERPELLATION, an interruption, intercession, summons. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. -F. interpellation, 'an interruption, disturbance'; Cot. -Lat. interpellationem, acc. of interpellatio, an interruption, hindrance. -Lat. interpellatus, pp. of interpellare, to drive between, hinder. -Lat. inter, between; and pellere, to drive; see Inter- and Pulsate.

INTERPOLATE, to insert a spurious passage. (L.) 'Although you admit Caesar's copy to be therein not interpolated'; Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 11; Remarks (R.). -Lat. interpolatus, pp. of interpolare, to furnish up, patch, interpolate. -Lat. interpolus, interpolis, polished up. -Lat. inter, between, here and there; and polire, to polish. See Inter- and Polish. Der. interpolation, from F. interpolation, 'a polishing'; Cot.

INTERPOSE, to put between, thrust in, mediate. (F., -L.) In Shak. Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 98. -F. interposer, 'to interpose, to put or set between'. See Inter- and Pose. Der. interposer, Merch. Ven. iii. 2. 329.

INTERPOSITION, intervention, mediation. (F., -L.) 'By reason of the often interposition'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 1291 d. -F. interposition, 'an interposition, or putting between'; Cot. See Inter- and Position (which is not formed directly from pose).

INTERPRET, to explain, translate. (F., -L.) M. E. interpret, Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiv. 27; interpretour is in verse 28. -F. interpret, 'to interpret'; Cot. -Lat. interpretari, to expound. -Lat. interpret, stem of interpre, an interpreter; properly an agent, broker, factor, go-between. β. Of uncertain origin; the former part of the word is, of course, Lat. inter, between; the base -pret- is perhaps cognate with the Gk. base φράσ- in φράσσειν (= φράδ-yeu), to speak, rather than with Gk. πράττειν, πράσσειν, to do. Der. interpret-able, interpret-er (in Wyclif, as above); also (from Lat. pp. interpretatus) interpretal-ion = F. interpretation, 'an interpretation' (Cot.), interpretal-ive, interpretal-ive-ly.

INTERREGNUM, an interval between two reigns. (L.) 'Interreign or Interregnum'; Kersey, ed. 1715. -Lat. interregnum. -Lat. inter, between; and regnum, a reign, rule. See Inter- and Reign.

INTERROGATE, to examine by questions, question. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Shak. has interrogatory, K. John, iii. 1. 147; shortened to interrogatories, Merch. Ven. v. 298. -Lat. interrogatus, pp. of interrogare, to question. -Lat. inter, thoroughly (see White); and rogare, to ask; see Rogation. Der. interrogat-or, interrogat-or-y; interrogat-ion = F. interrogation, 'an interrogation' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. interrogationem; interrogat-ive, from Lat. interrogativus; interrogat-ive-ly.

INTERRUPT, to break in amongst, hinder, divide continuity. (L.) 'With much work and oft interrupting'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 628 g. -Lat. interruptus, pp. of interrumpere, to burst asunder, break up, hinder. -Lat. inter, between; and rumpere, to break. See Inter- and Rupture. Der. interrupt-ed-ly, interrupt-ive, interrupt-ive-ly; also interruption, M. E. interruption, Gower, C. A. i. 37 = F. interruption (Cot.), from Lat. acc. interruptionem.

INTERSECT, to cut between, cross as lines do. (L.) 'Intersecteth not the horizon'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 7. § 4. -Lat. intersectus, pp. of intersecare, to cut apart. -Lat. inter, between, apart; and secare, to cut. See Inter- and Section. Der. intersection.

INTERSPERSE, to disperse amongst, set here and there. (L.) 'Interspersed, bestrewed, scattered or sprinkled between'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -Lat. interspersus, pp. of interspergere, to sprinkle amongst. -Lat. inter, amongst; and spargere, to scatter; see Sparse. Der. interspers-ion.

INTERSTELLAR, lit. between the stars. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Lat. inter, amongst; and E. stellar, adj. dependent on Lat. stella, a star; see Stellar.

INTERSTICE, a slight space between things set closely together. (F., -L.) 'For when the airy interstices are filled'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5. § 14. -F. interstice, in use in the 16th century; Littré. -Lat. interstitium, an interval of space. -Lat. inter, between; and stitus, pp. of sistere, to place, a causal verb formed from ✓ STA, to stand; see Stand. Der. interstiti-al, from Lat. interstitium.

INTERTWINE, to twine amongst. (Hybrid; L. and E.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 405. From Lat. inter, amongst; and E. Twine, q. v. ¶ So also inter-twist.

INTERVAL, a space or period between. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave; and Milton, P. L. vi. 105. -O. F. intervalle, 'an interval'; Cot. -Lat. intervallum, lit. the space between the rampart of a camp and the soldiers' tents. -Lat. inter, between; and vallum, a rampart, whence E. wall. See Inter- and Wall. ¶ Otherwise explained as the distance between the ualli, or stakes of which the rampart was made.

INTERVENE, to come between, interpose. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 222. -F. intervenir, 'to interpose himself'; Cot. -Lat. intervenire, to come between. -Lat. inter, between; and venire, to come, cognate with E. Come, q. v. Der. intervention = F. intervention, 'an intervention' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. interventionem, from Lat. pp. interventus.

INTERVIEW, a mutual view or sight, a meeting. (F., -L.) In Shak. L. L. L. ii. 167. Modified from O. F. entreveu, pp. of entrevoir; cf. 's'entrevoir, to behold or visit one another'; Cot. -F. entre, from Lat. inter, between; and O. F. veu, pp. of voir, from Lat. videre, to see; see View.

INTERWEAVE, to weave together. (Hybrid; L. and E.) The pp. interwoven is in Milton, P. R. ii. 263. Coined from Lat. inter, between; and Weave, q. v.

INTESTATE, without a will. (L.) 'Or dieth intestate'; P. Plowman, B. xv. 134. -Lat. intestatus, that has made no testament or will. -Lat. in-, not; and testatus, pp. of testari, to be a witness, to make a will; see Testament. Der. intestacy.

INTESTINE, inward, internal. (F., -L.) In Shak. Com. Errors, i. 1. 11. -F. intestin, 'intestine, inward'; Cot. -Lat. intestinus, adj. inward. β. Formed from Lat. intus, adv. within; cognate with Gk. ἐντός, within. These are extensions from Lat. in, Gk. ἐν, in; see In. Der. intestines, pl. sb., in Kersey, ed. 1715, from F. intestin, 'an intestine' (Cot.), which from Lat. intestinum, neut. of intestinus. Also intestin-al, from F. intestinal (Cot.).

INTHRAL, the same as ENTHRAL, q. v., but with E. prefix. (E.) Spelt inthal in Kersey, ed. 1715; and in Phineas Fletcher, Purple Island, c. 5 (R.). Der. inthal-ment.

INTIMATE (1), to announce, hint. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. ii. 129. Properly a pp., as: 'their enterprize was intimate and published to the kyng'; Hall's Chron. Hen. IV, an. 1 (R.). -Lat. intimatus, pp. of intimare, to bring within, to announce. -Lat. intimus, innermost; superl. corresponding to comp. interior; see Interior. Der. intimati-on, from F. intimation, 'an intimation'; Cot. And see Intimate (2).

INTIMATE (2), familiar, close. (L.) The use of this word is due to confusion with the word above. The correct form is intime, as in: 'requires an intime application of the agents'; Digby, On Bodies, b. 5. s. 6. This is O. F. intime, 'inward, secret, hearty, especial, deer, intirely affected' (Cot.), from Lat. intimus, innermost, closely attached, intimate; see above. Der. intimate-ly, intimac-y.

INTIMIDATE, to frighten. (Low Lat.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [Probably suggested by O. F. intimider, 'to fear, to skare'; Cot.] -Low Lat. intimidatus, pp. of intimidare, to frighten; in the Acta Sanctorum (Ducange). -Lat. in-, intensive prefix, from the prep. in; and timidus, timid, fearful; see Timid. Der. intimidat-ion, from F. intimidation, 'a fearing, a skaring'; Cot.

INTITULED, entitled. (F., -L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 1. 8; Lucrece, 57. -F. intitulé, 'intituled or intitled'; Cot.; intituler, 'to intitle, id. See Entitle.

INTO, prep. denoting passage inwards. (E.) M. E. into, Chaucer, C. T. 2431; Layamon, 5150. -A. S. in tó (two words), where in is used adverbially, and tó is the preposition. 'Ne gá þú mid þínum esne in tó dóme' = go not thou into judgment [lit. inwards to judgment] with thy servant; Psalm, cxlii. 2; Grein, ii. 140. See In and To.

INTOLERABLE, not tolerable. (F., -L.) 'For lenger to endure it is intolerable'; Lament of Mary Magdalen, st. 54; and see st. 10. -F. intolerable, 'intollerable'; Cot. -Lat. intolerabilis; see In- (3) and Tolerable. Der. intolerabl-y, intolerable-ness. So also in-tolerant, a late word, in Todd's Johnson; intolerance = F. intolerance, 'impatience', Cot.

INTOMB, the same as Entomb. (F., -L.; but with E. prefix.) In Shak. Macb. ii. 4. 9 (first folio).

INTONE, to chant. (Low Lat., -Lat. and Gk.) 'Ass intones to ass'; Pope, Dunciad, ii. 253. -Low Lat. intonare, to sing according to tone. -Lat. in tonum, according to tone; where tonum is acc. of tonus, not a true Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk. τόνος; see Tone. Der. inton-al-ion.

¶ Note that intonation was also formerly used in the sense of 'loud noise.' Thus Minshew (ed. 1627) has: 'Intonation, loud noise or sound, a thundering.' This is from the classical Lat. intonare, to thunder forth, compounded of in (used as intensive prefix) and tonare, to thunder, which is from O. Lat. tonus, thunder. But this O. Lat. tonus is cognate with Gk. τόνος (instead of being borrowed from it, like the tonus above); so that the result is much the same. See Thunder. We may also note that, in the quotation from Pope above, there is probably a play upon words; so that both Low Lat. intonare and Lat. intonare are involved in it.

INTOXICATE, to make drunk. (Low Lat., -Gk.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 7. 39. Used as a pp. in Fryth's Works, p. 77: 'their mind is so intoxicated.' -Low Lat. intoxicatus, pp. of intoxicare, to poison.—Lat. in, into; and toxicum, poison, a word borrowed from Gk. τοξικόν, poison in which arrows were dipped.—Gk. τόξον, a bow, of which the pl. τόξα=(1) bow and arrows, (2) arrows only. Der. intoxicat-ion. [†]

INTRACTABLE, not tractable. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. intractable, 'intractable'; Cot.—Lat. intractabilis. See In-(3) and Tractable, Trace. Der. intractably, intractable-ness.

INTRAMURAL, within the walls. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson.—Lat. intra, within; and murus, a wall; see Mural.

INTRANSITIVE, not transitive. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715.—Lat. intransitivus, that does not pass over to another person; used of verbs in grammar. See In-(3) and Transitive. Der. intransitive-ly.

INTREAT, the same as Entreat. (F.,—L.; with E. prefix.) Minshew, ed. 1627, gives both spellings; and see the Bible Word-book and Nares.

INTRENCH, the same as Entrench. (F.,—L.; with E. prefix.) In Shak. 1 Hen. VI. i. 4. 9. Der. intrench-ment.

INTREPID, dauntless, brave. (L.) 'That quality [valour] which signifies no more than an intrepid courage;' Dryden; Dedication to Virgil's Æneid.—Lat. intrepidus, fearless.—Lat. in-, not; and trepidus, restless, alarmed; see In-(3) and Trepidation. Der. intrepid-ly; intrepid-i-ty, Spectator, no. 122.

INTRICATE, perplexed, obscure. (L.) In Shak. Com. Errors, v. 269.—Lat. intricatus, pp. of intricare, to perplex, embarrass, entangle.—Lat. in, in; and trica, pl. sb., hindrances, vexations, wiles (whence also Extricate). Der. intricate-ly, intricate-ness; intricac-y, Milton, P. L. viii. 102. And see intrigue.

INTRIGUE, to form secret plots. (F.,—L.) 'Intriguing fops;' Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, pt. ii. l. 521.—F. intriguer, formerly spelt triguer, 'to intrigue, perplex, pester, insnare;' Cot.—Lat. intricare, to perplex; see above. Der. intrigue, sb.; intrigu-er.

INTRINSIC, inward, genuine, inherent. (F.,—L.) A mistake for intrinsec. Intrinsecal was formerly in use, as in Minshew, ed. 1627. Shak. has intrinse, K. Lear, ii. 2. 81; and intrinsecal, Antony, v. 2. 307. 'Intrinsecal or Intrinsecal, inward or secret;' Kersey, ed. 1715.—O. F. intrinseque, 'intrinsic, inward;' Cot.—Lat. intrinsecus, inwards; lit. following towards the inside.—Lat. intra, within; in, into, towards; and secus, lit. following, connected with Lat. secundus, second, and sequi, to follow. See Inter, In, and Second. [†] Similarly Extrinsic, q. v. Der. intrinsic-al (for intrinsec-al), intrinsic-ally.

INTRODUCE, to lead or conduct into, bring into notice or use. (L.) 'With which he introduceeth and bringeth his readers into a false understanding;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 341e.—Lat. introducere, pp. introducitur, to bring in.—Lat. intro, short for intero, orig. abl. of intus, inward (see Interior); and ducere, to lead; see Duke. Der. introduce-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 16854, from F. introduction—Lat. acc. introductionem (nom. introductio); introduce-ive; introduce-or-y, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. 68; introduce-or-i-ly.

INTROMISSION, a letting in, admission. (L.) 'Intromission, a letting in;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A rare word. Formed by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from the Lat. pp. intromissus of the verb intromittere, to introduce.—Lat. intro, within (see Introduce); and mittere, to send; see Mission. Der. Sometimes the verb intromit is used, but it is very rare.

INTROSPECTION, a looking into. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from Lat. acc. introspectionem, from nom. introspectio, a looking into.—Lat. intro, within (see Introduce); and spectus, pp. of specere, to look; see Spy.

INTRUDE, to thrust oneself into. (L.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 31.—Lat. intrudere, to thrust into, obtrude (oneself).—Lat. in, into; and trudere, to thrust. See Thrust. Der. intrud-er; also intrus-ion, Sir T. More, Works, p. 640b=F. intrusion, 'an intrusion' (Cot.), formed from Lat. pp. intrusus; intrus-ive, Thomson, Liberty, pt. i. l. 209; intrus-ive-ly, intrus-ive-ness.

INTRUST, to give in trust, commit to one's care. (Scand.; with E. prefix.) Sometimes entrust, but intrust is much better, as being purer English; the latter part of the word being of Scand. (not F.) origin. In Dryden, Character of a Good Parson, l. 57. Compounded of In and Trust.

INTUITION, a looking into, ready power of perception. (L.) Used by Bp. Taylor in the sense of 'looking upon;' Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 36; and Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 2 (R.) Intuitive is in Cotgrave, and in Milton, P. L. v. 488. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from Lat. intuitus, pp. of intueri, to look upon.—Lat. in, upon; and tueri, to look; see Tuition, Tutor. Der. intuit-ive=F. intuitif, 'intuitive' (Cot.); intuit-ive-ly.

INTUMESCENCE, a swelling. (F.,—L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—F. intumescence, 'a swelling, puffing;' Cot. Formed (as if from a Low Lat. *intumescencia), from Lat. intumescere, crude form of pres. pt. of intumescere, to begin to swell.—Lat. in, used intensively; and tumescere, inceptive form of tumere, to swell. See Tumid.

INTWINE, another form of Entwine, q. v. (E.) Really a better form, as being purer English. [†] So also in-twist; see Entwist.

INUNDATION, an overflowing of water, a flood. (L.) In Shak. K. John, v. 1. 2; v. 2. 48. [Imitated from F. inondation.]—Lat. inundationem, acc. of inundatio, an overflowing.—Lat. inundatus, pp. of inundare, to overflow, spread over in waves.—Lat. in, upon, over; and unda, a wave. See Undulate. Der. inundate, vb., really suggested by the sb., and of later date.

INURE, to habituate, accustom. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 160. Also enure, as in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 2. 29; v. 9. 39; vi. 8. 14; and Sonnet 14, l. 7. β. On the one hand, the F. prefix en- is more consonant with the analogy of other words, as en-able, en-camp, en-large, &c.; whilst, on the other, the E. in is more consistent with the origin of the word, since it arose from the old phrase 'in ure,' where ure is a sb. γ. The sb. ure is commonly explained by use, but its true sense is work or operation, or such use as is due to constant work. For examples, see ure in Nares. Thus, in Ferrex and Porrex, Act iv. sc. 2, we have: 'And wisdom willed me without protract [delay] In speedy wise to put the same in ure,' i. e. in operation, not in use; see the passage in Morley's Library of Eng. Literature, Plays, p. 59, col. 1. And again, 'I wish that it should straight be put in ure;' id. Act v. sc. 1. δ. Hence was also formed the verb to ure, used in the same sense as inure. 'Ned, thou must begin Now to forget thy study and thy books, And ure thy shoulders to an armour's weight;' Edw. III, Act i. sc. 1. l. 159 (in the Leopold Shakspeare, p. 1038). 'The Frenche souldiers wyche from their youthe have byne practysed and urede in feats of arms;' Robinson's tr. of More's Utopia, ed. 1551, C 6 (inurede in ed. 1556, p. 40 of Arber's reprint).

β. The etymology of ure is clearly the O. F. ovre, oeuvre, œuvre, work, action, operation; see oeuvre in Burguy, and œuvre in Roquefort, and mod. F. œuvre in Littré. [Mr. Wedgwood well remarks upon the similar letter-changes by which the F. man-œuvre has become the E. man-ure.]—Lat. opera, work; see Opera, Operate. Der. inure-ment (rare).

γ. The word ure here treated of is quite distinct from M. E. ure, fate, destiny, luck, as used in Barbour's Bruce, i. 312, ii. 434, &c.; see glossary to my edition. In this case, ure is the O. F. eur, aur (mod. F. heur in bon-heur), from Lat. augurium; see Augur. There is also an O. F. ure, put for Lat. hora; see Hour.

INURN, to put into a sepulchral urn. (F.,—L.; or L.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 4. 49. See In-(1) and Urn.

INUTILITY, uselessness. (F.,—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. inutilité, 'inutility;' Cot.—Lat. inutilitatem, from nom. inutilitas. See In-(3) and Utility.

INVADE, to enter an enemy's country, encroach upon. (F.,—L.) 'And straight invade the town;' Lord Surrey, tr. of Æneid, b. ii. l. 338.—F. invader, 'to invade;' Cot.—Lat. invadere, to go into, enter, invade.—Lat. in, in, into; and vadere, to go. See Wade. Der. invad-er; invas-ion, K. John, iv. 2. 173=F. invasion, 'an invasion' (Cot.), from Lat. invasionem, acc. of invasio, from pp. inuasus; also invas-ive, K. John, v. 1. 69.

INVALID, not valid. (F.,—L.) A. Accented invalid, Milton, P. L. viii. 116. From In-(3) and Valid. B. Accented invalid, and pronounced as a F. word, when used as a sb. 'As well stow'd with gallants as with invalids;' Tatler, no. 16.—F. invalid, 'impotent, infirm;' Cot.—Lat. invalidus, not strong, feeble.—Lat. in, not; and validus, strong; see Valid. Der. invalid-ate, Burnet, Own Time, an. 1680 (R.); invalid-at-ion; invalid-i-ty.

INVALUABLE, that cannot be valued. (F.,—L.) 'For rareness of invaluable price;' Drayton, Moses, his Birth and Miracles, bk. i (R.) From In-(3) and Valuable. Der. invaluable-y.

INVARIABLE, not variable. (F.,—L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 6. § last.—F. invariable, 'unvariable;' Cot. From In-(3) and Variable. Der. invariab-ly, invariable-ness.

INVASION, an entry into an enemy's country. (F.,—L.) See Invade.

INVEIGH, to attack with words, rail. (L.) In Shak. Lucrece, 1254. The close connection of inveigh with the sb. inveective at once points out the etymology. In this word, the Lat. h is expressed by the guttural gh, just as the A. S. h was replaced by the same combination; see Mätzner, Eng. Gram. i. 149. Cf. Span. invehir, to inveigh.—Lat. invehere (pp. invehetus), to carry into or to, to introduce, attack, inveigh against.—Lat. in, into; and vehere, to carry; see Vehicle. Der. inveh-ive, sb. from F. inveective, 'an invective' (Cot.), from Lat. adj. invehetivus, scolding, from the pp. invehetus; hence inveh-ive, adj.; inveh-ive-ly, As You Like It, ii. 1. 58. [†]

INVEIGLE, to seduce, entice. (Unknown.) 'Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him; 'Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 99. 'Yet have they many baits and guileful spells To inveigle and invite the unwary sense;' Milton, Comus, 537, 538. And see Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 32. The origin is unknown, it being difficult to account for the ei; the word is spelt inveagle as well as inveigle in Minshew. ¶ 1. By some guessed to be from Ital. invogliare, to give a desire to, make one long for; cf. invogliato, loving, desirous. = Ital. in = Lat. in, in; and voglio, a desire; cf. Ital. voglio, I wish, from volere, to wish. = Lat. velle, to wish; pres. t. volo, I wish. See Voluntary. 2. By others thought to be corrupted from O. F. aveugler, 'to blind, hoodwink' [hoodwink], Cot.; formed from the adj. aveugle, blind. = Low Lat. aboculis, blind. = Lat. ab, off, away, deprived of; and oculus, an eye. (Neither origin is satisfactory; hence some have supposed that the word arose from a confusion of the Ital. and F. words. Even thus, the spelling remains unexplained.) [†] Der. inveigle-ment (rare).

INVENT, to find out, devise, feign. (F., -L.) In Gower, C. A. ii. 262. = F. inventer, 'to invent'; Cot. = Lat. inventus, pp. of invenire, to come upon, discover, invent. = Lat. in, upon; and venire, to come, cognate with E. Come, q. v. Der. invention, M. E. invention, Testament of Creseide, st. 10 = F. invention, 'an invention' (Cot.), from Lat. inventio, acc. of inventio; inventive = F. inventif, 'inventive' (Cot.); inventive-ly, inventive-ness; invent-or = M. E. inventour, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 20 (R.) = F. inventeur, from Lat. acc. inventorem; invent-or-y, Cor. i. 1. 21.

INVERSE, inverted, opposite. (F., -L.) M. E. invers, Gower, C. A. iii. 3. = O. F. invers, 'inverse' (Cot.) = Lat. inversus, pp. of invertere; see Invert. Der. inverse-ly, inverse-ion, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 15. § 6, formed by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion from Lat. acc. inversionem.

INVERT, to turn upside down, reverse. (L.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 1. 70. = Lat. invertere, to invert. = Lat. in, signifying motion towards, or up; and vertere, to turn. See Verse. Der. invert-ed-ly; also inverse, q. v.

INVERTEBRATE; see In- (3) and Vertebrate. (L.)

INVEST, to dress with, put in office, surround, lay out money. (F., -L.) 'This girdle to invest;' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 5. 18. = F. investir, 'to invest, inrobe, install;' Cot. = Lat. investire, to clothe, clothe in or with. = Lat. in, in; and vestire, to clothe, from vestis, clothing; see Vest. Der. invest-ment, Hamlet, i. 3. 128; investiture, in Tyndal's Works, p. 362 [misnumbered 374] = F. investiture (Cot.), as if from Lat. investitura, fem. of fut. part. of investire.

INVESTIGATE, to track out, search into. (L.) 'She [Prudence] doth investigate and prepare places apt and convenient;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 22 (R.) = Lat. investigatus, pp. of investigare, to track out, search into a track. = Lat. in, in; and vestigare, to trace. See Vestige. Der. investigat-ion, investigat-ive, investigat-or, investigat-or-y; also investiga-ble. ¶ Note that investigable also sometimes means 'unsearchable,' from Lat. investigabilis, unsearchable (distinct from investigabilis, that may be investigated); where the prefix in- has a negative force.

INVETERATE, grown old, firmly established or rooted. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 122; Rich. II, i. 1. 14. = Lat. inveteratus, pp. of inveterare, to retain for a long while. = Lat. in, with intensive force; and vetere, stem of vetus, old. See Veteran. Der. inveterately, inveterate-ness, inveteracy.

INVIDIOUS, envious, productive of odium. (L.) 'Invidious crimes;' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. xi. 518. Formed by analogy with adjectives in -ous (of F. origin) from Lat. invidiosus, envious, productive of odium. = Lat. invidia, envy. See Envy. Der. invidious-ly, invidious-ness.

INVIGORATE, to give vigour to. (L.) 'This polarity . . . might serve to invigorate and touch a needle;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 2. § 6. A coined word, formed as if from a Lat. in vigorare (not found); from in, prefix, and uigor, vigour. See Vigour.

INVINCIABLE, unconquerable. (F., -L.) In Shak. Cor. iv. 1. 10. = F. invincible, 'invincible;' Cot. = Lat. invincibilis. = Lat. in, not; and vincibilis, vincible. See In- (3) and Vincible. Der. invincibl-y, invincible-ness, invincibili-ty.

INVIOABLE, that cannot be violated or profaned. (F., -L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 527g; and in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 35. = F. invioable, 'invioable;' Cot. = Lat. invioabilis. = Lat. in, not; and violabilis, that may be violated, from violare. See In- (3) and Violate; and see below. Der. invioabl-y, invioabili-ty.

INVIOULATE, not profaned. (L.) In Spenser, tr. of Virgil's Gnat, l. 425. = Lat. inviolatus, unhurt, inviolate. = Lat. in, not; and violatus, pp. of violare; see In- (3) and Violate.

INVISIBLE, that cannot be seen. (F., -L.) M. E. invisible, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 1019; Gower, C. A. ii. 247, 262. = F. invisible; in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave. = Lat. invisible. See In- (3) and Visible. Der. invisibl-y, invisibili-ty.

INVITE, to ask, summon, allure. (F., -L.) 'God invited men unto the following of himselfe;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1205 e. = F. inviter, 'to invite;' Cot. = Lat. invitare, to ask, bid, request, invite (of uncertain origin). Der. invitat-ion, Merry Wives, i. 3. 50 = F. invitation, 'an invitation;' Cot.; invit-er, invit-ing-ly.

INVOCATE, to invoke. (L.) In Shak. Rich. III, i. 2. 8. = Lat. invocatus, pp. of invocare; see Invoke. Der. invocat-ion, Gower, C. A. iii. 46 = F. invocation, 'an invocation' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. invocationem.

INVOICE, a particular account of goods sent. (F., -L.) 'Invoice, is a particular of the value, custom, and charges of any goods sent by a merchant in another man's ship, and consigned to a factor or correspondent in another country;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The word is almost certainly a corruption of envois, an English plural of F. envoi, O. F. envoy, a sending. Compare the phrases in Littre: 'par le dernier envoi, j'ai reçu' = by the last conveyance, I have received, &c.; 'j'ai reçu votre envoi' = I have received your last consignment; 'lettre d'envoi, an invoice. See Envoiy. ¶ A similar corruption occurs in the pronunciation of 'bourgeois' type, called by printers burjoice.

INVOKE, to call upon. (F., -L.) 'Whilst I invoke the Lord, whose power shall me defend;' Lord Surrey, Psalm 73 (R.); and in Shak. Hen. V, i. 2. 104. = F. invoker, 'to invoke;' Cot. = Lat. invocare, to call on. = Lat. in, on; and vocare, to call, from vox, stem of vox, voice; see Voice. Doublet, invocate, q. v.

INVOLUNTARY, not voluntary. (L.) In Pope, Imit. of Horace, Odes, iv. 1, l. 38. = Lat. involuntarius. See In- (3) and Voluntary. Der. involuntari-ly, involuntari-ness.

INVOLUTE, involved, rolled inward. (L.) 'Involute and Evolute Figures, certain geometrical figures;' Kersey, ed. 1715. = Lat. involutus, pp. of involvere; see Involve. Der. involution = F. involution, 'an involution, enwrapping, enfolding;' Cot., from Lat. involutionem, acc. of involutio, a rolling up.

INVOLVE, to infold, wrap up. (F., -L.) 'That reuerende study is involved in so barbarous a language;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 14 (R.) = F. involver, 'to involve;' Cot. = Lat. involvere, to roll in or up. = Lat. in, in; and volvere, to roll; see Voluble. Der. involve-ment; and see Involute.

INVULNERABLE, not vulnerable. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. vi. 4. 4. = F. invulnerable, 'invulnerable;' Cot. = Lat. invulnerabilis. See In- (3) and Vulnerable. Der. invulnerabl-y, invulnerable-ness, invulnerabili-ty.

INWARD, internal. (E.) M. E. inward, adj., St. Juliana, p. 44, l. 12; commonly adv., as in Ancren Riwle, p. 272. [The adv. is also inwardes, id. p. 92.] = A. S. inneweard, innanweard, adj., Grein, i. 143. = A. S. innan, inne, adv. within, formed from prep. in, in; and suffix -weard, with the notion of 'towards;' see Toward, Towards. Der. inward-s, adv., where -s answers to M. E. adverbial suffix -es, orig. the inflection of the gen. case; inward-ly, A. S. innewardlice, Grein, i. 144. Also inwards, sb. pl., Milton, P. L. xi. 439.

INWEAVE, to weave in, intertwine. (E.) Milton has inwove, P. L. iii. 352; inwoven, P. L. iv. 693. Compounded of In- (1) and Weave.

INWRAP, the same as Enwrap, q. v. (E.)

INWREATHE, to wreath amongst. (E.) Milton has inwreath'd; P. L. iii. 361. From In- (1) and Wreath.

INWROUGHT, wrought in or amongst. (E.) 'Inwrought with figures dim;' Milton, Lycidas, 105. From In- (1) and Wrought, i. e. worked.

IODINE, an elementary body, in chemistry. (Gk.) Modern. So named from the violet colour of its vapour. Formed, with suffix -ine (as in chlor-ine, brom-ine), from Gk. ἰώδης, contr. form of ιοειδής, violet-coloured. = Gk. ἰω-ν, a violet; and εἶδος, appearance. See Violet and Idyl. Der. iod-ide.

IOTA, a jot. (Gk., -Heb.) See Jot.

IPECACUANHA, a medicinal West-Indian root. (Port., -Brazilian.) So defined in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. = Port. ipecacuanha, given in the Eng.-Port. part of Vieyra's Dict. Cf. Span. ipecacuana. Both Port. and Span. words are from the South-American name of the plant; it is said to be a Brazilian word, and to mean 'the road-side sick-making plant.' [†]

IR- (1), prefix. (L.; or F., -L.) The form assumed by the prefix in- (= prep. in), when the letter r follows. See In- (2). Exx.: ir-radiate, ir-rigate, ir-rision, ir-ritate, ir-ruption.

IR- (2), prefix. (L.; or F., -L.) Put for in-, negative prefix, when the letter r follows. See In- (3). Exx.: all words beginning with ir-, except those given under Ir- (1).

IRE, anger. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 7587. = F. ire, 'ire;' Cot. = Lat. ira, anger (of doubtful origin). Der. ire-ful, Com. Errors, v. 151; ir-asci-ible, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from F. irascible, 'choleric' (Cot.), which from Lat. irascibilis, adj. formed from irasci, to become angry; irascibl-y, irascibili-ty.

IRIS, a rainbow. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. All's Well, i. 3. 158. — Lat. iris, a rainbow. — Gk. Iris, the messenger of the gods; Ips, a rainbow (Homer). Root uncertain. Der. irid-esc-ent, a coined word, as if from pres. part. of a Lat. verb irid-esc-ere, to become like a rainbow, formed with inceptive suffix -esc- from irid-, stem of iris (gen. iridis); hence iridescence; also iridi-um (from the crude form iridi-). Iris, a flower, is the same word; and see orrice.

IRK, to weary, distress. (Scand.) Now used impersonally, as in Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 22. A. Formerly used personally.

M. E. irken, (1) to make tired, (2) to become tired. Of these, the transitive (orig.) sense does not often appear, though preserved in the mod. phrase 'it irks me,' and in the word irksome = tiring. 'Irkesum, fastidiosus; Irkesumnesse, fastidium; Irkyn, fastidiosus, accidior,' Prompt. Parv. The intrans. sense is common. 'To preche also þow myst not yrke' = you must not grow weary of preaching; Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests, 526. Irked = shrank back, drew back; Gawain and Grene Knight, 1573. 'Swa þat na man moght irk withalle' = so that none may grow tired withal; Pricke of Conscience, 8918. B. We also find M. E. irk = tired, oppressed. 'Oure frendis of us wille some be irke' = our friends will soon be tired of us; Sir Isambard, 118. 'Syr Arther was irke,' i. e. tired; Anturs of Arthur, st. vi.

C. The references in Stratmann shew that the word occurs chiefly in poems marked with strong Scandinavian peculiarities; and the original word is still found in Swedish. — Swed. yrka, 'to urge, enforce, press; yrka lagen, to enforce the law; vi yrkade på vår afresa, we pressed for our departure; yrka på någon, to urge one; yrka på en sak, to urge an affair; 'Widregren's Swed. Dict. D. This word is exactly cognate with Lat. urgere, to urge; see URGE. From ✓ WARG, to press; whence also Skt. vrij, to press out, exclude; Gk. εργειν, to press in, repress; Goth. wrikan, to persecute, and E. wreak; see WREAK. [Perhaps distinct from ✓ WARG, to work, whence E. work.] E. An interesting derivative from this root WARG is the A. S. weorcesum, painful, irksome (Grein, ii. 678), which clearly suggested the adj. irksome. Cf. Dan. værke, to pain (perhaps distinct from virke, to work); and North of England toothwark = tooth-ache (rather than tooth-work). Also Lithuan. wargas, need; wargus, irksome. See Curtius, i. 222; Fick, i. 773, iii. 293.

F. Thus the Swed. yrka stands for wirka, weakened form of warka, from Teut. base WARK = Aryan ✓ WARG. Der. irk-some, irk-some-ness, in the Prompt. Parv., as above. ¶ Observe how the word may be distinguished from work, though the roots may be connected. And note that there is no connection with A. S. earg (= arg), slothful, which has a different guttural letter and is represented in English by Arch, Arrant. See further under URGE, Wreak, and Wrong.

IRON, a common metal. (E.) M. E. iren, Chaucer, C. T. 502, yren, 1994; zen (for isen), Ayenbite of Inwytt, p. 139, l. 31. — A. S. iren, both adj. and sb., Grein, ii. 145; older form isen, both adj. and sb., id. 147. + Du. ijzer, formerly yzar. + Icel. járn, contracted from the old form isarn. + Dan. and Swed. jern. + O. H. G. isarn; M. H. G. isern, isen. + Goth. eisarn, sb.; eisarnein, adj. And cf. W. haiarn, Irish iarnn, Bret. houarn, iron.

β. The Teut. forms are all from the base ISARN, perhaps an adjectival form from ISA, ice; see ICE. This suggests that iron (= ice-en) may have been named (like crystal) from some fancied resemblance to ice; perhaps from its hard smooth surface when brightened. See Fick, iii. 32. Der. iron-bound, -clad, -founder, -foundry, -grey, -handed, -hearted, -master, -mould, -ware, -work, -witted, Rich. III, iv. 2. 28. Also iron-monger, q. v. [†]

IRONMONGER, a dealer in iron goods. (E.) In Minshew's Dict., 1627; Pepys' Diary, Feb. 6, 1668-9; Beaum. and Fletcher, Cupid's Revenge, iv. 3. See IRON and Monger. Der. iron-monger-y.

IRONY, dissimulation, satire. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Ironie, a speaking by contraries, a mocke, a scoffe;' Minshew's Dict., ed. 1627. — F. ironie (not in Cotgrave, but cited by Minshew). — Lat. ironia. — Gk. ειρωνεια, dissimulation, irony. — Gk. ειρων, a dissembler, one who says less than he thinks or means.

β. This Gk. word is merely the pres. part. of ειρω, to speak, say, talk; so that ειρων means 'a talker.' Thus the root is ✓ WAR, to speak; see Verb, Word. Der. ironi-cal, ironi-cal-ly.

IRRADIATE, to throw rays of light upon, light up. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 53. — Lat. irradiatus, pp. of irradiare, to cast rays on. — Lat. ir = in, on; and radius, a ray. See IR (1) and Ray. Der. irradiat-ion; also irradiant, from stem of pres. pt. of irradiare; irradiance, Milton, P. L. viii. 617.

IRRATIONAL, not rational. (L.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 766, x. 708. — Lat. irrationalis. See IR (2) and Rational. Der. irrational-ly, -i-ty.

IRRECLAIMABLE, that cannot be reclaimed. (F., -L.) Rare, and a late word; see Richardson. Coined from IR (2) and Reclaim. Der. irreclaimabl-y.

⊕ IRRECONCILABLE, that cannot be reconciled. In Minshew, ed. 1627; in Cotgrave; and in Milton, P. L. i. 122. — F. irreconcilable, 'irreconcilable;' Cot. — F. ir = Lat. ir = in, not; and F. reconcilier, 'to reconcile;' Cot. See IR (2) and Reconcile. Der. irreconcilabl-y, irreconcilable-ness. [†]

IRRECOVERABLE, that cannot be recovered. (F., -L.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 360. Milton has irrecoverably, Samson Agon. 81. Coined from ir, not; and F. recouvrable, 'recoverable;' Cot. See IR (2) and Recover. Der. irrecoverabl-y. Doublet, irrecoverable.

IRRECOVERABLE, irrecoverable. (F., -L.) 'Ye [yea], what irrecoverable damage;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 27. — F. irrecuperable, 'unrecoverable;' Cot. — Lat. irrecuperabilis; — Lat. ir = in, not; and recuperare, to recover. See IR (2) and Recover. Doublet, irrecoverable.

IRREDEEMABLE, not redeemable. (F., -L.) A coined word; in late use. From IR (2) and Redeem. Der. irredeemabl-y.

IRREDUCIBLE, not reducible. (L.) In Boyle's Works, vol. i. p. 50 (R.) From IR (2) and Reduce. Der. irreducibl-y, irreducible-ness.

IRREFRAGABLE, that cannot be refuted. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. irrefragable, 'irrefragable, unbreakable;' Cot. — Lat. irrefragabilis, not to be withstood. — Lat. ir = in, not; and refragari, to oppose, thwart, withstand.

β. Refragari is of doubtful origin. Perhaps from re, back, and frag, base of frangere, to break; the orig. sense being 'to break back.' See FRAGMENT.

¶ The long a appears also in Lat. suffragium, perhaps from the same root. Der. irrefragabl-y, irrefragable-ness, irrefragabilit-y.

IRREFUTABLE, that cannot be refuted. (F., -L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. Coined from IR (2) and Refute. Der. irrefutabl-y.

IRREGULAR, not regular. (L.) In Shak. K. John, v. 4. 54. — Lat. irregularis. See IR (2) and Regular. Der. irregular-ly; irregular-i-ty, from F. irregularité, 'irregularity,' Cot.

IRRELEVANT, not relevant. (F., -L.) Used by Burke (R.) From IR (2) and Relevant. Der. irrelevant-ly, irrelevance.

IRRELIGIOUS, not religious. (F., -L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, v. 5. 242. — F. irreligieux, 'irreligious;' Cot. — Lat. irreligiosus. See IR (2) and Religious. Der. irreligious-ly; irreligious-ness (Bible Wordbook). So also ir-religion, Holland's Pliny, b. ii. c. 7, ed. 1634, p. 4 i.

IRREMEDIABLE, that cannot be remedied. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. irremediable, 'remediless;' Cot. — Lat. irremediabilis. See IR (2) and Remedy. Der. irremediabl-y, irremediable-ness.

IRREMISSIBLE, that cannot be remitted or forgiven. (F., -L.) 'Your sinne is irremissible;' Fryth, Works, p. 3, col. 1. — F. irremissible, 'unremittable;' Cot. — Lat. irremissibilis, unpardonable. See IR (2) and Remit. Der. irremissible-ness.

IRREMOVABLE, not removable, firm. (F., -L.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 518. Coined from ir = in, not; and removable; see IR (2) and Remove. Der. irremovabl-y.

IRREPARABLE, that cannot be repaired. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 140. — F. irreparable, 'irreparable, unrepairable;' Cot. — Lat. irreparabilis. See IR (2) and Repair. Der. irreparabl-y, irreparable-ness.

IRREPREHENSIBLE, free from blame. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and Cotgrave. — F. irreprehensible, 'irreprehensible, blameless;' Cot. — Lat. irreprehensibilis, unblamable. See IR (2) and Reprehend. Der. irreprehensibl-y, irreprehensible-ness.

IRREPRESSIBLE, not repressible. (F., -L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. Coined from ir = in, not; and repressible. See IR (2) and Repress. Der. irrepressibl-y.

IRREPROACHABLE, not reproachable. (F., -L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. — F. irreproachable, 'unreproachable;' Cot. — F. ir = in, not; and reproachable, 'reproachable;' Cot. See IR (2) and Reproach. Der. irreproachabl-y.

IRREPROVABLE, not reprovable, blameless. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. irreprovable, 'unreprovable;' Cot. See IR (2) and Reprove. Der. irreprovabl-y, irreprovable-ness.

IRRESISTIBLE, that cannot be resisted. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. vi. 63. Coined from IR (2) and resistible; see Resist. Der. irresistibl-y, irresistible-ness, irresistibilit-y.

IRRESOLUTE, not resolute. (L.) In Shak. Hen. VIII, i. 2. 209. Coined from IR (2) and Resolute. Der. irresolute-ly, irresolute-ness; also irresolut-ion.

IRRESPECTIVE, not respectful. (F., -L.) 'God's absolute irrespective decrees of election;' Hammond, Works, v. i. p. 462 (R.) From F. ir = in, not; and F. respectif, 'respective;' Cot. See Respect. Der. irrespective-ly.

⊕ IRRESPONSIBLE, not responsible. (L.) 'Such high and irresponsible licence over mankind; Milton, Tenure of Kings (R.). From Ir- (2) and responsible; see Response. Der. irresponsibly, irresponsibility.

IRRETRIEVABLE, not retrievable. (F., -I) 'The condition of Gloriana, I am afraid, is irretrievable;' Spectator, no. 423. From F. ir=in, not; and retrievable; see Retrieve. Der. irretrievably, irretrievableness.

IRREVERENT, not reverent. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. xii. 101. =F. irreverent, 'unreverent'; Cot. =Lat. irreverent, stem of irreverens, disrespectful. =Lat. ir=in, not; and reverens, respectful, properly pres. part. of reuereri, to revere. See Revere. Der. irreverently, irreverence, Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Superbia, sect. 1.

IRREVOCABLE, that cannot be recalled. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. vi. 2. 15. =F. irrevocable, 'irrevocable'; Cot. =Lat. irrevocabilis. =Lat. ir=in, not; and revocabilis, revocable, from revocare, to recal. See Revoke. Der. irrevocably, irrevocableness.

IRRIGATE, to water. (L.) 'Irrigate, to water ground;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. And earlier, in Minshew, ed. 1627. =Lat. irrigatus, pp. of irrigare, to moisten, irrigate, flood. =Lat. in, upon, or as an intensive prefix; and rigare, to wet, moisten. From the same source as E. rain; see Rain. Der. irrigation; also irriguous, Milton, P. L. iv. 255, from Lat. irriguus, adj. irrigating, formed from irrigare.

IRRISION, mocking, scorn. (F., -L.) Rare; in Minshew, ed. 1627. =F. irrisio, 'irrisio, mocking'; Cot. =Lat. irrisio, acc. from irrisio, a deriding. =Lat. irrisus, pp. of irridere, to laugh at. =Lat. ir=in, at; and ridere, to laugh. See Risible.

IRRITATE, to provoke. (L.) 'Irritate [provoke] the myndes of the dauncers;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 19. =Lat. irritatus, pp. of irritare, to snarl greatly (said of dogs), also to provoke, tease, irritate. β. Of uncertain origin; but possibly a frequentative from irrive, also spelt hirrive, to snarl as a dog, which is perhaps an imitative word. Der. irritation=F. irritation, 'an irritation' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. irritationem; irritative, irritatory; irritant, from the stem of pres. pt. of irritare; also irritable, in Minshew, ed. 1627, from Lat. irritabilis; irritably, irritableness, irritability.

IRRUPTION, a bursting in upon, sudden invasion. (F., -L.) 'An irruption, or violent bursting in;' Minshew, ed. 1627. =F. irruption, 'an irruption, a forcible entry'; Cot. =Lat. irruptionem, acc. of irruptio, a bursting into. =Lat. ir=in, in, upon; and ruptio, a bursting, from ruptus, pp. of rumpere, to burst. See Rupture. Der. irruptive, irruptively, from pp. irruptus of irrumperere, to burst in.

IS, the 3 pers. pres. of the verb substantive. (E.) A. S. is; see further under Are, Essence.

ISINGLASS, a glutinous substance made from a fish. (Du.) 'Ising-glass, a kind of fish-glass brought from Island [Iceland], us'd in medicines;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. A singular corruption (as if there were reference to icing in confectionery, and to the glassy appearance of jellies made with it) from O. Du. huyzenblas, mod. Du. huyzenblas. 'Isinglass, huyzenblas;' Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict.; 1754. The lit. sense is 'sturgeon-bladder'; isinglass being obtained from the bladder of the sturgeon (Acipenser sturio). + G. hausenblase, isinglass; from hausen, a kind of sturgeon (answering to Du. huyzen); and blase (=Du. blas), a bladder, from blasen, to blow, allied to E. Blow.

¶ That the word is of Du. rather than of G. origin, is obvious. The G. au (=ow in cow) could not have produced E. i; whereas the Du. ui (sometimes nearly =oy in coy) easily did so. The corruption was easily made by sailors.

ISLAND, an isle, land surrounded by water. (E.) The s is ignorantly inserted, owing to confusion with isle, a word of F. origin; see below. In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 11, the word is spelt island in the Globe edition, but iland in the passage as quoted in Richardson. M. E. iland, ilond, yland, ylond; spelt ylond in Octovian Imperator, l. 539 (Weber's Met. Romances, iii. 179); ilond, Layamon, l. 1133 (later text). =A. S. igland, Grein, ii. 136. β. The A. S. ig-land is compounded of ig, an island, and land, land. Grein (ii. 136) gives ig, ieg as equivalent forms, with references; the word is also written eg (id. l. 233); and in Eng. local names appears as -ea or -ey, as in Batters-ea, Aldern-ey, Angles-ey. γ. Cognate words are: Du. eiland, an island, formerly written eyland (Sewel); Icel. eyland; Swed. öland, used as a proper name for an island in the Baltic Sea; G. eiland.

δ. Dropping the syllable -land, we also find A. S. ig, ieg, eg (as above); Icel. ey, an island; Dan. and Swed. ö, an island; also O. H. G. -awa, -auwa, in composition (Fick), with which cf. G. awe, a meadow near water; and see Ait, Eyot, the dimin. forms. All these Fick (iii. 10) deduces from an orig. Teut. form AHWIA, belonging to water or a place in water, a secondary formation from Teut. AHWA, water, which appears in Goth. ahwa, A. S. ea, O. H. G. aha, a stream, with which cf. Lat. aqua, water; see Aquatic. Thus the A. S. ea signifies 'water'; whence ieg, ig, 'a place near water,' and ig-land, an island. Der. island-er, Temp. ii. 2. 37.

ISLE, an island. (F., -L.) Quite distinct from the E. island, in which the s was ignorantly inserted. It is singular that, in the word isle, the s was formerly dropped, thus tending still further to confound the two words. M. E. ile, yle; Rob. of Glouc., p. 1, l. 3; Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxviii. 1. =O. F. isle, 'an isle'; Cot.; mod. F. île. =Lat. insula, an island. See Insular. Der. isl-et, in Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 24, note, from O. F. islette, 'a little island' (Cot.), a dimin. form. And see isolate.

ISOCRONOUS, performed in equal times. (Gk.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706 (s. v. Isochrome). Imitated from Gk. ισόχρονος, consisting of an equal number of times (a grammatical term). =Gk. iso-, crude form of isos, equal; and χρόνος, time, whence also E. Chronicle. β. The Gk. isos or isoos is closely related to Skt. vishu, adv. equally, with which cf. Skt. vishuva, the equinox; the Aryan form being WISWA, equal; Fick, i. 221. Der. isochronism.

ISOLATE, to insulate, place in a detached situation. (Ital., -L.) The word occurs in the Preface to Warburton's Divine Grace, but was censured in 1800 as being a novel and unnecessary word (Todd). And see note in Trench, Eng. Past and Present. Todd remarks, further, that isolated was at first used as a term in architecture, signifying detached. It was thus at first a translation of Ital. isolato, detached, separate, formed as an adj. (with pp. form) from isola, an island. =Lat. insula, an island; also, a detached house or pile of buildings, whence insulatus, insulated, answering to Ital. isolato. See Insular.

¶ The F. isolé is likewise borrowed from the Ital. isolato; the E. word was not taken from the F. (which would only have given a form isolead), but directly from the Italian. Der. isolation. Doublet, insulate.

ISOSCELES, having two sides equal, as a triangle. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. =Lat. isosceles. =Gk. ισοσκελής, with equal legs or sides. =Gk. iso-, crude form of isos, equal (see Isosynchronous); and σκελος, a leg, probably connected with σκαλπειν, to dance, and σκαληρός, halting (see Scalene).

ISOTHERMAL, having an equal degree of heat. (Gk.) Modern. A coined word. =Gk. iso-, crude form of isos, equal; and θερμη, heat; with adj. suffix -al. See Isosynchronous and Thermometer.

ISSUE, that which proceeds from something, progeny, produce, result. (F., -L.) M. E. issue. 'To me and to myn issue;' P. Plowman, C. xix. 259. 'An issue large;' Chaucer, Troil. v. 205. =O. F. issuë, 'the issue, end, success, event'; Cot. A fem. form of issu, 'issued, flown, sprung, proceeded from'; pp. of issir, 'to issue, to go, or depart out'; id. =Lat. exire, to go out of; from ex, out, and ire, to go; see Exit. Der. issue, verb, merely borrowed from the sb., and in later use; 'we issued out' is in Surrey's tr. of Virgil, where the Lat. text has 'iuuat ire,' Æneid, ii. 27. [The M. E. verb was isch, common in Barbour's Bruce, and borrowed from the F. vb. issir.] Also issu-er; issue-less, Wint. Ta. v. 1. 174.

ISTHMUS, a neck of land connecting a peninsula with the mainland. (L., -Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; spelt istmus in Cotgrave, to translate O. F. isthme. =Lat. isthmus. =Gk. ισθμός, a narrow passage, neck of land; allied to ίθμα, a step; extended from √ I, to go. Cf. Skt. i, to go; Lat. ire, to go.

IT, the neuter of the third personal pronoun. (E.) Formerly also hit, P. Plowman, A. i. 85, C. ii. 83; but it in the same, B. i. 86. =A. S. hit, neuter of he; see He. + Icel. hit, neut. of hinn. + Du. het, neut. of hij.

¶ The gen. case its was just coming into use in Shakespeare's time, and occurs in Temp. i. 2. 95, &c., but the usual form in Shak. is his, as in A. S. We also find it in Shak. (with the sense of its) in the first folio, in 13 passages, Temp. ii. 1. 163, &c. See the articles in The Bible Wordbook and in Schmidt's Shak. Lexicon. Its does not once occur in the Bible, ed. 1611, which has it where mod. editions have its in Levit. xxv. 5. The use of hit for his (=its) occurs early, viz. in the Anturs of Arthur, st. viii. l. 11. The A. S. neuter form is hit, nom.; his, gen.; him, dat.; hit, acc. Der. it-self; see Self.

ITALICS, the name given to letters printed thus—in sloping type. (L.) So called because invented by Aldo Manuzio (Aldus Manutius), an Italian, about A. D. 1500. Aldo was born in 1447, and died in 1515. Letters printed in this type were called by the Italians corsivi (cursive, or running hand), but were known to other nations as Italics; see Engl. Cyclop. s. v. Manuzio. =Lat. Italicus, Italian. =Lat. Italia, Italy. Der. italicise.

ITCH, to have an irritating sensation in the skin. (E.) Like if (=M. E. yif, zif=A. S. gif) this word has lost an initial M. E. y or z=A. S. g. M. E. iken, icchen, zichen, ziken; see Prompt. Parv. pp. 259, 538. The pp. occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 3684, where the Six-text (A. 3682) has the various spellings ieched, yeched, and zeched. =A. S. gicean, to itch; in A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, p. 50, l. 13; whence A. S. gic-enas, an itching (Bosworth), and gic-þa, used to translate Lat. pruritus (an itching) in Ælf. Gloss., pr. in Wright's Vocab. i. 20, col. r. l. 6. + Du. jeuken, to itch; whence jeuking, jeukte (= A.S. gicpa), an itching. + G. jucken, to itch. Root unknown. Der. itch, sb., itch-y.

ITEM, a separate article or particular. (L.) The mod. use of item as a sb. is due to the old use of it in enumerating particulars. Properly, it is an adv. meaning 'also' or 'likewise,' as in Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 265: 'as, item, two lips, indifferent red; item, two grey eyes;' &c.—Lat. item, in like manner, likewise, also; closely related to ita, so. Cf. Skt. ittham, thus; itthā, thus; iti, thus. All extensions from the pronominal base I of the third person; cf. Skt. i-dam, this.

ITERATE, to repeat often. (L.) Bacon has iterations and iterate in Essay 25 (Of Dispatch). Shak. has iterance, Oth. v. 2. 150 (folio edd.); iteration, 1 Hen. IV. i. 2. 101.—Lat. iteratus, pp. of iterare, to repeat.—Lat. iterum, again; a comparative adverbial form (with suffix -tar) from the pronom. base I of the third person; see Item. Der. iterate, iteration, iterative.

ITINERANT, travelling. (L.) 'And glad to turn itinerant;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 92.—Lat. itinerant-, stem of pres. pt. of obsolete verb itinerare, to travel.—Lat. itiner-, stem of iter, a journey.—Lat. it-um, supine of ire, to go.—✓ I, to go; cf. Skt. i, to go. Der. itinerant-ly, itinerant-y, itinerac-y. Also itinerary (Levins), from Lat. itinerarium, an account of a journey, neut. of itiner-arius, belonging to a journey, from base itiner- with suffix -arius.

IVORY, a hard white substance chiefly obtained from the tusks of elephants. (F.,—L.) M. E. iuory, iuorie (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 7323; also spelt euery, Trevisa, i. 79.—O. F. ivorie, ivory, a 12th-century form, cited by Littré; later ivoire, 'ivory;' Cot. [Cf. Prov. evori, Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale, 29. 20, whence perhaps the M. E. form euery. Also Ital. avorio, avolio.]—Lat. eboreus, adj. made of ivory.—Lat. ebor-, stem of ebur, sb. ivory. β. Supposed by some to be connected with Skt. ibha, an elephant. Der. ivory, adj., ivory-black, ivory-nut.

IVY, the name of a creeping evergreen. (E.) 'He mot go pipen in an ivy-leef;' Chaucer, C. T. 1840.—A. S. ifig, ivy; see Gloss. to A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne; also ifegn, an old form in the Corpus MS. glossary. [The A. S. f between two vowels was sounded as v, and the change of A. S. -ig to E. -y is regular, as in A. S. stānig = E. ston-y.] + O. H. G. ebah, ivy (cited by E. Müller). β. There seems to be a further possible connection with the Lat. apium, parsley, a word borrowed from Gk. ἀμύριον, (1) a pear, (2) parsley. The G. epheu, ivy, eppeich, (1) parsley, (2) ivy, seem to be due to Lat. apium, rather than to be true Teutonic words. Der. ivy-mantled, ivy-ed.

IWIS, certainly. (E.) M. E. ywis, iwis; Chaucer, C. T. 3277, 3705. Common in Shak., as in Merch. Ven. ii. 9. 68, Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 62, Rich. III. i. 3. 102.—A. S. gewis, adj. certain; gewislice, adv. certainly; Grein, i. 43. + Du. gewis, adj. and adv., certain, certainly. + G. gewiss, certainly. Cf. Icel. viss, certain, sure; vissuliga, certainly. β. All these words are closely connected with E. wise, and with A. S. witan, to know; from ✓ WID, to know. It is to be particularly noted that the M. E. prefix i- (= A. S. ge-) is often written apart from the rest of the word, and with a capital letter. Hence, by the mistake of editors, it is sometimes printed I wis, and explained to mean 'I know.' Hence, further, the imaginary verb wis, to know, has found its way into our dictionaries. But it is pure fiction; the verb being wit. See WIT, verb.

J.

JABBER, to chatter, talk indistinctly. (Scand.) Formerly jaber or jable. 'Whatsoever the Jewes would jaber or iangle agayn;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 665 (R.). 'To iabil, multum loqui;' Levins, ed. 1570. And cf. gibber, Hamlet, i. 1. 116. Jabber, Jabble are weakened forms of gabber, gabble, frequentative forms from the base gab, seen in Icel. gabba, to mock, scoff. See Gabble; and cf. Du. gabberen, 'to jabber' (Sewel). Der. jabber-er.

JACINTH, a precious stone. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In the Bible, Rev. ix. 17; xxi. 20. 'In Rev. ix. 17, the hyacinthine, or dark purple, colour is referred to, and not the stone; as in Sidney's Arcadia (B. i. p. 59, l. 28), where mention is made of "Queen Helen, whose Jacinth haire curled by nature," &c.;' Bible Wordbook, which see. [But I should explain 'Jacinth haire,' like 'hyacinthine locks' in Milton, P. L. iv. 301, to mean 'hair curling like the hyacinth,' without reference to colour.] M. E. iacynte, Yacynt, 2 Chron. ii. 7 (earlier version), iacyntet (later version). Cf. Yacintus Jacinetus; C. A. iii. 112.—O. F. jacinthe, 'the precious stone called a jacinth;' Cot.—Lat. hyacinthus, a jacinth, Rev. xxi. 20 (Vulgate).—Gk. ἵακινθος; Rev. xxi. 20. See Hyacinth. ¶ Thus Jacinth is for hyacinth, as Jerome for Hierome or Hieronymus, and Jerusalem for Hierusalem.

JACK (1), a saucy fellow, sailor. (F.,—L.,—Gk.,—Heb.) The phrase 'thou Sire John' is in Chaucer, C. T. 14816; on which Tyrwhitt remarks: 'I know not how it has happened, that in the principal modern languages, John, or its equivalent, is a name of contempt, or at least of slight. So the Italians use Gianni, from whence Zani; the Spaniards Juan, as bobo Juan, a foolish John; the French Jean, with various additions; and in English, when we call a man a John, we do not mean it as a title of honour. Chaucer, in l. 3708, uses Jacke fool, as the Spaniards do bobo Juan; and I suppose jack-ass has the same etymology.' 'Go fro the window, Jacke fool, she said;' Chaucer, C. T. 3708. This M. E. Jacke is obviously borrowed from the F. Jaques; but it is very remarkable that this common French name is considered as an equivalent to the E. common name John, since it really answers to Jacob.—Lat. Jacobus.—Gk. Ἰάκωβος.—Heb. Ya'aqob, Jacob; lit. one who seizes by the heel.—Heb. root 'aqab, to seize by the heel, supplant.

β. It is difficult to tell to what extent the various senses of the word jack depend upon the name above. α. It is, however, clearly to be traced in the phrase Jack o' the clock, Rich. II. v. 5. 60, where it means a figure which, in old clocks, used to strike upon the bell.

β. In a similar way, it seems to have been used to name various implements which supplied the place of a boy or attendant, as in boot-jack and in the jack which turns a spit in a kitchen. γ. Similarly, it denoted the key of a virginal; Shak. Sonnet 128. δ. Hence perhaps also a familiar name for the small bowl aimed at in the game of bowls; Shak. Cymb. ii. 1. 2. ε. And for a small pike (fish), as distinct from a full-grown one. Der. Jack-o-lent = Jack of Lent, a puppet thrown at in Lent, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 27; Jack-a-lantern = Jack o' lantern, also called Jack-with-the-lantern, an ignis fatuus (see Todd's Johnson); Jack-pudding, Milton, Defence of the People of England, c. 1 (R.), compounded of Jack and pudding, just as a buffoon is called in French Jean-pottage (John-pottage) and in German Hans-wurst (Jack-sausage); Jack-an-apes, Tyndall's Works, p. 132, col. 1. l. 11, put for Jack o' apes, with the insertion of n in imitation of the M. E. an (really equivalent to on) and for the avoiding of hiatus (see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 195), so that the word meant 'a man who exhibited performing apes'; Jack-by-the-hedge, 'an herb that grows by the hedge-side,' Kersey, ed. 1715; jack-ass; and probably jack-daw, Pliny, b. x. c. 29 (and not a corruption of chough-daw, as it has been desperately guessed to be): cf. O. F. jaquette, 'a proper name for a woman, a piannat, or megatapy' [magpie], Cot. Also (probably) jack-screw, a screw for raising heavy weights.

¶ I. Thorpe, in his edit. of Ancient Laws, vol. i. Glossary, gives an A. S. ceac, a sort of stocks or pillory (cf. Du. kaak, a pillory (Sewel), Dan. kag, a whipping-post), and adds: 'our word jack, signifying several kinds of engines and instruments, is probably derived from ceac, pronounced, as in later times, chack.' In this guess I have no belief; there is no trace of 'chack,' and nothing to connect jack (not earlier than the 14th century) with A. S. times. Add to this, that the A. S. word seems to have been ceac (with long a), which would have given a later form cheek; cf. Du. kaak, a pillory, which is the cognate word. β. There is, however, an A. S. ceac, a pitcher (Mark vii. 4), which would have given chack or jack; this might seem to account for jack (more commonly black-jack) in the sense of a sort of leathern jug; but the jug really took its name from its likeness to a jack-boot; see Jack (2).

JACK (2), a coat of mail, a military coat worn over the coat of mail. (F.) 'Iakke of defence, iak of fence, garment, Balthus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 256, and note, shewing that the word was in use as early as 1375. 'Jacke, harnesse, iacy, iacque;' Palsgrave.—O. F. Jaque, 'James, also a Jack, or coat of mail, and thence, a Jack for the body of an Irish grey-hound . . . put on him when he is to coap' [with a wild boar]; Cot. Cf. Ital. giaco, a coat-of-mail, Span. jaco, a soldier's jacket; also Du. jak, G. jacke, Swed. jacka, a jacket, jerkin. β. Of obscure origin; it is even somewhat doubtful whether it is of Romance or Teutonic origin, but the latter is hardly probable. Most likely Ducange is right in assigning the origin of it to the Jacquerie, or revolt of the peasantry nicknamed Jacques Bonhomme, A. D. 1358. That is, it is from the O. F. name Jacques. See Jack (1). Der. jack-et, q. v.; also jack-boots, boots worn as armour for the legs, in the Spectator (Todd); black-jack (Nares, s. v. jack).

JACKAL, a kind of wild animal. (Pers.) In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 82, l. 327; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 115.—Pers. shaghāl; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 383. Cf. Skt. ṛigāla, a jackal, a fox; and perhaps Heb. shā'āl, a fox, from Heb. root shā'al, to dig, hollow out. [†]

JACKET, a short coat. (F.) 'In a blew jacket;' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, l. 205.—O. F. jaquette, 'a jacket, or short and sleeveless country-coat;' Cot. Dimin. of O. F. jaque, 'a jack, or coat of mail;' Cot. See Jack (2). Der. jack-et-ed.

JACOBIN, a friar of the order of St. Dominick. (F.,—L.,—Gk., —Heb.) 'Now frere minor, now jacobin;' Rom. of the Rose, l. 6341. — F. jacobin, 'a jacobin;' Cot. — Low Lat. Jacobinus, adj. formed from Jacobus; see JACK (1). B. Hence one of a faction in the French revolution, so called from the Jacobin club, which first met in the hall of the Jacobin friars in Paris, Oct. 1789; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. C. Also the name of a hooded (friar-like) pigeon. Der. Jacobin-ic-al, Jacobin-ism.

JACOBITE, an adherent of James II. (L., —Gk., —Heb.) Formed with suffix -ite (= Lat. -ita), from Jacob-us, James. See JACK (1). Der. Jacobit-ism.

JADE (1), a sorry nag, an old woman. (Unknown.) M. E. jade (MS. Iade), Chaucer, C. T. 14818. The same as Lowland Sc. yad, yau, North of Eng. yau, a jade. Of unknown origin; perhaps connected with Du. jagen, to hunt, chase, drive, ride, jagten, to hurry, jagt, the chase. Cf. Low G. jagd, a chase, crowd of people, Bremen Wörterb. ii. 683; Dan. jage, G. jagen, to chase; see YACHT. ¶ The use of Lowland Sc. y shows that the word is probably Teutonic. Mr. Wedgwood's etymology, from Span. ijade, to pant (from iada, the flank, which is from Lat. ilia, the groin), is improbable. Der. jade, vb. to tire, spurn, Antony, iii. 1. 34.

JADE (2), a hard dark green stone. (Span., —L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Cf. F. jade, jade; Ital. iada (Florio, 1598). — Span. jade, jade; formerly piedra de iada, because supposed to cure a pain in the side. — Span. ijada, flank, pain in the side. — Lat. ilia, pl. the flank. (M. Müller, in The Times, Jan. 15, 1880). [†]

JAG, a notch, ragged protuberance. (C.) 'Jagge, or dagge of a garment;' Prompt. Parv. p. 255. 'I jagge or cutte a garment; jagge, a cutting;' Palsgrave. Prob. of Celt. origin. — Irish gag, a cleft; gagaim, I split, or notch; W. gag, an aperture, cleft; gagen, a cleft, chink; Gael. gag, a cleft, chink; gag, to split, notch. Der. jagg-ed, spelt iagge in Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 1161; whence to-iagge, Skelton, Elinour Rummyng, l. 124; jagg-ed-ness; jagg-y. ¶ The Icel. jahi, a rough piece of ice, can hardly be related; see IOICOLE.

JAGUAR, a S. American beast of prey. (Brazilian.) In a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. The word is Brazilian; see Buffon, Quadruped. t. iii. pp. 289, 293 (Littre). 'Jagua in the Guarani [Brazilian] language is the common name for tigers and dogs. The generic name for tigers in the Guarani language is Jaguarete;' Clavigero, Hist. of Mexico, tr. by Cullen, ii. 318 (ed. 1787).

JAIL, another spelling of GAOL, q. v. (F., —L.)

JALAP, the root of a Mexican plant. (Mexican.) 'Jalap, the root of a kind of Indian night-shade;' Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. Named from Jalapa or Xalapa, in Mexico. The Span. letters j and x are equivalent, and denote a guttural sound; thus Don Quijote is Don Quijote, the j or x being sounded something like the G. ch.

JAM (1), to press, squeeze tight. (Scand.) 'Jam, to squeeze;' Halliwell. 'Jammed in between the rocks;' Swinburne, Travels through Spain (1779), let. 3, p. 8. 'Jam, to render firm by treading, as cattle do land they are foddered on;' Marshall's Rural Economy of Norfolk (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 3). The same word as cham, or champ. 'Cham, to chew or champ;' Palsgrave. 'Champ [with excrement p], to tread heavily, Warwickshire; to bite or chew, Suffolk;' Halliwell. Whence also: 'Champ, hard, firm, Sussex; id.; i. e. chammed or jammed down, as if by being trodden on. See Champ, which is of Scand. origin. ¶ For the common and regular change from ch to j, see Jaw, Jowl.

JAM (2), a conserve of fruit boiled with sugar. (Scand.?) In Johnson's Dict. Of uncertain origin, but most likely from JAM (1). The following quotation suggests that it may mean a soft substance, resembling what has been chewed. 'And if we have any stronger meate, it must be chammed afore by the nurse, and so put into the babe's mouthe;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 241 h. See Champ.

JAMB, the side-post of a door. (F., —L.) 'Jam of the door, the side-post. The word is also in use in the South, where they say the jau of the chimney;' Ray, Collection of North-Country Words, 1691. Spelt jaumbe in Cotgrave. 'Yea, the jambes, posts, principals, and standards, all of the same mettall;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 3. — F. jambe, 'the leg or shank, . . . the jambe or side-post of a door;' Cot. Cf. Ital. gamba, Span. gamba, the leg; Port. gambas, pl. the legs. — Late Lat. gamba, a hoof; Vegetius, i. 56, near the end; 3. 20. This is certainly a corruption from an older form camba, which appears in O. Spanish (Diez, whom see). — ✓ KAM, to bend; whence Lat. camurus, crooked, camera, a vault; so that the word was orig. used of the bent leg or the knee. Cf. W. cam, crooked. And see Chamber, Gambol, Ham. Der. giamb-eux, leggings, greaves, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 29 (apparently a coined word).

JANGLE, to sound discordantly, to quarrel. (F., —O. Low G.) 'A jangling of the bells;' Shak. Per. ii. 1. 45. Hence jangle = to make discordant; 'like sweet bells jangled;' Hamlet, iii. 1. 166. M. E. janglen, to quarrel, talk loudly. 'To jangle and to jape;' P.

Plowman, B. ii. 94. Spelt gangle, Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 7413. — O. F. jangler, 'to jangle, prattle, talk saucily or scurvily;' Cot. β. Of Old Low G. origin. Cf. Du. jangelen, to importune (Sewel); a frequentative form (with suffix -el) from Du. janken, to howl, yelp as a dog (Sewel). Cf. Low G. janken, to yelp as a dog; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 636. Of imitative origin; cf. Lat. gannire, to yelp as a dog, talk loudly. Der. jangl-er, jangl-ing; see JINGLE.

JANIZARY, JANISSARY, a soldier of the old Turkish footguard. (F., —Turkish.) Bacon speaks of 'the Janizaries' in Essay 19, Of Empire, near the end. There is an earlier reference to them in Sir T. More, Works, p. 279 f. 'Janissaries, an order of infantry in the Turkish army: originally, young prisoners trained to arms; were first organised by Orcan, about 1330, and remodelled by his son Amurath I. 1360. . . . A firman was issued on 17 June, 1826, abolishing the Janizaries;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. And see Gibbon, Roman Empire, c. 64. — O. F. Janissaires, 'the Janizaries;' Cot. Of Turkish origin; the word means 'new soldiers;' from Turk. yeñi, new, and 'askari, a soldier. The ñ represents saghir noon, a nasal letter peculiar to Turkish. Cf. Pers. 'askari, a soldier; Arab. 'askar, an army, troops; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1008.

JANUARY, the first month of the year. (L.) M. E. January (MS. Ianuary), Chaucer, C. T. 9267 (March. Tale). Englished from Lat. Ianuarius, January, named from the god Ianus, a name connected with Lat. ianua, a door; the doors of houses being supposed to be under his especial protection. Prob. from ✓ YA, to go; cf. Skt. yá, to go.

JAPAN, a name given to certain kinds of varnished work. (Japan.) Properly 'Japan work,' where Japan is used adjectively. Named from the country. Pope playfully alludes to 'shining altars of Japan;' Rape of the Lock, iii. 107. Der. Hence Japan, verb, to varnish like Japan work, to polish; Japann-er, a polisher of shoes, shoe-black, Pope, Imit. of Horace, Epist. i. 1. 156.

JAR (1), to make a discordant noise, creak, clash, quarrel. (E.) 'Out of al ioynt ye iar;' Skelton, Duke of Albany, l. 378. And see Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 1. 39, 47; v. 2. 1.

a. Jar stands for an older form char, only found in the derivative charken, to creak like a cart or barrow (Prompt. Parv.), also to creak like a door (Gower, C. A. ii. 102).

β. Again, char stands for an older kar, answering to the Teut. base KAR, to make a harsh sound, murmur, complain, seen in Goth. karón, to sorrow, O. Sax. karón, to lament, and in E. care, crane (= car-ane); see further under Care, Crane, Jargon. This Teut. base KAR is from ✓ GAR, to call, cry, whence also Lat. garrire, to prate, croak, garrulus, talkative; see Garrulous. Der. jar, sb., spelt jarre, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 23.

JAR (2), an earthen pot. (F., —Pers.) 'A great jar;' Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry; l. 28. And in Cotgrave. — O. F. jarre, 'a jarre,' Cot.; mod. F. jarre. [Cf. Span. jarra, a jug, pitcher; Ital. giara, giarra, 'a iarre;' Florio.] — Pers. jarrah, a jar, earthen water-vessel; cf. Pers. jurrah, a little cruise, or jar; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 504, col. 2. Probably borrowed by the Spanish from the Arabs.

JARGON, a confused talk. (F., —L.?) M. E. jargon, jergon, chattering. 'And ful of jargon' = very talkative; Chaucer, C. T. 9722. Particularly used of the chattering of birds; Gower, C. A. ii. 264, 318; Rom. of the Rose, 716. — F. jargon, 'gibridge, fustian language,' Cot.; jargonner, 'to speak fustian, jangle, chatter,' id. The word is old, and appears with the sense of the chattering of birds in the 13th cent. (Littre). Cf. Span. gerigonza, jargon; gerigonzar, to speak a jargon; Ital. gergo, jargon. β. All perhaps from a Lat. base GARG, an extension from ✓ GAR, to call, cry out, make a noise, seen in Lat. garrire; see JAR (2). This extended form GARG, answering to a Teut. base KARK, is exactly represented in English by M. E. charken, to creak as a cart, and the A. S. cearcian, to gnash the teeth (Ælfric's Homilies, i. 132). An attenuated form of charken is the M. E. chirken, to chirp, to make a harsh noise. 'Al ful of chirking [= jargon] was that sory place;' Chaucer, C. T. 2006.

JARGONELLE, a variety of pear. (F., —Ital., —Pers.?) In Johnson's Dict. — F. jargonelle, a variety of pear, very stony (Littre). Formed (according to Littre) as a dimin. from F. jargon, a yellow diamond, a small stone. — Ital. giargone, a sort of yellow diamond. Perhaps from Pers. zargún, gold-coloured, from zar, gold; see Devic, Supp. to Littre.

JASMINE, JESSAMINE, a genus of plants. (Pers.) Spelt jasmin, jessemin, jelsomine, jesse, in Cotgrave. Milton has jessamine, P. L. iv. 698; Lycidas, 143. The spelling jasmin agrees with O. F. jasmin; Cot. Jessemin, jelsomine answer to the Ital. forms gesmino, jelsomino. The Span. form is jasmín. All are from Pers. yásmín, jasmine; of which another form is yásmín, jessamine; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1703; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 715.

JASPER, a precious stone. (F., —L., —Gk., —Arab.) M. E. Iaspre, Iasper. 'What is better than gold: Iaspre;' Chaucer, C. T., Tale of Melibee, Six-text, B. 2297. Also spelt Iaspis, Gower, C. A.

iii. 112; Iaspe, id. 131. — O. F. jaspre (see Littré), an occasional spelling of O. F. and F. jaspe, 'a jasper stone'; Cot. [Thus the r is an addition, and no real part of the word.] — Lat. iaspidem, acc. of iaspis, a jasper. — Gk. iaspis. — Arab. yashb, yashf, also spelt yashb, jasper; Pers. yashp, yashf, jasper; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1707; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 719. Cf. Heb. yáshpēh, a jasper. And see DIAPER.

JAUNDICE, a disease caused by bile. (F., — L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 1. 85. The d is purely excrement, as commonly in E. words after n; cf. sound from F. son. M. E. Jaunys, Pricke of Conscience, l. 700; spelt iaundys, Trevisa, ii. 113; further corrupted to iaundres, in a 15th-cent. tr. of Higden, on the same page as the last reference. — O. F. (and F.) jaunisse, so spelt in the 13th cent. (Littré); but Cot. gives it as jaunisse, 'the jaundies.' Formed with suffix -isse (= Lat. -itia) from F. jaune, yellow; because the disease is characterised by yellowness of the skin and eyes. The oldest spelling of jaune is jalne (Littré). — Lat. galbinus, also galbanus, greenish yellow. — Lat. galbus, yellow.

β. The origin of Lat. galbus is obscure; it is a rare word, and allied to Lat. gilvus, yellow, used by Virgil, Georg. iii. 83. The likeness of Lat. galbus, gilvus, to G. gelb and E. yellow is so close as to suggest that they are Latinised forms of Teutonic words; the true Lat. form being helvus, answering to Gk. χλωρος. See Chlorine, Green, and Yellow. Der. jaundic-ed.

JAUNT, to ramble, make an excursion. (Scand.) It is clear from the exx. in Shak. that jaunt and jaunce are equivalent terms. Jaunt is a wild and fatiguing ramble, Romeo, ii. 5. 26; where another reading is jaunce. It also means to ramble, rove, id. ii. 5. 53, where another reading for jaunting is jauncing.

α. It is easier to trace jaunce first. Shak. has: 'Spurred, galled, and tired by jauncing Bolingbroke,' i. e. hard-riding Bolingbroke. This jaunce is from O. F. jancer, of which Cotgrave says: 'Jancer un cheval, to stirre a horse in the stable till he be swart with-all, or as our jaunt; an old word.' This O. F. jancer, to play tricks with or tease a horse, is from the same source as jaunt, as will appear.

β. The proper sense of jaunt is to play tricks, play the fool, hence to talk wildly, and hence, to ramble, rove. This appears from Lowland Sc. jaunt, to taunt, to jeer; whence the frequentative form jaunder, to talk idly, to converse in a roving way; whence to jaunder about, to go about idly from place to place, without any object (Jamieson). Of Scand. origin. — Swed. dial. ganta, to play the buffoon, to romp, sport, jest; gantas, to jest; cf. O. Swed. gantas, to toy; see Rietz and Ihre. So also Dan. dial. gantast, to jest (Aasen). This Swed. dial. ganta is from the sb. gant, a fool, buffoon; from the adj. gan, droll (Rietz). Cf. Icel. gan, frenzy, frantic gestures.

¶ It will thus be seen that the form jaunt (also written jant) came to us directly from the Scandinavian, whilst the form jaunce came to us mediately through the French, causing the change from t to c. [†]

JAUNTY, JANTY, fantastical, finical. (F., — L.) 'We owe most of our janty fashions now in vogue to some adept beau among them' [the French]; Guardian, no. 149; dated 1713. As if formed with suffix -y from the verb jaunt, to ramble idly about; but formerly janty (see Addenda), and either formed from F. gent, 'neat,' 'spruce,' Cot., or put for janty, from F. gentil. See Gentle, Genteel. Der. jaunt-i-ness, Spectator, no. 530. [†]

JAVELIN, a kind of spear or dart. (F., — C.?) Used in the sense of boar-spear, Shak., Venus, 616. — O. F. javelin, m., javeline, f., 'a javeling, a weapon of the size between a pike and partizan'; Cot. Cf. O. F. javelot, 'a gleave, dart, or small javelin'; Cot. Also Span. jabalina, Ital. giavelotto, a javelin.

β. Perhaps of Celtic origin. The orig. sense is merely a pointed weapon, and the orig. javelin was doubtless a piece of a branch of a tree with a forked head made by cutting off the sprays. The Breton gavlin and gavlod may merely be borrowed from the French, yet the Bret. also has the true Celtic word gavl (also gaol), a place where a tree forks. But the origin appears more clearly from the Irish gaf, gafa, a hook, any crooked instrument; gabhlá, a spear, lance; gabhlach, forked, divided, peaked, pointed; gabhlán, a branch, a fork of a tree; gabhlóg, any forked piece of timber; gabhal, a fork. Cf. Gael. gobhal, a fork; gobhlach, forked, pronged; gobhlag, a small fork, two-pronged instrument; gobhlán, a prong, small fork, weeding-hook. Also W. gaf, a fork; gafllach, a fork, a dart. See Gaff.

γ. Hence may also be explained the M. E. javelok, a javelin, dart, in King Alisaunder, l. 1620; A. S. gafeluc, gafeloc (Leo); also M. H. G. gabilót, a javelin. As these words are all borrowed from Celtic, the initial letter remains unchanged.

JAW, part of the mouth. (E.) Also spelt chaw. 'I wyll put an hooke in thy chawes' — an hook in thy jaws; Bible, 1551, Ezek. xxix. 4 (A. V. jaws). 'The swelling of the chaws and the nape of the necke'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 2 (end). Spelt chawes in Lord Surrey, How no age is content, l. 16 (in Tottel's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 31). Also joue; 'Joue or chekebone, Mandibula'; Prompt. Parv. '3it drow [drew] I hym out of þe lowes, scilicet faucibus, of hem þat gapeden'; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4. l. 323. 'Þe ouer jawe' — the upper jaw, Trevisa, iii. 109; with various readings, joue, geous. Merely formed from the verb chaw or chew; see Chew. There is no corresponding A. S. sb., except that which represents the dimin. jowl, and that which is related to chaps; see Jowl, Chaps; but we find Dan. kiaue, a jaw, O. Du. kauwe, the jaw of a fish (Hexham). ¶ The spelling joue may have been suggested by the F. joue, a cheek; still, it is certain that this F. word is not the original, since chaw and jaw are stronger forms than joue, and could never have come out of it. Precisely parallel with E. jaw is the O. Du. kouwe, the cavity of the mouth, from O. Du. kouwen (Du. kaanwen), to chew; Kilian. Der. jaw-bone, Bible, 1551, Judg. xv. 15; jaw-teeth; jaw-fallen, Fuller, Worthies, Essex (R.); lantern-jaw-ed. ¶ But see corrections in Addenda. [‡]

JAY, a bird with gay plumage. (F., — O. H. G.) M. E. jay, Iay; Chaucer, C. T. 644; King Alisaunder, l. 142. — O. F. jay (older spellings gay, gai), a jay; Cot. Mod. F. geai. So also Span. gayo, a jay, gaya, a magpie. β. So called from its gay colours; cf. Span. gayar, to garnish with variegated trimming; gaya, a stripe of different colours on stuffs. Of Teut. origin; see further under Gay.

JEALOUS, suspicious of rivalry, tender of honour. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. jalous, Chaucer, C. T. 1331. Earlier gelus, Ancren Riwle, p. 90, where it occurs to translate Lat. zelotes. — O. F. jalous, later jaloux, 'jealous'; Cot. Cf. Ital. geloso, Span. zeloso, jealous. — Low Lat. zelosus, full of zeal; related to Lat. zelotes, one who is jealous. — Lat. zelus, zeal. — Gk. ζῆλος, zeal; see Zeal. Der. jealous-y; jealous-y, M. E. jalousie, Chaucer, C. T. 12300, from F. jalousie, Doublet, zealous.

JEER, to mock, scoff. (Du.) In Shak. Com. Errors, ii. 2. 22. 'He saw her toy, and gibe, and geare'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 21. 'There you named the famous jeerer. That ever jeered in Rome or Athens'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour, v. 1 (Song). It seems to have been regarded as a foreign word; see Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iv. 1. 5: 'Let's jeer a little. Jeer? what's that? Expect, sir,' i. e. wait a bit, and you will find out.

β. The origin of the word is very curious. From the Du. gek, a fool, and scheeren, to shear, was formed the phrase den gek scheeren (lit. to shear the fool), to mock, jeer, make a fool of one. Soon these words were run together, and the word gekscheeren was used in the sense of jeering. See Sewall's Du. Dict. which gives the above forms, as well as the sb. gekscheeren, 'a jeering, fooling, jesting: Ik laat my niet gekscheeren, I will not be trifled with.' This is still preserved in mod. Du. gekscheren, to jest, banter, and in the phrase het is geen gekscheren, it is no laughing matter.

γ. The phrase was also used as scheeren den gek, to play the fool; whence simply scheeren, 'to gibe, or to jest' (Hexham). And hence the E. jeer. α. The word gek, a fool, is probably connected with gaudy; scheeren is E. shear. See Gawky and Shear.

¶ Such I take to be the true explanation of this difficult word. It is hardly worth while to notice the numerous other solutions. Mahn's objection that G. sch cannot become E. j does not apply to the Du. sch. Wedgwood's remark that the word is also spelt yeer is a mistake; it is founded on the fact that Junius, in manipulating the word, chose to spell it so without authority. Der. jeer, sb., Oth. iv. 1. 83.

JEHOVAH, the chief Hebrew name of the Deity. (Heb.) In Exod. vi. 3. — Heb. yahóväh, or more correctly yanavah; see the article on Jehovah in the Concise Dict. of the Bible. The etymology is uncertain, but it is perhaps from the root háväh, to be, to exist; and, if so, the sense is 'the self-existent.' [†]

JEJUNE, hungry, meagre, empty. (L.) 'We discourse *jejune*ly, and false, and unprofitably'; Bp. Taylor, pref. to Great Exemplar. — Lat. ieiunus, fasting, hungry, dry, barren, trifling, poor. Of uncertain origin; perhaps connected with Skt. yam, to restrain, hence to fast; Benfey, Skt. Dict. p. 736. Der. jejune-ly, jejune-ness.

JELLY, anything gelatinous, the juice of fruit boiled with sugar. (F., — L.) In Hamlet, i. 2. 105. Sometimes spelt gelly. — F. gêlé, 'a frost, also gelly'; Cot. Properly the fem. form of gelé, frozen, pp. of geler, 'to freeze, to thicken or congeal with cold'; Cot. — Lat. gelare, to congeal. — Lat. gelu, frost. See Gelatine, Gelid, Congeal. Der. jelly-fish. [†]

JENNET, GENNET, a small Spanish horse. (F., — Span., — Arab.) Jennets; Shak. Oth. i. 1. 113. 'A breeding jennet'; Shak. Venus, 260. 'We have xx. thousand of other mounted on genettes'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 236. 'The fairest Iennet'; Lyly's Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 150. — O. F. genette, 'a genet, or Spanish horse'; Cot. — Span. ginete, a nag; but the orig. sense was a horse-soldier, esp. a light-armed horse-soldier. Meadows gives: 'Ginete, a horse-soldier, horseman, pretty nag.' Of Moorish origin. The word is traced by Dozy (Glos. p. 276) to Arab. zenita, a tribe of Barbary celebrated for its cavalry; see Devic, Supp. to Littré.

JENNETING, an early apple. (F., — L., — Gk., — Heb.) 'In July come . . . plumes in fruit, ginnings, quadlins; Bacon, Essay 46. Of Gardens. 'Contrariwise, pomgranat-trees, fig-trees, and apple-trees, live a very short time; and of these, the hasty kind or ienings, continue nothing so large as those that bear and ripen later; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvi. c. 44. From the F. jeanneton, double dimin. of jean, with reference to St. John's day (June 24).—Lat. Johannem, acc. of Johannes, John.—Gk. ἰωάννης; see Zany.

JEOPARDY, hazard, peril, danger. (F.,—L.) M. E. jupartie, later jeopardy or jeopardy. 'Hath lost his owen good thurgh jupartie;' Chaucer, C. T. 16211. The various readings in this line are Jupartie, Jopardy, Jopardye, and Jepardye; Six-text, G. 743. Spelt jeopardie, Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 465; iv. 1529. The original sense was a game in which the chances are even, a game of hazard, hence hazard or chance; as in: 'To put that sikernes in jeopardie'=to put in hazard that which is secure (last reference).—O. F. jeu parti, lit. a divided game. 'A jeu parti is properly a game, in which the chances are exactly even. See Froissart, v. i. c. 234; Ils n'estoient pas à jeu parti contre les François [=for they were unequal in numbers to the French (Johnes' translation)]: and vol. ii. c. 9. si nous les voyons à jeu parti. From hence it signifies anything uncertain or hazardous. In the old French poetry, the discussion of a problem where much might be said on both sides, was called a jeu parti. See Poesies du Roy de Navarre, chanson xlviii.—Tyrwhitt's note to Chaucer, C. T. 16211.—Low Lat. iocus partitus, an alternative, a phrase used when a choice was given, of choosing one side or the other; see Ducange.—Lat. iocus, a joke, jest, sport, play, game; and partitus, divided, pp. of partiri, to part, from part-, stem of pars, a part. See Joke and Part. Der. jeopard, to hazard (coined by dropping -y), Judges, v. 18, M. E. jeoparden, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1566; jeopardise, vb., suggested by M. E. jeopardise, sb., Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 666; also jeopard-ous, spelt jeopardous in Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII, an. 25 (R.); jeopardous-ly. ¶ Observe the diphthong eo, representing the F. eu.

JERBOA, a genus of small rodent quadrupeds. (Arabic.) Mentioned in an E. translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. The animal takes its name from the strong muscles in its hind legs.—Arab. yarbu', '(1) the flesh of the back or loins, an oblique descending muscle; (2) the jerboa, an animal much resembling the dormouse, which makes prodigious bounds by means of its long hind legs; see Nat. Hist. of Aleppo, by Russell; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1705, col. 2.

JERK, to give a sudden movement, throw with a quick action. (E.) Cotgrave has: 'Pouetter, to scourge, lash, yerk, or jerke.' In Shak. as a sb., L. L. L. iv. 2. 129. 'A ierk, verber; 'Levins, ed. 1570. 'With that which jerks [lashes?] the hams of every jade;' Bp. Hall, Satires, b. iii. sat. 5. l. 26. Lowland Sc. yerk, to beat, strike smartly; a smart blow. 'To jerke or gerke;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Halliwell also gives: 'Girk, a rod; also, to beat.' β. Another form is jert. Cotgrave has: 'Attainte, a reach, hit, blow, stroke, . . a gentle nip, quip, or jert, a sleight gird, or taxation.' γ. Moreover, the words jeri and gird were regarded as equivalent; thus Sherwood has, in his index to Cotgrave: 'A jert or gird, Attainte.' The words jerke, jert, and gird are probably all connected, and all had once the same meaning, viz. to strike, esp. with a whip or rod. δ. The only one of these three forms found in M. E. is girden, to strike; see gurdin, in Strattmann. The original of girden, to strike, is seen in A. S. gyrd, gierd, a rod; Grein, i. 536. See Gird (α), Grilde, and Yard. ¶ It may be added that the usual meaning of jerke in old authors is to whip, to lash; as partly shewn above. Der. jerke, sb. [†]

JERKED BEEF, dried beef. (Peruvian.) The beef thus called is cut into thin slices and dried in the sun to preserve it. The process is explained in Capt. Basil Hall's Extracts from a Journal written on the coasts of Chili, Peru, and Mexico, vol. i. c. 4. The name is a singular corruption of charkui, the S. American name for it, which appears to be a Peruvian word. 'The male deer and some of the coarser kind of the Peruvian sheep were slaughtered; . . and their flesh, cut into thin slices, was distributed among the people, who converted it into charkui, the dried meat of the country;' Prescott, Conquest of Peru, c. v. The term is here applied only to dried venison and mutton; the beef is prepared in Chili.

JERKIN, a jacket, short coat. (Du.) 'With Dutchkin dublets, and with terkins iagge;' Gascoigne, Steel Glass, l. 1161 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat).—Du. jurken or *jurken (not recorded), regularly formed as a diminutive from Du. jurk, a frock (Sewel). See Sewel's Du. Grammar, where we find that 'almost all Dutch nouns may be changed into diminutives' (p. 35); the termination used for this purpose being formerly -ken, now disused and supplanted by -je or -je. Sewel instances 'huys, a house; whence huysje or huysken, a little house.'

JERSEY, fine wool, a woollen jacket. (Jersey.) 'Jersey, the finest wooll taken from other sorts of wooll, by combing it;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Lit. 'Jersey wool,' and named from Jersey, one of the Channel islands. On the termination -ey, meaning 'island,' see Island. Of Scand. origin.

JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE, a kind of sunflower. (Ital.,—L.) 'There is a soup called Palestine soup. It is made, I believe, of artichokes called Jerusalem artichokes, but the Jerusalem artichoke is so called from a mere misunderstanding. The artichoke, being a kind of sun-flower, was called in Italian girasole, from the Latin gyrus, circle, and sol, sun. Hence Jerusalem artichokes and Palestine soups!' Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th ed. ii. 404.—Ital. girasole, a sun-flower.—Ital. girare, to turn; and sole, sun.—Lat. gyrare, to turn round, from gyrus (=Gk. κύρος), a circle; and solem, acc. of sol, sun. See Gyre and Solar.

JESSAMINE, the same as Jasmine, q. v.

JESSES, straps of leather or silk, with which hawks were tied by the legs. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 261. 'That like an hauke, which feeling herself freed From bells and jesses which did let her flight;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 4. 19. So called from their use in letting the hawk fly. A corruption of O. F. jects or gects. 'Geet, a cast or throw, as at dice; les jects d'un oiseau, a hawk's Jesses;' Cot.—O. F. jecter, 'to cast, hurl;' id.—Lat. iactare, to hurl, throw, frequentative of iacere, to throw. See Jet (1). ¶ Really a double plural. Jess=O. F. jects (jets) is really a plural form; but this not being perceived, -es was added. A similar double plural occurs in sixpences (=six-pen-s-es), prov. E. nesses, for nest-s-es, nests. [†]

JEST, a joke, fun. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 241. Orig. a story, tale. M. E. geste, a story, a form of composition in which tales were recited. Let see wher [whether] thou canst tellen ought in geste;' Chaucer, C. T. 13861. 'I cannot geste'=I cannot tell tales like a gestour, or professed tale-teller; id. 17354. Geste=a tale, a saying; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 277.—O. F. geste, an exploit, a history of exploits, romance, tale; chansons de geste, heroic poems; see Burguy.—Lat. gesta, used for res gesta, a deed, exploit, lit. 'a thing performed.'—Lat. gestus, pp. of gerere, to carry on, do, perform.

β. Gerere stands for gesere, as shewn by pt. t. ge-si; from ✓GAS, to bring, extended from ✓GA, to come; cf. Skt. gá, to come; and see Come. Der. jest, vb., jest-ing-ly; also jest-er=M. E. gestour, a reciter of tales, as in: 'And gestours for to tellen tales,' Chaucer, C. T. 13775. From Lat. gerere are also formed gest-ure, gest-i-cu-late, con-gest-ion, di-gest, in-di-gest-ion, sug-gest, re-gist-er; also belli-ger-ent, con-ger-ies, ex-ag-ger-ate.

JESUIT, one of the Society of Jesus. (F.,—Span.,—L.,—Gk.,—Heb.) In Cotgrave. The order was founded in 1534 by Ignatius Loyola; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates.—O. F. Jesuite, 'a Jesuite;' Cot.—Span. Jesuita (the order being of Spanish foundation). Formed with suffix -ita (=Lat. -ita as in Lat. erem-ita=Gk. -ίτης as in ἐρημίτης, a hermit) from Lat. Jesu-, crude form of Jesus, q. v. Der. Jesuit-ic, Jesuit-ic-al, Jesuit-ic-al-ly, Jesuit-ism; all words with a sinister meaning, craft being commonly attributed to the Jesuits.

JESUS, the Saviour of mankind. (L.,—Gk.,—Heb.) In Wyclif's Bible.—Lat. Jesus (Vulgate).—Gk. Ἰησοῦς.—Heb. Yeshu'a (Jeshua, Nehem. viii. 17, another form of Joshua); contracted form of Yehoshua (Jehoshua, Numb. xiii. 16), signifying 'help of Jehovah' or 'Saviour'.—Heb. root yasha', to be large; in the Hiphil conjugation, to save. Der. Jesuit, q. v. Doublets, Joshua, Jeshua, Jehoshua.

☞ In M. E. commonly written in a contracted form (Ihs), which by editors is often printed Jhesus. This is really an error, the h standing for the Gk. h (long e), so that 'Ihs'=Iesus. So also 'Ihu'=Iesu. In Gk. capitals, it is IHC, where H=long e and C=s, being a form of the Gk. sigma; the mark above signifying that the form is contracted. In later times IHC became IHS. Lastly (the H being misunderstood) the ingenious fiction arose that IHS meant Iesus Hominum Salvator=Jesus Saviour of Men. The mark, being then unmeaning, was turned into a little cross, as on modern altarcloths.

JET (1), to throw out, fling about, spout. (F.,—L.) In Tudor-English it commonly means to fling about the body, to strut about, to stalk about proudly. 'How he jets under his advanced plumes;' Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 36. 'Then must ye stately goe, ietting vp and downe;' Ralph Roister Doister, A. iii. sc. 3. l. 121 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat). M. E. getten, ietten; see Prompt. Parv. pp. 192, 258, and Way's notes. 'I iette, I make a countenance with my legges, ie me iamboye; I iette with facyon and countenance to sette forth the myselfe, ie braggue;' Palsgrave.—O. F. jetter, jecter, also getter, 'to cast, hurl, throw, fling, dart or send out violently, put or push forth;' Cot.—Lat. iactare, to fling, frequent. of iacere, to throw. β. Lat. iacere is certainly closely related to Gk. λάττειν, to throw; see Iambio.

Der. jet, sb., M. E. get, in early use in the sense of 'fashion;' cf. 'Get, or manner of custome, Modus, consuetudo,' Prompt. Parv.; 'al of the newe get'=all in the new fashion, Chaucer, C. T. 684;

this answers to O. F. iect or geet (mod. F. jet), which Cot. explains by 'a cast or throw, as at dice.' [The mod. sense of jet is a spout of water, as in Pope, Dunciad, ii. 177.] Hence also jetteau, Spectator, no. 412, written for F. jet d'eau=a spout of water, a fountain (where F. eau=Lat. aqua, water). Also jet-sam, q. v., jett-y, q. v. From Lat. iactare (pp. iactus) are numerous derivatives; as, ab-ject, ad-ject-ive, con-ject-ure, de-ject, e-ject, inter-ject-ion, ob-ject, pro-ject, re-ject, sub-ject; also ad-jac-ent, e-jac-ulate; also amice, gist, joist, jesses.

JET (2), a black mineral, used for ornaments. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) 'His bill was blak, and as the jet it shon;' Chaucer, C. T. 14867.—O. F. jet, jaet, gayet, gagate, 'jet'; Cot.—Lat. gagatem, acc. of gagates, jet (whence the forms gagate, gayet, jaet, jet in successive order of development); see Trevisa, ii. 17, where the Lat. has gagates, Trevisa has gagates, and the later E. version has iette. Described in Pliny, xxxvi. 19.—Gk. γαγάτης, jet; so called from Γάγας, or Γάγυα, a town and river in Lycia, in the S. of Asia Minor. Der. jet-black; jett-y, Chapman, tr. of Homer, II. ii. 629; jett-inness.

JETSAM, JETSON, JETTISON, things thrown overboard. (Hybrid; F. and Scand.) 'Jetson is a thing cast out of the ship, being in danger of wreck, and beaten to the shore by the waters, or cast on the shore by mariners; Coke, vol. vi. fol. 106. a;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. An old term in Law French. A hybrid word, from O. F. jetter, to throw; and the Scand. suffix -sam, signifying 'together,' for which see FLOTSAM. Cf. F. 'faire le iect, to throw the lading of a ship overboard;' Cot. See JET (1).

JETTY, a projection, a kind of pier. (F.,—L.) Lit. 'thrown out.' The same as JUTTY, q. v.—O. F. jettée, 'a cast, hurle, throw, fling, also a jetty or jutty; also, the bank of a ditch, or the earth cast out of it when it is made;' Cot. Properly the fem. of the pp. of O. F. jetter, to throw. See JET (1).

JEW, a Hebrew. (F.,—L.,—Gk.,—Heb.) M. E. Jewes, pl. Jews; Chaucer, C. T. 12409; earlier, Giwes, Gius, Ancrén Riwe, p. 106.—O. F. Juis, pl. Jews (13th cent., Littré); later Juifs, pl., Juif, sing.; Cotgrave.—Late Lat. Iudeus.—Gk. Ἰουδαῖος, an inhabitant of Judæa.—Gk. Ἰουδαία, Judæa.—Heb. Yehūdāh, Judah, son of Jacob; lit. 'celebrated' or 'illustrious'.—Heb. root yādāh, to throw; in the Hithpiel conjugation, to praise, celebrate. Der. Jew-ess (with F. suffix); Jew-ish; Jew-ry, M. E. Iewerie, Chaucer, C. T. 13419, earlier Giwerie, Ancrén Riwe, p. 394, signifying 'a Jew's district,' from O. F. Juierie (Littré)=mod. F. Juiverie. Also Jewus-harp, sometimes called Jewis-trump, as in Beaum. and Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, A. v. sc. 2. l. 10; a name given in derision, prob. with reference to the harp of David. [†]

JEWEL, a precious stone, valuable ornament. (F.,—L.) M. E. iouel, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 112, l. 6; iuel, id. p. 77, l. 1.—O. F. joel, joel, jouel (Burguy); later jouau, 'a jewel;' Cot. A dimin. (with suffix -el) of O. F. and F. joie, joy, pleasure; so that the sense is 'a little joy,' i. e. a toy, trinket. Cf. Span. joyel, a jewel, trinket, dimin. of joya, a jewel, present (answering in form to F. joie, though not used in same sense). Also Ital. giojello, a jewel, dimin. of gioja, (1) joy, (2) a jewel. See further under JOY. ¶ The use of Span. joya and Ital. gioja in the sense of 'jewel' leaves no doubt as to the etymology; but the word was misunderstood in the middle ages, so that 'jewel' was translated into Low Latin in the form jocale, preserving the sense of 'toy,' but missing the etymology, which was thought to be from Lat. iocus instead of from gaudium, the sense of the two words being not very different. Der. jewell-er, with which cf. O. F. joyallier, 'a jeweller,' Cot.; jewell-er-y or jewel-ry, with which cf. O. F. joyaulerie, 'jewelling, the trade or mystery of jewelling,' Cot.

JIB (1), the foremost sail of a ship. (Dan.) 'Jib, the foremost sail of a ship;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. So called because readily shifted from side to side; the sb. being derived from the verb, not vice versa. See JIB (2). Der. jib-boom (Ash).

JIB (2), to shift a sail from side to side. (Dan.) 'Jib, to shift the boom-sail from one side of the mast to the other;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'To jib round the sail;' Cook, Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 3 (R.). Also spelt jibe. 'Jibing, shifting the boom-sail from one side of the mast to the other (Falconer);' id. Also spelt gybe. 'Gybing, the act of shifting the boom-sail,' &c.; id.—Dan. gibbe, 'to gybe, a naut. term;' Ferrall. + Du. gijpen (of sails), to turn suddenly; Halma (cited by Wedgwood). Sewel gives: 'Gypen, 't overslaan der zeilen [the overturning of a sail] a sail's being turned over by an eddy wind.' [The forms gibe, gybe, with the long vowel, are probably due to this Du. form rather than to the Danish.] + Swed. dial. gippa, verb, used of a sudden movement or jerk; thus, if a man stands on the lower end of a slanting plank, and a sudden weight falls on the upper end and tips it up, he is gippad, i. e. jerked up; Rietz. Cf. Swed. guppa, to move up and down. β. A nasalised form from the same base GIP appears in M. H. G. gempeln, to spring; and corresponding to Swed. guppa we have M. H. G. gumpen, to spring, and E. jump. See JUMP. γ. Conversely jib is a weakened form of jump, and is used of slight sudden movements. See further below.

JIB (3), to move restively, as a horse. (F.,—Scand.) 'Jib, said of a draught-horse that goes backwards instead of forwards;' Halliwell. A very early use of a compound from this verb occurs in M. E. regibben, to kick. 'Hit regibbeth anon, ase uet kelf and idel' = it kicks back again, like a fat and idle calf; Ancrén Riwe, p. 138.—O. F. giber, 'se débattre des pieds et des mains, s'agiter, lutter,' i. e. to struggle with the hands and feet; Roquefort. Whence O. F. regiber (Roquefort), mod. F. regimber, to kick; accounting for the M. E. regibben. β. Of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. dial. gippa, to jerk; Swed. guppa, to move up and down. See JIB (2) and JUMP.

JIBE, the same as GIBE, q. v. (Scand.)

JIG, a lively tune or dance. (F.,—M. H. G.) As sb. in Shak. Much Ado, ii. 1. 77; Hamlet, ii. 2. 522. As vb., Hamlet, iii. 1. 150.—O. F. gige, gigue, a sort of wind instrument, a kind of dance (Roquefort); but it was rather a stringed instrument, as noted by Littré and Burguy; which may be verified by consulting Dante's use of the Ital. giga in Paradiso, xiv. 118. Cf. Span. giga, a jig, lively tune or dance; Ital. giga, 'a fiddle, a croud, a kit, a violin' (Florio).—M. H. G. gige, mod. G. geige, a fiddle. β. Allied to M. E. gigge, a whirling thing (cf. E. whirligig); and perhaps to JOG. Cf. 'This hous was al so ful of gigges'—this house was as full of irregular sounds; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 852. See GIG, Giglet. Der. jig, verb, jig-maker, Hamlet, iii. 2. 131. Doublet, jig, q. v.

JILT, a flirt, inconstant woman. (L.) 'Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt;' Otway, The Orphan, i. 1. 66. 'And who is jilted for another's sake;' Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 530. A contraction of jillett. 'A jillett brak his heart at last;' Burns, On a Scotch Bard, Gone to the W. Indies, st. 6. A diminutive (with suffix -et) of jill, a personal name, but used in the same sense as jilt or jillett. Hence the compounds flirt-gill, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; and flirt-Gillian, Beaum. and Fletcher, The Chances, iii. 1 (Landlady). Cf. 'Bagasse, a baggage, queane, jyll, punke, flirt;' Cot. Gill is short for Juliana; see GILL (4). Der. jilt, verb. ¶ The use of jillett for jill was probably suggested by the similar word giglet or giglet, a wanton woman (Meas. for Meas. v. 352), which is to be connected with O. F. gigues, a gay girl (Roquefort), and with JIG. The sense of jig may have affected that of jill.

JINGLE, to make a clinking sound. (E.) M. E. gingelen, ginglen; Chaucer, C. T. 170. A frequentative verb from the base jink, allied to and probably the same word as chink, a word of imitative origin; see CHINK (2). A fuller form appears in jangle; see JANGLE. Der. jingle, sb. [†]

JOB (1), to peck with the beak, as a bird. (C.?) 'Becquade, a pecke, job, or bob with the beake;' Cot. 'Iobbyn wythe the bylle' = to job with the beak; Prompt. Parv. Prob. of Celtic origin; from Irish and Gael. gob, the beak or bill of a bird; W. gwp, a bird's head and neck. For the change of g to j, see JOB (2). ¶ The use as a verb may have been suggested by the verb to chop.

JOB (2), a small piece of work. (F.,—C.) In Pope, Epilogue to Satires, i. 104; ii. 40; Donne versified, Sat. iv. 142. He also has the verb: 'And judges job,' Moral Essays, to Bathurst, 141. Spelt jobb in Kersey, ed. 1715. Also spelt gob. 'Gob, a portion, a lump; hence the phrase, to work by the gob;' Halliwell. Dimin. forms are seen in: 'Gobbet, a morsel, a bit; a large block of stone is still called a gobbet by workmen;' Halliwell. 'Jobbel, Jobbet, a small load, generally of hay or straw, Oxfordshire;' id. In earlier authors, only gobbet is found; M. E. gobet, Chaucer, C. T. 698.—O. F. gob, lit. a mouthful. 'L'avalla tout de gob, at one gulp, or as one gobbet, he swallowed it;' Cot. Cf. gober, 'to ravine, devoure, swallow great morsels, let down whole gobbets;' Cot. β. Of Celtic origin; cf. Celt. and Irish gob, the bill or beak of a bird, also, ludicrously, the mouth. Thus a job is a mouthful, morsel, bit; we use bit in the same way. See Gobbet, and JOB (1). Der. job, verb; jobb-er, jobb-er-y.

JOCKEY, a man who rides a race-horse. (F.,—L.,—Gk.,—Heb.) 'As jockies use;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. l. 6 from end. 'Whose jockey-rider is all spurs;' id. pt. iii. c. ii. last line. A Northern E. pronunciation of jackey, dimin. of jack as a personal name; see JACK (1). A name given to the lads who act as grooms and riders. Der. jockey, verb; jockey-ism, jockey-ship. [†]

JOCOSE, merry. (L.) Jocose is in Kersey, ed. 1715. Jocosity, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Lat. iocusus, sportive.—Lat. iocus, a joke, sport. See JOKO. Der. jocosa-ly, jocosi-ty.

JOCULAR, droll. (L.) 'My name is Jokhiel, . . . An airy jocular spirit;' Ben Jonson, Masques, The Fortunate Isles.—Lat. iocularis, jocular.—Lat. ioculus, a little jest; dimin. of iocus, a jest; see JOKO. And see JUGGLE. Der. jocular-ly, jocular-ity.

JOCUND, merry, pleasant. (F., -L.) M. E. ioconde, Ioconde; Chaucer, C. T. 16064. -O. F. *joconde, not recorded, but it obviously must have existed; Roquefort gives the derived adj. jocond-enx, and the derived sb. jocondité. -Lat. iucundus, pleasant, agreeable. Put for iuv-cundus (iuv-cundus), from Lat. iuvare, to help, aid; so that the orig. sense was 'help-ful.' See Adjutant. Der. jocund-ly, jocund-i-ty.

JOG, to push slightly, jolt. (C.) M. E. joggen, juggen. 'And him she joggeth;' Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 2705. 'And Iugged til a iustice' (Trin. MS. iogged to a iustice); P. Plowman, B. xx. 133, where it is used of riding in a jolting manner. -W. gogi, to shake, to agitate; gogis, a gentle slap. Cf. Irish gog, a nod of the head; gogaim, I nod, gesticulate; Gael. gog, a nodding or tossing of the head. Cf. Gk. κνύειν, to stir up, to mix up. β. From ✓KAG, weakened form of ✓SKAG, to shake; whence W. ysgogi, to wag, stir, shake, ysgog, a quick motion, and E. shog, as used in Hen. V. ii. 1. 47. See Shake. Der. Hence jog as a neuter verb, to move by jolts, ride roughly, trot, Wint. Ta. iv. 3. 132, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 213; jog-trot; jogg-le, frequentative form. ✎ Note that the connection with shake is only an ultimate one.

JOHN DORY, the name of a fish. (F., -L.) John Dory is the vulgar name of the fish also called the dory. It occurs in Todd's Johnson, spelt John Dory, dory, and doree. 1. Dory or doree is merely borrowed from the F. dorée, the vulgar F. name of the fish, signifying 'golden' or 'gilded,' from its yellow colour. Dorée is the fem. of the pp. of the verb dorer, to gild. -Lat. deaurare, to gild, lit. 'cover with gold.' -Lat. de, prep. of, with; and aurum, gold. See Aureate. 2. The prefix John is probably a mere sailor's expletive, and nothing but the ordinary name; cf. jack-ass. It is usually explained as a corruption of F. jaune, yellow; but there is no reason why Englishmen should have prefixed this F. epithet, nor why Frenchmen should use such a tautological expression as jaune dorée. This suggested corruption is not 'a well-known fact,' but given as a mere guess in Todd's Johnson. [†]

JOIN, to connect, unite, annex. (F., -L.) M. E. ioynen, ioignen; P. Plowman, B. ii. 136; A. ii. 106. -O. F. joindre, to join. -Lat. iungere, pp. iunctus, to join (base iug-). -✓YUG, to join, longer form of ✓YU, to join; cf. Skt. yuj, to join, connect, yu, to bind, join, mix; also Gk. ζευγνύω, to join, yoke. From the same root is E. yoke; see Yoke. Der. join-er, Sir T. More, Works, p. 345 d; join-er-y; joind-er (from F. joindre), Tw. nt. v. 160; and see joint, junct-ure, junct-ion, junta. From F. joindre we also have ad-join, con-join, dis-join, en-join, sub-join. From Lat. iungere (pp. iunct-us) we have ad-junct, con-junct-ure, con-junct-ion, dis-junct-ion, in-junct-ion; whilst the Lat. base iug- appears in con-jug-al, con-jug-ate, sub-jug-ate, jug-ul-ar.

JOINT, a place where things are joined, a hinge, seam. (F., -L.) M. E. ioynt, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 175, C. xx. 142; 'out of ioynite,' id. C. x. 215. -O. F. joinct, joint, 'a joint, joining;' Cot. -O. F. joinct, joint, pp. of joindre, to join; see Join. Der. joint, adj. (from the pp.); joint-ly, joint-stock; joint, verb, Ant. and Cleop. i. 2. 96; joint-ure, Merry Wives, iii. 4. 50, from O. F. joincture, 'a joining, coupling, yoking together' (Cot.), from Lat. iunctura, orig. fem. of fut. part. of iungere, to join; joint-ress (short for joint-ur-ess), Hamlet, i. 2. 9.

JOIST, one of a set of timbers which support the boards of a floor. (F., -L.) Sometimes called jist (with i as in Christ); and vulgarly jice, riming with mice. 'They were fayne to lay pavesses [large shields] and targes on the joystes of the bridg to passe over;' Bernal, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 415 (R.) M. E. giste, gyste. 'Gyste, balke, Trabes;' Prompt. Parv. p. 196. 'Gyst that gothe ouer the florth, soliue, giste;' Palsgrave -O. F. giste, 'a bed, couch, lodging, place to lie on' (Cot.); also a joist, as in Palsgrave; mod. F. gîte. So called because these timbers form a support for the floor to lie on. -O. F. gisir, to lie, lie on. See Gist, which is a doublet. Der. joist, verb.

JOKE, a jest, something mirthful. (L.) 'Joking decides great things;' Milton, tr. of Horace (in Minor Poems). -Lat. iocus, 'a joke, jest.' β. Probably from the ✓DIW, to play (cf. Skt. div, to play at dice); whence diucus, dious, iocus. Der. joke, vb.; and see joc-ose, joc-ul-ar. ✎ The Du. jok, a joke, is merely borrowed (like the E. word) from Latin.

JOLLY, merry, plump. (F., -Scand.) M. E. Ioly, ioly, ioli, Chaucer, C. T. 3263. He also has ioliy, id. 4368; iolinesse, id. 10603; iolitee, id. 10592. The older form is Iolif or iolif; King Alisaunder, l. 155. -O. F. jolif, later joli, 'jolly, gay, trim, fine, gallant, neat;' Cot. β. The orig. sense is 'festive.' -Icel. jól, Yule, a great feast in the heathen time; see jól in Icel. Dict. See Yule. Cf. Du. joelen, to revel; from the same source. Der. jolli-ly, jolli-ty, jolli-ness.

JOLLY-BOAT, a small boat belonging to a ship. (Dan.) In Todd's Johnson, -Dan. jolle, a yawl, jolly-boat. + Swed. julle, a yawl. + Du. jol, a yawl, skiff. See Yawl. ✎ Jolly is a corruption of the Dan. form, and yawl of the Du. form. Boat is here a needless addition, due to the corruption into what appears like the E. adj. jolly.

JOLT, to shake violently, to jerk. (E.) Formerly also joult. Cotgrave explains F. heurtade as 'a shock, knock, jur [jar], jolt, push;' and heurtur as 'to knock, push, jur, jolt, strike.' Also found in the comp. jolt-head, a thick-headed fellow, Two Gent. iii. 1. 290; Tam. Shrew, iv. 1. 169. 'Teste de bœuf, a joult-head, jober-noll, loger-head, one whose wit is as little as his head is great;' Cot. In North's Plutarch, p. 133 (R.), or p. 158, ed. 1631, we find some verses containing the word jolt-head, as well as the expression 'this heavy jolting pate,' said of Jupiter, when regarded as a stupid tyrant.

β. The frequent association of jolt with head or pate is the key to the history of the word. Jolt-head=jolled-head, one whose head has been knocked against another's, or against the wall, a punishment for stupid or sulky scholars. The shorter form joll was especially (perhaps only) used in this sense, for the plain reason that it was formed from the sb. joll or jowl, the cheek or side of the head.

γ. It will be found, accordingly, that the words occur in the following chronological order, viz. (1) joll, the cheek, of A. S. origin; (2) joll, to knock the head; and (3) jolt-head and jolt. 'Iol, or heed, iolle, Caput;' Prompt. Parv. 'Iolle of a fysshe, teste;' Palsgrave, 'Ther they jollde [beat on the head] Jewes thorowe;' M. S. Calig. A. ii. f. 117; cited in Halliwell. 'They may joll horns [knock heads] together;' As You Like It, i. 3. 39. 'How the knave jowls it [viz. a skull] to the ground;' Hamlet, v. 1. 84. 'Joll, the beak of a bird, or jaw-bone of an animal; hence, to peck; Norfolk;' Halliwell. 'Joll, to job with the beak, as rooks job for worms, or for corn recently sown;' Marshall's Rural Economy, East Norfolk (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 3).

δ. Even if the above equation of jolt to joll'd be not accepted, the facts remain (1) that jolt is an extension of joll, to knock the head, or peck with the head (as a bird), and (2) that joll, verb, is from joll or jowl, sb. ε. It may be added that jolt seems to have acquired a frequentative sense, 'to knock often,' and was soon used generally of various kinds of jerky knocks. 'He whipped his horses, the coach jolted again;' Rambler, no. 34 (R.) See further under Jowl. Der. jolt, sb.

JONQUIL, a kind of narcissus. (F., -L.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Accented jonquill, Thomson's Seasons, Spring, 548. -Mod. F. jonquille, a jonquil. So named from its rush-like leaves; whence it is sometimes called Narcissus juncifolius. -F. jonc, a rush. -Lat. iuncus, a rush. See Junket. ✎ So also Span. junquillo, Ital. giunchiglia, a jonquil; from Span. juncos, Ital. giuncos, a rush.

JORDAN, a pot, chamber-pot. (L.? -Gk.? -Heb.?) M. E. Jordan, Chaucer, C. T. 12239; see Tyrwhitt's note. Also Iurdon, Iordeyne; see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note; p. 267. Halliwell explains it as 'a kind of pot or vessel formerly used by physicians and alchemists. It was very much in the form of a soda-water bottle, only the neck was larger, not much smaller than the body of the vessel; &c.'

β. Origin uncertain; but it may very well have been named from the river Jordan (Lat. Iordanes, Gk. Ἰορδάνης, Arab. urduwn, Rich. Pers. Dict., p. 56). The explanation is simple enough, and accounts at the same time for the English use of Jordan as a surname. 'We must remember this was the time of the Crusades. It was the custom of all pilgrims who visited the Holy Land to bring back a bottle of water from the Jordan for baptismal purposes. . . . It was thus that Jordan as a surname has arisen. I need not remind students of early records how common is Jordan as a Christian name, such cognomens as 'Jordan de Abingdon' or 'Jordan le Clerc' being of the most familiar occurrence;' Bardsley, Our English Surnames; p. 53. Thus Jordan is merely short for 'Jordan-bottle.' Halliwell further explains how the later sense (as in Shakespeare) came about; the bottle being, in course of time, occasionally used for baser purposes. ✎ The explanation usually given, that Jordan=earthen, from Dan. and Swed. jord, earth, is impossible. The latter syllable was originally long, as in Chaucer's use of Iordanés, riming with Galiánés, and as shown by the M. E. spelling Iordeyne. Besides which, there is no such word as jord-en; the Dan. and Swed. adj. is jord-isk, which, moreover, does not mean 'earthen,' but rather 'earthly' or 'terrestrial.' The suggestion is, in fact, inadmissible.

JOSTLE, JUSTLE, to strike or push against. (F.; with E. suffix.) [Not in P. Plowman, as said in R.] 'Thou justlest nowe too nigh;' Roister Doister, iii. 3. 129 (in Spec. of Eng., ed. Skeat). Formed, with E. frequentative suffix -le, from just or joust; see Joust.

JOT, a tittle. (L., -Gk., -Heb.) In Spenser, Sonnet 57. Spelt iote in Udal, Prol. to Ephesians, and Phaer's Virgill, Æn. b. xi; see Richardson. Englished from Lat. iota, Matt. v. 18 (Vulgate). -Gk.

lōra, the name of the Gk. letter ι.—Heb. yōd (y), the smallest letter of the Heb. alphabet. β. Hence also Du. jot, Span. and Ital. jota, a jot, tittle. See the Bible Word-book. Der. jot, verb, in the phr. 'to jot down' = to make a brief note of. ¶ Not the same word as prov. E. jot, to jolt, jog, nudge; which is prob. from O.F. jacter, 'to swing, toss, tumble'; Cot. See Jet (1).

JOURNEY, a day's travel, travel, tour. (F.,—L.) M. E. Iornee, Iournee. It means 'a day's travel' in Chaucer, C. T. 2740. Spelt jurnie, Ancren Riwe, p. 352, l. 29.—F. journée, 'a day, or whole day; also . . . a daies worke or labour; a daies journey, or travell;' Cot. β. F. journée answers to Span. jornada, Ital. giornata, Low Lat. jornata, a day's work; all formed with the fem. ending of a pp. as if from a verb *jornare, from the stem jorn- (= diurn-), which appears in Low Lat. jorn-ale = E. journal.—Lat. diurn-us, daily. See Journal. Der. journey, verb, Rich. III, ii. 2. 146; journey-man, Rich. II, i. 3. 274.

JOUST, JUST, to tilt, encounter on horseback. (F.,—L.) M. E. Iusten, Iousten; Chaucer, C. T. 96; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 82.—O. F. jouster, 'to just, tilt, or tourney;' Cot. (mod. F. jouter). [Cf. Ital. giostrare, Span. justar, to tilt.] β. The orig. sense is merely 'to meet' or 'to approach,' a sense better preserved in O. F. adjouster, to set near, to annex; (not E. adjust). γ. The hostile sense was easily added as in other cases; cf. E. to meet (often in a hostile sense), to encounter, and M. E. assemble, to fight, contend, so common in Barbour's Bruce. So also F. rencontre.—Low Lat. iustare, to approach, cause to approach, join; see Ducange.—Lat. iusta, near, close, hard by; whence O. F. jouste, 'neer to, hard by;' Cot.

8. The form iusta = iug-is-tā, fem. abl. of the superl. form of adj. iug-is, continual; from base iug- of iungere, to join.—✓ YUG, to join; see Join. Der. joust, sb., M. E. Iuste, Iouste, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 74. Also jost-le, q. v.

JOVIAL, mirthful. (F.,—L.) In the old astrology, Jupiter was 'the joyfulest star, and of the happiest augury of all;' Trench. Study of Words. 'The heavens, always jovial!', i. e. propitious, kindly; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 51.—O. F. Jovial, 'joviall, sanguine, born under the planet Jupiter;' Cot.—Lat. Jovialis, pertaining to Jupiter. —Lat. Joui-, crude form of O. Lat. Jouis, Jove, only used in later Lat. in the form Iu-piter (= Iou-pater = Jove-father), Jupiter. β. Again Jouis stands for an older Diouis, from the base DYAU, from ✓ DIW, to shine. Cf. Skt. div, to shine, whence deva, a deity, Lat. deus, god; Skt. daiva, divine; also Skt. dya, inflectional base of Dyaus, which answers to Lat. Jouis, Gk. Zēus, A. S. Tiw, Icel. Týr, O. H. G. Zio or Ziu, one of the chief divinities of the Aryan races. See Max Müller, Lect. on Lang. vol. ii. See Deity and Tuesday. Der. jovial-ly, jovial-ness, jovial-ity.

JOWL, JOLE, the jaw or cheek. (E.) 'Cheek by jowl;' Mids. Nt. Dream, iii. 2. 338. 'Iol, or heed, iolle, Caput;' Prompt. Parv.; see Way's note. 'Iolle of a fish, teste;' Palsgrave. β. A corruption of chole, chowl, or chaul. 'The choule or crop adhering unto the lower side of the bill [of the pelican], and so descending by the throat; a bag or sachel very observable;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 1. § 5. 'His chyn with a chol lollode' = his chin wagged with the hanging flesh beneath it; Piers Ploughman's Crede, l. 224 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat). 'Bothe his chaul [jowl] and his chynne;' Alisaunder, fragment A, ed. Skeat, 1119 (in App. to Wm. of Palerne).

γ. Again, chaul is a corruption of an older form chavel = chavel. Thus in the Cursor Mundi, l. 7510, when David describes how he slew the lion and the bear, he says: 'I scook þam be þe berdes sua þat I þair chaffies raue in twa' = I shook them by the beards so that I reft their chaps in twain; where other MSS. read chavelis, chaulis, and chawles. So also: 'Chavylbone, or chaulbone or chaul-bone, Mandibula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 70; and see Way's note, who cites: 'A chafte, a chawlyle, a chekebone, maxilla;' and: 'Brancus, a gole, or a chawle.' And again: 'And þat deor to-dede his chafles' (later text, choules) = and the beast opened (?) his jaws; Layamon, 6507.—A. S. ceafst, the jaw; pl. ceafstas, jaws, chaps; Grein, i. 157. 'David . . . his ceafstas to-tar' = David tare asunder the chaps (of the bear); Ælfric on the Old Test.; in Sweet's A. S. Reader, p. 66, l. 319. + O. Sax. kafstós, pl. the jaws. Allied to Icel. kjapr, the mouth, jaw, esp. of a beast; see further under Chaps. The l in A. S. ceafst is a mere suffix, and the word must have originated from a Teutonic form KAF, signifying jaw; this exactly corresponds to the Aryan base GAF, akin to ✓ GABH, to gape, to yawn; cf. Skt. jabh, to gape, yawn, gabha, the jaws; Fick, i. 69. Another derivative from the Teut. base KAF appears in G. kiefen, the jaws. ¶ 1. It will be observed that jowl is used rather vaguely, meaning (1) jaw, (2) flesh on the chin, (3) cheek, (4) head. 2. The successive changes in the form of the word are numerous, but perfectly regular; commencing with a Teut. dimin. kaf-la, we deduce A. S. ceafst, whence chafste (weakened to chafle in Layamon), chavel, chaul, chaul, chōl, jōl, jole, jowl. 3. The usual derivation from A. S. ceole, the throat, is impossible; the o in that word is short, and ceole answers to G. kehle, the throat, with a different vowel-sound and a different sense. 4. The change from ch to j is well illustrated by the Norfolk jig-by-jole = cheek by jowl = cheek by chowl; see Halliwell. Der. jolt, q. v.

JOY, gladness, happiness. (F.,—L.) M. E. Joye, ioye (dissyllable), Chaucer, C. T. 1873; earlier, in Ancren Riwe, p. 218.—O. F. joye, joie, 'joy, mirth;' Cot. Oldest form goie; cf. Ital. gioia, joy, a jewel; Span. joya, a jewel.—Lat. neut. pl. gaudia, which was turned into a fem. sing. as in other cases (see Antiphon); from sing. gaudium, joy.—Lat. gaudere, to rejoice. See Gaud. Der. joy, verb, 2 Cor. vii. 13 (A. V.); joy-ful, M. E. jotefull, Gower, C. A. i. 191; joy-ful-ly, joy-ful-ness; joy-less, joy-less-ly, joy-less-ness; joy-ous, M. E. joy-ous, Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright, p. 120, l. 10; joy-ous-ly, joy-ous-ness.

JUBILATION, a shouting for joy. (L.) In Cotgrave.—F. jubilatio, 'a jubilation, exultation;' Cot.—Lat. iubilatio, acc. of iubilatio, a shouting for joy.—Lat. iubilatus, pp. of iubilare, to shout for joy.—Lat. iubilum, a shout of joy.

β. There is nothing to connect this with the following word; the resemblance seems to be accidental. The root is perhaps ✓ DIW, to play; see Joke. Der. jubil-ant, from pres. pt. of iubilare.

JUBILEE, a season of great joy. (F.,—L.,—Heb.) M. E. Jubilee, Chaucer, C. T. 7444.—O. F. jubilé, 'a jubilee, a year of releasing, liberty, rejoicing;' Cot.—Lat. iubilans, the jubilee, Levit. xxv. 11; masc. of adj. iubilans, belonging to the jubilee; Levit. xxv. 28.—Heb. yóbel, a blast of a trumpet, a shout of joy. ¶ There is some doubt as to the origin of the word; see Jubilee in the Concise Dict. of the Bible. Distinct from the word above.

JUDGE, an arbitrator, one who decides a cause. (F.,—L.) M. E. Juge, iuge, Chaucer, C. T. 15931.—F. juge, 'a judge;' Cot.—Lat. iudicem, acc. of iudex, a judge. β. The stem iū-dic- = ius-dic-, meaning 'one who points out what is law;' from ius, law, and dic-are, to point out, make known. For ius, see Just. For dicare, see Indicate, Token. Der. judge, verb, M. E. Jugen, iuggen, Rob. of Glouc., p. 345, l. 11; judge-ship; judg-ment, M. E. iugement (three syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 807, 820; judgment-day, judgment-seat; and see judicature, judicial, judicious. Also ad-judge, pre-judge.

JUDICATURE, judgment. (F.,—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. judicature, 'judicature;' Cot.—Lat. iudicatura, fem. of fut. part. of iudicare, to judge.—Lat. iudic-, stem of iudex, a judge. See Judge. Der. (from Lat. iudicare) judica-ble; (from pp. iudicatus) judicat-ive (Lat. iudicativus), judicat-ory (Lat. iudicatorius).

JUDICIAL, pertaining to courts of law. (F.,—L.) In Cotgrave.—O. F. judiciel, 'judicial;' Cot.—Lat. iudicialis, pertaining to courts of law.—Lat. iudici-um, a trial, suit, judgment.—Lat. iudici-, crude form of iudex, a judge. See Judge. Der. judicial-ly; judici-ary (Lat. iudiciarius); and see below.

JUDICIOUS, full of judgment, discreet. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Mach. iv. 2. 16.—F. judicieux, 'judicious;' Cot.—Lat. *iudiciosus, not found, but regularly formed with suffix -osus from iudici-, crude form of iudex, a judge. Der. judicious-ly, judicious-ness.

JUG, a kind of pitcher. (Heb.?) 'A iugge, poculum;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'A iugge to drink in;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. Of uncertain origin. Mr. Wedgwood's suggestion is probably right; he connects it with 'Jug or Judge, formerly a familiar equivalent of Joan or Jenny.' In this case, the word is of jocular origin; which is rendered probable by the fact that a drinking-vessel was also called a jack, and that another vessel was called a jill. 'A jache of leather to drink in;' Minsheu. Jack seems to have been the earlier word, and jill was used in a similar way to go with it. 'Be the Jacks fair within, the Jills fair without;' Tam. of Shrew, iv. 1. 51; on which Stevens remarks that it is 'a play upon the words, which signify two drinking-measures as well as men and maid-servants.' β. The use of Jug for Joan appears in Cotgrave, who gives: 'Jehannette, Jug, or Jinny;' and again: 'Jannette, Judge, Jenny, a woman's name.' How Jug came to be used for Joanna is not very obvious; but pet names are liable to strange confusion, as in the case of Jack (Jacob) and John. The forms Jug and Judge are (I think) due to the Heb. Judith (Gen. xxvi. 34). Similarly, Wedgwood cites 'Susan, a brown earthenware pitcher,' used in the district of Gower (Philol. Proceedings, iv. 223). ¶ The curious word juble, in the sense of bottle, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 13000; but jug can hardly be a corruption of it. [†]

Jogelour, iogelour, Chaucer, C. T. 7049, 10533. 'Ther saw I pleyen iogelours, Magiciens, and tregetoures'; Chaucer, Ho. Fame, iii. 169. Spelt juglur, with the sense of 'buffoon'; Ancren Riwle, p. 210, l. 30. — O. F. jogleres, jogleor, jugleor, jougleor (Burguy); later jongleur, with inserted n; hence 'jongleur, a jugler'; Cot. — Lat. ioculator, a jester. — Lat. ioculator, pp. of ioculati, to jest. — Lat. ioculus, a little jest, dimin. of iocus, a joke; see Joke. [The A. S. geogelere (Somner) is unauthorised.] Der. juggler-y, M. E. Ioglerie, Chaucer, C. T. 11577. Hence also was developed the verb juggle, formerly iuglen, used by Tyndall, Works, p. 101, col. 2, l. 7 from bottom (see Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 169, l. 70, p. 170, l. 101); juggl-ing, juggle, sb.

JUGULAR, pertaining to the side of the neck. (L.) Formerly jugulary. 'Jugularie, of or belonging to the throat'; Minshew, ed. 1627. Formed with suffix -ar or -ary (= Lat. -arius) from iugulum or iugulus, the collar-bone (so called from its joining together the shoulders and neck); also, the hollow part of the neck above the collar-bone; also, the throat. Dimin. of iugum, that which joins, a yoke. — YUG, to join. See Yoke, Join.

JUICE, sap, fluid part of animal bodies. (F., — L., — M. E. Iuse, iuce; Gower, C. A. ii. 265. — O. F. jus, 'juice, liquor, sap, pottage, broth'; Cot. — Lat. ius, broth, soup, sauce, pickle; lit. 'mixture.' + Skt. yúsha, soup. — YU, to bind, mix; cf. Skt. yu, to bind, join, mix; Gk. ζυνός, broth; ζυν, leaven. Der. juic-y, juice-less, juic-i-ness.

JUJUBE, the fruit of a certain tree. (F., — L., — Gk., — Pers.) The tree is the Rhamnus zizyphus or Rhamnus jujuba. 'Iuiubes, or iubeb-fruit'; Minshew, ed. 1627. — O. F. jujubes, 'the fruit or plum called jujubes'; Cot. A pl. form. — Lat. zizyphum, the jujube; fruit of the tree zizyphus. — Gk. ζιζυφον, fruit of the tree ζιζυφος. — Pers. zayzafún, zizfún, zizafún, the jujube-tree; Rich. Dict. p. 793.

JULEP, a sweet drink, demulcent mixture. (F., — Span., — Pers.) 'This cordial julep here'; Milton, Comus, 672. 'Good wine . . . made in a julep with suger'; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 18. — F. julep, 'a julep, or juleb, a drink made either of distilled waters and syrups mixed together; or of a decoction sweetened with honey and sugar, or else mingled with syrups'; Cot. — Span. julepe, julep. — Pers. juláb, julep; from guláb, rose-water, also, julep; Rich. Dict. pp. 512, 1239. — Pers. gul, a rose; and áb, water; id. pp. 1238, 1.

JULY, the name of the seventh month. (L.) Chaucer, Treat. on the Astrolabe, calls the month Iulius, Iuyl, Iuylle; pt. i. § 10. July is Englished from Lat. Iulius, a name given to this month (formerly called Quintilis) in honour of Caius Julius Cæsar, who was born in this month. ¶ Quintilis is from quintus, fifth, because this was formerly the fifth month, when the year began in March. Quintus is from quinque, five; see Five.

JUMBLE, to mix together confusedly. (Scand.) 'I jumblelle, I make a noyse by removng of heavy thynges. I jumble as one dothe that can [not] play upon an instrument, je brouille'; Palsgrave. Here it means to make a confused noise. Chaucer uses the equivalent form jombren. 'Ne jombre eek no discordant thing yfere' = do not jumble discordant things together; Troilus, ii. 1037. But Sir T. More uses the word in the sense of 'to mingle harmoniously'; as in: 'Let vs . . . see how his diffinicion of the church and his heresies will jumber and agree together among themselves'; Works, p. 612a. Comparing this with the phr. 'to jump together' (= to agree with) we may conclude that jumble (or jumber, or jumper) is merely the frequentative form of the verb to jump, used transitively. Thus jumble = to make to jump, i. e. to jolt or shake about, confuse; hence, to rattle, make a discord; or, on the other hand, intransitively, to jump with, agree with. See Jump (1). ¶ The frequent. suffix appears to be English, not (in this case) borrowed. Der. jumble, sb.; jumbel-ing-ly.

JUMP (1), to leap, spring, skip. (Scand.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 53. The frequentative form jumper occurs in Sir T. More, and jombren in Chaucer; see quotations s.v. Jumble. Hence the word jump may be referred at least to the 14th century, though, apparently, once a rare word. Of Low German, or Scand. origin. — Swed. dial. gumpa, to spring, jump, or wag about heavily and clumsily (Rietz); cf. Swed. guppa, to move up and down. + Dan. gumpe, to jolt. + M. H. G. gumpen, to jump; gumpeln, to play the buffoon; gempeln, to jump, dimin. form of prov. G. gampen, to jump, spring, hop, sport; see Schmeller's Bavarian Dict.; cf. M. H. G. gampelmann, a buffoon, jester, one who plays antics. + Icel. goppa, to skip. β. Fick (iii. 101) gives the Teut. base as GAMB, and connects these words with Icel. gabba, to mock; see Gab. But I would rather connect jump with jib; see Jib (2), Jib (3). Der. jump, sb., used in the sense of 'lot' or 'hazard'; Antony, iii. 8. 6. Also jumb-le, q. v., and jump (2).

JUMP (2), exactly, just, pat. (Scand.) 'Jump at this dead hour'; Hamlet, i. 1. 65; cf. v. 2. 386; Oth. ii. 3. 392. From the verb above, in the sense to agree or tally, commonly followed by with, but also used without it. 'Both our inventions meet and jump in one'; Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 295. 'They jump not on a just account'; Oth. i. 3. 5. See Jump (1), Jumble.

JUNCTION, a joining. (Lat.) Used by Addison, according to Todd, who omits the reference. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from Lat. iunctionem, acc. of iunctio, a joining. — Lat. iunctus, pp. of iungere, to join. See Join.

JUNCTURE, a union, critical moment. (Lat.) 'Signes workings, planets iunctures, and the eleuated poule' [pole]; Warner, Albion's England, b. v. (R.) 'Juncture, a joyning or coupling together'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. iunctura, a joining; orig. fem. of fut. part. of iungere, to join. See Join. ¶ The sense of 'critical moment' is probably of astrological origin; cf. the quotation from Warner.

JUNE, the sixth month. (Lat.) Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10, has Iunius and Iuyn; the latter answering to F. Juin. Englished from Lat. Iunius, the name of the sixth month and of a Roman gens or clan. The word is probably from the same root as Junior, q. v.

JUNGLE, country covered with trees and brushwood. (Skt.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — Skt. jaigala, adj. dry, desert. Hence jungle = waste land. ¶ The Skt. short a sounds like u in mud; hence the E. spelling. Der. jungl-y. [†]

JUNIOR, younger. (Lat.) In Lewis, ed. 1570. — Lat. iunior, comparative of iuuenis, young; so that iunior stands for iuuenior. Cf. Skt. yuvan, young. See Juvenile. Der. junior-ship, junior-i-ty.

JUNIPER, an evergreen shrub. (L.) In Lewis, ed. 1570. Spelt junipere; Spenser, Sonnet 26. — Lat. iuniperus, a juniper-tree. β. The sense is 'young-producing,' i. e. youth-renewing; from its evergreen appearance. From iūni = iuuenti, crude form of iuuenis, young; and -perus = -parus, from parere, to produce. See Juvenile and Parent. Der. gin (3), q. v.

JUNK (1), a Chinese three-masted vessel. (Port., — Chinese.) 'China also, and the great Atlantis, . . . which have now but junks and canoes' [canoes]; Bacon, New Atlantis, ed. 1639, p. 12. Also in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 42, 384. — Port. (and Span.) junko, a junk. — Chinese chū'an, 'a ship, boat, bark, junk, or whatever carries people on the water'; Williams, Chinese Dict., 1874, p. 120. Hence also Malay ajóng, a Chinese vessel called a junk; Marsden's Dict. p. 2. [†]

JUNK (2), pieces of old cordage, used for mats and oakum. (Port., — L.) 'Junk, pieces of old rope'; Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'Junk, a sea-word for any piece of an old cable'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — Port. junko, a rush; (in a ship) the junk; Vieyra's Dict. [So called from rush-made ropes.] — Lat. iuncus, a rush. B. Salt meat is also facetiously termed junk by the sailors, because it is as tough as old rope. ¶ Junk, a lump (Halliwell), is a different word, being put for chunk, a log of wood; see Chump.

JUNKET, a kind of sweetmeat. (Ital., — L.) Also spelt juncate; Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 49. In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 250; Milton, L'Allegro, 102. The orig. sense was a kind of cream-cheese, served up on rushes, whence its name. Also used as a name for various delicacies made of cream. — Ital. giuncata, 'a kind of fresh cheese and creame, so called because it is brought to market upon rushes; also a iunket'; Florio. [Cf. O. F. jonchée, 'a bundle of rushes; also, a green cheese or fresh cheese made of milk that's curdled without any runnet, and served in a fraile [basket] of green rushes'; Cot. Also O. F. joncade, 'a certain spoon-meat made of cream, rose-water, and sugar'; id.] Formed as a pp. from Ital. giuncare, 'to strewe with rushes'; Florio. — Ital. giunco, a rush. — Lat. iuncum, acc. of iuncus, a rush. Der. junket, vb., junket-ing, Spectator, no. 466. From the same source, jonquil, q. v., junk (2).

JUNTA, a congress, council. (Span., — L.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. — Span. junta, a junta, congress. A fem. form of junto; see Junto.

JUNTO, a knot of men, combination, confederacy, faction. (Span., — L.) 'And these to be set on by plot and consultation with a junto of clergymen and licensers'; Milton, Colasterion (R.) — Span. junto, united, conjoined. — Lat. iunctus, pp. of iungere, to join. See Join and Junta.

JURIDICAL, pertaining to a judge or to courts of law. (L.) Blount, in his Glossographia, ed. 1674, has juridical and juridick. Formed, with suffix -al, from Lat. iuridicus, relating to the administration of justice. — Lat. iuri, crude form of ius, law; and dicare, to proclaim. See Just and Diction. Der. juridical-ly.

JURISDICTION, authority to execute laws. (F., — L.) M. E. Iurisdiction, Chaucer, C. T. 6901. — F. jurisdiction, 'jurisdiction'; Cot. — Lat. iurisdictionem, acc. of iurisdicatio, administration of justice. — Lat. iuris, gen. of ius, justice; and dictio, a saying, proclaiming. See Just and Diction.

JURISPRUDENCE, the knowledge of law. (F., — L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. jurisprudence; Cot. — Lat. iurispru- dentia, the science of law. — Lat. iuris, gen. of iur, law; and prudentia, skill, prudence. See Just and Prudence.

JURIST, a lawyer. (F., — L.) 'Jurist, a lawyer;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. juriste, 'a lawyer;' Cot. — Low Lat. iurista, a lawyer. Formed, with suffix -ista (= Gk. -ιστης), from iur, stem of iur, law. See Just.

JUROR, one of a jury. (F., — L.) In Shak. Hen. VIII, v. 3. 60. Imitated from F. juteur, 'a swearer or deposer, a juror;' Cot. — Lat. iuratore, acc. of iurator, a swearer. — Lat. iura, stem of iurare, to swear. See Jury.

JURY, a body of sworn men. (F., — L.) 'I durst as well trust the truth of one judge as of two iuries;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 988 d. — F. jurée, 'a jury,' Cot.; lit. a company of sworn men. Properly the fem. pp. of F. jurer, to swear. — Lat. iurare, to swear; lit. to bind oneself by an oath. — YU, to bind; cf. Skt. yu, to bind. Der. jurymen, Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 17. From same source, con-jure. And see juror.

JURY-MAST, a temporary mast. (Scand.?) 'Jury-mast, a yard set up instead of a mast that is broken down by a storm or shot, and fitted with sails, so as to make a poor shift to steer a ship;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Of unknown origin. β. Doubtless a sailor's word, and presumably of Du. or Scand. origin. A probable source is Dan. kiøre, a driving, from kiøre, to drive; common in compounds, as in kiøre-hest, a draught-horse, kiørevei, a carriage-way. Cf. Norw. kyøre, a drive, a journey without a stoppage; Swed. köra, Icel. keyra, to drive. In this view, a jury-mast is one by help of which a vessel drives along. ¶ The supposition that it is short for injury-mast is most unlikely, owing to the difference in accent.

JUST (1), righteous, upright, true. (F., — L.) M. E. Iust, iust; Wyclif, Luke, i. 17. — F. juste, 'just;' Cot. — Lat. iustus, just. Extended from iur, right, law, lit. what is fitting. — YU, to join; cf. Skt. yu, to join. Der. just = exactly, Temp. ii. 1. 6; just-ly, just-ness; and see justice, justify.

JUSTICE, integrity, uprightness; a judge. (F., — L.) M. E. Iustice, iustice, generally in the sense of judge; Chaucer, C. T. 316. — O. F. justice, (1) justice, (2) a judge (Burguy); the latter sense is not in Cotgrave. — Lat. iustitia, justice; Low Lat. iustitia, a tribunal, a judge; Ducange. — Lat. iusti = iusto, crude form of iustus, just; with suffix -ti-a (Schleicher, Compend. § 226). See Just (1). Der. justice-ship, justice-er, K. Lear, iii. 6. 59; justice-i-ary, from Low Lat. iustitarius.

JUSTIFY, to shew to be just or right. (F., — L.) M. E. Iustifier, iustifier; Wyclif, Matt. xii. 37; Gower, C. A. i. 84. — F. justifier, 'to justify;' Cot. — Lat. iustificare, to justify, shew to be just. — Lat. iusti = iusto, crude form of iustus, just; and -ficare, used (in composition) for facere, to make. See Just and Fact. Der. justifiable, justifi-ably, justifi-able-ness, justifier; also justificat-ion, Gower, C. A. i. 169; Wyclif, Rom. v. 16, from F. justification = Lat. acc. iustificacionem, which from pp. iustificatus; also justificat-ive, justificat-ory.

JUSTLE, the same as Jostle, q. v. In Temp. v. 158.

JUT, to project. (F., — L.) 'Jutting, proietus;' Levins. 'For-jetter, to jut, lean out, hang over;' Cot. A corruption of Jet (1), q. v. Der. jutt-y, sb. a projection, Macb. i. 6. 6, from O. F. jetée, 'a cast. . . a jetty, or jutting,' Cot.; hence jutt-y, vb. to project over, Hen. V, iii. 1. 13. See Jetty.

JUVENILE, young. (F., — L.) Juvenile is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; juvenilitie in Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. juvenile, 'youthful;' Cot. — Lat. iuvenilis, youthful. — Lat. iuvenis, young; cognate with E. Young, q. v. Der. juvenile-ness, juvenil-i-ty. Cf. juvenal (= juvenile), jocularly used, L. L. L. i. 2. 8. And see junior, June.

JUXTAPOSITION, contiguity, nearness. (L.; and F., — L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. A coined word, from Lat. iuxta, near; and F. position, position. See Joust and Position.

K.

KAIL, KALE, a cabbage. (North. E., — C.) Kail or kale is the North. E. form of cole or cole-wort. Spelt keal in Milton, Apology for Smectymnus (R.) — Gael. cal (gen. caif), kail, cabbage. + Irish cal. + Manx kail (Williams, Corn. Lexicon). + Corn. caul. + W. caul. + Bret. kaol. + Lat. caulis, a stalk, a cabbage; whence were borrowed Icel. kál, Dan. kaal, Swed. kål, A. S. cawel, caul; see Cole.

KAILS, nine-pins. (O. Low G.) Perhaps obsolete. Formerly also keyles. 'Quille, the keel of a ship, also a keyle, a big peg, or pin of wood, used at nine-pins or keyles;' Cotgrave. Spelt cailis, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, ii. 224 (Stratmann). Of O. Low Ger. origin; Du. kegel, 'a pin, kail; mid kegels spelen, to play at ninepins;' Sewel. (It may be observed that kails were shaped like a cone.) + Dan. kegle, a cone; kegler, ninepins. + Swed. kegla, a pin, cone. +

G. kegel, a cone, ninepin, bobbin (whence F. quille).

β. Evidently a dimin. form, with suffix -la. It seems to be related, on the one hand, to Du. keg, kegge, a wedge; and, on the other, to Icel. kaggi, a keg; see Keg.

KALEIDOSCOPE, an optical toy. (Gk.) Modern. Invented in 1814–17; Haydn. Coined from Gk. καλός, beautiful, εἶδος, crude form of εἶδος, appearance, and σκοπεῖν, to behold, survey. See Hale, Vision, Scope. Thus the sense is an instrument for 'beholding beautiful forms.'

KALENDAR, KALENDS; see Calendar, Calends.

KANGAROO, the name of a quadruped. (Australian.) 'The kangaroo is one of the latest discoveries in the history of quadrupeds;' tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. The native name (Todd). Der. kangaroo-rat. [†]

KAYLES, ninepins; see Kails.

KEDGE (1), to warp a ship. (Scand.) 'Kedge, to set up the foresail, and to let a ship drive with the tide, lifting up and letting fall the kedge-anchor, as often as occasion serves;' Kersey's Diet. ed. 1714. And see the longer description in Todd's Johnson. — Swed. dial. heka, to tug at anything tough, to work continually at anything, to drag oneself slowly forward, go softly, drive softly; Rietz. 'Hästen heka fot om fot i oföre,' the horse goes slowly, one foot before another, in the bad road; id. This well describes the tedious process of kedging, or making headway when the wind is contrary to the tide. Der. kedge-er, kedge-anchor. 'Kedge-anchors, or Kedgers, small anchors used in calm weather, and in a slow stream;' Kersey. So called because used to assist in kedging; see Todd's Johnson. Mr. Wedgwood identifies kedge-anchor with keg-anchor, which he supposes to be named from the keg or 'cask which is fastened to the anchor to shew where it lies.' See Keg. This seems to me to contradict the evidence, which points to the verb as being the older word; the form kedge-er is almost enough to prove this. But the prov. E. kedge-belly, a glutton, and kedge, to stuff oneself in eating, are undoubtedly derived from the notion of a round keg; cf. Norweg. kaggie, a keg, a round thick person (Aasen).

KEDGE (2), KIDGE, cheerful, lively. (Scand.) 'Kedge, brisk, lively;' Ray's Gloss., ed. 1691; see reprint, ed. Skeat (Eng. Dial. Soc.), pref. p. xviii. Also called kidge (Forby). An East Anglian word. 'Kygge, or ioly, kydge, kyde, jocundus, hilaris, vernosus;' Prompt. Parv. — Icel. kykr, corrupter form of kuikr, quick, lively. + G. keck, brisk, lively; M. H. G. quec, quick. Merely another form of Quick, q. v.

KEEL (1), the bottom of a ship. (E. or Scand.) M. E. kele (rare). 'The schippe [Noah's ark] was . . . thrifty cubite high from the cule to the hacches vnder the cabans;' i. e. from the bottom to the hatches; where [instead of cule = bottom, from F. cul] another reading is kele = keel; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 233. The etymology is due to a confusion between two words. 1. The form answers to A. S. ceol, a ship, cognate with Icel. kjöll, O. H. G. cheol, a ship, barge. These are from a Teutonic base KEULA, a ship (Fick, iii. 46), prob. connected with Gk. γαῖλος, a round-built Phœnician merchant vessel, γαυλός, a round vessel, milk-pail, bucket, bee-hive, Skt. gola, a ball. 2. But the sense is that of Icel. kjöl, Dan. kjøl, Swed. köl, the keel of a ship; answering to a Teutonic base KELA; Fick, iii. 47. The G. and Du. kiel, a keel, seem to belong to the latter base. ¶ For the change of A. S. eo to mod. E. ee, cf. wheel from A. S. hwēol. Der. keel-ed, keel-age; also keel-son, q. v. Also keel-haul, from O. Du. kielhaalen (mod. Du. kielhalen); 'Kielhaalen, to careen a ship; eenen matroos kielhaalen, to pull a mariner up from under the keel, a seaman's punishment;' Sewel. See Haul.

KEEL (2), to cool. (E.) 'While greasy Joan doth keel the pot;' L. L. L. v. 2. 930. The proper sense is not to scum the pot (though it may sometimes be so used) but to keep it from boiling over by stirring it round and round; orig. merely to cool it or keep it cool. 'Keel, to keep the pot from boiling over;' A Tour to the Caves, 1781; see Eng. Dial. Soc. Gloss. B. 1. 'Faith, Doricus, thy brain boils; keel it, keel it, or all the fat's in the fire!' Marston. What You Will, 1607; in Anc. Drama, ii. 199 (Nares). M. E. keelen, to cool, once a common word; see Ormulum, 19584; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 141; Prompt. Parv., p. 270; Court of Love, 775; Gower, C. A. ii. 360; &c. (Stratmann). — A. S. celan, to cool. — A. S. cól, cool; see Cool. ¶ Note the regular change from o to e, as in fót, foot, pl. fét, feet; so also bleed from blood, feed from food, &c.

KEELSON, KELSON, a piece of timber in a ship next to the keel. (Scand.) 'Keelson, the second piece of timber, which lies right over the keel;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Spelt kelsine, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, i. 426. — Swed. kölsvin, the keelson; Dan. kjölsvin; Norweg. kjölsvill (Aasen). + G. kielschwein, a keelson. β. For the former syllable, see Keel. The latter syllable wholly agrees, in appearance, with Swed. svin, Dan. sviin, G. schwein, which = E. swine (see Swine). But this can hardly be the original sense. A better sense is given by Norweg. kjølsvill, where svill answers to G. schwelle, E. sill; see Sill. The suffix svill, not being understood, was corrupted (1) to svine, and (2) to son.

KEEN, sharp, eager, acute. (E.) M. E. keene, Chaucer, C. T. 1968; Havelok, 1832. — A. S. cēne; Grein, i. 157. Here ē comes from an older ē; the orig. sense is 'knowing' or 'wise,' or 'able.' + Du. koen, bold, stout, daring. + Icel. kænn (for kænn), wise. + O. H. G. chvuni, kvami, M. H. G. kuene, G. kühn, bold. — All from a Teutonic base KONJA (KONYA), Fick, iii. 41. The orig. sense is shewn by the Icel. word, which also implies ability. From Teut. root KANN, to know; see Ken, Can. Der. keen-ly, keenness, Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 125.

KEEP, to regard, have the care of, guard, maintain, hold, preserve. (L.) M. E. kepen, pt. t. kepte, pp. kept; Chaucer, C. T. 514 (or 512). — A. S. cēpan (weak verb), another form of cýpan, orig. to traffic, sell, hence also to seek after, store up, retain, keep. See Ælfric's Homilies, i. 412, where we find cýpa, sb., a merchant, chapman; gecýpe, adj. for sale; also 'gif he dysigra manna herunga cēþ on æræstum weorcum' — if he seek after the praises of men in pious works. 'Georne ðæs andagan cēþon' — they earnestly awaited the appointed day; Ælf. Hom. ii. 172. 'Cēpað heora timan' — they observe (or keep) their times; id. ii. 324. And see cýpan, cēpan, gecýpan, gecēpan; Grein, i. 182, 385; also spelt geceāpan, as at the last reference. We find also cýpe as a gloss to Lat. uendo, I sell; Ælfric's Colloquy, in Wright's Vocab. i. 8, 1. 8. — β. The A. S. cēpan, cýpan, cēpan, are all derivatives from the sb. cēap, traffic, barter, price; and it has been shewn (s.v. Cheap) that they are not true English words, but of Latin origin. In fact, keep is a mere doublet of cheapen. The vowel-changes are perfectly regular; if a word contain ē (as cēap), the derivative contains ē in Early West Saxon, which passes into i, and later into y; thus the successive forms are cēpan, cýpan, cýpan (Sweet). Der. keep, sb., keep-er, keep-er-ship; keep-ing, As You Like It, i. 1. 9; also keep-sake, i. e. something which we keep for another's sake, apparently quite a modern word, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.

KEG, a small cask or barrel. (Scand.) Formerly also spelt cag. 'Cacque, Cague, a cag;' Cot. And in Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave, we find: 'A kegge, cacque; voyez a Cag.' — Icel. kaggi, a keg, cask; Swed. kagge, 'a cag, rundlet, runlet,' Tauchnitz, Swed. Dict.; Norwegian kagge, a keg, a round mass or heap, a big-bellied animal or man (whence prov. E. hedge-bellied, pot-bellied). — β. Root uncertain; but probably named from its roundness. Cf. Gk. γογγύλος, round. And see Kails, which is probably the dimin. form.

KELP, the calcined ashes of sea-weed. (Unknown.) Formerly kilp or hilpe. 'As for the reits [sea-weeds] hilpe, tangle, and such like sea-weeds, Nicander saith they are as good as treacle. Sundry sorts there be of these reits, going under the name of Alga;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 6. Of unknown origin.

KELSON, the same as Keelson, q.v. (Scand.)
KEN, to know. (Scand.) Not E., but Scand. M. E. kennen, to know, discern. 'Men may hem kennen by smelle of brimston' — men may know them by smell of brimstone; Chaucer, C. T. 16353. — Icel. kenna, to know. + Swed. känna. + Dan. kende. + Du. kennen. + G. kennen. — β. The sense 'to know' is Scand.; but it is not the original sense. The verb is, etymologically, a causal one, signifying to make to know, to teach, shew; a sense frequently found in M. E. 'Kenne me on Crist to bileue' — teach me to believe in Christ; P. Plowman, B. i. 81. Such is also the sense of A. S. cennan, Grein, i. 156; and of Goth. kannjan, to make known, John, xvii. 26. — γ. This explains the form of the word; kennan = kannian, causal of Teutonic KANN, base of KONNAN, to know, spelt cunnan in A. S. and kunnan in Gothic; see Fick, iii. 40. [The e is the regular substitute for a, when i follows in the next syllable.] For further remarks, see Can (1). Der. ken, sb., Cymb. iii. 6. 6; a coined word, not in early use.

KENNEL (1), a house for dogs, pack of hounds. (F., — L.) Properly 'a place for dogs;' hence, the set of dogs themselves. M. E. kenel (with one n), Prompt. Parv.; Sir Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1140. — Norm. French *kenil, answering to O. F. chenil, a kennel. — β. The Norman form is proved by the k being still preserved in English, and by the Norman F. kenet, a little dog, occurring in a Norman poem cited in Way's note in Prompt. Parv., p. 271, where the M. E. kenet also occurs. This kenet is dimin. of a Norman F. ken, answering to Picard kien, O. F. chen (Littre), mod. F. chien, a dog. So also in O. F. chen-il, the former syllable = the same O. F. chen. — γ. The termination -il is imitated from the Lat. termination -ile, occurring in ou-ile, a house or place for sheep, a sheepfold, from ou-is, a sheep. Hence chen-il = a place for dogs; Ital. canile, a kennel. — δ. The O. F. chen is from Lat. canem, acc. of canis, a dog, cognate with E. Hound, q.v. Der. kennel, vb.; kennell'd, Shak. Venus, 913.

KENNEL (2), a gutter. (F., — L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 98. A corruption of the M. E. canel or canell, of which M. E. chanell (= mod. E. channel) is a weakened form. — O. F. canel, a channel (Roquefort). — Lat. canalis, a canal; hence, a channel or kennel. See Channel, of which kennel is a doublet; also Canal.

KERBSTONE, CURBSTONE, a stone laid so as to form part of the edging of stone or brick-work. (Hybrid; F., — L.; and E.) 'Kerbstone, a stone laid round the work of a well;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. A phonetic spelling of curbstone; so called from its curbing the stone-work, which it retains in its place. See Curb and Stone.

KERCHIEF, a square piece of cloth used to cover the head; and later, for other purposes. (F., — L.) Better spelt curchief. In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 3. 62, iv. 2. 74. M. E. couverchief (= couchief), Chaucer, C. T. 6172; also spelt couchief (= couchief), id. 455, or Six-text, A. 453. Also kerchief, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 272. — O. F. couvre-chef, later couvre-chef; cf. 'Couvre-chef, a kerchief;' Cot. — O. F. courir, later couvrir, to cover; and chef, chief, the head, which is from Lat. caput, the head, cognate with E. head. See Cover and Chief. ¶ A word of similar formation is curfew, q.v. Der. hand-kerchief, pocket-hand-kerchief.

KERMES, the dried bodies of insects used in dyeing crimson. (Arab., — Skt.) See Crimson.

KERN (1), KERNE, an Irish soldier. (Irish.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2. 13, 30; v. 7. 17. 'The kerns . . . whom only I took to be the proper Irish souldiour;' Spenser, View of the State of Ireland; in Globe ed. of Spenser, p. 640. — Ir. ceatharnach, a soldier. [+]

KERN (2), another spelling of Quern, q.v.

KERNEL, a grain, the substance in the shell of a nut. (E.) M. E. kirnel (badly kirnelle), P. Plowman, B. xi. 253; better curnel, id. C. xiii. 146. — A. S. cynnel, to translate Lat. granum; Wright's Vocab., i. 80, col. 1, l. 7. Formed with dimin. suffix -el, and vowel-change from o to y from A. S. corn, grain; see Corn. — β. The Icel. kjarni, Dan. kierne, kjerne, Swed. kärna, G. kern (O. H. G. chern), all signifying 'kernel,' are closely related words, from the same ✓GAR, to grind. See Fick, iii. 42.

KERSEY, coarse woollen cloth. (E.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 413. The word is certainly English, and the same word as the personal name Kersey; perhaps named from Kersey, 3 miles from Hadleigh, in the S. of Suffolk, where a woollen trade was once carried on. A little weaving still goes on at Hadleigh. — β. The usual pretence, that the cloth came from Jersey, and was named after it, is a pure fiction; there is nothing to shew that Jersey was ever called Kersey, and the 'corruption' from j to k is phonetically impossible. I find that the island was already called Jersey in a charter of Edward III, cited in Falle's Account of Jersey, 1694. The place of the manufacture of kersey is now the North of England, but it was once made in the South (Phillips' Dict.). — γ. The F. carizé, 'kiesie' (Cot.), Du. karsaai, Swed. kersing, are mere corruptions of the E. word. [+]

KERSEYMERE, a twilled cloth of fine wool. (Cashmere.) A modern corrupt spelling of cassimere, an old name for the cloth also called Cashmere. See Cassimere, Cashmere. The corruption is clearly due to confusion with kersey, a coarse cloth of a very different texture.

KETCH, a small yacht or hoy. (Turkish.) 'Ketch, a vessel like a hoy, but of a lesser size;' Kersey, ed. 1715. The word was picked up in the Mediterranean, as would appear from the following quotation. 'We stood in for the channel: about noon we saw a sail having but one mast; judged it to be a ketch; but, drawing nearer, found it was a ship in distress, having lost her main and mizen masts;' Randolph's Islands in the Archipelago, 1687, p. 103 (Todd). Corrupted from Turk. gaig, gâig, a boat, skiff, Zenker's Dict., p. 688; whence also Ital. caicco, F. caïque. ¶ We also find F. caiche, quaique, a ketch (Littre), borrowed from the English; so also is the Du. kits, a ketch, in the Eng.-Du. part of Sewel's Dict.

Distinct from cock-boat, or cog, for which see Cock (5).

KETTLE, a metal vessel for boiling liquids. (L.) M. E. ketel (with one t), Prompt. Parv.; Wyclif, Levit. xi. 35. — A. S. cetel, spelt cetyl in Ælfric's Glossary, to translate Lat. cacabus; Wright's Vocab. i. 25, col. 1. But the spelling cetel is authorised by the occurrence of the weakened form chetel in a gloss of the 12th cent.; id. p. 93, col. 1. The Moso-Goth. form is kattis, occurring in the gen. pl. kattile in Mark, vii. 4 (Gk. χαλκίαν, Lat. ceramentorum, A. V. 'brazen vessels'). — β. Borrowed from Lat. catillus, a small bowl, also found in the uncontracted form catinulus; dimin. form of Lat. catinus, a bowl, a deep vessel for cooking food. The Lat. catinus is a kindred word to Gk. κότυλος, a cup, κοτύλη, a small cup; see Cotyledon.

¶ From the Lat. catillus were also borrowed Icel. ketill, Swed. kittel, Dan. kedel, Du. ketel, G. kessel, and even Russ. kotel. Der. kettle-drum, Hamlet, i. 4. 11.

KEX, hemlock; a hollow stem. (C.) 'Bundles of these empty

hexes; Beaum. and Fletcher, Elder Brother, iii. 5. 13. M. E. hex, kie; P. Plowman, B. xvii. 219; Prompt. Parv. = W. cecys, sb. pl., hollow stalks, hemlock; allied to W. cegid, hemlock. + Corn. cegas, hemlock. + Lat. cicuta, hemlock. ¶ Hence also prov. E. hecksies = hexes, in Shak. Hen. V, v. 2. 52; a pl. sb. of which the proper singular form is not hecksy, but hex. See Way's note in Prompt. Parv., s. v. kyx. Note also that hex really = hecks, and is itself a plural; hexes being a double plural.

KEY, that which opens or shuts a lock. (E.) Formerly called key, riming with may, Merch. of Ven. ii. 7. 59; and with survey, Shak. Sonnet 52. M. E. keye (riming with pleye, to play), Chaucer, C. T. 9918. — A. S. cæg, cage, Grein, i. 156; whence M. E. keye by the usual change of g into y, as in day from A. S. dæg. + O. Fries. kai, kei, a key. β. The gen. case of the A. S. fem. sb. cage is cagan, so that the base of the word takes the form KAGAN. The remoter origin is unknown, but the form of the base renders any connection with quay extremely improbable. See QUAY, a word of Celtic origin. Der. key-board, key-hole, key-note, key-stone.

KHAN, a prince, chief, emperor. (Pers., = Tatar.) Common in Mandeville's Travels, spelt Cham, Cane, Chane, Can, Chan; pp. 42, 215, 216, 224, 225. — Pers. khān, lord, prince (a title); Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 212. But the word is of Tatar origin; the well-known title Chingis Khan signifies 'great khan' or 'great lord,' a title assumed by the celebrated conqueror Temugin, who was proclaimed Great Khan of the Moguls and Tatars, A.D. 1205. He is always known by the sole title, often also spelt Gengis Khan, corrupted (in Chaucer) to Cambuscan. See Intro. to Chaucer's Prioresses Tale, &c., ed. Skeat, p. xli. Der. khan-ate, where the suffix is of Lat. origin.

KIBE, a chilblain. (C.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 153. 'She halted of [owing to] a kibe'; Skelton, Elynour Rummyng, l. 493. 'He haltith often that hath a kibe hele'; id. Garland of Laurell, l. 502. — W. cibwst, 'chilblains, kibes'; Spurrell. β. Explained in Pughe's Welsh Dict. as standing for cib-gwst, 'from cib, a cup, seed-vessel, husk, and gwst, a humour, malady, disease. Thus the sense would appear to be 'a malady in the shape of a cup,' from the swelling or rounded form. γ. It is clear that E. kibe has preserved the former syllable only, rejecting the latter. δ. We may compare Gael. copan, a cup, a boss of a shield, a dimple. Probably the same word with CUP, q. v. [†]

KICK, to strike or thrust with the foot. (C.) M. E. kiken, Chaucer, C. T. 6523; P. Plowman, C. v. 22. — W. cicio, to kick; given in the Eng.-Welsh portion of Spurrell's Dict. + Gael. ceig, to kick; ceigeadh, the act of kicking. Der. kick, sb. [†]

KICKSHAWS, a delicacy, fantastical dish. (F., = L.) 'Any pretty little tiny kickshaws;' 2 Hen. IV, v. 1. 29. The pl. is kickshaws. 'Art thou good at these kickshaws?' Twelfth Nt. i. 3. 122. At a later time, kickshaws was incorrectly regarded as being a pl. form. Kickshaws is a curious corruption of F. quelque chose, lit. something, hence, a trifle, small delicacy. This can be abundantly proved by quotations. 'Fricandeaux, short, skinnlesse, and dainty puddings, or quelkehoses, made of good flesh and herbs chopped together, then rolled into the form of liverings, &c., and so boiled;' Cotgrave's F. Dict. 'I made bold to set on the board kickeshoses, and variety of strange fruits;' Featley, Dippers Dipt, ed. 1645, p. 199 (Todd). 'Fresh salmon, and French kickshose;' Milton, Animadversions upon Remonstrant's Defence (R.) 'Nor shall we then need the monsieurs of Paris . . . to send [our youth] over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kickshoes;' Milton, Treatise on Education (Todd). 'As for French kickshaws, Cellery, and Champaign, Ragous, and Fricasees, in truth we've none;' Rochester, Works, 1777, p. 143. 'Some foolish French quelquechose, I warrant you. Quellechose! oh! ignorance in supreme perfection! He means a kek shoe!' Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. iii. sc. 1. — F. quelque chose, something. — Lat. qualis, of what kind, with suffix -quam; and causa, a cause, thing. Qualis answers to E. which; quam is fem. acc. of qui, answering to E. who. See WHICH, WHO, and CAUSE.

KID, a young goat. (Scand.) M. E. kid, Chaucer, C. T. 3260, 9238; Ormulum, 7804. — Dan. kid, a kid; Swed. kid, in Widegren's Swed. Dict., also kidling; Icel. kid, kidlingr, a kid. + O. H. G. kizzi, M. H. G. and G. kitze, a kid. β. From the Low G. root kiz, to germinate, produce, seen in Goth. keian or uskeian, to produce as a shoot. — ✓ GA, another form of GAN, to generate. Thus kid means 'that which is produced,' or 'a young one;' a sense still preserved in modern colloquial English. See CHIT, CHILD, KIN. Der. kid, verb; kid-ling, with double suffix -ling; kid-fox, a young fox, Much Ado, ii. 3. 44; also kid-nap, q. v.

KIDNAP, to steal children. (Scand.) 'These people lie in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law;' Spectator (Richardson, without a reference). Compounded of kid, a child, in thieves' slang; and nap, more commonly nab, to steal. Kid is of Scand. origin; see KID. Nap is also of Scand. origin; from Dan. nappe, to snatch, Swed. nappa, to catch, to snatch, lay hold on; see NAB. Der. kid-napp-er.

KIDNEY, a gland which secretes the urine. (Scand.) A corruption of M. E. kidnere, the kidney; also spelt kidneer. 'And the two kydneers;' Wyclif, Exod. xxix. 13 (earlier version); 'and twey kidneris;' (later version). The word nere or neere is also used alone, in the same sense. 'Neere of a beast, ren;' Prompt. Parv., p. 353; and see Way's note. Thus the latter syllable means 'kidney;' whilst the former means 'belly' or 'womb,' from the position of the glands. 1. Kid is here a corruption of quid = quith; cf. prov. E. kite, kyle, the belly, which is the same word. — Icel. kviðr, the womb; Swed. qued, the womb, in the Swed. tr. of Luke, xi. 27. + A. S. cwið, the womb; used to translate Lat. matrix; Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. 1. + Goth. kwiðhus, the womb. All from a Teutonic base KWETHU (Fick, iii. 54), allied to Teutonic KWETHRA, the belly, occurring in Goth. lauskwiðhrs, having an empty [lit. loose] stomach. The latter is further allied to the Aryan base GATARA, the belly, womb, whence Skt. jathara, the belly, womb, Gk. γαστρίη, Lat. venter (for guenter). See GASTRIC, VENTRAL. 2. M. E. nere is also Scand. — Icel. nýra, a kidney, pl. nýru; Dan. nyre, pl. nyrer; Swed. njura. + Du. nier, kidney, loin. + G. niere, pl. nieren. All from a Teutonic base NEURAN (Fick, iii. 163), allied to Gk. νεφρός, pl. νεφροί, Lat. nefrones, nebrundines (see White's Dict.); words which are probably to be referred to a ✓ NIW, to be fat; cf. Skt. náv, to be fat, become corpulent; with allusion to the fat in which the kidneys are enclosed. ¶ It may be further observed that the Icel. kviðr is freely used in composition; as in kvið-slit, rupture, kvið-verkr, colic, kvið-þroti, a swelling of the stomach; &c. Der. kidney-bean. The phrase 'of his kidney' means 'of his size or kind;' see Merry Wives, iii. 5. 116.

KILDERKIN, a liquid measure of 18 gallons. (Du.) In Levins, ed. 1570; spelt kylderkin. 'Take a kilderkin . . . of 4 gallons of beer;' Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 46. The size of the measure appears to have varied. A corruption (by change of the liquid n to l) of O. Du. kindeken. Kilian gives: 'Kindeken, kinneken, the eighth part of a vat, the same as kinnetje.' In mod. Du., kinnetje means 'a firkin,' which in English measure is only half a kilderkin. β. The name was obviously given because it is only a small measure as compared with barrels, vats, or tuns. The lit. sense is 'little child.' 'Kindeken, a little child;' Sewel. Formed, with dimin. suffix -ken (= E. -kin = G. -chen), from Du. kind, a child, cognate with E. child; see CHILD. So also kinnetje = kind-etje, with the common Du. double dimin. suffix -tje. [†]

KILL, to slay, deaden. (Scand.) M. E. killen, more commonly cullen; a weak verb. Spelt cullen, P. Plowman, A. i. 64; kullen (various reading, killen), id. B. i. 66. The old sense appears to be simply 'to hit' or 'strike.' 'We kylle of thin heued' = we strike off thy head; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 876. 'Pauh a word culle þe ful herde up o pine herte' = though a word strike thee full hard upon the heart; Ancræn Riwe, p. 126, l. 13; with which compare: 'þe cul of þer eaz' = the stroke of the axe; id. p. 128, l. 1. — Icel. kolla, to hit in the head, to harm; from kollr, top, summit, head, crown, shaven crown, pate. + Norweg. kylla, to poll, to cut the shoots off trees; from Norweg. koll, the top, head, crown; Aasen. Hence also Norweg. kolla, a beast without horns; id. Cf. also Swed. kulle, crown, top, hillock; kullig, without horns, cropped, polled; kullfalla, to fell, cut down. Also Dan. kuldet, having no horns. + Du. kollen, to knock down; kol, a knock on the head; whence kolbijl, a butcher's axe, lit. 'kill-bill'. β. The verb is clearly a derivative from the sb., viz. Icel. kollr, Norweg. koll, Swed. kulle. Very likely this sb. is of Celtic origin; cf. W. col, a peak, summit, beard of corn, Irish coll, a head, perhaps Lat. collis, a hill; the root being perhaps ✓ KAR, to project, be prominent. ¶ This etymology was suggested by Dr. Morris. It is usual to regard kill as a mere variant of quell, which, after all, is not impossible; but the history of the word is against this derivation. See QUELL. Der. kill-er.

KILN, a large oven for drying corn, bricks, &c.; bricks piled for burning. (L.) 'Kylne, Kyll, for malt dryngne, Ustrina;' Prompt. Parv., p. 274; and Reliquiæ Antiquæ, ii. 81. — A. S. cýlna, a drying-house; 'Siccatorium, cýln, vel ast;' Wright's Vocab. i. 58 (where ast = ast = E. east in east-house, a drying-house). Also spelt cýlene, according to Lye, who explains it by culina, fornan, ustrina. β. Merely borrowed from Lat. culina, a kitchen; whence the sense was easily transferred to that of 'drying-house.' The Icel. kylna, Swed. kölina, a kiln, are from the same source; and probably also W. cýlyn, cyl, a kiln. See CULINARY.

KILT, a very short petticoat worn by the Highlanders of Scotland. (Scand.) The sb. is merely derived from the verb kilt, to tuck up, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; he makes no mention of the sb. 'Her tartan petticoat she'll kilt;' i. e. tuck up; Burns, Author's Earnest Cry, st. 17. 'Kilt, to tuck up the clothes;' Brockett's North-Country Words. — Dan. kille, to truss, tuck up. + Swed. dial.

kilta, to swathe or swaddle a child (Rietz). Cf. Icel. killing, a skirt. β. The verb is derived from a sb., signifying 'lap,' occurring in Swed. dial. kilta, the lap; cf. Icel. kjalta, the lap, kjöltu-barn a baby in the lap, kjöltu-rakki, a lap-dog. The oldest form of the sb. occurs in Meeso-Goth. kiltihei, the womb. From the same root as E. Child, q. v. ¶ Thus the orig. sense of kilt as a sb. is 'a lap,' hence 'tucked up clothes.' [†]

KIMBO; see this discussed under Akimbo.

KIN, relationship, affinity, genus, race. (E.) M. E. kin, kyn, kin. 'I haue no kin þere' = I have no kindred there; P. Plowman, A. vi. 118, where some MSS. have kyn; spelt kynne, id. B. v. 639. — A. S. cynn; Grein, i. 177. + O. Sax. kunni. + Icel. kyn, kin, kindred, tribe; whence kynni, acquaintance. + Du. kynne, sex. + Goth. kunni, kin, race, tribe. β. All from a Teut. base KONYA, a tribe, from the Teut. root KAN, equivalent to Aryan GAN, to generate; whence Lat. genus. See Genus, Generate. Der. from the same source are kind, q. v., kindred, q. v., king, q. v. Also kins-man = kin's man = man of the same kin or tribe, Much Ado, v. 4. 112; kins-woman, id. iv. 1. 103; kins-folk, Luke, ii. 44.

KIND (1), adj., natural, loving. (E.) M. E. kunde, kinde; Chaucer, C. T. 8478. 'For þe kunde folk of þe lond' = for the native people of the land; Rob. of Glouc. p. 40, l. 11. A common meaning is 'natural' or 'native.' — A. S. cynde, natural, native, in-born; more usually gecynde, where the common prefix ge- does not alter the sense; Grein, i. 178, 388. The orig. sense is 'born;' as in Goth. kwina-kunds, born as a woman, female, Gal. iii. 28. The Teut. base is KONDA (Fick, iii. 39), a past participial form from KAN = Aryan GAN, to generate. See Kin. Der. kind (2), q. v.; kind-ness, M. E. kindenesse (four syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 5533; kind-ly, adv.; kind-hearted, Shak. Sonnet 10.

KIND (2), sb., nature, sort, character. (E.) M. E. kund, kunde, kind, kinde; Chaucer, C. T. 2453; spelt kunde, Ancrén Riwe, p. 14, l. 10. — A. S. cynd, generally gecynd, Grein, i. 387, 388; the prefix ge- making no difference to the meaning; the most usual sense is 'nature.' From the adj. above. Der. kind-ly, adj., M. E. kyndeli = natural, Wyclif, Wisdom, xii. 10, and so used in the Litany in the phr. 'kindly fruits;' whence also kindli-ness.

KINDLE (1), to set fire to, inflame. (Scand., — E., — L.) M. E. kindlen; Chaucer, C. T. 12415; Havelok, 915; Ormulum, 13442. Formed from Icel. kyndill, a candle, torch. [The Icel. verb kynda, to light a fire, kindle, may be nothing else than a verb formed from the same sb., and not an original verb. According to Ihre, the Old Swed. has only the sb., occurring in the comp. kyndelmessa, Candle-mass.] β. The Icel. has also kyndill-messa, Candlemas; shewing, indubitably, that the word was borrowed from the A. S. candel, a candle (whence candel-mæsse, Candlemas), at the time of the introduction of Christianity into Iceland. γ. Again, the A. S. candel is merely borrowed from Lat. candela; thus explaining the close resemblance of the Icel. to the Lat. word. ¶ An original Icel. word corresponding to Latin words beginning with c would, by Grimm's law, begin with k. See Candle. Der. kindl-er.

KINDLE (2), to bring forth young. (E.) 'The cony that you see dwell where she is kindled;' As You Like It, iii. 2. 358. M. E. kindlen, kundlen. 'Thet is the uttre wondunge thet kundlōð wrēðe' = it is the outward temptation that produces wrath, Ancrén Riwe, p. 194, l. 20: where we also find, immediately below, the sentence: 'thus beoð the inre wondunge the seouen heaued-sunnen and hore fule kundles' = thus the inward temptations are the seven chief sins and their foul progeny. Cf. also: 'Kyndlyn, or bryngre forthe yonge kyndelyngis, Feto, effeto;' Prompt. Parv. p. 275. And in Wyclif, Luke, iii. 7, we find 'kyndlis of edderis' in the earlier, and 'kyndlyngis of eddris' in the later version, where the A. V. has 'generation of vipers.' β. The verb kindlen, to produce, and the sb. kindel, a generation, are of course due to the sb. kind; see Kind (1). We may probably regard the sb. kindel as a dimin. of kind, and the verb as formed from it. Both words refer, in general, to a numerous progeny, a litter, esp. with regard to rabbits, &c.

KINDRED, relatives, relationship. (E.) The former d is excrement, the true form being kinred, which occurs occasionally in old edd. of Shakespeare. 'All the kinred of Marius,' Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 47, l. 27. M. E. kinrede, Chaucer, C. T. 2792; spelt cunreden, St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 60, l. 13. Composed of A. S. cyn, kin (see Kin), and the suffix -ræden, signifying 'condition,' or more literally 'law.' The A. S. cynræden does not appear, but we find the parallel word hiwæden, a household, Matt. x. 6; and the same suffix is preserved in E. hat-red. Ræden is connected with the verb Read, q. v. Der. kindred, adj., K. John, iii. 4. 14.

KINE, cows. (E.) Not merely the plural, but the double plural form; it is impossible to regard it as a contraction of couen, as some have absurdly supposed. α. The A. S. cú, a cow, made the pl. cý, by the usual vowel change of ú to y; cf. mús (E. mouse), pl. mýs (E.

mice). Hence the M. E. ky (= cows), Barbour, Bruce, vi. 405, and still common in Lowland Scotch. 'The kye stood rowtin i' the loan;' Burns, The Two Dogs, l. 5 from end. β. By the addition of -en, a weakened form of the A. S. plural-ending -an, was formed the double plural ky-en, so spelt in the Trinity-College MS. of P. Plowman, B. vi. 142, where other MSS. have kyene, kyne, kijn, ken. Hence kine in Gen. xxxii. 15; &c. See Cow. ¶ Cf. ey-ne for ey-en (A. S. edg-an), old pl. of eye (A. S. edge).

KING, a chief ruler, monarch. (E.) M. E. king, a contraction of an older form kinig or kyning. Spelt king, Ancrén Riwe, p. 138, last line; kinig, Mark, xv. 2 (Hatton MS.) — A. S. cynig, also cynincg, cyninc, cynung, Mark, xv. 2; Grein, i. 179. — A. S. cyn, a tribe, race, kin; with suffix -ing. The suffix -ing means 'belonging to,' and is frequently used with the sense 'son of,' as in 'Ælfred Æpelwulfing' = Ælfred son of Æthelwulf; A. S. Chronicle, an. 871. Thus cyn-ing = son of the tribe, i. e. elected by the tribe, and hence 'chief.' + O. Sax. kinung, a king; from kunni, kunni, a tribe. + O. Friesic kinig, kenig; from ken, a tribe. + Icel. konungr, a king; with which cf. O. Icel. konr, a kind, Icel. kyn, a kind, kin, tribe. + Swed. konung. + Dan. konge. + Du. koning. + G. könig, M. H. G. künig, O. H. G. chuning, kunninc; from M. H. G. künne, O. H. G. chunni, a race, kind. See Kin. ¶ The Skt. janaka, a father, is from the same root, but expresses a somewhat different idea. Cf. Lat. genitor. Der. king-crab, king-craft, king-cup, Spenser, Shepherd's Kalendar, April, l. 141; king-fisher (so called from the splendour of its plumage), Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 10; king-less, Rob. of Glouc. p. 105; king-let, a double diminutive, with suffixes -l- and -et; king-like, king-ly, M. E. kingly, Lidgate's Minor Poems, 20; king-li-ness. Also king's bench, so called because the king used to sit in court; king's evil, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiii. c. 4, so called because it was supposed that a king's touch could cure it. And see kingdom.

KINGDOM, the realm of a king. (E.) M. E. kingdom, kyngdom; P. Plowman, B. vii. 155. Evidently regarded as a compound of king with suffix -dom. But, as a fact, it took the place of an older form kinedom; 'þene kinedom of heouene' = the kingdom of heaven, Ancrén Riwe, p. 148, l. 3. — A. S. cynedóm, a kingdom; Grein, i. 179.

β. Really formed (with suffix -dóm) from the adj. cýne, royal, very common in composition, but hardly used otherwise. This adj. answers nearly to Icel. konr, a man of royal or noble birth; and is related to Kin and King. Thus the alteration from kin- to king- makes little practical difference. ¶ So also, for king-ly, there is an A. S. cýnelic, royal; Grein, i. 179.

KINK, a twist in a rope. (Du. or Swed.) 'Kink, a twist or short convolution in a rope;' Brockett, Gloss. of North Country Words, ed. 1846. — Du. kink, Swed. kink, a twist in a rope. β. From a Low G. base KIK, to bend; appearing in Icel. kična, to sink at the knees through a heavy burden, keikr, bent backwards, keikja, to bend backwards; whence also Icel. kengr, a crook of metal, a bend, a bight, answering to Swed. kink. The base is well preserved in Norweg. kika, to writhe, keika, to bend back or aside, kinka, to writhe, twist, kink, a twist (Aasen). ¶ There is possibly an ultimate relation to Chineough, q. v.

KIPPER, to cure or preserve salmon. (Du.) This meaning is quite an accidental one, arising from a practice of curing kipper-salmon, i. e. salmon during the spawning season. Such fish, being inferior in kind, were cured instead of being eaten fresh. 'The salmon, after spawning, become very poor and thin, and are called kipper;' Pennant, Zoology, iii. 242 (Todd). 'Kipper-time, a space of time between May 3 and Twelfth-day, during which salmon-fishing in the river Thames was forbidden;' Kersey, ed. 1715. The lit. sense of kipper is 'spawn-er.' — Du. kippen, to hatch; also to catch, seize. + Norweg. kippa, to snatch, &c.; Aasen. + Swed. dial. kippa, to snatch; Rietz. + Icel. kippa, to pull, snatch. [†]

KIRK, a church. (Scand., — E., — Gk.) The North. E. form; see Burns, The Two Dogs, l. 19. M. E. kirke, P. Plowman, B. v. 1; Ormulum, 3531. — Icel. kirja; Dan. kirke; Swed. kyrka. Borrowed from A. S. cirice, circe, a church. Of Gk. origin. See Church.

KIRTLE, a sort of gown or petticoat. (E. or Scand.) Used rather vaguely. M. E. kirtel, Chaucer, C. T. 3321; kurtel, Ancrén Riwe, p. 10. — A. S. cyrtel, to translate Lat. palla; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab., i. 16, col. 2. Also O. Northumbrian cyrtel, to translate Lat. tunica; Matt. v. 40 (Lindisfarne M.S.) + Icel. kyrtill, a kirtle, tunic, gown. + Dan. kiortel, a tunic. + Swed. kiortel, a petticoat.

β. Evidently a diminutive, with suffixed -l-. I have to suggest that it is probably a dimin. of Skirt, q. v. Thus the Icel. kyrtill may well be a dimin. of Icel. skyrtla, a shirt, a kind of kirtle; the Dan. kiortel, of Dan. skiorte, a shirt; and the Swed. kiortel, of Swed. skjorta, a shirt. Skirt and shirt are doublets, so that these words answer to shirt also. Perhaps the A. S. cyrtel was merely borrowed from the Scandinavian. γ. The loss of s before k, common in Latin and Greek, is unusual in Teutonic; still it actually occurs in words related to skirt, viz. in Du. kort = E. s-kort = A. S. s-ecort (with which cf. Du. schort, an apron, skirt); and in G. kurz, short. The Lat. curtus, short, is from the same root, and its influence may have contributed to this loss of s. See Shirt, Short, Curt.

KISS, a salute with the lips, osculation. (E.) M. E. cas, kos, cus, kus; later kisse, kiss. The vowel i is really proper only to the verb, which is formed from the sb. by vowel-change. 'And he cam to Jhesu, to kisse him; And Jhesus seide to him, Judas, with a coss thou bytrayest manys sone;' Wyclif, Luke, xxii. 47, 48. The form kusse is as late as Skelton, Phylip Sparowe, 361. In the Ancien Riwele, p. 102, we find cos, nom. sing., cosses, pl., cosse, dat. sing.; as well as cus, verb in the imperative mood. = A. S. coss; Luke, xxii. 48; whence cyssan, to kiss, id. xxii. 47. + Du. kus, sb.; whence kussen, vb. + Icel. koss, sb.; whence kussa, vb. + Dan. kys, sb., kyss, vb. + Swed. kyss, sb., kyssa, vb. + G. kuss, M. H. G. kus, sb.; whence küssen, O. H. G. chussen, vb. β. All from a Teut. base KUSSA, a kiss; which is connected with Icel. kostr, choice, Goth. kustus, a proof, test, Lat. gustus, a taste. The connection is shown by Lat. gustus, a small dish of food, a smack, relish, also a kiss; dimin. of Lat. gustus, a taste, whet, relish. γ. The Goth. kustus is from the verb kusan, to choose, cognate with E. choose. Hence the sb. kiss is, practically, a doublet of choice; and the sense is 'something choice' or 'a taste.' See Choice, Choose, Gust. Der. kiss, verb; as shewn above.

KIT (1), a vessel of various kinds, a milk-pail, tub; hence, an outfit. (O. Low G.) 'A kit, a little vessel, Cantharus;' Levins. 'Hoc mul[ti]c[um], a kytt;' Wright's Vocab. i. 217, col. 2. In Barbour's Bruce, b. xviii. l. 168, we are told that Gib Harper's head was cut off, salted, put into 'a kyt, and sent to London.' = O. Du. kitte, a tub (Kilian); Du. kit, 'a wooden can;' Sewel. Cf. Norweg. kitte, a space in a room shut off by a partition, a large corn-bin in the wall of a house (Aasen); Swed. dial. kätte, a little space shut off by a partition (Riets). β. We find also A. S. cyte, a cell, which may be related; 'Cella, cyte;' Wright's Vocab. i. 85, col. 2. If so, kit may be related to Cot; see Grein, l. 181.

KIT (2), a small violin. (L., -Gk.) 'I'll have his little gut to string a kit with;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, Act v. sc. 4 (4th Citizen). Abbreviated from A. S. cytere, a cittern, or cithern; which is borrowed from Lat. cithara. See Cithern, Gittern.

KIT (3), a brood, family, quantity. (E.) See Halliwell; a variant of Kith, q. v.

KIT-CAT, KIT-KAT, the name given to portraits of a particular kind. (Personal name.) α. A portrait of about 28 by 36 in. in size is thus called, because it was the size adopted by Sir Godfrey Kneller (died 1723) for painting portraits of the members of the Kit-kat club. β. This club, founded in 1703, was so named because the members used to dine at the house of Christopher Kat, a pastry-cook in King's Street, Westminster; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. γ. Kit is a familiar abbreviation of Christopher, a name of Gk. origin, from Gk. Χριστο-φόρος, lit. 'Christ-bearing.' [†]

KITCHEN, a room where food is cooked. (L.) The t is inserted. M. E. kichene, kychene, kechene, Will. of Palerne, 1681, 1707, 2171; kychene, P. Plowman, B. v. 261. Spelt kuchene, Ancien Riwele, p. 214. = A. S. cicen (put for cyen); we find 'Coquina, vel culina, cicen;' Supp. to Ælfric's Gloss.; in Wright's Vocab. i. 57, col. 2. = Lat. coquina, a kitchen. = Lat. coquere, to cook; see Cook. Der. kitchen-maid, kitchen-stuff, kitchen-garden.

KITE, a voracious bird; a toy for flying in the air. (E.) M. E. kitē, kytē (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1181. = A. S. cyta; we find the entry 'Butio (sic), cyta' in Ælfric's Gloss. (Nomina Auium). The Lat. butio is properly a bittern; but doubtless buteo is meant, signifying a kind of falcon or hawk. The y must be long, as shewn by the modern sound; cf. E. mice with A. S. mýs. β. The W. name is barcud, barcutan, a buzzard, kite; we find also cudylil, a sparrowhawk. If the A. S. cyta and W. cud are related, this points to loss of initial s, and the most likely root is the Teutonic ✓ SKUT, to shoot, go swiftly; cf. W. cud, celerity, flight. In this view, cyta stands for scýta, 'the shooter;' the suffix -a being the mark of the agent, as in A. S. hunt-a, a hunter. See Shoot. [†]

KITH, kindred, acquaintance, sort. (E.) Usual in the phrase 'kith and kin.' M. E. cudðe, kyppe, kith; see Gower, C. A. ii. 267, l. 10; P. Plowman, B. xv. 497. = A. S. cýððe, native land, cýð, kindred; Grein, i. 181, 182. = A. S. cýð, known; pp. of cunnan, to know; see Can (1) and Kythe. Doublet, hit (3).

KITTEN, a young cat. (E.; with F. suffix.) M. E. kyton, P. Plowman, C. i. 204, 207; kitoun, id., B. prol. 190, 202. A dimin. of cat, with vowel-change and a suffix which appears to be rather the F. -on than the E. -en. This suffix would be readily suggested by the use of it in the F. chatton. 'Chatton, a kitling or young cat;' Cot. See Cat. The true E. form is kit-ling, where -ling (= -l + -ing) is a double dimin. suffix. The same vowel-change appears in the old verb to kitlle, to produce young as a cat does. Cf. Norweg. kjelling, a kitling or kitten, kjella, to kittle or kitten; Aasen. 'To kittle as a catte dothe, chatonner.' Gossyppe, when your catte kytlelleth, I praye you let me have a kytlynge (chatton);' Falsgrave, cited in Way's note in Prompt. Parv. p. 277. The Lat. catulus, though meaning a whelp, is a dimin. from catus, a cat.

KNACK, a snap, quick motion, dexterity, trick. (C.) 'The more quaint knakkēs that they make' = the more clever tricks they practise; Chaucer, C. T. 4049. On which Tyrwhitt remarks: 'The word seems to have been formed from the knocking or snapping of the fingers made by jugglers.' This explanation, certainly a correct one, he justifies by references to Cotgrave. 'Matassiner des mains, to move, knack, or waggle the fingers, like a juggler, plaier, jeaster, &c.;' Cot. 'Niquet, a knick, tlick, snap with the teeth or fingers, a trifle, nifle, bable [bauble], matter of small value;' id. Faire la nique, to threaten or defie, by putting the thumb nail into the mouth, and with a jerke (from the upper teeth) make it to knack;' id. The word is clearly (like crack, click) of imitative origin; the form being Celtic. = Gael. cnac, a crack, crash, enac, to crack, crash, split; Irish cnag, a crack, noise, cnagaim, I knock, strike; W. enec, a crash, snap, enecian, to crash, jar. The senses are (1) a snap, crack, (2) a snap with the finger or nail, (3) a jester's trick, piece of dexterity, (4) a joke, trifle, toy. See Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 34; Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 67; Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 360, 439. β. From the same Celtic source are Du. knak, a crack; knakken, to crack; knak, interj. crack! Dan. knage, to crack, crack, crackle; Swed. knaka, to crack. The English form is Crack, q. v. ¶ A similar succession of ideas is seen in Du. knap, a crack; knappen, to crack, snap; knap, clever, nimble; knaphandig, nimble-handed, dexterous. See Knap. Der. knick-knack, q. v., knag, q. v. The F. nique (above) is from Du. knikken, to crack slightly, an attenuated form of knakken. Knack is merely another form of Knock, q. v.

KNACKER, a dealer in old horses. (Scand.) Now applied to a dealer in old horses and dogs' meat. But it formerly meant a saddler and harness-maker. 'Knacker, one that makes collars and other furniture for cart-horses;' Ray, South and East Country Words, 1691 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 16). = Icel. knakkr, a man's saddle; cf. knakkmar, a saddle-horse.

KNAG, a knot in wood, a peg, branch of a deer's horn. (C.) 'I schall hyl hange on a knagg;' = I shall hang it on a peg; Le Bone Florence, l. 1795; in Ritson, Metrical Romances, v. iii. 'A knagge in wood, Bosse;' Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave. We read also of the 'sharp and branching knags' of a stag's horn; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1039. Of Celtic origin. = Irish cnag, a knob, peg, cnag, a knot in wood; Gael. cnag, a pin, peg, knob; with which cf. W. cnwec, a lump, bump, cnwecio, to form into knobs. β. All these appear to be derived from the verb which appears as Irish cnagaim, I strike, knock, Gael. cnag, to crack, snap the fingers, knock, rap, W. cnocio, to knock, beat. In the same way, the E. bump denotes not only to beat or thump, but also the excrescence produced by a blow; so that the orig. sense of knag is 'a bump.' γ. From the same Celtic source we have also Dan. knag, a wooden peg, cog, handle of a scythe; Swed. knagg, a knag, knot in wood. 8. The word is closely related to Knack and Knock. Der. knagg-y; also (probably) knoll (1), q. v., knuckle, q. v.

KNAP, to snap, break with a noise. (Du., -C.) 'He hath knapped the speare in sonder;' Ps. xli. 9, in the Bible of 1551; still preserved in the Prayer-book version. 'As lying a gossip as ever knapped ginger;' Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 10. Not found (I think) earlier than about A. D. 1550, and probably borrowed from Dutch; but knap, to knock (K. Lear, ii. 4. 125) preserves the sense of Gael. cnap. = Du. knappen, to crack, snap, catch, crush, eat; whence knapper, (1) hard gingerbread, (2) a lie, untruth. [This brings out the force of Shakespeare's phrase.] + Dan. kneppe, to snap, crack with the fingers; knep, a snap, crack, fillip. Cf. Swed. knep, a trick, artifice; bruka knep, to play tricks; which illustrates the use of the parallel word knack, q. v. β. Of imitative origin; and parallel to Knack; the source is Celtic, like that of knack; see further under Knop. Der. knap-sack. [*]

KNAPSACK, a provision-bag, case for necessities used by travellers. (Du.) 'And each one fills his knapsack or his scrip;' Drayton, The Barons' Wars, b. i (R.) = Du. knapsak, a knapsack; orig. a provision-bag. = Du. knap, eating, knappen, to crack, crush, eat; and zak, a bag, sack, pocket. See Knap and Sack.

KNAPWEED, i. e. knopweed; see Knop.

KNAVE, a boy, servant, sly fellow, villain. (E.; perhaps C.) The older senses are 'boy' and 'servant.' M. E. knaue (with u for v). 'A knaue child' = a male child, boy; Chaucer, C. T. 8320, 8323, 8488. 'The kokes knaus, thet washeð the dishes;' = the cook's boy, that washes the dishes; Ancien Riwele, p. 380, l. 8. = A. S. cnafa, a boy, a later form of cnapa, a boy; cnapa occurs in Matt. xii. 18, and in Ps. lxxxv. 15, ed. Spelman, where another reading (in the latter passage) is cnafa. + Du. knaap, a lad, servant, fellow. + Icel. knapi, a servant-boy. + Swed. knävel, a rogue (a dimin. form). + G. knabe, a boy.

β. The origin of the word is perhaps Celtic. It appears to be preserved in Gael. cnapach, 'a youngster, a stout smart middle-sized boy;' Macleod. This word may safely be connected with the adj. cnapach, 'knobby, hilly, lumpy, bossy, stout;' which is from the sb. cnap, a knob. Thus the sense is 'knobby, stout or well-grown, applied to a lad. Note also Gael. cnaparra, stout, strong, sturdy. See Knob. Der. knav-ish, Chaucer, C. T. 17154; knavish-ly; knave-ry, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 3. 9. [†]

KNEAD, to work flour into dough, mould by pressure. (E.) M. E. kneaden, Chaucer, C. T. 4092; Ormulum, 1486. — A. S. cnedan, to knead, very rare; in the O. Northumbrian versions of Luke, xiii. 21, the Lat. fermentaretur is glossed by sic gedærsted vel geenoden in the Lindisfarne MS., and by sic gedærsted vel cneden in the Rushworth MS.; hence we infer the strong verb cnedan, with pt. t. cnæd, and pp. cnoden. We also find the form gecnedan, Gen. xviii. 6; where the prefix ge- does not affect the force of the verb. The verb has become a weak one, the pp. passing from knoden to kneaded in the 15th century, as shewn by the entry: 'Knodon, knedid, Pistus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 280. + Du. kneiden. + Icel. knoda. + Swed. knäda. + G. kneten, O. H. G. chnetan. + Russ. gnelat, gnesti, to press, squeeze. β. The Teut. base is KNAD, to press; Fick, iii. 48. Der. knead-ing-trough, M. E. kneading-trough, Chaucer, C. T. 3548.

KNEE, the joint of the lower leg with the thigh. (E.) M. E. kne, knee; pl. knees, Chaucer, C. T. 5573; also cneco, pl. cnecan (= kneen), Ancren Riwle, p. 16, last line but one. — A. S. cnéo, cnéow, a knee; Grein, i. 164. + Du. knies. + Icel. kné. + Dan. knæ. + Swed. knä. + G. knies, O. H. G. chniu. + Goth. kniv. + Lat. genu. + Gk. γόνυ. + Skt. jānu.

β. All from Aryan base GANU, the knee; Fick, iii. 49, i. 69. The root does not appear. ¶ The loss of vowel between k and n is well illustrated by the Gk. γύν-νeros, fallen upon the knees, put for γύννeros. Der. knee-d, knee-pan; also kneel, q. v. And see genu-ulate, genu-flection, penta-gon, hexa-gon, &c.

KNEEL, to fall on the knees. (Scand.) M. E. knelen, Havelok, 1420; Ormulum, 6138. A Scand. form; as shewn by Dan. knæle, to kneel. [The A. S. verb was cnéowan (Bosworth).] Formed from knee by adding -l-, to denote the action. [†]

KNELL, KNOLL, to sound as a bell, toll. (E.) 'Where bells have knolled to church;' As You Like It, ii. 7. 114. M. E. knillen; 'And lette also the belles knille;' Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, l. 779. 'Knyllinge of a belle, Tintillacio;' Prompt. Parv., p. 279. 'I knolle a belle, le frappe du batant;' Palsgrave. The orig. sense is to beat so as to produce a sound. — A. S. cnyllan, to beat noisily; in the O. Northumb. version of Luke, xi. 9, we find: 'cnyllað and ontyned bið iow' = knock and it shall be opened to you (Rushworth MS.). We find also A. S. cnyl, a knell, the sound of a bell (Bosworth). + Du. knallen, to give a loud report; knal, a clap, a report. + Dan. knalde (= knalle), to explode, make a report; knalde med en fidsk, to crack a whip; knald (= knall), a report, explosion, crack. + Swed. knalla, to make a noise, to thunder; knall, a report, loud noise. + G. knallen, to make a loud noise; knall, a report, explosion. + Icel. gnella, to scream. β. All words of imitative origin, like knack, knap, knock. ¶ We find also W. cnill, a passing-bell, cnul, a knell; but the word does not appear to be of Celtic origin. Der. knell, sb., Temp. i. 2. 402.

KNICK-KNACK, a trick, trifle, toy. (C.) A reduplication of knack in the sense of 'trick,' as formerly used; or in the sense of 'toy,' as generally used now. 'But if ye use these knick-knacks,' i. e. these tricks; Beaumont and Fletcher, Loyal Subject, ii. 1 (Theodore). The reduplication is effected in the usual manner, by the attenuation of the radical vowel a to i; cf. click-clack, ding-dong, pit-a-pat. Cf. Du. knikken, to crack, snap, weakened form of knakken, to crack; also W. enic, a slight rap, weakened form of cnoc, a rap, knock. Ultimately of Celtic origin. See further under Knack.

KNIFE, an instrument for cutting. (E.) M. E. knif, cnif; pl. knives (with u=v). Chaucer, C. T. 233. The sing. knif is in the Ancren Riwle, p. 282, last line but one. — A. S. cnif, a knife (Lye). + Du. knijf. + Icel. knifr, knifr. + Dan. kniv. + Swed. knif. + G. (provincial) knief, a hedging-bill, clasp-knife (Flügel). β. The sense is 'an instrument for nipping' or cutting off. The sb. is derived from the verb which appears in Du. knijpen, to pinch, nip; G. knepsen, to pinch, kniefen, to nip, squeeze; from the Teutonic base KNIB (or KNIP), to nip, pinch; Fick, iii. 48. See Nip. ¶ The F. canif is of Teut. origin. Der. knife-edge.

KNIGHT, a youth, servant, man at arms. (E.) M. E. knicht; see Chaucer's Knights Tale. — A. S. cnicht, a boy, servant; Grein, i. 165. + Du. knecht, a servant, waiter. + Dan. knegt, a man-servant, knave (at cards). + Swed. knekt, a soldier, knave (at cards). + G. knecht, a man-servant. Cf. Irish cniocht, a soldier, knight; perhaps borrowed from English. β. Origin unknown; the A. S. suffix

-iht is adjectival, as in stán-iht = stony. Probably cn-iht = cyn-iht, belonging to the 'kin' or tribe; it would thus signify one of age to be admitted among the tribe. A similar loss of vowel occurs in Gk. γύν-νeros, legitimate, from γύν-ος = kin. Der. knight, verb, knight-ly, Wyclif, 2 Macc. viii. 9, with which cf. A. S. cnihllic, boyish (Bosworth); knight-hood, M. E. knighthood, P. Plowman, B. prol. 112, from A. S. cnihthād, lit. boyhood, youth (Bosworth); knight-errant, 2 Hen. IV, v. 4. 24; knight-errant-ry.

KNIT, to form into a knot. (E.) M. E. knitten, Chaucer, C. T. 1130; P. Plowman, B. prol. 169. — A. S. cnytan, cnittan; the comp. be-cnittan is used in Ælfric's Homilies, i. 476, l. 5. Formed by vowel-change from A. S. cnotta, a knot. + Icel. knýta, knýtja, to knit; from knútr, a knot. + Dan. knytte, to tie in a knot, knit; from knude. + Swed. knýta, to knit, tie; from knut. See Knot. Der. knitt-er, knitt-ing.

KNOB, a later form of Knop, q. v. (C.) In Levins; and Chaucer, C. T. 635. Der. knobb-ed, knobb-y, knobb-i-ness.

KNOCK, to strike, rap, thump. (C.) M. E. knocken; Chaucer, C. T. 3432. — A. S. cnucian, later cnoken, Matt. vii. 7; Luke, xi. 10. Borrowed from Celtic. — Gael. cnac, to crack, crash, break, cnag, to crack, snap the fingers, knock, rap; Irish cnag, a crack, noise, cnagaim, I knock, strike; Corn. cnoucy, to knock, beat, strike. Thus knock is the same with knack, both being imitative words corresponding to E. crack; from the noise of breaking. See Knack, Crack. Der. knock, sb., knock-kneed, knock-er.

KNOLL (1), the top of a hill, a hillock, mound. (E.; perhaps C.) M. E. knol, a hill, mound; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 4129. — A. S. cnol; 'þéira munta cnollas' = the tops of the hills; Gen. viii. 5. + Du. knol, a turp; from its roundness. + Dan. knold, a knoll. + Swed. knöl, a bump, knob, bunch, knot. + G. knollen, a knoll, clod, lump, knot, knob, bulb (provincially, a potatoe). β. Knoll is probably a contracted word, and a guttural has been lost. It may stand for knok-el, a dimin. of a Celtic knok; the word being ultimately of Celtic origin. We find W. cnol, a knoll, hillock; and the orig. word is seen in Gael. cnoc, a hill, knoll, hillock, eminence; Irish cnoc, 'a hill, nawew, nape, Brassica napus' (O'Reilly), explaining the Du. sense of 'turnip.' The parallel form Gael. cnag, a peg, knob, explains the Swed. knöl.

γ. I thus regard knoll, a hillock, as a dimin. of Gael. cnoc, a hill, and G. knollen, a knob, as a dimin. of Gael. cnag, a knob. See Knag. δ. Also, it is a doublet of Knuckle, q. v. KNOLL (2), the same as Knell, q. v. (E.)

KNOP, KNOB, a protuberance, bump, round projection. (C.) Knob is a later spelling, yet occurs as early as in Chaucer, C. T. 635, where we find the pl. knobb, from a singular knobb (dissyllabic). Knop is in Exod. xxv. 31, 33, 36 (A. V.) The pl. knoppis is in Wyclif, Exod. xxvi. 11; spelt knoppes, Rom. of the Rose, 1683, 1685, where it means 'rose-buds.' A third form is knap, in the sense of 'hill-top;' as in: 'some high knap or tuft of a mountain;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 10. — A. S. cnap, the top of a hill; Luke, iv. 29; Numb. xiv. 44. + Du. knop, a knob, pummel, button, bud; knopp, a knob, button, knot, tie. + Icel. knapp, a knot, stud, button. + Dan. knop, a knob, button; knop, a knob, bud. + Swed. knopp, a knob; knop, a knot. + G. knopf, a knob, button, pummel, bud.

β. But all these appear to be of Celtic origin. — Gael. cnap, a slight blow, a knob, button, lump, boss, stud, little hill; from the verb cnap, to thump, strike, beat. So also W. cnap, a knob, button; Irish cnap, a button, knob, bunch, hillock, from cnapaim, I strike. Here, as in the case of bump, the original sense is 'to strike;' whence the sb. signifying (1) a slight blow, (2) the effect of a blow, a contusion, or anything in the shape of a contusion. γ. The verb cnap, to nap, strike, is of imitative origin, from the sound of a blow; cf. Gael. cnapadh, thumping, falling with a great noise; see Knop. It is a parallel form to Knock, q. v. ¶ A Celtic c answers to Teut. k; and we find a cognate, not a borrowed form, appearing in Goth. dis-kniupan, to tear asunder; whence dis-knupnan, to be torn asunder. Knop, in the sense of 'to beat,' occurs in King Lear, ii. 4. 125. Der. knop-weed or knop-weed.

KNOT, a tight fastening, bond, cluster. (E.) M. E. knott (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 10715. — A. S. cnotta, a knot; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 386, l. 22. + Du. knót. + Icel. knútr. + Dan. knude. + Swed. knut. + G. knuten. + Lat. nodus (for gnodus). Root uncertain; see Fick, iii. 49. Der. knót, verb; knit, q. v.; knott-y, knott-less, knott-grass.

KNOUT, a whip used as an instrument of punishment in Russia. (Russian.) Not in Todd's Johnson. — Russ. knute, a whip, scourge. Der. knout, verb. [†]

KNOW, to be assured of, recognise. (E.) M. E. knowen; pt. t. knew, Chaucer, C. T. 5474; pp. known, id. 5310. — A. S. cnáwan, pt. t. cnéow, pp. cnáwen; gen. used with prefix ge-, which does not affect the sense; Grein, i. 386. + Icel. kná, to know how to, be able; a defective verb. + O. Sax. knégan; only in the comp. bi-knégan, to obtain, know how to get. + O. H. G. chnáwan; only in the compounds bi-chnáwan, ir-chnáwan, int-chnáwan; cited by Fick, iii. 41. +

Russ. znate, to know. + Lat. noscere (for gnoscere), to know. + Gk. γινώσκω (fut. γνώσεται); a reduplicated form. + Skt. jñá, to know.

β. All from GNÁ, to know, a secondary form from GAN, to know; whence Can (1), Ken, Keen, Noble, &c. Der. know-ing, know-ing-ly; also know-ledge, q. v.

KNOWLEDGE, assured belief, information, skill. (E.; with Stand. suffix.) M. E. knowlege, Chaucer, C. T. 12960; spelt knowliche, knowleche in Six-text ed., B. 1220. In the Cursor Mundi, 12162, the spellings are knawlege, knawleche, knawleche. The d is a late insertion; and -lege is for older -leche. For know, see above. As to the suffix, it is a Scand., not an A. S. form; the ch is a weakened form of k as usual; and -leche stands for -leke, borrowed from Icel. -leikr or -leiki (= Swed. -lek), occurring in words such as kær-leikr, love (= Swed. kärlek), sannleikr, truth, heilagleiki, holiness. β. This suffix is used for forming abstract nouns, much as -ness is used in English; etymologically, it is the same word with Icel. leikr (Swed. lek), a game, play, sport, hence occupation, from the verb leika, to play, cognate with A. S. lécen, Goth. laikan, to play, and still preserved in prov. E. laik, to play, Southern E. lark, a piece of fun, where the r is inserted to preserve the length of the vowel. The A. S. sb. léc is cognate with Icel. leikr, and is also used as a suffix, appearing in wed-léc = mod. E. wedlock.

γ. It will now be seen that the -ledge in knowledge and the -lock in wedlock are the same suffix, the former being Northern or Scandinavian, and the latter Southern or Wessex (Anglo-Saxon). See further under Lark (2), Wedlock.

δ. It may be added that the compound knúleiki actually occurs in Icelandic, but it is used in the sense of 'prowess'; we find, however, a similar compound in Icel. kunnleikr, knowledge. Der. acknowledge, a bad spelling of a-knowledge; see Acknowledge.

KNUCKLE, the projecting joint of the fingers. (C.) M. E. knokil. 'Knokyl of an honde, knokil-bone, Condilus'; Prompt. Parv. 'Knokille-bone of a legge, Coxa'; id. Not found in A. S.; the alleged form cnucel, due to Somner, appears to be a fiction. Yet some such form probably existed, though not recorded; it occurs in O. Friesic as knokkele, knokle. + Du. knokkel, a knuckle (Sewel); dimin. of knokke, knake, a bone, or a knuckle (Hexham). + Dan. knokkel. + Swed. knoge, a knuckle (in which the dimin. suffix is not added). + G. knöchel, a knuckle, joint; connected with knochen, a bone. β. All formed, with dimin. suffix -el or -il, from a primitive knok or knak, a bump, knob, projection, still preserved in the form knag, which is of Celtic origin. See Knag. [+] Knoll (1) is probably a doublet.

KNURR, KNUR, a knot in wood, wooden ball. (O. Low G.) 'A knur, bruscum, gibbus'; Levins, 190. 16. 'Bosse, a knob, knot, or knur in a tree'; Cot. M. E. knor. 'Without knot or knor, or eny signe of goute'; Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, l. 2514. Not found in A. S., but of O. Low G. origin. = O. Du. knorre, a hard swelling, knot in wood; Kilian, Oudemans. + Dan. knort, a knot, gnarl, knag. + G. knorren, a hunch, lump, protuberance, knot in reed or straw; prov. G. knorz, a knob, knot (Flügel). β. It seems to belong to the same class of words as knob, knop, knag; cf. also Du. knorf, a knot; G. knospe, a bud, knot, button. And see Gnarled.

KORAN, the sacred book of the Mohammedans. (Arab.) Also Alcoran, where al is the Arabic def. article. Bacon has Alcoran, Essay 16 (Of Atheism). = Arab. qurán, Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 469; explained by 'reading, a legible book, the kurán,' Rich. Pers. and Arab. Dict. p. 1122. = Arab. root qara-a, he read; Rich. Dict. p. 1121. The a is long, and bears the stress.

KYTHE, to make known. (E.) In Burns, Hallowe'en, st. 3. M. E. kythen, kithen; Chaucer, C. T. 5056. = A. S. cýðan, to make known; formed by regular vowel-change from cēð, known, pp. of cunnan, to know. See Uncouth, Can.

LABEL, a small slip of paper, &c. (F., = Teut.) Various uses. In heraldry, it denotes a horizontal strip with three pendants or tassels. It is also used for a strip or slip of silk, parchment, or paper. M. E. label, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 22; where it denotes a moveable slip or rule of metal, used with an astrolabe as a sort of pointer, and revolving on the front of it. [Not 'fitted with sights,' as said in Webster.] = O. F. label, a label in the heraldic sense, later F. lambel; see quotations in Littré. Cotgrave has: 'Lambel, a labell of three points.' The doublet of lambel is lambeau; Cotgrave has: 'Lambeau, a shread, rag, or small piece of stuffe, or of a garment ready to fall from, or holding but little to the whole; also, a labell.' The orig. sense is 'a small flap' or lappet; the E. lappel being a doublet. = O. H. G. lappa, M. H. G. lappe, cited by Fick as the older forms of G. lappen, 'a flap, botch, patch, rag, tatter, ear of a hound, lobe; Flügel. This is cognate with E. lap; see Lap (2). Der. label, verb; Twelfth Night, i. 5. 265. Doublets, lappel, lappet.

LABELLUM, a pendulous petal. (L.) A botanical term. = Lat. labellum, a little lip. Put for labrellum, dimin. of labrum, a lip, akin to labium, a lip; see Labial.

LABIAL, pertaining to the lips. (L.) 'Which letters are labial'; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 198. [The labial letters are p, b, f; closely allied to which is the nasal m.] = Late Lat. labialis, belonging to the lips; coined from Lat. labium, the lip. See Lap (1), Lip.

LABIATE, having lips or lobes. (L.) A botanical term. Coined, as if from a Lat. pp. labiatus, from Lat. labium, the lip. See Labial.

LABORATORY, a chemist's workroom. (L.) 'Laboratory, a chymists workhouse'; Kersey, ed. 1715. Shortened from elaboratory, by loss of e. 'Elaboratory, a work-house'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Cf. O. F. elaboratoire, 'an laboratory, or workhouse'; Cot. Formed, as if from a Lat. *elaboratorium, from elaboratus, pp. of elaborare, to take pains, compounded of Lat. e, out, extremely, and laborare, to work. See Elaborate, Labour.

LABORIOUS, toilsome. (F., = L.) M. E. laborious; Chaucer, C. T. 7010. = F. laborieux, 'laborious'; Cot. = Lat. laboriosus, toilsome; formed with suffix -osus from labori, crude form of labor. See Labour. Der. laborious-ly, -ness.

LABOUR, toil, work. (F., = L.) M. E. labour (accented on -our); Chaucer, C. T. 2195. = O. F. labour, later labeur. = Lat. labōrem, acc. of labor (oldest form labos), labour, toil.

β. Labos stands for an older rabos, akin to Lat. robur, strength. = LABH, to get, perform, later form of √RABH, to seize; cf. Skt. labh, to get, acquire, undergo, perform; rabh, to seize; Gk. λαμβάνειν, to take. See Fick, i. 192, 751. Der. labour, verb, M. E. labouren, Chaucer, C. T. 186; labour-ed; labour-er, M. E. laborere, Chaucer, C. T. 1411; and see labori-ous, labor-at-ory. The spelling with final -our, answering to O. F. -our, shews that the derivation is not from Lat. nom. labor, but from the acc. labōrem.

LABURNUM, the name of a tree. (L.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvi. c. 18. = Lat. laburnum; Pliny, xvi. 18. 31. [+]

LABYRINTH, a place full of winding passages, a maze. (F., = L., = Gk.) In Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 2. = F. labyrinthe; Cot. = Lat. labyrinthus. = Gk. λαβύρινθος, a maze, place full of lanes or alleys. β. Put for λαβύρινθος; from λαβρα, usually λαύρα, a lane, alley, Homer, Od. xxii. 128. [Cotgrave spells the E. word 'labyrinth'; so also Low Lat. labyrinthus, Trevisa, i. 9; by confusion with Lat. labor. Der. labyrinthine, labyrinthian.]

LAC (1), a resinous substance. (Pers., = Skt.) A resinous substance produced mainly upon the banyan-tree by an insect called the Coccus lacca. 'Lacca, a kind of red gum'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. = Pers. lak, luk, 'the substance commonly called gum-lac, being the nidus of an insect found deposited on certain trees in India, and from which a beautiful red lake is extracted, used in dyeing'; Richardson's Pers. Dict. p. 1272. = Skt. lákshá, lac, the animal dye; put for raktá, lac, formed from rakta, pp. of the verb rañj, to dye, to colour, to redden; cf. Skt. ranga, colour, paint (Benfey). [Skt. ksh for kt is regular.] Doublet, lake (2). Der. lacquer, gum-lac, shel-lac.

LAC (2), a hundred thousand. (Hind., = Skt.) Imported from India in modern times; we speak of 'a lac of rupees' = 100,000 rupees. = Hind. lak. = Skt. laksha, a mark, aim; also a lac, a hundred thousand; prob. standing for an orig. rakta, pp. of the verb rañj, to dye, colour (Benfey). See Lac (1). [+]

LACE, a cord, tie, plaited string. (F., = L.) M. E. las, laas, King Alisaunder, 7698; Chaucer, C. T. 394. = O. F. las, lags, a snare; cf. lags courant, a noose, running knot; Cot. = Lat. laqueus, a noose, snare, knot. β. From the same source as Lat. lacere, to allure, used in the comp. allicere, to allure, elicere, to draw out, delicere, to entice, delight. See Delight. Der. lace, verb, Spenser, F. Q. v. 5. 3. Doublet, lasso. The use of lace in the orig. sense of 'snare' occurs in Spenser, Muiphotmos, 427.

LACERATE, to tear. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. lacerer; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. = Lat. laceratus, pp. of lacerare, to tear, rend. = Lat. lacer, mangled, torn. + Gk. λαικρός, torn; cf. laisis, a rent. = √WRAC, to tear; cf. Skt. vrapāc, to tear; whence also Gk. ράκος, a rag; see Rag. See Curtius and Benfey. Der. lacerat-ion, lacerat-ive.

LACHRYMAL, LACRIMAL, pertaining to tears. (L.) The usual spelling lachrymal is false; it should be lacrimal. In anatomy, we speak of 'the lachrymal gland.' Not an old term; but we find 'lachrymable, lamentable,' 'lachrymate, to weep,' and 'lachrymatory, a tear-bottle' in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. All formed from Lat. lacryma, a tear, better spelt lacruma or lacrima. β. The oldest form is dacrima (Festus); cognate with Gk. δάκρυ, a tear, and with E. tear. See Tear, sb. Der. from the same Lat. lacrima are lachrym-ose, lachrymat-ory.

LACK (1), want. (O. Low G.) The old sense is often 'failing,' 'failure,' or 'fault.' M. E. lak, spelt lac, Havelok, l. 191; the pl.

lakkes is in P. Plowman, B. x. 262. Not found in A.S., but an Old Low G. word. Cf. Du. lak, blemish, stain; whence laken, to blame. We also find Icel. laker, defective, lacking. β. Fick connects Icel. laker with Icel. leka, to leak (iii. 261). In this view lack is a defect or leak; see Leak. We find A.S. læc, wounded (Grein, ii. 161), a rare word, which agrees with the Du. adj. lek, leaky, G. leck, leaky. ¶ There is no reason for connecting E. lack with Goth. laian, to revile; for this answers to A.S. læan, to revile, which is quite a different word. Der. lack, verb; see below.

LACK (2), to want, be destitute of. (O. Low G.) M.E. lakken, Chaucer, C. T. 758, 11498; P. Plowman, B. v. 132. The verb is formed from the sb., not vice versa; this is shown by the O. Fries. lakia, to attack, blame, where the suffix -ia is the usual one in the case of a causal verb formed from a sb. Hence the verb is a weak one; and the pt. t. is lakkede, as in Chaucer. See therefore Lack (1) above.

LACKER, another form of Lacquer, q. v.

LACKEY, LACQUEY, a footman, menial attendant. (F., Span. ?—Arab. ?) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 2. 314; Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 66.—O. F. laquay, 'a lackey, footboy, footman'; Cot. Mod. F. laquais. There was also an O. F. form alacay; see Littré, who shews that, in the 15th cent., a certain class of soldiers (esp. cross-bow-men) were called alagues, alacays or lacays. The prefix -a is for al, and due to the Arab. def. article. — Span. lacayo, a lackey; cf. Port. lacaio, a lackey, lacaia, a woman-servant in dramatic performances. β. The use of a- (for al) in O. F. alacays points to an Arab. origin.—Arab. lakā, worthless, slavish, and, as a sb., a slave. The fem. form lakā'a, mean, servile (applied to a woman) accounts for the Port. lacaia. Allied words are lakū, lakf, abject, servile, lakā'i, slovenly. See Richardson, Pers. Dict. pp. 1272, 1273. γ. However, this is but a guess; the etymology is quite uncertain; Diez connects it with Ital. laccare, G. lecken, to lick; see Lick. Der. lackey, verb, Ant. and Cleop. i. 4. 46.

LACONIC, brief, pithy. (L.—Gk.) 'Laconical, that speaks briefly or pithily,' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Quitting the thrifty style laconic;' Denham, A Dialogue between Sir J. Pooley and Mr. Killigrew (R.) [Denham died A.D. 1668.] — Lat. Laconicus, Laconian. — Gk. Λακωνικός, Laconian. — Gk. Λάκων, a Laconian, an inhabitant of Lacedæmon or Sparta. These men were proverbial for their brief and pithy style of speaking. Der. laconic-al, laconic-al-ly, laconic-ism; also lacon-ism, from Gk. Λάκων.

LACQUER, LACKER, a sort of varnish. (F.,—Port.,—Pers.,—Skt.) 'Lacker, a sort of varnish;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Lacquer'd chair;' Pope, Horace, Ep. ii. 1. 337. 'The lack of Tonquin is a sort of gummy juice, which drains out of the bodies or limbs of trees. The cabinets, desks, or any sort of frames to be lackered, are made of fir or pine-tree. The work-houses where the lacker is laid on are accounted very unwholesome;' Dampier, Voyages, an. 1638 (R.). — F. lacre, 'a confection or stuffe made of rosin, brimstone, and white wax mingled, and melted together,' &c.; Cot.—Port. lacre, sealing-wax.—Port. laca, gum-lac.—Pers. lak, luk, lac.—Skt. lākshā, lac. See Lac (1). Der. lacquer, verb.

LACTEAL, relating to milk, conveying chyle. (L.) 'Lacteal, Lacteous, milky;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Lactory [read lactary] or milky plants, which have a white and lacteous juice;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, d. vi. c. 10. § 2. Formed with suffix -al from Lat. lacteus, milky.—Lat. lact-, stem of lac, milk. + Gk. γαλακτ- stem of γάλα, milk. β. From a base GLAKT or GALAKT, milk; root unknown. Der. lacte-ous (= Lat. lacteus); lactesc-ent, from pres. part. of lactescere, to become milky; whence lactescence. Also lacti-c, from lacti-, crude form of lac; whence also lacti-ferous, where the suffix is from Lat. -fer, bearing, from ferre, to bear, cognate with E. bear. Also lettuce, q. v.

LAD, a boy, youth. (C.) M.E. ladde, pl. laddes; Havelok, l. 1786; P. Plowman, B. xix. 32; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 36. Of Celtic origin; W. llawd, a youth; Irish lath, a youth, champion, which O'Reilly connects with Irish luth, nimble, active, also yearning, strength; cf. Gael. laidir, strong, stout, luth, strength. β. The word may very well be cognate with Goth. lauhs, used in the comp. jugga-lauhs, a young lad, young man; from Goth. liudan, to grow, spring up, Mark, iv. 29. The Goth. base LUD = Celt. base LUTH; Fick, i. 757. Der. lass, q. v. ¶ The word cannot be connected with G. lasse, a vassal of a lord, as G. ss = E. t.

LADANUM, the same as Laudanum, q. v.

LADDER, a frame with steps, for climbing up by. (E.) M.E. ladder, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 44; Rob. of Glouc. p. 333. The word has lost an initial h. — A.S. hlæder, a ladder; Grein, ii. 80. + Du. ladder, a ladder, rack or rails of a cart. + O. H. G. kleitra, G. leiter, a ladder, scale. β. Perhaps allied to Lat. clathri, s. pl. a trellis, grate, set of bars, Gk. κλειθρον, κλήθρον, a bar, bolt. The latter is from Gk. κλείειν, to shut. See Cloister. In this view, a ladder is a set of bars.

LADE (1), to load. (E.) 'And they laded their asses with the corn;' Gen. xlii. 26. M.E. laden, pp. laden, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1800. — A.S. hladan, to lade, load; Grein, ii. 79. Der. lad-ing, a load, cargo, Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 3. And see Lade (2); also the Addenda. [†]

LADE (2), to draw out water, drain. (E.) 'He'll lade it [the sea] dry;' 3 Hen. VI. iii. 2. 139. M.E. hladen, laden; 'hladen out that water' = lade out the water, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 178, l. 19 [where lh is written for hl]. — A.S. hladan, (1) to heap together, (2) to load, (3) to lade out; Grein, ii. 79. 'Hlöd water' = drew water; Exod. ii. 19. The same word as Lade (1); see above. Der. lad-le, q. v.

LADLE, a large spoon. (E.) So called because used for lading or dipping out water from a vessel. M.E. ladel, Chaucer, C. T. 2022; P. Plowman, B. xix. 274. Formed with suffix -el from M.E. laden or hladen, to lade; see Lade (2). [The A.S. hlædle has not been established; it is due to Somner, and may be a fiction.] β. The suffix -el in this case denotes the means or instrument, as in E. sett-le (= A.S. set-l), a seat, a thing to sit upon.

LADY, the mistress of a house, a wife, woman of rank. (E.) M.E. lady, Chaucer, C. T. 88, 1145. Older spellings læfdi, Layamon, 1256; lefdi, leafdi, Ancræn Riwe, pp. 4, 38; lueuedi (= hlæuedi), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 24; lafdi, Ormulum, 1807. — A.S. hlæfdige, a lady; Grein, ii. 81; O. Northumb. hlafdia, in the margin of John, xx. 16, in the Lindisfarne M.S.

β. Of uncertain origin; the syllable hlæf is known to represent the word hláf, a loaf; see Loaf, Lord. But the suffix -dige remains uncertain; the most reasonable guess is that which identifies it with A.S. dægee, a kneader, from the root which appears in Goth. digan or deigan, to knead. This gives the sense 'bread-kneader,' or maker of bread, which is a very likely one; see Lord. The A.S. dægee occurs in the accus. case in the following passage. 'Godwig . . . hæðf geboht Leofgife þā dægean æt Norðstoke and hyre ofspring' = Godwig has bought Leofgifu the dough-woman at Northstoke, and her offspring; Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 641. Cf. Icel. deigja, a dairy-maid; and see further under Dairy, Dough. ¶ The Icel. lafði, a lady, is merely borrowed from English.

β. The term Lady was often used in a special sense, to signify the blessed Virgin Mary; hence several derivatives, such as lady-bird, lady-fern, lady's-finger, lady's-mantle, lady's-slipper, lady's-smock, lady's-tresses. Cf. G. Marien-käfer (Mary's chafer), a lady-bird; Marien-blume (Mary's flower), a daisy; Marien-mantel (Mary's mantle), lady's-mantle; Marien-schuh (Mary's shoe), lady's-slipper. Der. A. (in the general sense), lady-love; lady-ship, M.E. ladiship, Gower, C. A. ii. 301, last line, written lefdiship (= deference), Ancræn Riwe, p. 108; lady-like. B. (in the special sense) lady-bird, &c., as above. Also lady-chapel, lady-day, which strictly speaking are not compound words at all, since lady is here in the gen. case, so that lady chapel = chapel of our Lady, and lady day = day of our Lady. The M.E. gen. case of this word was lady or ladie, rather than ladies, which was a later form; this is remarkably shewn by the phrase 'in his lady grace' = in his lady's favour, Chaucer, C. T. 88; where Tyrwhitt wrongly prints ladies, though the MSS. have lady. The contrast of Lady day with Lord's day is striking, like that of Fri-day with Thurs-day, the absence of s marking the fem. gender; the A.S. gen. case is hlæfdig-an.

LAG, sluggish, coming behind. (C.) 'Came too lag [late] to see him buried;' Rich. III. ii. 1. 90. Cf. prov. E. lag, late, last, slow; lag-last, a loiterer; lag-teeth, the grinders, so called because the last in growth; Halliwell. — W. llag, slack, loose, sluggish. + Gael. and Irish lag, weak, feeble, faint. + Corn. lac, adv. loose, remiss, lax, out of order, bad (Williams). + Lat. laxus, lax, loose; cf. Lat. languor, languor; languidus, languid. Cf. Icel. lakra, to lag behind. β. The form of the root is LAG, to be slack or loose; whence also E. lax, languid; and Gk. λαγρός, slack; see Languish. Der. lag, verb, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 6, with which cf. Corn. lacca, to faint away, Gk. λῆγω, to cease; also lagg-ing-ly, lagg-er, lag-end, 1 Hen. IV. v. 1. 24; lagg-ard (a late word), where the suffix -ard is French (of Teut. origin) and is affixed even to English bases, as in drunk-ard. [†]

LAGOON, LAGUNE, a shallow lake. (Ital.,—L.) Modern; we may speak of 'the lagoons of Venice';—Ital. lagone, a pool; also laguna, a pool. The former is an augmentative form of Ital. lago, a lake; the latter is from Lat. lacuna, a pool. Both are from Lat. lacus, a lake; see Lake (1).

LAIC, LAICAL, pertaining to the people. (L.,—Gk.) 'A Laiche, or Lay-man;' Minshen, ed. 1627. — Lat. laicus; of Gk. origin. See Lay (3), the more usual form of the word.

LAIR, the den or retreat of a wild beast. (E.) M.E. leir; the dat. case leire occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 2nd Series, p. 103, l. 11, where it means 'bed.' Spelt layere, meaning 'camp,' Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 2293. — A.S. leger, a lair, couch, bed;

Grein, ii. 167; from A. S. liegan, to lie down. See LIE (1). + Du. leger, a bed, couch, lair; from liggen, to lie. + M. H. G. leger, O. H. G. legar, now spelt lager, a couch; from O. H. G. liggan, to lie. + Goth. ligrs, a couch; from ligan, to lie. Doublet, leaguer.

LAITY, the lay people. (F., -L., -Gk.; F. suffix.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. A coined word; from the adj. lay, with suffix -ty in imitation of the F. suffix -ité, due to Lat. acc. suffix -iatem. Formed by analogy with gaie-ty from gay, du-ty from due; &c. See LAY (3).

LAKE (1), a pool. (L.) In very early use; and borrowed immediately from Latin; not through the French. A. S. lac, a lake; 'þás meres and laces' = these meres and lakes; in an interpolation in the A. S. Chron. an. 656 or 657; see Thorpe's edition, vol. i. p. 52, vol. ii. p. 27. = Lat. lacus, a lake (whence also F. lac). The lit. sense is 'a hollow' or depression. + Gk. λάκκος, a hollow, hole, pit, pond. Der. lag-oon, q. v.

LAKE (2), a colour, a kind of crimson. (F., -Pers., -Skt.) A certain colour is called 'crimson lake.' 'Vermillion, lake, or crimson.' Ben Jonson, Expostulation with Inigo Jones, l. 11 from end. = F. laque, 'sanguine, rose or rubic colour.' Cot. = Pers. lāk, lake produced from lac; Rich. Dict. p. 1253. = Pers. lak, lac; see LAC (1).

LAMA (1), a high priest. (Thibetan.) We speak of the Grand Lama of Thibet. The word means 'chief' or 'high priest' (Webster).

LAMA (2), the same as Lilama, q. v.

LAMB, the young of the sheep. (E.) M. E. lamb, lomb; Chaucer, C. T. 5037. = A. S. lamb, Grein, ii. 154. + Du. lam. + Icel. lamb. + Dan. lam. + Swed. lamm. + G. lamm. + Goth. lamb. β. All from Teut. base LAMBA (Fick, iii. 267); root unknown. Der. lamb, verb, lamb-like, lamb-skin; also lamb-k-in (with double dimin. suffix), Hen. V. ii. 1. 133.

LAMBENT, flickering. (L.) 'Was but a lambent flame;' Cowley, Pindaric Odes, Destiny, st. 4. = Lat. lambent, stem of pres. part. of lambere, to lick, sometimes applied to flames; see Virgil, Æn. ii. 684. + Gk. λάπτειν, to lick. β. Both from a base LAB, to lick; whence also E. labial, lip, and lap, verb. See LAP (1).

LAME, disabled in the limbs, esp. in the legs. (E.) M. E. lame, Wyclif, Acts, iii. 2; Havelok, 1938. = A. S. lama, Matt. viii. 6. + Du. lam. + Icel. lami, lama. + Dan. lam, palsied. + Swed. lam. + M. H. G. lam; G. lahm. β. The orig. sense is maimed, bruised, broken; from the base LAM, to break, preserved in Russ. lomate, to break; Fick, iii. 267. Cf. Icel. lama, to bruise, prov. E. lam, to beat. Der. lame, verb; lame-ly, lame-sneer.

LAMENT, to utter a mournful cry. (F., -L.) Though the sb. is the orig. word in Latin, the verb is the older word in English, occurring in John, xvi. 20, in Tyndal's version, A. D. 1526. = F. lament, 'to lament'; Cot. = Lat. lamentari, to wail. = Lat. lamentum, a mournful cry; formed with suffix -mentum from the base la-, to utter a cry, which appears again in la-trare, to bark. β. Cf. Goth. laian, to revile; Russ. laite, to bark, snarl, scold; Gk. λάειν, to bark. All from ✓RA, to bark, make a noise; Fick, iii. 259. Of imitative origin; cf. Lat. raucus, hoarse. Der. lament, sb.; lament-able; lamentation, Chaucer, C. T. 937, from F. lamentation.

LAMINA, a thin plate or layer. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. lamina, a thin plate of metal. Root uncertain. Der. lamin-ar, lamin-at-ed, lamin-ation.

LAMMAS, a name for the first of August. (E.) M. E. lammasse; P. Plowman, B. vi. 291; see note on the line (Notes, p. 173). = A. S. hláfmæsse, Grein, i. 80; A. S. Chron. an. 921; at a later period spelt hlammæsse, A. S. Chron. an. 1009. β. The lit. sense is 'loaf-mass', because a loaf was offered on this day as an offering of first-fruits; see Chambers, Book of Days, ii. 154. = A. S. hláf, a loaf; and messe, mass. See LOAF and MASS (2). ¶ Not from lamb and mass, as the fiction sometimes runs.

LAMP, a vessel for giving light. (F., -L., -Gk.) In early use. M. E. lampe; St. Margaret, ed. Cockayne, p. 20, l. 21. = O. F. lampe, 'a lampe'; Cot. = Lat. lampas. = Gk. λάμπας, a torch, light. = Gk. λάμπειν, to shine. = Gk. and Lat. base LAP, to shine; Fick, iii. 750; whence also E. lymph, limpid. Der. lamp-black; lantern, q. v.

LAMPOON, a personal satire. (F., -O. Low G.) In Dryden, Essay on Satire, l. 47. = F. lampon, orig. a drinking song; so called from the exclamation lampons! = let us drink, frequently introduced into such songs. (See Littre, who gives an example.) = F. lamper, to drink; a popular or provincial word; given in Littre. β. This is a nasalised form of O. F. lapper, 'to lap or lick up'; Cot. Of O. Low G. origin; see LAP (1). Der. lampoon-er.

LAMPREY, a kind of fish. (F., -L.) M. E. laumprei, laumpree; Havelok, ll. 771, 897. = O. F. lamproue, spelt lamproue in Cot. Cf. Ital. lampreda, a lamprey. = Low Lat. lampreda, a lamprey, of which an older form was lampetra (Ducange). β. So called from its cleaving to rocks; lit. 'licker of rocks'; coined from Lat. lamb-ere, to lick, and petra, a rock. See Lambent and Petrify. ¶ Scientifically named Petromyzon, i. e. stone-sucking.

LANCE, a shaft of wood, with a spear-head. (F., -L.) M. E. launce; King Alisaunder, l. 936. = F. lance, 'a lance'; Cot. = Lat. lancea, a lance. + Gk. λόγχη, a lance. Root uncertain. Der. lance, verb, Rich. III. iv. 4. 224 (sometimes spelt lanck) = M. E. launcen, spelt lawncyn in Prompt. Parv., p. 290; lanc-er, formerly written lancier, from F. lancier, 'a lanceer' (Cot.); also lancegay; q. v., lanc-et, q. v., lance-ol-ate, q. v. (But not lansquet.)

LANCEGAY, a kind of spear. (Hybrid; F., -L.: and F., -Span., -Moorish.) Obsolete. In Chaucer, C. T. 13682, 13751 (Six-text, B. 1942, 2011). A corruption of F. lance-zagaye, compounded of lance, a lance (see Lance), and zagaye, 'a fashion of slender . . . pike, used by the Moorish horsemen'; Cot. Cf. Span. azagaya = al zagaya, where al is the Arab. def. art., and zagaya is an O. Span. word for 'dart,' a word of Berber or Algerian origin. See my note to Chaucer, loc. cit., and see Way's note 2 to Prompt. Parv., p. 290. ¶ Assegai is from the Port. azagaia.

LANCEOLATE, lance-shaped. (L.) A botan. term, applied to leaves which in shape resemble the head of a lance. = Lat. lanceolatus, furnished with a spike. = Lat. lanceola, a spike; dimin. of lancea, a lance; see Lance. ¶ Orig. applied to the leaf of the plantain; cf. F. lancelée, 'ribwort plantaine' (Cot.)

LANCET, a surgical instrument. (F., -L.) M. E. launcet, also spelt launset, launcet, Prompt. Parv., p. 290. = O. F. lancette, 'a surgeon's lancet; also, a little lance'; Cot. Dimin. of F. lance; see Lance.

LANCH, another spelling of Lance, verb, and of Launch.

LAND, earth, soil, country, district. (E.) M. E. land, land; Chaucer, C. T. 4912, 4914. = A. S. land; Grein, ii. 154. + Du. land. + Icel. land, and Swed. land. + Goth. land. + G. land; M. H. G. lant. Cf. Russ. liada, a field overgrown with brushwood. Root unknown; perhaps related to LAWN (1). Der. land, verb, A. S. lendan (= landian), Grein, ii. 168; land-breeze, land-crab, land-flood, land-grave, q. v., land-holder, land-ing, land-lady; land-lord, Tyndal's Works, p. 210, col. 1; lands-man (= land-man, Ant. and Cleop. iv. 3. 11); land-mark, Bible, 1551, Job, xxiv. 2; land-rail, q. v.; land-scape, q. v.; land-slip, land-steward, land-tax, land-waiter, land-ward.

LANDAU, a kind of coach. (G.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Supposed to be named from Landau, a town in Bavaria. Here, Land = E. land; on -au, see Island.

LAND-GRAVE, a count of a province. (Du.) 'Landgrave, or Landsgrave, the earl or count of a province, whereof in Germany there are four'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Du. landgraaf, a landgrave. = Du. land, land, province; and graaf, a count, earl. So also G. landgraf, from land and graf. β. The word was borrowed from the Du. rather than the G., as is easily seen by the E. fem. form land-gravine, which answers to Du. landgravin rather than to G. landgräfinn. See Land and Margrave. Der. landgrav-in, as above; landgrav-ate, 'that region or country which belongs to a landgrave'; Blount.

LANDRAIL, a kind of bird; see Rail (3).

LANDSCAPE, the aspect of a country. (Du.) In Milton, L'Allegro, l. 70. Formerly spelt landskip; see Trench, Select Glossary. And see Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, which makes it clear that it was orig. a painter's term, to express 'all that part of a picture which is not of the body or argument'; answering somewhat to the mod. term back-ground. It was borrowed from the Dutch painters. = Du. landschap, a landscape, province; cf. landschap-schilder, a landscape painter. = Du. land, cognate with E. land; and -schap, a suffix = A. S. -scipe = E. -ship (in friend-ship, woor-ship), derived from the verb which in Eng. is spelt shape. See Land and Shape.

¶ The Du. sch is sounded more like E. sk than E. sh; hence the mod. sound. [†]

LANE, an open space between hedges, a narrow passage or street. (E.) M. E. lane, lone; Chaucer, C. T. 16126; P. Plowman, A. ii. 192, B. ii. 216. = A. S. lāne, lone, a lane; Codex Diplomaticus, ed. Kemble, vol. i. p. 1. l. 13; vol. iii. p. 33 (no. 549). [Cf. Prov. E. lone (Cleveland), lonnin (Cumberland).] + O. Friesic lona, lana, a lane, way; North Fries. lona, lana, a narrow way between houses and gardens (Outzen). + Du. laan, an alley, lane, walk. β. Of unknown origin; perhaps allied to Icel. lón, an inlet, a sea-loch, lana, a hollow place, a vale.

LANGUAGE, speech, diction. (F., -L.) M. E. langage, King Alisaunder, l. 6857; Chaucer, C. T. 4936. = F. langage, language; formed with suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum) from langue, the tongue. = Lat. lingua, the tongue. See Lingual, Tongue.

LANGUID, feeble, exhausted, sluggish. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Lat. languidus, languid. = Lat. languere, to be weak. See Languish. Der. languid-ly, languidness.

LANGUISH, to become enfeebled, pine, become dull or torpid. (F., -L.) M. E. languishen, Chaucer, C. T. 11262. = F. languiss-, stem of pres. part. of languir, 'to languish, pine'; Cot. = Lat. languere, to be weak; whence languescere, to become weak, which furnishes the F. stem languiss-. β. From classical base LAG, to be slack or lax, whence also E. lax, q. v., also Gk. λαγγάζειν, to slacken, loiter, λαγρός, slack; Icel. lakra, to lag. See Lag. Der. languish-ing-ly, languish-ment; and see languid, languor.

LANGUOR, dullness, listlessness. (F., -L.) M. E. languor, Will. of Palerne, 918, 986; langure, id. 737. [Now accommodated to the Lat. spelling.] - F. languere, 'languor'; Cot. - Lat. languorem, acc. of languor, languor. - Lat. languere, to be weak. See Languish.

LANIARD, the same as Lanyard, q. v.

LANIFEROUS, wool-bearing. (L.) A scientific term in zoology. Coined from Lat. lanifer, producing wool. - Lat. lani-, for lana, wool; and ferre, to bear.

β. The Lat. lana (= lak-na) is cognate with Gk. λάχνη, down, wool; Lat. ferre is cognate with E. bear. Der. So also lani-gerous, wool-bearing, from Lat. gerere, to bear.

LANK, slender, lean, thin. (E.) M. E. lank, lonk; spelt lone, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 249, l. 9: 'lone he is ant leane' = he is lank and lean. - A. S. hlanc, slender; Grein, ii. 80. β. The orig. sense was probably 'bending,' weak; cf. G. lenken, to turn, bend; see further under Link (1). Der. lank-ly, lank-ness.

LANSEQUENET, a German foot-soldier; a game at cards. (F., -G.) Corruptly spelt lanseknight in old authors, by a popular blunder. See Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, A. ii. sc. 4. l. 21. - F. lansequet, 'a lanceknight, or German footman; also, the name of a game at cards'; Cot. - G. (and Du.) landsknecht, a foot-soldier. - G. lands, put for landes, gen. case of land, land, country; and knecht, a soldier. Land = E. land; and knecht = E. knight. Thus the word is land-s-knight, not lance-knight. ¶ The term means a soldier of the flat or Low Countries, as distinguished from the men who came from the highlands of Switzerland; see Revue Britannique, no. for Sept. 1866, p. 29 (Littre).

LANTERN, a case for carrying a light. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. lanterne, Floriz and Blancheffur, ed. Lumby, i. 238. - F. lanterne. - Lat. lanterna, lāterna, a lantern; the spelling lanterna occurs in the Lindisfarne MS., in the Lat. text of John, xviii. 3. Lantern = lanterna = lampeterna; not a true Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk. λαμπτήρ, a light, torch. - Gk. λάμπειν, to shine. See Lamp. ¶ Sometimes spelt lanthorn (Kersey), by a singular popular etymology which took account of the horn sometimes used for the sides of lanterns.

LANYARD, LANIARD, a certain small rope in a ship. (F., -L.?) The spelling laniard is the better one, since the word has nothing to do with yard. The d is excrement; the old spelling was lannier. 'Lanniers, Lanniards, small ship-ropes that serve to slacken or make stiff the shrowds, chains,' &c.; Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Laniers, vox nautica;' Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Lanyer of leather, lanniere;' Palsgrave. - O. F. laniere, 'a long and narrow band or thong of leather;' Cot. β. Origin uncertain, but prob. Latin; yet it is not clear how it is connected either with Lat. lanarius, woollen, made of wool, or with lanarius, belonging to lanius, a butcher. [†]

LAP (1), to lick up with the tongue. (E.) M. E. lappen, lapien, Wyclif, Judges, vii. 7; Gower, C. A. iii. 215. - A. S. lapien, to lap; rare, but found in Ælfric's Grammar (Lye), and in Glosses to Prudentius (Leo). The derivative lepelder, a spoon, is in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 244, l. 4. + Icel. lepja, to lap like a dog. + Dan. labe, to lap. + M. H. G. laffen, O. H. G. laffen, to lap up. + W. llepio, to lap up. + Lat. lambere (with inserted n), to lick. + Gk. λάττειν, to lap with the tongue; Fick, i. 751, iii. 266. All from a base LAB, LAP, to lap, lick up. Der. from the same base are lab-i-al, lamb-ent, lip.

LAP (2), the loose part of a coat, an apron, part of the body covered by an apron, a fold, flap. (E.) M. E. lappe (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 688; P. Plowman, B. ii. 35, xvi. 255; often in the sense of 'skirt of a garment;' see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. - A. S. lappa, a loosely hanging portion; 'lifre lappan' = portions of the liver; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. 2, l. 18. + O. Fries. lappa, a piece of a garment. + Du. lap, a remnant, shred, rag, patch. + Dan. lap, a patch. + Swed. lapp, a piece, shred, patch. + G. lappen, a patch, shred. β. The Teut. base is LAPAN, a shred, patch (Fick, iii. 266); a sb. formed from the Teut. base LAP, to hang down, occurring in Icel. lapa, to hang down (not given in Cleasby, but cited by Fick and others). γ. This Teut. base = Aryan ✓ RAB, to hang down, fall, glide or slip down. From this base are Skt. lamb (oldest form ramb), to hang, fall down; Lat. lābi, to glide, &c. See Lobe, Limbo, Lapse, Limp (1). Der. lap-ful; lap-el, i. e. part of a coat which laps over the facing (a mod. word, added by Todd to Johnson), formed with dimin. suffix -el; lapp-et, dimin. form with suffix -et, used by Swift (Johnson); lap-dog, Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 853; also lab-el, q. v.

¶ Doubtless the verb to lap (see Lap (3)) has often been supposed to be connected with this sb.; but the two words should be kept quite distinct. In the phrase 'to lap over,' it is probable that the verb really belongs to the present sb. Cf. lap-eared = lap-eared, with hanging ears, applied to rabbits.

LAP (3), to wrap, involve, fold. (E.) Doubtless frequently confused with the word above, but originally quite distinct from it. M. E. lappen, to wrap, fold, Will. of Palerne, 1712; 'lapped in cloutes' = wrapped up in rags, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 438.

β. This word has lost an initial w; an older form was wlappen; thus in Wyclif, Matt. xxvii. 59, the Lat. involuit is translated in the later version by 'lapped it,' but in the earlier one by 'wapped it.'

γ. Lastly, the M. E. wlappen is a later form of wrappen, to wrap, by the frequent change of r to l; so that lap is a mere corruption or later form of wrap. See Wrap. ¶ The form wlappen explains the latter part of the words de-velop, en-velop, q. v.

LAPIDARY, one who cuts and sets precious stones. (L.) Cotgrave translates F. lapidaire by 'a lapidary or jeweller.' Englished from Lat. lapidarius, a stone-mason, a jeweller. - Lat. lapid-, stem of lapis, a stone. Allied to Gk. λίθος, a bare rock, λίπτις, a scale, flake. From the base LAP, to scale off, peel; see in Gk. λίπειν, to peel, Russ. lupiti, to peel; see Leaf. Der. from the same source, lapidi-fy, lapid-esc-ent, lapid-esc-ence, lapid-esc-enc-y, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 23, § 5. Also di-lapid-ate, q. v.

LAPSE, to slip or fall into error, to fail in duty. (L.) In Shak. Cor. v. 2. 19; the sb. lapse is in All's Well, ii. 3. 170. - Lat. lapsare, to slip, frequentative of labi (pp. lapsus), to glide, slip, trip. - ✓ RAB, to fall, hang down; see Lap (2). Der. lapse, sb., from Lat. lapsus, a slip. Also e-lapse. [†]

LAPWING, the name of a bird. (E.) M. E. lappewinke (four syllables), Gower, C. A. ii. 239; later lapwinke, Prompt. Parv. p. 288; spelt lappwynche, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 61, l. 31. - A. S. hlæpewince, Wright's Vocab., i. 62, col. 1, l. 22. β. The first part is hlæpe, connected with hlæpan, to run, spring, leap; see Leap. γ. The second part of the word is, literally, 'winker'; but we must assign to the verb wink its original sense. This orig. sense appears in the O. H. G. winchan, M. H. G. winken, to move from side to side, a sense preserved in mod. G. wanken, to totter, stagger, vacillate, reel, waver, &c. Thus the sense is 'one who turns about in running or flight,' which is (I believe) fairly descriptive of the habit of the male bird. The G. wanken is from the same root as Lat. uagus, wandering; see Vagrant and Wink. ¶ Popular etymology explains the word as 'wing-flapper;' but lap does not really take the sense of flap; it means, rather, to droop, hang down loosely; see Lap (2). This interpretation is wrong as to both parts of the A. S. form of the word, and is too general. [†]

LARBOARD, the left side of a ship, looking from the stern. (E. or Scand.) Cotgrave has: 'Babot, the larboard side of a ship.' It is also spelt larboord in Minshew, ed. 1627. The spelling is probably corrupt; the M. E. spelling appears to be laddebord, if indeed this be the same word. In Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. l. 106, some sailors are preparing to set sail, and after spreading the main-sail, 'þay layden in on ladde-borde and the lofe wyntes' = they laid in [hailed in?] on the larboard and set right the loof (see Luff). β. It is certain that board is the same as in star-board, and that the word is of E. or Scand. origin, probably the latter. The only word which answers in form to ladde is Swed. ladda, to lade, load, charge, answering to Icel. hlæða, A. S. hladan, E. lade. Ladda is pronounced laa in prov. Swed. and Norw. (Rietz, Aasen). We find Icel. hlæða seglum = to take in sail. γ. Beyond this, all is uncertainty; we may conjecture that the sails, when taken down, were put on the left side of the ship, to be out of the way of the steersman, who originally stood on the starboard (= steer-board) or right side of the ship. See Starboard.

LARCENY, theft, robbery. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave, who explains O. F. larrecin by 'larceny, theft, robbery.' An old law term; see Blount's Nomolexicon. - O. F. larrecin, larcin (both forms are in Cotgrave); mod. F. larcin. The spelling larrecin occurs in the Laws of William the Conqueror, § xiv; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws of England, i. 472. [The suffix -y appears to be an E. addition, to conform the word to forger-y, burglar-y, felon-y, and the like; but it is unnecessary]. - Lat. latrocinium, freebooting, marauding, robbery; formed with suffix -cinium (occurring also in tiro-cinium) from latro, a robber. β. Curtius (i. 453) considers latro as borrowed from Gk. At any rate it is equivalent to Gk. λάρτης, a hireling, used in a bad sense. The suffix -tro or -tis denotes the agent, and the base is λαφ, to get, seen in δω-λαύ-ειν, to enjoy, get; cf. λῆψις, λεία, booty, spoil, lu-crum, gain. See Lucre. Der. larcen-ist. The word burg-lar contains a derivative from latro.

LARCH, a kind of tree like a pine. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt larche in Minshew, ed. 1627. - O. F. larege, 'the larch, or larinx tree;' Cot. - Lat. laricem, acc. of larix, the larch-tree. - Gk. λάριξ, the larch-tree. [†]

LARD, the melted fat of swine. (F., -L.) 'Larde of flesche, larda, vel lardum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 288. - O. F. lard, 'lard;' Cot.

—Lat. lardā, shortened form of lārīda (also lārīdum), lard, fat of bacon. Akin to Gk. λαρός, pleasant to the taste, nice, dainty, sweet, λαρῶς, fat. Der. lard, verb, M. E. larden (Prompt. Parv.), from F. larder, to lard (see note to Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, A. iii. sc. 4, l. 174); lard-er, Gower, C. A. iii. 124, with which cf. O. F. lardier, 'a tub to keep bacon in' (Cotgrave), hence applied to a room in which bacon and meat are kept; lard-y, lard-ac-eous; inter-lard.

LARGE, great, bulky, vast. (F., —L.) In early use. M. E. large (which usually has the sense of liberal), O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 143, l. 32. —F. large. —Lat. largus, large, long. Root uncertain. Der. large-ly; large-ness, King Alisaunder, l. 6879; large-heart-ed; large-hand-ed, Timon of Ath. iv. 1. 11; and see largess, en-large.

LARGESS, a liberal gift, donation. (F., —L.) M. E. largesse, P. Plowman, A. vi. 112; Ancien Riwe, p. 166. —F. largesse, bounty; Cot. —Low Lat. *largitia (not found), put for Lat. largitio, a bestowing, giving. —Lat. largitus, pp. of largiri, to bestow. —Lat. largus, large, liberal; see Large.

LARK (1), the name of a bird. (E.) Lark is a contraction of lavrock; see Burns, Holy Fair, st. 1. M. E. larke, Chaucer, C. T. 1493; spelt laverock, Gower, C. A. ii. 264. —A. S. lāwerce, later lāwerce, lāwerce, lāferce. The spelling lauerce is in Wright's Vocab. i. 62, col. 2; lauerce (for lauerce) in the same, i. 29, col. 1, i. 77, col. 2. Laferce is in the comp. lafercan-beorh, a place-name cited in Leo. —Icel. lævirki, a lark; + Low G. lewerke (Bremen Wörterbuch). —O. H. G. lerchha; G. lerche. —Du. leuwrik, leuwerik. —Swed. lärka. —Dan. lærke. β. The Icel. læ-virki = skilful worker or worker of craft, from læ, craft, and virki, a worker; cf. Icel. læ-vissi, craft, skill, læ-viss, crafty, skilful; and (as to virki), ill-virki, a worker of ill, spell-virki, a doer of mischief. Similarly, the A. S. lāwerce may be decomposed into læw-ercca = guile-worker; cf. læwa, a traitor, betrayer, Mark, xiv. 44; also Goth. lew, an occasion, opportunity (Rom. vii. 8, 11), whence lewjan, leiwjan, to betray. The name points to some superstition which regarded the bird as of ill omen.

LARK (2), a game, sport, fun. (E.) Spelt lark in modern E., and now a slang term. But the r is intrusive, and the word is an old one; it should be laak or lakk, where aa has the sound of a in father. M. E. lak, lok; also laik, which is a Scand. form. See Will. of Palerne, 678; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 243; Ormulum, 1157, 2166; Ancien Riwe, p. 152, note b; &c. (Stratmann). —A. S. lāc, play, contest, prey, gift, offering; Grein, ii. 148. —Icel. leikr, a game, play, sport. —Swed. lek, sport. —Dan. leg, sport. —Goth. laiks, a sport, dance. β. All from a Teut. base LAIK, to dance, skip for joy, play; cf. Goth. laikan, to skip for joy, Luke, i. 41, 44. A. S. lācan, Icel. leika, to play; Fick, iii. 259. Der. wed-lock, know-ledge; see these words.

LARUM, short for Alarum, q. v. In Shak. Cor. i. 4. 9.

LARVA, an insect in the caterpillar state. (L.) A scientific term. —Lat. larva, a ghost, spectre, mask; the insect's first stage being the mask of its last one; a fanciful term. Root uncertain. Der. larv-al, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

LARYNX, the upper part of the windpipe. (L. —Gk.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. —Lat. larynx. —Gk. λάρυγξ, the larynx, throat, gullet; gen. case, λάρυγγος. Der. laryng-e-al, laryng-e-an, laryng-itis.

LASCAR, a native E. Indian sailor. (Pers.) Modern. —Pers. laskhar, an army; whence laskhari, a soldier, camp-follower; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1265.

LASCIVIOUS, lustful. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 1. 19. Corrupted (prob. by the influence of the F. form lascif) from Lat. lascivus, lascivious. Lengthened from an older form *lascus (not found), as fest-iuus is from fest-us. Cf. Gk. λάστρις, λάστυπος, lecherous; Russ. laskate, to caress, flatter, fawn; Skt. lask, to desire, covet, akin to las, to embrace, sport; all from the base LAS = ✓RAS, to desire, extended form of LA; cf. Gk. λάω, I wish, will. Der. lascivious-ly, lascivious-ness.

LASH (1), to fasten firmly together. (Du.) 'Lash (in sea affairs), to fasten or bind up anything to the ship's sides;' Kersey, ed. 1715. —Du. lassenchen, to join, scarf together; lascb, sb., a piece, joint, seam, notch. Cf. Swed. laska, to stitch, lask, a scarf, joint; Dan. laske, to scarf, lask, a scarf. β. The true sense is to scarf or join together two pieces that fit; hence, to bind tightly together in any way, to tie together. The verb appears to be formed from the sb., which further appears as Low G. laske, a flap (Bremen Wörterbuch), G. lasche, a flap, scarf or groove to join timber. γ. I should propose to refer the orig. form LASKA, a flap (which would probably stand for LAKSA by the usual interchange of sk and ks, as in E. ax = aks = ask) to a Teut. base LAK, to droop, hang down, answering by Grimm's law to the Lat. and Gk. base LAG, to droop, appearing in Lat. laxus and languere; see Lax, Languid. We thus get, from LAK, to droop, the sb. LAKSA, LASKA, a flap; with the extended sense of joint, jointed piece, whence Du. lassenchen.

8. That this is probably right is supported by the use of Lash (2), q. v. Der. lash-ing, a fastening.

LASH (2), a thong, flexible part of a whip, a stroke, stripe. (O. Low G. or Scand.) M. E. lasche. 'Lasche, stroke, ligula, flagrum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 288. 'Whippes lasshe;' Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 178. β. The lash is the part of the whip that is flexible and droops; this is best explained by comparison with O. Low G. laske, a flap (see Bremen Wörterbuch), answering to G. lasche, a flap. γ. Lash in the sense of 'thong' may be explained by its being used for tying or lashing things together; cf. Swed. laska, to stitch. See further under Lash (1), which is ultimately the same word. Der. lash, verb, to flog, scourge; cf. 'Laschyn, lashyn, betyn, ligulo, verbero;' Prompt. Parv.

LASS, a girl. (C.) M. E. lasse, spelt lasce in Cursor Mundi, l. 2608. Lass may be regarded as short for laddess, where, however, the suffix -ess does not represent a French, but a Welsh ending. The W. fem. suffix is -es, as in llew-es, a she-lion, from llew, a lion; llanc-es, a young woman, from llanc, a youth. Contracted from W. llodes, a girl, wench, fem. form of llawd, a lad. See Lad.

LASSITUDE, weariness. (F., —L.) 'The one is called cruditie, the other lassitude;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 1 (R.). —F. lassitude; Cot. —Lat. lassitudo, faintness, weariness. —Lat. lassi-, from lassus, tired, wearied; with suffix -itudo (Schleicher, Comp. § 227). β. Lassus is put for lad-tus, where lad- corresponds to lat- in Goth. lats, slothful, cognate with E. late. See Late. Fick, i. 750.

LASSO, a rope with a noose. (Span., —L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. —O. Span. laso (Minshew, 1623); Span. lazo, a snare, slip-knot; and cf. F. lacs. —Lat. laqueus, a snare. See Lace. ¶ Not from mod. Spanish, for the Span. z is sounded like the voiceless th. Der. lasso, verb. [†]

LAST (1), latest, hindmost. (E.) Last is a contraction of latest, through the intermediate form laist (= laist), for which see Ormulum, l. 4168. See Late. Cf. Du. laist, last, which is the superl. of laat, late. ¶ For the phrase at last, see Addenda.

LAST (2), a wooden mould of the foot on which shoes are made. (E.) The form is E., but the peculiar sense is rather Scand. M. E. last, leste. 'Hec formula, a last;' Wright's Vocab. i. 196; in a glossary of the 15th cent. 'Leste, sowtarys [shoemaker's] forme, formula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 298. —A. S. lāst, leāst, a foot-track, path, trace of feet; Grein, ii. 160. —Du. leest, a last, shape, form. —Icel. leistr, the foot below the ankle. —Swed. lūst, a shoemaker's last. —Dan. last, the same. —G. leisten, the same. —Goth. laists, a track, way, footstep; 2 Cor. xii. 18. β. The standard Teut. form is the Goth. laist, and the original sense is foot-track, trace of a man's path. Formed from Goth. lais, I know (Phil. iv. 12); the trace being that whereby a man's path is known. This word lais was orig. used in the sense 'I have experienced,' and it is the pt. t. of Goth. leisan, to find out. From Teut. base LIS, to find out; see Fick, iii. 272. See Learn. Der. last (3).

LAST (3), to endure, continue. (E.) M. E. lasten, Havelok, 538; also lesten, Prompt. Parv. p. 299. —A. S. lēstan, to observe, perform, last, remain; the orig. sense being 'to follow in the track of,' from lāst, a foot-track; see Last (2). —Goth. laistjan, to follow, follow after; from laists, a foot-track. —G. leisten, verb, to perform, follow out, fulfil; from leisten, sb., a form, model, shoemaker's last. Der. last-ing-ly, ever-last-ing. ¶ The train of ideas in learn, last (2), and last (3) is: learn, know, trace, foot-track, follow out, fulfil, continue.

LAST (4), a load, a large weight, ship's cargo. (E.) M. E. last. 'A thousand last quad yere;' = a thousand cargoes of bad years; Chaucer, C. T. 13368; and see Deposition of Rich. II, ed. Skeat, iv. 74. —A. S. læst, a burden; Grein, ii. 81. —A. S. hladan, to load; see Lade, Load. —Icel. lest, a load, klass, a cart-load; from hlada, to load. —Dan. last, a weight, burden, cargo, las, a load; from lade, to load. —Swed. last, a burden, lass, a cart-load; from ladda, to load. —Du. and G. last; from laden, to load.

LATCH, a catch, fastening. (E.) M. E. lacche, used by Walter de Biblessworth to translate O. F. cliket; Wright's Vocab. i. 170. [See cliket in Chaucer, C. T. 9920.] 'Latche, lahche, lach, or snekke, Clitorium, vel pessula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 283. From M. E. verb lachen, to seize, catch hold of, Will. of Palerne, 666, 671; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 324. —A. S. læccan, to seize, lay hold of, Grein, ii. 161; also ge-læccan, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 182, ii. 50, 90, 506. β. A. S. læccan is a weak verb (pt. t. læhte), of a causal form, standing for lak-ian, from a base lak-. It is just possible that it was formed from Lat. laqueus, a snare; but this is by no means certain. The assertion in Trench's Select Glossary that lace and latch are 'the same word,' is a mere guess; in fact, the history of the words, as far as we can trace them, shews that they were quite distinct; latch being of A. S. origin, and lace of F. origin. Der. latch, verb, to fasten with a latch, merely formed from the sb., and not the same as M.E. lachen; also latch-key.

LATCHET, a little lace, a thong. (F., -L.) In the Bible, Mark, i. 7, Isa. v. 27. The former i is intrusive. M.E. latchet, as in 'latchet of a schoo'; Prompt. Parv. p. 284. 'Latchet outhor loupe' = latchet or loop; Sir Gawayne and the Grene Knight, l. 591. - O.F. lacet, 'the lace of a petticoat, a woman's lace or lacing, also a snare or ginne'; Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -et) of O.F. lags, a snare. See LACE.

Observe that latchet is the dimin. of lace, and distinct from latch.

LATE, tardy, coming behind, slow, delayed. (E.) 1. M.E. lat, rare as an adj. in the positive degree. 'A lat mon' = a man slow of belief; Joseph of Arimathea, ed. Skeat, l. 695. The adv. is late, as in 'late ne rathe' = late nor early, P. Plowman, B. iii. 73. 2. The compar. form is later or latter, spelt lattere in Layamon, l. 5911. 3. The superl. is latest, latst, or last, the intermediate form appearing in the Ormulum, l. 4168. - A.S. lat, slow, late; Grein, ii. 165. + Du. laat, late. + Icel. latr, slow, lazy. + Dan. lad, lazy, slothful. + Swed. lat, lazy, idle. + Goth. lats, slothful, Luke, xix. 22. + G. lass, weary, indolent. + Lat. lassus (= lad-tus), weary. β. All from Teut. base LAT (= Lat. LAD), to let, let go, let alone; so that late means let alone, neglected, hence slothful, slow, coming behindhand. See LET (1). Der. late-ly, late-ness, late-ish, latt-er, latt-er-ly, last, q. v., last-ly. Also let (2). From the same source, lassitude, q. v.

LATEEN, triangular, applied to sails. (F., -L.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. Vessels in the Mediterranean frequently have lateen sails, of a triangular shape. The E. spelling preserves the pronunciation of the F. word Latine, the fem. of Latin, Latin; the lit. sense being 'Latin sails,' i. e. Roman sails. See LATIN. 'Voile Latine, a mizen or smack sail'; Cot. 'Latina, the mizen sail of a ship; also, the Latine toong'; Florio, Ital. Dict. ed. 1598. So also Span. Latina vela, a lateen sail; a la Latina, of a triangular form.

LATENT, lying hid, concealed. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. latenti, stem of pres. pt. of latere, to lie hid. + Gk. λαθ-, base of λανθάνειν, to lie hid. - ✓ RADH, to quit, leave, abandon; cf. Skt. rah (for orig. radh), to quit, leave; Benfey, p. 763. Der. latent-ly, latency. And see lethe, lethargy.

LATERAL, belonging to the side. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 705. - Lat. lateralis, belonging to the side. - Lat. later, stem of latus, the side. Root uncertain. Der. lateral-ly.

LATH, a thin slip of wood. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iv. 2. 136. In the North of England, the form used is lat; see Ray, Halliwell, and the Holderness Glossary (E. D. S.). This corresponds with M.E. latte, a lath. 'Hic assere, a lath'; Wright's Vocab. i. 235, col. 1. - A.S. lættu, pl. lætta; 'Asseres, lætta'; 'Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 2, l. 7; also latta, pl., id. i. 58, col. 2, l. 2. + Du. lat, a lath. + G. latte, a lath, whence F. latte is borrowed. β. The exact correspondence of the dental sound in A.S. lættu and G. latte presents a difficulty, and raises the suspicion that the words are borrowed. Perhaps they are of Celtic origin; cf. W. llath, a rod, staff, yard, as to which, however, it is difficult to say whether the E. or the W. word is the original. Der. latt-ice, q. v., latt-en, q. v. [†]

LATHE (1), a machine for 'turning' wood and metal. (Scand.) 'Could turn his word, and oath, and faith, As many ways as in a lathe'; Butler, Hudibras, b. iii. c. 2. ll. 375, 376. Cotgrave explains F. tournoir by 'a turner's wheel, a lathe or lare.' - Icel. lōð (gen. sing. and nom. pl. lōðar), a smith's lathe. Perhaps the pl. lōðar accounts for the E. form lare. β. Perhaps lōð stands for hlōð, from hlada, to lade, load; see LADE (2). This is rendered probable by the occurrence of A.S. hlad-weogl (lit. lade-wheel), an engine or wheel of a well, to draw water (Bosworth); also of A.S. hlad-trendel, a wheel for drawing water (Leo); which are clearly derived from A.S. hladan, to lade out water. The transference of name from the water-wheel to the lathe was easy. γ. Some consider lathe cognate with G. lade, a chest, linen-press; this is from G. laden, to store up (E. lade), and leads to the same source.

LATHE (2), a division of a county. (E.) Kent is divided into five *lathe*s or portions; see Pegge's Alphabet of Kenticisms; E. D. S. Gloss. C. 3. - A.S. læð or lēð, a portion of land; 'ne gyme ic pines, ne læðes ne landes' = I covet not thine, neither lathe nor land; Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 184. 'In quibusdam vero provinciis Anglice vocabatur læð, quod isti dicunt tithinge'; id. i. 455, note 3; and see Glossary in vol. ii. β. I suspect it to stand for legð, from liegan, to lie. Cf. Dan. lægð, a division of the country (in Denmark) for military conscription; we also find Dan. lægð, a site.

LATHER, foam or froth, esp. when made with soap and water. (E.) M.E. lather, for which Stratmann gives no reference; but we find the derived verb letherien, as in 'he leperede a swote' = he was in a lather with sweat; Layamon, l. 7489 (later text). - A.S. læðor, lather; occurring in the comp. læðor-wyrð, lit. lather-wort, i. e. soap-wort; Gloss. to A.S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne; whence the verb læðrian, to anoint, John, xi. 2 (Lindisfarne MS.). + Icel. laubr, later laubr, froth, foam, 'scum of the sea, soap; whence lauðra, lōðra, to foam, also to drip with blood; leyðra, to wash. From a Teut. base LAU, to wash; see LYE. Cf. Lat. lauare, to wash; for which see LAUE. Der. lather, vb. [†]

LATIN, pertaining to the Romans. (F., -L.) M.E. Latin; Chaucer, C. T. 4939; and earlier, in St. Juliana, p. 2. - F. Latin. - Lat. Latinus, Latin, belonging to Latium. - Lat. Latium, the name of a country of Italy, in which Rome was situated. Der. Latin-ism, Latinist, Latin-i-ty, Latin-ise. Also latin-er = Latin-er, an interpreter, Layamon, 14319; well known as a proper name. Also lateen, q. v.

LATITUDE, breadth, scope, distance of a place N. or S. of the equator. (F., -L.) M.E. latitude; Chaucer, C. T. 4433. - F. latitude. - Lat. latitudo, breadth. - Lat. latus, broad; from an O. Lat. slatus, appearing in slata, a broad ship. Slatus = stratus, spread out, from sternere, to spread abroad, stretch out. - ✓ STAR, to spread, strew; see Street, Strew, Star. Der. latitudinal, from stem latitudin- of the sb. latitudo; latitudin-ar-i-an, latitudin-ar-i-an-ism, latitudin-ous.

LATTEN, a mixed metal, a kind of brass or bronze. (F., -G.?) 'This latten bilbo'; Merry Wives, i. 1. 165. M.E. latoun, laton; Chaucer, C. T. 701, 11557. - O.F. laton (13th cent., see Littré); mod. F. laiton. Cotgrave has: 'Laiton, latten (metall)'. Cf. Span. laton, latten, brass; Port. latão, brass; Ital. ottone (corrupted from lottone or lattice), latten, brass, yellow copper. β. According to Diez, the O.F. laton is from latte, a lath (also spelt late, as in Cotgrave); because this metal was hammered into thin plates. This is rendered almost certain by the Ital. latta, tin, a thin sheet of iron tinned, answering in form to Low Lat. latta, a lath (occurring in Wright's Vocab. i. 235, col. 1, last line); so also Span. latas, laths, hoja de lata, tin-plate, tinned iron plate [where hoja = foil, leaf]; also Port. lata, tin plate, latas, laths. γ. If this be right, these words are of G. origin, viz. from G. latte, a lath; see LATH.

LATTER, another form of later; see LATE. (E.)

LATTICE, a network of crossed laths. (F., -G.) Here, as in other words, the final -es stands for s; a better form is lattis, as in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 15. M.E. latis, latys; Wyclif, Prov. vii. 6. - F. latis, lath-work (Hamilton). - F. latte, a lath. - G. latte, a lath; see LATH. Der. lattice-work.

LAUD, to praise. (L.) M.E. lauden. 'If thou laudest and ioyest any wight'; Test. of Love, b. i. last section; in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 294, back, col. 2. - Lat. laudare, to praise. - Lat. laud-, stem of laus, praise. Root uncertain. Der. laud-er, laud-able, laud-able-ness, laud-ably; also laud-at-or-y (from pp. laud-atus); laud, sb., Troil. iii. 3. 179; Hamlet, iv. 7. 178. And see allow (2).

LAUDANUM, a preparation of opium. (L., -Gk., -Pers.) 'Laudanum or Opiate Laudanum, a medicine so called from its excellent qualities'; Kersey, ed. 1715. This remark refers to an absurd supposed connection with Lat. laudare, to praise; on which Mahn (in Webster) remarks: 'this word cannot be derived from Lat. laudandum, to be praised, nor was it invented by Paracelsus, as it previously existed in Provençal.' The name, in fact, was an old one; but was transferred from one drug to another. 'Laudanum, Ladanum, or Labdanum, a sweet-smelling transparent gum gathered from the leaves of Cistus Ledon, a shrub, of which they make pomander; it smells like wine mingled with spices'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt ladanum, Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2 (Perfumer). - Lat. lādanum, lēdanum, the resinous substance exuding from the shrub lada; Pliny, xxvi. 8. 30, § 47; xii. 17. 37, § 45. - Gk. λῆδανον, lādanon, the same. - Gk. λῆδον, an oriental shrub, Cistus creticus. - Pers. lōdan, the gum-herb lada; Rich. Pers. Dict., p. 1251, col. 2, last line.

LAUGH, to make the noise denoting mirth. (E.) M.E. laughen, Chaucer, C. T. 3847. Various spellings are lauhten, lauhen, laghen, lehen, lihen, &c.; see Stratmann. - A.S. hlehan, hlihan, hlihan, hlykhan, pt. t. hlōh; Grein, ii. 81. + Du. laghen. + Icel. hlaja, pt. t. hló. + Dan. lee. + Swed. le. + G. lachen. + Goth. hlahjan, pt. t. hloh. β. All imitative words from a Teut. base HLAH, corresponding to an Aryan base KARK, to make a noise, an extension of ✓ KAR, to call; see Fick, iii. 87, i. 42. Allied words are Gk. κλάσσειν, to chuckle as a hen, κλάζειν, to cry as a jackdaw, κράζειν, to caw, κλάζειν, to clash, κράζειν, to croak, &c.; Lat. crocitare, glocire; and cf. E. crake, creak, crack, click, clack, cluck, &c. Der. laugh, sb., laugh-er, laugh-able, laugh-ably, laugh-able-ness, laugh-ing-ly, laugh-ing-gas, laugh-ing-stock. Also laugh-ter, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 1169, from A.S. hleahtor, Grein, ii. 82, cognate with Icel. hlátr, Dan. latter, G. lächter.

LAUNCH, to throw forward like a spear, hurl, send forth, send (a ship) into the water. (F., -L.) M.E. launcen, to hurl, Will. of Palerne, l. 2755; cf. P. Plowman's Crede, 551. 'Lawncyn, lawncyn, or styngge with a spere or blode-yrnye, lanceo; Prompt. Parv. - F. lancer, 'to throw, fling, hurl, dart; also, to prick, pierce'; Cot. - F. lance, a lance; see LANCE. Doublet, lance, verb.

LAUNDRESS, a washerwoman. (F., -L.) Formerly laundress (see below), formed by adding the F. suffix -ess to the old word launder or lavender, which had the same sense. M. E. launder, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 358; spelt lauender, laynder, landar, Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvi. 273, 292. - O. F. lavandiere, 'a laundress or washing-woman'; Cot. - Low Lat. launderia, a washerwoman; occurring A.D. 1333; Ducange. - Lat. lauand-us, future pass. part. of lauare, to wash; see Lave. Der. laundry (= launder-y), spelt lauendrye in P. Plowman, B. xv. 182.

LAUREATE, crowned with laurel. (L.) M. E. laureat, Chaucer, C. T. 14614. - Lat. laureatus, crowned with laurel. - Lat. laurea, a laurel; fem. form of adj. laureus, from laurus; see Laurel. Der. laureate-ship.

LAUREL, the bay-tree. (F., -L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 107. Formed, by the common substitution of l for r, from M. E. laurer, a laurel, Chaucer, C. T. 9340; spelt lorer, Gower, C. A. i. 337; lore, Will. of Palerne, l. 2983. - F. laurier, 'a laurel, or bay-tree'; Cot. - Low Lat. *laurarius (not found), an adjectival formation with suffix -arius. - Lat. laurus, a laurel-tree. Der. laurell-ed; also laur-e-ate; see above.

LAVA, the matter which flows down a burning mountain. (Ital., -L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. - Ital. lava, 'a running gullet, stream, or gutter sodainly caused by raine'; Florio's Ital. Dict., ed. 1598. - Ital. lavare, to wash. - Lat. lavare; see Lave.

LAVATORY, a place for washing. (L.) In Levins. Cotgrave explains F. lavatoire as 'a lavatory, a place or vessel to wash in.' - Lat. lavatorium, a lavatory; neut. of lavatorius, belonging to a washer. - Lat. lavator, a washer. - Lat. lavatus, pp. of lavare; see Lave.

LAVE, to wash, bathe. (F., -L.) M. E. lauen; 'And laueth hem in the lauandrie' [laundry]; P. Plowman, C. xviii. 330; cf. Layamon, 7489. - F. laver, to wash. - Lat. lavare, to wash. + Gk. laúein, to wash. From the Gk. and Lat. base LU, to wash. Der. lav-er (Exod. xxxviii. 8), M. E. lavour, lauour, Chaucer, C. T. 5869, from O. F. lavoier, 'a washing poole' (Cot.) And see lavender, laundress, lotion. From the same base are de-luge, al-luvial.

LAVENDER, an odoriferous plant. (F., -Ital., -L.) M. E. lavendre, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 37 (Stratmann); cf. Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 104. The r is an E. addition. - F. lavande, 'lavender'; Cot. - Ital. lavanda, lavender; we find also Ital. laventola, Span. lavandula, and (according to Mahn) Low Lat. lauandula. - Ital. lavanda, a washing; cf. Lat. lauandria, things to be washed (White). β. The plant is so called from its use in washing, esp. from its being laid with fresh-washed linen. - Lat. lauanda, fem. of fut. pass. part. of lavare, to wash; see Lave.

LAVISH, adj., profuse, prodigal. (E.) α. The adj. is older than the verb, and the word is English; the suffix answers to A. S. -isc, not to the suffix -ish in flour-ish, which is of F. and L. origin. This is shewn by the co-existence of the North of E. lavy, lavish (Halliwell), where the suffix is the A. S. -ig (E. -y) as in ston-y. Lav-ish and lav-y mean 'profuse' or abundant, and are formed from the obsolete verb lave, to pour out. This verb being uncommon, the adj. was ill-understood, and was sometimes spelt lavies.

β. Examples of the adj. are as follows. 'In al other thing so light and lavies [are they] of theyr tounge'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 250 b. 'Punishing with losse of life the laviness of the tounge'; Brende, Quintus Curtius, fol. 67 (R.). 'Although some lavishe lippes, which like some other best'; Gascoigne, In Praise of Lady Sandes, l. 7 (Poems, ed. Hazlitt, vol. i. p. 53). 'Lavish Nature'; Spenser, Muirpotmos, l. 163. Spelt lavas in 'Romeus and Juliet', p. 20 (Halliwell). γ. The verb lave, to pour out, lade out water, is given in Richardson; and occurs as late as in Dryden. 'A fourth, with labour, laves The intruding seas, and waves ejects on waves'; Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. b. xi. 488; where the Lat. text has: 'Egerit hic fluctus, æquorque refundit in sequor'; lib. xi. v. 488. δ. From M. E. lauen, to draw water out of a well, to pour forth. Examples of this rare word are as follow. 'And [Orpheus] spak and song [sang] . . . alle þat euer he had rescuyed and laued oute of þe noble welles of hys modir Calliope'; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 12, l. 3037. 'Mony ladde þer forth-lep to laue & to kest' = many a lad leapt forward there to bale and cast out the water (in a description of a storm at sea); Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 154. Note especially the following, which clearly shews the metaphorical use, and the source of the modern word. 'He lauex hys gyftez as water of dyche' = God lavishes his gifts as (freely as one would take) water out of a ditch; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 607; see the whole passage, which treats of God's profuseness of reward to the souls in heaven. ε. Not found in A. S., unless (which is very doubtful) it can be connected with the verb gelfian, to refresh, which only occurs once, viz. in Beowulf, ed. Grein, 2722; this A. S. gelfian appearing to be the same as Du. laven, G.

laben, to refresh. But we may assume lave to be an E. word, from a Teut. base LABH; for this would answer to a Gk. base LAP, of which there seems to be good evidence in λαπ-άειν, to empty out, to purge, λαπ-άειν, an emptying out, λαπ-τείν, to lap, drain, suck out, ἀ-λαπ-άειν, to exhaust.

¶ I see no reason for connecting this word with the ordinary E. lave, to wash, though there may have been some confusion with it. Mr. Wedgwood's suggestion that lavish = O. F. lavace, an inundation (Cotgrave) does not help us; for (1) lavish is not a sb., and (2) this F. word does not at all explain the M. E. verb to lave. Der. lavish-ly, lavish-ness, lavish-ment; also lavish, verb (Levins). [†]

LAW, a rule of action, edict, statute. (E.) M. E. lawè (two syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 1167. - A. S. lagu, Grein, ii. 153; the compound feorh-lagu (= loss of life, death) occurs in Beowulf, ed. Grein, l. 2800; the simple form is not common. + O. Sax. lag (pl. lagu), a statute, decree. + Icel. lög (s. pl., but used in the sing. sense), a law; it is the pl. of lag, a stratum, order, due place, lit. 'that which lies' or is placed. + Swed. lag. + Dan. lov. Cf. Lat. lex (stem lēg), law; whence F. loi.

β. The sense is 'that which lies' or is in due order; from Teut. base LAG, to lie; see Fick, iii. 261, i. 749. - European ✓ LAGH, to lie; see Lie (1). ¶ Not from the verb 'to lay,' since that is a longer, derivative, and more complex form, as explained s. v. Lay (1). Der. law-ful, M. E. laweful, Trevisa, iii. 193; law-ful-ly, M. E. lawefulliche, P. Plowman, C. x. 59; law-ful-ness, see Owl and Nightingale, ed. Stratmann, l. 1741; law-giver; law-less, M. E. laweles, Trevisa, iii. 73; law-less-ly, law-less-ness; law-book, see Ormulum, l. 1953; law-suit; also law-yr, q. v.

LAWN (1), a space of ground covered with grass in a garden. (F., -G. or C.) Properly an open space, esp. in a wood; a glade (see Glade). The spelling lawn is not old; the older spelling is invariably laund, which was still in use in the 18th century. 'Laund or Lawn, in a park, plain untill ground'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Spelt laund in Shak. Venus, 813; 3 Hen. VI. iii. 1. 2. M. E. laund, Chaucer, C. T. 1691; (observe that Dryden substitutes lawn in his Palamon and Arcite, l. 845); P. Plowman, C. i. 8. - O. F. lande, 'a land or laund, a wild, untilld, shrubby, or bushy plain'; Cot. Cf. Ital. and Span. landa, a heath, tract of open country. β. Of disputed origin; Littré refers it to G. land, open country, the same word with E. land; see Land. Diez refers it to Bret. lann, a bushy shrub, of which the pl. lannon is only used to signify waste land, like the F. landes. Note also W. llawn, a smooth hill, a lawn. γ. But does it not come to the same thing? The Bret. lann is also used in a variety of senses, corresponding to those of Gael. and Irish lann, and W. llan; one of these senses is land or territory, though most often used of an inclosure. Spurrell gives W. llan, 'an area, yard, church'; but the Gael. lann means 'an inclosure, a house, a church, a repository, land'; and the Irish lann is 'land, a house, church, repository.' Perhaps, then, the Irish lann and E. land are cognate words.

LAWN (2), a sort of fine linen. (F., -L.?) In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 209, 220. 'In the third year of the reign of Queene Elizabeth, 1562, beganne the knowledge and wearing of lawns and cambric, which was then brought into England by very small quantities'; Stow, King James, an. 1604 (R.). The word is supposed to be a corruption of the F. linon (or Span. linon) which has the same sense. 'Linon, Linomple, a fine, thin, or open-waled linnen, much used in Picardie (where it is made) for womens kerchers and churchmen's surplices; also, lawn'; Cot. The F. linon is formed (with suffix -on) from F. lin, flax, linen. - Lat. linum, flax. See Linen. ¶ See, however, the Addenda, where it is shewn that Stow is wrong, and another solution is proposed. [✱]

LAWYER, one versed in the law, one who practises law. (E.) M. E. lawyer, lawier; P. Plowman, B. vii. 59. From law, with suffix -yer. This suffix originated in the use of the suffix -ien in place of -en in causal verbs, and verbs derived from sbs. Thus, from the A. S. lyfan, love, was formed the vb. lyfigan or lyfian, to love, which became lov-ien in M. E. Hence the sb. lov-ier or lov-yr, a lover, another form of lov-er or lov-ere, a lover; see the readings in the Petworth and Lansdowne MSS. in Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 1347 (or 1349, ed. Tyrwhitt). By analogy, from lawe, law, was formed law-ier or law-yr. So also bow-yr, one who uses a bow; saw-yr, one who uses a saw.

LAX, slack, loose, soft, not strict. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 162. - Lat. laxus, lax, loose. - Lat. base LAG, to be weak; whence also langu-ere, to be languid, with inserted n. From the same base is E. lag, a Celtic word. See Lag, Languid. Der. lax-ly, lax-ness; lax-i-ty, from F. laxité (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. laxitatem; and see lax-at-ive.

LAXATIVE, loosening. (F., -L.) M. E. laxatif, Chaucer, C. T. 14949. - F. laxatif, 'laxative'; Cot. - Lat. laxativus, loosening. - Lat. laxatus, pp. of laxare, to render lax. - Lat. laxus; see Lax. Der. laxative-ness.

LAY (1), to cause to lie down, place, set. (E.) 'The causal of lie, from which it is derived. M. E. leggen; weak verb, pt. t. leide, pp. leid; Chaucer, C. T. 3935, 81. — A. S. leggan (where cg = gg), to lay; pt. t. legde, pp. gelegd; Grein, ii. 166. Formed (by vowel-change of a to e) from lag, orig. form of A. S. læg, pt. t. of licgan, to lie; see LIE (1). + Du. leggen, pt. t. legde, pp. gelegt. + Icel. leggja, pt. t. lagði, pp. lagðr, lagðr. + Dan. lægge, pt. t. lagde, pp. lagt. + Swed. lägga, pt. t. lade, pp. lagd. + Goth. lagjan, pt. t. lagida, pp. lagiths. + G. legen, pt. t. legte, pp. gelegt. Der. lay-er, q. v.

LAY (2), a song, lyric poem. (F., — C.) M. E. lai, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 199, l. 167; lay, P. Plowman, B. viii. 66. — O. F. lai, spelt lay in Cotgrave; cf. Prov. lais, a lay. β. The lay was regarded as specially belonging to the Bretons; Mr. Wedgwood cites from Marie de France: 'Les cuntes ke jo sai verais Dunt li Breton unt fait lor lais Vus cunterai assez briefment' = the tales which I know to be true, of which the Bretons have made their lays, I will briefly relate to you. See further in note 24 to Tyrwhitt's Introductory Discourse to the Cant. Tales; and see Chaucer, C. T. 11021, 11022. The word is not preserved in Breton, but it answers to W. lais, a voice, sound; Irish lai, laoidh, a song, poem, hymn; Gael. laoidh, a verse, hymn, sacred poem. γ. These Celtic words may be akin to A. S. leðð, liðð, Icel. liðð, O. H. G. liod, G. lied, a song; cf. Goth. liuthon, to sing, Rom. xv. 9. ¶ There is no 'A. S. ley', as pretended.

LAY (3), LAIC, pertaining to the laity. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. lay; 'Lered men and lay = learned men and laymen; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 171, last line. — O. F. lai, 'lay, secular, of the laity'; Cot. — Lat. laicus, belonging to the people (whence the E. laic). — Gk. λαϊκός, belonging to the people. — Gk. λαός (Ionic λήος, Attic λέως), the people. Root uncertain. Der. laic-al, lay-man; also lai-ty, used by Cotgrave (as cited above), formed with suffix -ty by analogy with words such as chasti-ty, quanti-ty, &c.

LAYER, a stratum, row, tier, bed. (E.) 'Layer, a bed or channel in a creek, where small oysters are thrown in to breed; among gardeners, it is taken for a young sprout covered with mould, in order to raise its kind; Kersey, ed. 1715. Layer = that which lays, hence a place for laying or propagating. It is extended to mean anything carefully laid in due order. See LAY (1). ¶ Or else it is a mere corruption of lair; see Addenda. [†] Der. layer-ing.

LAZAR, a leper. (F., — L., — Gk., — Heb.) M. E. lazar, Chaucer, C. T. 242. — F. Lazare; see Littré. — Lat. Lazarus. — Gk. Λάζαρος, the name of the beggar in the parable; Luke, xvi. 20; contracted from the Heb. name Eleazar. — Heb. El'ázár, he whom God helps. Der. lazar-like, Hamlet, i. 5. 72; lazar-house, Milton, P. L. xi. 479; also lazar-etto, from Ital. lazzaretto, a plague-hospital.

LAZY, slow, sluggish, slothful. (F., — L.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 1. 28; spelt laesie in Spencer, Shep. Kal. July, 33; lazier in Minshieu, ed. 1627. We also find the verb to laze. S'endormir en sentinelle, to sleep when he hath most cause to watch; to laze it when he hath most need to looke about him; Cot. Thus the suffix -y is the usual E. suffix, gen. added to sbs. (as in ston-y), but in rare instances to verbs and adjectives, as in skin-y, murk-y. β. In the present case, laze is a corruption of the M. E. lasche, lache, lash, laish, vapid, insipid; see Prompt. Parv. p. 288, and note 1. It also meant 'slow,' as in Palsgrave, who has: 'lasche, not fast, lache.' The word has the authority of Chaucer. 'And yif he be slowe and astoned and lache, he lyueþ as an asse' = and if he be slow and stupid and lazy, he lives like an ass; tr. of Boethius, bk. iv. pr. 3, l. 3470. We also find that lazy in the North of England means 'bad, wicked; Halliwell. This sense is noticed by Skinner, ed. 1671. All the uses of the word are explained by its F. original. — O. F. lasche (F. lâche), 'slack, loose, wide, flagging, weak, faint, un lusty, languishing, remisse, lithir, slow, cold, cowardly, faint-hearted, unmanly, effeminate, lewd, unworthy, base, treacherous; Cot. F. lâche = Ital. lasco, 'lazy, idle, sluggish, heavy; Meadows. — Low Lat. *lascus (not found), a corrupted pronunciation of Lat. laxus (= lascus), by the interchange of sc with cs or x, as in prov. E. an = ask. See LAX.

¶ More might be said in support of this etymology, which was suggested by Minshieu. Cf. Isle of Wight lass = lazy (Halliwell); M. E. lasken (= laschen), to relax, mitigate, Will. of Palerne, 950, Myrc's Parish Priest, 1736. The G. lässig, weary, is quite a different word, being from G. lass, weary, cognate with E. late, which would have produced an E. lat-y. Of course we did not borrow words from German in the 16th century, except in very rare and peculiar instances, such as carouse. Der. lazi-ly, lazi-ness.

LEA, LEY, LAY, a meadow. (E.) 'On the watry lea, i. e. plain; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 2. 16. Often spelt ley, leigh, in E. place-names, as in Brom-ley, Haw-ley, Had-leigh. Lay occurs in Beaumont and Fletcher, where it means unemployed; 'Let wife and land Lie lay till I return; Love's Pilgrimage, A. iii. sc. 3 (Sanchio). M. E. ley, P. Plowman, B. vii. 5; lay, untilled land, Prompt. Parv. p. 285; on which see Way's note. — A. S. leah, leā, gen. case leāhe, leāge; see Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 109, l. 8, p. 292, l. 4; also p. 526, where the place-name Had-leah (Hadleigh) occurs; also p. 658. β. Just as A. S. fleah (= E. flea) is cognate with G. floh, so lea is cognate with prov. G. loh, a morass, bog, wood, forest (Flügel), which also appears in place-names, such as Hohen-lohe, i. e. high leas. So also we find the Low G. loge, which in place-names near Bremen signifies a low-lying tract, a grassy plain; Bremen Wörterb. iii. 80. So also Water-loo = water-lea. γ. The various Teut. forms furnish a primitive Teut. base LAUHA (Fick, iii. 275), from the Teut. root LUH, to shine. Further cognates occur in Lithuanian laukas, an open field (Nesselmann); Lat. lucus, a grove, glade, open space in a wood [derived a lucendo!]; and prob. Skt. loka, a space, the world, universe, from loch, to see, a derivative of ruch, to shine. All are from the Aryan ✓ RUK, to be bright, to shine; see LUCID. ¶ No connection whatever with lay (1).

LEAD (1), to bring, conduct, guide, precede, direct, allure. (E.) M. E. leden, pt. t. ladde, ledde, pp. laad, led; Chaucer, C. T. 4777, 4862, 5066. — A. S. lædan, pt. t. lædde, pp. læded; Grein, ii. 161; lit. 'to shew the way.' — A. S. lād, a way, path; Grein, ii. 150. — A. S. līðan, strong verb, to travel, go; Grein, ii. 183; of which lædan may be regarded as the causal form. + Icel. leiða, to lead, from leid, a way; which from līða, to go, pass, move along. + Swed. leda, to lead, from led, a way, course; which from līda, to pass, go on. + Dan. lede, to lead, from led, a gate; which from lide, to glide on. + G. leiten, to lead; causal of O. H. G. līdan, to go, go away, under-go, endure, suffer = mod. G. leiden, to suffer; cf. G. begleiten (= be-ge-leiten), to accompany, go on the way with. Cf. Du. leiden, to lead. β. All from Teut. base LITH, to go; best seen in Goth. ga-leithan, to go, pt. t. ga-laiþ, pp. ga-lithans; see Fick, iii. 269, 270. Der. lead, sb., lead-er, lead-er-ship, lead-ing-strings. And see lode.

LEAD (2), a well-known metal. (E.) M. E. lead, led; dat. lede, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 333; P. Plowman, B. v. 600; cf. Havelok, 924. — A. S. læd (or lead); Grein, ii. 168. + Du. lood, lead, a plummet. + Swed. lod, a weight, plummet. + Dan. lod, a weight, plummet. + G. loth, a plummet, bullet; M. H. G. lōt, lead. β. Of unknown origin; it is not easy to connect it with Goth. liudan, to grow, as in Fick (iii. 276), from the notion of its being easily moulded. Der. lead-en, M. E. leden, Chaucer, C. T. 16196 (with suffix as in gold-en); lead-pencil; also lead, vb., lead-ed.

LEAF, part of a plant, two pages of a book. (E.) M. E. leaf, lef, pl. leues (= leves); Chaucer, C. T. 1840, 3177, 1642. — A. S. leaf, pl. leaf; Grein, ii. 168. + O. Fries. laf. + O. Sax. lōf. + Du. loof, foliage. + Icel. lauf. + Swed. lōf. + Dan. löv, foliage. + Goth. laufs, pl. laubos. + O. H. G. laup, M. H. G. loup, a leaf; O. H. G. loup, M. H. G. loup, leaves, G. laub, leaves, foliage. β. All from Teut. base LAUBA, a leaf, a neut. sb., unchanged in the pl. in A. S. and O. H. G.; Fick, iii. 261. Again, this Teut. form is cognate with Russ. lepeste, a leaf, Lithuanian lāpas, a leaf (Nesselmann), with which cf. Gk. λέπτος, a scale. The orig. sense of Russ. lepeste is a shred, strip, which thus furnishes also the orig. sense of E. leaf. γ. All these words are from the European base LAP or LUP, to strip, peel; appearing in Gk. λέπειν, to scale, peel, Russ. lupite, to peel, Lithuanian lūpti, to strip, flay (as above). See LEPER. Der. leaf-age (made in imitation of foi-age), leaf-less, leaf-let, leaf-ed, leaf-y (also leaf-y in some edd. of Shak. Macb. v. 6. 1), leaf-i-ness, inter-leave.

LEAGUE (1), a bond, alliance, confederacy. (F., — L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, iii. 2. 25. — F. ligue, 'a league or confederacy; Cot. Cf. Span. liga, a band, garter, alliance; Ital. lega, a league, confederacy. — Low Lat. liga (sometimes lega, whence the Ital. form), a league, confederacy. — Lat. ligare (in Low Lat. sometimes legare, whence Ital. legare), to clasp, bind, fasten, tie, ratify an agreement. Root uncertain. ¶ It is remarkable that the E. form is nearer to the Ital. than to the F. form, but this is accidental; we also have peak = F. pic. Der. league, verb, Oth. ii. 3. 218; cf. 'se liquer l'un à l'autre, to make a league; Cot. And see ligature.

LEAGUE (2), a distance of about three miles. (F., — L., — C.) The distance varied. 'A league or myle; Levinus, ed. 1570. Cotgrave, s. v. lieue, notes that German or long leagues are about 4 miles long, those of Languedoc, about 3 miles, and Italian or short leagues are about 2 miles. 'A hundred leagues for the place; Berners, tr. of Froissart, Chron. vol. i. c. 81. — O. F. legue, a league (Roquefort); but the more usual form was lew or luie; mod. F. lieue. Cf. Ital. lega (Florio); Span. legua. — Low Lat. lega, which occurs A. D. 1217, Ducange; another form being leuca, which is the more original. — Lat. leuca (sometimes leuga), a Gallic mile of 1500 Roman paces; a word of Celtic origin; see White's Dict. β. The Celtic word remains in Bret. leó or lew, a league; in the district of Vannes, lew. We find also Irish leige, a league, three miles; but this may have been borrowed from the English. The best-preserved form is that afforded us in Latin. Der. seven-leagu-ed. [†]

LEAGUER, a camp. (Du.) In All's Well, iii. 6. 27. — Du. leger, a lair; also, a camp, army. See Beleaguer. Doublet, lair.

LEAK, to ooze through a chink. (Scand.) M. E. leken. 'That humoure oute may leke' = that the moisture may leak out; Palladius on Husbandry, ed. Lodge, b. vi. l. 33. — Icel. leka, to drip, dribble, leak as a ship. + Swed. läcka. + Dan. lække. + Du. leken, to leak, drop. + G. lecken, to leak, run, trickle. + A. S. leccan, to wet, to moisten; Ps. vi. 6 (ed. Spelman). β. All from Teut. base LAK, to drip, leak; Fick, iii. 261. ¶ The mod. E. word is from the Scand., not from the A. S. Der. leak, sb., from Icel. leki, a leak; leaky, Temp. i. 1. 51; leakiness; also leak-age, a late word, with F. suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum). Also lack (1), lack (2). [†]

LEAL, loyal, true. (F., — L.) Spelt leale in Levins, ed. 1570. A Northumbrian form; in Burns, Halloween, st. 3. M. E. leal; 'And be lel to the lord'; Will. of Palerne, l. 5119. — Norm. F. leal; see Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson; O. F. leial, mod. F. loyal. See further under Loyal, of which it is a doublet.

LEAN (1), to incline, bend, stoop. (E.) M. E. lenen, P. Plowman, B. prol. 9, xviii. 5. The trans. and intrans. forms are now alike; properly, the intrans. form is the more primitive, and the mod. E. verb follows rather the trans. or causal form. — A. S. hlēnan, trans. weak verb, to make to lean, Grein, i. 81; we find also A. S. hleonian, hlinian, intrans. weak verb, to lean, id. i. 85. + O. Sax. hlindn, intrans. form. + Du. leunen, intrans. + Dan. læne, tr. and refl. (causal). + Swed. läna, tr. and refl. (causal). + O. H. G. leinan, properly the causal form; O. H. G. hlinen, M. H. G. lenen, G. lehnen, intrans. form. + Lat. *clinare, obsolete causal form; occurring in inclinare; see Incline. + Gk. κλίνειν, causal form (with long ι), to make to bend, cause to lean. + Skt. grī, to go to, enter, undergo; 'the orig. signification is probably to cling to, to lean'; Benfey. β. All from ✓ KRI, to go to, cling to, lean against; the Teut. base being HLI. See Fick, i. 62, iii. 88. Der. lean (2). From the same root, in-cline, de-cline, re-cline, en-cline, ac-cliv-i-ty, de-cliv-i-ty. [†]

LEAN (2), slender, not fat, frail, thin. (E.) M. E. lene (two syllables). 'As lenē was his hors as is a rake'; Chaucer, C. T. 289. — A. S. hlēne, lean; used of Pharaoh's lean kine; Gen. xli. 3. β. The orig. sense was prob. leaning, bending, stooping; hence weak, thin, poor. Cf. Lat. declivis, bending down, declining; atate declivis, in the decline of life. See Lean (1). ¶ The occurrence of the initial h in A. S. hlēne at once connects it with the verb, and at the same time separates it from A. S. lēne, adj. transitory, which is connected with lend and loan; see Grein, ii. 163. Der. lean-ly, lean-ness.

LEAP, to bound, spring, jump. (E.) M. E. lepen, pt. t. leep, lep, pp. lopen; Chaucer, C. T. 4376, 2689; P. Plowman, B. v. 198. — A. S. hlēapan, to run, leap, spring; a strong verb; pt. t. hleóp, pp. gehleápen; Grein, ii. 82, and i. 24 (s. v. dhleápan). + O. Sax. hlōpan, to run; in comp. dhlōpan. + O. Fries. klapa. + Du. loopen, to run, flow; pt. t. liep; pp. geeloopen. + Icel. hlappa, to leap, jump, run; pt. t. hljóp, pp. hláppinn. + Dan. løbe, to run. + Swed. löpa, to run. + Goth. hláupan, to leap, only in comp. us-hlaupan; pt. t. hlaihlapt (reduplicated). + O. H. G. hlaupan, M. H. G. loufen, G. laufen (pt. t. lief, pp. gelaufen), to run. β. All from Teut. base HLAUPAN, to leap; Fick, iii. 86. Der. leap, sb., A. S. hlýp, Grein, ii. 89, cognate with Icel. hlapp, a leap, G. lauf, a course. Also leap-frog; leap-year, M. E. lepezer, Mandeville's Travels, p. 77.

LEARN, to acquire knowledge of. (E.) M. E. lernen, Chaucer, C. T. 310. — A. S. leornian, to learn; Grein, ii. 179. + O. Sax. linón [better linón], to learn; contracted form of lisonn. + O. H. G. lirnan, G. lernen.

β. These are neuter (or passive) forms answering to a primitive Teut. form lis-n-an, in which LIS is the base, and -n- is a formative element used in certain verbs. 'Verbs ending in -nan have a passive or neuter signification, as in Goth. full-nan, to become full, and bund-nan, to become unbound, af-lif-nan, to be left remaining, ga-hail-nan, to become whole, ga-wak-nan, to become awake'; Skeat, Maeso-Goth. Glossary, p. 303. The change from primitive s to a later r is common; see Iron, Hare. γ. From the same base LIS was formed the causal verb LAISYAN, to make to know, to teach; appearing in Goth. laisjan, to teach, A. S. lēran, Icel. læra, Du. leeren, Swed. lära, Dan. lære, G. lehren, to teach; of which the Icel. læra, Du. leeren, and Swed. lära are also sometimes improperly used in the sense of 'learn'; cf. Dan. lære sig, to teach oneself, to learn. Similarly, the M. E. lernen, to teach, was sometimes improperly used in the reflexive sense, just as the opposite mistake also occurs of the use of learn in the sense of 'teach'; see Ps. xxv. 4 (Prayer Book).

8. The base LIS probably meant 'to find out; whence the Goth. verb laisan, to find out, only used in the pt. t. lais = I have found out, I know; Phil. iv. 12. It was particularly used of finding one's way; hence Goth. laists a foot-track; see Last (2).

¶ Cf. G. ge-leise, a track, rut; Lat. lira, a furrow. To the primitive sense we may perhaps refer A. S. leorán, to go away, depart (perhaps orig. to find one's way, go along); Grein, ii. 179. Der. learn-ed, orig. merely the pp. of the verb, learn-ed-ly, learn-ed-ness, learn-er, learn-ing.

LEASE (1), to let tenements for a term of years. (F., — L.) 'To lease or let leas, locare, dimittere; the lease, letting, locatio, dimissio'; Levins, ed. 1570. An O. F. law term; see Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. — F. laisser, 'to leave, relinquish'; Cot. [Cf. Ital. lasciare, to quit.] Laisser is still used in the sense 'to part with' or 'let go' at a fixed price; see Littré. Another form of the word in O. F. was lessor, which accounts for E. less-or, less-ee; see Burguy, who (wrongly) gives lessor under laier, which is really a different word. — Lat. laxare, to slacken, let go. — Lat. laxus, lax, slack; see Lax. ¶ Not related to G. lassen, which = E. let; see Let (1). Der. leasehold; also less-or (spelt lessor in Blount's Nomolexicon), signifying 'one who leases,' with suffix -or of the agent; less-ee (spelt lessee in Blount), signifying 'one to whom a lease is granted,' with suffix -ee in place of O. F. -e (= Lat. -atus), the pp. ending with a passive sense.

LEASE (2), to glean. (E.) In Dryden, tr. of Theocritus, Idyl 3, l. 72. M. E. lesen, P. Plowman, B. vi. 68. — A. S. lesan, to gather (Grein). + Du. lezen, to gather, read. + G. lesen. + Goth. lisan, to gather; pt. t. las. All from the base LAS, to pick out; whence also Lith. lėsti, to pick out. See Legend.

LEASH, a thong by which a hawk or hound is held; a brace and a half. (F., — L.) 1. M. E. lees, leese, leece. 'Alle they renne in o lees' = they all run in one leash; Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Septem Peccatis (Six-text, Group I, 387). And see Prompt. Parv. p. 291. — O. F. lesse (mod. F. laisse), 'a leash, to hold a dog in'; Cot. Cot. also gives: 'Laisse, the same as Lesse, also, a leash of hounds, &c.' Cf. Ital. lascio, a leash, band; also a legacy, will. — Low Lat. laxa, a lease, thong; lit. a loose rope. — Lat. laxa, fem. of laxus, loose, lax; see Lax. 2. The sense of 'three' arose from the application of the word to the number usually leashed together (Richardson); see Shak. i Henry IV, ii. 4. 7. Der. leash, verb, Hen. V, prol. 7. [†]

LEASING, falsehood, lying. (E.) In Ps. iv. 2, v. 6; A. V. M. E. lesynge, lesinge; Chaucer, C. T. 1929. — A. S. lēasing, lēdsung, a falsehood; Grein, ii. 179. — A. S. lēas, false, orig. empty; the same word with A. S. lēas, loose. Cf. Icel. lausung, falsehood; Du. loos, false; Goth. laus, empty, vain; lausau-waurds, loose-worded, speaking loose and random words, Tit. i. 10. See Loose.

LEATHER, the prepared skin of an animal. (E.) M. E. lether, Chaucer, C. T. 3250. — A. S. leðer, in comp. geweald-leðer, lit. 'wield-leather,' i. e. a bridle; Grein, i. 478. 'Bulga, leþer-coddas,' i. e. leathern bags; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 21, col. 2. + Du. leder. + Icel. leðr. + Dan. leder. + Swed. läder. + G. leder. β. The Teut. base is LETHRA; Fick, iii. 278. Root unknown. Der. leather-n, M. E. letheren, P. Plowman, B. v. 192, formed with suffix -en, as in gold-en; also leather-y.

LEAVE (1), to quit, abandon, forsake. (E.) M. E. leuen (with u = v), pt. t. laste, lefta, pp. last, left; Chaucer, C. T. 8126, 14204, 10500. — A. S. lēfan, Grein, ii. 162. The lit. sense is 'to leave a heritage,' to leave behind one. — A. S. lēf, a heritage, residue, remnant. — A. S. lifian, to be remaining, hence, to live; see Live. Or we may simply regard leave as the causal of live. + Icel. leifa, to leave, leave a heritage; from leif, a leaving, patrimony; which from lifa, to be left, to live. + M. H. G. leiben, to leave; from M. H. G. leibe, O. H. G. leipa, that which remains; which from O. H. G. hlāban, hlāpan, only used in the comp. belāban, belāpan, M. H. G. beliben, G. bleiben, to remain, be left. β. The Goth. form is laibjan, but the word is uncertain; we find, however, the sb. laiba, a remnant, from the verb liban, to live. We may also compare Swed. lemna, to leave; Dan. levne, to leave. See further under Live. ¶ Fick (iii. 271) confidently rejects the oft-cited connection with Gk. λείπειν, to leave, and considers the similarity in form to be merely accidental. Curtius, ii. 61, thinks that he is probably right in this suggestion. The Gk. λείπειν really answers to Lat. linguere, and to Goth. leihwan, G. leihen, to lend (orig. to let go). See Curtius, as cited. Der. leave-ings.

LEAVE (2), permission, farewell. (E.) α. In the phr. 'to take leave,' the word appears to be the same as leave, permission. The orig. sense was, probably, 'to take permission to go,' hence, 'to take a formal farewell.' Cf. 'to give leave.' We may, then, remember that the sb. is entirely and always independent of the verb above. M. E. leue, leau (with u = v). 'By your leue' = with your permission; Chaucer, C. T. 13377. 'But taketh his leue' = but takes his leave; id. 1219. — A. S. lēaf, permission; Grein, ii. 168; whence was formed the verb līfan, to permit = M. E. leuen, to permit, grant (now obsolete), one of the most troublesome words in old authors, as it is frequently confounded by editors with M. E. lenen, to lend, and misprinted accordingly; see note to Chaucer's Prioress's Tale, ed. Skeat, l. 1873. The orig. sense of leave is 'that which is acceptable or pleasing'; and it is closely connected with A. S. leof, pleasing, lief, dear; see Lief. We may further remark that the A. S. gelyfan, (compounded of ge- and the vb. lyfan just mentioned) answers to mod. E. be-lieve; see Believe. + Du. -lof, only in the comp. oor-lof, permission, ver-lof, leave. + Icel. leifi, leave; leysa, to permit; cf. also lofan, permission, lob (1) praise, (2) license, permission. + Dan. lov, praise, leave. + Swed. lof, praise, leave. + G. ur-laub, leave, furlough; ver-laub, leave, permission; er-lauben, to permit; lob, praise. See Furlough.

LEAVEN, the ferment which makes dough rise. (F., -L.) Not a good spelling; leven would be better. M. E. leuain, leuin (with u for e). 'He is the leuin of the brede' [bread]; Gower, C. A. i. 294; cf. Prompt. Parv. p. 300. = F. levain, 'leaven'; Cot. = Lat. leuamen, an alleviation, mitigation; but also used (as here) in the orig. sense of 'that which raises.' Ducange records the sense of 'leaven' for Lat. leuamentum, a parallel form to leuamen. = Lat. levare, to raise. See Lever. Similarly, Ital. lievito, leaven, is from Ital. lievare, to raise (= Lat. levare). Der. leaven, verb.

LECHER, a man addicted to lewdness. (F., -G.) In early use. M. E. lechar, lechor; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 53, l. 27; Ancren Riwle, p. 216; Rob. of Glouc. p. 119. = O. F. lecheor (Burguy), lescheur, lecheur (Cotgrave), lit. one who licks up. = O. F. lecher, mod. F. lécher, to lick. = O. H. G. lecchôn, lechôn, G. lecken, to lick; cognate with E. Lick, q. v. Der. lecher-ous, P. Plowman, C. ii. 25; lecher-ous-ly, lecher-ous-ness; lecher-y, M. E. lecherie, lecherie, Holi Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 11, l. 3.

LECTERN, LECTURN, a reading-desk. (Low Lat., -Gk.) 'Leterone, lectorne, lectrone, lectrum, deske, Lectrinum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 299. Spelt lecterne in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Corrupted from Low Lat. lectrinum, a reading-desk, pulpit; an extension from Low Lat. lectrum, a pulpit, in Isidore of Seville. = Gk. λέκτρον, lit. a couch; hence a rest, support for a book. Akin to λέχος, a couch, bed; from European base LAGH (Gk. λεχ-), to lie, whence also E. lie; see Lie (1). Cf. Lat. lectus, a couch. ¶ Observe that this word has no connection with lecture, though much resembling it in form and present use. The F. form is lutrin. [†]

LECTION, a reading, portion to be read. (L.) 'Other copies and various lections;' Milton, A Defence of the People of England. (R.) Formed by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Lat. lectionem, acc. of lectio, a reading. = Lat. lectus, pp. of legere, to gather, read; see Legend. Der. lection-ary; and see below. Doublet, lesson.

LECTURE, a discourse, formal reproof. (F., -L.) 'Wherof oure present lecture speaketh;' Sir T. More, p. 1301 c. = F. lecture, 'a lecture, a reading'; Cot. = Lat. lectura, fem. of fut. part. of legere, to read; see Legend. Der. lecture, verb, lecture-er, lecture-ship.

LEDGE, a slight shelf, ridge, small moulding. (Scand.) In Norfolk, a bar of a gate, or stile, of a chair, table, &c., is termed a ledge, according to Forby. A door made of three or four upright boards, fastened by cross-pieces, is called a ledger-door; a ledger is a horizontal slab of stone, a horizontal bar, and is also called a ligger (Halliwell). A ligger is 'a liar,' that which lies, from A. S. liegan, to lie; and ledge is from the same source. The word is, however, rather Scand. than E. 'Ledge of a dore, barre. Ledge of a shelve, apuy [appui], estaye;' Palsgrave. [The word legge in Prompt. Parv. p. 293 is probably unrelated.] β. Of Scand. origin; allied to Norweg. logg, the lowest part of a vessel, pl. legger, and written lagge when used in composition; Swed. lagg, the rim of a cask; Icel. lugg, the ledge or rim at the bottom of a cask. We may also note Norweg. lega, a lying, couch, lair, bed, a support upon which anything rests. Both logg and lega are from Norweg. liggia = Dan. ligge, to lie; Aasen. See Lie (1).

LEDGER, a book in which a summary of accounts is preserved. (Du.) Formerly called a ledger-book; Kersey, ed. 1715. The word had other meanings, most of them involving the sense of 'lying down.' Thus a ledger was a horizontal slab of stone (Halliwell); leger ambassadors were such as remained for some time at a foreign court; see leiger in Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 59. A ledger-bait was a bait that was 'fixed or made to rest in one certain place'; I. Walton, Angler, pt. i. c. 8. 'A rusty musket, which had lien long leger in his shop;' Fuller's Worthies, London (R.) See further in Richardson. = Du. legger, 'one that lies down' (Sewel); hence mod. Du. legger, the nether mill-stone [answering to E. ledger, a horizontal slab of stone]. = O. Du. leggen, to lie, once in common use, though the true form is liggen, and the proper sense of leggen is to lay. We know how these words are constantly confused in English. 'Te bed leggen, to ly a-bed. Neer leggen, to lie down. Waar legt hy t'huys, where does he ly, or lodge?' Sewel. See Lie (1).

¶ Thus a ledger-book is one that lies always ready in one place. The etymology of the word was ill-understood, and it was confused with O. F. legier, light; see Ledger-line. Hence it was sometimes spelt ligier (see Richardson); and Howell goes so far as to use a leger-book in the sense of a portable memorandum-book, apparently from thus mistaking the true sense. 'Some do use to have a small leger-booke fairly bound up table-book-wise,' i. e. like a memorandum-book; Howell, Forraine Travell, sect. iv, ed. Arber, p. 27.

LEDGER-LINE, the same as Leger-line, q. v. (F., -L.)

LEE, a sheltered place, shelter; part of a ship away from the wind. (Scand.) M. E. lee, shelter. 'We lurked vnder lee,' we lay hid under shelter; Mort Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 1446. A-lee = on the lee; Deposition of Rich. II., ed. Skeat, iv. 74. The word and its use are both Scand.; the true E. word is lew, a shelter, still in use provincially; see Halliwell. = Icel. hlé, lee, used (as in England) only by seamen; sigla á hlé, to stand to leeward; hlé-bord, the lee-side.

+ Dan. le; Swed. lä. + Du. lij. + A. S. hléob, hleow, a covering, protection, shelter; Grein, ii. 82. Hence prov. E. lew, a shelter, also, as adj., warm; see Lukewarm. + O. Sax. hleow, a protection, covering. And cf. Goth. hljja, a tent, tabernacle. β. Allied to A. S. hléob, hleow, a shelter (Grein, ii. 83); the same word as prov. E. lew, shelter, warmth (Halliwell). With these forms we may compare Icel. hlý, warmth, hlær, hlýr, warm, hljja, to shelter, hlána, to thaw. From a Teut. base HLÁWA, warm; whence also G. lau, tepid (Fick, iii. 87). ¶ Note the pronunciation lew-ard, for lee-ward. Der. lee-shore, lee-side, lee-way. Also lee-ward, allied to O. Du. lywaard, lee-ward (Sewel); the mod. Du. form being lijwaarts.

LEECH (1), a physician. (E.) In Shak. Timon. v. 4. 84. M. E. leche, Chaucer, C. T. 15524. = A. S. læce, a physician; Matt. ix. 12; Lu. iv. 23. Connected with A. S. læcian, to heal; Grein, ii. 150. + Icel. læknir, a physician; lækna, to cure, heal. + Dan. læge, a physician; from læge, to heal. + Swed. läkare, a physician; from läka, to heal. + Goth. leikeis, lekeis, a physician, Lu. iv. 23; connected with leiknon, lekinon, to heal. + O. H. G. lähhi, lähhi, a physician; connected with O. H. G. lähhinôn, to heal, M. H. G. lâchenen, to employ remedies, M. H. G. lâchen, a remedy. β. We may further compare Irish and Gael. leigh, a physician, leigheas, a cure, remedy. Root unknown.

LEECH (2), a blood-sucking worm. (E.) M. E. leche, Prompt. Parv. p. 291. = A. S. læce; we find 'Sanguisuga, vel hirudo, læce' in Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Insectorum. Lit. 'the healer'; and the same word as the above.

LEECH (3), LEACH, the border or edge of a sail at the sides. (Scand.) 'Leech, the edge of a sail, the goring;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'The leech of a sail, vox nautica;' Skinner, ed. 1671. = Icel. lík, a leech-line; Swed. lik, a bolt-rope, stânde liken, the leeches; Dan. lig, a bolt-rope, staende lig, a leech. + O. Du. lyken, a bolt-rope (Sewel).

LEEK, a kind of onion. (E.) M. E. leek, Chaucer, C. T. 3877; P. Plowman, B. v. 82. = A. S. leac; in Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Herbarum. + Du. look. + Icel. laukr. + Dan. løg. + Swed. lök. + G. lauch. β. All from Teut. base LAUKA, a leek (Fick, iii. 260). Root unknown; but answering in form to LUK, to lock. Cf. W. llysiau, herbs, plants. Der. gar-lic, char-lock, hem-lock.

LEER, a sly or arch look. (E.) The verb is a later development from the sb., which is an old word. The M. E. lere means the cheek, also the face, complexion, mien, look. 'A lovely lady of lere' = a lady of lovely mien; P. Plowman, B. i. 3. It was orig. almost always used in a good sense, and with adjectives expressive of beauty, but in Skelton we find it otherwise in two passages. 'Her lothely lere Is nothing clere, But vgly of chere' = her loathsome look is not at all clear, but ugly of aspect; Elynouere Rummyngye, l. 12. 'Your lothesum lere to loke on;' and Poem against Garnesche, l. 5. Shakespeare has it in two senses; (1) the complexion, aspect, As You Like It, iv. 1. 67, Titus Andron. iv. 2. 119; (2) a winning look, Merry Wives, i. 3. 50. At a later period it is generally used in a sinister sense. = A. S. hléor, the cheek; hence the face, look, Grein, ii. 85. + O. Sax. hlíor, the cheek; O. Du. liar (Oudemans). + Icel. hlýr, the cheek. β. The orig. sense may have been 'slope,' from the Teut. base HLI, to lean; see Lean (1). Fick (iii. 88) supposes A. S. hléor = Teut. HLIURA = HLIWRA, so that the base would be HLI, not HLU. ¶ The Tauchnitz Du. Dict. gives loeren, 'to peep, peer, leer, lurk.' This may mislead, as I believe two verbs are here mixed together, viz. loeren, 'to peep, peer, leer'; and loeren, 'to lurk.' Of these, the former may very well be cognate with E. leer; but the latter is clearly cognate with Dan. lure, Swed. lura, to lurk, and has no connection with the other word. Moreover, the former may be related to Lower (2); whilst the latter is perhaps related to Lure or Lurk. Der. leer, verb, of which an early use is in Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 480, 2 Hen. IV, v. 2. 7, Troil. v. i. 97, only in the sense 'to sipper,' to give a winning glance.

LEES, dregs of wine. (F.) In A. V. Isa. xxv. 6, Jer. xlviii. 11. 'Verily the lees of wine are so strong;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xliii. c. 2. A pl. sb., from a sing. lee, not used. = F. lie, 'the lees, dregs, grounds, thick substance that settles in the bottom of liquor; Cot. Of unknown origin; the Low Lat. form is lia; the phr. 'fecula sive lias uini' occurs in a MS. of the 10th century (Littre).

LEFT, a term applied to the (usually) weaker hand. (E.) M. E. left, lift, luft. Spelt left, Chaucer, C. T. 2955; lift, Will. of Palerne, 2961; luft, P. Plowman, A. ii. 5. 7; Layamon, 24461. The word may be considered as E., being certainly of O. Low G. origin. It can scarcely be found in A. S., which has the term winster instead; see Grein, ii. 716. We do, however, find 'inanis, left,' in a Gloss (Mone, Quellen, i. 443), and the same MS. has senne for synne (sin); so that left may stand for lyft, with the sense of 'worthless' or 'weak.' + N. Friesic leest, leester hond (left hand); Outzen. + O. Du. lift, left (Oudemans); Kilian also gives the form lucht, which does not, however, seem to be the original one. β. The t is a later suffix, and the base appears to be LUB, perhaps related to Lop, q. v. γ. It is difficult to trace any connection with Russ. lievui, left, lievsha, the left hand; Lat. laevus, Gk. λαίβος (for λαίβος), left, which are from a base LAIWA. ¶ This satisfactory etymology is due to Mr. Sweet; see the Addenda. For A. S. lyft, see lyftádl, palsy, Cockayne's Leechdoms, ii. 338. Der. left-handed, -ness. [†]

LEG, one of the limbs by which animals walk, a slender support. (Scand.) M. E. leg (pl. legges), Chaucer, C. T. 593; Layamon, l. 1876 (later text, the earlier text has scoken = shanks). - Icel. leggr, a leg, hollow bone, stem of a tree, shaft of a spear. + Dan. lag, the calf of the leg. + Swed. lugg, the calf or bone of the leg. β. Referred by Fick (iii. 262) to the Europ. base LAK, to bend; this is unsatisfactory, as the Icel. word seems to involve the notion of stiffness; cf. Icel. hand-leggr (lit. hand-stem), the fore-arm, arm-leggr, the upper-arm. Der. leg-less, leggings.

LEGACY, a bequest of personal property. (L.) M. E. legacie. 'Her legacie and lamentation'; Henrysoun, Complaint of Creseide, 3rd st. from end. Cf. O. F. legat, 'a legacy'; Cot. A coined word (as if from a Lat. legatio) from Lat. legatum, a legacy, bequest; orig. neut. of pp. of Lat. legare, to appoint, bequeath. - Lat. leg-, stem of lex, law. See LEGAL. Der. legacy-hunter; also legat-ee, a barbarously formed word, coined by adding the F. suffix -é (= Lat. -atus), denoting the pp., to the stem of Lat. legatus, pp. of legare.

LEGAL, pertaining to the law. (F., -L.) In Minshew's Dict., ed. 1627. - F. legal, 'legall, lawful'; Cot. - Lat. legalis, legal. - Lat. leg-, stem of lex, law, which is cognate with E. law. β. The lit. sense is 'that which lies,' i. e. that which is settled or fixed, as in the Gk. phrases of νόμος of νεμειναι, the established laws, κείναι νόμος, the law is fixed, from κείμαι, I lie. From European base LAGH, to lie, whence also Gk. λέχος, a bed, Lat. lect-us, a bed. See Fick, i. 748, 749. See LAW, and LIE (1). Der. legal-ly, legal-ise; legal-i-ty, from F. legalité, 'lawfulness' (Cot.), which from Low Lat. acc. legalitatem. And see legacy, legate, allege, delegate, relegate, college, colleague, privilege, &c.

LEGATE, a commissioner, ambassador. (F., -L.) M. E. legate, legat; Rob. of Glouc. p. 499, l. 23; Layamon, l. 24501. - O. F. legat, 'a legat, the pope's ambassador'; Cot. - Lat. legatus, a legate, deputy; pp. of legare, to appoint, send. - Lat. leg-, stem of lex, law. See LEGAL. Der. legate-ship; legat-ion, from F. legation, 'a legateship' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. legationem; also legat-ine, adj. Hen. VIII, iii. 2. 339.

LEGATEE; see under Legacy.

LEGEND, a marvellous or romantic story. (F., -L.) M. E. legende, Chaucer, C. T. 3143; P. Plowman, C. xii. 206. - O. F. legende, 'a legend, a writing, also the words that be about the edge of a piece of coyne'; Cot. - Low Lat. legenda, as in Aurea legenda = the Golden Legend. - Lat. legenda, neut. pl. of fut. pass. part. of legere (pp. lectus), to read, orig. to gather, collect. + Gk. λέγειν, to collect, gather, speak, tell. β. From a base LAG, to gather; whence, probably, by the extension of the Teutonic form lak to laks and subsequent loss of k (producing las), we have also Goth. lisan, to collect; see Lease (2). Cf. also Lithuanian lėsti, to gather, pick up grains as birds do, cited by Curtius, i. 454; whom see. Der. legend-ary; also (from Lat. leg-ere) leg-ible, leg-ibil-y, leg-ible-ness, leg-i-bili-ty; together with numerous other words such as legion, lecture, lesson, lection, col-lect, de-light, di-lig-ent, e-leg-ant, e-lect, e-lig-ible, intel-lect, intel-lig-ent, neg-lect, neg-lig-ent, re-col-lect, re-di-lect-ion, sacri-lege, &c. Also (from Gk. λέγειν) lexicon, dia-lect, e-lect-ic, log-ic, log-arithm, and the suffix -logy.

LEGERDEMAIN, sleight of hand. (F., -L.) 'And of legierdemayne the mysteries did know'; Spenser, F. Q. v. 9. 13. 'Perceive theyr legier demaine'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 813 g. - O. F. legier de main, lit. de main; see Leger-line below. The F. main is from Lat. manum, acc. of manus, the hand; see Manual.

LEGER-LINE, LEDGER-LINE, in music, a short line added above or below the staff. (F., -L.) [On the word line, see Line.] Properly spelt leger-line, as in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. Not in Todd's Johnson. These lines are very small and light. - F. léger, light; formerly legier, as in Cotgrave. Cf. Ital. leggiero, leggiero, light. Formed as if from a Lat. *leviarius, made by adding -arius to leui-, crude form of levis, light. See Levity. Der. from the same source, leger-i-ty, lightness, Hen. V, iv. 1. 23; see legiereté in Cotgrave.

LEGIBLE, that can be read. (F., -L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. - O. F. legible, 'legible, readable'; Cot. - Lat. legibilis, legible. - Lat. legere, to read; see Legend. Der. legibil-y, legible-ness, legibil-i-ty.

LEGION, a large body of soldiers. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. legium, Layamon, 6024; later, legioun, legion. - O. F. legion, 'a Roman legion'; Cot. - Lat. legionem, acc. of legio, a Roman legion, a body of troops of from 4200 to 6000 men. - Lat. legere, to gather, select, levy a body of men. See Legend. Der. legion-ary.

LEGISLATOR, a law-giver. (L.) In Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 69, l. 30. - Lat. legis-lator, lit. proposer of a law. - Lat. legis, gen. case of lex, a law; and lator, a proposer of a law, lit. a carrier, bearer, from latum, to bear, used as supine of ferre, to bear, but from a different root. β. For Lat. lex, see Legal.

Lat. latum stands for latum, from ✓ TAL, to lift; see Tolerate. Der. legislat-ive, legislat-ure; hence was at last developed the word to legislate; whence also legislat-ion. And see Legist.

LEGIST, one skilled in the laws. (F., -L.) 'A great iurist and legist'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 210 (R.). - O. F. legiste, in use in the 13th century; mod. F. légiste; Littre. - Low Lat. legista, a legist. - Lat. leg-, stem of lex, law; with (Gk.) suffix -ista. See Legal.

LEGITIMATE, lawful, lawfully begotten, genuine, authorised. (L.) In Shak. K. John, i. 116. - Low Lat. legitimus, pp. of legitimare, to declare to be lawful. - Lat. legitimus, pertaining to law, legitimate; formed with suffix -timus (Aryan -ta-ma) from legi-, crude form of lex, a law; see Legal. Der. legitimate-ly, legitimac-y, legitim-ist (from legitim-us).

LEGUME, a pod. (F., -L.) A botanical term. In Todd's Johnson. Formerly, the Lat. legumen was used, as in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - F. légume, pulse; in botany, a pod. - Lat. legumen, pulse, bean-plant; applied to that which can be gathered or picked, as opposed to crops that must be cut. - Lat. legere, to gather; see Legend. Der. legumin-ous, from stem legumin- (of legumen).

LEISURE, freedom from employment, free time. (F., -L.) M. E. leyser, leysere; Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, l. 172; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 229, l. 1. - O. F. leisir (Burguy), later loisir (Cot.), leisure. The O. F. leisir was orig. an infin. mood, signifying 'to be permitted'; Littre. - Lat. licēre, to be permitted. See Licence. Der. leisure-ly. We may note the bad spelling; it should be leis-er or leis-ir.

LEMAN, LEMMAN, a sweetheart, of either sex. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 2. 172; Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 26. M. E. lemman, Havelok, 1283; older form leofmon, Ancrén Riwele, p. 90, l. 14. - A. S. leof, dear; and mann, a man or woman. See Lief and Man.

LEMMA, in mathematics, an assumption. (L., -Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - Lat. lemma. - Gk. λήμμα, a thing taken; in logic, a premiss taken for granted. - Gk. ἐλάμμαι, perf. pass. of λαμβάνειν, to take (base λαβ-). - ✓ RABH, to take, seize; cf. Skt. rabh, to take, seize (Vedic).

LEMMING, LEMING, a kind of Norwegian rat. (Norwegian.) Described as 'the leming or Lapland marmot' in a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. Not in Todd's Johnson. - Norweg. lemende; also used in many various forms, as lemende, limende, lemende, lemming, lemelde, &c.; see Aasen. + Swed. lemel. There is also, according to Ihre (Lexicon Lapponicum), a Lapp form, loumek. β. Origin obscure; Aasen thinks that the word means 'laming,' i. e. spoiling, very destructive, and connects it with Norweg. lemja, to palsy, strike, beat, Icel. lemja, to beat, thrash, maim, disable, Dan. lamme, to paralyse; cf. slang E. lam, to beat. See Lame. γ. But perhaps it is of Lapp origin, after all.

LEMON, an oval fruit, with acid pulp. (F., -Pers.) Formerly spelt (more correctly) limon; as in Levins, ed. 1570. - F. limon, 'a lemmon'; Cot. - Pers. limún, limúná, a lemon, citron; Richardson's Pers. Dict., p. 1282, col. 1. Cf. Turk. limún; Arab. laimín, a lemon; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 517. Der. lemon-ade, from F. limonade. [†]

LEMUR, a nocturnal mammal. (L.) From its habit of going about at night, it has been nicknamed 'ghost' by naturalists. - Lat. lemur, a ghost.

LEND, to let for hire, allow the use of for a time. (E.) The final d is excrement, as in sound from F. son. M. E. lenen, pt. t. lenade, lende, lente, pp. lened, lend, lent. Thus the mod. final d was easily suggested by the forms of the pt. t. and pp. 'Lene me your hand' = lend me your hand; Chaucer, C. T. 3084. 'This lond he hire lende' = he lent [granted] her this land; Layamon, l. 228. - A. S.

lénan, to lend, also, to give, grant; Grein, ii. 163. — A.S. lén, a loan, Grein, ii. 163. + Du. leenen, to lend; from leen, a fee, fief. + Icel. lána, to lend; from lán, a loan; also léna, to grant, from lén, a fief. + Dan. laane, to lend; from laan, a loan. + Swed. läna, to lend; from län, a fee, fief. + G. leihen, to lend (a provincial word); from lehen, lehn, a fief. See further under Loan. Der. lend-er; lend-ings, K. Lear, iii. 4. 113.

LENGTH, extent, the quality of being long. (E.) M. E. length (two syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 83, 4428. — A.S. lengð; the dat. lengðe occurs in the A.S. Chron. an. 1122. Formed with suffix -ð and vowel-change of a to e from A.S. lang, long. + Du. lengte, from lang. + Dan. længde, from lang. + Swed. längd, from lång. + Icel. lengd, from langr. See Long. Der. length-en, in which the final -en has a causal force, though this peculiar formation is conventional and unoriginal; in the M. E. lengthen, the final -en merely denoted the infinitive mood, and properly produced the verb to length, as in Shak. Passionate Pilgrim, l. 210. Also length-y, length-i-ly, length-i-ness; length-wise, length-ways.

LENIENT, mild, merciful. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 659. — Lat. lenient-, stem of pres. part. of lenire, to soften, soothe. — Lat. lenis, soft, mild. See Lenify, Lithe. Der. lenient-ly, lenient-y.

LENTHY, mildness, clemency. (L.) In Shak. Hen. V, iii. 2. 26, 6. 118. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ity (F. -ité), from Lat. lenitatem, acc. of lenitas, softness, mildness. — Lat. leni-, crude form of lenis, soft, gentle, mild; with suffix -tas. Root uncertain; but re-lent and lithe are related words. Der. lenit-ive = O. F. lenitif, a 'lenitive' (Cot.), as if from a Lat. lenitivus. And see Lenient.

LENS, a piece of glass used for optical purposes. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. So called, from the resemblance in shape to the seed of a lentil, which is like a double-convex lens. See Lentil. Der. lenticul-ar, from Lat. lenticula, a little lentil.

LENT, a fast of forty days, beginning with Ash Wednesday. (E.) The fast is in the spring of the year, and the old sense is simply 'spring.' M. E. lenten, lente, lent; spelt lenten, P. Plowman, B. xx. 359. — A. S. lencten, the spring; Grein, ii. 167. + Du. lente, the spring. + G. lenz, spring; O. H. G. lenzin, lengizen. β. Supposed to be derived from A. S., Du., and G. lang, long, because in spring the days lengthen; this is possible, but not certain. Der. lenten, adj., Hamlet, ii. 2. 329; here the suffix -en is not adjectival (as in gold-en), but the whole word is the M. E. lenten fully preserved; so also Lenten-tide = A. S. lencten-tid, spring-time, Gen. xlviii. 7.

LENTIL, an annual plant, bearing pulse for food. (F., — L.) M. E. lentil; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1488. — O. F. lentille, 'the litle or lentill'; Cot. — Lat. lenticula, a little lentil; double dimin. (with suffix -cul-) from lenti-, crude form of lens, a lentil. See Lens. Der. lenticul-ar, resembling a lens or lentil.

LENTISK, the mastic-tree. (F., — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. lentisque, 'the lentiske or mastic-tree'; Cot. — Lat. lentiscum, lentiscus, a mastic-tree; named from the clamminess of the resin yielded by it. — Lat. lenti-, crude form of lentus, tenacious, sticky, pliant. See Relent and Lithe.

LEO, a lion. (L., — Gk.) As the name of a zodiacal sign; Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, i. 8. 2. We even find A. S. leo, Grein, ii. 171. — Lat. leo, a lion; see Lion. Der. leon-ine = F. leonin (Cot.), from Lat. leon-inus, from leon, stem of leo.

LEOPARD, the lion-pard, an animal of the cat kind. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. leopard, leopard, P. Plowman, B. xv. 293. — O. F. leopard, 'a leopard, or libbard, a beast ingendred between a lion and a panther'; Cot. — Lat. leopardus, a leopard. — Gk. λεοπάρδος, λεοντόπαρδος, a leopard; supposed to be a mongrel between a pard or panther and a lioness; Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. viii. c. 16. — Gk. λεό-, λεοντο-, shortened form or crude form of λέων, a lion; and πάρδος, a pard. See Lion and Pard.

LEPER, one afflicted with leprosy. (F., — L., — Gk.) The form of the word is founded on a mistake; the word properly means the disease itself (2 Kings, v. 11), now called leprosy; the old term for 'leper' was leprous man. 'And lo! a leprose man cam . . . And anon the lepre of him was clensid'; Wyclif, Matt. viii. 2, 3. This confusion first appears (perhaps) in Henryson's Complaint of Creseide, where we find 'after the lawe of lepers'; l. 64; 'the lepre-folk'; l. 110, 'a lepre-man'; l. 119, &c.; see Richardson. — F. lepre, 'a leprosie'; Cot. — Lat. lepra. — Gk. λέπρα, leprosy. So called because it makes the skin scaly. — Gk. λέπρος, scaly, scabby, rough. — Gk. λέπος, a scale, husk, rind. — Gk. λέπειν, to strip, peel, take off the husk or rind, scale. + Russ. lupite, to scale, peel, bark. + Lithuanian lūpti, to scale, flay; cited by Fick, i. 751. β. All from European base LAP, to scale, strip off the rind or husk (Fick, as above). See Leaf, Lap- idary, Limpet. Der. lepr-ous = O. F. lepreux, from Lat. leprosus, adj.; whence was coined the sb. leprosy, Matt. viii. 3.

LEPIDOPTERA, s. pl., a certain order of insects. (Gk.) Modern, and scientific. Used of the butterfly, and other insects whose four wings are covered with very fine scales. Coined from Gk. λεπίδο-, crude form of λεπίς, a scale; and πτερά, pl. of πτερόν, a wing. Λεπίς is from λέπειν, to scale (see Leprosy); and πτερόν = πτε-ερόν, cognate with E. feather, from ✓PAT, to fly; see Feather, Pen. Der. lepidopter-ous.

LEPORINE, pertaining to the hare. (L.) Modern, and scientific. Either from F. leporin, 'of or belonging to a hare' (Cot.), or more probably directly from Lat. leporinus, with same sense. — Lat. lepori-, crude form of lepus, a hare. See Leveret.

LEPROSY; see under Leper. (F., — L., — Gk.)

LESION, an injury, wound. (F., — L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. lesion, 'hurt, wounding, harme'; Cot. — Lat. lesionem, acc. of lesio, an injury. — Lat. læsus, pp. of lædere, to hurt. Root uncertain. Der. (from Lat. lædere), col-lide, e-lide, il-li-sion.

LESS, smaller. (E.) Used as compar. of little, but from a different root; the coincidence in the first letter is accidental. M. E. lessè, lassè, adj., les, adv. 'The lesse luvè' = the less love; Ancren Riwle, p. 92, l. 7. Les as adv., id. p. 30, l. 7. — A. S. lessa, adj., læs, adv.; Grein, ii. 164. + O. Fries, lessa, less. β. Lessa stands for læs-ra, by assimilation, or we may regard læs-ra as preserving the orig. s of the comparative suffix; see Worse. It is the compar. form from a base LAS, feeble, which appears in Goth. lasius, feeble (2 Cor. x. 10), and in Icel. lasinn, feeble, ailing, lasna, to become feeble, to decay.

LEAST, the superl. form, is the M. E. lestè, lastè, adj., P. Plowman, B. iii. 24; lest, adv., Gower, C. A. i. 153, l. 5. — A. S. læst, læstest (whence least by contraction), Grein, ii. 164; from the same base læs, feeble, with the usual suffix -ast or -est. + O. Fries. lerest (for ledest), leist. See Koch, Eng. Gramm. i. 448; March, A. S. Gramm. p. 65. Der. less, sb.; less-er, a double comparative, Gen. i. 16; less-en, vb., M. E. lassen, Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1800, lessin (for lessen), Prompt. Parv., p. 298, where the suffix -en appears to be merely the suffix of the M. E. infin. mood retained for greater distinctness. And see lest.

-LESS, suffix. (E.) A. S. -læs, the same word as Loose, q. v.

LESSEE, LESSOR; see under Lease.

LESSON, a reading of scripture, portion of scripture read, a task, lecture, piece of instruction. (F., — L.) M. E. lesson, Chaucer, C. T. 9069; spelt lesum, Ancren Riwle, p. 282, l. 3. — F. leçon. — Lat. lectionem, acc. of lectio, a reading. — Lat. lectus, pp. of legere, to read; see Legend. Doublet, lection.

LEST, for fear that, that not. (E.) Not for least, as often erroneously said, but due to less. It arose from the A. S. equivalent expression ðý læs ðe, as in the following sentence. 'Nelle we ðas race ná leng teón, ðý læs ðe hit eów æþryt þynce' = we will not prolong this story farther, lest it seem to you tedious; Sweet's A. S. Reader, p. 94, l. 211. Here ðý læs ðe literally = for the reason less that, where ðý (= for the reason) is the instrumental case of the def. article; læs = less; and ðe (= that) is the indeclinable relative. β. At a later period ðý was dropped, læs became les, and læs ðe, coalescing, became one word lesthe, easily corrupted to leste, and lastly to lest, for ease of pronunciation. The form leste occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 58, l. 12, whilst the older expression þi les þe occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 117, l. 2 from bottom; so that the word took its corrupted form about the beginning of the 13th century. See Nevertheless. Cf. Lat. quominus.

LET (1), to allow, permit, suffer, grant. (E.) M. E. leten (with one t), a strong verb; pt. t. lat, let, leet; pp. laten, leten, lete. In Chaucer, C. T. 128, 510, Tyrwhitt misprints lette for leet, and in l. 4344, letten for leten. — A. S. létan, létan, to let, allow; pt. t. lét, leót, pp. látan; Grein, ii. 165. + Du. laten, pt. t. liet, pp. gelaten. + Icel. lata, pt. t. lét, pp. látinn. + Dan. lade, pt. t. lod, pp. ladet. + Swed. låta, pt. t. låt, pp. låtén. + Goth. letan, pt. t. lailot, pp. letans. + G. lassen, pt. t. liess, pp. gelassen.

β. The Teut. form is LÁTAN, from a base LAT, to let, let go, whence also E. Late, q. v. Fick, iii. 263. Cf. Lith. laidmi, I let (base LAD). And see Let (2).

LET (2), to hinder, prevent, obstruct. (E.) M. E. letten (with double t), a weak verb. 'He letted nat his felawe for to see' = he hindered not his fellow from seeing; Chaucer, C. T. 1894. — A. S. lettan, to hinder; also gelettan; Grein, ii. 168. A causal verb, with the sense 'to make late,' just as hinder is derived from the -hind in behind. — A. S. lat, slow; see Late. + Du. letten, to impede; from laat. + Icel. letja, from latr. + Goth. latjan, intrans., to be late, to tarry; from lats, slothful.

LETHAL, deadly, mortal. (F., — L.; or L.) Spelt lethall in Minshen, ed. 1627. — F. lethal, 'deadly, mortal'; Cot. [Or directly from Latin.] — Lat. lethalis, better letalis, mortal. — Lat. letum, death. Root uncertain. Der. lethi-ferous, deadly; from lethi- = letho-, crude form of lethum, and -fer-ous = -fer-us, bearing, from ferre, to bear.

LETHARGY, heavy slumber, great dulness. (F., — L., — Gk.)

In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 627. Spelt letarge, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 34. = O. F. lethargie, 'a lethargy'; Cot. = Lat. lethargia. = Gk. ληθαργία, drowsiness. = Gk. ληθαργος, forgetting, forgetful. = Gk. ληθῶν, oblivion. See Lethe. Der. lethargi-c, from Gk. ληθαργικός, drowsy; lethargi-c-al; lethargi-ed, K. Lear, i. 4. 249.

LETHE, forgetfulness, oblivion. (L., = Gk.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 5. 33. = Lat. lethe. = Gk. λήθη, a forgetting; also Lethe, the river of oblivion in the lower world. = Gk. λαθ-, base of λανθάνειν, to lie hid. = $\sqrt{\text{RADH}}$, to quit; see Latent. Der. leth-argy, q. v.; lethe-an; lethe'd, Antony, ii. i. 27.

LETTER, a character, written message. (F., = L.) M. E. lettre, Genesis and Exod., ed. Morris, l. 993. = F. lettre. = Lat. littera (also littera), a letter; so called because the character was smeared or scrawled on parchment, not engraved with a knife on wood. = Lat. litus, pp. of linere, to besmear; see Liniment. Der. letter-ed, Will. of Palerne, l. 4088; letter-founder, letter-ing, letter-press; letters-patent, Rich. II, ii. i. 202, where patents is the F. plural adjective.

LETTUCE, a succulent plant. (F., = L.) M. E. letuce, Palladius on Husbandry, b. ii. st. 29, l. 202. = O. F. *laictuce, *laituce, not recorded, older form of laictuē (Cotgrave), mod. F. laitue, lettuce. = Lat. lactuca, lettuce; named from its juiciness; Varro, De Lingua Latina, v. 104. = Lat. lact-, stem of lac, milk. See Lacteal. [†]

LEVANT, the East of the Mediterranean Sea. (Ital., = L.) Levant and Ponent, lit. rising and setting (with ref. to the sun) are old terms for East and West. 'Forth rush the Levant and the Ponent winds'; Milton, P. L. x. 704. = Ital. levante, 'the east winde, the cuntry lying toward or in the east'; Florio. = Lat. levant-, stem of pres. part. of levare, to raise, whence se levare, to rise; see Lever. Der. levant-ine. Cf. slang E. levant, from Span. levantar, lit. to raise.

LEEVEE, a morning assembly. (F., = L.) 'The good man early to the levees goes'; Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. l. 428. = F. levée, a levy, &c.; properly fem. of the pp. of lever, to raise; see Levy. But see Addenda. [✱] LEVEL, an instrument by which a thing is determined to be horizontal. (F., = L.) M. E. liuel, leuel (with u for v); P. Plowman, A. xi. 135; B. x. 179. = O. F. liuel, preserved in the expression 'd'un liuel, level'; Cot. Later spelt liveau, afterwards corrupted to niveau; both spellings are in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'a mason's or carpenter's level or triangle.' He also gives the verb niveler (corruption of liveler), 'to level'. = Lat. libella, a level; dimin. of libra, a level, balance, see Librate. [†] Not an A. S. word, as sometimes said. Der. level, verb, of which the pp. leveled (= level'd) occurs in Sir P. Sidney, Apology for Poetry, ed. Arber, p. 55; level-er, level-ness.

LEVER, a bar for raising weights. (F., = L.) M. E. levour (with u = v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 126, l. 8; Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, l. 4177. = F. lever, 'a raiser, lifter'; Cot. [Not quite the same word as F. levier, a lever, which differs in the suffix.] = Lat. levatorem, acc. of levator, a lifter. = Lat. levatus, pp. of levare, to lift, lit. to make light. = Lat. levis, light. See Levity. Der. lever-age.

LEVERET, a young hare. (F., = L.) Spelt lyerlet in Levins, ed. 1570. = O. F. levrault, a 'leveret, or young hare'; Cot. β. The suffix -ault = Low Lat. -aldus, from O. H. G. wald, power; see Intro. to Brachet, Etym. Dict., § 195; it is here used merely with a dimin. sense. Cf. Ital. leprella, a leveret. The base levr- is from Lat. lepor-, stem of lepus, a hare. Root uncertain. See Leporine. [†]

LEVIATHAN, a huge aquatic animal. (L., = Heb.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. i. 174. = Late Lat. leviathan, Job, xl. 20 (Vulgate). = Heb. livyathan, an aquatic animal, dragon, serpent; so called from its twisting itself in curves. = Heb. root lāvāh, to cleave; Arab. root lawā', to bend, whence lawā', the twisting or coiling of a serpent; Rich. Dict. pp. 1278, 1275.

LEVIGATE, to make smooth. (L.) Perhaps obsolete. [Richardson cites an example from Sir T. Elyot, where levigate = lightened, from Lat. levigare, to lighten, which from levis, light; see Levity. But this is quite another word.] 'When use hath levigated the organs, and made the way so smooth and easie'; Barrow, vol. iii. ser. 9 (R.). = Lat. levigatus, pp. of levigare, to make smooth. = Lat. leu-, stem of levis, smooth; with suffix -ig- weakened from ag-ere, to drive. The Lat. levis is cognate with Gk. λεῖος, smooth. Der. levig-ation.

LEVITE, one of the tribe of Levi. (L., = Gk., = Heb.) In A. V. Lu. x. 32. = Lat. Leuita, Lu. x. 32. = Gk. Λευίτης, Lu. x. 32. Formed with suffix -ites from Aevt, Rev. vii. 7. = Heb. Levi, one of the sons of Jacob. Der. Levit-i-c-us, Levit-i-c-al.

LEVITY, lightness of weight or of conduct. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, i. 2. 35. Not a French word, but formed by analogy with words in -ty (= F. -té) from Lat. levitatem, acc. of levitas, lightness. = Lat. levis, light; which (by comparison with other languages) stands for leguis. Cognate with E. light. See Light (2).

LEVY, the act of raising men for war; a force raised. (F., = L.) In Shak. Macb. iii. 2. 25. [The verb is from the sb., but I find an earlier example of it. 'Whanne kyng Iohn had leuyed many great summes of money'; Fabyan, Chron., Edw. III, an. 30.] = F. levée, 'a bank, or causey; also, a levy, or levying of money, souldiers, &c.'; Cot. Properly the fem. of the pp. of the vb. lever, to raise. = Lat. levare, to raise; lit. 'to make light.' = Lat. levis, light; see Levity. Der. levy, verb, levi-able; see lev-er, lev-ant, lev-en, lev-en, carnival. Doublet, levees. [†]

LEWD, ignorant, base, licentious. (E.) Contracted for lewed. M. E. lewed, Chaucer, C. T. 576. = A. S. læwed, adj. lay, i. e. belonging to the laity; 'þæt læwede folc' = the lay-people, Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, ii. 74, l. 17. The word thus originally merely meant 'the laity,' hence the untaught, ignorant, as opposed to the clergy. The phrase lered and lewed = clergy and laity, taught and untaught, is not uncommon; see P. Plowman, B. iv. 11. β. The form læwed is a pp., and it can only be the pp. of the verb læwan, of which one sense was to weaken, debilitate, enfeeble, so that the orig. sense was 'feeble'; a sense which appears again in the comp. dlæwed, feeble (Lye). The word gelæwed (which is merely another spelling of gedæwed or læwed, the prefix ge- making no difference) is used to translate the Lat. debilitatum (enfeebled) in Exod. xxii. 10, 14; where Grein (unnecessarily and without any authority) has substituted gelefed in place of the reading in Thwaites' edition. Cf. lewsa = Lat. inopia, Ps. lxxxvii. 9, ed. Spelman. The change of sense from 'feeble' or 'weak' to 'ignorant, untaught,' causes no difficulty.

γ. The more usual sense of læwan is to betray; see Matt. xxvi. 15, 16; and Ettmüller's A. S. Dict., p. 169. It is cognate with Goth. leujan, to betray, Mark, xiv. 44, John, xviii. 5; which is a mere derivative of Goth. leu, an occasion, opportunity (hence opportunity to betray), used to translate the Gk. ἀφορμή in Rom. vii. 8, 11, 2 Cor. v. 12, Gal. v. 13. δ. Thus the train of thought can be deduced in the order following, viz. opportunity, opportunity to betray, betrayal, enfeeblement, ignorance, baseness, vileness, licentiousness. ¶ It may be added that any connection with the A. S. leod, M. E. lede, people, is absolutely out of the question. Der. leud-ly, leud-ness = ignorance, Acts, xviii. 14. [†]

LEXICON, a dictionary. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = Gk. λεξικόν (with βιβλίον, a book, understood), a lexicon; properly neut. of λεξικός, adj., of or for words. = Gk. λέξις, a saying, speech. = Gk. λέγειν, to speak; see Legend. Der. lexico-graph-y, lexico-graph-i-c-al, lexico-graph-i-c-al-ly, lexico-graph-er; all from γράφειν, to write; see Graphic.

LEY, a meadow; see Lea. (E.)

LIABLE, responsible, subject. (F., = L.) In Shak. John, ii. 490; v. 2. 101. In the latter passage it means 'allied, associated, compatible.' Schmidt. Formed with the common suffix -able, from F. lier, 'to tie, bind, fasten, knit, . . . unite, oblige, or make beholden to'; Cot. = Lat. ligare, to tie, bind; see Ligament. Der. liabil-ity.

LIAS, a formation of limestone, underlying the oolite. (F., = C.?) Modern in E., and only as a geological term; but old in French. Not in Todd's Johnson. = F. lias, formerly liais, liois. 'Liais, a very hard free-stone whereof stone-steps and tombe-stones be commonly made'; Cot. Spelt liois in the 13th cent. (Littré.) Perhaps from Bret. liach, leach, a stone; of which Legonidec says that he only knows it by the Dict. of Le Pelletier, but that it seems to be the same as one of the flat stones to which the name of dolmen is commonly given in Brittany. The ch is marked as a guttural, shewing that it is a real Celtic word. Cf. Gael. leac, a flat stone, W. llech; see Cromlech. Der. liass-ic.

LIB, to castrate; obsolete. (E.) Florio, ed. 1598, has: 'Accaponare, to geld, spail, or lib.' See Glib (3).

LIBATION, the pouring forth of wine in honour of a deity. (F., = L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. libation (Cot.) = Lat. libationem, acc. of libatio, a libation. = Lat. libatus, pp. of libare, to sip, taste, drink, pour out. + Gk. λείβειν, to pour out, offer a libation, let flow, shed. β. Prob. from $\sqrt{\text{RL}}$, to distil, ooze; cf. Skt. ri, to distil, ooze, drop. See Liquid, Rivulet.

LIBEL, a written accusation, defamatory publication. (L.) The orig. sense is merely 'a little book' or 'a brief piece of writing.' Hence Wyclif has: 'ȝyue he to hir a libel of forsaking'; Matt. v. 31. = Lat. libellus, a little book, writing, written notice; hence 'libellum repudii' in Matt. v. 31 (Vulgate). Dimin. of liber, a book; see LibRARY. ¶ Evidently taken directly from the Latin; see F. libelle in Cotgrave. Der. libel, verb, libell-er, libell-ous, libell-ous-ly.

LIBERAL, generous, candid, free, noble-minded. (F., = L.) M. E. liberal. Gower, C. A. iii. 114, l. 4. = O. F. liberal, 'liberal';

Cot. — Lat. liberalis, befitting a free man, generous. — Lat. liber, free. β. The orig. sense seems to have been 'acting at pleasure,' pursuing one's own pleasure, at liberty to do as one likes; it is thus connected with libet, libet, it pleases, it is one's pleasure; from LIBH (weakened form LIBH), to desire; cf. Skt. lubh, to desire, covet. See Lief. Der. liberal-ly; liberal-ity = F. liberalité (Cot.), from Lat. acc. liberalitatem; liberal-ism, liberal-iss. And see liberate, liberty, libertine, libidinous.

LIBERATE, to set free. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — Lat. liberatus, pp. of liberare, to set free. — Lat. liber, free; see Liberal. Der. liberat-ion, liberat-or.

LIBERTINE, a licentious man. (L.) In Shak. Much Ado, ii. 1. 144. 'Applied at first to certain heretical sects, and intended to mark the licentious liberty of their creed;' Trench, Select Glossary; q. v. Cf. Acts, vi. 9. — Lat. libertinus, adj., of or belonging to a freed man; also, as sb., a freed man; used in the Vulgate in Acts, vi. 9. An extended form of Lat. libertus, a freed man. — Lat. liber, free; with participial suffix -tus. See Liberal. Der. libertin-ism.

LIBERTY, freedom. (F., — L.) M. E. liberté, libertee, Chaucer, C. T. 8047. — O. F. liberte, later liberté, 'liberty, freedom;' Cot. — Lat. libertatem, acc. of libertas, liberty. — Lat. liber, free; see Liberal.

LIBIDINOUS, lustful. (F., — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Holinshed's Chron. Hen. II, an. 1173 (R.) — F. libidineux, 'libidinous, lascivious;' Cot. — Lat. libidinosus, eager, lustful. — Lat. libidin-, stem of libido, lust, pleasure. — Lat. libet, it pleases. — LIBH, weakened form of LIBH, to desire; see Liberal, Lief. Der. libidinously, libidinous-ness.

LIBRARY, a collection of books, a room for books. (F., — L.) M. E. librairie, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 257. — F. librairie. — Lat. librarium, a book-case; neut. of librarius, of or belonging to books. — Lat. libr-, for libro-, crude form of liber, a book, orig. the bark of a tree, which was the earliest writing material; with suffix -arius. β. Prob. connected with Gk. λεπίς, a scale, rind; from Europ. ✓LAP, to peel. See Leaf. Der. librari-an, librari-an-ship.

LIBRATE, to balance, be poised, move slightly as things that balance; LIBRATION, a balancing, slight swinging motion. (L.) The verb is rare, and merely made out of the sb. 'Libration, a balancing or poisoning; also, the motion of swinging in a pendulum;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from Lat. librationem, acc. of libratio, a poisoning. — Lat. libratus, pp. of librare, to poison. — Lat. libra, a balance, a level, machine for levelling, a pound of 12 ounces. + Gk. λίτρα, a pound of 12 ounces, a coin. β. Lat. li-bra = Gk. λίτρα, the words being cognate.

Root uncertain. Der. librat-or-y; from the same source are de-liberate, equi-libri-um, level. Also F. lire, from Gk. λίτρα.
LICENSE, leave, permission, abuse of freedom, excess. (F., — L.) 'Leue and licence' = leave and licence; P. Plowman, A. prol. 82. 'A licence and a leue;' id. B. prol. 85. [The right spelling is with e; sometimes the spelling with i is reserved for the verb, to make a difference to the eye.] — F. licence, 'licence, leave;' Cot. — Lat. licentia, freedom to act. — Lat. licent-, stem of pres. pt. of licere, to be allowable, to be permissible; the orig. sense being 'to be left free.' β. Connected with Lat. linguere, to leave, Gk. λείπειν, to leave, and Skt. rick, to leave, to evacuate. — ✓RIK, to leave, leave empty, clear off. Curtius, ii. 60. ¶ The supposed connection with E. leave is probably false; see note to Leave (1). Der. licence, or more commonly license, verb, 1 Hen. IV, i. 3. 123; licens-er, Milton's Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 24, l. 8; also licensee, q. v., licentious, q. v. See also laisure, il-licit. From the same root are de-linguent, de-re-lict-ion, re-linguish, re-lic, re-lict, de-re-lict, el-lipse, ec-lipse.

LICENTIA, one who has a grant to exercise a profession. (L.) M. E. licenciāt, Chaucer, C. T. 220. Englished from Low Lat. licentiatus, pp. of licentiarum, to license. — Lat. licentia, a license. See Licence.

LICENTIOUS, indulging in excess of freedom, dissolute. (F., — L.) 'A licentious libertie;' Spenser, F. Q. v. 5. 25. — F. licencieux; in Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave. — Lat. licentiosus, full of licence. — Lat. licentia, licence. See Licence. Der. licentious-ly, -ness.

LICHEN, one of an order of cellular flowerless plants; also, an eruption on the skin. (L., — Gk.) See Holland, tr. of Plutarch, b. xxvi. c. 4. Also Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — Lat. lichen, in Pliny, Nat. Hist. xxvi. 4. 10, § 21; xxiii. 7. 63, § 117. — Gk. λεῖχη, lichen, tree-moss; also, a lichen-like eruption on the skin, a tetter. Generally connected with Gr. λείχειν, to lick, to lick up; from its encroachment; see Lick. Cf. Russ. lishai, a tetter, morpew, lichen, liverwort.

LICH-GATE, a church-yard gate with a porch under which a bier may be rested. (E.) In Johnson's Dict. The word is scarce, though its component parts are common. Chaucer has lich-wake [or rather lichē-wake in 4 syllables] to signify the 'waking' or watching of a dead body; C. T. 2960. The lit. sense is 'corpse-gate.' M. E. lich, the body, most often a dead body or corpse (sometimes lengthened to liche in two syllables, as above); see Layamon, 6682, 10434; Ormulum, 8183, 16300; St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 5; An O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 149, l. 78, p. 131, l. 471; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2441, 2447, 2488, 4140; P. Plowman, B. x. 2; &c. — A. S. lic, the body, almost always used of the living body; Grein, ii. 179. The orig. sense is 'form,' shape, or likeness, and it is from the same root as like, adj., with which it is closely connected; see Like (1). + Du. lijk, a corpse. + Icel. lik, a living body (in old poems); also a corpse. + Dan. lig, a corpse. + Swed. lik, a corpse. + Goth. leik, the body, Matt. v. 29; a corpse, Matt. xxvii. 52. + G. leiche, O. H. G. lik, the body, a corpse; whence G. leichenam, a corpse. And see Gate.

LICK, to pass the tongue over, to lap. (E.) M. E. licken, likken; Wyclif, Luke, xvi. 21. — A. S. liccian, Luke, xvi. 21; Grein, ii. 180. + Du. likken. + Goth. laigon, only in the comp. bi-laigon, Luke, xvi. 21. + G. lecken. + Russ. lizate. + Lat. lingere. + Gk. λείχειν, + Skt. lih, Vedic form rik, to lick. β. All from ✓RIGH, to lick. Fick, i. 196. Der. lecher, q. v.

LICORICE, LIQUORICE, a plant with a sweet root, used in medicine. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. licoris. In early use; Layamon, 17745; Chaucer, C. T. 3207. — O. F. *licorice, not recorded, but obviously the old form of liquorice, 'lickorice,' in Cotgrave. Littré gives also the corrupt (but old) spellings reculisse, regulisse, whence mod. F. régulisse. So also in Ital., we have the double form legorizia, regolizia. — Lat. liquiritia, liquorice, a corrupted form; the correct spelling being glycyrrhiza, which is found in Pliny, Nat. Hist. xxii. 9. 11. — Gk. γλυκύριζα, the liquorice-plant; so called from its sweet root. — Gk. γλυκύς, crude form of γλυκύς, sweet; and ρίζα, a root, cognate with E. wort. The Gk. γλυκύς is usually regarded as cognate with Lat. dulcis, sweet. See Dulcet and Wort. [†]

LICTOR, an officer in Rome, who bore an axe and fasces. (L.) In Shak., Antony, v. 2. 214. — Lat. lictor, a lictor, so called (perhaps) from the fasces or bundles of bound rods which he bore, or from binding culprits. Connected with ligare, to bind. See Ligament.

LID, a cover. (E.) M. E. lid (rare, see exx. in Stratmann); spelt lid, Sir Cleges, l. 272, in Weber's Met. Romances, vol. i. — A. S. lid, Matt. xxvii. 60. + Du. lid, a lid; (not the same word as lid, a joint). + Icel. lið, a gate, gateway, gap, space, breach. + M. H. G. lit, lid, a cover (obsolete). β. Apparently from A. S. hlidan, to shut, cover, Grein, ii. 86; cf. O. Sax. hlidan, to cover. It seems to be further connected with A. S. hlīð, a slope, side of a hill, Lat. clivus; from the Teut. base HLI, to lean = Gk. κλιν, to lean, whence Gk. κλινεῖν, to lean, κλινίς, a folding door, gate, entrance (like Icel. lið above). — ✓KRI, to lean; see Lean (1). Der. Lid-gate, occurring as a poet's name. [†] LIE (1), to rest, lean, lay oneself down, repose, abide, be situate. (E.) A strong verb. M. E. liggen, lien, pt. t. lei, lai, lay, pp. leien, lein, lain; Chaucer, C. T. 3651, 20; P. Plowman, B. iii. 175, l. 30, iii. 38. — A. S. ligan, pt. t. læg, pp. legen; Grein, ii. 181. + Du. liggen, pt. t. lag, pp. gelegen. + Icel. liggja, pt. t. lá, pp. leginn. + Dan. ligge, pt. t. laas, pp. ligget. + Swed. ligga, pt. t. låg, pp. legad. + G. liegen, pt. t. lag, pp. gelegen. + Goth. ligan, pt. t. lag, pp. ligans. + Russ. ležate. + Lat. base leg-, to lie; only in lectus, a bed. + Gk. base λεχ-, appearing in aorist ἐλεξα, Homer, Iliad, xiv. 252; λέχος, a bed. β. All from European base LAGH, to lie; Fick, i. 748. ¶ The pp. lien occurs in Gen. xxvi. 10, Ps. lxviii. 13. Der. lay, q. v., law, q. v.

LIE (2), to tell a lie, speak falsely. (E.) M. E. lizen, lien, lyen, a strong verb; Layamon, 3034, Chaucer, C. T. 765; pt. t. leh, Layamon, 12942, 17684; pp. lowen, P. Plowman, B. v. 95. — A. S. leogan, pt. t. leag, pp. lügen; Grein, ii. 176. + Du. liegen, pt. t. loog, pp. gelogen. + Icel. ljuga, pt. t. laug, pp. loginn. + Dan. lyve, pt. t. løj, pp. løjat. + Swed. ljuga, pt. t. lög, pp. lügen. + Goth. liugan, pt. t. lauh, pp. lugans. + G. lügen, pt. t. log, pp. gelogen. β. All from Teut. base LUG, to lie; Fick, iii. 275. Cf. Russ. lgate, luigate, to lie; loje, a lie. Der. lie, sb. = A. S. lyge, lige, Grein, ii. 199; li-ar = A. S. leogere; ly-ing, ly-ing-ly.

LIEF, dear, beloved, loved, pleasing. (E.) Now chiefly used in the phr. 'I had as lief,' which is common in Shak.; see Hamlet, iii. 2. 4. M. E. lief, leef, lef, Chaucer, C. T. 3790; vocative and pl. leue (= leue), id. 1138; compar. leuer (= lever), id. 295; superl. leuest (= lewest), P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 16. — A. S. leof, liof, vocative leofa, pl. leofe, compar. leofra, superl. leofesta, Grein, ii. 174, 175 (a common word). + Du. lief, dear. + Icel. ljúfr. + Swed. ljuf. + Goth. liubs. + G. lieb, M. H. G. liep, O. H. G. liup. [So also Russ. lioboi, agreeable, from liobo, it pleases; cf. liobite, to love.] β. All from Teut. base LUB, to be pleasing to; cf. Lat. libet, libet, it pleases; Skt. lubh, to covet, desire. — ✓LUBH, to desire. Der.

(from the same root) love, leave (2). lib-eral, lib-erty, lib-erate, lib-ertine, lib-idinous; also de-liv-er; perhaps clever.

LIEGE, faithful, subject, true, bound by feudal tenure. (F.,—O. H. G.) a. The etymology is disguised by a change both of sense and usage. We now say 'a liege vassal,' i. e. one bound to his lord; it is easy to see that this sense is due to a false etymology which connected the word with Lat. ligatus, bound, pp. of ligare, to bind; see Ligament.

β. But the fact is, that the older phrase was 'a liege lord,' and the older sense 'a free lord,' in exact contradiction to the popular notion.

γ. The popular notion even corrupted the spelling; the M. E. spelling lege or liege being sometimes altered to lige or lyge. The phrase 'my lege man' occurs twice, and 'my lyge men' once, in Will. of Palerne, 1174, 2663, 3004. The expression 'oure lyge lord' occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 457, l. 7, and in Chaucer, C. T. 12271 (Six-text, C. 337, where the MSS. have lige, lege, liege). In Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, v. 165, we find both the old spelling and the old sense. 'Bot and I lif in lege pouste'—but if I survive in free and undisputed sovereignty or power.—O. F. lige, 'liege, leall, or loyall; Prince lige, a liege lord; Seigneur lige, the same;' Cot. Also (better) spelt liege in the 12th cent. (Litttré.)—O. H. G. ledec, ledic, also lidic, lidig (mod. G. ledig), free, unfettered, free from all obligations. The expression 'ligius homo, quod Teutonice dicitur ledigman' occurs A. D. 1253; Ducange. 'A liege lord' seems to have been a lord of a free band; and his lieges, though serving under him, were privileged men, free from all other obligations; their name being due to their freedom, not to their service.

B. Further; the O. H. G. lidic is, properly, free of one's way, free to travel where one pleases, from O. H. G. lidan, to go, depart, experience, take one's way; cognate with A. S. lidan, to go, travel. Also, the cognate Icel. lidugr, ready, free, is from Icel. lida, to travel; see Lead (1).

¶ For further information on this difficult word, see Diez, Scheler, and Litttré; and the O. Du. ledig, free, in Kilian. Some have observed that the O. Du. spelling of leec for ledig throws an additional light upon the word; to which may be further added that the M. E. spelling lege is of some importance. Diez and Scheler, who incline to the derivation given above, would (I should suppose) have been confirmed in their opinion had they known that form. 'Leecheyt [= ledigheid] is moeder van alle quaetheiden'—idleness is mother of all vices; O. Du. Proverb, cited in Oudemans. Ducange's attempt to connect the word with Low Lat. litus, a kind of vassal, is a failure; and all other attempts are worse.

LIEGER, LEIGER, an ambassador; see Ledger.

LIEN, a legal claim, a charge on property. (F.,—L.) A legal word; not in Todd's Johnson; preserved as a law term from olden times.—F. lien, 'a band, or tie, . . . anything that fasteneth or fettereth;' Cot.—Lat. ligamen, a band, tie.—Lat. ligare, to tie; see Ligament.

LIEU, place, stead. (F.,—L.) In the phr. 'in lieu of'—in place of; Temp. i. 2. 123.—F. lieu, 'a place, roome;' Cot. Spelt liu in the 10th cent. (Litttré.)—Lat. locum, acc. of locus, a place; see Locus. Der. lieu-tenant, q. v.

LIEUTENANT, a deputy, vicegerent, &c. (F.,—L.) M. E. lieutenant, Gower, C. A. i. 73; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 47.—F. lieutenant, 'a lieutenant, deputy;' Cot.—Lat. locum-tenentem, acc. of locum-tenens, one who holds another's place, a deputy.—Lat. locum, acc. of locus, a place; and tenens, pres. part. of tenere, to hold. See Locus and Tenant. Der. lieutenancy. [†]

LIFE, animate existence. (E.) M. E. lif, lyf, gen. case lyues, dat. lyue, pl. lyues (with u = v); Chaucer, C. T. 2757, 2778, 14100.—A. S. lif, gen. lifes, dat. life, pl. lifas; Grein, ii. 183.—Icel. lif, lifi. + Dan. liv. + Swed. lif. + O. H. G. lîp, leip, life; mod. G. leib, the body. Cf. Du. lijf, the body. β. All from Teut. base LĪB, life; Fick, iii. 271. This sb. is a derivative from Teut. base LĪB, to remain, occurring in Icel. lifja, to be left, to remain, to live, A. S. lifian, to be remaining, to live; O. H. G. lîban, lîpan, only used in the comp. belîban, M. H. G. bleiben, G. bleiben, to remain, be left. γ. Perhaps the sense 'remain' arose from that of 'to cleave;' and thus life may be connected with Lithuanian lîpti, to cleave, stick, Skt. lîp, to anoint, smear, Gk. δαίφειν, to anoint; the form of the European root being LIP; Fick, i. 754. Der. life-blood, life-boat, life-estate, life-guard, q. v., life-hold, life-insurance, &c.; also life-less, life-less-ly, life-less-ness, life-long. Also live, live-ly, live-lihood, live-long. From the same source, leave (1). And see Alive.

LIFEGUARD, a body-guard. (Hybrid; E. and F.) 'The Cherethites were a kind of lifeguard to king David;' Fuller, Pisgah Sight of Palestine, ed. 1650, p. 217. From Life and Guard. ¶ See Trench, Eng. Past and Present. The word is not borrowed from the G. leibgarde, a body-guard; and it is much to the purpose to observe that, if it were so, it would make no difference; for the G. leib is the G. spelling of the word which we spell life, despite the difference in sense. The M. H. G. lîp meant 'life' as well as 'body.'

LIFELONG, lasting for a life-time. (E.) Also spelt livelong, as in Shak.; see Livelong. Lifelong is not in Todd's Johnson; and is, in fact, a mere modern revival of the orig. form of livelong, differentiated from it as to sense.

LIFT (1), to elevate, raise. (Scand.) M. E. liften, to raise; Prompt. Parv. p. 303; P. Plowman, B. v. 359; Havelok, 1028; spelt leften (leftenn), Ormulum, 2658, 2744, 2755, 6141, 7528, &c. The orig. sense is to raise aloft, to exalt into the air.—Icel. lyfta (pronounced lyfta), to lift; from loft, the air. + Dan. løfte, to lift; from loft, a loft, a cock-loft, orig. 'the air.' + Swed. lyfta, to lift; from loft, a loft, garret, orig. 'the air.' Thus lift is a mere deriv. of Loft, q. v. The i = y, mutation of u (o).

LIFT (2), to steal. (E.) 'But if night-robbers lift [steal from] the well-stored hive;' Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 228, l. 916. The sb. lifter, a thief, occurs in Shak., Troil. i. 2. 129. This verb is unconnected with the verb above, though doubtless early confused with it. Strictly, it should be lift, the -t denoting the agent, and rightly employed in the sb. only. We still speak of 'a shop-lifter.' An E. word, but only preserved in Gothic, Gk., and Latin. Cf. Goth. hlifan, to steal, 'to lift,' Matt. vi. 19, Mk. x. 19; Lu. xviii. 20; whence the sb. hliftus (= hlif-tus), a thief, John, x. 1. β. The Goth. hlifan is exactly equivalent to the cognate Lat. clepere, to steal; and Goth. hliftus = Gk. κλέπτης, a thief, connected with κλέπτειν (base κλέπ-), to steal; the form of the root being KLAP = KARP.

LIGAMENT, a band, the membrane connecting the moveable bones. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave.—F. ligament, 'a ligament, or ligature;' Cot.—Lat. ligamentum, a tie, band.—Lat. liga-re, to tie; with suffix -mentum. Root uncertain. Der. ligament-al, ligament-ous. From Lat. ligare we have also ligature, liable, lictor, lien, ally, alligation.

LIGATURE, a bandage. (F.,—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave.—F. ligature, 'a ligature, tie, band;' Cot.—Lat. ligatura, a binding, bandage; properly fem. of fut. part. of ligare, to bind; see Ligament.

LIGHT (1), illumination. (E.) M. E. light, Chaucer, C. T. 1989, 1991.—A. S. leoht, Grein, ii. 177; cf. lġhtan, lġhtan, to shine, id. ii. 200. [The vowel i = A. S. i = y, due to mutation of eó = Goth. iu.] + Du. licht. + G. licht. O. H. G. liuhta. + Goth. liuhtath, light. β. Observe that the t is a mere suffix; A. S. leoht = O. H. G. liuhta = Goth. liuht-ath; thus the base is LUH, to shine, Fick, iii. 274. γ. Neglecting the final t, we have cognate words in Icel. ljós (= liuh-sa), light, Icel. logi, a flame (whence Lowland Scotch lowe, a flame), Lat. lux (= luc-sa), light, Lat. lumen (= luc-men), light, luna (= luc-na), the moon; with numerous connected terms, such as Lat. lucubrare, lucus, lustrare, illustris, &c. So also Gk. λευκός, white, bright, λύχνος (= lux-vos), a light, lamp, &c.

δ. All from ✓RUK, to shine; cf. Skt. ruch, to shine, whence ruch, light, splendour, the exact equivalent of Lowland Scotch lowe. Der. light-house. Also light, verb, M. E. lighten, Chaucer, C. T. 2428, A. S. lġhtan, lġhtan, Grein, ii. 200; whence light-er, sb. Also light-en (1), q. v., light-ning, q. v. Connected words are luc-id, luc-i-fer, e-lucidate, il-lu-minate, lu-nar, lu-natic, luc-vibration, lea (q. v.), lustre, il-lustrate, il-lustrious, lu-minous, lynx, &c.

LIGHT (2), active, not heavy, unimportant. (E.) M. E. light, Chaucer, C. T. 9087; lightly, adv., id. 1463.—A. S. leoht, adj., Grein, ii. 176. Here eó = i; and leoht = lġht. + Du. ligt. + Icel. lġtr. + Dan. let. + Swed. lät. + Goth. lehts, 2 Cor. i. 17. + G. leicht, M. H. G. lġhte, O. H. G. lġhti, lġht. β. The t is a suffix (= -ta), and the base lġh appears to be equivalent to link, the long i being due to loss of n; also, the form link is a nasalised form for lah, answering to the Gk. λαχ-, appearing in ē-lax-us, light. 'Lġhta stands, according to rule, for lġh-ta, and comes from the same root as Lithuanian lengvas, light, Church Slavonic lġgkŭ, light [Russ. lġgkŭ], Gk. ē-lax-us and Skt. laghu, light;' Fick, iii. 264. To which may be added Lat. levis, light, usually supposed to stand for leguis, from the same base.

γ. The common ground-form is LAGHU or RAGHU, light, as evidenced by the preceding forms, esp. by the Gk. and Skt.; to which add Skt. raghu, the Vedic form for laghu; Benfey, p. 753.

δ. All from the ✓RAGH, to spring, run, hasten; appearing in Skt. rangh, to move swiftly, langh, to jump over, ramh, to move swiftly; Irish lingim, I spring, skip, bound. See Fick, i. 190. Thus the orig. sense is 'springy,' active, nimble; from which the other senses are easily deduced. Der. light-ly, light-ness, lights, q. v., light-fingered, light-headed, light-hearted, light-minded, &c.; light-some, Rom. of the Rose, l. 936; light-some-ness, light-en (2), q. v.; light-er, q. v. From the same root we have (from Lat. lev-is) lev-ant, lev-er, lev-ity, lev-y, al-lev-i-ate, &c. And see Long.

LIGHT (3), to settle, alight, descend. (E.) M. E. lighten, lihten; 'adun heo gunnen lihten' = they alighted down; Layamon, 26337; 'he lihtie a-doun of lyard' = he lighted down from his horse, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 64. β. The sense is to relieve a horse of his burden, and the word is identical with M. E. lighten in the sense of to relieve of a burden. The derivation is from the adj. light, not heavy; see Light (2). γ. When a man alights from a horse, he not only relieves the horse of his burden, but completes the action by descending or alighting on the earth; hence light came to be used in the sense of to descend, settle, or with the prep. on. 'New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;' Hamlet, iii. 4. 59; 'this murderous shaft Hath yet not lighted;' Macb. ii. 3. 148. Hence this verb is really a doublet of Lighten (2), q. v., as well as of Lighten (3). Der. light-er, q. v. And see Alight, verb.

LIGHTEN (1), to illuminate, flash. (E.) The force of the final -en is somewhat dubious, but appears to be due rather to the intransitive than to the transitive form. 1. Intrans. to shine as lightning; 'it lightens,' Romeo, ii. 2. 120. M. E. lightenen, Prompt. Parv. p. 304; more correctly, lightnen, best shown by the derived word lightning. In this word light-n-en the n gives the word a neuter sense, the sense being 'to become light'; this is clearly evidenced by the use of the same letter in Meoso-Gothic, which has full-n-an, to become full, and bund-n-an, to become unbound; see note on Goth. verbs in -nan in Skeat's Goth. Dict., p. 303.

2. Trans. The trans. use is in Shak. Hen. VIII, ii. 3. 79, Titus And., ii. 3. 227, with the sense 'to illuminate.' This is really no more than the intrans. verb incorrectly used. The correct trans. form is to light, as in: 'the eye of heaven that lights the lower world;' Rich. II, iii. 2. 38. This is the M. E. lighten, lightē (where the final -en is merely the mark of the infin. mood, often dropped); Chaucer, C. T. 2428. = A. S. leohtan, to illuminate; Grein, ii. 178. = A. S. leoht, light; see Light (1). Der. lightn-ing.

LIGHTEN (2), to make lighter, alleviate. (E.) The final -en is merely formative, as in strength-en, length-en, short-en, weak-en. It is intended to have a causal force, though, curiously enough, its original sense was such as to make the verb intrans. or passive, as noticed under Lighten (1). The true form should rather have been to light merely, as it answers to M. E. lighten, lightē (in which the final -en is merely the mark of the infin. mood, and is often dropped). 'Lyghteyn, or make weyhtys [weights] more esy, lightyn burdens, heuy weightis, Allevio;' Prompt. Parv. p. 304. 'To lihten over heaved' = to take the weight [of hair] off your head; Ancræn Riwle, p. 422. From the adj. light; see Light (2), and Light (3). So also Dan. lette, to lighten, from let, light.

LIGHTEN (3), to descend, settle, alight. (E.) 'O Lord, let thy mercy lighten upon us;' Te Deum, in the Prayer-book (Lat. 'fiat'). Here lighten is a mere extension of Light (3), q. v.

LIGHTER, a boat for unloading ships. (Du.) In Skinner, ed. 1671; and in Pope, Dunciad, ii. 287. Not really E., but borrowed from Du. ligter, a lighter (Sewel); spelt lichter in Skinner. Hence also lighter-man, from Du. ligterman, a lighter-man (Sewel). = Du. ligt, light (not heavy); see Light (2). ¶ Thus the sense is the same as if the word had been purely English; it means 'unloader;' from the use made of these vessels. Der. lighter-man (as above); lighter-age. [†]

LIGHTNING, an illuminating flash. (E.) See Lighten (1). LIGHTS, lungs. (E.) M. E. lightes, Destruction of Troy, 10705; pa lihts=the lights, Layamon, 6499, answering to A. S. ðā lihtan, i. e. the light things. So called from their lightness. So also Russ. legkoe, lights; from legkii, light. See Light (2).

LIGN-ALOES, a kind of tree. (Hybrid; L. and Gk.) In Numbers, xxiv. 6 (A. V.) 'A kind of odoriferous Indian tree, usually identified with the Aquilaria Agallochum which supplies the aloes-wood of commerce. Our word is a partial translation of the Lat. lignum aloes, Gk. ἐλαλός. The bitterness of the aloes is proverbial;' Bible Wordbook, ed. Eastwood and Wright. Chaucer has: 'As bitter . . . as is lignē aloes, or galle;' Troilus, iv. 1137. = Lat. lignum, wood; and aloes, of the aloes, gen. case of aloē, the aloes, a word borrowed from Gk. ἀλόη, the aloes. ¶ On the complete difference between aloe and aloe-wood, see note to Aloe. And see Ligneous.

LIGNEOUS, woody, wooden, wood-like. (L.) 'Of a more lignēous nature;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 504. Formed by mere change of Lat. -us into E. -ous (as in ingenious, arduous, and many others), from Lat. lignēus, wooden. = Lat. lignum, wood; a word of disputed origin. Der. from crude form ligni- (for ligno-) we have ligni-fer-ous = wood-producing (from ferre, to bear); ligni-fy = to turn to wood; and from the stem lign- has been formed lign-ite, coal retaining the texture of wood, where the suffix -ite is Gk.

LIGULE, a strap-shaped petal. (L.) A mod. botanical term; also applied to the flat part of the leaf of a grass. = Lat. ligula, a little tongue, a tongue-shaped extremity; also spelt lingula. Dimin. of lingua, a tongue; see Lingual.

FIGURE, a precious stone. (L., -Gk.) In the Bible, A. V., Ex. xxxiii. 19, xxxix. 12. 'Our translators have followed the Septuagint λιγύριον and Vulgate ligurius in translating the Heb. leshem by figure, which is a precious stone unknown in modern mineralogy;' Bible Wordbook, by Eastwood and Wright. = Lat. ligurius. = Gk. λιγύριον, also spelt λιγγούριον, λιγκούριον, λυγκούριον, a sort of gem; acc. to some, a reddish amber, acc. to others, the hyacinth (Liddell).

LIKE (1), similar, resembling. (E.) M. E. lyk, lik; Chaucer, C. T. 414, 1973. = A. S. lic, in comp. ge-lic, like, in which form it is common; Grein, i. 422. The prefix ge- was long retained in the weakened form i- or y-; Chaucer has ylliche as an adv., C. T. 2528. + Du. ge-lyk, like; where ge- is a prefix. + Icel. líkr, glíkr, like; where g- = ge-, prefix. + Dan. lig. + Swed. lik. + Goth. ga-leiks, Mark, vii. 8. + G. gleich, M. H. G. ge-lich, O. H. G. ka-lík. β. All from Teut. base GA-LIKA, adj., signifying 'resembling in form,' and derived from the Teut. sb. LIKA, a form, shape, appearing in A. S. lic, a form, body (whence Liich-gate), O. Sax. lik, Icel. lík, Goth. leik, the body, &c. Hence the form of the Teut. base is LIK, perhaps with the sense 'to resemble;' Fick, iii. 268.

γ. A further trace of the word perhaps appears in Gk. τη-λίς-ος, such, of such an age, Lat. ta-li-s, such, Russ. to-lik-i, such, Lat. qua-li-s, of what sort. Der. like-ly, M. E. likly, Chaucer, C. T. 1174; like-li-hood, M. E. liklihed, id. 13526; like-li-ness, M. E. liklines, id. 8272; like-ness, M. E. liknes, P. Plowman, B. i. 113, formerly i-liknes, Ancræn Riwle, p. 230, from A. S. ge-licnes; like-wise, short for in like wise (see Wise, sb.); like (2), q. v.; like, sb.; lik-en, q. v. δ. All adjectives ending in -ly have adopted this ending from A. S. -lic, lit. 'like'; all adverbs in -ly take this suffix from A. S. -lice, the same word with the adverbial final -e added. The word like-ly = like-like, a reduplication.

LIKE (2), to approve, be pleased with. (E.) The mod. sense is evolved by an alteration in the construction. The M. E. verb lyken (or liken) signified 'to please,' and was used impersonally. We have, in fact, changed the phrase it likes me into I like, and so on throughout. Both senses are in Shak.; see Temp. iii. 1. 43, Hamlet, v. 2. 276. Chaucer has only the impers. verb. 'And if you liketh' = and if it please you; C. T. 779; still preserved in the mod. phrase 'if you like.' 'That oughte liken you' = that ought to please you; id. 13866. = A. S. lician, to please, rarely lican; Grein, ii. 182. The lit. sense is to be like or suitable for. = A. S. lic, ge-lic, like; see Like (1). + Du. lijken, to be like, resemble, seem, suit; from ge-lyk, like. + Icel. líka, to like; from líkr, like. + Goth. leikan, ga-leikan, to please; from ga-leiks, like. + M. H. G. lichen, ge-lichen, to be like; from ge-lich, like (G. gleich). Der. lik-ing, M. E. likinge, P. Plowman, B. xi. 20, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 271. Also well-liking = well-pleasing, Ps. xcii. 13, Prayer-book.

LIKEN, to consider as similar, to compare. (Scand.) M. E. liknen. 'The water is likened to the world;' P. Plowman, B. viii. 39, A. ix. 34. 'And lyknez hit to heuen lyte' = and likens it to the light of heaven; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 500. But the true sense is probably intransitive, as in the case of Goth. verbs in -nan, and several Swed. verbs in -na; and the peculiar use and form of the word is Scand., not E. It appears to be intrans. in Allit. Poems, B. 1064. = Swed. likna, (1) to resemble, (2) to liken; from lík, like. + Dan. ligne, (1) to resemble, (2) to liken; from lig, like. See Like (1).

LILAC, a flowering shrub. (Span., - Turkish, - Pers.) Spelt lilac in Kersey, ed. 1715. = Span. lilac, lila, a lilac. Of Oriental origin. = Turk. leilac, a lilac; Zenker's Turk. Dict. p. 797, col. 3. Borrowed from the Pers. lilaj, lilanj, or lilang, of which the proper sense is the indigo-plant; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1282. Here the initial l stands for n, and the above forms are connected with Pers. níl, the indigo-plant; whence nílak (dimin. form), blueish; Rich. Dict. pp. 1619, 1620. Cf. Skt. níla, dark-blue, níli, the indigo-plant. [†]

LILY, a bulbous plant. (L., -Gk.) M. E. lilie; Chaucer, C. T. 15555, 15559. = A. S. lilie, pl. lilian; Matt. vi. 28; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Herbarum. = Lat. lilium; Matt. vi. 28. = Gk. λείριον, a lily; the change of Gk. ρ to Lat. l being quite in accordance with usual laws. ¶ The more usual Gk. name is κρίνον, as in Matt. vi. 28.

Der. lili-ac-e-ous = Lat. liliceus.

LIMB (1), a jointed part of the body, member, branch of a tree. (E.) M. E. lim, pl. limmes; Chaucer, C. T. 4881, 9332. = A. S. lim, pl. leomu; Grein, ii. 188. + Icel. limr. + Dan. and Swed. lim. We also find Icel. lim, foliage of a tree, pl. limar, boughs; limi, a rod; Dan. lime, a twig.

β. The orig. sense seems to have been a twig, a branch broken off, fragment; from A. S. lemian or leman, to oppress, orig. to break, Grein, ii. 167; cf. Icel. lemja, to beat, break (=slang E. lam, to thrash); Russ. lomate, lomile, to break, whence lom', fragments, débris. From Teut. base LAM, to break; see Lame. See Fick, iii. 267. Der. limber (2), strong-limbed, &c.

LIMB (2), the edge or border of a sextant, &c. (L.) 'Limb, in mathematics, the outermost border of an astrolabe; . . . in astronomy, the utmost border of the disk or body of the sun or moon, when either is in eclipse;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Kersey also gives the form limbus.—Lat. limbus, a border, edging, edge. Cf. Skt. lamb, to fall, & to hang downwards; from the same root as lap (2), lobe, lip; see Lap (2), Lobe. Cotgrave gives O. F. limbe de bouteille, 'the mouth or brink of a bottle.' Doublet, limbo.

LIMBECK, the same as Alembic, q. v.

LIMBER (1), flexible, pliant. (E.) Not found very early. 'With limber vows;' Wint. Tale, i. 2. 47. Richardson quotes an earlier and better example. 'Ne yet the bargeman, that doth rowe With long and limber oare;' Turberville, A Myrrour of the Fall of Pride. Closely allied to limp, flexible, and similarly formed from the same Teut. base LAP, to hang loosely down, the p being weakened to b for ease of pronunciation. The suffix -er is adjectival, as in bitt-er, fai-r (= A. S. fæg-er), &c.; see Mätzner, Engl. Gramm. i. 435; it answers to the Aryan suffix -ra. See Limp (1).

LIMBER (2), part of a gun-carriage consisting of two wheels and a shaft to which horses are attached. (Scand.) Taken up from prov. E. 'Limbers, thills or shafts (Berkshire); Limmers, a pair of shafts (North);' Grose's Prov. Eng. Glossary, ed. 1790. It is obvious that b is excrement, and the form limmers is the older one. β . Further, limm-er-s is a double plural, like child-ren (= child-er-en). The true orig. singular is limm, a shaft or thill of a cart, preserved only in the old sb. limm-er, a thill-horse, given in Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave; he translates it into F. by limonier, but the resemblance between the words is purely accidental; see F. limon in Littré. [That is, it is accidental unless the F. limon, a word of somewhat doubtful origin, be orig. Scandinavian.] The pl. form limm-er-s is explained by the etymology.—Icel. limar, boughs, branches, pl. of lim, foliage, a word closely related to limr, a limb. The latter word is cognate with A. S. lim, a limb, also used in the sense of a 'branch of a tree' at the earliest period; see Beowulf, ed. Grein, l. 97. See Limb (1). ¶ We may conclude that the original cart-shafts were merely rough branches. Der. limber, veb.

LIMBO, LIMBUS, the borders of hell. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, v. 3. 261. The orig. phrase was in limbo, Com. Errors, iv. 2. 32; or more fully, in limbo patrum, Hen. VIII, v. 4. 67.—Lat. limbo (governed by the prep. in), abl. case of limbus, a border; see Limb (2). 'The limbus patrum, in the language of churchmen, was the place bordering on hell, where the saints of the Old Testament remained till Christ's descent into hell;' Schmidt. β . The word limbo came to be used as a nominative all the more readily, because the Ital. word is limbo, derived (not from the ablative, but) from the acc. limbum of the same Lat. word. Hence Milton's 'limbo large and broad;' P. L. iii. 495. But it began its career in E. as a Latin word. Doublet, limb (2).

LIME (1), viscous substance, bird-lime, mortar, oxide of calcium. (E.) The orig. sense is 'viscous substance.' M. E. lym, liim, lyme. 'Lyme, to take with byrds [to catch birds with], viscus; Lyme, or mortare, Calx;' Prompt. Parv. p. 305. And see Chaucer, C. T. 16274.—A. S. lim, bitumen, cement; Grein, ii. 188. + Du. lijm, glue, lime. + Icel. lím, glue, lime, chalk. + Dan. liim, glue. + Swed. lim, glue. + G. leim, glue; M. H. G. lím, bird-lime. + Lat. limus, mud, slime. β . Formed with suffixed -m (= Aryan -ma) from the base LI, to pour, smear, appearing in Lat. li-nerre, to smear, daub, Russ. lite, to pour, flow, Skt. li, to melt, to adhere; allied to Skt. ri, to distil. —✓R, to pour, distil. Fick, i. 412; iii. 268. See Liquid, Rivulet. Der. lime, verb, Ancren Riwle, p. 226, Hamlet, iii. 3. 68; lim-y; lime-kiln, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 86; lime-stone; lime-twig, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 189; lime-rod, Chaucer, C. T. 14694.

LIME (2), the linden-tree. (E.) In Pope, Autumn, 25. A corruption of the earlier spelling line. 'Linden-tree or Line-tree;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'In the line-grove' (modern edd. lime-grove); Shak. Temp. v. 10. The change from line to lime does not seem to be older than about A. D. 1700. The form lime is in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. β . Again, line is a corruption of lind, the older name, by loss of final d. See Linden. Der. lime-tree.

LIME (3), a kind of citron. (F.,—Pers.) 'Lime, a sort of small lemon;' Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. lime, a lime; Hamilton.—Pers. límá, a lemon, citron; Rich. Dict. p. 1282. Also called límín; see Lemon. Dozy gives Arab. límak, a lime; made from a collective form lím.

LIMIT, to assign a boundary; a boundary. (F.,—L.) The verb is in older use in E. than the sb. limit, though really the younger word. M. E. limiten, to limit. 'To lymyte or assigne us;' Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus, Six-text, B. 2956. [Hence the sb. limit-or, Chaucer, C. T. 209, 6460.] = F. limiter, 'to limit;' Cot. = F. limite, a limit; id. = Lat. limitem, acc. of limes, a boundary; akin to Lat. limes, a threshold. Etym. doubtful; see Curtius, l. 456; but prob. allied to Lat. limus, transverse. Der. limit-ed, limit-ed-ly, limit-ed-ness, limit-less, limit-able; also limit-at-ion = F. limitation, 'a limitation' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. limitationem.

LIMN, to illuminate, paint. (F.,—L.) M. E. limnen, a contracted form of luminen. 'Lymnyd, or lumynid, as bookys;' Prompt. Parv. p. 317. 'Lymnour, luminour, Alluminator, illuminator;' id. β . Again, luminen is short for enluminen, by loss of the prefix. Chaucer has enlumined = enlightened; C. T. 7909. = O. F. enluminer, 'to illuminate, enlighten; . . . also to sleek, burnish; also, to limu;' Cot. = Lat. illuminare, to enlighten; see Illuminate. Der. limn-er = M. E. luminour, as above, short for enluminour; 'Ealumineur de livres, a burnisher of books, an alluminer;' Cot.

LIMP (1), flaccid, flexible, pliant, weak. (E.) 'Limp, limber, supple;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Scarce in books, but known to our mod. E. dialects, and doubtless an old E. word. A nasalised form from the base LIP, which is a weakened form of Teut. LAP, to hang loosely down, whence the sb. lap, a flap; see Lap (2). β . Allied words are Icel. limpa, limpness, weakness; Icel. Dict. Appendix, p. 776; 'Swiss. lampig, lampelig, faded, loose, flabby, hanging,' and similar words, cited in Wedgwood. Also Bavarian lampecht, flaccid, lampende Ohren, hanging ears (answering to E. lop-ears, as in 'a lop-eared rabbit'); from the verb lampen, to hang loosely down; Schmeller, Bav. Dict. 1474. Also Skt. lamba, depending, lambana, falling; from the verb lamb, to fall, hang downwards. γ . Without the nasal we find W. lleipr, flaccid, flabby, llibin, limber, soft, drooping, llipa, limp, flabby. Thus the base is (as was said) the Teut. LAP, to hang down. —✓RAB, RAMB, to hang down; cf. Skt. ramb, to hang down, Vedic form of lamb cited above; Fick, i. 192. Der. limp-ness; cf. limber (1).

LIMP (2), to walk lamely. (E.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 2. 130. Not easily traced earlier, and the orig. form is uncertain. Probably the same as A. S. lemp-healt, limp-halting, halting, lame, given in Lye, with a reference that I cannot verify; the word wants confirmation. β . Such confirmation appears to some extent in M. H. G. limphin, to limp; whence lempel, hastening in a limping manner. Possibly connected with Limp (1), rather than (as some think) with Lame. ¶ We also find Low G. lumpen, lunschen, to limp (Bremen Wörterbuch); Dan. dial. lumsa, to limp, hobble (Aasen); Swed. dial. loma, lomma, to walk with heavy steps, lumra, to limp. Note also prov. E. lumper, lumber, to stumble, lummack, to tumble (Suffolk); Halliwell. These words can hardly be connected with limp, on account of the difference of the vowel. They seem rather to go with Lump, q. v. [†]

LIMPET, a small shell-fish, which cleaves to rocks. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) Cotgrave explains O. F. berdin by 'the shellfish called a lympyne or a lempet.' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 9, translates Lat. mituli by 'limpins.' There is a missing link here, but there can be small doubt that the word came to us, through a F. form *lempette or *lempine (not recorded); from the Lat. lepad-, crude form of lepas, a limpet. Cf. Span. lepada, a limpet. [The insertion of m causes no difficulty; cf. F. lambruche, the wild vine, from Lat. labrusca.] = Gk. λεπας, a shell-fish, limpet; allied to λεπας, a scale; see Leper, Leaf.

LIMPID, pure, clear, shining. (F.,—L.) In Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. = F. limpide, 'clear, bright;' Cot. = Lat. limpidus, limpid, clear. Allied to Lat. lymphæ, pure water; see Lymph. β . Further allied to Gk. λαμπρός, bright, λάμπειν, to shine. From a base LAP, to shine; cf. Lithuanian lėpsnà, flame, Old Prussian lopis, flame, cited by Fick, i. 750. Der. limpid-i-ty, limpid-ness.

LINCH-PIN, a pin to fasten the wheel on to the axle. (E.) Formerly also spelt lins-pin; see Kersey, ed. 1715; Coles, ed. 1684; Skinner, ed. 1671. [Linch appears to be a corrupted form, obviously by confusion with link.] The pl. linses in Will. of Shoreham's Poems, p. 109, seems to mean 'axles.'—A. S. lynis, an axle-tree, in a gloss, Wright's Voc. ii. 7. + Du. luns, a linch-pin; whence lunzen, to put the linch-pin to a wheel + Low G. lunse, a linch-pin; Bremen Wörterbuch. + G. lünse, a linch-pin. β . Cf. also Dan. lundstikke, lundstikke, lundstik, a linch-pin; O. Swed. lunta, lundsticka, a linch-pin (thre); M. H. G. lun, lune, O. H. G. luná, a linch-pin. γ . The orig. sense of lins (linch) was perhaps a rounded bar, hence, an axle; cf. Gael. lunn, the handle of an oar, a staff; Irish lung, the handle of an oar; and perhaps Icel. lunnur, a wooden roller for launching ships.

LIND, LINDEN, the lime-tree. (E.) Here (as in the case of asp-en) the true sb. is lind, whence lind-en was formed as an adjective, with the suffix -en as in gold-en, birch-en, beech-en. The true name is lind, or, in longer phrase, linden tree. (Lind was in time corrupted to line, and later to lime; see Lime (2). M. E. lind, lynd; Chaucer, C. T. 2924. = A. S. lind, Grein, ii. 128. 'Seno vel tilia, lind;' Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Arborum. Hence the adj. linden (Grein, ii. 189), as in linden bord = the linden shield, shield made of lind. + Du. línde, línde-boom. + Icel. lind. + Dan. lind, lind-træ. + Swed. lind. + G. linde, O. H. G. lindá. β . The wood is white and smooth, and much used for carved work; indeed the most usual meaning of A. S. lind is 'a shield,' i. e. one made of linden wood. The word is to be connected, accordingly, with G. gelind, gelinde, smooth, Icel. linr, smooth, soft, Lat. lensus, pliant, A.S. lūse [= linde], gentle, pliant; see Lithe.

LINE, a thread, thin cord, stroke, row, rank, verse. (L.; or F., — L.) In all senses, the word is of Lat. origin; the only difference is that, in some senses, the word was borrowed from Lat. directly, in other senses through the French. We may take them separately, as follows. 1. Line = a thin cord or rope, a thread, rope of a ship. M.E. lyne; P. Plowman, B. v. 355. — A.S. line, a cord; Grein, ii. 189. — Lat. linea, a string of hemp or flax, hempen cord; properly the fem. of adj. lineus, made of hemp or flax. — Lat. linum, flax. Prob. rather cognate with than borrowed from Gk. λίνον, flax. Root unknown. [The G. lein, &c. are probably borrowed from Latin.] 2. Line = a verse, rank, row; Chaucer, C. T. 1553; P. Plowman, B. vii. 110. — F. ligne, a line. — Lat. linea, a line, stroke, mark, line of descent; the same word as the above. Der. line, verb, in various senses; to line garments is properly to put linen inside them (see Linen); also line-ing; lineal, q. v., linear, q. v., lineage, q. v., lineament, q. v. And see linnet, linseed, linsey-woolsey, lint, de-linate.

LINEAGE, race, family, descent. (F., — L.) M.E. linage (without the medial e), Chaucer, C. T. 1552; Romance of Partenay, 5033; lignage, Gower, C. A. i. 344. — F. lignage, 'a lineage'; Cot. [Here E. ne = F. gn.] Made with suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum) from F. ligne, a line. — Lat. linea, a line; see Line.

LINEAL, belonging to a line. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 12. 'Lineally hir kinned by degrees'; Lidgate, Story of Thebes, pt. iii. ed. 1561, p. 373, col. 1. — Lat. linealis, belonging to a line. — Lat. linea, a line; see Line. Der. lineal-ly. Doublet, linear.

LINEAMENT, a feature. (F., — L.) 'In the liniamentes and favor of his visage'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 61 b. — F. lineament, 'a lineament or feature'; Cot. — Lat. lineamentum, a drawing, delineation, feature. — Lat. lineare, to draw a line; with suffix -mentum. — Lat. linea, a line; see Line.

LINEAR, consisting of lines. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. linearis, belonging to a line. — Lat. linea; see Line. Doublet, lineal, which is an older word. Der. linear-ly.

LINEN, cloth made of flax. (L.) Used as a sb., but really an adj., with adj. suffix -en as in wool-en, gold-en; the orig. sb. was lin, preserved in lin-seed. M.E. lin, sb., linen, adj. The sb. is rare. 'The bondes . . . That weren of ful strong line' = the bonds that were of very strong flax; Havelok, 539. The adj. is common. 'Clothid with lynnun cloth . . . he left the lynnyn clothing'; Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 51, 52. It was also used as a sb., as now. 'In lynnen yclothed' = clothed in linen; P. Plowman, B. i. 3. — A.S. lin, flax, linen; in comp. lin-wed, a linen garment; John, xiii. 5. Thence was formed the adj. linen, as in linen hrægl = a linen cloth, John, xiii. 4. — Lat. linum, flax; cognate with Gk. λίνον, flax. See Line. And see linseed, linnet.

LING (1), a kind of fish. (E.) 'Lyng, fysshe'; Palsgrave. Spelt leenge in Prompt. Parv. p. 296; and see Way's note. Spelt leng, Havelok, l. 832. Not found in A.S., but answering to A.S. lenga, weakened form of langa, i. e. 'the long one,' definite form of lang, long; see Long. So called from its slender shape. + Du. leng, a ling; from lang, long. + Icel. langa, a ling; from langr, long. + Norweg. langa, longa (Aasen). + Swed. långa. + G. länge, a ling; also called långfisch, i. e. long fish.

LING (2), heath. (Scand.) 'Lyng, or heth'; Prompt. Parv. p. 305; and see Way's note. 'Dede in the lyng' = lying dead on the heath; Sir Degrevant, l. 336, in Thornton Romances, ed. Halliwell. (Not A.S.) — Icel. lyng, ling, heather; Dan. lyng. + Swed. ljung, ling, heather; Swed. dial. ling (Rietz). Root unknown.

LINGER, to loiter, tarry, hesitate. (E.) 'Of lingring doutes such hope is sprong, perdie'; Surrey, Bonum est mihi, l. 10; in Tottell's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 31. Formed by adding the frequentative suffix -er or -or to the M.E. lengen, to tarry; with further thinning of e to i. This M.E. verb is by no means rare. 'I may no longer leng' = I may no longer linger; P. Plowman, B. i. 207. Cf. Will. of Palerne, 5421; Havelok, 1734. — A.S. lengan, to prolong, put off; Grein, i. 168; formed by the usual vowel-change (of a to e) from A.S. lang, long; see Long. Cf. Icel. lengja, to lengthen, from langr, long; G. verlängern, to prolong, from lang, long; Du. lengen, to lengthen, verlengen, to prolong.

LINGUAL, pertaining to the tongue. (L.) A late word, not in Todd's Johnson. Coined, as if from an adj. lingualis, from Lat. lingua, the tongue, of which the O. Lat. form was dingua (see White's Dict.); cognate with E. Tongue, q. v. Der. (from Lat. lingua) lingu-ist, q. v., language, q. v.

LINGUIST, one skilled in languages. (L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iv. 1. 57; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. Coined with suffix -ist (= Lat. -ista, from Gk. -ιστης), from Lat. lingua, the tongue; see Lingual. Der. linguist-ic, linguist-ic-s.

LINIMENT, a salve, soft ointment. (F., — L.) The word occurs 3 or 4 times in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxii. c. 21. — F. liniment, 'a liniment, a thin ointment'; Cot. — Lat. linimentum, smearing-stuff, ointment. Formed with suffix -mentum, from linere, to smear. Cf. Gk. λείβειν, to pour forth, λείβος, dripping; Skt. ri, to distil, ooze, drop; li, to melt, adhere. — ✓ RI, to distil, ooze; see Libation, Liquid, River.

LINING, a covering on the inner surface of a garment. (L.) In Shak. L. L. v. 2. 791. Formed with E. suffix -ing, from the verb to line, meaning to cover the inside of a garment with line, i. e. linen; see Line, Linen.

LINK (1), a ring of a chain, joint. (E.) In Shak. Cor. i. 1. 73. Cf. 'Trough [truth] and mercy linked in a chain'; Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii (How trough is preferred). — A.S. hlence or hlenca, an uncertain word in the passage cited by Grein, ii. 82; but one meaning was 'link,' as appears from the derived verb gehlenian in Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, ii. 343, also from the comp. sb. wal-hlenca, a slaughter-link, i. e. linked coat of mail, Grein, ii. 646. + Icel. hlekk (by assimilation for hlenkr), a link. + Dan. lenke, a chain, fetter. + Swed. länk, a link. + G. gelenk, a joint, link, ring; cf. G. lenken, to turn, bend. β. Closely connected with A.S. hlinc, a hill, but esp. a balk or boundary, a sense still preserved in mod. provincial E. linch (see Halliwell); with which cf. O. Lat. clingere, to surround. γ. The A.S. hlinc may well be connected with A.S. hring, a ring; and similarly clingere may be connected with Gk. κίρκος and Lat. circus, words cognate with A.S. hring. See Ring, Circus; of which link is little else than a third form. ¶ We can hardly connect it with Lithuan. lenkti, to bend, linkus, pliant, because the A.S. h requires an initial k in Lithuanian. Der. link, verb.

LINK (2), a torch. (Du.) 'A link or torch'; Minshew's Dict., ed. 1627. 'Links and torches'; Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 48. A corruption of lint, as it appears in lint-stock, old form of lin-stock; see Linstock. β. And again, lint is a corruption of lunt, by confusion with lint in the sense of scraped linen. A lunt is a torch, a match, a rag for lighting a fire; see Jamieson's Scot. Dict. The word (like linstock) is borrowed from Dutch. — Du. lont, a match for a gun; whence lont-stok, 'a lint-stock'; Sewel. + Dan. lunte, a match; whence lunte-stok, a linstock. + Swed. lunta, a match, an old bad book (fit to be burnt); whence luntstake, a linstock; O. Swed. lunta, 'funis ignarius,' Ihre. Der. lin-stock.

LINNET, a small singing-bird. (F., — L.) M.E. lynnet, Court of Love, ed. 1561, 5th stanza from end. — F. linotte, 'a linnet'; Cot. [So called from feeding on the seed of flax and hemp, as is clearly shewn by similar names in other languages, e.g. G. hänfling, a linnet, from hanf, hemp, G. lein-finke, a linnet (cited by Wedgwood), lit. a lin-finch, flax-finch.] — F. lin, flax. — Lat. linum, flax; see Linen, Line. ¶ The E. name is lintwhite, Scotch lintquhit; see Complaint of Scotland, ed. Murray, p. 39, l. 24. From A.S. linetwige, a linnet; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Avium. This name is also (probably) from Lat. linum, flax. So also W. llinos, a linnet; lin, flax. [†]

LINSEED, flax-seed. (Hybrid; L. and E.) M.E. lin-seed; spelt lynnse-seed in P. Plowman, C. xiii. 190; linseed (to translate O. F. lynois) in Walter de Bibbesworth; Wright's Vocab. i. 156. From M.E. lin = A.S. lin, flax, borrowed from Lat. linum, flax; and E. seed. See Line, Linen, and Seed. Der. linseed-oil, linseed-cake.

LINSEY-WOOLSEY, made of linen and wool mixed. (Hybrid; L. and E.) Used facetiously in Shak. All's Well, iv. 1. 13; Minshew (ed. 1627) has: 'linsie-woolsie, i. e. of linnen and woollen.' Made up from M.E. lin, linen; and E. wool; with -sey as a suffix twice over. See Linen and Wool.

LINSTOCK, LINTSTOCK, a stick to hold a lighted match. (Du.) In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 188. 'Lint-stock, a carved stick (about half a yard) with a cock at one end to hold the gunner's match, and a sharp pike at the other, to stick it anywhere'; Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. — Du. lontstok, 'a lint-stock'; Sewel. — Du. lont, a match; and stok, a stick, for which see Stock. + Dan. lunte-stok, a linstock; from lunte, a match, and stok, a stick. + Swed. lunt-stake; from lunta, a match, an old bad book (fit to be burnt), and stake, a stick, candlestick. β. The derivation of Du. lont, Swed. lunta, is uncertain; but it would appear from Kilian that Du. lomp, a rag, tatter, O. Du. lompe, was also used in the same sense as lont, O. Du. lonte. And, as we find in the Teutonic languages the occasional interchange of mp with nh, nt (cf. E. hunch = hunk with hump, and link (2) with lint in lint-stock) we may perhaps suppose that O. Du. lonte, a match, rag = O. Du. lompe, a rag, tatter; and that Swed. lunta, a match = Swed. lumpor, rags (only used in the plural). See Ihre, s. v. lunta. γ. If so, we may further regard Du. lompe, a tatter, as a nasalised form of Du. lap, a remnant, shred, rag, tatter, which is cognate with E. lap; see Lap (2).

LINT, scraped linen. (L.) 'Lynt, schauynge of linnen clothe, Carpea'; Prompt. Parv. p. 306. Lye gives A.S. linet, flax; but without a reference. However, it is easily concluded that lint was borrowed directly from Lat. lintheum, a linen cloth. — Lat. lintheus, made of linen. — Lat. linum, flax. See Line, Linen.

LINTEL, the head-piece of a door or casement. (F., —L.) M. E. lintel, lyntel; Wyclif, Exod. xii. 22. — O. F. lintel (see Littré), later F. lintheau, 'the lintell, or head-piece, over a door'; Cot. — Low Lat. lintellus, a lintel; which (as Diez suggests) stands for *limitellus, dimin. of Lat. limes (stem limit-), a boundary, hence a border; see Limit. ¶ A similar contraction is found in Span. linde = Lat. limitem, a boundary.

LION, a large and fierce quadruped. (F., —L., —Gk.) In early use. In Layamon, 1463, we find leon in the earlier text, lion in the later. A still earlier form was leo, but this was borrowed from the Latin directly; see Leo. — O. F. leon, lion. — Lat. leonem, acc. of leo, a lion. [Hardly a Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk.] — Gk. λέων, a lion. Root unknown; we also find G. lōwē, O. H. G. leo, lewo; Russ. lev; Lithuanian lėvas, lavas; Du. leeuw; &c. Cf. Heb. lābī, a lion. Der. lion-ess, As You Like It, v. 3. 115, from F. lionnesse; lion-hearted; also lion-ise, orig. to show strangers the lions which used to be kept in the Tower of London.

LIP, the muscular part forming the upper and lower parts of the mouth. (E.) M. E. lippe, Chaucer, C. T. 128, 133. — A. S. lippa, lippe. 'Labium, ufeaward lippe' = upper lip; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 42, col. 1. 'Labrum, niðera lippe' = nether lip; id. + Du. lip. + Dan. læbe. + Swed. läpp. + G. lippe, lefze; O. H. G. lefs, leffur. Further allied to Lat. lab-rum, lab-ium, the lip; Irish lab, Gael. liob, the lip; Lithuan. lupa; Pers. lab, the lip, Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 511. β. The orig. sense is 'lapper,' or that which laps or sucks up; from the Teut. base LAP, to lap = Lat. base LAB, seen in lambere, to lick. See Lap (1). Der. lipp-ed; from the same root are lab-ial, lab-iate, lamb-ent.

LIQUEFY, to become liquid. (F., —L.) Also 'to make liquid,' but this is prob. a later sense. 'The disposition not to liquefy' = to become liquid; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 840. — F. liquefier; but only found in Cot. as a pp.; he gives 'liquefié,' dissolved, melted, made liquid. β. The E. liquefy is formed by analogy with other words in -fy, which answers properly to F. -fieri = Lat. -ficare, used in place of facere, to make. But in sense the word really corresponds to Lat. liqueferi, to become liquid, used as pass. of liquefacere, to make liquid. — Lat. lique-, from liquere, to be fluid; and facere, to make. See Liquid and Fact. Der. lique-fac-tion, Minsheu, ed. 1627; formed from liquefactus, pp. of liquefacere.

LIQUESCENT, melting. (L.) Modern; in Todd's Johnson. — Lat. liquescent-, stem of pres. pt. of liquescere, to become liquid; inceptive form of liquere, to be liquid. See Liquid. Der. liquescent-y, de-liquescant.

LIQUEUR, a cordial. (F., —L.) A modern F. version of the older term Liquor, q. v.

LIQUID, fluid, moist, soft, clear. (F., —L.) 'The playne [flat] and liquide water'; Tyndal, Works, p. 265, col. 2. — F. liquide, 'liquid, moist, wet'; Cot. — Lat. liquidus, liquid, moist. — Lat. liquere, to be liquid or moist. The base is LIK, an extension of LI, to flow, melt. — √ RI, to distil; cf. Skt. ri, to distil, ooze, drop, li, to melt, dissolve, liquefy. See Rivulet. Der. liquid, sb., liquid-i-ty, liquid-ness; also liquid-ate, q. v.; liquor, q. v., lique-fy, q. v.

LIQUIDATE, to make clear, clear or pay off an account. (L.) Bailey has liquidated, vol. ii. ed. 1731. — Low Lat. liquidatus, pp. of liquidare, to clarify, make clear. — Lat. liquidus, liquid, clear; see Liquid. Der. liquid-at-ion = F. liquidation; liquidat-or.

LIQUOR, anything liquid, moisture, strong drink. (F., —L.) The word is really F., but has been accommodated to the orig. Lat. spelling; yet we retain somewhat of the F. pronunciation, the qu being sounded as c (h). M. E. licour, Chaucer, C. T. l. 3; spelt licur, Ancrer Riwle, p. 164, l. 13. — O. F. liqueur (Burguy), later liqueur, 'liquor, humor'; Cot. — Lat. liquorem, acc. of liquor, moisture. — Lat. liquere, to be liquid; see Liquid. Doublet, liqueur.

LIQUORICE, the same as Licorice, q. v.

LISP, to pronounce imperfectly, utter feebly, in speaking. (E.) M. E. lispen, lipsen; Chaucer, C. T. 266 (Six-text, A. 264, where 5 MSS. have lispes for lispes). — A. S. *wlispian, to lisp; not found, but regularly formed from the adj. wlisp, imperfect in utterance, lispings. 'Blesus, wlisp'; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. 2. + Du. lispen, to lisp. + Dan. læspe, to lisp. + Swed. läspa. + G. lispeln, to lisp, whisper. β. An imitative word, allied to Whisper, q. v. A somewhat similar word is Lat. blæsus, lispings. Der. lisp, sb.; lisp-ing-ly.

LIST (1), a stripe or border of cloth, selvage. (E.) M. E. list, liste. 'With a brode liste' = with a broad strip of cloth; P. Plowman, B. v. 524. — A. S. list; Lye gives 'list, a list of cloth, limbus panni, fimbria'; from a gloss. + Du. lijst, list, a border. + Icel. lista, list, list, selvage, border of cloth. + Dan. liste, list, fillet. + Swed. list, list, cornice. + G. leiste, list, border; O. H. G. līsta. Root uncertain; see Fick, iii. 272. Der. list (2).

LIST (2), a catalogue. (F., —G.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. i. 98, i. 2. 32. — F. liste, 'a list, roll, catalogue; also, a list, or selvage'; Cot. The older sense is the latter, viz. border; hence it came to mean a strip, roll, list of names. — O. H. G. līsta, G. leiste, a border; cognate with A. S. list, whence list, a border. See List (1). ¶ Thus list (1) and list (2) are the same word, but the latter is used in the F. sense. Der. list, verb, en-list.

LIST (3), gen. used in the pl. Lists, q. v.

LIST (4), to choose, to desire, have pleasure in. (E.) In Shak. 1 Hen. VI. i. 5. 22. Often used as an impers. verb in older authors. M. E. listen, lusten; 'if thee lust' or 'if thee list' = if it pleases thee; Chaucer, C. T. 1185; cf. l. 1054. — A. S. lystan, to desire, used impersonally; Grein, ii. 200. Formed (by regular vowel-change from u to y) from A. S. lust, pleasure; see Lust. + Du. lusten, to like; from lust, delight. + Icel. lysta, to desire; from losti, lust. + Dan. lyste; from lyst. + Swed. lysta, from lust. + Goth. luston; from lustus. + G. gelüsten; from lust. Der. list, sb., Oth. ii. i. 105. And see list-less.

LIST (5), to listen. (E.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 22. See Listen.

LISTEN, to hearken, give ear. (E.) In Shak. Macb. iv. i. 89; ii. 2. 29. We also find list, as above. So we also find both M. E. lustnen or listnen, and lusten or listen. 1. 'Or lysteneth to his reson,' P. Plowman, B. xiv. 307; where the Trinity MS. has listneth, ed. Wright, l. 9534. Here list(e)neth stands for the older listneth, the e being inserted for greater ease of pronunciation, and still retained in mod. E. spelling, though seldom sounded. We further find the pt. t. lustnede, Layamon, 26357; and the pp. lustned, id. 25128. The form lust-n-en is derived from lust-en by the insertion of n, not uncommonly thus introduced into verbs to give them a passive or neuter sense; this most clearly appears in Mosso-Gothic verbs in -nan, such as full-n-an, to become full, &c.; see Skeat's Mosso-Goth. Glossary, p. 303. 2. The form lusten is in Layamon, 919; and is derived from A. S. hlystan, hlystan, ge-hlystan, to hear, listen to; Grein, ii. 90. — A. S. hlyst, hearing, the sense of hearing; id. + Icel. hlysta, to listen; from hlyst, the ear. Cf. W. clust, the ear. β. The sb. hlyst (= hlyst) is formed with the usual formative suffix -t (= Aryan -ta) from the base HLUS, to hear; cf. A. S. hlos-nian, O. H. G. hlos-én, to hearken, Grein, ii. 88. γ. Again, HLU-S is an extension of Teut. base HLU, to hear, appearing in Goth. hliu-ma, hearing, A. S. hlū-d, loud, Icel. hlara or hlōra, to listen; and HLU = Lat. and Gk. KLU, appearing in Lat. cluere, to hear, Gk. κλυειν, to hear. — √ KRU, to hear; cf. Skt. krū, to hear. See Loud. Der. listen-er. Doublet, lurk, q. v. [†]

LISTLESS, careless, uninterested. (E.) The lit. sense is 'devoid of desire.' Not really derived from the verb to list (see List (4)), but put in place of the older form lustless. We find lystles in Prompt. Parv. p. 307; but lustles in Gower, C. A. ii. 111. Formed from lust with the suffix -less. See Lust and -less. Cf. Icel. lystarlaus, having no appetite, from lyst = losti, lust. Der. list-less-ly, list-less-ness.

LISTS, the ground enclosed for a tournament. (F., —L.) Scarcely used in the singular. Used to translate O. F. lices in the Rom. of the Rose, 4199. M. E. listes, pl. sb., the lists, Chaucer, C. T. 63, 1861. The t is excrement; the correct form would be lisses, but we often find t added after s in E. words; cf. whils-t, amongst-t, letwist-t. The sing. form would be lisse, in old spelling. — O. F. lisse, lice (mod. F. lice), 'a list or tilt-yard'; Cot. Cf. Ital. liccia, a barrier, palisade, list; Span. liza, a list for tilting; Port. lipa, lipada, list, enclosed ground in which combats are fought. — Low Lat. licia, s. pl., barriers, palisades; licia duelli, the lists. β. Etym. disputed; in spite of the difference in sense, it seems best to suppose a connection with F. lice, 'the woof or thread of the shuttle' (shuttle) in weaving' (Cot.), Ital. liccio, woof, texture, cloth, yarn, Span. lizo, a skein of silk; all due to Lat. licium, a thread, a small girdle. There seems to have been an O. Lat. phrase illicium uocare, put for in licium uocare, to call together into an enclosure; which may account for the peculiar use of the word. Root uncertain.

LITANY, a form of prayer. (F., —L., —Gk.) M. E. letanie, Ancrer Riwle, p. 20, l. 4; altered to litanie, litany, to bring it nearer to the Lat. spelling. — O. F. letanie, a litany; so spelt in the 13th century (Littré); mod. F. litanie. — Lat. litania. — Gk. λειτουργία, a prayer. — Gk. λατρεύειν, to pray. — Gk. ἀιτῶμαι, ἀισαμαι, I beg, pray, beseech; cf. αἰτός, praying; αἰτή, prayer, entreaty.

LITERAL, according to the letter. (F., —L.) 'It hath but one simple littéral sense'; Tyndal, Works, p. 1, col. 2. — O. F. lital, F. litéral, 'littéral'; Cot. — Lat. literalis, literal. — Lat. littera, a letter; see Letter. Der. literal-ly, -ness; also liter-ar-y, a late word, Englished from Lat. literarius, belonging to learning; and see Literature.

LITERATURE, the science of letters, literary productions. (F., —L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. — F. littérature, 'literature, learning'; Cot. — Lat. litteratura, scholarship; properly fem. of fut. part. corresponding to the pp. form litteratus, learned. — Lat. littera, a letter; see Letter. Der. literate = Lat. litteratus; litteratur-ed, Hen. V, iv. 7. 157.

LITHARGE, protoxide of lead. (F., -L., -Gk.) Lit. 'stone-silver.' M. E. litarge, Chaucer, C. T. 631, 16243. - F. litarge, 'lithargie, white lead;' Cot. - Lat. lithargyrus. - Gk. λίθαργυρος, litharge. - Gk. λίθo-, stem of λίθος, a stone (root unknown); and ἀργυρος, silver (see Argent).

LITHE, pliant, flexible, active. (E.) M. E. lithe, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, i. 118. - A. S. līðe (for lindē), gentle, soft; Grein, ii. 183; līð, gentle, id. 182. + G. ge-lind, ge-linde, O. H. G. lindi, soft, tender. + Lat. lentus, pliant. β. Shorter forms appear in Icel. linr, soft, Lat. lenis, gentle; see Lenient. Der. lind (the linden-tree); lithe-ness; lissom = lithe-some. And see lenity, lentisk, re-lent.

LITHOGRAPHY, writing on stone. (Gk.) Modern. Coined from Gk. λίθο-, crude form of λίθος, a stone; and γράφειν, to write. Der. lithograph-er, lithograph-ic; lithograph.

LITHOTOMY, the operation of cutting for stone. (L., -Gk.) Englied from Lat. lithotomia, the form given in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - Gk. λιθοτομία. - Gk. λίθο-, crude form of λίθος, a stone; and τομή, for τομή, base of τέμνω, to cut; see Tome. Der. lithotomist.

LITIGATION, a contest in law. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Lat. litigatio, a disputing. - Lat. litigatus, pp. of litigare, to dispute. - Lat. lit-, stem of lis, strife; and -ig-, weakened form of ag-ere, to drive, conduct (see Agent). β. The Lat. lis was in O. Lat. stilis (Festus), cognate with E. Strife, q.v. Der. litigate, a late verb, really due to the sb.; litigant = Lat. litigant-, stem. of pres. pt. of litigare; also litigious, q. v.

LITIGIOUS, contentious. (F., -L.) In old authors it also means 'debatable' or doubtful; see Trench, Select Glossary. Litigious = precarious; Shak. Pericles, iii. 3. 3. - F. litigieux, 'litigious, debatefull;' Cot. - Lat. litigiosus, (1) contentious, (2) doubtful. - Lat. litigium, strife. - Lat. litigare, to dispute; see Litigation. Der. litigious-ly, litigious-ness.

LITMUS, a kind of dye. (Du.) Spelt litmose-blew in Phillips, ed. 1706. Put for lakmose. - Du. lakmose, a blue dye-stuff (Sewel). - Du. lak, lac; and moes, pulp. So also G. lackmuss, litmus; from lack, lac, and mus, pulp. See Lac. [†]

LITTER (1), a portable bed. (F., -L.) M. E. litere, Cursor Mundi, 13817; Wyclif, Isa. lxvi. 20. Spelt lytier in Caxton, Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 61, l. 1. - O. F. litiere (F. litière), 'a horse-litter;' Cot. - Low Lat. lectaria, a litter. - Lat. lectus, a bed. Cf. Gk. λεκτρον, a bed, λέχος, a couch. - Lat. and Gk. base LAGH, to lie; see Lie (1). Allied to Lectern.

LITTER (2), materials for a bed, a heap of straw for animals to lie on, a confused mass of objects scattered about; &c. (F., -L.) Really the same word as the above; with allusion to beds of straw for animals, and hence a confused heap. Thus Cotgrave has: 'Litiere, a horse-litter, also litter for cattell, also old dung or manure.' See Litter (1). Der. litter, verb, Temp. i. 2. 282. [†]

LITTER (3), a brood. (F., -L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 5. 12. Really the same as litter (2). In the Prompt. Parv., we have: 'lytere, or strowynge of hors,' and: 'lytere, or forthe brynggyng of beestys.' Cf. F. accoucher, and the phrases 'to be brought to bed,' and 'to be in the straw.' [†]

LITTLE, small. (E.) M. E. litel, lutel (with one t); Chaucer, C. T. 492; Havelok, 481; Layamon, 9124. - A. S. lytel, litel; Grein, ii. 201. A lengthened form from A. S. lyt, sb. a little; lyt, adv. little; id. 200. + Du. luttel, little, few; cf. lutje, a little, a bit. + Icel. litill, little; cf. litt, adv. little. + Dan. liden, little; also found as lille (= lille). + Swed. liten. + Goth. leitils. + M. H. G. lützel; O. H. G. luzil; also M. H. G. luzic, luzig (base luz). β. All from a base LUT, to deceive, in connection with which we also find A. S. lytig, deceitful, Elfric's Colloquy, in Wright's Vocab. i. 12, l. 14; also A. S. lot, deceit, Grein, i. 194; and the Goth. liuts, deceitful, liuta, dissembler, lutan, to betray. Thus the old sense of little is 'deceitful' or 'mean;' a sense still retained. γ. Further, the Teut. base LUT meant orig. to stoop, to bow down (hence to creep, or sneak), as in A. S. lutan, to stoop, 'lout,' incline to; see Lout. See Fick, iii. 276. Der. little-ness. The forms less, least, are from a different source. But see Loiter.

LITTORAL, belonging to the sea-shore. (L.) Spelt littoral in Kersey; litoral in Blount, ed. 1674. Mere Latin. - Lat. littoralis, better litoral, belonging to the sea-shore. - Lat. litor-, stem of litus, the sea-shore. Root uncertain.

LITURGY, public worship, established form of prayer. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt liturgie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - O. F. lyturgie, 'a liturgy, or form of service;' Cot. - Low Lat. liturgia. - Gk. λειτουργία, public service. - Gk. λειτουργός, performing public service or duties. - Gk. λείτρο-, crude form of λείρος, public; and ἔργον, work, cognate with E. Work. β. λείρος, λείρος, λείρος, public, is derived from λαός, λαός, the people; whence E. Laic, Laity. Der. liturgi-c, liturgi-c-al, liturg-ist.

LIVE (1), to continue in life, exist, dwell. (E.) M. E. liuven, liuen (with u for v); Chaucer, C. T. 508; Havelok, 355. - A. S. līfan, lyfan; Grein, ii. 185; also libban, lybban, id. 179; where bb stands for ff, due to fi. + Du. leven; also used as sb., with sense of 'life.' + Icel. lifa, to be left, to remain behind; also to live. + Dan. leve. + Swed. lefva. + Goth. liban. + G. leben, to live (whence leben, sb. life), M. H. G. leben, lepen, to live (also spelt libjan, lipjan); allied to b-leiben, M. H. G. beliben, O. H. G. beliban, to remain, be left. β. The sense of 'live' is unoriginal; the older sense is to remain, to be left behind. See further under Life. Der. liv-er, living; and see live (2).

LIVE (2), adj. alive, having life, active, burning. (E.) 'Upon the next live creature that it sees;' Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 172. The use of this adj. is really due to a mistake; it is merely short for alive, which is not a true adj., but a phrase consisting of a prep. and a dat. case; see Alive. β. The use as an adj. arose the more easily owing to the currency of the words live-ly and liv-ish. The former is still in use, but the latter is obsolete; it occurs in Gower, C. A. iii. 93. Der. live-stock.

LIVELIHOOD, means of subsistence. (E.) a. Cotgrave translates F. patrimoine by 'patrimony, birthright, inheritance, livelihood.' And Drayton speaks of a man 'Of so fair livelihood, and so large rent;' The Owl (R.) The metre shows that the word was then, as now, trisyllabic. β. But it is a singular corruption of the M. E. livelode, liuelode, i. e. life-leading, means of living; due to confusion with livelihood in the sense of 'liveliness,' as used (quite correctly) in Shak. Venus, 26; All's Well, i. 1. 58. γ. Again livelode is better spelt liflode, as in P. Plowman, B. prol. 30. Cf. Lyflode, liyflode, lyuelode, or warysome, Donatium; Prompt. Parv. p. 308; indeed, we find livelode as late as in Levins, ed. 1570. An older spelling is in St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 20, l. 16, where we find liflade, meaning 'way of life,' lit. leading of life. δ. Compounded of lif = A. S. līf, life; and lade = A. S. lād, a leading, way, also provisions to live by, Grein, ii. 150. Another sense of A. S. lād is a course, as preserved in mod. E. lode. See Life and Lode.

LIVELONG, long-lasting, long as life is. (E.) 'The livelong night;' Macb. ii. 3. 65. Put for life-long, as live-ly is for life-ly. See Life and Long. β. The use of life-long has, in modern times, been revived, but only in the strict sense of 'lasting through life;' whereas the sense of live-long (really the same word) is wider. [†]

LIVELY, vigorous, active. (E.) A corruption of lifely. 'Lyvely, lyfly, or qwyk, or fulle of lyff, Vivax;' Prompt. Parv. p. 308. Chaucer uses lifty in the sense of 'in a life-like manner,' C. T. 1089. Compounded of Life and Like. Der. liveli-ness, in Holinshed, Conquest of Ireland, c. 9 (R.) Cf. lively, adv., in a life-like manner, Two Gent. iv. 4. 174.

LIVER, an organ of the body, secreting bile. (E.) M. E. liuer (with u = v); Chaucer, C. T. 7421. - A. S. lifer, Grein, ii. 184. + Du. lever. + Icel. lifr. + Dan. lever. + Swed. lefver. + G. leber, M. H. G. lebere, O. H. G. lëpara, lëpara. Cf. Russ. liver', the pluck (of animals). β. The apparent form of the base is LIP; but the origin is uncertain; see Fick, iii. 271. Der. liver-coloured; also liver-wort, Prompt. Parv. p. 309.

LIVERY, a thing delivered, as e.g. a uniform worn by servants; a delivery. (F., -L.) M. E. liuere (with u for v, and trisyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 365. - F. livrée, 'a delivery of a thing that's given, the thing so given, hence, a livery;' Cot. Properly the fem. of the pp. of livrer, to deliver, give. Cf. Ital. liberare, to deliver. - Low Lat. liberare, to give, give freely; a particular use of Lat. liberare, to set free; see Liberate. Der. livery-man; livery-stable, a stable where horses are kept at livery, i. e. at a certain rate or on a certain allowance; liueri-ed. The word is fully explained in Spenser, View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 623, col. 2; and Prompt. Parv. p. 308.

LIVID, black and blue, discoloured. (F., -L.) 'Purple or livid spots;' Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 12, l. 21. - F. livide (Cot.). - Lat. lividus, leaden-coloured, bluish. - Lat. liuere, to be bluish. Root uncertain. Der. livid-ness.

LIZARD, a kind of four-footed reptile. (F., -L.) M. E. lesarde, Prompt. Parv. p. 298; lusarde, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 335. - F. lesard, lezard, 'a lizard;' Cot. - Lat. lacerta, a lizard; also lacertus. Root unknown.

LLAMA, a Peruvian quadruped. (Peruvian.) See Prescott, Conquest of Peru, c. v. 'Llama, according to Garcilasso de la Vega, is a Peruvian word signifying flock; see Garcilasso, Com. Real. parte i. lib. viii. c. xvi;' note in Prescott.

LO, interj. see, behold. (E.) M. E. lo, Chaucer, C. T. 3019. - A. S. lā, lo! Grein, ii. 148. β. Lo is gen. considered as equivalent to look; but the A. S. lā, lo! and lōcian, to look, have nothing in common but the initial letter. The fact is, rather, that lā is a natural interjection, to call attention. Cf. Gk. ἀλαλή, a loud cry, ἀλαλάζειν, to utter a war-cry, Lat. la-trare, to bark; &c. [†]

LOACH, LOCHE, a small river-fish. (F.) M.E. loche; Prompt. Parv. p. 310. — F. loche, 'the loach'; Cot. Cf. Span. loja, a loach; also spelt locha, loche. Origin unknown. [†]

LOAD, a quantity carried, a burden. (E.) Most probably this word has been extended in meaning by confusion with the unrelated verb to lade. Load is common in Shakespeare both as a sb. and verb, but in M.E. it is a sb. only, and is identical with Lode, q.v., notwithstanding the difference in sense. The A.S. lād means only way, course, journey; but M.E. lode has also the sense of 'burden.' I can find no earlier example of this use than carte-lode, a cart-load, in Havelok, l. 895. It should be particularly noticed, however, that the derived verb to load is constantly used in prov. E. in the sense 'to carry corn'; and in the Prompt. Parv. p. 62, we find: 'Cartyn, or lede wythe a carte, Carruco.' Chaucer has i-lad = carried, Prologue, 530. Hence load = M.E. lode = A.S. lād, a derivative from lād, pt. t. of the strong verb lidan, to go, travel. See Lode, Lead (1). Der. load, vb.

LOAD-STAR, LOAD-STONE, the same as Lode-star, Lode-stone.

LOAF, a mass of bread; also of sugar. (E.) M.E. lof, loaf. 'A pese-lof' = a loaf made of peas; P. Plowman, B. vi. 181; pl. looues (= loves), Wyclif, Matt. iv. 3. — A.S. hlāf, a loaf; Grein, ii. 79. + Icel. kleifr. + Goth. hlāifs, or hlāibs. + G. laib, M.H.G. leip. Cf. also Lithuanian klėpas, Lettish klāipās, bread; cited by Fick, iii. 86. Also Russ. khlib, bread. Der. loaf-sugar.

LOAM, a mixed soil of clay, sand, &c. (E.) M.E. lam, dat. lame; Cursor Mundi, 11985; where one MS. has cley (clay). — A.S. lām; Grein, ii. 153. + Du. leem. + G. lehm, O.H.G. leim. β. The A.S. lām (= laīm) is a strengthened form of līm, lime, to which loam is closely allied. See Lime (1). Der. loam-y, M.E. lami, Holi Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 47, l. 28.

LOAN, a lending, money lent. (E.) M.E. lone, Chaucer, C. T. 7443; P. Plowman, B. xx. 284. This would correspond to an A.S. form lān, but we only find læn, Grein, ii. 163; Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 176, last line. There was no doubt, also a form lān. [We find a similar duplication of forms in dole and deal, answering to A.S. dāl and dēl respectively; see those words. And cf. the Icel. forms given below.] + Du. leen, a fief; lit. 'a grant.' + Icel. lān, a loan; lén, a fief. + Dan. laan, a loan. + Swed. lån. + G. lehn, lehen, a fief; O.H.G. lēhan, a thing granted. β. These words answer to a Teut. form LAIHNA, i.e. a thing lent or granted; from the base LIHW (LIH), to grant or lend; appearing in Goth. leihtvan, to lend (Luke, vi. 34), A.S. lhan, to lend, give (Grein, ii. 187), Icel. ljá, to lend, G. leihen, O.H.G. lhan. γ. This base exactly answers to the base LIQU (LIK), of the Lat. linguere (pt. t. liqu-i), to leave; which is closely related to Gk. λείπειν, Skt. rich, to leave. — ✓RIK, to leave, empty; whence also Lat. licere and E. licence. ¶ Quite distinct from A.S. leān, Icel. laun, G. lohn, a reward; for which see Lucre. Der. len-d, q.v. [†]

LOATH, disliking, reluctant, unwilling. (E.) M.E. loth (opposed to leef, dear, willing), Chaucer, C. T. 1839; Havelok, 261. — A.S. lāð, hateful (very common), Grein, ii. 150. + Icel. leidr, loathed, disliked. + Dan. led, loathsome. + Swed. led, odious. + O.H.G. leit, odious. β. All from a Teut. form LAITHA, painful; from the Teut. base LITH, to go, pass, move on, hence to go through, undergo, experience, suffer. This base appears in A.S. līðan, to go, travel, Icel. līða, to go, pass, move on, also to suffer, O.H.G. lidan, to go, experience, suffer, mod. G. leiden, to suffer. From the notion of experience the sense passed on to that of painful experience, suffering, pain, &c. From the same base is Lead (1), q.v. Der. loath-ly = A.S. lāðlic, Grein, ii. 151; loathe, verb = A.S. lāðian, Ælfric's Hom. ii. 506, l. 24; loath-ing, sb., Prompt. Parv. p. 316; loath-some, Prompt. Parv. p. 314, where the suffix -some = A.S. -sum as in win-some; also loath-some-ness. [†]

LOBBY, a small hall, waiting-room, passage. (F. or Low Lat., — G.) In Hamlet, ii. 2, 161, iv. 3, 39. [We can hardly suppose that the word was taken up into E. directly from the Low Lat.; it must have come to us through an O. F. *lobie, not recorded.] — Low Lat. lobia, a portico, gallery, covered way, Ducange; also spelt lobium. — M.H.G. loube, an arbour, a bower, also an open way up to the upper story of a house (Wackernagel). The latter sense will be at once intelligible to any one who has seen a Swiss châlet; and we can thus see also how it easily passed into the sense of a gallery to lounge or wait in. The same word as mod. G. laube, a bower. So called from being formed orig. with branches and foliage. — M.H.G. lob, lobp, O.H.G. lobp, mod. G. laub, a leaf; cognate with E. Leaf, q.v. Doublet, lodge.

LOBE, the flap or lower part of the ear, a division of the lungs or brain. (F., — Low Lat., — Gk.) In Cotgrave. — F. lobe, 'the lap or lowest part of the ear, also a lobe or lappet of the liver'; Cot. — Late Lat. lobus, not given in Ducange, but it may (I suppose) be found in old works on medicine as a transliteration of the Gk. word.

— Gk. λοβός, a lobe of the ear or liver; cognate with E. lap; see Lap (2), Limb (2). It means 'the part hanging down;' from ✓RAB, to hang down; whence also Skt. ramb, lamb, to hang down. Gk. λοβός, a husk, is a different word, and connected with λείπειν, to peel. Der. lob-ate, mod. and scientific; lob-ed.

LOBSTER, a kind of shell-fish. (L.) M.E. lopstere, loppester, loppister. 'A loppyster or a crabbe'; Wright's Vocab. i. 176, l. 21. 'Hic polipus, lopstere'; id. i. 189, col. 2. — A.S. loppestre; Wright's Vocab. i. 56, col. 1, l. 2; i. 77, col. 2; better spelt lopystre, as in Ælfric's Colloquy, id. p. 6, l. 11. β. The sense of the word is said to be 'leaper' in Richardson, but this can hardly have been the case, since the A.S. for 'leap' is hleāpan; the fact is rather that the word had no sense in A.S., lopystre being a mere corruption of Lat. locusta, meaning (1) lobster, (2) locust; see Locust. [Prov. E. lop, A.S. loppe, a flea, is a Scand. form; cf. Dan. loppe, a flea.] ¶ The interchange of k and p is well shown in Schleicher, Compend. § 123; thus the root KAK, to cook, becomes pach in Skt., coquere in Lat., πέπειν in Gk., &c. The Skt. ap = Lat. aqua; Gk. ἄππος = Lat. equus. So here, the c turns to p the more readily because the vowel u follows. The A.S. y represents a modified u, as usual. [†]

LOCAL, belonging to a place. (F., — L.) Spelt local in Frith, Works, p. 139, last line. — F. local, 'local'; Cot. = Lat. localis, local. — Lat. locus, a place; see Locus. Der. local-ly, local-ise, local-is-at-ion, local-i-ty, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; also loc-ate, q.v.

LOCATE, to place. (L.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. — Lat. locatus, pp. of locare, to place. — Lat. locus, a place; see Local. Der. local-ion; local-ive.

LOCH, a lake. (Gaelic.) In place-names, as Loch Lomond, Loch Ness. — Gael. and Irish loch, a lake, arm of the sea. + W. llwch (Spurrell, p. 183). + Corn. lo. + Manx logh. + Bret. louch (with guttural ch). + Lat. lacus; see Lake. Doublets, lake, lough.

LOCK (1), an instrument to fasten doors, an enclosure in a canal; &c. (E.) M.E. loke, Prompt. Parv. p. 311; pl. loken, also locum, Layamon, 5926. — A.S. loca, pl. locan; Grein, ii. 191. + Icel. loka, a lock, latch; lok, a cover, lid of a chest. + Swed. lock, a lid. + G. loch, a dungeon, hole; orig. a locked-up place. β. The Teut. form is LUKA (Fick, iii. 274) from the Teut. base LUK, to lock, enclose, appearing in the strong verb lūcan, to enclose, Grein, ii. 194; also in Icel. lúka, to shut, finish (strong verb); M.H.G. lūchen, to shut; Goth. galukan, to shut, shut up. Remoter relations doubtful; see suggestions in Fick, as above. Der. lock, verb, M.E. lokken, locken, Chaucer, C. T. 5899 (observe that this verb is a secondary formation from the sb. and not to be confused with the old strong verb luken, louken = A.S. lūcan, now obsolete, of which the pp. loken occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 14881); also lock-er, a closed place that locks = M.E. lokere, Prompt. Parv. p. 311, answering to O. Flemish loker, a chest (Kilian); also lock-jaw, put for locked-jaw; lock-keeper; lock-smith; lock-up. And see lock-et.

LOCK (2), a tuft of hair, flock of wool. (E.) M.E. lok; pl. lokkes, lockes, Chaucer, C. T. 81. — A.S. locc, loc, Grein, ii. 191; pl. locas. + Du. lok, a lock, tress, curl. + Icel. lokkr. + Dan. lok. + Swed. lock. + O.H.G. loch, G. locke. β. The form of the Teut. word is LUKKA (Fick, iii. 274); from a Teut. base LUK, to bend, which perhaps appears in Icel. lykk, a loop, bend, crook. γ. The corresponding Aryan base is LUG; whence Gk. λύγος, a pliant twig, withy; λύγίζειν, to bend. But this does not seem to be quite certain.

LOCKET, a little gold case worn as an ornament. (F., — Scand. or E.) The old sense is a small lock, something that fastens. 'With wooden lockets 'bout their wrists,' with reference to the pillory; Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. l. 808. — F. loquet, 'the latch of a door'; Cot. Dimin. of O. F. loc, a lock; Burguy. Borrowed either from Icel. loka, a lock, latch; or from English.

LOCKRAM, a cheap kind of linen. (F., — Breton.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 1, 225; see Nares and Halliwell. — F. locrenan, the name given to a sort of unbleached linen; named from the place in Brittany where it is manufactured; Dict. de Trévoux. — F. Loc-renan, also called S. Renan, the name of a place in Basse Bretagne, a few miles N. by W. from Quimper. — Bret. Lok-ronan, the Bret. name for the same place. The sense of the name is 'St. Ronan's cell;' from Bret. lōk, a cell, and Ronan, St. Ronan; see Legonidec's Bret. Dict., where this very name is cited as an instance of the use of Lok- as a prefix in place-names. [†]

LOCOMOTION, motion from place to place. (L.) 'Progression or animal locomotion'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 1, § 2. Coined from Lat. loco-, crude form of locus, a place; and motion. See Locus and Motion. Der. locomot-ive, adj., Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715; hence locomotive, sb. = locomotive engine, the first of which was used A.D. 1814, Haydn, Dict. of Dates.

LOCUS, a place. (L.) 'Locus, a place, room, or stead'; Phillips, ed. 1706. He also gives instances of its technical use in astronomy and philosophy. — Lat. locus, a place; a corruption from O. Lat.

stlocus, a place. Of uncertain origin; apparently the same word with E. stall (Fick, i. 821); but Corssen rejects this, and connects it with the ✓STAR, to strew; cf. G. strecke, a tract, extent. See Stall, Stretch. Der. loc-al, q. v., loc-ate, al-locate, col-locate, dis-locate, lieu, lieu-tenant, loco-motive; also couch.

LOCUST, a winged insect. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715, it also means 'a fish like a lobster, called a long-oyster;' see Lobster. M. E. locust, Cursor Mundi, 6041; Wyclif, Rev. ix. 3. = Lat. locusta, a shell-fish; also a locust. Root uncertain. Doublet, lobster, q. v.

LODE, a vein of ore. (E.) In Halliwell. Also spelt load, as in Carew's Survey of Cornwall, p. 10 (R.). An old mining term. The lit. sense is 'course.' = A. S. lād, a way, course, journey; on lāde = in the way, Beowulf, ed. Grein, l. 1987. = A. S. līðan, to go, travel. + Icel. leið, a lode, way, course; from līða, to go, pass, move. + Dan. led, a gate; from lide, to glide on. + Swed. led, a way, course; from lida, to pass on. β. The Teut. base is LAITHA, a course, from Teut. verb LITHAN, to go, pass on; Fick, iii. 270. See Lead (1). Der. lode-star, lode-stone; also lead (1).

LODESTAR, LOADSTAR, the pole-star. (E.) Lit. 'way-star;' i. e. the star that shews the way, or that leads. M. E. lode-sterre, Chaucer, C. T. 2061. Compounded of lode, a way, course; and star. See Lode and Star. + Icel. leiðar-stjarna; from leiðar, gen. case of leið, a way, and stjarna, a star. + Swed. led-stjärna. + G. leit-stern. ¶ Not to be derived from the verb to lead, because that word is a mere derivative of lode, as shewn by the vowel-change; but the words are, of course, connected.

LODESTONE, LOADSTONE, an ore that attracts pieces of iron. (E.) 'For lyke as the lodestone draweth unto it yron,' Udall, on S. Mark, c. 5. And see Robinson's tr. of More's Utopia (1556), ed. Arber, p. 32. Spelt lodestone, loadstone, in Minshew, ed. 1627. Compounded of lode and stone, in imitation of the older word lodestar; see above. ¶ It may be remarked that it is an incorrect formation; it is intended to mean 'a leading or drawing stone,' whereas the lit. sense is 'way-stone.' The same remark applies to the cognate Icel. leiðarsteinn.

LODGE, a small house, cottage, cell, place to rest in. (F., = Low Lat., = G.) M. E. loge, logge; Chaucer, C. T. 14859; Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 2603. = O. F. loge, 'a lodge, cote, shed, small house;' Cot. [Cf. Ital. loggia, a gallery, a lodge.] = Low Lat. laubia, a porch; cf. lobia, a gallery. 'We find in an act of A.D. 904, "In palatio quod est fundatum iuxta basilica beatissimi principis apostolorum, in laubia . . . ipsius palatii;" Brachet (see Ducange). = O. H. G. loubā (M. H. G. loubē, G. laube), an arbour, a hut of leaves and branches. = O. H. G. laup (M. H. G. loub, G. laub), a leaf; cognate with E. Leaf, q. v. Der. lodge, verb, M. E. loggen, Chaucer, C. T. 14997, 15002, Ancren Riwle, p. 264 = O. F. loger, 'to lodge, lie, sojourn' (Cot.); lodg-ing = M. E. logging, Chaucer, C. T. 15001; lodg-er; lodg-ment, in Kersey, ed. 1715. Doublet, lobby, q. v.

LOFT, a room in a roof, attic, upper room. (Scand.) See Bible Word-book. M. E. loft, Gawain and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, l. 1096. The proper sense of loft is 'air,' as in Aloft, q. v. The peculiar sense is Scand. = Icel. loft (pron. loft), meaning (1) air, sky, (2) an upper room, balcony; cf. the prov. E. sky-parlour as applied to an attic. + Dan. loft, a loft, cock-loft. + Swed. loft, a garret. + A. S. lyft, air, sky, Grein, ii. 198; whence M. E. lyft, sky, P. Plowman, B. xv. 351. + Goth. luftus, the air. + Du. lucht [for luft], air, sky. + G. luft, the air. Root unknown. Der. loft-y, Shak. Lucrece, 1167, Rich. II. iii. 4. 35; loft-i-ly; loft-i-ness, Isa. ii. 17; also lift, q. v.; a-loft, q. v.

LOG (1), a block, piece of wood. (Scand.) 'A long log of timbre;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 54 g. = Icel. lág, a felled tree, a log. + Swed. dial. lāga, a felled tree, a tree that has been blown down, a wind-fall (Rietz). Cf. O. Swed. lāge, broken branches (Ihre); also prov. E. lag-wood (= log-wood), the larger sticks from the head of an oak-tree when felled; Dorsetshire (Halliwell). β. So called from its lying flat on the ground, as distinguished from the living tree. Formed from the Teut. base LAG, to lie; see Lie (1). Der. log-cabin, log-hut; log-man, Temp. iii. 1. 67; logg-et, a small log (with dimin. suffix -et, of F. origin), Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, A. iv. sc. 5, Puppy's 5th speech; logg-ats, another spelling of logg-ets, the name of a game, Hamlet, v. 1. 100; log-wood, so called because imported in logs, for which reason it was also called block-wood, as appears from Kersey's Dict. and the Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 9, cited in Wedgwood; also log (2), q. v.; logger-head, q. v.

LOG (2), a piece of wood with a line, for measuring the rate of a ship. (Scand.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. Rather Scand. than Dutch, and ultimately of Scand. origin, being identical with Log (1). = Swed. logg, a log (as a sea-term), whence log-lina, a log-line, log-bok, a log-book, logga, to heave the log (Widegren); so also Dan. log, log-line, log-bog, logge. We also find Du. log, log-tijn, log-boek, loggen; but these do not seem to be old words, being unnoticed by Sewel, who translates E. log-line by Du. minuit-lyn or knoop-lyn. See Log (1). Der. log-board, -book, -line, -reel.

LOG (3), a Hebrew liquid measure. (Heb.) The twelfth part of a hin. In Levit. xiv. 10. = Heb. lóg, a word which orig. signified 'a basin;' Smith, Dict. of the Bible.

LOGARITHM, the exponent of the power to which a given number or base must be raised in order to produce another given number. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Logarithms were invented by Napier, who published his work in 1614; Haydn. Coined from Gk. λογ-, stem of λόγος, a word, a proportion; and ἀριθμός, a number; the sense being 'ratio-number.' See Logic and Arithmetic. Der. logarithm-ic, -ic-al, -ic-al-ly.

LOGGER-HEAD, a dunce, a piece of round timber (in a whale-boat) over which a line is passed to make it run more slowly. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) In Shak. it means a blockhead; L. L. L. iv. 3. 204. The word evidently means log-head, and is a similar formation to block-head; the only difficulty is to account for the syllable -er. Webster gives: 'logger, one engaged in getting timber.' See Log (1) and Head.

LOGIC, the science of reasoning correctly. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. logike, Chaucer, C. T. 288. = O. F. logique, 'logick;' Cot. = Lat. logica (= ars logica), logic; properly fem. of logicus, logical. = Gk. λογική (= λογική τέχνη), logic; properly fem. of λογικός, belonging to speaking, reasonable. = Gk. λόγος, a speech. = Gk. λέγειν, to collect, gather, select, tell, speak. + Lat. legere, to collect, select, read.

β. See Curtius, i. 454; he suggests LAK as the form of the European base, which by extension to LAKS and subsequent loss of k, prob. gave rise to Goth. lisan, to collect, Lithuanian lės-ti, to gather up, Lettish lasz-it, to collect; with which cf. prov. E. leaze, to glean. Der. logic-al, logic-al-ly, logic-i-an (Levins). Also (from Gk. λογιστής, a calculator, λογιστικός, skilled in calculating), logistic, logistic-al. Also logo-machy, a strife about words = Gk. λόγομαχία, 1 Tim. vi. 4. from Gk. λόγος, crude form of λόγος, and μάχομαι, I fight or contend. From the same Gk. source we have numerous words, as ana-logue, apo-logue, cata-logue, deca-logue, dialogue, ec-logue, epi-logue, mono-logue, pro-logue; also syl-log-ism; also log-arithm; also ana-logy, apo-logy, etymo-logy, eu-logy; also all scientific terms in -logy, such as bio-logy, concho-logy, &c.

LOIN, part of an animal just above the hip-bone. (F., = L.) M. E. loine, loynes; Prompt. Parv. p. 312; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 191, in a song written temp. Edw. II. = O. F. logne (Burguy), also longe, 'the loyne or flank;' Cot. = Low Lat. *lumbæ (not found), fem. of an adj. *lumbæus, formed from Lat. lumbus, the loin. See Lumbago. ¶ We may note that the A. S. lendenu, pl. sb., the loins, is probably cognate with the Lat. word; hence came M. E. lendis, leendis, the loins, in Wyclif, Matt. iii. 4, &c. See Lumbar.

LOITER, to delay, linger. (Du.) 'Loyter and goe a-begging;' Tyndall's Works, p. 217, col. 1; see Trench, Select Glossary, where the orig. bad sense of the word is noted. M. E. loitren. 'Loytron, or byn ydyll, Ocior;' Prompt. Parv. p. 311. = Du. (and O. Du.) leuteren, to linger, loiter, trifle, waver; also O. Du. loteren, to delay, linger, act negligently, deceive, waver, vacillate (Kilian, Oudemans); cf. O. Flemish lutsen, with the same senses (Kilian). β. The true sense is 'to stoop,' and figuratively to sneak; and the word is formed with the frequentative suffix -er from the Teut. base LUT, to stoop, appearing in A. S. lutan, Icel. lúta, to stoop, give way, lútr, stooping, and in E. Lout, q. v. Thus to loiter is 'to act like a lout.' The Dan. form is weakened to lude, to stoop, with which perhaps cf. Icel. loddari, a loiterer, a tramp, O. Du. lodderen, 'to lie lazily in bed,' Hexham; &c. ¶ Loiter comes also very near to A. S. gelutian, to crouch (Grein), whence M. E. lotien, to creep about, lurk, lie hid, Chaucer, C. T. 15654 (Six-text, G. 186), P. Plowman, B. xvii. 102; this is another word (without the frequentative -er) from the same base. Der. loiter-er. [†]

LOLL, to lounge about lazily. (O. Low G.) M. E. lollen; 'And wel loselyche he lolleth there' = and very idly he lounges there; P. Plowman, B. xii. 23. 'He that lolleth is lame, other his leg out of ioynte, Other meymed in som membre' = he who lounges is lame, or his leg is out of joint, or he is maimed in some member; id. C. x. 215. See also id. B. v. 192; P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 224. An old Low G. word, of which the traces are slight. Probably borrowed from O. Du. rather than an E. word. = O. Du. lollen, to sit over the fire. 'Wie sit en lolt of sit en vrijt Verlet sijn werck, vergeet sijn tijt' = he who sits and warms himself, or sits and woos, neglects his work and loses his time; Cats, ed. 1828, i. 428, a; cited by Oudemans. Kilian also gives lollebanche, a sleeping-bench, as a Zealand word. The older sense was prob. to 'doze,' to sleep, hence to brood over the fire, to lounge about. It appears to be a mere derivative of lull, i. e. to sing to sleep; see Lull. β. Related words are Icel. lulla, to loll (thought to be borrowed from English); O. Icel. lolla, to move or act slowly, loll, lolla, sloth, words cited by Wedgwood, but not in Cleasby's Dict.; Icel. laila, to toddle (as a child); Swed. and Dan. dial. lulla, a cradle (Rietz, Outzen). Der. loll-er; and see LOLLARD.

LOLLARD, a name given to the followers of Wyclif. (O. Du.) The history of the word is a little difficult, because it is certain that several words have been purposely mixed up with it. 1. In the first place, the M. E. word most commonly in use was not lollard, but loller—one who lolls, a lounging, an idle vagabond. 'I smelle a loller in the wind, quod he'; Chaucer, C. T. 12914. That 'lounger' is the true sense of this form of the word, is clear from a passage in P. Plowman, C. x. 188–218, the whole of which may be consulted. The most material lines are: 'Now kyndeliche, by Crist, beth suche called lolleres, As by englysch of oure eldres of olde menes techynge; He that lolleth is lame other his leg out of ioynte Other maymed in som membre,' i. e. such fellows are naturally called lollers in the English of our forefathers; he that lolls about is lame, or broken-jointed, or maimed; see LOLL. 2. At the same time, the name lollard was also in use as a term of reproach; and this was an O. Du. term, Latinised as Lollardus. It had been in use before Wyclif. Ducange quotes from Johannes Hocsemius, who says, under the date 1309: 'Eodem anno quidam hypocritae gyrovasi, qui Lollardi sive Deum laudantes vocabantur, per Hannoniam et Brabantiam quasdam mulieres nobiles deciperunt;' i. e. In this year certain vagabond hypocrites, called Lollards or God-praisers, deceived certain noblewomen in Hainault and Brabant. He adds that Trithemius says in his Chronicle, under the date 1315: 'ita appellatos a Gualtero Lolhard, Germano quodam.' This latter statement makes no difference to the etymology, since Lolhard as a surname (like our surnames Fisher, Baker, or Butcher) is precisely the same word as when used in the sense of 'God-praiser.' The lit. sense is 'a singer,' one who chants. — O. Du. lollaerd (1) a number of prayers or hymns (Lat. musicator), one who hums; (2) a Lollard; Kilian, Oudemans. This is a mere dialectical variation of a form lull-ard, formed regularly from the O. Du. lullen (also lollen), to sing, hum, with the suffix -ard as in E. drunk-ard, slug-ard, &c., denoting the agent. This O. Du. lullen is our E. word lull, q. v. 3. Besides the confusion thus introduced, it was common to compare the Lollards to tares, by help of a bad pun on the Lat. lolia, tares; this has, however, nothing to do with the etymology. See my note on Chaucer, C. T. Group B. 1173, in the Prioresses Tale, &c. (Clarendon Press). ¶ Since loll and lull are allied words, it makes no very great difference to which verb we refer loller and Lollard; still loller = loll-er, and Lollard = lull-er.

LONE, solitary, retired, away from company. (E.) Not in early use; the word does not appear in Minshew or Levis, and I find no example much earlier than Shakespeare, who has: 'a poor lone woman;' 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 35. It probably was at first a colloquial or vulgar word, recommended by its brevity for more extended use. It seems to be a mere corruption of alone, as has generally been explained by lexicographers; even Shakespeare brings it in as a pun: 'a long loan for a poor lone woman to bear.' Observe: 'I go alone, Like to a lonely dragon;' Cor. iv. 1. 30. Todd cites a slightly earlier instance. 'Moreover this Glycerie is a lone woman;' Kyffin, transl. of Terence, ed. 1588. See ALONE. β. Other examples of loss of initial a occur in the words merd, purtenance, limbeck, vanguard. ¶ The Icel. laun, secrecy, has nothing to do with lone; the Icel. á laun properly means 'secretly,' rather than 'alone.' Alone is for al-one, as is proved in its due place. Der. lone-ly, Cor. iv. 1. 30; lone-li-ness, Hamlet, iii. 1. 46; also lone-some, spelt lonesom in Skinner, ed. 1671; lone-some-ness; also lone-ness: 'One that doth wear himself away in lone-ness,' Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, A. i. sc. 2 (Amarillis).

LONG (1), extended, not short, tedious. (E.) M. E. long, Northern lang; Chaucer, C. T. 3021; Pricke of Conscience, l. 632. — A. S. lang, long; Grein, ii. 156. + Du. lang. + Icel. langr. + Dan. lang. + Swed. lång. + Goth. laggrs (= langrs). + G. lang. + Lat. longus. β. Further allied to M. H. G. lingen, to go hastily, G. er-langen, to attain, reach; and to Skt. lañgh, to jump over, surpass. 'The orig. signification of lañgh was prob. to overtake by jumping, then, to attain;' Benfey, p. 786. γ. The orig. notion seems to have had reference to the stride taken in jumping or fast running; and, as an active runner commonly moves lightly over the ground, we get Skt. laghu, Gk. ελαχvus, E. light, Lat. levis, from the same root; with the singular result that the Gk. ελαχvus also means 'short.' δ. An older Skt. spelling appears in the verb rañgh, to move swiftly; giving ✓ RAGH, to run, hasten, as the common source, appearing without the nasal in Skt. and Gk., but nasalised to RANGH for other languages. See LIGHT (2), LEVITY. Der. long, adv.; long-boat, long-measure, long-run, long-sight-ed, long-stop, long-suffering. Also (from Lat. longus) long-evity, q. v., long-itude, q. v. Also long, verb (see below); length, q. v.; ling (1), q. v.; ling-er, q. v., lunge, q. v. Also lumber (1).

LONG (2), to desire, yearn; to belong. (E.) Often used with for or after. Very common in Shak. Long = wish for, and long = belong (Hen. V, ii. 4. 80) are the same word. M. E. longen, longien. 'Than longen folk to gon on pilgrimages' = then people desire, &c.; Chaucer, C. T. 12. 'That to the sacrifice longen shal' = that are to belong to the sacrifice; id. 2280. — A. S. langian, longian, to lengthen, also to long after, crave. 'Ponne se dæg langað' = when the day lengthens; Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 9. 'Hæleð langode' = the hero longed; Grein, ii. 157. The orig. sense is to become long, hence to stretch the mind after, to crave; also to apply, belong. — A. S. lang, long, long; see LONG (1). Der. long-ing, sb.; long-ing, adj., long-ing-ly.

LONGEVITY, length of life. (L.) 'In longevity by many considered to attain unto hundreds' [of years]; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 9. § 1. Spelt longevitie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Coined, by analogy with F. words in -ité (= E. -ity), from Lat. longavitas, long life. — Lat. long, stem of longus, long; and avitas, full form of the word commonly written etas, age. See LONG and AGE.

LONGITUDE, lit. length; distance in degrees from a given meridian. (F., — L.) 'Longitudes and latitudes'; Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, Prol. l. 53. — F. longitude. — Lat. longitudo (gen. longitudinis), length, long duration; in late Lat., longitude. — Lat. longi = longo, crude form of longus, long; with suffix -tudo. See LONG. Der. longitudinal (from stem longitudin-); longitudinal-ly.

LOO, a game at cards. (F.) Spelt lu in Pope, Rape of the Lock, c. iii. l. 62 (l. 350). Formerly called Lanterloo (Engl. Cycl. Supp.) — F. lanturelu or lanturli, interj. nonsense! fiddlestick! fudge! (Hamilton); also a game at cards, jeu de la bête (i. e. loo); see Littré and Hamilton. [The more usual F. name for loo is monche.] β. The expression was orig. the refrain of a famous vaudeville in the time of Cardinal Richelieu (died 1642); hence used in order to give an evasive answer. As the expression is merely nonsensical, it admits, accordingly, of no further etymology. [†]

LOOF, another spelling of LOUF, q. v.

LOOK, to behold, see. (E.) M. E. loken, loken; Chaucer, C. T. 1697. — A. S. lōcian, to look, see, Grein, ii. 192. + O. H. G. luogén, M. H. G. luogen, to mark, behold. β. The O. H. G. verb is said to mean 'to peep through a hole,' mark; and to be derived from O. H. G. looc, M. H. G. luoc, G. loch, a hole. If so, the A. S. lōcian is to be connected with A. S. loca, a prison, enclosure, and loa, a lock; see LOCK. ¶ The resemblance to Skt. lok, to see, is perhaps accidental. Der. look, sb., M. E. loke, Chaucer, C. T. 3342; look! interj.; look-er, look-out, look-ing, look-ing-glass.

LOOM (1), a machine for weaving cloth. (E.) In Spenser, Muirpotmos, l. 272. M. E. lome, a tool, instrument; P. Plowman, C. vi. 45; and see Prompt. Parv., p. 312. The pl. lomen = implements for tilling the soil, occurs in the Ancien Riwle, p. 384. — A. S. geldma, a tool, implement, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, iv. 28, ed. Whelock, p. 351; cf. A. S. and-lōma, a tool, implement, utensil, in a gloss (Lye). Root uncertain.

LOOM (2), to appear faintly or at a distance. (Scand.) The orig. sense is to glimmer or shine faintly. Rare; and usually used of a ship. 'Looming of a ship,' is her prospective [appearance] or shew. Hence it is said, such a ship looms a great sail, i. e. she appears or seems to be a great ship; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. So also Skinner, ed. 1671, who adds: 'she looms but small,' i. e. looks small. M. E. lumen, to shine. 'Hire lure lumes liht, Ase a launterne a nyht' = her face looms brightly, like a lantern in the night; Spec. of Lyric Poetry, ed. Wright, p. 52. — Icel. ljóma, to gleam, shine, dawn as the day does; from the sb. ljómi, a beam, ray. β. The sb. is cognate with A. S. leóma, a beam, ray (Grein, ii. 178); whence M. E. leme, Chaucer, ed. Tyrwhitt, C. T. 14936. This would have given a later form leem or leam, but it became obsolete. A similar substitution of a Scand. for an E. form occurs in the case of BOON, q. v. γ. Both Icel. and A. S. sbs. are from a Teut. form LEUHMANN (Fick, iii. 275), due to the Teut. base LUH, to shine; see LIGHT (1). ¶ There does not appear to be any real connection with gloom or gleam, which are from a different root. Der. loom-ing, sb. [†]

LOON (1), LOWN, a base fellow. (O. Low G.) Spelt loon in Macbeth, v. 3. 11; loun in Oth. ii. 3. 95. The latter passage is 'he called the tailor loun,' cited from an old ballad. In the Percy Folio MS., ed. Hales and Furnivall, ii. 324, l. 52, the line appears as: 'therefore he called the taylor clowne.' Jamieson gives loun, loon, loun, and says that the word is used by Dunbar. β. Just as in the case of LOON (2), the form looun stands for an older loumyshe or loum. This is shewn by M. E. loumyshe, old spelling of loumyshe, Prompt. Parv., p. 316, and by the etymology. Cf. Scot. loamy, dull, slow; Jamieson. γ. Of O. Low G. origin; as appears from

O. Du. loen, a lown (Kilian, Oudemans), whence mod. Du. loen. Kilian also gives O. Du. lome, slow, inactive; noted by him as an old word. That m is the older letter is to be seen from the derived words, viz. Du. lummel, Dan. lømmel, Swed. lymmel, G. lummel, a lown, lubber. 8. An older form appears in O. H. G. luomi (only used in compounds), yielding, mild; and all the forms are from a Teut. base which appears in M. H. G. luomen, lomen, to droop, be weary; which is prob. connected with E. Lame, q. v. And see Loon (2).

LOON (2), a water-bird, diver. (Scand.) A corruption of the Shetland name loom; see Gloss. of Shetland Words by T. Edmondston; Phil. Soc. 1866. — Icel. lómur, a loon. + Swed. and Dan. lom. Root unknown; but not improbably the same word as Loon (1), from the awkward motion of such birds on land. For derogatory use of the names of birds, cf. booby, gull, goose, owl, &c.

LOOP, a bend, a bend in a cord leaving an opening, noose. (C.) Spelt loupe in the Bible of 1551, Exod. xxvi. 4, 5. The M. E. loupe is only used in the sense of 'loop-hole,' but it is prob. the same word, denoting a small hole in a wall shaped like a loop in a piece of string. In this sense it occurs in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 288; and Romance of Partenay, l. 1175. — Irish and Gael. lub, a loop, bow, staple, fold, noose; the orig. sense being a bend or curve. — Irish and Gael. lub, to bend, incline. Cf. Skt. ropa, a hole. Der. loop, verb; loop-ed, full of holes, K. Lear, iii. 4. 31; loop-hole, Shak. Lucr. 183, the older term being M. E. loupe, as above; loop-hol-ed. [+]

LOOSE, free, slack, unfastened, unconfined. (E.) M. E. laus, loose, Chaucer, C. T. 4062; where the Camb. MS. has los, and the Petworth MS. has louse. Spelt louse, lousse, in the Ancien Riwle, p. 228, note d. a. It is difficult to account for the vowel-sound of the word; it is a dialectal variety of M. E. lees, false; see Prompt. Parv. p. 208. The latter is from A. S. leás, (1) loose, (2) false; cognate with Icel. lauss, loose, vacant, Dan. and Swed. lös, loose. β. The E. loose is better represented by O. Sax. lös, O. Du. loos, (1) loose, (2) false (Oudemans); the mod. Du. separates the two senses, having los, loose, and loos, false. Further cognate words appear in Goth. laus, empty, vain; G. los, loose. γ. All are from a Teut. adj. LAUSA, loose (Fick, iii. 273); from Teut. base LUS, to lose; see Lose. ¶ We may, however, fairly assume that the vowel-sound in loose was due to the influence of the verb to loosen, which was in much commoner use than the adj., and naturally affected it; see Loosen. Der. loose-ly, loose-ness. Note that loose is the commonest suffix in E., but is always spelt -less; see -less. And see Leasing.

LOOSE, LOOSEN, to make loose, set free. (E.) The suffix -en is due to analogy with words like lengthen, strengthen, and is less common in early than in later times. M. E. losen, lousen, lousen; where the final n is very commonly dropped, and merely marks the infinitive mood, without having the causal force which is implied by the final n at present. 'The bondis of alle weren lousid' = the bonds of all were loosed; Wyclif, Acts, xvi. 26. — A. S. losian, to lose, to become void, almost always used in a neut. sense, Grein, ii. 194. We find, however, losade = Lat. dissipavit, Luke, ix. 26; and the cognate O. Sax. lösian is transitive, and signifies 'to make free.' So also Du. lossen, to loosen, release; Icel. leysa, to loosen; Swed. lösa; Dan. löse; G. lösen; Goth. lausjan; all active. β. In every language but E. the verb is derived from the adj. signifying 'loose'; thus O. Sax. lösian is from lös; Du. lossen, from los; Icel. leysa, from lauss; Swed. lösa, from lös; Dan. löse, from lös; G. lösen, from los; and Goth. lausjan, from laus. γ. In E., the verb losian (= E. loose) has affected the vowel of the adjective; the A. S. for 'loose' being leás, which should have given a mod. E. adj. lees. The verb losian itself is from A. S. los, destruction, Elfred, tr. of Bede, lib. v. c. 9 (or c. 10, ed. Whelock); see Loss, Loose, adj., and Lose.

LOOT, plunder, booty. (Hindi. = Skt.) A modern term, imported from India. — Hindi lüt (with cerebral t), loot, plunder. The cerebral t shows that an r is elided [Prof. Cowell so informs me]. — Skt. lotra, shorter form of loptra, booty, spoil. — Skt. lup, to break, spoil; the pp. lupta is also used in the sense of 'booty,' like the deriv. loptra; see Benfey, p. 798. — √ RUP, to break; whence Lat. rumper, G. rauben, and E. rob. See Rob, Rupture. ¶ Thus loot = that which is robbed. Der. loot, verb.

LOP, to maim, to cut branches off trees. (O. Du.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and in Shak. Cymb. v. 4. 141. — O. Du. luppen, to maim, castrate (Oudemans); whence mod. Du. lubben, with the same sense; cf. obsol. E. lib, used by Massinger, City Madam, A. ii. sc. 2 (see Nares). Cf. Lithuan. lūp-ti, to peel; see Leaf. Der. lop, sb., small branches cut off, Henry VIII, i. 2. 96. And see glib (3), left.

LOQUACIOUS, talkative. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 161. A coined word, formed by adding -ious to Lat. loquac-, stem of loquax, talkative. [Prob. suggested by the sb. loquacity, which had previously been introduced into the language from F. loquacité, 'loquacity';

Cot. Loquacity occurs in Minshen, ed. 1627.] — Lat. loqui, to speak. + Russ. reche, reshchi, to speak. + Skt. lap (for lak), to speak. — √ RAK, to speak; Fick, iii. 738. Der. loquacious-ly, -ness. Also loquac-i-ty, from F. loquacité, which from Lat. acc. loquacitatem. From the same root are col-loqu-ial, e-loqu-ence, ob-loqu-y, sol-i-loqu-y, ventri-loqu-ist; also (from Lat. pp. locut-us) al-locut-ion, circum-locut-ion, e-locut-ion, inter-locut-ion.

LORD, a master, ruler, peer. (E.) M. E. loured (= loved), Havelok, l. 96; gen. contracted to lord, Chaucer, C. T. 47. — A. S. hláford, a lord; Grein, ii. 80. β. It is certain that the word is a compound, and that the former syllable is A. S. hláf, a loaf. It is extremely likely that -ord stands for ward, a warden, keeper, master; whence hláf-ward = loaf-keeper, i. e. the master of the house, father of the family. See Loaf and Ward. ¶ The etym. sometimes given, from ord, a beginning, is impossible, the proper sense of ord being 'point'; loaf-point could only mean the corner of a crust; and loaf-beginning could only refer to flour or grain. The simple word ward, however, is used nearly synonymously with the comp. hláf-ward; and cf. hord-ward, a treasure-keeper, lord (Grein). Der. lord, verb (gen. used with it), 2 Hen. VI, iv. 8. 47; lord-ed, Temp. i. 2. 97; lord-ing (with dimin. suffix -ing), Wint. Ta. i. 2. 62 = M. E. lauerd-ing, Layamon, 27394; lord-li-ing (with double dimin.), Bp. Hall's Satires, b. ii. sat. 2, l. 12 = M. E. lowerd-ling, Layamon, 12664, later text; lord-ly = M. E. lordlich, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 302; lord-li-ness, Shak. Ant. v. 2. 161; lord-ship = M. E. lord-schip, P. Plowman, B. iii. 206.

LORE, learning, doctrine. (E.) M. E. lore, Chaucer, C. T. 529, 4424, 12202. [The final e is unessential, and due to the frequent use of the dat. case.] — A. S. lár, lore; Grein, ii. 158. Here lár stands for *laisa, from Teut. base LIS, to find out; so that *laisa = lár means 'what is found out,' knowledge, learning. + Du. leer, doctrine. + Swed. lära. + Dan. lære. + G. lehre, M. H. G. lère, O. H. G. lêra. And cf. Goth. laisjan, to teach; laisens, doctrine. See further under Learn.

LORIOT, the golden aureole. (F., -L.) 'Loriot, a bird otherwise called a witwall; Kersey, ed. 1715. — F. loriot, 'the bird called a witwall, yellowpeake, hickway;' Cot. Corruptly written for loriot, lorion, the prefixed l being the def. article (= Lat. ille). Cotgrave has: 'Oriot, a heighaw, or witwall;' also spelt Oriol, id. The latter form is the same as E. Oriole, q. v.

LORN, old pp. of the verb to lose. (E.) See Lose, Forlorn. LORY, a small bird of the parrot kind. (Malay.) In Webster. Also called lury. — Malay luri, a bird of the parrot kind, also called nuri; Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 311. Nuri, the lury, a beautiful bird of the parrot kind, brought from the Moluccas; id. p. 350.

LOSE, to part with, be separated from. (E.) The mod. E. lose appears to be due to confusion between two M. E. forms, viz. (1) losien, (2) loosen. 1. Losien is recorded in Stratmann, 3rd ed., at p. 372; it commonly means 'to lose' or 'loosen,' but we also find it in the sense 'to be lost,' or 'to perish,' as in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 117, ll. 28, 35; and in Layamon, 20538, it is used exactly in the sense of 'lose.' — A. S. losian, to become loose, to escape, Grein, ii. 194. See Loosen. 2. The M. E. loosen, more commonly lesen, is in Stratmann, at p. 360. This is the verb which invariably has the force of 'lose,' but it should rather have produced a mod. E. leess. It is a strong verb, with pt. t. lees, and pp. loren, lorn; see Chaucer, C. T. 1217, 3536; P. Plowman, B. v. 499. — A. S. leósan, to lose; pt. t. leás, pp. loren; perhaps only used in comp. for-leósan, to lose entirely, Luke, xv. 4, 9, Grein, i. 328. + Du. liezen, only in comp. ver-liezen, to lose; pt. t. verloor, pp. verloren. + G. lieren, only in comp. ver-lieren, pt. t. verlor, pp. verloren. + Goth. liusan, only in comp. fra-liusan, to loose, Luke, xv. 8, with which cf. fra-husnan, to perish, 1 Cor. i. 18. β. Both A. S. losian and leósan are from the Teut. base LUS, to lose, become loose (Fick, iii. 273). This base is an extension of the older base LU, to set free, appearing in Gk. λυειν, to set free, release; Lat. luere, to set free. A still older sense, 'to set free by cutting a bond,' is suggested by Skt. lú, to cut, clip; Benfey, p. 799; Fick, i. 755. ¶ Note the double form of the pp., viz. lost, lorn; of which lost (= los-ed) is formed from M. E. losien: but lorn (= lor-en) is the regular strong pp. of loosen = A. S. leósan. Der. los-er, los-ing; from the same Teut. base are loose, vb., also spelt loosen, q. v., loose, adj.; leasing, q. v.; lorn, for-lorn; loss, q. v.; louse, q. v. From the base LU we also have solve, solution, ana-ly-sis, para-ly-sis, palsy.

LOSS, a losing, damage, waste. (E.) M. E. los, Chaucer, C. T. 4447, 4448. — A. S. los, destruction; to lose wurdon, i. e. perished, Elfred, tr. of Bede, lib. iv. c. 9 (or c. 10). O. Northumb. los, Matt. vii. 13 (Lindisfarne MS.). — A. S. leósan, to lose; see Lose.

LOT, a portion, share, fate. (E.) M. E. lot, a share; Rich. Cueur de Lion, 4262, in Weber's Met. Romances. — A. S. hlót; Matt. xxvii. 35, Luke, xxiii. 34; more usually (and better) spelt hlyt, Grein, ii. 90.

The A. S. hlȳt (= hluti) is formed by vowel-change from hlut, the stem of the pt. pl. of hleotan, to cast lots, a strong verb. + Du. lot, a lot; loten, to cast lots. + Icel. hluti, a part, share, hlutr, a lot; from the strong verb hljóta, to obtain by lot. + Dan. lod, a lot. + Swed. lott, a lot; lotta, to cast lots. + G. loos, a lot; loosen, to cast lots. + Goth. hlauts, a lot; Mark, xv. 24. β. All the sbs. answer to Teut. HLUTA or HLUTI, a lot; from the Teut. base HLUT, to obtain by lot; Fick, iii. 90. Der. lot, vb.; loti-er-y, q. v.; al-lot, q. v. [+]

LOTH, reluctant; the same as Loath, q. v.

LOTION, a washing, external medicinal application. (L.) 'Lot-ion, a washing or rinsing;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Lat. lotio, a washing. — Lat. lotus, pp. of lauare, to wash; see Lave.

LOTO, LOTTO, the name of a game. (Ital. — Teut.) Modern; the spelling lotto is the correct Ital. spelling; loto is a F. form of the Ital. word. — Ital. lotto, a lot, lottery. Of Teut. origin; cf. O. H. G. hlōz (G. loos), a lot; see Lot.

LOTTERY, a distribution by lot or chance. (E., with F. suffix.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and in Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 2. 32, ii. 1. 15. Formed, by analogy with words like brew-ery, fish-ery, scull-ery, and others, directly from E. lot; the suffix -ery is of F. origin, answering to Lat. -arium, -erium. ¶ The F. loterie is plainly borrowed from E.; it is in much later use; thus it is omitted by Cotgrave, and Sherwood's index to Cotgrave only gives balotage, sort, as equivalent words to E. lottery. The words brew, fish, are E. words, just as lot is. See Lot.

LOTUS, the Egyptian water-lily. (L. — Gk.) 'Lotos, or Lotus, the lote-tree;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Minshew, ed. 1627, speaks of the lote-tree or lote-tree. It is spelt lote by Chapman, tr. of Odyssey, ix. 163. — Lat. lotus, lotos. — Gk. λotos, a name given to several shrubs; (1) the Greek lotus; (2) the Cyrenean lotus, an African shrub, the eaters of which were called Loto-phagi = Lotus-eaters, from Gk. φαγεῖν, to eat; (3) the lily of the Nile; see Liddell and Scott. Der. Loto-phagi; lotus-eater.

LOUD, making a great sound, noisy. (E.) M. E. loud; more common in the adv. form loudè = loudly; Chaucer, C. T. 674, 15339. — A. S. hlūd, loud, Grein, ii. 88. + Du. luid. + G. laut, O. H. G. hlūt. β. Cf. Lat. -clutus, in comp. in-clutus, renowned. + Gk. κλυτός, renowned. + Skt. gruta, heard. γ. The Teut. form is HLUDA, a pp. form from HLU, to hear, answering to Skt. gru, to hear, Gk. κλυειν. — ✓ KRU, to hear; later form KLU; Fick, i. 62, 552. Der. loud-ly, loud-ness; from the same root are cli-ent, glo-ry, slave, and prob. loud, al-low (2).

LOUGH, a lake. (Irish.) The Irish spelling of lake. — Irish loch, a lake, lough, arm of the sea; see Loch.

LOUNGE, to loll about, move about listlessly. (F. — L.) In Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. Not an early word. 'A very flourishing society of people called loungeurs, gentlemen whose observations are mostly itinerant;' The Guardian, no. 124, dated Aug. 3, 1713. The verb is formed from a sb., being a corruption of the term lungis, defined in Minshew, ed. 1627, as meaning 'a slimme, a tall and dull slangam, that hath no making to his height; and even as late as in Kersey, ed. 1715, we find lungis explained as 'a drowsy or dreaming fellow.' It was once a well-known term, and occurs in Decker's Satiromastix; Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act ii. sc. 3, speech 1; Lyly's Euphues and his England, ed. Arber, p. 325; and the Play of Misogonus, written about 1560; see Nares and Halliwell. — F. longis, 'a lungis; a slimme, slow-back, dreaming luske [idle fellow], drowsie gangrill; a tall and dull slangam, that hath no making to his height, nor wit to his making; also, one that being sent on an errand is long in returning;' Cot. β. Littré supposes that the sense of F. longis was due to a pun, having reference to Lat. longus, long; see Long. For, strictly, Longis was a proper name, being the O. F. form of Lat. Longinus, or Longinus, the name of the centurion who pierced the body of Christ. This name Longinus first appears in the Apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, and was doubtless suggested by the Gk. λόγχη, a lance, the word used in John, xix. 34. See my note to P. Plowman, C. xxi. 82. See the word Lunge, which is certainly due to Lat. longus. Der. lounge-er. [+]

LOUSE, the name of an insect. (E.) M. E. lous, pl. lys or lis; P. Plowman, B. v. 197, 198. — A. S. lūs, as a gloss to Lat. pediculus; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Insectorum; the pl. form was lys. + Du. luis. + Dan. luus, pl. luus. + Swed. lus, pl. löss. + Icel. lús, pl. lyss. + G. laus, pl. läuse. β. All from Teut. form LUSI, a louse; named from its destroying; from Teut. base LUS, to set free, also to cause to perish; cf. Goth. lausjan, to make of none effect, i Cor. i. 17. See Loose, Loosen, Lose. Der. lous-y, lous-i-ness.

LOUT, a clown, awkward fellow. (E.) The lit. sense is 'stooping' or 'slouching.' In Levins; and in K. John, ii. 509, iii. 1. 220. Sidney has: 'this loutish clown;' Arcadia, b. i. (R.) Obviously from the old verb lout, to stoop, bow: 'he humbly louted;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 44. M. E. louten, to stoop, bow down; Chaucer, C. T. 14168; P. Plowman, B. iii. 115. — A. S. lutan, to stoop, Grein, ii. 197. + Icel. lúta, to bow down; whence lútr, adj. bent down, stooping, which may have suggested our modern lout. + Swed. luta, to lean. + Dan. lude, to stoop. β. All from Teut. base LUT, to stoop; whence also Little, q. v. Der. lout-ish, lout-ish-ness, loit-er.

LOUVER, LOOVER, an opening in the roofs of ancient houses. (F. — L.) M. E. lover, Prompt. Parv. p. 315; see Way's note. He cites: 'A louuer, or tunnell in the rooffe, or top of a great hall, to auoid smoke, fumarium, spiramentum;' Baret. Also in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 288; Romance of Partenay, 1175. In the latter passage we find: 'At louers, lowpes, archers had plente, To cast, draw, and shete, the diffence to be' = it (the town) had plenty of archers at openings and loop-holes, to cast, draw (bow), and shoot. It is translated from a French text, which has: 'Murdriers il a a louuert Pour lancier, traire, et defendre' = it had pierced loop-holes [see meurtrieres, Cot.] to cast lances, &c. — O. F. louuert (written louuert in the 15th cent. MS. just cited), put for l'ouvert = the open (space), opening; from le, def. art., and ouvert, open. The older spelling louer (louer) is due to the old F. spelling l'ouvert, which is still preserved in E. Overt, q. v. ¶ The ingenious suggestion of a derivation from Icel. ljóri, explained as 'a louvre or opening in the roof of ancient halls for the smoke to escape by and also for admitting light,' is, I think, to be rejected; it does not agree with the M. E. spelling, and the explanation is a forced one, written to suit the supposed etymology of louuer. The etymology of the Icel. ljóri shews that the true old sense was not a hole for permitting smoke to escape, but for the admission of light, which further accounts for the fact mentioned in the Icel. Dict., that men were accustomed to watch, sitting by the ljóri, i. e. by the window, not up a lantern-tower. That is, the word ljóri is from ljós, light, by the common change of s into r; and ljós (= liuhs) is from the Teut. base LUHS, to shine, an extension of LUH, to shine; see Light (1) and Lucid. β. Still more clearly, the F. origin of louuer is shewn by the prov. E. luffer-boards, a name given to the sloping boards of a belfry-tower window (looking like a Venetian blind) which have openings to admit (not of the escape of smoke or the entrance of light, but) of the escape of the sound of the bells; see Webster. This term shews that the word luffer merely meant 'opening,' and its form is close enough to that of O. F. louuert, whilst it is far removed from ljóri.

LOVAGE, an umbelliferous plant. (F. — L.) In Levins, ed. 1570, and in Cotgrave. From O. F. levesche (mod. F. livèche), 'common lovage, Lombardy lovage,' Cot.; spelt liuesche in the 13th cent. (Littré); also luvesche, as in Wright's Vocab. i. 139, col. 2, whence the E. form. Cf. Ital. levistico, lovage. — Lat. ligusticum, lovage, a plant indigenous to Liguria; whence its name. — Lat. Ligusticus, belonging to Liguria. — Lat. Liguria (prob. formerly Ligusia), a country of Cisalpine Gaul, of which the principal town was Genua, the modern Genoa. Similarly, we have Etruscan from Etruria [Etruscia?].

LOVE, affection, fondness, attachment. (E.) M. E. love (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 1137, 1161, 1167, 1170. — A. S. lufu, love; Grein, ii. 196. + G. liebe, O. H. G. liupa, liupi, love. + Russ. liubov, love. + Skt. lobha, covetousness. β. Closely allied to lief, dear; from Teut. base LUB = Skt. base LUBH, to covet, desire. See Lief. Der. love, verb, M. E. louen (= loven), older forms louien, luuien, A. S. lyfigan, lyfian, Grein, ii. 195; also lov-able, lov-er (Chaucer, C. T. 1349), lov-ing, lov-ing-ly, lov-ing-ness, lov-ing-kind-ness; also love-ly, M. E. luvelich, Ancrén Riwe, p. 428, l. 25, love-li-ness; also love-less, love-bird, love-knot, love-lock, love-lorn.

LOW (1), inferior, deep, mean, humble. (Scand.) M. E. low, pl. lowe; Chaucer, C. T. 17310; older spellings lowh, Ancrén Riwe, p. 140, l. 2, lah, Ormulum, 15246, loogh (in the comp. bi-loogh = below), Allit. Poems, B. 116. [Not found in A. S.] — Icel. lágr, low; Swed. låg; Dan. lav. + Du. laag. β. The Teut. form is LAGA, low (Fick, iii. 262); the orig. sense is 'lying flat,' used of the aspect of a country, as when we distinguish lowlands from highlands. — Teut. base LAG, to lie; see Lie (1). Der. low-ness, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 513; low-ly, Chaucer, C. T. 99, low-li-ness; low-er, verb = to (cf. better), Shak. Ant. i. 2. 129; low-church, low-land, low-lander, low-spirited.

LOW (2), to bellow as a cow or ox. (E.) M. E. loowen, lowen, Wyclif, Job, vi. 5; Jer. li. 52. — A. S. hlōwan, to bellow, resound; Grein, ii. 88. + Du. loeijen, to low. + M. H. G. luejen, O. H. G. hlōjan, to low. β. From a base HLA, to low; doubtless of imitative origin. We find a similar imitative base LĀ, to make a loud noise, appearing in Goth. laian, to revile, Russ. laiate, Lith. loti, Lat. lairaie, to bark; answering to ✓ RA, to bark, whence Skt. rā, to bark, cited by Fick, iii. 259. See Roar. Der. low-ing, 1 Sam. xv. 14.

LOW (3), a hill. (E.) In place-names; thus Lud-low = people's hill. — A.S. hlāw, a hill; also spelt hlāw, Grein, ii. 81. It also means a mound, a grave. + Goth. hlaiw, a grave, tomb; allied to Goth. hlains, a hill. Further related to Lat. clivus, a hill; clinare, to lean; and E. lean, verb. See Lean (1); the Teut. base being HLI, to lean.

LOW (4), flame. (Scand.) In Burns, The Weary Pund o' Tow, l. 10. M.E. lozhe, Ormulum, 16185. — Icel. log, a flame; allied to Lat. lux; see Lucid.

LOWER (1), to let down, abase, sink. (E.) See Low (1).

LOWER (2), to frown, look sour. (E.?) M.E. louren, Chaucer, C.T. 6848; P. Plowman, B. v. 132; spelt luren, K. Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 270. Of uncertain origin.

α. The usual etymology is to connect it with O. Du. loeren, which Hexham explains by 'to leere; also, to frown with the fore-head'; similarly, we find Low German luren identified with E. lower in the Bremen Wörterbuch, iii. 101. So also mod. Du. loeren, to peep, peer, leer (which is, I believe, quite a different word from Du. loeren, to lurk; see note on Leer).

β. But these words (at least when used in the sense of E. lower) are probably from the Teut. form HLIURA, the cheek, face, given by Fick, iii. 88. It seems easiest, therefore, to deduce M.E. luren directly from M.E. lure, an occasional form of the word which is better known as M.E. lere, the cheek. We have at least one instance of it. 'Hire lure lumes lit' = her face shines bright; Specimens of Lyric Poetry, p. 52; (a quotation already noticed, s. v. Loom (2)). Lastly, lure is allied to A.S. hleor.

γ. In this view, lower is merely a variant of leer; which is, in fact, the usual opinion (see Webster, Wedgwood, E. Müller); the only difference being that I regard both leer and lower as English words, instead of looking on them as having been borrowed from Dutch. The orig. sense was merely to look, to glance; afterwards used in a sinister sense. See Leer. Der. lower-ing or lour-ing, Matt. xvi. 3.

LOYAL, faithful, true. (F., — L.) Common in Shak. Rich. II, i. 1. 148, 181; &c. — F. loyal, 'loyall'; Cot. — Lat. legalis, legal. Doubtless, leal, legal, q. v. Der. loyal-ly, loyal-ty, loyal-ist.

LOZENGE, a rhombus; a small cake of flavoured sugar, &c., orig. of a diamond shape. (F.) Formerly spelt losenge; and esp. used as an heraldic term, to denote a shield of a diamond shape; see Romaunt of the Rose, l. 893. The word losinges in Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 227, is prob. the same word. — O.F. losenge, lozenge, 'a losenge, a lozenge, a little square cake of preserved herbs, flowers, &c.'; Cot. Mod. F. losange. Of uncertain origin; see Littré, Diez, and Scheler. β. The Spanish form is lozanje, a lozenge or figure in the shape of a diamond or rhombus; and the most likely connection is with Span. losa, a flag-stone, marble-slab, a square stone used for paving; whence losar, to pave. So also we find O.F. lauze, Port. lousa, a flat stone, a slate for covering roofs.

γ. Perhaps these words can be referred back to Lat. pl. laudes, praises, as suggested by Diez, who observes the use of Span. lauda in the sense of 'a tomb-stone with an epitaph'; Meadows. This connects it with O.F. losange, losenge, praise, flattery (Burguy), formed from O.F. los, loz, praise (Cot.) = Low Lat. laudes, lauds, pl. of Lat. laus, praise; see Laud. In this case the word meant epitaph or encomium, then grave-stone, square slab, and finally a flat square cake. Cf. E. hatchment for achievement.

LUBBER, a clumsy fellow, dolt. (C.) Another form is looby. M.E. lobre, lobur, P. Plowman, A. prol. 52; B. prol. 55; where some MSS. have looby. Of Celtic origin; cf. W. llob, a dolt, block-head; llabi, a stripling, looby.

β. The orig. sense is perhaps flabby, feeble, inefficient, from the notion of hanging loosely down, being slack. Cf. W. lleipr, flabby, feeble, llibin, flaccid, drooping, llipa, flaccid, limp; all from the Aryan base LAB, to hang loosely down; see Lap (1). We find similar forms in Du. lobbes, a booby; Swed. dial. lubber, a thick, clumsy, lazy man (Rietz). It is probable, however, that the author of P. Plowman borrowed the word from the Welsh directly. Shak. has lob, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 16, which is exactly the W. word; also to lob down = to droop, Hen. V, iv. 2. 47. Der. lubber-ly, Merry Wives, v. 5. 195. And see lump.

LUBRICATE, to make smooth or slippery. (L.) Used by Ray, On the Creation, pt. ii. (R.) Kersey, ed. 1715, has lubricitate, to make slippery. The adj. lubrick occurs in Cotgrave to translate F. lubrique; and the sb. lubricity, for F. lubricité. — Lat. lubricatus, pp. of lubricare, to make slippery. — Lat. lubricus, slippery (whence F. lubrique). Root uncertain. Der. lubricat-ion, lubricat-or; also lubricity = F. lubricité, as above.

LUCE, a fish, prob. the pike. (F., — L.) 'Luce, fysche, Lucius;' Prompt. Parv.; and see Chaucer, C.T. 352. — O.F. lus, 'a pike'; Cot. — Lat. lucius, a fish, perhaps the pike. It is probable that luce in Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 16, means a louse; see note in Schmidt.

LUCID, bright, shining, clear. (L.) 'Lucid firmament'; Spenser, φ

Mother Hubbard's Tale, l. 1259. [There is no O.F. lucide in Cot.; the E. word was taken directly from Latin.] — Lat. lucidus, bright, shining. — Lat. lucere, to shine. — Lat. luc-, stem of lux, light. — √RUK, to shine; whence also Skt. ruck, to shine, ruck, light, Gk. λευκός, white, &c. Der. lucid-ly, lucid-ness, lucid-i-ty. Also Luci-fer, Chaucer, C.T. 14005, from Lat. luci-fer (bringer of light, morning-star), from Lat. luci-, crude form of lux, and fer-re, to bring. Also luculent, Ben Jonson, Epigram 76, l. 8, from Lat. luculent-, stem of pres. pt. of lucere, to shine. Also lucubration, q. v. From the same root we have lu-nar, lu-min-ary, e-lu-cid-ate, il-lu-min-ate, pel-lu-cid, lu-s-trat-ion, il-lu-s-trate, lustre (1), lynx. And see Light (1).

LUCK, fortune, chance, good hap. (O. Low G.) 'Lurke [prob. a misprint for lukke], or wynnynge, luk, Lucrum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 316. [It would seem as if the writer wrongly identifies the word with Lat. lucrum.] Not found in A.S.; but we find O. Fries. luk, luck, good fortune; Du. luk, geluk, good fortune, happiness. + Swed. lycka. + Dan. lykke. + G. glück, contr. from M. H. G. gelück.

β. The orig. sense is favour or enticement; the above words being derived from a Teut. verb LUK, to entice, allure, appearing in Du. lokken, Swed. locka, Dan. lokke, G. locken, M. H. G. lücken, O. H. G. lucchen, to entice, allure, decoy; also in the Shetland word luck, to entice, to entreat (Edmondston). Der. luck-y, Much Ado, v. 3. 32; luck-i-ly, luck-i-ness, luck-less, luck-less-ly, ness.

LUCRE, gain, profit. (F., — L.) M.E. lucre, Chaucer, C.T. 16870. — F. lucre. — Lat. lucrum, gain. Allied to Irish luach, value, price, wages, hire; G. lohn, a reward; Gk. λῆλα, booty; Russ. lov', catching of prey, lovite, to capture. All from √LU, to win, capture as booty; Fick, i. 755. Der. lucr-at-ive, from F. lucratif, 'lucrative,' Cot. = Lat. lucratiuus, from lucratus, pp. of lucrari, to gain, which from lucrum, sb.; also lucrative-ly, ness.

LUCUBRATION, a production composed in retirement. (L.) 'Lucubration, a studying or working by candle light;' Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706. Coined, in imitation of F. words in -tion, from Lat. lucubrati-o, a working by lamp-light, night-work, lucubration. — Lat. lucubratus, pp. of lucubrare, to bring in lamps, to work by lamp-light. — Lat. *lucubrum (not given in White), prob. a faint light; clearly formed from luc-, stem of lux, light. See Lucid, Light (1).

LUDICROUS, laughable, ridiculous. (L.) 'Some ludicrous schoolmen;' Spectator, no. 191, l. 1. Formed (like arduous, &c.) immediately from Lat. ludicrous, done in sport; by change of -us to -ous. — Lat. ludi = ludo, crude form of ludus, sport. — Lat. ludere, to play. Root unknown. Der. ludicrous-ly, ness; also (from ludere) e-lude, de-lude, inter-lude, pre-lude; and (from pp. lusus), al-lus-ion, col-lus-ion, il-lus-ion.

LUFF, LOOF, to turn a ship towards the wind. (E.) The pp. loofed is in Shak. Ant. iii. 10. 18. 'To loof, usually pron. to luff'; Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706. Shak. prob. took the word from North's Plutarch, since we find 'he was driven also to loof off to have more room' in the description of the battle of Actium; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 212, note 1. The verb answers to Du. loeven, to luff, to keep close to the wind.

β. But the verb is due to an older sb., found in Mid. E. more than once. This is the M.E. lof, a 'loof,' the name of a certain contrivance on board ship, of which the use is not quite certain. We find it in Layamon, ll. 7859, 9744; the pl. being loues (= loves), 20949, 30922; see Sir F. Madden's remarks in vol. iii. p. 476 of his edition. See also Richard Cœur de Lion, l. 71; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 106; Ancrén Riwe, p. 104, l. 1 (though this passage is of doubtful meaning). The word seems to have had different senses at different times; thus the mod. Du. loef is 'weather-gage,' like mod. E. luff; but Kilian explains the O. Du. loef by scalmsus, i.e. a thole-pin. In Falconer's Marine Dict. we find loof explained as 'the after-part of a ship's bow,' whilst in Layamon and other passages in M.E. we find (as Sir F. Madden says) that it is 'applied to some part of a ship, the agency of which was used to alter its course.' Sir F. Madden quotes from the Supplement to Ducange, s. v. dracena, which Lat. word is used as equivalent to E. loof, and explained by gubernaculum. The reader should consult Sir F. Madden's note. The loof was certainly, as Mr. Wedgwood remarks, 'a timber of considerable size, by which the course of the ship was directed.' It was not, however, what we now call a rudder.

γ. In my opinion, the passages in which the word occurs go to prove that it was orig. a kind of paddle, which in large ships became a large piece of timber, perhaps thrust over the after-part of a ship's bow (to use Falconer's expression) to assist the rudder in keeping the ship's head right. δ. In any case, we may safely infer that the orig. sense was 'paddle'; and the word is really an English one, though we may have also re-borrowed the word, in the 16th century, from the cognate Du. loef. Cf. also Dan. luff, luff, weather-gage; luve, to luff; Swed. lof, weather-gage; but these may have been borrowed from Dutch. We find, however, the cognate Bavarian laffen, the blade of an oar, flat part of a rudder (Schmeller), allied to Icel. löpp (gen. lappar), the paw of an animal; see Fick, iii. 266. These words are further to be connected with Icel. löfi, the flat hand, Goth. lōfa, the flat hand, palm of the hand, Russ. lapa, a paw; the Lowland Scotch form being loof, the very same form as that with which we started. See Glove. II. Recapitulating, we may conclude that the flat or palm of the hand was the original loof which, thrust over the side of the primitive canoe, helped to direct its course when a rude sail had been set up; this became a paddle, and, at a later time, a more elaborate piece of mechanism for keeping the ship's head straight; which, being constantly associated with the idea of the wind's direction, came at last to mean 'weather-gage,' esp. as in the Du. loef houden, to keep the luff, de loef afwinnen, to gain the luff, te loef, windward; &c. A similar idea is seen in Lat. palma, (1) the palm of the hand, (2) the blade of an oar. The verb is from the older sb. ¶ We must not connect Du. loef, luff, with Du. lucht, air; nor with our own word loft. Der. a-loof, q. v.

LUG, to pull, haul, drag. (Scand.) 'To lugge, trahere, vellere;' Levins. The old sense was 'to pull by the hair.' In Gower, iii. 148, 149, we have: 'And by the chin and by the cheke She luggeth him right as she list,' i. e. she pulls him by his beard and whiskers as she pleases. So also: 'to-lugged of manye' = pulled by the hair by many people; P. Plowman, B. ii. 216. = Swed. lugga, to pull by the hair; from Swed. lugg, the fore-lock, which is prob. merely a corrupter form of Swed. lock, a lock of hair; see Lock (a). + Norweg. lugga, to pull by the hair; from lugg, the hair of the head. β. The older k (for g) appears in O. Low G. luken, to pull, esp. to pull by the hair; Brem. Wörterbuch, iii. 97, and in prov. E. louk, to weed, pull up weeds (see loukers = weedeers, in Halliwell); cf. Icel. lok, a weed; A.S. lyccan, to pull. 'Ceorl of his æcere lycð yfel weod monig' = a peasant lugs many an evil weed out of his field; Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, met. xii. 28. This word becomes in Danish luge, to weed, by the usual Dan. habit of putting g for k between two vowels. Thus Swed. lugga is from Swed. lugg, which again is from the base LUK, to pull; cf. Skt. ruj, to break, from ✓RUG, to break. γ. The Lowland Sc. lug, the ear, orig. the lobe of the ear, is the same word as Swed. lugg, the fore-lock; it appears to be a later use of it. Der. lugg-age (with F. suffix -age), Temp. iv. 231. And see Lugsail. ✱ The alleged A.S. geluggian, due to Somner, is unauthorised, and perhaps a fiction.

LUGSAIL, a sort of square sail. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) 'Lugsail, a square sail hoisted occasionally on a yard which hangs nearly at right angles with the mast;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. [He does not mention lugger, which appears to be a later word; the Dan. lugger, Du. logger, a lugger, may be borrowed from E.] Apparently from the verb to lug, it being so easily hoisted by a mere pull at the rope which supports the yard. Der. lugg-er, a ship rigged with lug-sails.

LUGUBRIOUS, mournful. (L.) Spelt lugubrous and lugubrious in Kersey, ed. 1715; but lugubrious only in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Imitated from Lat. lugubris, mournful. = Lat. lugere, to mourn. Cf. Gk. λυγρός, sad, λοιγός, destruction. = ✓RUG, to break, bend; whence also Skt. ruj, to break, bend. Der. lugubrious-ly, -ness.

LUKEWARM, partially warm, not hot. (E.) Luke means 'tepid,' and can correctly be used alone, as by Sam. Weller, in Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. 33: 'let me have nine penn'orth o' brandy and water luke.' It is sufficient to trace this word alone. M. E. leuk, leuke, luke, warm, tepid. 'Als a leuke bath, nouthur hate ne calde;' = as a tepid bath, neither hot nor cold; Pricke of Conscience, l. 7481 (Harl. MS.). 'Tha blod com forð luke' = the blood came forth warm; Layamon, 27557. β. The word is a mere extension of the older word lew, with the same sense. 'Thou art lew, nether cold nether hoot;' Wyclif, Rev. iii. 16, where one MS. has lewke. This adj. is closely allied to A.S. hleó, hleow, a shelter, a place that is protected from cold wind, &c., still preserved in mod. E. lee; see Leo. Cf. Icel. hláka, a thaw; hlána, to thaw; hlær, hlýr, warm, mild; hlýja, hlúa, to shelter. γ. The addition of k may have been suggested by A.S. wlac, tepid; see Sweet's A.S. Reader. It is usual, indeed, to derive luke from A.S. wlac immediately, but it is difficult to explain so extraordinary a change; it is more reasonable to take into account both words, viz. hleó and wlac, the former being the more important. It is curious that, whilst Du. has the extended form leukwarm, G. has the shorter form lauwarm, O. H. G. láo. ¶ The old sense of A.S. wlac seems to have been 'weak;' cf. Goth. thlakwus, flaccid, tender, Mk. xiii. 28; and perhaps Lat. flaccidus. Der. luke-warm-ly, luke-warm-ness. [†]

LULL, to sing to rest, quiet. (Scand.) M. E. lullen, Chaucer, C. T. 8429, 9697. Not found much earlier. = Swed. lulla, to hum, to lull; Dan. lulle, to lull. + O. Du. lullen, to sing in a humming voice, sing to sleep; Oudemans. β. Purely an imitative word, from the repetition of lu lu, which is a drowsier form of the more cheerful la la! used in singing. Cf. G. lallen, to lisp as children do, to babble (lit. to say la la); so also Gk. λαλεῖν, to speak. Der. lull, sb.; lull-a-by; and see loll, lollard.

LUMBAGO, pain in the loins. (L.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. = Lat. lumbago (a rare word), pain in the loins. = Lat. lumb-us, the loin. See Lumbar.

LUMBAR, belonging to the loins. (L.) 'Lumbar or Lumbary, belonging to the loins;' Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. lumbaris, adj., only found in the neut. lumbare, used as sb. to signify 'apron;' Jerem. xiii. 1 (Vulgate). = Lat. lumbus, the loin. Cf. A.S. lendenu, pl. the loins, Matt. iii. 4; Du. lendenen, s. pl.; Swed. lånd, Dan. lend, the loin; G. lende, the haunch. Root unknown. Der. (from Lat. lumbus) lumb-ago; also loin, q. v.

LUMBER (1), cumbersome or useless furniture. (F., -G.) See Trench, Select Glossary, where we find: 'The lumber-room was orig. the Lombard-room, or room where the Lombard banker and broker stowed away his pledges. . . . As these would naturally often accumulate here till they became out of date and unserviceable, the steps are easy to be traced by which the word came to possess its present meaning.' [I see no point in Mr. Wedgwood's objections to this etymology, which is clear enough.] 'To put one's clothes to lumber, pignori dare;' Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. 'Lombardeer, an usurer or broker, so called from the Lombards. . . . hence our word lumber, which signifies refuse household stuff. Lombard is also used for a bank for usury or pawns;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. This shews that the word lombard had so completely passed into the name of a place or room, that the word Lombardeer was actually coined out of this sense of it, merely to express the original sense of the word Lombard itself! Even in Shak., we find Mrs. Quickly pronouncing Lombard as Lumbert, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 31. Minshieu, ed. 1627, gives Lumbar, Lombar, or Lombard, 'a bancke for vsury or pawns.' He also gives: 'Lumber, old baggage of household stuffe, so called of the noise it maketh when it is remoued, lumber, lumber, &c.;' and if any reader prefer this fancy, he may do so; see Lumber (2). β. The Lombards were early known as lenders of money on pawn; see P. Plowman, C. vii. 241, B. v. 242, and the note. = F. Lombard, 'a Lombard;' Cot. (It also formerly meant a pawn-broker's shop; Hamilton.) = G. Langbart, Long-beard; a name given to the men of this tribe (Littré). See Long and Beard. Der. lumber-room.

LUMBER (2), to make a great noise, as a heavy rolling object. (Scand.) 'The lumbering of the wheels;' Cowper, John Gilpin, st. 6 from end. 'I lumber, I make a noise above ones head, Je fais bruit. You lumbred so above my head I could not sleep for you;' Palsgrave. 'They lumber forth the lawe;' Skelton, Colin Clout, l. 95. A frequentative verb of Scand. origin; preserved in Swed. dial. lomra, to resound, frequent. of ljumma, or ljomma, to resound, thunder; from ljumma, a great noise; Rietz. [Similarly lumber (with excrement b) stands for lumm-er, where -er is the frequentative suffix.] β. The Swed. ljumma is cognate with Icel. hljómr, a sound, tune, voice; but differs from A.S. hlyn, a loud noise (Grein) in the suffix and quantity. The Goth. hliuma means 'hearing;' Mk. vii. 35. γ. Swed. ljumma, Icel. hljómr, Goth. hliuma, are from a Teut. base HLEU-MA or HLIU-MA (Fick, iii. 89); from the Teut. verb HLU, to hear = ✓KRU, to hear. From the same Teut. verb is the Teut. adj. HLUDA, A.S. hlúd, E. loud; see Loud.

LUMINARY, a bright light. (F., -L.) 'O radiant Luminary;' Skelton, Prayer to the Father of Heaven, l. 1. = O. F. luminarie (Littré); later luminare, 'a light, candle, lamp;' Cot. = Lat. luminare, a luminary, neut. of luminaris, light-giving. = Lat. lumin-, stem of lumen (= luc-men), light. Cf. Lat. lucere, to shine; see Lucid. And see Luminous.

LUMINOUS, bright, shining. (F., -L.) 'Their sunny tents, and houses luminous;' Giles Fletcher, Christ's Triumph after Death (R.) = F. lumineux, 'shining;' Cot. = Lat. luminosus, luminous. = Lat. lumin-, stem of lumen, light; see Luminary. Der. luminous-ly, -ness. Also (from Lat. lumen) lumin-ar-y, il-lumin-ate. See Lucid. ¶ Perhaps taken directly from Latin.

LUMP, a small shapeless mass, clot. (Scand.) M. E. lompe, lump; 'a lompe of chese' = a lump of cheese; P. Plowman, C. x. 150. Of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. dial. lump, a piece hewn off a log (Rietz); Norweg. lump, a block, knop, stump (Aasen). β. Allied words are Du. lomp (O. Du. lompe), a rag, tatter, lump; Du. lomp, clumsy, dull, awkward; Norweg. lopputt, lumpy (Aasen); Icel. loppinn, with hands benumbed with cold; as well as Swed. dial. lubber, a thick, awkward, slow fellow, lubbo, to be slow (Rietz). γ. Thus it is easily seen that lump is a nasalised form of lup (weakened form lub), from a Scand. base LUP, to be slow or heavy; see Lubber. 8. This base LUP is a by-form of the Teut. base LAP, to droop, hang loosely down, Fick, iii. 266. The notion of drooping, or flapping heavily and loosely, is the fundamental one throughout. See Lap (2). ¶ The likeness to clump is accidental, but the latter word may easily have affected the sense of lump, and probably did so. See Clump. Der. lump-ing; lump-ish, Two Gent. iii. 2. 62; lumpy, lump-fish. Also lunch, q. v.

LUNAR, belonging to the moon. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. [The older word was lunary, used by Cot. to tr. F. lunaire.] — Lat. lunaris, lunar. — Lat. luna (= luc-na), the moon, lit. light-giver. Cf. Lat. lucere, to shine; see Lucid. Der. (from Lat. luna) lun-ate, i. e. moon-shaped, crescent-like; lun-at-ion, in Kersey, ed. 1715; lun-at-ic, q. v.; lun-ette, 'in fortification, a small work gen. raised before the courtin in ditches full of water,' Phillips = F. lunette, dimin. of F. lune, the moon. Also inter-lunar.

LUNATIC, affected with madness. (F., — L.) M. E. lunatik, P. Plowman, C. x. 107; used as sb. id. B. prol. 123. — F. lunatique, 'lunatick'; Cot. — Lat. lunaticus, insane; lit. affected by the moon, which was supposed to cause insanity. — Lat. lunatus, moon-like. — Lat. luna, the moon; see Lunar. Der. lunac-y, Hamlet, ii. 2. 49, iii. 1. 14.

LUNCH, a lump, large piece of bread, &c. (Scand.) 'Lunches, slices, cuts of meat or bread;' Whitby Glossary. Minshew (ed. 1627) mentions lunch, as being equivalent to 'gobbet, or peece.' The word presents no real difficulty, being a mere variant of lump; just as bunch, hunch, are variants of bump and kump; see those words. And see Lump. Der. lunch-eon, q. v.

LUNCHEON, LUNCH, a slight meal between breakfast and dinner. (Scand.) Lunch, in the modern sense, is a mere abbreviation of luncheon, though we shall trace the latter back to lunch in the sense mentioned in the article above. Cotgrave translates O. F. caribot by 'a luncheon, or big piece of bread, &c.;' also O. F. horion by 'a dust, cuff, rap, knock, thump, also, a luncheon, or big piece.' We may suspect the spellings lunch-ion, lunch-eon, to be merely literary English for lunch-in. 'A huge lunshin of bread, i. e. a large piece;' Thoresby's (Yorkshire) Letter to Ray, 1703 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 17, p. 103). And this lunshin is probably nothing but lunching, with the g obscured, just as curmudgeon (q. v.) is nothing but corn-mudging. At any rate, luncheon, luncheon, or lunchin, is nothing but an old provincial word, and a mere extension of lunch, a lump, without, at first, any change of meaning. It was easily extended to mean a slight meal, just as we now say 'to take a snack,' i. e. a snatch of food. ¶ Many and silly are the conjectures that have been made concerning this word; Wedgwood has it rightly, as above. It is quite distinct from Nuncheon, q. v. Der. lunch, verb.

LUNG, one of the organs of breathing. (E.) Gen. in the pl. lunge. M. E. lunge (sing.), Gower, C. A. iii. 100; lunges (pl.), id. iii. 99. Also longes, pl., Chaucer, C. T. 2754. — A. S. lunge, neut. sing.; lungan, pl., of which lungen is a weakened form. 'Pulmo, lungen;' Wright's Gloss., i. 45, col. 1. l. 12. — Du. long, s. pl., lungs, lights. — Icel. lunga, neut. sing.; usually in pl. lungu. — Dan. lung; pl. lunger. — Swed. lunga. — G. lunge, pl. — Allied to A. S. lungre, quickly (orig. lightly), Grein, ii. 196; also to E. long, which has been shewn to be related to Gk. ελαφύς, Skt. laghu, light; see Long (1). Thus the lunges are named from their lightness; indeed, they are also called lights. Finally, lungs, light, levity are all from the same root. Fick, iii. 265. Der. lung-wort, A. S. lungenwyrst, Gloss. to Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms.

LUNGE, a thrust, in fencing. (F., — L.) In Todd's Johnson; formerly longe, used by Smollett (Johnson). The E. a longe is a mistaken substitute for F. allonge (formerly also alonge), 'a lengthening,' Cot. So named from the extension of the body in delivering the thrust. — F. allonger (formerly alonger), to lengthen; cf. Ital. allongare, allungare, to lengthen (Florio). Compounded of F. à (Lat. ad) and *longare, only in comp. e-longare, to lengthen; see Elongate. [†]

LUPINE, a kind of pulse. (F., — L.) The pl. is both lupines and lupins in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxii. c. 25. — F. lupin, 'the pulse lupines;' Cot. — Lat. lupinum, a lupine, kind of pulse; neut. of lupinus, wolfish, though the reason of the name is not apparent; perhaps 'because it eagerly penetrates the soil' (Webster). — Lat. lupus, a wolf; cognate with Gk. λύκος, a wolf. — β. Both Lat. lupus (for lukus) and Gk. λύκος have lost initial w (u or f), which is preserved in Skt. vrika, Russ. volk, Lithuan. wilkas, and E. wolf; see Wolf. Curtius, i. 197.

LURCH (1), to lurk, dodge, steal, pilfer. (Scand.) Merely a variant of lurk, due to a weakened pronunciation; see Lurk. The senses are: (1) to lie in wait, lurk, Merry Wives, ii. 2. 26; (2) to pilfer, steal, rob, plunder, Cor. ii. 2. 105. Der. lurch-er, 'one that lies upon the lurch, or upon the catch, also a kind of hunting-dog,' Phillips, ed. 1706. [†]

LURCH (2), the name of a game. (F., — L. ?) The phr. 'to leave in the lurch' was derived from its use in an old game; to lurch is still used in playing cribbage. 'But rather leave him in the lurch;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 1151. The game is mentioned in Cotgrave. — F. lourche, 'the game called Lurche, or, a Lurch in game; il demoura lourche, he was left in the lurch;' Cot. He also gives; 'Ourche, the game at tables called lurch.' β. This suggests that lourche stands for fourche, the initial l being merely the def. article. A lurch is a term esp. used when one person gains every point before another makes one; hence a plausible derivation may be obtained by supposing that ourche meant the 'pool' in which stakes were put. The loser's stakes remained in the lurch, or he was left in the lurch, when he did not gain a single piece from the pool, which all went to others. γ. If this be so, the sense of ourche is easily obtained; it meant the 'pool,' i. e. the vase or jar into which the stakes were cast. Roquefort gives O. F. ourcel, a little vase, also spelt orcel, shewing that O. F. orce, ource, or ourche meant a vase; cf. Ital. orcio, a jar. The etymology is then obvious, viz. from Lat. urceus, a pitcher, vase. But this is a guess.

LURCH (3), to devour; obsolete. (L.) Bacon says that proximity to great cities 'lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing deare;' Essay xlv, Of Building. That is, it absorbs them, lit. gulps them down. 'To lurch, devour, or eat greedily, Ingurgit;' Baret, Alvearie. — Late Lat. lurchare, lureare, to devour greedily. Thought to be connected with lura, the mouth of a bag (White). ¶ Perhaps Lurch (3) is really Lurch (1), to filch; the Lat. verb being falsely mixed up with it. [†]

LURCH (4), a sudden roll sideways. (Scand. ?) Not in Todd's Johnson. 'A lee lurch, a sudden roll to the leeward, as when a heavy sea strikes the ship on the weather side;' Webster. A sea term. Of obscure origin; but prob. nothing but lurch (1) or lurk in the sense of to stoop or duck like one who skulks or tries to avoid notice. See Lurch (1), Lurk.

LURE, a bait, enticement, decoy. (F., — G.) M. E. lure, Chaucer, C. T. 17021. The pp. lured, enticed, occurs in P. Plowman, B. v. 439; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 5997. A term of the chase; and therefore of F. origin. — O. F. loerre, loirre (see Littré), later lurre, 'a falconer's lure;' Cot. — M. H. G. luoder (G. luder), a bait, decoy, lure. β. A derivation from M. H. G. and G. laden, to invite, is not impossible; since that verb makes lud in the past tense. See Lade, Load. Der. lure, vb.

LURK, to lie in wait, skulk, lie hid. (Scand.) M. E. lurken, lorken, Chaucer, C. T. 16126; P. Plowman, B. ii. 216. Of Scand. origin. By the usual corruption of s to r, lurken stands for an older lusken; still preserved in Swed. dial. luska, to lurk, to sneak about in order to listen, to play the eaves-dropper; Dan. luske, to sneak, skulk about; cf. G. lauschen, to listen, lurk, lie in wait; O. Du. luschen, to lurk (Oudemans). β. By the common interchange of sk with st, we see that Dan. luske is merely another form of A. S. hlystan, to listen; see Listen. γ. That M. E. lurken has lost initial h, and stands for hlurken, and that r is a later substitution for s, further appears from the shortened forms in Swed. lura, Dan. lure, to lurk, outwit, G. lauern, Icel. hlera, hlöra, to stand eaves-dropping, to listen, Du. loeren, to peep, peer, lurk, cheat, gull, senses which appear under the form lurch; see Lurch (1). So also Du. op den loer liggen, to lie in ambush, corresponds to the sense seen in lurcher, also given under Lurch (1).

δ. Thus the Teut. base is HLU, to hear; answering to ✓ KRU, to hear. See Loud, Listen. Doublet, lurch (1); perhaps lurch (4); and perhaps even lurch (3).

LURY, the same as Lory, q. v.

LUSCIOUS, delicious, very sweet. (E.; with F. suffix.) Also spelt lushious, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 54; and in Skinner. Wedgwood cites from Palsgrave: 'Fresh or lussyouse, as meate is that is not well seasoned or hath an unpleasant sweetness in it, fade.' The word cannot be traced further back, but it evidently arose (I think) from attaching the suffix -ous to the M. E. lusty, pleasant, delicious. The phonetic change from lust-i-ous to luscious and lush-i-ous is a most easy corruption; in fact, the word could not have lasted long with a pure pronunciation, as it requires care to say it. [Similarly, the M. H. G. lussam stands for an older lust-sam (Wackernagel); fashion is a doublet of faction, and t is lost after s in listen, hasten, waistcoat, Christmas, &c.] β. Observe the peculiar use of M. E. lusty; thus Chaucer speaks of 'a lusty plain,' 'lusty wether' [wether], 'the lusty seson,' &c.; C. T. 7935, 10366, 10703. See Lust.

γ. Shakespeare has lush (short for lush-i-ous) in the sense of luxuriant in growth, where Chaucer would certainly have said lusty; the curious result being that Shak. uses both words together. 'How lush and lusty the grass looks;' Temp. ii. 1. 52. The equivalence of the words could not be better exemplified. Der. luscious-ness.

LUST, longing desire. (E.) The old sense is 'pleasure.' M. E. lust, Chaucer, C. T. 192, 7956. — A. S. lust, pleasure; Grein, ii. 196. — Du. lust, delight. — Icel. lyst, losti. — Dan. lyst. — Swed. lust. — Goth. lustus. — G. lust. β. We find a Goth. fralustus, destruction, from the verb fraliusan, to lose utterly, as also G. verlust, destruction, from verlieren (= verliessen). This suggests a possible derivation from the verb to lose; see LOSE.

γ. The sense gives no difficulty; the Teut. base LUS meant 'to set free' or release; thus the orig. sense of lust was release, relaxation, perfect freedom to act loosely or at pleasure, or to do as one lists; see LIST (4).

δ. The base LUS is an extension of LU, to release, cut loose; seen in Lat. luere, Gk. λυω, to release, Skt. lū, to cut, cut away. See LOOSE.

¶ This seems to me better than to connect lust with Skt. lask, to desire, for which see LASCIVIOUS; the vowel is against it. However, such is the view taken by Curtius, i. 450. Der. lust, verb, K. Lear, iv. 6. 166, the older form being list = A. S. lystan; lust-y, M. E. lust-y, Chaucer, C. T. 80; lust-i-ly, lust-i-ness; lust-ful, Aenbite of Inwyt, p. 80; lust-ful-ness, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 21; list-less (= lust-less), Gower, C. A. ii. 111, Prompt. Parv. p. 307; list-less-ness. And perhaps lus-cious, q. v.

LUSTRATION, a purification by sacrifice, a sacrifice. (L.)

'The doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 11, sect. 12. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -tion, from Lat. lustratio, an expiation, sacrifice. = Lat. lustrare, to purify. = Lat. lustrum, an expiatory sacrifice. See LUSTRE (2).

LUSTRE (1), splendour, brightness. (F., -L.) 'Lustre of the diamante;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 73e. Spelt luster in Minshew, ed. 1627. = F. lustre, 'a luster, or gloss;' Cot. = Low Lat. lustrum, a window; lit. a place for admitting light; and hence, the light itself; connected with Lat. lustrare, to enlighten, illumine. β. This verb lustrare appears to be quite distinct from lustrare, to purify; for which see LUSTRE (2). It is prob. formed from a lost adjective *lustrus, shining, an abbreviation of luc-strus; in any case, it is to be connected with lucere, to shine; see LUCID. Der. lustr-ous, All's Well, ii. i. 41; lustrous-ly; lustre-less; also lustring, q. v.

LUSTRE (2), LUSTRUM, a period of five years. (L.) Spelt lustrum in Minshew, ed. 1627; which is the Lat. form. At a later period it was changed to lustre, rather as being a more familiar form than because it was the F. spelling; the F. form lustre is given in Cotgrave. = Lat. lustrum, an expiatory offering, a lustration; also a period of five years, because every five years a lustrum was performed.

β. The orig. sense is 'a washing' or purification; connected with Lat. lauare, to wash, luere, to cleanse, purify; see LAVER. Der. lustr-al, adj.; lustr-at-ion, q. v.

LUTE (1), a stringed instrument of music. (F., - Arab.) M. E. lute, Chaucer, C. T. 12400. It is not easy to say how the word came to us; but prob. it was through the French. The forms are: O. F. luz, leus (Roquefort), lut (Cot.), mod. F. luth; Prov. laut, Span. laud, Port. laude, Ital. luto, leuto; also O. Du. luyte (Kilian), Du. luit, Dan. lut, G. laute.

β. The Port. form laude clearly shews the Arab. origin of the word, the prefix al- being the Arab. def. article, which in other languages appears merely as an initial l. The sb. is Arab. 'ūd (with initial ain), wood, timber, the trunk or branch of a tree, a staff, stick, wood of aloes, lute, or harp; Rich. Dict. p. 1035, col. 1. Der. lute-string, Much Ado, iii. 2. 61.

LUTE (2), a composition like clay, loam. (F., -L.) Chaucer has enluting, Six-text, Group G, l. 766, on which see my note. We also find the pp. luted, i. e. protected with lute; see Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 99; Massingier, A Very Woman, iii. 1. 38. = O. F. lut, 'clay, mould, loam, dirt;' Cot. = Lat. lutum, mud, mire; lit. that which is washed over or washed down. = Lat. luere, to wash, lave; see LAVER. Der. lut-ing.

LUTESTRING, a lustrous silk. (F., - Ital., -L.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'The price of lutestring;' Spectator, no. 21. A curious corruption of lustring or lustrine. 'Lustring or Lutestring, a sort of silk;' Kersey. = F. lustrine, lustring; Hamilton. = Ital. lustrino, lute-string (a shining silk), tinsel; Meadows. β. So called from its glossiness. = Ital. lustrare, to shine. = Lat. lustrare, to shine; see LUSTRE (1).

LUXURY, free indulgence in pleasure, a dainty. (F., -L.) M. E. luxuria, Chaucer, C. T. 12418. = O. F. luxurie (?), F. luxure, 'luxury;' Cot. = Lat. luxuria, luxury. An extended form from Lat. luxus, pomp, excess, luxury.

β. Prob. connected with pollucere, to offer in sacrifice, serve up a dish, entertain; and from the same root as licere, to be lawful; see LICENSE. Der. luxuri-ous, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4. l. 498; luxuri-ous-ly, -ness; luxuri-ate, from Lat. luxuriatus, pp. of luxuriare, to indulge in luxury; luxuri-ant, Milton, P. L. iv. 260, from Lat. luxuri-ant-, stem of pres. pt. of luxuriare; luxuri-ant-ly, luxuri-ance, luxuri-anc-y.

-LY, a common adj. and adv. ending. (E.) As an adj. ending, in man-ly, &c., the A. S. form is -lic. As an adv. ending, the A. S. form is -lice. The suffix -lic is the same word as A. S. lic, like; see LIKE.

LYE, a mixture of ashes and water, water impregnated with alkaline salt imbibed from wood-ashes. (E.) 'Ley for waschyng, lye, lye, Lixivium;' Prompt. Parv. p. 294. = A. S. leah, 'lie, lee' [lye],

A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 338, 397. + Du. loog. + G. lauge, O. H. G. lougā. β. Further allied to Icel. laug, a bath; from a Teut. base LAU, to wash, akin to Lat. lauare, to wash; see LAVER. Fick, iii. 260. [†]

LYMPH, a colourless fluid in animals. (L.) A shortened form of lymphā, the older term. 'Lymphā, a clear humour;' Kersey, ed. 1715. = Lat. lymphā, water, lymph; also, a water-nymph. β. The spelling with y is due to a supposed derivation from the Gk. λύμφη, a nymph, which is probably false. The word is rather to be connected with Lat. limpidus, clear; see LIMPID. Der. lymph-at-ic, from Lat. lymphaticus.

LYNCH, to punish summarily, by mob-law. (E.) 'Said to derive its name from John Lynch, a farmer, who exercised it upon the fugitive slaves and criminals dwelling in the "dismal swamp," N. Carolina. . . This mode of administering justice began about the end of the 17th century;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The name Lynch is from A. S. hlinc, a ridge of land; see LINK (1). Der. lynch-law.

LYNX, a keen-sighted quadruped. (L., - Gk.) M. E. lynx; Aenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, p. 81, l. 6. = Lat. lynx. = Gk. λύγξ, a lynx; allied to λύχνος, a lamp, light, and named from its bright eyes. = ✓ RUK, to shine; cf. Skt. ruch, to shine, loch, to see. The corresponding Teut. base is LUH, to shine. whence G. luchs, Swed. lo, A. S. lox, a lynx. Fick, iii. 275. See LUCID. Der. lynx-eyed.

LYRE, a stringed musical instrument. (F., -L., - Gk.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 17; he also has lyrick, P. R. iv. 257. = F. lyre, 'a lyra [sic], or harp;' Cot. = Lat. lyra. = Gk. λύρα, a lyre, lute. Der. lyre-bird; lyr-ic, spelt liricke in Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetry, ed. Arber, p. 45, last line; lyr-ic-al, lyr-ic-al-ly, lyr-ate.

M.

MACADAMISE, to pave a road with small, broken stones. (Hybrid; Gael. and Heb.; with F. suffix.) 'Macadamising, a system of road-making devised by Mr. John Macadam, and published by him in an essay, in 1819,' &c.; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Macadam = son of Adam; from Gael. mac, son; and Heb. ādām, a man, from the root ādām, to be red.

MACARONI, MACCARONI, a paste made of wheat flour. (Ital., -L.?) 'He doth learn to make strange sauces, to eat anchovies, maccaroni, bovoli, fagioli, and caviare;' Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, A. ii (Mercury). 'Macaroni, gobbets or lumps of boyled paste,' &c.; Minshew, ed. 1627. = O. Ital. maccaroni, 'a kinde of paste meate boyled in broth, and drest with butter, cheese, and spice;' Florio. The mod. Ital. spelling is maccheroni, properly the plural of maccherone, used in the sense of a 'macarone' biscuit. β. Of somewhat doubtful origin; but prob. to be connected with Gk. μακαρία, a word used by Hesychius to denote βρῦμα ἐκ ζυμοῦ καὶ ἀλφίτων, a mess of broth and pearl-barley, a kind of porridge. This word is derived by Curtius (i. 405) from Gk. μάσσειν, to knead, of which the base is μακ-; cf. Gk. μάζα, dough, Russ. muka, flour, meal.

γ. Similarly the Ital. maccaroni is prob. from O. Ital. maccare, 'to bruise, to batter, to pester;' Florio. And, again, the Ital. maccare is from a Lat. base mac-, to knead, preserved in the deriv. macerare, to macerate, reduce to pulp. See MACERATE. δ. Thus the orig. sense seems to have been 'pulp'; hence anything of a pulpy or pasty nature. Der. Macaron-ic, from F. macaronique, 'a macaronick, a confused heap or huddle of many severall things' (Cot.), so named from maccaroni, which was orig. a mixed mess, as described by Florio above. The name maccaroni, according to Haydn, Dict. of Dates, was given to a poem by Theophilo Folengo (otherwise Merlinus Coccaius) in 1509; macaronic poetry is a kind of jumble, often written in a mixture of languages. And see macaroon.

MACAROON, a kind of cake or biscuit. (F., - Ital., -L.?) Formerly maccaron, as in Cotgrave. = F. maccaron; pl. maccarons, 'maccarons, little fritter-like buns, or thick losenges, compounded of sugar, almonds, rose-water, and musk, pounded together and baked with a gentel fire; also [the same as] the Ital. maccaroni;' Cot. = Ital. maccarone, a macaroon. See further under MACARONI.

¶ The sense of the word has somewhat altered.

MACAW, a kind of parrot. (Caribbean?) Said to be the native name in the Antilles, i. e. the Caribbean Islands (Webster). [†]

MACE (1), a kind of club. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. mace, King Alisaunder, 1901. = O. F. mace, mache (Burguy), mod. F. masse, a mace. = Lat. *matea, a beetle, only preserved in the dimin. mateola, a beetle, mallet; Pliny, 17. 18. 29. Prob. connected with Skt. math, to churn, crush, hurt, kill. Der. mace-bearer.

MACE (2), a kind of spice. (F., -L., - Gk., -Skt.?) The pl. maces occurs in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 10. = F. macis, 'the spice called mace;' Cot. [Much more probably from this F form than from Ital. mace, mace, in which the c is pron. as E. ch.] β. The etym. is a little obscure; the Lat. macis is a doubtful word. It is most likely that the F. macis was confused with O. F. macer, of which Cot. says that it 'is not mace, as many imagine, but a reddish, aromatic, and astringent rind of a certain Indian root.' This O. F. macer is the word concerning which we read in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xii. c. 8, that 'the macir is likewise brought out of India; a reddish bark or rind it is of a great root, and beareth the name of the tree itself.' In all likelihood, the mace and the macir are kindred words, named from some common quality, as, possibly, from their fragrance. — Lat. macer, i. e. 'macir'; Pliny. — Gk. μάκερ; doubtless a borrowed word from the East. Prob. from a Skt. source; cf. Skt. makar-anda, the nectar of a flower, a kind of jasmine; makura, mukura, a bud, a tree (the Mimusops elengi), Arabian jasmine. [†]

MACERATE, to soften by steeping, to soak. (L.) In Spenser, Virgil's Gnat, l. 94. — Lat. maceratus, pp. of macerare, to steep; a frequentative from a base mac-. — Russ. mochite, to steep. — Gk. μάσσω (base μακ-), to knead, wipe; Curtius, i. 405. — Skt. mach, to pound (very rare; see Fick, i. 707). — ✓MAK, to pound, knead; whence also Russ. mika, meal. Der. macerat-ion. From the same root, mass (r), q. v.; perhaps macaroni, meagre, e-maciated.

MACHINE, a contrivance, instrument. (F., — L., — Gk.) In Shak. Hamlet, ii. 2. 124. Rare in earlier times, but we find the spelling machine in Layamon, l. 15478. — F. machine. — Lat. machina.

— Gk. μηχανή, a device, machine; cf. μήχος, means, contrivance. β. From the base μηχ, answering to an Aryan ✓MAGH, and Teut. MAG, to have power; whence also the E. verb may; Curtius, i. 416. The E. make is also an allied word. See May (r), Make. Der. machin-er-y, machin-ist; machin-ate, from Lat. machinatus, pp. of machinari, to contrive, which is from the sb. machina; machin-at-ion, K. Lear, i. 2. 122, v. 1. 46, machin-at-or.

MACKEREL, the name of a fish. (F., — L.) M. E. makerel, Havelok, 758. — O. F. makerel, in Neckam's Treatise de Utensilibus; Wright's Vocab. i. 98, l. 1. (Mod. F. maquereau). β. It is usual to derive O. F. makerel from Lat. macula, a stain; 'from the dark blotches with which the fish is marked' (Wedgwood). It is rather from the original Lat. word (macus or maca) of which macula is the extant diminutive form, and of which we find a trace in Span. maca, a stain, a bruise on fruit. γ. That this is the right etymology of the word is clear from another sense of O. F. maquereau; Cotgrave gives: 'Maquereaux, red scorches or spots on the legs of such as use to sit near the fire.' [The name of the brill arose in a similar way; see Brill.]

γ. The right etymology of Lat. macula is perhaps that given by Fick, i. 707; viz. from ✓MAK, to pound, whence also E. macerate; see Macerate. This is sustained by Ital. ammaccare, to crush, bruise, Span. machar, to pound, and other words mentioned by Diez (s. v. macco). The senses 'pound, bruise, beat black and blue, stain,' are thus arranged in what is probably their right order. ¶ The suggestion in Mahn's Webster, that the F. maquereau, a mackerel, is the same word as O. F. maquereau, a pandar (Cotgrave), from 'a popular tradition in France that the mackerel, in spring, follows the female shads, which are called vierges or maids, and leads them to their mates,' is one which I make bold to reject. It is clear that the story arose out of the coincidence of the name, and that the name was not derived from the story. The etymology of O. F. maquereau, a pandar, is from the Teut. source preserved in Du. makelaar, a broker, pandar, from Du. makelen, to procure, bring about, frequentative form of maken, to make.

MACKINTOSH, a waterproof overcoat. (Gael.) From the name of the inventor.

MACROCOSM, the whole universe. (Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt macrocosmus in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Coined from Gk. μακρό-, crude form of μακρός, long, great; and κόσμος, the world. See Microcosm.

MACULATE, to defile. (L.) Used as a pp. in The Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, v. 1. 134. — Lat. maculatus, pp. of maculare, to spot. — Lat. macula, a spot. — ✓MAK, to pound, bruise, hence, to mark with a bruise. See further under Mackerel. Der. maculat-ion. Shak. Troil. iv. 4. 66; im-maculate, q. v. And see mail (i).

MAD, insane, foolish. (E.) The vowel was formerly long. M. E. mad, spelt maad in Li Beau Disconus, l. 2001, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. ii.; made in The Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 2091. Stratmann also cites 'I waxe mad' (MS. mo) from Specimens of Lyric Poetry, ed. Wright, p. 31, where it rhymes with blod=blood. Cf. medschipe=madness; Ancren Riwle, p. 148, l. 1. — A. S. ge-méd, ge-maad, in a gloss (Lye); cf. A. S. méd-mód, madness, Grein, ii. 202. — O. Sax. ge-méd, foolish. — O. H. G. ka-meit, gi-meit, vain. — Icel. meiddr, pp. of meiða, to maim, hurt. — Goth. ga-maids, bruised, maimed; Luke, iv. 19, xiv. 13, 21. β. Thus the orig. sense appears to be 'damaged,' or 'seriously hurt.' Root uncertain. ¶ Not connected with Ital. matto, mad (see Mate (2)); nor with

Skt. matta, mad (pp. of mad, to be drunk). Der. mad-ly, mad-ness; also M. E. madden, to be mad, Wyclif, John, x. 20 (obsolete); also madd-en, to make mad, for which Shak. uses the simple form mad, Rich. II. v. 5. 61, &c.; mad-cap (from mad and cap), K. John, i. 84; mad-house; mad-man, L. L. L. v. 2. 338; mad-wort. [†]

MADAM, my lady, a lady. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. madame, King Alisaunder, 269. — F. madame=ma dame, my lady. — Lat. mea domina, my lady. See Dame, Doublet, madonna.

MADDER, the name of a plant. (E.) M. E. madir, mader (with one d); Prompt. Parv. — A. S. maderu, mædere, in Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 337; cf. feld-mædere, field-madder, Wright's Vocab. i. 68, col. 2. — Icel. madra. — Du. meed. Cf. Skt. madhura, sweet, tender; whence fem. madhurā, the name of several plants (Benfey).

MADMOISELLE, miss; lit. my damsel. (F., — L.) Milton, Apology for Smectymnus, speaks slightly of 'grooms and madamoiselles' (R.). — F. mademoiselle, spelt madamoiselle in Cotgrave. — F. ma, my; and demoiselle, formerly damoiselle, a damsel. See Madame and Damsel.

MADONNA, my lady, Our Lady. (Ital., — L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 47. — Ital. madonna. — Ital. ma, my; and donna, lady. — Lat. mea, my; and domina, lady, dame. See Dame, Doublet, madame.

MADREPORE, the common coral. (F., — Ital., — L. and Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — F. madrépore, madreporé. — Ital. madrepóra, explained in Meadows as 'a petrified plant.'

β. Of somewhat uncertain origin; but prob. the first part of the word is Ital. madre, mother, used in various compounds, as madre-selva (lit. mother-wood), honeysuckle, madre-bosco (lit. mother-bush), woodbine (Florio), madre perla, mother of pearl (Florio); from Lat. matrem, acc. of mater, mother; see Mother.

γ. The part -pora appears to be from the Gk. πῶρος, a light, friable stone, also a stalactite. Hence madre-pore=mother-stone, a similar formation to madre perla (lit. mother-pearl). ¶ If this be right, it has nothing to do with F. madré, spotted, nor with pore. But it has certainly been understood as connected with the word pore, as shewn by the numerous similar scientific terms, such as calenipora, tubipora, dentipora, gemmipora, &c.; see the articles in Engl. Cycl. on Madrephyllaea and Madreporea. It does not follow that the supposed connection with pore was originally right; it only shews that this sense was substituted for that of the Gk. πῶρος.

MADRIGAL, a pastoral song. (Ital., — L., — Gk.) 'Melodious birds sing madrigals,' Marlowe, Passionate Shepherd; cited in Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 1. 18, 23. — Ital. madrigale, pl. madrigali, madriali, 'madrigals, a kind of short songs or ditties in Italian'; Florio. It stands for mandrigale, and means 'a shepherd's song'; cf. mandriale, mandriano, 'a herdsman, a grasier, a drover; [also] as madrigale'; Florio. — Ital. mandra, 'a herd, drove, flock, folde'; Florio. — Lat. mandra, a stall, stable, sty. — Gk. μάδρα, an inclosure, fold, stable. — Skt. mandurá, a stable for horses; prob. from mand, to sleep. ¶ The suffix -ig-ale=Lat. -ic-alis. Cf. E. vertic-al.

MAGAZINE, a storehouse, store, store of news, pamphlet. (F., — Ital., — Arab.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 816. — O. F. magazin, 'a magazin,' Cot.; mod. F. magasin. — Ital. magazzino, a storehouse. [Cf. Span. magacen, also almagacen, where al is the Arab. article.] — Arab. makhzan (pl. makházin), a storehouse, granary, cellar; Rich. Dict. p. 1366. Cf. also khizánat, a magazine, treasure-house; from khazn, a laying up in store; id. pp. 609, 610.

MAGGOT, a grub, worm. (W.) M. E. magot, magat (with one g), given as a variant of 'make, mathe, wyrm in the fleshe;' Prompt. Parv. p. 321. Spelt maked in Wright's Vocab. i. 255, col. 1, to translate Lat. tarinus [misprint for tarmus] or simax [= Lat. cimex]. — W. macai, maceiad, a maggot; cf. magiaid, worms, grubs. The latter form is clearly connected with magiad, breeding, rearing, magad, a brood; from magu, to breed, cognate with Bret. maga, Corn. maga, to feed, nourish. Thus a maggot is 'a thing bred.'

β. Perhaps W. magu is connected with Lat. magnus, Gk. μέγας, great, from the notion of 'growth'; see May (1). ¶ This word maggot is quite distinct from M. E. make, cited above; the latter is more commonly written mawk, as in Wright's Vocab. i. 190, col. 1; and is still in use in prov. E. Mawk is a contraction from makek, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 326; from Icel. maðkr, a maggot; see Mawkish. Cf. Dan. maddik, madike, a maggot. Icel. mað-kr, Dan. mad-ike, are merely diminutives of the word which appears in E. as moth; see Moth. (Fick, iii. 224.) Der. maggot-y.

MAGI, priests of the Persians. (L., — Gk., — Pers.) In P. Plowman, C. xxii. 85. Borrowed from Lat. magi, Matt. ii. 1 (Vulgate). — Gk. μάγοι, Matt. ii. 1; pl. of μάγος, a Magian, one of a Median tribe (Herod. i. 101), hence, an enchanter, wizard, juggler. Properly, one of the priests or wise men in Persia who interpreted dreams, &c. (Liddell). β. The orig. sense was probably 'great;' from the Zend max, great (Fick, i. 168), cognate with Gk. μέγας, Lat. magnus, great. — ✓ MAGH, to have power. See May (1). Der. mag-ic, q. v. ¶ It is interesting to note that the word magus, which Sir H. Rawlinson translates by 'the Magian,' occurs in cuneiform characters in an inscription at Behistan; see Schleicher, Indogerm. Chrestomathie, p. 151; Nineveh and Persepolis, by W. S. W. Vaux, ed. 1851, p. 405.

MAGIC, enchantment. (F., — L., — Gk., — Pers.) M. E. magike, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 4634. — F. magique, adj. 'magical'; Cot. — Lat. magicus, magical. — Gk. μαγικός, magical. — Gk. μάγος, one of the Magi, an enchanter. See Magi. β. The sb. magic is an abbreviation for 'magic art,' Lat. ars magica. Der. magic-al, magic-al-ly; magic-ian, M. E. magicien, Chaucer, C. T. 14213, from F. magicien, 'a magician'; Cot.

MAGISTERIAL, master-like, authoritative. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined, with suffix -al, from Lat. magisteri-us, magisterial, belonging to a master. — Lat. magister, a master. See Magistrate. Der. magisterial-ly, magisterial-ness.

MAGISTRATE, a justice of the peace. (F., — L.) M. E. maiestrat (= majestrat), Wyclif, Luke, xxiii. 13. — F. magistrat, 'a magistrate, ruler'; Cot. — Lat. magistratus, (1) a magistracy, (2) a magistrate. — Lat. magister, a master. See Master. Der. magistrac-y.

MAGNANIMITY, greatness of mind. (F., — L.) M. E. magnanimitee, Chaucer, C. T. 15578. — F. magnanimité, 'magnanimity'; Cot. — Lat. magnanimitatem, acc. of magnanimitas, greatness of mind. — Lat. magn-, stem. of magnus, great; and animus, the mind. See Magnate and Animus. See Magnanimous.

MAGNANIMOUS, high-minded, noble. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, iii. 6. 70. Formed (by changing -us to -ous, as in ardu-ous, contemporane-ous, &c.) from Lat. magnanimus, great-souled. — Lat. magn-, stem. of magnus, great; and animus, the mind. See Magnanimity. Der. magnanimous-ly.

MAGNATE, a great man, noble. (F., — L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. — F. magnat. — Lat. magnatem, acc. of magnas, a prince. — Lat. magn-, stem. of magnus, great. β. Lat. magnus is cognate with Gk. μέγας, great, Skt. mahant, great, and E. much; see Much. ¶ Magnate is a Hungarian and Polish use of the Lat. word; the F. magnat is, more strictly, due to the pl. magnats = Lat. magnates. For derivatives from Lat. magnus, see Magnitude.

MAGNESIA, the oxide of magnesium. (Late Lat., — Gk.) Modern. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Coined from some supposed resemblance to the mineral called by a similar name in Gk., from Lat. Magnesia, fem. of Magnesium, of or belonging to the country called Magnesia. (The name magnesia, for a mineral, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 16923.) — Gk. Μαγνήσιος, belonging to Magnesia, in Thessaly; whence λίθος Μαγνήτιος or λίθος Μαγνήσιος, lit. Magnesian stone, applied to (1) the magnet, (2) a metal that looked like silver. Der. magnesi-um. See Magnet.

MAGNET, the loadstone, a bar having magnetic properties. (F., — L., — Gk.) M. E. magnete, Prompt. Parv. p. 325. — O. F. magnete; a variation of manete, a word found in a F. MS. of the 13th cent.; see Littré, s. v. magnétique. — Lat. magnetem, acc. of magnes, put for magnes lapis = Magnesian stone, the loadstone. — Gk. Μάγνητις (stem Μάγνητ-), Magnesian; also Μαγνήτης, whence λίθος Μαγνήτης, the Magnesian stone, magnet. See Magnesia. ¶ Spenser has the Lat. form magnes, F. Q. ii. 12. 4. Der. magnet-ic, magnet-ic-al, magnetic-al-ly, magnet-ism, magnet-ise.

MAGNIFICENT, doing great things, pompous, grand. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 193. — Lat. magnificenti-, stem. of magnificens, doing great things. — Lat. magni-, for magno-, crude form of magnus, great; and -fic-, put for fac-, base of facere, to do; with suffix -ent of a pres. part. See Magnify. Der. magnificent-ly; magnificence = F. magnificence, 'magnificence', Cot. So also magnific-al, A. V. 1 Chron. xxii. 5, from Lat. magnificus, grand.

MAGNIFY, to enlarge, praise highly. (F., — L.) M. E. magnifier, Wyclif, Matt. xxiii. 5. — F. magnifier, 'to magnify'; Cot. — Lat. magnificare, to make large. — Lat. magni- = magno-, crude form of magnus, great; and -fic-, put for fac-, base of facere, to make, do. See Magnate and Fact.

MAGNILOQUENCE, elevated or pompous language. (L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Coined, by analogy with F. words in -enèc (= Lat. -entia), from Lat. magniloquentia, elevated language. — Lat. magni- = magno-, crude form of magnus, great; and loquentia, discourse, from loquent-, stem. of pres. part. of loqui, to speak. See Magnate and Loquacious. Der. magniloquent, a coined word.

MAGNITUDE, greatness, size. (L.) In Minshen, ed. 1627. [There is no F. magnitudo.] — Lat. magnitudo, greatness. — Lat. magni- = magno-, crude form of magnus, great; with suffix -tudo, expressive of quality. See Magnate. ¶ The derivatives from Lat. magnus are numerous, viz. magn-animity, magn-animous, magnate, magnificent, magnify, magni-loquent, magni-tude. From the base mag- of the same word we have also mag-istrate, mag-isterial, master, majesty, major, mayor. And see Much and May (1).

MAGNOLIA, the name of a genus of plants. (F.) 'A genus of plants named in honour of Pierre Magnol, who was professor of medicine and prefect of the botanic garden of Montpellier [in France]. He was born in 1638, and died in 1715;' Engl. Cycl. See his Botanicum Monspelense, 1686.

MAGPIE, the name of a bird. (Hybrid; F., — L., — Gk.; and F., — L.) 1. Called magot-pie in Macbeth, iii. 4. 125. We also find prov. E. maggoty-pie; and madge, meaning (1) an owl, (2) a magpie. The prefixes Mag, Magot, Maggoty (like Madge) are various forms of the name Margaret; cf. Robin as applied to the red-breast, Jenny to the wren, Philip to the sparrow. Mag may be taken to be short for Magot = F. Margot, which is (1) a familiar form of F. Marguerite, and (2) a name for the magpie. — F. Margot, put for Marguerite. — Lat. margarita, a pearl. — Gk. μαργαρίτης, a pearl, prob. a word of Eastern origin; cf. Pers. murwārid, a pearl; Rich. Dict. p. 1396. 2. The syllable pie = F. pie, from Lat. pica, a magpie; see Pie (1).

MAHOGANY, the name of a tree and a wood. (W. Indian.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; 'said to have been brought to England by Raleigh, in 1595;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Mahogany is 'the native S. American name' (Webster). It comes from Campeachy, Honduras, Cuba, &c.

MAHOMETAN; see Mohammedan.

MAID, MAIDEN, a girl, virgin. (E.) 1. Mayde occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 13, l. 14. It is not common in early M. E., and is, practically, merely a corruption of maiden, by the loss of final n, rather than a form derived from A. S. mæð or mægð, a maiden (Grein, ii. 216). 2. The usual early M. E. word is maiden or meiden, Ancren Riwe, pp. 64, 166. — A. S. mæden, a maiden (Grein, ii. 216); also mæden, Mark, iv. 28, later text maiden. 3. We also find M. E. may in the same sense; Chaucer, C. T. 5271. — A. S. mæg, a female relation, a maid; Grein, ii. 215. β. Both A. S. mæg-den and mæg-ēð are extensions from the older word mæg, also spelt mæge, Grein, ii. 216. Moreover, mæg-den = mæg-ed-en = mæg-ēð-en is the dimin. form of mæg-ēð; see March, A. S. Gram. art. 228. γ. Mæg-ēð is cognate with Goth. magaths, a virgin, maid, where the suffix -ths answers to Aryan suffix -ta. A. S. mæg or mæge is the fem. of A. S. mæg, a son, kinsman (Grein, ii. 214), a very common word, and cognate with Goth. magus, a boy, child, Luke, ii. 43; also with Icel. mögr, a boy, youth, son. δ. The orig. sense of magus is 'a growing lad,' one increasing in strength; from the Teut. base MAG, to have power, whence also might, main. See May (1). Der. maiden-hood = A. S. mædenhād, Grein, ii. 216; also spelt maiden-head = M. E. meidenhed or meidenhede, Gower, C. A. ii. 230, l. 8, which is a mere variant of maiden-hood; maiden-ly, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 217, Skelton, Garland of Laurel, l. 865; maiden-li-ness; maiden-hair; also maid-child, Levit. xii. 5.

MAIL, (1) steel network forming body-armour. (F., — L.) 'For though thy husband armed be in maille'; Chaucer, C. T. 9078; the pl. mayles is in the Anturs of Arthur, st. xxx. — O. F. maille, 'maile, or a link of maile, whereof coats of maile be made; . . . any little ring of metall; . . . also, a mash [mesh] of a net'; Cot. — Lat. macula, a spot, speck, hole, mesh of a net, net. See Maculate.

MAIL (2), a bag for carrying letters. (F., — O. H. G.) M. E. male, a bag, wallet; Chaucer, C. T. 3117, 12854. — O. F. male (mod. F. malles), 'a male, or great budget'; Cot. — O. H. G. malaha, M. H. G. malhe, a leathern wallet. + Gael. and Irish mala, a bag, sack. Cf. Gk. μολγός, a hide, skin. Der. mail-bag, mail-coach, mail-cart.

MAIM, a bruise, injury, crippling hurt. (F., — C. ?) Also spelt mahim in Law-books; Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. M. E. maim, pl. maimes, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 135, l. 27; the pp. y-maymed is in the preceding line. The verb occurs also in Chaucer, C. T. 6314. — O. F. mehaing, 'a maim, or . . . abatement of strength . . . by hurts received'; Cot. Whence the verb mehaigner, 'to maim'; id. Cf. Ital. magagna, a defect, blemish; whence magagnare, to spoil, vitiate. β. Of uncertain origin; perhaps Celtic; from Bret. machañ, mutilation; whence machaña, to maim, mutilate. This etym. would be quite satisfactory if we were sure that the Bret. word is not adapted from the F. Yet machañ looks as if it might be connected with Bret. macha, to press, oppress, trample on, and mach, crowd, press, oppression. We can hardly connect it with Lat. mancus, maimed. The word remains unsolved. Der. maim, verb. [†]

MAIN (1), sb., strength, might. (E.) To be distinguished from main (2), though both are from the same Aryan root. M. E. main, dat. maine, Gower, C. A. iii. 4, l. 20; also mein, as in 'with al his mein,' Floriz and Blancheflor, ed. Lumby, l. 17. — A. S. mægen, strength; Grein, ii. 217. + Icel. megin, strength. — Teut. base MAG, to have power = Aryan ✓ MAGH; see May (1).

MAIN (2), adj., chief, principal. (F., — L.) In Shak. Rich. III,

v. 3. 299. Prob. not in use much earlier, though maine saile (=main-sail) occurs in the Bible of 1551, Acts, xxvii. 40. — O. F. maine, magne, great, chief (Burguy). — Lat. magnus, great. — MAGH, to have power. See MAY (1). ¶ In some cases, main = Icel. megin, strength, also chief. Thus main sea = Icel. meginsjór. But the root is the same. Der. main-ly; also main-deck, -mast, -sail, -spring, -stay, -top, -yard; main-land.

MAINTAIN, to keep in a fixed state, keep up, support. (F., — L.) M. E. maintenen, mayntenen, K. Alisaunder, l. 1592. — F. maintenir, 'to maintain'; Cot. — Lat. manu tenere, to hold in the hand; or more likely, in late Latin, to hold by the hand, to support or aid another, as shewn by the use of M. E. maintenen, to aid and abet, P. Plowman, B. iii. 90, and note. — Lat. manu, abl. case of manus, the hand; and tenere, to hold. See Manual and Tenable. Der. maintain-able, maintain-er; mainten-ance, M. E. meintenance, spelt mentenance in Shoreham's Poems, p. 100, l. 19, from O. F. maintenance, 'maintenance'; Cot.

MAIZE, Indian corn or wheat. (Span., — W. Indian.) 'Indian maiz;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 49; and in Essay 33. Also in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1681 (R.) = Span. maiz, maize. — W. Indian mahiz, mahis, in the language of the island of Hayti (S. Domingo); Mahn (in Webster).

MAJESTY, grandeur, dignity. (F., — L.) M. E. magestee, Chaucer, C. T. 4320. — O. F. majestet, majeste, later majesté, 'majesty'; Cot. — Lat. maiestatem, acc. of maiestas, dignity, honour. — Lat. māies, put for mag-ias, with suffix -tas significant of state or condition. Here mag-ias = mag-yans is from the base mag- of Lat. mag-nus, great, with the addition of a comparative suffix; see Schleicher, Compendium, § 232. The sense of maiestas is the 'condition of being greater,' hence, dignity. See Major, Magnitude. Der. majest-ic, a coined word, Temp. iv. 118; majest-ic-al, L. L. L. v. 2. 102; majest-ic-al-ly, 1 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 479.

MAJOR, greater; the title of an officer in the army. (L.) Chiefly used (as an adj.) as a term in logic, as in 'this maior or first proposition;' Fryth, Works, p. 147, col. 1. 'The major part;' Cor. ii. 1. 64. — Lat. maior, greater; comparative of magnus, great; see Magnitude. See Schleicher, Compendium, § 232. Der. major-ship, major-general; major-domo, imitated from Span. mayordomo, a house-steward (see Domestic); also major-i-ty, 1 Hen. IV. iii. 2. 109, from F. majorité, 'majority'; Cot. Doublet, mayor. [†]

MAKE, to fashion, frame, cause, produce. (E.) M. E. maken, makien; pt. t. makede, made, pp. maked, maad, mad; Chaucer, C. T. 9. 33, 396. — A. S. macian, pt. t. macode, pp. macod; see Sweet, A. S. Reader; also ge-macian (Grein). + G. machen, O. H. G. machôn, to make. β. From the Teut. base MAK, another form of MAG, to have power; see MAY (1). Der. make, sb., Gower, C. A. ii. 204, l. 10 (see Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, sect. xx. l. 24); mak-er, P. Plowman, B. x. 240; make-peace, Rich. II. i. 1. 160; make-shift, make-weight; and see match (1).

MALACHITE, a hard green stone. (Gk.) 'Malachites, Molochites, a kind of precious stone of a dark green colour, like the herb mallows;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Formed, with suffix -ites (= Gk. -ιτης) from Gk. μαλάχη, a mallow. See Mallow.

MALADMINISTRATION, bad administration. (F., — L.) Spelt maleadministration in Swift, Sentiments of a Church of Eng. Man, s. 2 (R.) — F. male, fem. of mal (= Lat. malus), bad; and F. administration. See Malice and Administer. ¶ So also mal-adjustment, mal-adroit, mal-apert, mal-conformation, mal-content, &c.; these have the same F. adj. as a prefix.

MALADY, disease, illness. (F., — L.) M. E. maladie, maladye, Chaucer, C. T. 421, 1375. Also earlier, in O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 31, l. 13. — F. maladie, 'malady'; Cot. — F. malade, sick, ill; oldest spelling malabde (Littre). Cf. Prov. malaptes, malauates, malaudes, sick, ill; Bartsch, Chrestomathie. — Lat. male habitus, out of condition; see White, s. v. habitus. — Lat. male, adv., badly, ill, from malus, bad; and habitus, held, kept, in a certain condition, pp. of habere, to have. See Malice and Habit. ¶ The usual derivation is that given by Diez, who imagined F. malade to answer to male aptus; there appears to be no authority for the phrase, which (like ineptus) would mean 'foolish' rather than 'ill.' See Mr. Nicol's letter in The Academy, April 26, 1879. We find male habens, sick, in the Vulgate, Mett. iv. 24, Luke, vii. 2, &c.

MALAPERT, saucy, impudent, ill-behaved. (F., — L.) The true sense is 'ill-skilled,' 'ill-bred.' In The Court of Love, 737 (about A. D. 1500). O. F. mal apert. — O. F. mal = Lat. male, adv. badly, ill; and apert (also ill-spelt appert), 'apparent (sic), open, evident, plain, manifest; also expert, ready, dexter, prompt, active, nimble; feat, handsome in that he does;' Cot. β. The O. F. apert, open, acquired the sense of 'skilful' or 'well-behaved'; see Littre, s. v. apertement, where he cites from Joinville: 'Mal apertement se partirent les Turs de Damiete' = the Turks departed from Damietta in a very unskilful way. Compare also the following: 'Gardes vos, dames, tot acertes Qu'au mangier soies molt apertes' = take care, ladies, for a certainty, that ye be very well-bred at meal-time; Bartsch, Chrestomathie, col. 279, l. 5. γ. Hence the O. F. apert is simply derived from Lat. apertus, open, pp. of aperire, to open; see Aperient. Der. malapert-ly, malapert-ness.

MALARIA, miasma, noxious exhalation. (Ital., — L.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. — Ital. mal' aria, for mala aria, bad air. Mala is fem. of malo, bad, from Lat. malus, bad; see Malice. Aria is noticed under Debonair. [†]

MALCONTENT, MALECONTENT, discontented. (F., — L.) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI. iv. 1. 10, 60. — O. F. malcontent, 'male-content'; Cot. — F. mal, adv., from Lat. male, badly; and F. content. See Malice and Content.

MALÉ, masculine. (F., — L.) M. E. male. 'Male and female;' Wyclif, Matt. xix. 4. Cf. Chaucer, C. T. 5704. — O. F. masle (later male), 'a male,' Cot. (who gives both spellings); mod. F. mâle; earliest spelling mascle (Burguy). — Lat. masculus, male; formed with suffixes -cu and -l from mas, stem of mās, a male creature, man (gen. mar-is = mas-is). β. The Lat. mās stands for man-s, a man, cognate with E. man and Vedic Skt. manus, a man. See Man. Der. mascul-ine, mallard. ¶ Nowise connected with female.

MALEDICTION, a curse, execration. (F., — L.) In Shak. K. Lear, i. 2. 160. Spelt malediction in the Bible of 1551, Gal. iii. 10. — F. malediction, 'a malediction'; Cot. — Lat. maledictionem, acc. of maledictio, a curse. — Lat. maledictus, pp. of maledicere, to speak evil against. — Lat. male, adv., badly; and dicere, to speak. See Malice and Diction. Doublet, malison.

MALEFACTOR, an evil-doer. (L.) 'Heretik or any malefactor;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 941 h. — Lat. malefactor, an evil-doer. — Lat. male, adv., badly; and factor, a doer, from facere, to do. See Malice and Fact. Der. So also malefaction, Hamlet, ii. 2. 621, from factionem, acc. of factio, a doing.

MALEVOLENT, ill-disposed to others, envious. (L.) Lit. 'wishing ill.' In Shak. 1 Hen. IV. i. 1. 97. — Lat. malevolens, stem of malevolens, wishing evil. — Lat. male, adv., badly, ill; and volens, pres. pt. of velle, to wish. See Malice and Voluntary. Der. malevolent-ly, malevolence (made to pair with benevolence, but the Lat. malevolentia is a real word, though there is no F. malevolence).

MALFORMATION, an ill formation. (F., — L.) Coined from mal and formation; see Maladministration.

MALICE, ill will, spite. (F., — L.) M. E. malice, Rob. of Glouc. p. 570, l. 18. — F. malice. — Lat. malitia, badness, ill will. — Lat. mal-, for malo, crude form of malus, bad; with suffix -itia. β. The orig. sense of Lat. malus was dirty, or black; cf. Gk. μέλας, black, Skt. mala, dirty, malina, dirty, black, sinful, bad. Cf. also Irish maile, evil, W. mall, softness, evil; Corn. malan, the devil; and see Mole (1). γ. All from a root MAL, to soil, dirty; a secondary formation from √MAR, to grind, grind to dust or powder. [Hence W. mall also means 'softness,' and is allied to Lat. mollius, soft, from the same root.] See Mar. Der. malici-ous, M. E. malicious, K. Alisaunder, 3323, 5045, from F. malicieus; malicious-ly, -ness.

MALIGN, unfavourable, malicious. (F., — L.) 'The spirit malign;' Milton, P. L. iii. 553; cf. iv. 503, &c. [Curiously enough, the derived verb malign, to curse, is found earlier, in Sir T. More, Works, p. 37 b.] — O. F. maling, fem. maligne, 'malignant'; Cot. (Mod. F. malin). — Lat. malignus, ill-disposed, wicked; put for malign-us, ill-born; like benignus for beni-gen-us. — Lat. mal- = malo, crude form of malus, bad; and gen-, base of gignere, to produce. See Malice and Generate. Der. malign, verb (as above), due to Lat. malignare, to act spitefully; malign-ly, malign-er; also malignant, Temp. i. 2. 257, from Lat. malignant-, stem of pres. pt. of malignare, to act spitefully; malign-ant-ly; malign-ancy, Tw. Nt. ii. 1. 4; malign-i-ty, M. E. malignitee, Chaucer, Persones Tale, De Invidia (Six-text, l. 513), from F. malignité = Lat. malignitatem, acc. of malignitas, malignity.

MALINGER, to feign sickness. (F., — L.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. Coined from F. malingre, adj. diseased, sickly, or 'sore, scabby, ugly, loathsome;' Cot. — F. mal, badly; and O. F. haingre, heingre, thin, emaciated (Burguy). — Lat. male, adv. badly, from malus, bad; and ager, acc. of ager, ill, sick (whence O. F. haingre with intercalated n and initial h). See Malice.

MALISON, a curse. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. malison, spelt malusin in Havelok, 426. — O. F. malison, malichons, maliceon, maldeceon; see maldeceon, malichons in Roquefort. A doublet of malediction, just as benison is of benediction; see Malediction and Benison.

MALL (1), a large wooden hammer or beetle. (F., — L.) Prob. obsolete. It occurs in the Spectator, no. 195, near the beginning; and in Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 51. M. E. malle; spelt malle in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 253, l. 12; melle, Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 6572. — O. F. (and F.) mail, 'a mall, mallet, or beetle'; Cot. — Lat. malleum, acc. of malleus, a hammer. [The vowel a in the E. word is perhaps due to a knowledge of the Lat. form.] β. The Lat. malleus is prob. to be derived from the ✓ MAL = MAR, to crush, grind, pound; cf. Icel. mjölur, i.e. the crusher, the name given to Thor's hammer; see Max Müller, Lect. on Language, Series ii. lect. 7, note 34. And cf. Russ. molot, a hammer, molote, to grind. Der. mail (2), q. v.; mail-e-able, q. v., mail-et, q. v.

MALL (2), the name of a public walk. (F., — L.) Preserved in the name of the street called Pall Mall, and in The Mall in St. James's Park. In Pope, Rape of the Lock, v. 133. 'To walk in the Mall'; Parsons, Wapping Old Stairs, l. 9. Named from O. F. pale-maille, 'a game wherein a round box bowle is with a mallet struck through a high arch of iron,' &c. [i.e. the game imitated in mod. croquet]; Cot. A representation of the game is given in Knight's Old England, vol. ii. fig. 2152. — O. Ital. palamaglio, 'a stick with a mallet at one end to play at a wooden ball with; also, the name of such a game'; Florio. Better spelt pallamaglio, as in Meadows' Dict. Lit. 'a ball-mallet' or 'ball-mall.' — Ital. palla, a ball; and maglio (= F. mail), a mace, mallet, hammer. β. A hybrid word; from O. H. G. palā, pallo (M. H. G. balle, G. ball), a ball, cognate with E. Ball, q. v.; and Lat. malleum, acc. of malleus, a hammer; see Mall (1). ¶ See my note to P. Plowman, C. xix. 34. [†]

MALLARD, a wild drake. (F., — L.) M. E. malard. 'Malarde, anas.' Prompt. Parv. — O. F. malarde, later malart, 'a mallard, or wild drake'; Cot. Formed with suffix -ard (of G. origin) from O. F. male (mod. F. mâle), male; see Male. β. The suffix -ard (= Goth. hardus, G. hart, hard) was much used in forming masculine proper names, to give the idea of force or strength; hence it was readily added to O. F. male, producing a word mal-ard, in which the notion of 'male' is practically reduplicated. See Intro. to Brachet, Etym. Dict. § 196.

MALLEABLE, that can be beaten out by the hammer. (F., — L.) In Shak. Per. iv. 6. 152; and even in Chaucer, C. T. 16598. — O. F. malleable, 'malleable, hammerable, pliant to the hammer'; Cot. Formed with suffix -able from obs. Lat. *malleare, to hammer, of which the pp. malleatus occurs. — Lat. malleus, a hammer; see Mall (1). Der. malleability, malleable-ness (see Locke, On Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 6. s. 6, c. 10. s. 17); malleat-ed, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from Lat. pp. malleat-us; malleat-ion.

MALLET, a small mallet, a wooden hammer. (F., — L.) 'Bearynge great malletes of iron and stele'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 422 (R.). M. E. mailet, Romance of Partenay, 4698. — F. mailet, 'a mallet or hammer'; Cot. Dimin. of F. mail; see Mall (1).

MALLOW, the name of a plant. (L.) M. E. malwe; Prompt. Parv. — A. S. malwe, mealewe; Wright's Vocab. i. 31, col. 2; 67, col. 2. Prob. not a Teut. word, but merely borrowed from Lat. malva, a mallow. + Gk. μαλάχη (= mal-ua-ka), a mallow. β. Named from its supposed emollient properties; cf. Gk. μαλάσσειν (= malak-yein), to make soft, μαλακός, soft, mild. — ✓ MAL, to grind down, later form of ✓ MAR, to grind. See Mar. Der. marsh-mallow, A. S. mersc-mealewe, Wright's Voc. i. 67, col. 1. Also malv-ac-e-ous = Lat. malvaceus, adj. Mr. Wedgwood shews that the Arabs still use mallows for poultices to allay irritation.

MALMSEY, a strong sweet wine. (F., — Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 233. Spelt malmesay in Tyndall, Works, p. 229, col. 2. Also called malvesie, Chaucer, C. T. 13000. — O. F. malvoisie, 'malmesie'; Cot. From Malvasia, now called Napoli di Malvasia (see Black's Atlas), the name of a town on the E. coast of Lacedæmonia in the Morea. We may therefore call it a Gk. word. Cf. Span. malvasia, Ital. malvagia, malmsey.

MALT, grain steeped in water, and dried in a kiln, for brewing. (E.) M. E. malte, Chaucer, C. T. 3989. — A. S. mealt, in comp. mealt-hūs, a malt-house, Wright's Vocab. i. 58, col. 2. — A. S. mealt, pt. t. of meltan, strong verb, to melt; hence, to steep, soften. + Du. mout. + Icel. malt, whence the weak verb melta, to malt (not the same as E. meit). + Dan. and Swed. malt. + G. malz, malt; cf. M. H. G. malz, soft, weak. Cf. Skt. mridu, soft, mild. See Melt, Mild. Der. malt, vb., M. E. malten, Prompt. Parv.; malt-horse, Com. Errors, iii. 1. 32; malt-house; malt-worm, i Hen. IV. ii. 1. 83; also malt-ster, M. E. malte-ster, Prompt. Parv. ¶ The suffix -ster was once looked upon as a fem. termination, as in brew-ster, baxter for bake-ster, web-ster, spin-ster; and the baking, brewing, weaving, and spinning were once all alike in the hands of females. See Spinster.

MALTREAT, to treat ill. (F., — L.) 'Yorick indeed was never better served in his life; but it was a little hard to maltreat him after'; Sterne, Tristram Shandy, vol. ii. c. 17, not far from the end. — F. maltraiter, to treat ill. Cf. Ital. maltrattare, to treat ill. — Lat. male, adv., ill, badly; and tractare, to treat, handle. See Malice and Treat. Der. maltreat-ment = O. F. maltraicement, 'hard dealing'; Cot.

MALVERSATION, fraudulent behaviour. (F., — L.) 'Mal-versation, ill conversation, misdemeanour, misuse'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. malversation, 'misdemeanor'; Cot. Regularly formed (with suffix -ation) from F. malverser; Cot. gives 'malverser en son office, to behave himself ill in his office.' — Lat. male, adv., badly; and versari (pp. versatus), to dwell, be engaged in, from versare, frequentative form of vertere, to turn. See Malice and Verse.

MAMALUKE, MAMELUKE, an Egyptian light horse-soldier. (F., — Arab.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 279 f. Also in Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, l. 476; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 143, and the note. — F. Mamalu, 'a Mameluke, or light-horseman'; Cot. Cf. Span. Mameluco, Ital. Mammalucco. They were a corps of slaves. — Arab. mamlūk, a purchased slave or captive; lit. 'possessed.' — Arab. root malaka, he possessed; Rich. Dict. pp. 1494, 1488.

MAMMA, an infantine term for mother. (E.) Seldom found in books, except of late years; it occurs in Prior's poems, entitled 'Venus Mistaken,' and 'The Dove.' In Skinner and Cotgrave it is spelt mam; Cot. gives: 'Mammam, the voice of infants, mam.' Skelton has mammy, Garl. of Laurel, l. 974. The spelling mamma is doubtless pedantic, and due to the Lat. mamma; it should rather be mama, as it is merely a repetition of ma, an infantine syllable. It may also be considered as an E. word; most other languages have something like it. Cf. O. F. mammam, cited above, mod. F. maman; Span. mama, Ital. mamma, Du. mama, G. mama, mämme, memme, all infantine words for mother; also W. mam, mother, Lat. mamma, mother, &c. ¶ We have no evidence against the borrowing of the word from French; still it was, most likely, not so borrowed. [†]

MAMMALIA, the class of animals that suckle their young. (L.) Modern and scientific; not in Johnson. Formed from Lat. mammalis, belonging to the breasts. — Lat. mamma, the breast. β. There is a doubt whether the word is the same as Lat. mamma, mother; if it be, we may consider it as of infantine origin; see above. γ. Otherwise, we may connect it with Gk. μαστός, μαστός, the breast, from ✓ MAD, to be wet, trickle; cf. Skt. mad, orig. to be wet, Lat. madere, to be wet, &c. Der. mammalian; we also use mammal as a convenient short term for 'one of the mammalia.'

MAMMILLARY, pertaining to the breasts. (L.) 'The mammillary teats'; Dr. Robinson, Endoxa (ed. 1658), p. 51; Todd's Johnson. Coined from Lat. mammillaris, adj. formed from mammilla, a teat, dimin. of mamma, a breast. See Mammalia.

MAMMON, riches, the god of riches. (L., — Gk., — Syriac.) In A. V. Matt. vi. 24; Luke, xvi. 9. — Lat. mammona, Matt. vi. 24 (Vulgate). — Gk. μαμωνάς; ibid. — Syr. mamônâ; a word which often occurs in the Chaldee Targums of Onkelos, and later writers, and in the Syriac version, and which signifies 'riches'; Dict. of the Bible. Cf. Heb. matmôn, a hidden treasure; from tāmān, to hide.

MAMMOTH, an extinct species of elephant. (Russ., — Tatar.) 'An entire mammoth, flesh and bones, was discovered in Siberia, in 1799'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. — Russ. mamant, a mammoth. — Siberian mamont. 'From Tartar mamma, the earth, because the Tungus and Yakoots believed that this animal worked its way in the earth like a mole'; Webster. ¶ 'The inhabitants of [Siberia] have a traditionary fable to account for the constant occurrence [of remains of elephants]. They hold that the bones and the tusks which they incessantly find in their agricultural operations, are produced by a large subterranean animal, living in the manner of the mole, and unable to bear the light. They have named this animal mamont or mammooth—according to some authorities, from the word mamma which signifies "earth" in Tartar idioms, or, according to others, from the Arabic behemoth or meheemoth, an epithet which the Arabs apply to an elephant when he is very large. The fossil tusks which the Siberians find are called by them mamontovakost, the horns of the mamont'; The Menageries, vol. ii. 363, in the Lib. of Entertaining Knowledge. We cannot credit Siberian peasants with a knowledge of Arabic! [†]

MAN, a human being. (E.) M. E. man, Chaucer, C. T. l. 43. — A. S. mann, also mon; Grein, ii. 105. + Du. man. + Icel. maðr (for mannr); also man. + Swed. man. + Dan. mand (with excrement d). + Goth. manna. + G. mann; [the G. mensch = männisch, i. e. mannish, human]. + Lat. mās (for mans), a male. + Skt. manu, Vedic form manus, a man. β. The sense is 'thinking animal'; from ✓ MAN, to think; cf. Skt. man, to think; and see Mind. Der. man-child, Gen. xvii. 10; man-ful, Lydgate, Complaint of the Black Knight, st. 60; man-ful-ly, Two Gent. iv. 1. 28; man-ful-ness; man-hood, Chaucer, C. T. 758; man-of-war, Luke, xxiii. 11; man-kind, q. v.; man-ly, M. E. manlich, P. Plowman, B. v. 260, from A. S. manlic, man-like, see Grein, ii. 211; man-li-ness; man-slaughter, M. E. manslayer, Cursor Mundi, 25772; man-slay-er, M. E. manslayer, Trevisa, iii. 41, l. 8, Wyclif, John, viii. 44. Also man, vb., Rich. II, ii. 3. 54. ¶ Also man-like, Antony, i. 4. 5; man-ly, adv., Macb. iv. 3. 235; mann- ish, As You Like It, i. 3. 123, Chaucer, C. T. 5202; man-queller, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 58, Wyclif, Mark, vi. 27; man-ik-in, q. v. From the same root are male, masculine, mallard, mandarin, mind, &c.

MANACLE, a fetter, handcuff. (F., -L.) Better spelt manicle, as in Cotgrave. M. E. manycle, Wyclif, Ps. cxlix. 8, earlier text; where the later text has manacle. = O. F. manicle, pl. manicles, 'manicles, hand-fetters, or gyves'; Cot. = Lat. manicula, dimin. of manica, a long sleeve, glove, gauntlet, manacle, handcuff. = Lat. manus, the hand; see Manual. Der. manacle, Temp. i. 2. 461.

MANAGE, government of a horse, control, administration. (F., -Ital., -L.) Orig. a sb., but now superseded by management. 'Wanting the manage of unruly jades'; Rich. II, iii. 3. 179. = O. F. manège, 'the manage, or managing of a horse'; Cot. Mod. F. manège. = Ital. maneggio, 'a business, a managing, a handling, . . . an exercise'; Florio. Particularly used of managing horses; the mod. Ital. maneggio means 'a riding-school.' The lit. sense is 'a handling,' the word being formed upon Ital. mano, the hand. = Lat. manum, acc. of manus, the hand; see Manual. Der. manage, vb., to handle, Rich. II, iii. 2. 118; manag-er, L. L. L. i. 2. 188; manage-able, manage-able-ness; manage-ment (a coined word), used by Bp. Hall in a Fast Sermon, April 5, 1628 (R.). Doublet, manège, from mod. F. manège. ☞ Not to be confused with M. E. menage, a household, K. Alisaunder, 2087, from O. F. mesnage (Cot.), mod. F. ménage; this O. F. mesnage stands for maison-âge, extended from F. maison, a mansion; see Mansion. (Scheler.)

MANATEE, a sea-cow, a dugong. (Span., -W. Indian.) The word occurs in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 404. = Span. manatí, a sea-cow; also written manato. A West Indian word; 'from the name of the animal in the language of Hayti'; Webster.

☞ The Malay name is dugong, q. v.

MANDARIN, a Chinese governor of a province. (Port., -Malay, -Skt.) Not a Chinese, but a Malay word; brought to us by the Portuguese. In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 395. = Port. mandarin, a mandarin. = Malay, mantri, 'a counsellor, minister of state; ferdana mantri, the first minister, vizir; Marsden, Malay Dict., p. 334. = Skt. mantrin, a counsellor; mahá-mantrin, the prime minister. = Skt. mantra, a holy text, charm, prayer, advice, counsel. Formed, with suffix -tra, from Skt. man, to think, mind, know; cf. Skt. man-tu, a man, man-tri, an adviser. -✓MAN, to think. See Man, Mind. 2. Otherwise, it may have been brought from India; directly from Skt. mandala, a district, a province, the older sense being 'circle': cf. Skt. mand, to dress, to divide.

MANDATE, a command, order, charge. (F., -L.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 204. = O. F. mandat, 'a mandate, or mandamus, for the preferment of one to a benefice'; Cot. = Lat. mandatum, a charge, order, commission. = Lat. mandatus, pp. of mandare, to commit to one's charge, enjoin, command. β. Lit. 'to put into one's hand,' from man-, stem of manus, the hand, and dare, to give. [So also maniceps = a taker by the hand; from man- and capere, to take.] See Manual and Date (1). Der. mandat-or-y. Doublet, maundy, in the term Maundy Thursday, q. v. From Lat. mandare are also counter-mand, com-mand, de-mand, re-mand, com-mend, re-com-mend.

MANDIBLE, a jaw. (L.) 'Mandibula, the mandible, or jaw'; Phillips, ed. 1706. = Lat. mandibula, a jaw. = Lat. mandère, to chew, eat. Root uncertain. Der. mandibul-ar, adj., from Lat. mandibula.

MANDRAKE, a narcotic plant. (L., -Gk.) In Gen. xxx. 14, where the Bible of 1551 has pl. mandragoras. M. E. mandragoras, Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 19, l. 613. A. S. mandragora, Cockayne's Leechdoms, i. 244. Mandrake (also spelt mandrage in Minshew) is a mere corruption of mandragora, the form used by Shak. in Oth. iii. 3. 330. Cf. O. F. mandragore, Ital. mandragora, Span. mandragora. = Lat. mandragoras. = Gk. μανδραγόρας, the name of the plant; of uncertain origin.

MANDREL, the revolving shank in which turners fix their work in a lathe. (F., -Gk.?) 'Manderil, a kind of wooden pulley, that is part of a turner's leath'; Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. Corrupted from F. mandrin, a punch, a mandrel (Hamilton). β. Marked by Littre as of unknown origin; but prob. derived (through a Low Lat. mandra) from Gk. μάνδρα, an enclosed space, sheepfold, also used to mean 'the bed in which the stone of a ring is set,' which is very nearly the English sense. See Madrigal.

MANE, long hair on the neck of a horse, &c. (Scand.) M. E. mane, King Alisaunder, 1957. = Icel. món (gen. manar, pl. manar), a mane; Swed. and Dan. man. + Du. maan (Sewel). O. Du. mane (Hexham). + G. mähne, O. H. G. mana. Cf. W. myngen, a horse's mane; plainly derived from mun, the neck. So also Irish muinice, a collar (W. mynei, the hame of a horse-collar), is from Irish muin, the neck. Hence E. mane is plainly connected with Skt. manyá, the tendon forming the nape of the neck. We are further reminded of Lat. monile, a necklace.

MANEGE, the control of horses; see Manage.

MANGANESE, the name of a metal. (F., -Ital., -Gk.?) The metal was discovered in 1774 (Littre). But the term is much older, otherwise used. 'Manganese, so called from its likeness in colour and weight to the magnes or loadstone, is the most universal material used in making glass'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = O. F. manganese, 'a certain mineral which, being melted with glasse, amends the colour thereof'; Cot. = Ital. manganese, 'a stuffe or stone to make glasses with; also a kind of mineral stone'; Florio. β. Of uncertain origin; perhaps Blount's suggestion is correct; see Magnesia.

MANGE, the scab or itch in dogs, &c. (F., -L.) Minshew, ed. 1627, gives 'the mange' as sb., and mangie as adj. It is clear that the adj. mangy is the earlier word, out of which the sb. was developed. The adj. was in common use, whereas the sb. is scarce; Rich. quotes a use of it from Rochester (died 1680). Cf. 'a mangy dog,' Timon, iv. 3. 371; 'In wretched beggary And maungy misery,' Skelton, How the Douty Duke of Albany, &c., ll. 137, 138. The adj. mangy is an adaptation of F. mangé, 'eaten, fed on,' Cot.; pp. of manger, to eat. [The F. sb. for 'mange' is mangeson.] See further under Manger. Der. mangi-ness.

MANGER, an eating-trough for cattle. (F., -L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 1139 h. = F. mangeoire, 'a manger'; Cot. = F. manger, to eat. = Lat. manducare, to eat. = Lat. manducus, a glutton. = Lat. mandere, to chew. See Mandible.

MANGLE (1), to render maimed, tear, mutilate. (L.; with E. suffix.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 538 f. A weakened form of manhelen, frequentative form of M. E. manken, to maim. 'Mankynd or maymyd, Mutilatus. Mankkyn or maymyn, Mutilo. Mankyng, or maymyng, Mutilacio.' Prompt. Parv.; and see Way's note. = A. S. *mancian, to mutilate, only found in the comp. be-mancian, which is very rare. 'Gif þú geseht earmas þine bemancude, góð getacnað' = if thou seest [in a dream] thine arms cut off, it betokens good; Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 214. Not a true A. S. word, but obviously formed from Lat. maneus, maimed. Maneus is allied to Icel. minnka, to lessen, diminish; and signifies 'lessened' or 'weakened'; see further under Minish. Der. mangl-er. [†]

MANGLE (2), a roller for smoothing linen; vb., to smooth linen. (Du., -Low Lat., -Gk.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Borrowed from Dutch. = Du. mangelen, to roll with a rolling-pin; linnen mangelen, to roll linen on a rolling-pin; mangelstok, a rolling-pin (Sewel); een mangelstok, a smoothing role, or a battle-dore (Hexham). The corresponding O. Ital. word is mangano, 'a kind of presse to presse buckrom'; Florio. Both Du. and Ital. words are modifications of Low Lat. manganum, manganus, mangona, a very common word as the name of a military engine for throwing stones; see Mangonel. The mangle, being worked with an axis and winch, was named from its resemblance to the old war-engine; sometimes it was reduced to an axis or cylinder worked by hand. The Ital. mangano also means 'a mangonel.' = Gk. μάγανον, a machine for defending fortifications; also, the axis of a pulley. Allied to μάγαν, a machine; see Machine. ¶ Thus mangle, mangonel, are merely various machines; cf. the etym. of calender (for pressing cloth) from cylinder.

MANGO, the fruit of an E. Indian tree. (Malay.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 350. = Malay mañggá, 'the mango-fruit, of which the varieties are numerous'; Marsden's Dict., p. 327.

MANGONEL, a war-engine for throwing stones. (F., -Low Lat., -Gk.) M. E. mangonel, in a MS. of the time of Edw. II; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 69. = O. F. mangonel, later mangonneau, 'an old-fashioned sling or engine,' &c.; Cot. = Low Lat. mangonellus, dimin. of mangona, manganum, a war-engine. = Gk. μάγανον; see Mangle (2).

MANIA, madness, frenzy. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [M. E. manie, Chaucer, C. T. 1376, is from F. manie, 'madness'; Cot.] = Lat. mania. = Gk. μανία, madness, frenzy. β. The orig. sense is 'mental excitement'; cf. μένος, mind, spirit, force; from ✓MAN, to think. See Mind. Der. mania-c, spelt maniac in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from F. manique, 'mad,' Cot.; as if from a Lat. *maniacus. Hence maniac-al.

MANIFEST, evident, apparent. (F., -L.) M. E. manifest, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 10, l. 2558. = F. manifeste, 'manifest'; Cot. = Lat. manifestus, evident. β. The lit. sense is 'struck by the hand,' hence, palpable. = Lat. mani-, for manu-, crude form of manus, the hand; and -festus, = -fed-tus, -fend-tus, pp. of obs. verb *fendere, to strike, occurring in the comp. de-fendere, of-fendere; cf. in-festus, in-fensus, hostile. = ✓DHAN, to strike; see Defend. And see Manual. Der. manifest-ly, manifest-ness; manifest, vb., manifest-at-ion; also manifesto, q. v.

MANIFESTO, a written declaration. (Ital., -L.) 'Manifesto or evidence'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17. § 5. = Ital. manifesto, sb., a manifesto. = Ital. manifesto, adj., manifest. = Lat. manifestus; see Manifest.

MANIFOLD, various. (E.) M. E. manifold, manyfold, Gower, C. A. i. 344, last line. — A. S. manigfeald, manifold; Grein, ii. 210. — A. S. manig, many; and -feald, suffix (E. -fold), connected with fealdan, to fold. See Many and Fold.

MANIKIN, MANAKIN, a little man, dwarf. (Du.) In Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 57. [Not an E. word.] — O. Du. manneken, a little man (Hexham); mod. Du. manneke, by alteration of the suffix. Formed, with double dimin. suffix -ek-en, from Du. man, a man. See Man. Cf. G. männchen, from man.

MANIPLE, a handful; small band of soldiers, a kind of priest's scarf. (L.) 'Our small divided maniples,' i. e. bands of men; Milton, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 48, l. 6. Englished from Lat. manipulus, a handful; hence, a wisp of straw, &c. used as an ensign; and hence, a company of soldiers under the same standard, a band of men. — Lat. mani-, for manu-, crude form of manus, the hand; and -pulus, lit. filling, from the \checkmark PAL, later form of \checkmark PAR, to fill; cf. Lat. plenus, full, and A. S. full. See Manual and Full. Der. manipul-ate, q. v.

MANIPULATE, to handle. (L.) A modern word; not in Johnson; the sb. manipulation (but not the verb) was added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. The verb was prob. suggested by the sb. manipulation; Even the sb. is quite a coined word, there being nothing nearer to it than the Lat. manipulatio, by troops, an adv. formed from manipulus, a troop. The word manipulate should mean 'to fill the hands' rather than merely to use them. Altogether, the word has little to recommend it on etymological grounds. Der. manipul-ation, -ive, -or.

MANKIND, the race of men. (E.) M. E. mankinde, Gower, C. A. ii. 83, l. 23. The final d is excrement, the older form being mankin, Ormulum, 799. — A. S. manecynn, mankind; Grein, ii. 207. — A. S. man, a man; and cynn, kind, race; see Man and Kin.

MANNA, the food supplied to the Israelites in the wilderness of Arabia. (L., — Gk., — Heb.) In A. V. Exod. xvi. 15; Numb. xi. 7; Deut. viii. 3; &c. — Lat. manna, Deut. viii. 3 (Vulgate); but in Exod. xvi. 15 the Vulgate has manhu, and in Numb. xi. 7 it has man. — Gk. μάννα. — Heb. mán, manna. β. Two explanations are given: (1) from Heb. mán hu, what is this? from the enquiry which the Hebrews made when they first saw it on the ground, where mán is the neuter interrogative pronoun; see Exod. xvi. 15. And (2) that the sense of mán is 'it is a gift' (cf. Arab. mann, beneficence, grace, favour, also manna, Rich. Dict. p. 1495); from the Arab. root mánan, he divided or distributed. [+]

MANNER, way, fashion, habit, sort, kind, style. (F., — L.) In early use. M. E. manere, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 51, l. 30. — O. F. maniere, 'manner'; Cot. Mod. F. manière; properly 'habit.' — O. F. manier, adj. habitual, accustomed to (Burguy); allied to O. F. manier, 'to handle, hand, manage, wield'; Cot. — O. F. main = Lat. manum, acc. of manus, the hand; see Manual. Der. manner-ly, in Skelton, who wrote a poem called Manerly Margery Mylk and Ale; manner-li-ness; un-manner-ly, Hamlet, iii. 2. 364; manner-ism.

☞ The phrase to be taken in the manner (a law phrase) is a corruption of to be taken with the mainour; (the Lat. phrase is cum manuopere captus. See Wedgwood, s. v. mainour, which is the same word as manœuvre, q. v.)

MANŒUVRE, dexterous management, stratagem. (F., — L.) Introduced into E. in the 18th cent. Added to Johnson's Dict. by Todd, who cites it from Burke, but without a satisfactory reference. — F. manœuvre, a manœuvre, properly a work of the hand. — Low Lat. manuopera (more commonly manopera), a working with the hand. Cf. Span. maniobra, handiwork; maniobrar, to work with the hands, manœuvre; Ital. manovra, the working of a ship; manovrare, to steer a ship. — Lat. manu operari, to work with the hand. — Lat. manu, abl. of manus, the hand; and operari, to work, from opera, work. See Manual and Operate. Der. manœuvre, vb., manœuvrer. Doublet, manure.

MANOR, a place of residence for a nobleman in former times; estate belonging to a lord. (F., — L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 19. M. E. manere, P. Plowman, B. v. 595. — O. F. manoir, 'a mansion, manor, or manor-house,' Cot; formerly also spelt manier, maner (Burguy). Properly 'a place to dwell in;' from O. F. manoir, manier, to dwell (Burguy). — Lat. manere, to dwell, remain; see Mansion. Der. manor-house, L. L. i. 1. 208; manor-seat; manor-i-al.

MANSE, a clergyman's house, in Scotland. (L.) 'Manse, a habitation, a farm;' Blount's Law Lexicon, ed. 1691. An old law term. — Low Lat. mansa, a farm. — Lat. mansa, fem. of mansus, pp. of manere, to dwell; see Mansion.

MANSION, a large house, dwelling-place. (F., — L.) M. E. mansion, Chaucer, C. T. 1976. — O. F. mansion, a dwelling-place; Burguy. — Lat. mansionem, acc. of mansio, an abiding, place of abode. — Lat. mansus, pp. of manere, to dwell. + Gk. μῆναι, to stay, remain; allied to μῆναι, staying, steadfast, and to μῆναι, I wish, yearn. — \checkmark MAN, to think, wish; cf. Skt. man, to think, wish. [So also E. linger, to tarry, is connected with E. long, to yearn after; to think implies continued action of the mind.] See Mind. Der. mansion-house; mansion-ry, Mach. i. 6. 5; from Lat. manere are also manse, manor. And see menial, menagerie, mastiff.

MANTELE, a shelf over a fire-place. (F., — L.) Hardly used except in the comp. mantel-piece and mantel-shelf; formerly, only used in the comp. mantle-tree, which occurs in Cotgrave, s. v. mantelau. In old fire-places, the mantel slopes forward like a hood, to catch the smoke; the word is a mere doublet of Mantle, q. v. ☞ The difference in spelling between mantel and mantle is an absurdity. Der. mantel-piece, -shelf. [+]

MANTLE, a cloak, covering. (F., — L.) Better spelt mantel, as it is the same word as that above. In early use. M. E. mantel, Layamon, 14755, 15724. [Cf. A. S. mantel, a mantle, Ps. cviii. 28.] — O. F. mantel (Burguy), later manteau, 'a cloke, also the mantle-tree of a chimney;' Cot. — Lat. mantellum, a napkin; also, a means of covering, a cloak (in a figurative sense); cf. Lat. mantile, mantila, a napkin, towel. A more primitive form appears in the Low Lat. mantum, a short cloak, used by Isidore of Seville, whence Ital. and Span. manto, F. mante, a mantle. Root unknown; the orig. sense seems to be 'covering.' Der. mantle, vb., to cloak, cover, Temp. v. 67; also mantle, vb., to gather a scum on the surface, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 89; mantel-et (with dimin. suffix), 'a short purple mantle, . . . in fortification, a moveable pent-house,' Phillips, ed. 1706, from F. manteliet, 'a little mantle, a movable pent-house, &c., Cotgrave.

MANTUA, a lady's gown. (Ital.) Seldom used except in the comp. mantua-maker, a lady's dressmaker. 'Mantos or Mantua gown, a loose upper garment, now generally worn by women, instead of a straight body'd gown;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'By th' yellow mantos of the bride;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1. 1. 700. Manto is from Ital. (or Span.) manto, a mantle; but Mantua gown must refer to Mantua in Italy, though this connection seems to have arisen from mere confusion. As to Ital. manto, see Mantle.

MANUAL, done by the hand, suitable for the hand. (F., — L.) We recognise it as a F. word from its use after its sb., in such phrases as 'sign manual,' or 'seal manual;' the spelling has been conformed to the Lat. vowel in the final syllable. Shak. has seal manual, Venus, l. 516. Formerly spelt manuel, as in Cotgrave. — F. manuel, 'manuel, handy, of the hand;' Cot. — Lat. manuālis, manual. — Lat. manu-, crude form of manus, the hand. β. The sense of manus is 'the former' or 'maker;' formed (with suffix -na) from \checkmark MA, to measure, whence also Skt. mā, to measure, a verb which when used with the prep. nis, out, also means to build, cause, create, compose; cf. also Skt. māna, sb., measuring, measure. See Mete. Der. manual, sb., a hand-book; manual-ly. From Lat. manus we also have manacle, man-age, mani-fest, mani-ple, mani-pul-ate, mann-er, man-œuvre, man-ure; manu-facture, manu-mit, manu-script, a-manu-ensis; also main-tain, e-man-cip-ate, quadru-man-ous, &c. [+]

MANUFACTURE, a making by hand. (F., — L.) In Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 58, l. 19, p. 196, l. 4. Also spelt manufacture, as in Cotgrave. — F. manufacture (also manufacture in Cot.), 'manufacture, workmanship;' Cot. Coined from Latin. — Lat. manu, by the hand, abl. of manus; and factura, a making, from facere, to make. See Manual and Fact. Der. manufacture, vb., manufactur-al, manufactur-er, manufact-or-y.

MANUMIT, to release a slave. (L.) 'Manumitted and set at liberty;' Stow, Edw. III, an. 1530. The pp. manumitted occurs in North's Plutarch, p. 85 (R.), or p. 103, ed. 1631. — Lat. manumittere (pp. manumissus), to set at liberty a slave, lit. 'to release from one's power,' or 'send away from one's hand.' — Lat. manu, abl. of manus, the hand; and mittere, to send. See Manual and Missile. Der. manumission, from F. manumission, 'a manumission or dismissing' (Cot.), from Lat. manumissionem, acc. of manumissio, a dismissal, formed from the pp. manumissus.

MANURE, to enrich with a fertilising substance. (F., — L.) The old sense was simply 'to work at with the hand.' 'Arable land, which could not be manured [tilled] without people and families, was turned into pasture;' Bacon, Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 70, l. 26. 'Manured with industry;' Oth. i. 3. 328. See Trench, Select Glossary. Manure is a contracted form of manœuvre; see Manœuvre and Inure. Der. manure, sb., manur-er, manur-ing.

MANUSCRIPT, written by the hand. (L.) Properly an adj., but also used as a sb. 'A manuscript;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. — Low Lat. manuscriptum, a manuscript; Lat. manu scriptum, written by the hand. — Lat. manu, abl. of manus, the hand; and scriptum, neut. of scripsit, pp. of scribere, to write. See Manual and Scribe.

MANY, not few, numerous. (E.) M. E. mani, many, moni, frequently followed by a, as 'many a man;' Chaucer, C. T. 229, 3905. The oldest instances of this use are in Layamon, 7993, 16189, 29131. — A. S. manig, mænig, monig, Grein, ii. 209. + Du. menig. + Dan. mange. + Swed. månge. + Icel. margr (with a singular change from n to r). + Goth. manags. + G. mahch, M. H. G. manec, O. H. G. manac. β. All from a Teut. base MANAGA, many; Fick, iii. 228. Further allied to Irish minic, Gael. minig, W. mynych, frequent, Russ. mnogie, pl. many; and prob. to Skt. mañkshu, much, exceedingly, and maksha, multitude.

γ. Thus the base appears to be MANK, a nasalised form of ✓MAK or MAG, to have power, whence also Lat. magnus, great, and E. much. See Much. ¶ The Icel. neut. margt = prov. E. mort, as 'a mort of people.'

MAP, a representation of the earth, or of a part of it. (F., -L.) The oldest maps were maps of the world, and were called mappe-monde, as in Gower, C. A. iii. 102. This is a F. form of the Lat. name mappa mundi, which occurs in Trevisa, i. 27, and in the corresponding passage of Higden's Polychronicon.

β. The original sense of Lat. mappa was a napkin; hence, a painted cloth. According to Quintilian, it is a Punic word. See Napkin.

MAPLE, the name of a tree. (E.) M. E. maple, mapul; Chaucer, C. T. 2925. A. S. mapulder, the maple-tree; 'Acer, mapulder,' Wright's Vocab. i. 33; we also find mapolder, a maple, Mapulderstede, now Maplestead (in Essex), in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, pp. 146, 403; and Leo cites mapelhyrst (= maple-hurst, maple-grove) from Kemble's A. S. Charters. [The suffix der is a mere corruption of treow, a tree; thus an apple-tree is called æpeltre in Wright's Vocab. i. 79, col. 2, but apulder in i. 32, col. 2. Hence the A. S. name is mapul.] β. The sense of mapul is unknown; it bears a certain resemblance to Lat. macula, a spot. It is not unlikely that the tree was named from the spots on the wood, as we find G. maser, a spot, speckle, whence maserholz, speckled wood, maple. The more usual G. name is masholder, a maple-tree, a word which has not yet been explained. See Mazer.

MAR, to injure, spoil, damage. (E.) M. E. merren, less commonly marren, P. Ploughman's Crede, l. 66; Will. of Palerne, 664. — A. S. *merran, in comp. ámerran, ámýrran, used in various senses, such as to dissipate, waste, lose, hinder, obstruct; see Matt. x. 42, Luke, xv. 14; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 372, l. 3; Grein, i. 28, 29. Cf. also A. S. mirran, to impede, Exod. v. 4; gemearr, an impediment, Ælfric, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, p. 401, ll. 17, 20. + O. Du. merren, to stay, retard (Hexham); Du. marren, to tarry. + O. H. G. marrjan, to hinder, disturb, vex; whence mod. F. marri, vexed, sad.

β. Said to be further related to Goth. marzjan, to offend, cause to stumble, which is possible; but the next step, whereby Goth. marzjan is linked to Skt. mrish, to endure patiently (Benfey, p. 724), is very forced. I prefer to leave out the Goth. word, and to proceed as follows.

γ. The A. S. merran, O. H. G. marrjan, is obviously a causal verb; I connect it (with Leo) with the A. S. adj. mearu, tender (Grein), O. H. G. maro, tender; thus assigning to mar the orig. sense of 'weaken.' or 'make tender,' whence the senses of dissipate, lose, spoil. δ. This seems to be the more probable, because the true orig. sense of A. S. mearu (cf. Lat. mollis) was a softness produced by grinding down, rubbing away, bruising, crushing, pounding, &c. — ✓MAR, to grind, bruise, pound, crush; on which fertile root see Max Müller's Lectures, vol. ii. lect. 7. ¶ I think this view is supported by the Icel. merja, to bruise, crush, pound. This verb, whilst retaining the orig. sense of the root, answers in form to the causal A. S. merran, O. H. G. marrjan. Note also Gk. μαρμαίρειν, to weaken, waste, wear out, which, on the one hand, is certainly from the ✓MAR, and, on the other, is very nearly parallel in sense with A. S. ámerran. Even the Goth. marzjan, if related to Skt. mrish, is due (I suppose) to the same root; see Mild. Der. The derivatives from the root MAR are numerous; such as mal-ice, mal-ign, mil-d, moul-d, mall-ow, mill, meal, mall, mall-et, mall-eable, marc-escant, mil-d, mel-t, mal-t, &c. Doublet, moor (2).

MARANATHA, our Lord cometh. (Syriac.) In 1 Cor. xvi. 22. 'It is a Græcised form of the Aramaic words máran athá, our Lord cometh;' Dict. of the Bible.

MARAUD, to wander in quest of plunder. (F.) 'Marauding, ranging about as soldiers in quest of plunder, forage, &c.;' Bailey's Dict. v. ii. ed. 1731. — F. marauder, 'to beg, to play the rogue;' Cot. — F. maraud, 'a rogue, beggar, vagabond, varlet, rascal;' Cot. β. The etymology is much disputed; see Scheler, also Mahn's Etym. Forschungen. The Port. maroto, a rogue, is borrowed from the French.

γ. If we take the form of the word as it is, perhaps the simplest (and most probable) solution is to suppose that -aud is the usual F. suffix (= Low Lat. -aldus, from O. H. G. -wald) expressing merely the agent; while the verb is O. F. marir, also marrir, of which, according to Burguy, one sense was to stray, wander, lose one's way. At this rate, the sense is exactly 'vagabond.'

δ. The verb also appears in Span. marrar, to deviate from truth, to err, and in Prov. marrir, to lose one's way. 'Si cum hom non pot pervenir lai unt vai ses via, atressi non pot anar ses charitat, mas marrir' = as a man cannot arrive thither where he goes without a road, so he cannot proceed without charity, but (will be sure to) lose his way; Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale, col. 233, l. 32.

ε. The O. F. marrir is derived from O. H. G. marrjan, to hinder, cognate with E. mar; see Mar. Der. maraud-er.

MARAVEDI, a small coin, less than a farthing. (Span., -Arab.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — Span. maravedi, the smallest Span. coin. Called in Port. both marabítino and maravedim. The name is an old one, the coin being so called because first struck during the dynasty of the Almoravides at Cordova, A.D. 1094-1144 (Haydn, Dict. of Dates, s.v. Spain). Maravedi is derived from the Arab. name of this dynasty. — Arab. Murábitín, the name of an Arab. dynasty; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1382.

MARBLE, a sort of stone. (F., -L.) Gen. called marbreston (= marble-stone) in M. E.; afterwards shortened to marbre, and thence changed to marbel or marble. Spelt marbreston, Layamon, 1317 (later text); marbelston, P. Plowman, A. x. 101; marbel, Chaucer, C. T. 1895. — O. F. marbre, 'marble;' Cot. — Lat. marmoreum, acc. of marmor, marble, considered as a masc. sb.; but it is commonly neuter. A reduplicated form. + Gk. μαρμαρος, a glistening white stone, from μαρμαίρειν, to sparkle, glitter; cf. μαρμαίρειος, sparkling, μαίρα, the dog-star, lit. 'sparkler.'

β. Formed, by reduplication, from ✓MAR, to shine, sparkle, whence Skt. marichi, a ray of light, Gk. μαίρα, the dog-star. Der. marbl-y; also marble-hearted, K. Lear, i. 4. 281, &c.

MARCESCENT, withering. (L.) Botanical. In Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. — Lat. marcescent-, stem of pres. pt. of marcescere, inceptive form of marcere, to wither, lit. to grow faint. β. Marcere is formed as if from an adj. *marcus, faint (cf. Gk. μαλακός, soft, weak), from the base MARK, an extension of ✓MAR, to grind, crush, pound. See Max Müller, Lect. on Language, vol. ii. lect. 7. See Mar. [†]

MARCH (1), a border, frontier. (E.) Usually in the pl. marches, as in Hen. V. i. 2. 140. M. E. marche, sing., P. Plowman, B. xv. 438. — A. S. meare, a mark, fixed point, boundary; Grein, ii. 237. See Mark (1), of which march is a doublet.

MARCH (2), to walk with regular steps, as a soldier. (F., -L. ? or G. ?) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 10. 33. — F. marcher, 'to march, goe, pace;' Cot.

β. Of disputed origin; a good suggestion is Scheler's, who sees in it the notion of regular beating (cf. E. 'to be on the beat,' 'to beat time'), and connects it with Lat. marcus, a hammer, whence a verb *marcare, to beat, could easily have arisen in Low Latin, and would well express the regular tramp of a marching host. The Lat. marcus, like malleus, is from ✓MAR, to pound; see Mallet. γ. Otherwise, from F. marche, a frontier, from O. H. G. marca, cognate with A. S. meare; see Mark (1). Cotgrave has: 'Marche, . . a march, frontiere, . . a march, marching of soldiers.' Diez cites an O. F. phr. aller de marche en marche, to go from land to land, to make expeditions. Der. march, sb., K. John, ii. 60.

MARCH (3), the name of the third month. (L.) M. E. March, Chaucer, C. T. 10361. Not from O. F. and F. mars, but corrupted from Low Lat. Marcus, the name of the month in Chaucer. On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10. — Lat. Martius, the month of Mars, lit. belonging to Mars. — Lat. Marti-, crude form of Mars, the god of war. β. Etym. doubtful; but perhaps from ✓MAR, to shine; see Marble. If so, Mars means 'bright' or 'glorious,' applicable to the god of war, and to the early spring. γ. Or from ✓MAR, to crush.

MARCHIONESS, the fem. of Marquis, q. v.

MARE, the female of the horse. (E.) M. E. mere, Chaucer, C. T. 543. — A. S. mere; we find 'equa, mere' in Wright's Gloss. i. 23, col. 1. This is the fem. form of A. S. meark, a horse, Grein, ii. 238; also spelt mearg, meor. + Icel. merr, a mare, mer-kross, mer-hryssi, a mare-horse, used as fem. of marr, a steed. + Dan. mår, a mare. + Swed. mår, a mare. + Du. merrie, a mare. + G. mähre, O. H. G. meriká, a mare; fem. of O. H. G. marah, a battle-horse. β. The A. S. meark, Icel. marr, O. H. G. marah, a battle-horse, steed, are cognate with (if not borrowed from) Irish and Gael. marc, W. and Corn. marc, a horse, a stallion. Root uncertain. Der. mar-shal, q. v.

¶ The mare in night-mare (q. v.) is a different word.

MARGIN, an edge, border. (L.) M. E. margin; spelt margyne, P. Plowman, B. vii. 18. Trevisa (i. 41) translates Lat. marginis by margyns. — Lat. margin-, stem of margo, a brink, margin, border; cognate with E. Mark, q. v. Der. margin-al, margin-al-ly, margin-al-ed. Doublets, margent, with excrement t, Tyndal, Works, p. 32; marge, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 61, from F. marge.

MARGRAVE, a marquis, a lord of the marches. (Du.) 'The maregrave, as thei call him, of Bruges;' tr. of Sir T. More's Utopia, 1551, ed. Arber, p. 28. — Du. markgraaf, a margrave. — Du. mark, a mark, also a march, border, border-land; and graaf, a count, earl. + G. markgraf, similarly compounded.

β. For the first element, see March (1). The second element is Du. graaf, G. graf, M. H. G. gráve, O. H. G. krávo, grávo, a lord chief justice, administrator of justice, count. Not a G. word, but taken from Low Lat. grafio, a judge, prefect, count, graphio, an exactor of taxes (so used in A.D. 1061); Ducange. Evidently formed from Gk. γράφειν, to write, propose a law, prescribe, ordain; see Grave. Der. margravine, from Du. markgravin, where -in is a fem. suffix. See marquis. [†]

MARIGOLD, the name of a plant. (Hybrid; Heb. and E.) Spelt marygold in Levins; marygold in G. Douglas, Palace of Honour, Prol. st. 5. In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 105. It bears a yellow flower, whence also the Du. name goud-bloem (gold-bloom), a marigold. Compounded of Mary and Gold. Chaucer has gold for marigold; C. T. 1331 (whence W. gold, a marigold). The Gaelic name is lus-mairi, Mary's leek or plant. Flowers named from the Virgin Mary are numerous; hence our lady's-slipper, lady's tresses, &c. The name Mary (from F. Maria, Lat. Maria, Gk. Μαρία) is Hebrew, and is the same as Heb. Miryám or Miriam.

MARINE, belonging to the sea. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. [The sb. mariner is in much earlier use, spelt marinere, Chaucer, C. T. 13367.] - F. marin, 'marine, of the sea'; Cot. - Lat. marinus, adj., of the sea. - Lat. mare, the sea; cognate with E. mere, a pool; see Mere (1). Der. mariner, which first occurs in Floriz and Blanchefleur, ed. Lumby, l. 71, from F. marinier, 'a mariner'; Cot.

MARISH, a marsh. (F., -O. Low G.) In Ezek. xlvii. 11. This form of the word answers rather to O. F. maresqs, a marsh (Burguy, Roquefort). marez, marets in Cotgrave, Low Lat. mariscus, than to M. E. mareis, Chaucer, C. T. 6552, F. marais, with the same sense. [The latter forms, like Ital. marese, a marsh, answer better to a Low Lat. *marensis, a form not found.] Marish = Low Lat. mariscus, is a word wholly Teutonic, from Low G. marsch (Bremen Wörterbuch), cognate with E. marsh, q. v. ¶ The F. marais is preserved in the name Beaumaris, in Anglesey. Doublet, marsh.

MARITAL, belonging to a husband. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. - F. marital, 'belonging to a marriage, esp. on the husband's side'; Cot. - Lat. maritalis, adj., formed from maritus, a husband; see Marry.

MARITIME, pertaining to the sea. (F., -L.) In Shak. Ant. i. 4. 51. - F. maritime, 'maritime'; Cot. - Lat. maritimus, adj., formed with suffix -timus from mari, crude form of mare, the sea, cognate with E. Mere (1), q. v.

MARJORAM, an aromatic plant. (F., -L., -Gk.) The first r is often omitted in various languages. M. E. majoran, Gower, C. A. iii. 133. - F. marjolaine, 'margerome,' Cot.; of which an older form must have been marjoraine, though it is not recorded. Cf. Ital. majorana, Span. mayorana, Port. maiorana, marjoram. β. All corruptions from Low Lat. majoraca, marjoram, Ducange; which again is a much disfigured form of Lat. amrarcus, marjoram, with loss of initial a. - Gk. ἀμράκος, marjoram. (Probably of Oriental origin.)

MARK (1), a stroke, outline, bound, trace, line, sign. (E.) M. E. merke, Chaucer, C. T. 6201. - A. S. meare, a mark, bound, end; also a border, confine (Grein, ii. 327); see March (1). + Du. merk. + Icel. mark. + Swed. märke. + Dan. mærke. + M. H. G. marc, a mark, token; M. H. G. marke, O. H. G. marca, a march, boundary, border; (hence F. marque). + Goth. marka, a border-country, coast, Matt. viii. 34. + Lat. margo, a border, margin (whence F. and E. marge, E. margin).

β. Prob. further related to Lithuan. margas, particoloured, esp. striped; and perhaps to Skt. mārga, a trace, esp. used of the trace of a hunted animal, from the verb mtij, to rub lightly, wipe, stroke, cleanse. - ✓ MARG, to rub lightly, an extension of ✓ MAR, to rub, pound, bruise, crush, grind. See Mar. ¶ The order of ideas appears to be to rub, rub lightly, leave a trace; hence a trace, line, mark, boundary. Cf. E. to stroke with the sb. a stroke. Der. mark, vb., from A. S. mearcian (Grein); mark-er, mark-ing-in; marks-man, Dryden's Meleager (from Ovid, b. viii), l. 188, earlier form markman, Romeo, i. 1. 212. Also mark (2).

MARK (2), the name of a coin. (E.) - The Old E. mark was valued at 13s. 4d. M. E. mark, Chaucer, C. T. 12324. - A. S. marc, pl. marcan; 'i. marc goldes' = 1 mark of gold, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxon., ed. Thorpe, p. 379. + G. mark, a certain weight of silver, viz. 8 oz.; also a coin. + Icel. mörk. β. Merely a particular use of the word above, as denoting (1) a fixed weight, and (2) a fixed value. Cf. the use of token to denote a coin.

MARKET, a place of merchandise. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. market, Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 16, l. 491. - O. F. *market, not recorded, also spelt markiet, markiet (Burguy), mod. F. marketé. Cf. Prov. mercatz (Bartsch), Ital. mercato, Span. mercado, a market. - Lat. mercatus, traffic, trade, also a market (whence also G. markt, Du. markt, Icel. markaðr, &c.). - Lat. mercatus, pp. of mercari, to trade. Closely connected with Lat. merx (crude form merci-), merchandise. β. It is supposed that the base mer- is extended from mer- as seen in mer-ere, to obtain, get, gain; so that merx is 'gain' or profit, hence traffic as a means of getting gain.

*Corssen takes merx simply as 'the earning one'; Curtius, i. 413. See further under Merit. Der. market-able, Temp. v. 266; market-cross, -town. And see merchant.

MARL, a rich earth. (F., -L.) M. E. marle, marl, Trevisa, ii. 15; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 236, ll. 25, 27. Dissyllabic in marle-pit, Chaucer, C. T. 3460. - O. F. marle, merle, malle, now spelt marne; see Littré, s. v. marne. Cot. has the derivative marliere, 'a marle-pit.' - Low Lat. margila, marl; dimin. of Low Lat. marga, marl (a common word); Ducange. It occurs in Pliny, xvii. 6. 4. § 42, who considers it to be a word of Gaulish origin. Probably, like mould, from ✓ MAR, to rub, grind. See Mould. ¶ The Irish and Gael. marla, W. marl, must be borrowed from E.; the G., Du., Dan., and Swed. mergel are from the Low Lat. margila.

Der. marl-y, marl-pit. MARLINE, a small cord used for binding large ropes, to protect them. (Du.) 'Some the galled ropes with dauby marling bind;' Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 148. - Du. marling, marlijn, a marline; also called marreep (corruption of marreep). So called from its use in binding ropes. - Du. marren, to tie (O. Du. marren, maren, 'to bynde, or to tie knots,' Hexham); and lijn (corruptly ling), a line. Similarly mar-reep, from reep, a rope. The Du. marren is used by us in the expression 'to moor a ship.' See Moor (2) and Line. Der. marline-spike.

MARMALADE, a jam or conserve, gen. made of oranges, but formerly of quinces. (F., -Port., -L., -Gk.) 'Marmaleit, Marmelade, a kind of confection made of quinces, or other fruit;' Phillips. Spelt marmalat, marmaleit in Levins; marmelad in Tyndall, Works, p. 229, col. 2. - O. F. marmelade, 'marmelade;' Cot. Mod. F. marmelade. - Port. marmelada, marmelade; orig. made of quinces. Formed with suffix -ada (like that of a fem. pp.) from marmel-o, a quince; thus the sense is 'made of quince.' - Lat. mēlimēlum, lit. a honey-apple, sometimes applied to the quince, as shewn by the allied word mēlomēli, the syrup of preserved quinces. - Gk. μέλιμηλον, a sweet apple, an apple grafted on a quince; cf. μηλόμελι, honey flavoured with quince. - Gk. μέλι-, honey, cognate with Lat. mel, honey; and μέλιον, an apple. See Mellifluous and Melon.

MARMOSET, a small variety of American monkey. (F., -L.) Formerly applied to a different animal, as the word is older than Columbus. M. E. marmosette, marmozette. 'Apes, marmozettes, babewynes [baboons], and many other dyverse bestes;' Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell (1866), p. 210; see Wright's note to Temp. ii. 2. - F. marmoset (O. F. marmoset), 'the cock of a cistern or fountain, made like a woman's dug; any antick image, from whose teats water trilleth; any puppet, or antick; any such foolish or odd representation; also, the minion, favorite, or flatterer of a prince;' Cot. It is hence perfectly clear that the word was applied to some kind of ape because of its grotesque antics. β. The origin of O. F. marmoset (Cotgrave) looks uncertain; but Scheler's statement that the Low Lat. vicus marmoretorum occurs as a translation of F. rue des Marmosettes (a statement repeated by Littré with the additional information that the said street is in Paris) is decisive. The sense of marmoretum is 'made in marble;' applied, as shewn by Cotgrave, to spouts of cisterns and drinking-fountains, the grotesqueness of them being an accident. - Lat. marmor, marble; see Marble.

B. At the same time, it is perfectly clear that one reason for the transference of this particular word to a kind of ape was due to simple confusion with the wholly unrelated F. word marmot (not to be confused with E. marmot, which is again a different word). Cotgrave has: 'Marmot, a marmoset, or little monkey;' also: 'Marmotte, a she marmoset, or she monkey.' The etym. of this F. marmot is uncertain; the most likely explanation is Scheler's; he takes it to be a dimin. with suffix -ot from O. F. merme, little, tiny, lit. very small. This O. F. merme is a curious corruption of Lat. minimus (like O. F. arme from Lat. animus); see Minim. This gives to F. marmot the sense of 'dear little creature,' and accounts for the mod. use in the senses of 'puppet' and 'little child' (Hamilton); cf. Ital. marmotta, 'a marmoset, a babie for a childe to play withall, a puggle;' Florio.

MARMOT, a mountain-rat, a rodent animal. (Ital., -L.) Introduced into Eng. from Ital., not from F. Ray speaks of 'the Marmotto or mus Alpinus, a creature as big [as] or bigger than a rabbit.' On the Creation, pt. ii (R.) 'Marmotto, a mountain-rat;' Kersey, ed. 1715. - Ital. marmotto, a marmot; Meadows, Eng.-Ital. division. Cf. O. F. marmotaine, marmotan, 'the Alpine mouse, or mountain-rat;' Cot.

β. Another O. F. form of the name was marmountain (Littré); Diez cites the Romansch names (canton Grisons) as montanella and murmunt; the O. H. G. name was murmunt, murmunt, murmunt, now corrupted to murmeltier (where thier = deer or animal). γ. The comparison of these names, variously corrupted, at once leads us, without any doubt, to the right solution; viz. that the word is a debased Latin one, founded on mur-, stem of mus, a mouse, and mont- or montan-, stem of mons, a mountain, or of montanus, belonging to a mountain. The sense is certainly 'mountain-mouse.' See Mountain and Mouse. And see Marmoset.

MAROON (1), brownish-crimson. (F., -Ital.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Lit. 'chestnut-coloured.' - F. marron, 'the great chestnut; Cot. = Ital. marrone; Florio gives the pl. as marroni, marroni, 'a kind of greater chestnuts than any we have.' Of unknown origin. Cf. late Gk. μάραον, the fruit of the cornel-tree, in Eustathius (12th cent.).

MAROON (2), to put ashore on a desolate island. (F., -Span., -L., -Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. It occurs in Scott, The Pirate, c. xli. And see Maroons in Haydn, Dict. of Dates. -F. marron, adj., an epithet applied to a fugitive slave; negre marron, a fugitive slave who takes to the woods and mountains (Littre); hence the E. verb to maroon = to cause to live in a wild country, like a fugitive slave. See Scheler, who points out that the F. word is a clipp form of Span. cimarron, wild, unruly, lit. living in the mountain-tops. -Span. cima, a mountain-summit. Cf. Ital. and Port. cima, F. cime, a mountain-top.

β. According to Diez, the O. Span. cima also meant a twig, sprout; from Lat. cyma, a young sprout of a cabbage. -Gk. κύμα, anything swollen, a wave, young sprout. -✓ KU, to swell; see Colewort. ¶ Mr. Wedgwood says that 'the fugitive negroes are mentioned under the name of symarons in Hawkins' Voyage, § 68, where they are said to be settled near Panama.' He also cites the following: 'I was in the Spanish service, some twenty years ago in the interior of Cuba, and negro cimarrón or briefly cimarrón, was then an every-day phrase for fugitive or outlawed negroes hidden in the woods and mountains;' Notes and Queries, Jan. 27, 1866. I may add that the pronunciation of c (before i) as s, is Portuguese rather than Spanish.

MARQUE, LETTERS OF, letters authorising reprisals. (F., -G.) The old sense of a letter of marque was a letter signed by a king or prince authorising his subjects to make reprisals on another country, when they could not otherwise get redress. It is now only used in naval affairs, to shew that a ship is not a pirate or a corsair. 'Law of Marque, or [corruptly] Mart; this word is used 27 Edw. III, stat. 2. c. 17, and grows from the German word marck [which, however, is the English form of the word], i. e. limes, a bound or limit. And the reason of this appellation is because they that are driven to this law of reprisal, take the goods of that people (of whom they have received wrong and can get no ordinary justice) when they catch them within their own territories or precincts;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Marque . . . signifies in the ancient statutes of our land as much as reprisals; as A. 4 Hen. V, c. 7, Marques and Reprisals are used as synonyma; and letters of marque are found in the same signification in the same chapter;' id. See also Ducange, s. v. Marcha. In one instance, cited by Wedgwood and Littre, the O. F. marquer seems to mean 'to pillage,' the lit. sense being 'to catch within one's borders.' Littre also shews that the spelling marcke was used in the same sense as marque, in this connection; it would hence appear that marque is lit. a border, and hence a catching within one's borders, perhaps also a border-raid, foray. -O. F. marque, properly a boundary; explained by Cot. as 'a distresse, arrest, or seizure of body or goods.' He also gives: 'Droict de Marque, power to arrest the body, and seize the goods of another; granted by the king, and in old time given by the parliament, against a stranger or forreiner.' -M. H. G. marke, O. H. G. marca, a march, boundary, border. See March (1) and Mark (1). ¶ The corrupt form letters of mart occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, Wife for a Month, ii. 1 (Tony).

MARQUEE, a large field-tent. (F., -G.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. This is one of the words in which a final s has been cut off, from a false idea that marquees is a plural form; so also we have sherry for sherris, pea for pease, and 'Chines' for Chinese, &c. Marquees is nothing but an E. spelling of F. marquise, an officer's tent, large tent, marquee.

β. Littre says that marquise, a tent, a little elegant construction, was no doubt so named from marquise, a marchioness, or lady of rank who was to be protected from the inclemency of the weather. That is, it is short for 'tent of the marchioness.' The F. marquise is the fem. of marquis, a marquis; see Marquis.

MARQUETRY, inlaid work. (F., -M. H. G.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 146. -F. marqueterie, 'inlaid work of sundry colours;' Cot. -F. marqueter, 'to inlay, to diversify, flourish, or work all over with small pieces of sundry colours, also, to spot;' id. Lit. 'to mark slightly, or with spots;' iterative form of marquer, to mark. -F. marque, a mark. -M. H. G. mark, G. marke, a mark, token; cognate with E. mark; see Mark (1).

MARQUIS, a title of nobility. (F., -Low Lat., -G.) M. E. markis, marquis; Chaucer, C. T. 7940, 8473. -O. F. markis, marquis (Burguy), later marquis, 'a marquess, in old time the governour of a frontiere, or frontiere town;' Cot. Cf. Prov. and Span. marques, Port. marquez, Ital. marchese. -Low Lat. marchensis, a prefect of the marches. -Low Lat. marca, a march, boundary. -O. H. G. marca, a march, boundary; see March (1) and Mark (1). Der. marquisate, in Minshew; also marchioness = Low Lat. marchionissa, formed with fem. suffix -issa (= Gk. -ισσα) from Low Lat. marchion-em, acc.

of marchio, a prefect of the marches, which is a doublet of marchensis. Also marques, q. v. Doublets, marquess, Merch. Ven. i. 2. 125, from Span. marques; also margrave, q. v.

MARROW, pith, soft matter within bones. (E.) M. E. marow, marwhe, marughe (with one r), Prompt. Parv. p. 326. More commonly mary, Chaucer, C. T. 12476. -A. S. meaſh, marrow; Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. 2. + Du. merg, marrow, pith. + Icel. mergr, marrow. + Swed. merg, marrow. + Dan. maro, marrow. + G. mark, M. H. G. marc, O. H. G. marag, marrow. + W. mer, Corn. maru, marrow.

β. The orig. Teut. form MARGA prob. stands for an older MASGA, which is the form given in Fick, iii. 236. This links the word with Russ. mozg', marrow; Zend mazga (cited by Fick); and Skt. majjan (for marjan or masjan), marrow of bones, pith or sap of trees. Root unknown. ¶ The Gael. smior, marrow, strength, Irish smear, grease, do not belong here, but are related to E. smear.

Der. marrow-bone, M. E. mary-bone, Chaucer, C. T. 382.

MARRY, to take for a husband or wife. (F., -L.) Properly 'to provide with a husband.' M. E. marien (with one r), Rob. of Glouc. p. 30, l. 5. -F. marier, to marry. -Lat. maritare, (1) to give a woman in marriage, (2) to take a woman in marriage. -Lat. maritus, a husband; the fem. marita means lit. provided with a husband, or joined to a male. -Lat. mari-, crude form of mas, a male. See Male. Der. marriage, M. E. marriage (with one r), Rob. of Glouc. p. 31, l. 7, from F. marriage, which from Low Lat. maritium, a woman's dowry, in use A. D. 1062, later maritium (Ducange); marriage-able, marriage-able-ness. And see marital.

MARSH, a morass, swamp, fen. (E.) M. E. mersche, Wyclif, Gen. xli. 18 (earlier text). -A. S. mersc, a marsh; Grein, ii. 234. [The change from sc to sh is usual and regular.] Mersc is a contraction of mer-isc, orig. an adj. signifying full of meres or pools (= mere-ish); formed with suffix -isc (-ish) from A. S. mere, a mere, pool, lake; see Mere. + Low G. marsch, Bremen Wörterbuch, iii. 133; whence Low Lat. mariscus, and E. marsh. Der. marsh-y, marsh-i-ness. Doublet, marish.

MARSHAL, a master of the horse; variously applied as a title of honour. (F., -O. H. G.) The orig. sense is 'horse-servant,' a farrier or groom; it rose to be a title of honour, like constable, q. v. M. E. mareschal, Rob. of Glouc. p. 491, l. 10; marshal, P. Plowman, B. iii. 200. -O. F. mareschal (mod. F. maréchal), 'a marshal of a kingdom or of a camp (an honourable place), also, a blacksmith, farrier;' Cot. -O. H. G. maraschalh (M. H. G. marshale, G. marshall), an attendant upon a horse, groom, farrier. -O. H. G. marah, a battle-horse, whence the fem. merihā, a mare, cognate with E. Mare, q. v.; and schalk, M. H. G. shale, a servant, whence G. schalk, a knave, a rogue (by a change of sense exactly parallel to that of E. knave). β. The latter element is cognate with A. S. sealc, a servant, man (Grein), Du. schalk, a knave, Icel. skálkr, a servant, knave, rogue, Swed. skalk, a rogue; the oldest form and sense being preserved in Goth. skalks, a servant, Mat. viii. 9. γ. Perhaps we may refer this word to the Teut. root SKAL, to be obliged to do; see Shall. Der. marshal, vb., Macb. i. 1. 42, the sense being 'to act as marshal,' it being orig. a part of his duty to arrange for tournaments and to direct ceremonies; marshall-er, marshal-ship. ¶ The syllable -shal occurs also in sene-schal, q. v.

MARSUPIAL, belonging to a certain order of animals. (L., -Gk.) Modern. Applied to such animals as have a pouch in which to carry their young. -Lat. marsupium, a pouch. -Gk. μαρσούπιον, μαρσίνιον, a little pouch; dimin. of μάροντος, μάρσιοντος, a bag, pouch (Xenophon, Anab. 4. 3. 11).

MART, a contracted form of Market, q. v. In Hamlet, i. 1. 74. MARTELLO TOWER, a circular fort on the S. coast of England. (Ital. -L.) 'The English borrowed the name of the tower from Corsica in 1794;' Webster. -Ital. martello, a hammer; a name given to 'towers erected on the coasts of Sicily and Sardinia against the pirates in the time of Charles V' (A. D. 1519-1556); Webster. -Low Lat. martellus, a hammer; dimin. from a form *martus, which is equivalent to Lat. marcus, a hammer. -✓ MAR, to crush, pound; see Mallet. ¶ I cannot verify the above statements; another theory, that the fort taken in 1794 by the English was situate in Mortella bay, Corsica, is given in the Eng. Cyclopædia. The Ital. mortella means a myrtle. [†]

MARTEN, a kind of weasel. (F., -Low Lat., -Teut.) a. Marten is a contraction of the older form martern, in Harrison's Description of England, b. ii. c. 19, ed. Furnivall, p. 310. β. Again, the final n in martern is excrement, as in bitter-n; see Mätzner, Gramm. i. 177. The older term is martor or martire; it is spelt martre in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 112, l. 18. -F. martre (also martre), 'a martin,' Cot.; spelt martire in the 11th cent. (Littre). Cf. Ital. martora, Span. martia. -Low Lat. *marturius, of which Ducange gives the pl. martures, as being a common word; also martalus (with the common change of l for r). -M. H. G. and G.

marder, a marten; Du. marter, a marten. + A. S. meard, a marten, Orosius, i. 1; see Sweet's A. S. Reader. + Icel. mörðr (gen. marðar). + Swed. mård. + Dan. maar (for maard). Root unknown. ¶ 1. The supposed Lat. martes, a marten, is due to a doubtful reading in Martial, 10. 37. 18, and cannot be relied on. It is curious that the A. S. name was lost, and replaced by the F. one. 2. We may also note, that Cot. gives an O. F. martin as another name for the marten; but the E. word does not seem to have been taken from it. [†]

MARTIAL, warlike, brave. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 8. 46. - F. martial, 'martial'; Cot. - Lat. Martialis, dedicated to Mars. - Lat. Marti, crude form of Mars, the god of war; see MARCH (3). Der. martial-ly; also martial-ist (obsolete), Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2. 16.

MARTIN, a bird of the swallow kind. (F.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, the name of the bird is given as martin, marten, martinet, and martelet. Of these forms, marten is corrupt; and martinet, martelet are dimin. forms, for which see Martlet. - F. martin, (1) a proper name, Martin, (2) the same name applied to various birds and animals (Scheler); thus martin-pêcheur is a king-fisher (Hamilton), and oiseau de S. Martin is 'the ring-tailed or hen-harm,' Cot. Martin was once a proverbially common name for an ass, as shewn in Cot., s. v. asne. β. The name is, in fact, a nick-name, like robin, jenny-wren, Philip for a sparrow, &c. Der. mart-let, q. v. Also (from the name Martin) Martin-mas or (corruptly) Martle-mas, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 2. 110; martin-let, q. v.

MARTINET, a strict disciplinarian. (F.) 'So called from an officer of that name, whom Voltaire describes as the regulator of the French infantry under Louis XIV' (A. D. 1643-1715); Todd's Johnson. The name is a dimin. of the name Martin; see Martin. [†]

MARTINGALE, MARTINGAL, a strap fastened to a horse's girth to hold his head down; in ships, a short spar under the bowsprit. (F.) The ship's martingale is named from its resemblance in situation, to the horse's. The word, spelt martingale, is given in Johnson only with respect to the horse. Minshew, ed. 1627, speaks of 'a martingale for a horse's tail'; the word also occurs in Cotgrave. - F. martingale, 'a martingale for a horse'; Cot. He also gives: 'a la martingale, absurdly, foolishly, untowardly, ... in the homeliest manner.' β. See the account in Littré, who shews that the term arose from an oddly made kind of breeches, called chausses à la martingale, a phrase used by Rabelais. Cf. Span. martingal, an old kind of breeches; Ital. martingala, an old kind of hose. γ. The explanation of Ménage is accepted by Littré and Scheler. He says the breeches were named after the Martigaux (pl. of Martigau), who were the inhabitants of a place called Martigues in Provence (S. of France). For the intrusive n, cf. messenger, passenger, &c.

MARTINMAS, MARTLEMAS, the feast of St. Martin; Nov. 11. (Hybrid; F. and L.) The corruption to Martlemas (2 Hen. IV, ii. 2. 110) is due to the easy change of n to l; see Lilac. M. E. Martinmesse, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 230, l. 1. Compounded of the F. proper name Martin; and M. E. messe = A. S. mæsse, from Lat. missa, a mass. See Martin and Mass (2).

MARTLET, a kind of bird, a martin. (F.) In Levins; and in Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 9. 28. A corruption of the older name martinet or martinet by the same change of n to l as is seen in Martlemas for Martinmas. 'Martnet, martinet, byrd,' Prompt. Parv. p. 327. - F. martinet, 'a martlet or martin'; Cot. Dimin. of F. martin, a martin; with suffix -et. See Martin.

MARTYR, one who suffers for his belief. (L., -Gk.) Lit. 'a witness' to the truth. M. E. martir, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 185, l. 10. - A. S. martyr, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, lib. i. c. 7, l. 5. - Lat. martyr. - Gk. μάρτυρ, μάρτυς, a witness; lit. one who remembers, records, or declares. Cf. Skt. smṛti, to remember, desire, record, declare. - ✓ SMAR, to remember; whence also E. memory, Gk. μνήμνη, care, &c.; Fick, i. 254. Der. martyr-dom, A. S. martyr-dóm (Lye); also martyro-logy, from Gk. μάρτυρο-λογία, crude form of μάρτυς, with the common suffix -logy of Gk. origin, from λέγω, to speak; martyro-log-ist.

MARVEL, a wonder. (F., -L.) M. E. merveille; King Alisaunder, l. 218. - F. merveille, 'a marvel'; Cot. Cf. Span. maravilla, Ital. maraviglia, Port. maravilha. - Lat. mirabilia, neut. pl., wonderful things; according to the common confusion in Low Lat. between the fem. sing. and neut. pl.; from the adj. mirabilis, wonderful. - Lat. mirari, to wonder at. - Lat. mirus, wonderful; formed with suffix -rus from the base mi-, later form of smi-. Cf. Gk. μεῖδω, to smile, Skt. smi, to smile; Skt. smṛa, smiling; vi-smṛita, astonished, surprised; smāpaya, to cause to be surprised. - ✓ SMI, to smile, surprise; whence also E. Smile, q. v. Der. marvell-ous, M. E. meruailous, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 174, l. 20; marvell-ous-ly, marvell-ous-ness; also marvel, vb., M. E. meruailen, meruailen, P. Plowman, B. xi. 342.

♂ MASCULINE, male. (F., -L.) M. E. masculyn, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 3. l. 947. - F. masculin, 'masculine'; Cot. - Lat. masculinus, lengthened from masculus, male; see Male. Der. masculine-ly, masculine-ness.

MASH, to beat into a mixed mass. (E. or Scand.) The old sense was 'to mix.' 'To masche, miscere'; Levin, 35. 10. 'Maschyn, yn brewynge, misceo; Maschyng, mixtura, mixtio; Prompt. Parv. To mask is, in particular, to steep malt; the tub into which the refuse grains are put is called the mask-tub, whence pigs are fed. A mask for horses is a mixture of malt and bran. Cf. Lowland Scotch mask-fat, a vat for brewing; masking-fat, a mashing-vat; masking-pat, a tea-pot, lit. a pot for steeping or infusing tea (see Burns, When Guildford good our pilot stood, st. 1). See Halliwell and Jamieson. Perhaps E.; cf. A. S. max-fæt, a mashing-vat, cited by Lye without authority; also max-wyrte, wort, new beer, Cockayne's Leechdoms, ii. 87, 97, 107. Here max stands for masc, as usual, whence Sc. mask, E. mask; the sense of masc was probably a mixture, esp. brewers' grains. + Swed. dial. mask, brewers' grains (Rietz), Swed. mäsk, grains; whence Swed. mäska, to mash. + Dan. mask, a mash; whence mask-kar, a mashing-tub, also mæske, to mash, to fatten pigs (with grains). + North Friesic mask, grains, draff (Outzen). + G. maisch, a mash (of distillers and brewers); whence maischfass, a mash-vat, maischen, to mash, mix. β. Thus the verb to mask is due to the sb. mask, meaning 'a mixture'; it is probable that the sb. is due to the verb to mix; see Mix. We may further compare Irish masgaim, I infuse, mash malt, measgaim, I mix, mingle, stir, move; also Gael. masg, to mix, infuse, steep, measg, to mix, stir. Also Lithuan. maisyti, to stir things in a pot, from misztis, to mix (Nesselmann). ¶ Unconnected with O. F. mascher, F. mâcher, which is merely Lat. masicare, to chew. Der. mess (2), q. v.

MASK, MASQUE, a disguise for the face; a masked entertainment. (F., -Span., -Arab.) It is usual to write mask in the sense of visor, and masque in the sense of masquerade; there is no reason for this distinction. Perhaps we may call mask the E., and masque the F. spelling. No doubt it is, and long has been, gen. supposed that the entertainment takes its name from the visor, according to the F. usage; but it is remarkable that the sense of entertainment is the true one, the use of the visor at such an entertainment being (from an etymological point of view) an accident. The sense of entertainment is the usual one in old authors. 'A jolly company In manner of a maske;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 5. 'The whiles the maskers marched forth in trim array;' id. iii. 12. 6. 'Some haue I sene ere this, ful boldlye come daunce in a maske, whose dauncing became theym so well, that yf they vysours had bene of [off] theyr faces, shame woulde not haue suffred theym to set forth a foote;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1039 g. 'Cause them to be deprehended and taken and their maskers taken of [off] and theyr hypocrisie to be dyscouered;' id. p. 758 b. Note here the use of maskers in the sense of masks; it is not a mistake, but correct according to the Span. spelling, as will appear. - F. masque, 'a mask, a visor;' Cot. β. This F. masque is an incorrect and clipped form (for masquere), due to a verb masquer, to mask, which is really a mistake for masquerer; but the apparently reduplicated ending was of course neglected, so that we find in Cot. the supposed pp. 'masqué, masked.' Yet the fuller form comes out in O. F. masquarizé, 'masked,' Cot.; as well as in masquerie, masquerade, mascarade, 'a mask or mummery.' γ. The last form, mascarade, is plainly borrowed from Span. mascarada, a masquerade, assembly of maskers, from mascara, a masker, masquerader, also a mask. Cf. Ital. mascherata, a masquerade; mascherare, to mask, maschera, a mask; so that Sir T. More's use of masker = mask, is fully accounted for. The true sense of Span. mascara was, however, orig. a masker or masquerader. - Arab. maskharat, 'a buffoon, a fool, jester, droll wag, a man in masquerade; a pleasantry, anything ridiculous or mirthful, sport; Pers. maskharah kardān, to ridicule or deride, to play the buffoon;' Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1416. - Arab. root sakhira, he ridiculed; id. p. 815. ¶ Other etymologies are worthless; as M. Devic remarks, in the Supplement to Littré, it is needless to give all the details in full by which this etymology can be proved. It is sufficient to refer to Mahn's Etymologische Forschungen. and to Engelmann and Dozy, Glossaire des Mots Espagnols tirés de l'Arabe. Der. mask-er; also masquer-ade, explained above; whence masquerad-er. [†]

MASON, a worker in stone. (F., -Low Lat., -G.) In early use. M. E. mason, King Alisaunder, l. 2370; spelt mascon, Floriz and Blancheflor, l. 326. - O. F. maçon, masson (F. maçon), 'a mason;' Cot. - Low Lat. macionem, acc. of macio, a mason; we find also the forms machio, macho, maco, and even mareio, mactio, matio, matio, as well as macerio. β. The last form macerio is plainly 'wall-maker;' from Lat. maceria, an inclosure, a wall, which is allied to Gk. μάκρον, an inclosure. But whether this will account for all the other forms is doubtful. γ . The difficulty is to tell the true Low Lat. $&$ form; marcio is probably wrong, and mactio may be a misreading of matio. If we take matio or matio as the standard form, we may perhaps suppose mactio, mactio, mactio, mactio to be corruptions of it; the difficulty of distinguishing between c and t in MSS. is often very great.

δ . Matio may be referred to M. H. G. mezzo, a mason, whence mod. G. stein-metz, a stone-mason; and this is prob. closely related to M. H. G. meizen, O. H. G. meizan, to hew, to cut, whence G. meissel, a chisel. Cf. Icel. meita, to hew, cut, meitill, a chisel; Goth. meitan (strong verb), to hew, cut; all from Teut. base MIT, to hew, cut; Fick, iii. 239. Der. mason-ic; also mason-ry, Rom. of the Rose, l. 302, from F. maçonnerie, from the verb maçonner, to do mason's work.

MASQUE, MASQUERADE; see Mask.

MASS (1), a lump of matter, quantity, size. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. masse, Prompt. Parv. - F. masse, 'a masse, lump;' Cot. - Lat. massa, a mass. (Prob. not a true Lat. word, but taken from Gk.) - Gk. μάζα, a barley-cake, closely allied to μάζα, any kneaded mass. - Gk. μάσσειν (for μάκ-yeiv), to knead. - \surd MAK, to grind, to knead; whence also Lat. macerare; see Macerate. Der. mass, vb.; mass-ive, from F. massif, 'massive,' Cot.; mass-ive-ly, mass-iveness; also mass-y (an older adj., with E. suffix -y = A. S. -ig), Spenser, F. Q. iii. 11. 47; mass-i-ness.

MASS (2), the celebration of the Eucharist. (L.) M. E. messe, masse, P. Plowman, B. v. 418, C. viii. 27; Chaucer has masse-peny, C. T. 7331. Spelt messe in Havelok, 188. [Perhaps not from F. messe, but directly from Lat.] - A. S. mæsse, (1) the mass, (2) a church-festival, Grein, ii. 226; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. iii. c. 22, ed. Whelock, p. 319.

β . Low Lat. missa, (1) dismissal, (2) the mass; see Ducange. The name is usually accounted for by supposing that the allusion is to the words ite, missa est (go, the congregation is dismissed), which were used at the conclusion of the service. 'Come I to ite, missa est, I holde me ysuered' - 'If I come in time to hear the last words of the service, it suffices for me; P. Plowman, B. v. 419.

Wedgwood suggests that it meant rather the dismissal of the catechumens who were not allowed to remain during the celebration of the eucharist; for which he cites the following passage from Papias: 'Missa tempore sacrificii est quando catecumeni foras mituntur, clamante leuita [the deacon], Si quis catecumenus remansit, exeat foras; et inde missa, quia sacramentis altaris interesse non possunt, quia nondum regenerati sunt.' γ . It matters little; for we may be sure that missa is, in any case, derived from Lat. missa, fem. of missus, pp. of mittere, to send, send away; see Missile.

η . The change of vowel from Lat. i to A. S. e is remarkable, but we find just the same change in Icel. messa, Swed. messa, Dan. messe; and still more clearly in G. messe from O. H. G. messa and missa. The Du. mis alone retains the Lat. vowel. (All these words are, of course, borrowed from Latin.) Der. Candle-mas, Christ-mas, Hallow-mas, Lam-mas, Martin-mas, Michael-mas.

MASSACRE, indiscriminate slaughter, carnage. (F., -O. Low G.) Pronounced massâcre in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 11. 29; he also has massâcre, id. iii. 3. 35. - F. massacre, 'a massacre;' Cot. Also massacrer, 'to massacre;' id. Wedgwood cites a passage from Monstrelet in which the verb is spelt maschacler (= massacler). β . The double ending of the verb in -rer or -ler answers to the frequentative suffix -eren or -elen so common in Low G. and Du, as a verbal ending; cf. Du. brokkelen, to break small, from brokken, to break, klepperen, to clatter, from kleppen, to clap; &c. This suggests, for the origin of the F. massacrer, a similar extension from Low G. matsken, to cut, to hew (Bremen Wörterb. iii. 137), Du. matsen, to maul, to kill. We might thus readily suppose F. massacrer (if put for mascler) to be a corruption of a Low G. form *matskelen, the exact equivalent of which actually occurs in G. metzeln (for metzelen), to massacre. γ . Of these forms, the G. metzeln is an extension of metzen, to cut, to kill (Flügel); cf. G. metzelei, a massacre, butchery, slaughter. Metzen is perhaps related to M. H. G. meizen, O. H. G. meizan, to cut, hew. δ . Similarly, we find Icel. mjaltla, to cut small, slice, from meita, to cut. And we may compare Du. matsen, Low G. matsken, with Goth. meitan, to cut. ϵ . The O. H. G. meizan, Icel. meita, Goth. meitan, are all from the Teut. base MIT, to cut; see Mason. η . The F. word is one of much difficulty; the above solution is open to objection.

MAST (1), a pole to sustain the sails of a ship. (E.) M. E. mast, Chaucer, C. T. 3264. - A. S. mæst, the stem of a tree, bough, mast of a ship; Grein, i. 226 (whence Icel. mastr was prob. borrowed). + Du. mast. + Swed. and Dan. mast. + G. mast. β . It is probable that -st is a suffix, as in bla-st, in A. S. blo-st-ma (a blossom), and in other words. Accordingly, Fick (iii. 237) suggests that A. S. mæst may stand for mah-sta, from the base mah- (= Lat. and Gk. magh-) which appears in Lat. mā-lus (for magh-lus), a mast, and in Gk. $\mu\alpha\chi\lambda\acute{o}\varsigma$ (for magh-lus), a pole, stake, bar, lever. If so, the orig. $\&$ sense has reference to the might or strength of the pole thus employed, whether as a mast or as a lever; from \surd MAGH, to have power; see May (1). Der. mast-less, dis-mast.

MAST (2), the fruit of beech and forest trees. (E.) The orig. sense is 'edible fruit,' with reference to the feeding of swine. M. E. mast. 'They eten mast;' Chaucer, Ætas Prima, l. 7. - A. S. mæst; 'brim hund swina mast' = mast for three hundred swine; Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 70. + G. mast, (1) mast, (2) stall-feeding, fattening; whence müsten, to fatten. β . Doubtless allied to E. Meat, q. v. Perhaps mast = mat-st; like best for bet-st.

MASTER, a superior, lord, teacher. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. maister, meister, spelt meister, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 41, l. 29. - O. F. maistre, meistre; mod. F. maître, a master. - Lat. magistrum, acc. of magister, a master. β . Lat. mag-is-ter = mag-ys-tara, a double comparative form, formed with the Aryan compar. suffixes -yans and -tara, for which see Schleicher, Compend. §§ 232, 233. [Min-is-ter, q. v., is a precisely similar formation.] γ . The base mag- is the same as in mag-nus, great, Gk. $\mu\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\alpha\varsigma$, great; so that the sense is 'great-er-er' = much more great. - \surd MAG, to have power; see May (1). Der. master, verb; master-ly, master-ship, master-y, q. v.; also master-builder, -hand, -key, -less, -piece, -work, &c.

MASTERY, lordship, dominion. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. maistris, meistrie; spelt meistrie in Ancien Riwele, p. 140. - O. F. maistris, meistrie, mastery (Burguy). - O. F. maistre, a master; see Master.

MASTIC, MASTICH, a kind of gum resin. (F., -L., -Gk.) The tree yielding it is also called mastic, but should rather be called the mastic-tree, spelt mastick-tree in the Bible, Story of Susanna, v. 54. Another name for the tree is lentisk. 'The lentiskes also have their resin, which they call mastick;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiv. c. 20. M. E. mastyk, Prompt. Parv. - F. mastic, 'mastick, a sweet gum;' Cot. - Lat. masticē. - Gk. $\mu\alpha\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\chi\eta$, the gum of the tree $\sigma\acute{\alpha}\nu\iota\varsigma$, called in Lat. lentiscus. β . So called because it was used for chewing in the East; from the base $\mu\alpha\sigma\tau-$, seen in $\mu\alpha\sigma\tau\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$, the mouth, $\mu\alpha\sigma\tau\acute{\alpha}\varsigma\epsilon\omega$, to chew. - Gk. $\mu\alpha\sigma\tau\acute{o}\mu\alpha\iota$, I chew. Perhaps allied to Gk. $\mu\alpha\beta\acute{\alpha}\rho\acute{o}\varsigma$, melting away; and to Lat. mandere, to chew. Der. mastic-ate, q. v.

MASTICATE, to chew. (L., -Gk.) The E. verb was suggested by the previous use of the sb. mastication, which alone appears in Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave, who uses it to translate the F. mastication. - Lat. masticatus, pp. of masticare, to chew; a late word, marked by White as 'post-classical.' β . Quite an unoriginal word, and formed, like most verbs in -are, from a sb. The orig. sense is evidently 'to chew mastic,' from Lat. masticē, masticē, mastic, a word borrowed from Gk. $\mu\alpha\sigma\tau\acute{\iota}\chi\eta$, mastic; see Mastic. η . The true Lat. word for 'chew' is mandere. The explanation under Mastic, that mastic is so named from being chewed, only applies to Greek; in Latin, the verb is derived from the sb. Der. masticat-ion, from F. mastication, as above; masticat-ory.

MASTIFF, a large dog. (F., -Low Lat., -L.) M. E. mestif. 'Als grehound or mastif' (riming with hastif). Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 189, l. 8. 'Mastyf, or mestyf, hownde;' Prompt. Parv. - O. F. mestif, adj., 'mongrell; vn chien mestif, a mongrell, understood by the French especially of a dog that's bred between a mastive or great cur and a greyhound;' Cot. This is the adj. corresponding to the O. F. sb. mastin (mod. F. matin), 'a mastive, or bandog, a great country cur;' Cot. Cf. Ital. mastino, Port. mastim, Span. mastin, a mastiff. β . The Low Lat. form would be, accordingly, *mastinus, prob. standing for *masnatinus, the adj. corresponding to Low Lat. masnata, a household, also written masnada or masnada; for the account of which see Menial. Thus the sense is 'house-dog,' just as that of bandog (= band-dog) is a dog that is tied up. See Scheler and Diez. [\dagger]

MASTODON, the name of an extinct elephant. (Gk.) Modern; so called from the conical or nipple-like projections on its molar teeth. Coined from Gk. $\mu\alpha\sigma\tau-$, stem of $\mu\alpha\sigma\tau\acute{o}\varsigma$, the female breast (connected with $\mu\alpha\beta\acute{\alpha}\epsilon\omega$, Lat. madere, to be moist); and $\delta\delta\omega\upsilon\varsigma$, short for $\delta\delta\omega\upsilon\tau\epsilon\varsigma$, stem of $\delta\delta\omega\upsilon\varsigma$, a tooth, cognate with E. Tooth, q. v.

MAT, a texture of sedge, rushes, or other material, to be laid on a floor, &c. (L.) M. E. matte. 'Matte, or natte, Matta, storum;' Prompt. Parv. - A. S. meatta; 'Storia, vel psiata, meatta;' Wright's Vocab. i. 41. [Lat. storea or storia means 'a mat.' Observe the variant M. E. natte given in the Prompt. Parv.] - Lat. matta, a mat; cf. Low Lat. natta, a mat (Ducange). β . From the form matta were borrowed E. mat, Du. mat, G. matte, Swed. matta, Dan. maatte, Ital. matta, Span. mata; whilst the form natta is preserved in F. natte. Precisely a similar interchange of m and n occurs in F. nappe from Lat. mappa; see Map. γ . Root uncertain; the curious shifting of m and n suggests that (as in the case of map) the word may have been a Punic word; indeed, it would not be very surprising if the words mappa and matta were one and the same. Der. mat, verb; mat-ed, mat-ing.

MATADOR, the slayer of the bull in bull-fights. (Span., -L.) In Dryden, Span. Friar, A. i. sc. 2. Spelt matadore, Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 33, 47. -Span. matador, lit. 'the slayer'; formed with suffix -dor (= Lat. acc. -torem) from matar, to kill. -Lat. mactare, (1) to honour, (2) to honour by sacrifice, to sacrifice, (3) to kill. -Lat. mactus, honoured; from the base makh or magh, which appears in Skt. mah, to honour, to adore, orig. to have power. See May (1).

MATCH (1), one of the same make, an equal, a contest, game, marriage. (E.) M. E. macche, macche. Spelt macche = mate, companion; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 47. 'This was a macche vmette' = this was an unfit contest; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 4070; whence the pp. machede = matched, id. 1533, 2904. The orig. sense was 'companion' or 'mate,' hence an equal, giving the verb to match = to consider equal; the senses of 'contest, game, marriage,' &c., are really due to the verb. -A. S. macca, generally ge-macca, a companion, comrade, spouse; Grein, i. 426. [The prefix ge-, often and easily dropped, makes no difference.] The change of sound from final -cca to -cke, and later to -ch, is perfectly regular. β The form gemacca or macca is one of secondary formation, due to a causal suffix -ya; thus *mac-ya passes into macca (with double c, and vowel-change), and would mean 'one who is made a companion,' the orig. word thus operated on being maca, a companion, the word now spelt mate. See further under Mate. Der. match, verb, see exx. above, and see P. Plowman, B. ix. 173; also match-less, match-less-ly, match-less-ness.

MATCH (2), a prepared rope for firing a cannon, a 'lucifer.' (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. macche; 'the macche brenneth' = the match burns (used of a smouldering torch); P. Plowman, B. xvii. 231. -O. F. mesche, meiche, 'the wicke or snuffe of a candle; the match of a lamp; also, match for a harquebuse, &c.,' Cot. Mod. F. mèche. -Low Lat. *myxa, not found, but justified by the orig. Gk. form; we find Low Lat. myxus, the wick of a candle (Ducange); and Martial (14. 41. 2) uses the acc. pl. myxos, as if from nom. myxus, i. e. the nozzle of a lamp, the part through which the wick protrudes. Gk. μύξα, the nozzle of a lamp; the more orig. senses being (1) mucus, discharge from the nose, (2) a nostril. See further under Mucus. Der. match-lock, i. e. a lock of a gun holding a match, and hence the gun itself; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.

MATE (1), a companion, comrade, equal. (E.) Spelt mate in Prompt. Parv., p. 329; Rob. of Glouc. p. 536, l. 1. But it has been well suggested that the word is a corruption of the older M. E. make, with the same sense. The same change from k to t occurs in M. E. bakke, now spelt bat; see Bat (2); also in O. Fries. matia, to make. 'In bat and mate a t supplies the place of an orig. k,' &c., Morris, Eng. Accidence, p. 25. The M. E. make is of common occurrence; see P. Plowman, B. iii. 118, Chaucer, C. T. 9954, Havelok, 1150, &c. -A. S. gemaca (or maca), a mate; 'tweogen gemaca' = two mates, i. e. a pair, Gen. vi. 19. [The prefix ge-, easily and often dropped, makes no difference.] + Icel. maki, a mate, used of birds, &c. + Swed. make, a fellow, mate, match; cf. maka, a spouse, wife. + Dan. mage, a mate, fellow, equal. + O. Sax. gi-mako, a mate; whence O. Du. maet, 'a mate' (Hexham), with change from k to t as in E.; mod. Du. maat. β All closely related to the adj. which appears as Icel. mahr, suitable, M. H. G. gemach, O. H. G. kamach, belonging to, suitable, like, peaceful (whence G. gemach, gently); and further related to A. S. macian = mod. E. make. Thus a mate is 'one of like make,' anything that is 'suitably made' for another; this force comes out still more clearly in the closely related sb. match, which is a secondary formation from A. S. gemaca. See Match (1), Make.

γ Mate, as used by sailors, is from O. Du. maet. Der. mate, vb., All's Well, i. 1. 102; mate-less. [†]

MATE (2), to check-mate, confound. (F., -Pers., -Arab.) Used by Shak. in the sense 'to confound'; as in 'My mind she has mated, and amazed my sight'; Macb. v. i. 86. It is the same word as is used in chess, the true form being check-mate, which is often used as a verb.

β Properly, check-mate is an exclamation, meaning 'the king is dead'; this occurs in Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 658. -O. F. eschec et mat, 'check-mate'; Cot. Here the introduction of the conj. et is unnecessary and unmeaning, and due to ignorance of the sense. -Pers. sháh mât, the king is dead. -Pers. sháh, king; and mât, he is dead, Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 518. γ Sháh is a Pers. word; but mât is not, being of Arab. origin. -Arab. root mâta, he died; Rich. Dict. p. 1283; whence is derived the Turk. and Pers. mât, 'astonished, amazed, confounded, perplexed, conquered, subjected, . . . receiving check-mate,' id.; also Pers. mât kardan, 'to give check-mate, to confound'; id. Cf. Heb. mûth, to die. ¶ We have here the obvious original of O. F. mat, 'dead, mated, amazed, & quelled, subdued,' Cot. Also of M. E. mate, confounded, Ancren Riwle p. 382, Will. of Palerne, 2441, &c.; a word merely borrowed from O. F. Also of Ital. matto, mad; explained by Florio as 'fond, foolish; also a mate at chess'; a word often heedlessly connected with E. mad, with which it has nothing to do. See also Check, Chess.

MATERIAL, substantial, essential. (F., -L.) 'Hys materiall body'; Tyndall, Works, p. 460, col. 2. -O. F. matériel, 'material'; Cot. -Lat. materialis, material. -Lat. materialia (also materies), matter; see Matter. Der. material-ly, material-ness, material-i-ty, material-ise, material-ism, material-ist, material-ist-ic, material-ist-ic-al.

MATERNAL, belonging to a mother. (F., -L.) Spelt maternal in Minshew and Cotgrave. -F. maternel, 'maternal'; Cot. -Low Lat. maternalis, extended from Lat. maternus, motherly. This adj. is formed with suffix -nus (= Aryan suffix -na, Schleicher, Compend. § 222) from Lat. mater, cognate with E. mother; see Mother. Der. maternal-ly; also maternal-i-ty, from F. maternité, 'maternity' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. maternitatem.

MATHEMATIC, pertaining to the science of number. (F., -L., -Gk.) Gower speaks of 'the science . . . mathematique'; C. A. iii. 87. -O. F. mathematique, 'mathematical'; Cot. -Lat. mathematicus. -Gk. μαθηματικός, disposed to learn, belonging to the sciences, esp. to mathematics. -Gk. μαθηματ-, stem of μάθημα, that which is learnt, a lesson, learning, science. -Gk. μαθή-, appearing in μάθησμαι, I shall learn, fut. of μαθήσθαι, to learn; one of the very numerous derivatives from MA or MAN, to think; cf. μάντις, a seer, μῆνός, mind, Skt. man, to think. See Mind, Man. Der. mathematic-al, -al-ly, mathematic-i-an; also mathematic-s, sb. pl.

MATINS, MATTINS, morning prayers. (F., -L.) 'Masse and matyns'; Rob. of Glouc. p. 369. 'Matyns and masse'; P. Plowman, B. v. 418. -F. matins, 'matins, morning prayer'; Cot. A pl. sb. from F. matin, properly an adj., but used as a sb. to mean 'the morning.' -Lat. matutinum, acc. of matutinus, belonging to the morning; which passed into F. with the loss of u, thus producing ma'tin, contracted to matin; cf. Ital. matino, morning. -Lat. Matuta, the goddess of morning or dawn; cf. Lucretius, v. 655; as if from a masc. *matutus, with the sense of 'timely,' or 'early'; closely related to Lat. maturus; see Mature. Der. matin, sb. morning (in later use), Hamlet, i. 5. 89, from F. matin, the morning; hence matin, adj., as in 'the matin trumpet,' Milton, P. L. vi. 526. And see matutinal. ¶ The spelling with double t may be due to Ital. matino, or simply to the doubling of t to keep the vowel a short, as in matter, mattock.

MATRICIDE, the murderer of one's mother. (F., -L.) 1. The above is the correct sense, but rare; see Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -F. matricide, adj., 'mother-killing'; Cot. -Lat. matricida, a murderer of a mother. -Lat. matr-, crude form of mater, a mother (see Mother); and -cida, killing, formed from cadere (pt. t. co-cidi), to kill (see Cæsura). 2. Sir T. Browne has the word in the sense 'murder of one's mother'; Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17. § 5. In this case, it is coined directly from Lat. matricidium, a killing of a mother. -Lat. matr-, as before; and -cidium, a killing, from cadere, as before. ¶ Fratricide, parricide, are equally ambiguous.

Der. matricid-al.

MATRICULATE, to admit to membership, esp. in a college, to register. (L.) Used as a pp., with the sense of 'enrolled,' in Skelton, Garland of Laurel, l. 1281. -Late Lat. matriculatus, pp. of matriculare, to enrol, a coined word. -Lat. matricula, a register; a dimin. of matrix, (1) a breeding animal, (2) a womb, matrix, (3) a public register, roll, list, lit. a parent-stock. See Matrix. Der. matriculat-ion.

MATRIMONY, marriage. (F., -L.) M. E. matrimoine, Chaucer, C. T. 3097. -O. F. matrimoine, 'matrimony,' Cot.; of which another (unrecorded) form was probably matrimoine. -Lat. matrimonium, marriage. -Lat. matr-, crude form of mater, a mother (see Mother); with suffix -monio = Aryan man-ja, on which see Schleicher, Compend. § 219. Der. matrimonial, matrimonial-ly.

MATRIX, the womb, a cavity in which anything is formed, a mould. (L.) Exod. xiii. 12, 15. [Written matrice in Numb. iii. 12 in A. V., ed. 1611. Minshew has both matrice and matrix; the former is the F. form. Cf. 'matrice, the matrix,' Cot.; from the Lat. matrem, the acc. case.] -Lat. matrix, the womb. -Lat. matr-, crude form of mater, mother, cognate with E. Mother, q. v.

MATRON, a married woman, elderly lady. (F., -L.) M. E. matrone, Gower, C. A. i. 98. -F. matrone, 'a matron'; Cot. -Lat. matrona, a matron; extended from matr-, stem of mater, a mother; see Mother. Der. matron-ly, matron-al, matron-hood; also (from Lat. matr-), matrin, q. v., matricul-at, q. v., matricide, matrimony; and see mater-nal.

MATTER (1), the material part of a thing, substance. (F., -L.) M. E. matere (with one t), Chaucer, C. T. 6492. Earlier form materie, Ancrén Riwe, p. 270, l. 7. — O. F. matiere, matere (prob. also materie); mod. F. matière. — Lat. materia, matter, materials, stuff; so called because useful for production, building, &c. β. Formed with suffix -ter- (= Aryan -tar, on which see Schleicher, Compend. § 225) from ✓MA, to measure; cf. Skt. mā, to measure, also (when used with nis) to build, form, produce. ¶ Allied to Mother, q. v. Der. matter, vb., not in early use; matter-less; materi-al, q. v. Also matter (2), q. v.

MATTER (2), pus, a fluid in abscesses. (F., — L.) 'Matter, that which runs out of a sore;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Really the same word as the above; see Littré, s. v. matière, sect. 8, who gives: 'Matière purulente, ou simplement matière, le pus qui sort d'une plaie, d'un abcès.' So also in the Dict. de Trevoux. Littré gives the examples: 'Il est sorti beaucoup de matière de cette plaie' = much matter has come out of this sore. See Matter (1).

MATTINS, the same as Matins, q. v.

MATTOCK, a kind of pickaxe. (C.) M. E. mattoke. 'Hoc biden, a mattoke;' Wright's Vocab. i. 234; and see Prompt. Parv. — A. S. matuc, Orosius, b. iv. c. 8. § 2. β. Of Celtic origin. — W. matog, a mattock, hoe; cf. Gael. madag, a mattock, pickaxe, Russ. motuika, Lithuan. matikas, a mattock.

MATRESS, a quilt to lie upon. (F., — Arab.) 'A matress, culcitra;' Levins. — O. F. materas, 'a matresse, or quilt to lie on'; Cot. Mod. F. matelas (by change of r to l); cf. Span. and Port. al-madrake, a quilted cushion, matress (where al is the Arab. def. article). — Arab. matrah, 'a place, station, post, situation, foundation, a place where anything is thrown; matrah, thrown away, rejected'; Rich. Dict. p. 1440. This Arab. word came to mean anything hastily thrown down, hence, something to lie upon, a bed (Devic); just as the Lat. stratum, lit. 'anything spread,' came to mean a bed. The Arab. matrah is derived from the Arab. root taraha, he threw prostrate; Rich. Dict. p. 967. [†]

MATURE, ripe, completed. (L.) 'Maturity is a mean between two extremities, . . . they be maturely done;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 22 (R.). — Lat. maturus, mature, ripe, arrived at full growth.

β. It seems to be related to a lost noun signifying 'period,' cognate with Lithuan. metas, a period, a year (Nesselmann); and with Lithuan. matoti, to measure (id.). If so, the root is ✓MA, to measure; see Mete. The sense is then 'measured,' or 'completed,' hence fully ripe. Der. mature-ly; matur-i-ty, from F. maturité, 'maturity' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. maturitatem; mature-ness; matur-at-ion, from O. F. maturation, 'a maturation, ripening' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. maturationem, due to maturatus, pp. of maturare, to ripen; matur-at-ive, from O. F. maturatif, 'maturative, ripening' (Cot.), a coined word; matur-esc-ent, from the stem of the pres. pt. of maturescere, inceptive form of maturare. Closely related words are matin, matutinal.

MATUTINAL, pertaining to the morning, early. (L.) Matutinal is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; matutine in Kersey, ed. 1715. — Lat. matutinalis, belonging to the morning; formed with suffix -alis from matutin-us, belonging to the morning; see further under Matins.

MAUDLIN, sickly sentimental. (F., — L., — Gk., — Heb.) The orig. sense was 'shedding tears of penitence,' like Mary Magdalene, who was taken as the type of sorrowing penitence. Hence the expression 'their maudlin eyes' in Dryden's Prol. to Southerne's play of The Loyal Brother, l. 21 (A. D. 1682). Corrupted from M. E. Maudelein, or Magdalaine, Chaucer, C. T. 412; P. Plowman, B. xv. 289. — O. F. Magdaleine. — Lat. Magdalene. — Gk. Μαγδαληνή, i. e. belonging to Magdala; Luke, viii. 2. Here 'Magdala' answers to Heb. migdal, a tower; Smith's Dict. of the Bible. ¶ Observe the spelling Maudlin (for Magdalen) in All's Well, v. 3. 68. [†]

MAUGRE, in spite of. (F., — L.) Obsolete, except in imitating archaic writing. In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. l. 163; Titus, iv. 2. 110; K. Lear, v. 3. 131. In P. Plowman, B. ii. 204, it means 'in spite of'; but in B. vi. 242, it is (rightly) a sb., signifying 'ill will.' — O. F. malgre, maugre, maulgre; Cot. has 'maulgré eun, maugre their teeth, in spite of their hearts, against their wils.' The lit. sense of malgre is 'ill will' or 'displeasure.' Compounded of mal, from Lat. malus, bad, ill; and O. F. gre, gret, from Lat. gratum, a pleasant thing. See Malice and Agree.

MAUL, to beat grievously, to bruise greatly, disfigure. (F., — L.) Formerly mall. 'Then they mailed the horses legges, that their mightie coursers left praunsynge;' Bible, 1551, Judges, v. 22. M. E. mallen, to strike with a mall or mace, Joseph of Arimathea, ed. Skeat, l. 508. Merely formed from M. E. malle, a mall, mace; see Mall (1). ¶ Even the sb. is spelt maul in A. V. Prov. xxv. 18.

MAULSTICK, a stick used by painters to steady the hand. (G.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. One of the few G. words imported into English. — G. malterstock, a maulstick, lit. 'painter's stick.' — G.

maler, a painter, from malen, to represent, paint; and stock, a stick, staff. β. G. malen, O. H. G. malōn, to mark (hence to delineate, draw, paint), is der. from G. mahl, M. H. G. and O. H. G. māl, mól, a mark, spot, cognate with E. mole in the sense of 'mark'; see Mole (1). γ. G. stock is cognate with E. stock, stake; see Stock.

MAUNDY THURSDAY, the day preceding Good Friday. (F., — L.; and E.) Thursday is the E. name of the fifth day of the week; see Thursday. Maundy is M. E. maundee, maunde, a command, used with especial reference to the text 'Mandatum novum,' &c.; John, xiii. 34. 'He made his maundee,' He [Christ] performed his own command, i. e. washed his disciples' feet; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 140. 'Lord, where wolte thou kepe thi maunde?' Coventry Mysteries, ed. Halliwell, p. 259. The 'new commandment' really is 'that ye love one another;' but in olden times it was, singularly enough, appropriated to the particular form of devotion to others exemplified by Christ when washing his disciples' feet, as told in earlier verses of the same chapter. 'The Thursday before Easter is called Maundy Thursday, dies mandati, a name derived from the ancient custom of washing the feet of the poor on this day, and singing at the same time the anthem—Mandatum novum, &c.; John, xiii. 34. . . The notion was, that the washing of the feet was a fulfilling of this command, and it is so called in the rubric, conveniunt clerici ad faciendum mandatum. This rite, called mandatum or lavipedium, is of great antiquity, both in the Eastern and Western church;' &c.; Humphrey on the Common Prayer, p. 179. See my long note on P. Plowman, B. xvi. 140, and Maundy Thursday in the Index to the Parker Society's publications. Maundy, for mandatum, occurs in Grindal's Works, p. 51; Hutchinson, pp. 221, 259, 346; Tyndale, i. 259, iii. 256 (Parker Soc.). β. From O. F. mande, that which is commanded. Cot. has 'mandé, commanded, . . . directed, appointed.' — Lat. mandatum, a command, lit. that which is commanded, neut. of mandatus, pp. of mandare, to command. See Mandate, of which maundy is, in fact, the doublet. ¶ Spelman's trumpery guess, that the word is derived from maund, a basket, is one of the fables which are so greedily swallowed by the credulous.

MAUSOLEUM, a magnificent tomb. (L., — Gk.) 'This mausoleum was the renowned tombe or sepulchre of Mausolus, a petie king of Carie;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxvi. c. 5. — Lat. mausoleum, a splendid tomb, orig. the tomb of Mausolus. — Gk. Μαυσωλείον, the tomb of Mausolus. — Gk. Μαύσωλος, the name of a king of Caria, to whom a most splendid monument was erected by his queen Artemisia.

MAUVE, the name of a colour. (F., — L.) Modern. So named from its likeness to the tint of the flowers of a mallow. — F. mauve, a mallow. — Lat. malua, a mallow; see Mallow.

MAVIS, the song-thrush. (F., — C.) M. E. mavis, Rom. of the Rose, 619. — F. mauvie, 'a mavis, a throstle;' Cot. Cf. Span. malvis, a thrush. Supposed to be derived from Bret. milvid, also milfid, a mavis; called milchoid (with guttural ch) in the neighbourhood of Vannes. Cf. Corn. melhues, O. Corn. melhuet, a lark (Williams).

MAW, the stomach, esp. in the lower animals. (E.) M. E. mawe (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 4906. — A. S. maga, the stomach; Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. 1. + Du. maag. + Icel. magi. + Swed. maga. + Dan. mave. + G. maagen, O. H. G. mago. β. Apparently named from the notion of power, growth, or strength; from ✓MAGH, to have power; see May (1). ¶ The change from maga to mawe, maw, is quite regular; cf. A. S. haga, M. E. have, E. haw. Der. maw-worm, i. e. stomach-worm, parasite, Beaum. and Fletcher, Bonduca, i. 2 (3rd Soldier).

MAWKISH, squeamish. (Scand.; with E. suffix.) 'Mawkish, sick at stomach, squeamish;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The older sense is 'loathsome,' or, more literally, 'maggoty.' Formed with suffix -ish from M. E. mauk, mawk, a maggot. 'Hec cimex, Anglice mawke;' Wright's Vocab. i. 190, col. 1. Mauk is a corruption, or rather, an easy contraction of the older form maðek, a maggot, which occurs (in another MS.) as a variant of meaðe, a maggot; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 251, l. 19; cf. note on p. 326. — Icel. maðkr, a maggot. + Dan. maddik, a maggot; whence the Norweg. makk (Aasen) = E. mawk.

β. This is a dimin. form with suffix -ik (or -ik) from the older form appearing in A. S. maða, Goth. maþa, Du. and G. mado, a maggot; see Moth. γ. The comparison of G. mado (O. H. G. mado) with O. H. G. madari, a mower, reaper, suggests that the orig. sense of A. S. maða was 'mower,' or 'reaper,' i. e. devourer; cf. the A. S. mað with Lat. met-ere, to reap; see Mow (1). Der. mawk-ish-ly, mawkish-ness.

MAXILLAR, MAXILLARY, belonging to the jaw-bone. (L.) Blount, ed. 1674, gives both forms. Bacon has 'maxillary bones;' Nat. Hist. § 747. — Lat. maxillaris, belonging to the jaw-bone. — Lat. maxilla, the jaw-bone; dimin. of mīla, the cheek-bone (which stands for mac-sa-la). — Lat. mac-, base of macerare, to macerate, chew; see Macerate.

MAXIM, a proverb, general principle. (F., — L.) Lit. 'a saying of the greatest importance.' In Shak. Troil. i. 2. 318. — F. maxime, 'a maxime, principle'; Cot. — Lat. maxima, greatest (put for maxima sententiarum, the chief of opinions); fem. of maximus, greatest, superl. of magnus, great. — ✓ MAGH, to have power; see May (1).

MAXIMUM, the greatest value or quantity. (L.) A mathematical term. — Lat. maximum, neut. of maximus, greatest; see Maxim.

MAY (1), I am able, I am free to act, I am allowed to. (E.) There is no infinitive in use; if there were, it would rather take the form mow than may. May is the present tense (once, the past tense of a strong verb); might is the past tense (really a secondary past tense or pluperfect). M. E. infin. moun (for mowen), Prompt. Parv. p. 346; pres. t. sing. I may, Chaucer, C. T. 4651; pt. t. I might, id. 322, 634. — A. S. magan, infin., to be able; pres. t. ic mag, I may or can; pt. t. ic mihte, I might. + O. Sax. magan; pres. t. ik mag; pt. t. mahta. + Icel. mega; pres. t. ek má; pt. t. ek mátti. + Du. mogen; pres. t. ik mag; pt. t. ik mogt. + Dan. pres. t. maa; pt. t. maatte. + Swed. pres. t. må; pt. t. mätte. + G. mögen; pres. t. mag; pt. t. mochte. + Goth. magan; pres. t. ik mag; pt. t. ik mahta. β. All from a Teut. base MAG, to have power. Further allied to Russ. moche, to be able; cf. moche, sb., power, might; Lat. magnus, great, mactus, honoured; Gk. μῆχανή, means; Skt. mah, to honour. All from ✓ MAGH, to have power, be great, further, help; see Fick, i. 388. Der. The derivatives from this root are very numerous. Some of the chief are main, sb., main, adj., magnate, magnitude, magistrate, maid, major, mayor, make, machine, master, matador, maxim, mechanics, megatherium, &c. Also dis-may, q.v. Also might, nickle, much, more, most; perhaps many; perhaps maw and May (2).

MAY (2), the fifth month. (F., — L.) M. E. Mai, May; Chaucer, C. T. 1502, 1512. — O. F. May, Mai, 'the month of May'; Cot. — Lat. Maius, May; so named as being the month of 'growth.' It was dedicated to Maia, i. e. 'the increaser' or 'the honoured.' Allied to maior, greater, magnus, great, maclare, to honour, &c. — ✓ MAGH, to have power; see May (1). Der. May-day, -flower, -fly, -pole, -queen.

MAYOR, the chief magistrate of a town. (F., — L.) M. E. maire, P. Plowman, B. iii. 87. There were mayors of London much earlier. — F. maire, a mayor. — Lat. maior (shortened to mai'rem), acc. of maior, greater; hence, a superior. See Major. It is most remarkable that we have adopted the Span. spelling mayor, which came in in Elizabeth's time. Spelt maior in Shak. Rich. III. iii. 1. 17 (first folio). The word maire was first used temp. Hen. III.; Liber Albus, p. 13. Der. mayor-ess, a coined word, formed by adding the F. fem. suffix -esse (= Lat. -issa, Gk. -ισσα); Ben Jonson speaks of 'the lady mayress' in An Elegy, Underwoods, lx. 1. 70. Also mayor-al-ty, Lord Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 209, l. 24; a coined word, as if from a Lat. acc. *maioralitem. Also mayorship, mayor-dom, in Cotgrave, s. v. mairie.

MAZE, a labyrinth, confusion, perplexity. (Scand.) M. E. mase, P. Plowman, B. i. 6. [We also find M. E. masen, to confuse, puzzle; Chaucer, C. T. 4946.] Of Scand. origin; cf. Norweg. masa-st (where the final -st = -sk = sik, oneself), a verb of reflexive form, to fall into a slumber, to lose one's senses and begin to dream; masa, to be continually busy at a thing, to have a troublesome piece of work to do, also, to prate, chatter (Aasen). Icel. masa, to chatter, prattle; Swed. dial. masa, (1) to warm, (2) to bask before the fire or in the sun, ... (4) to be slow, lazy, work slowly and lazily; mas, adj., slow, lazy (Rietz).

β. These senses of lounging, poring stupidly over work, dreaming, and the like, agree with the E. phrase to be in a maze, i. e. in a dreamy perplexity. Compare the following: 'Auh þe bimasede Isboset, lo! hwu he dude maseliche' — but the stupid Ish-bosheth, lo! how stupidly he acted; Ancren Riwle, p. 272. Prob. the orig. sense was 'to be lost in thought,' to dream; hence to be in perplexity, lounge, be idle, &c.; from the ✓ MA, to think (shorter form of MAN); cf. Skt. man, to think, Gk. μέμνη, I was eager, μαρτυρεῖν, to strive after, seek, μάταιον, vainly, μάταιος, foolish, stupid. Der. maz-ed, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 113 (cf. M. E. mased, bimased above); maz-y, maz-i-ness. Also a-maze, q.v.

MAZER, a large drinking-bowl. (O. Low G.) Obsolete. 'Mazer, a broad standing-cup, or drinking-bowl;' Phillips, ed. 1706. M. E. maser, Prompt. Parv. (Not found in A. S.) Of O. Low G. origin; cf. O. Du. maser, 'a knot in a tree,' Hexham. Mazers were so called because often made of maple, which is a spotted wood; the orig. sense of the word being 'a spot,' a knot in wood, &c. Cf. Icel. mösur, 'a maple-tree, spot-wood'; mösur-bolli, a mazer-bowl; mösurtre, a maple-tree. β. The word is merely extended from the form which appears in M. H. G. mase, O. H. G. māsi, a spot, mark of a blow; whence also E. Measles, q. v. Der. masel-in (= maser-in), a dimin. form, used in the same sense, Chaucer, C. T. 13781.

ME, pers. pron. the dat. and obj. case of I. (E.) M. E. me. — A. S. mē; fuller form me, in the acc. only. + Du. mij. + Icel. mér, dat.; mik, acc. + Swed. and Dan. mig. + Goth. mis, dat.; mik, acc. + G. mir, dat.; mich, acc. + Corn. me, mi; Bret. me + Irish, Gael., and W. mi. + Lat. mihi, dat.; me, acc. + Gk. μοί, ἐμοί, dat.; μέ, ἐμέ, acc. + Skt. mahyam, me, dat.; mām, má, acc. β. All from Aryan pron.

nom. ✓ MA, indicative of the first person. Der. mine (1), my. MEAD (1), a drink made from honey. (E.) M. E. mede, Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 138, l. 202. Also spelt meth, methe, Chaucer, C. T. 3261, 3378. — A. S. medu, meodu, medo, meodo, Grein, ii. 239. + Du. mede. + Icel. mjóðr. + Dan. mjød. + Swed. mjöd. + G. meth; O. H. G. meto. + W. medd. + Lithuan. middus, mead; medius, honey. + Russ. med'. + Gk. μέθυ, intoxicating drink. + Skt. madhu, sweet; also, as sb., honey, sugar, liquorice. Root unknown. Der. metheglin, q. v.

MEAD (2), MEADOW, a grass-field, pasture-ground. (E.) So called because 'mowed.' 1. M. E. mede, Chaucer, C. T. 89. — A. S. mæd; 'Pratum, mæd,' Wright's Vocab. i. 38, l. 1. Allied to the prov. E. math, a mowing, used only in the comp. after-math, an after-mowing, a second crop. — A. S. máwum, to mow; see Mow (1). Cf. G. mäh, a mowing; M. H. G. mát, a mowing, a crop, a mead; M. H. G. male, matte, a meadow; Swiss matt, a meadow, in the well-known names Zermatt, Andermatt; all from O. H. G. májan, to mow, cognate with E. mow. 2. The fuller form meadow is due to an A. S. form mædu, of which the stem is mædu-; the change from final -we to later -ow is the usual one, as in sparrow, arrow, &c. 'Mid læwe and mid mædwe = with leasow and with meadow; A. S. Chron., an. 777, MS. E. (see Thorpe's edit. p. 92, note 1); where mædwe is the dat. case. Der. meadow-y.
